To the Alumni:

Over the years a competent and dedicated faculty has worked together, teaching long hours, undertaking most of the tasks usually assigned to administrative personnel, and loyally resisting the lure of bigger salaries, libraries, and perquisites elsewhere. It would be hard to name a friendlier and more unified institution.

This paragraph from the evaluation report of the Middle States Association gives eloquent evidence of the impression made by the Ursinus faculty on the seven members of the committee who spent five days on the campus in February of 1957.

You who know Ursinus well, who have had longer and more intimate contact with these teachers and scholars, can recognize how well-earned this accolade is. Yet you too, inevitably, think of the faculty as that one or those few whom you knew well, the men and women under whom you did most of your college work.

Join me for a moment and look at the faculty as a whole. Fifty-three have taught 853 years at Ursinus. If one adds the years taught elsewhere, the figure passes 1,000! They have done a total of 212 years of undergraduate study at 24 American and four foreign universities.

Thirty-four hold earned doctorates (31 Ph.D.'s); twelve of the rest have master's degrees; three have degrees in theology—a total of 130 years of fulltime study beyond the bachelor's degree. Two hold advanced degrees from foreign universities; six others have studied abroad and a score have traveled abroad for varying periods and reasons.

I would not for one moment have you think of the faculty as a formless, impersonal mass of degree-earners. Quite the contrary, it is one of these men with his training, his travel, his reading, his leadership in professional organizations, his public-spirited work in church, in community, in fraternal groups . . . one of these men, or a predecessor, whom you respect as the guiding star of your career.

Eight hundred and seventy-five students with fine high school records and College Board scores have been brought to Ursinus this fall to rub elbows with this faculty. It is a faculty of specialists, carefully chosen, mostly by my predecessors, President Omwake and President McClure, not only for their professional competency but also for their ability to lead and to inspire, as experience has proved.

Ursinus can expect that faculty-student contacts will continue to produce the kind of alumnus, the kind of alumna of whom we have long been justly proud.

Ursinus must also see that this competency, this dedication is rewarded. That task is mine . . . and yours.

URSIUS COLLEGE BULLETIN

RECIPIENTS OF DEGREES ON FOUNDERS' DAY

President Helfferich Honored

Ursinus' long record of fine pre-medical work was recognized when President Donald L. Helfferich was made an honorary member of the International College of Surgeons at the 24th Annual Convocation of its North American Federation in Chicago on September 17.

Although President Helfferich was unable to be present at the Convocation to accept the honor, it was granted in absentia and the diploma has been sent to the president.

The citation accompanying the conferring of the honorary membership recognizes Dr. Helfferich's many accomplishments in the fields of education and public service. His work with the Bureau of Vocational Rehabilitation, as a member of the Board, was especially noted.

Dr. Helfferich, had he been able to attend, would have been presented by Dr. Park Niceley, F.A.C.S., F.I.C.S., Knoxville, Tenn.

The program of the Convocation has a picture of President Helfferich next to his citation. Also of interest to Ursinusites is a picture of Dr. Harry E. Bacon, president-elect of the United States section of the International College of Surgeons and an honorary alumnus of the college. Dr. Bacon did some of his undergraduate work at Ursinus in 1918-20.

Office of Admissions

A total of 879 students started classes on Wednesday, September 30. 247 Freshmen started their college careers, having been gleaned from a group of about 1200 candidates.

Freshmen have come to us from nine states and England, and, once again, a dozen or so are your sons and daughters. The average Freshman is probably from Pennsylvania, has an I.Q. of 121, an average College Board score of 540, is probably a member of the U.C.C., Episcopalian, Lutheran, Methodist, or Presbyterian Church, and, in general, is a bit smarter, has more poise, and speaks with more assurance than most of us did when we were freshmen.

In the last four years our applicants have doubled in number. This means that the personal interviews and correspondence have also increased. We have been gratified with the cooperation of the alumni and friends of the College and we ask for your continued help in writing early recommendations and arranging for early applications and visits.

Founders' Day

Three well-known Montgomery County residents received honorary degrees at the Founders' Day Convocation held on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 1.

The speaker for the occasion was President Judge William F. Dannehower of the Court of Common Pleas, who was awarded the degree of Doctor of Laws (LL.D.).

Judge Dannehower is a graduate of Lafayette College; he was captain of the 1912 football team. He is also a graduate of Yale Law School and was admitted to the bar before serving in France during World War I. He remained abroad, engaged in reconstruction work in France, Germany, Russia, and Turkey until 1921 when he returned to his legal practice.

First elected to the Common Pleas Court in 1933, he was reelected in 1943 and in 1953 and was chosen President Judge in January, 1958.

Philip L. Corson, Plymouth Meeting, chairman of the board of G. and W. H. Corson since 1955 and a partner and officer of the company since 1921, was also granted an LL.D. degree.

Mr. Corson also serves as a director on the boards of the Taylor Fibre Co., Supplee-Biddle-Steltz, and Baldwin-Ehret-Hill and Franklin Printing Co.

Mr. Corson, a graduate of Haverford College, class of 1919, was twice Philadelphia amateur golf champion.

Senator Henry J. Propert, Bethayres, was the third recipient of an honorary degree at President Helfferich's hands.

Senator Propert has served in his present office since 1950, having been reelected in 1954 and 1958. Previously, he had served, from 1944 until his election to the Senate, in the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth.

A graduate of Upper Moreland High School, Senator Propert is an expert in tax and finance problems with Main and Co., Certified Public Accountant.

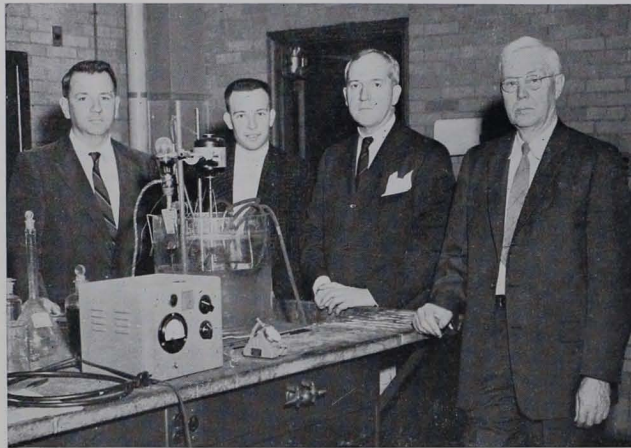

In the Senate he is chairman of the Banking Committee and vice-chairman of the Finance Committee.

During the convocation, degrees in course were conferred upon two students, Miss Stepheny Nichols, Easton, Pa., and Joseph Wear, of Cambridge, Md.

Chemistry at Ursinus

by WILLIAM S. PETTIT

To be introduced to someone who knows Ursinus slightly, and to hear his comments about the College, tells us a great deal about the company he keeps. He may say, "Oh, yes, yours is a well-known teacher-training institution. Isn't it?" Or, "That's a wonderful pre-medical college." Or, "You have prepared a good many fine ministers. Haven't you?" And so on through the whole range of our offerings. We are then able to guess how he got his limited information—from acquaintance with one of our alumni who was a teacher, a physician, or a minister.

Professors Staiger, Fortnum, Pettit, and Sturgis.

It is always gratifying that people think of Ursinus as "well-known" in teacher-training, "wonderful" in our pre-medical curriculum, and as having prepared "fine" ministers. But we have never claimed more distinction for one major field or for one curriculum than for another. We like to be known as a fine liberal arts college where the quality of all departments is kept high and in balance.

Now, having pleaded for the adoption of an image of the College as a whole, let us consider the present status of one of our departments. Because of our long association with it, one might expect that the Chemistry Department would somehow or other turn out to be the subject of our discussion. The familiar has a way of insinuating itself into conversation.

The thirty-five years Dr. Russell D. Sturgis has guided the department along its route from the dark chambers and thick atmosphere in the lower levels of Bomberger Hall, through brighter years in Pfahler Hall, through accreditation by the American Chemical Society, to its present high status. By a long series of deliberate and sure steps he has brought the department to a size and to a level of activity of which the College is proud. Today this is especially significant when good chemical education in particular and competent scientific training in general have become nationwide symbols of educational adequacy.

H. G. Wells once remarked that the fate of the world may be the outcome pace with depth in the sciences. In 1889 the same number of hours was allotted to the teaching of a given chemistry course as is allotted in 1959, whereas the growth in quantity of subject matter has been phenomenal. Much is now expected of us as a Department of Chemistry, and constant acquisition of recent scientific knowledge is required of us as individuals.

The other day we heard a man who had been teaching chemistry for years at another institution say that in his next incarnation he will choose to teach Sanskrit, Middle English, or a course in Sixteenth Century Chinese porcelains, a subject which, when mastered, would not disappear from under him as he approaches the age of forty-five. The obligation to keep up to date is a real challenge.

Two members of our Department, one in the summer of 1957 and one in the summer of 1959, attended Summer Institute for Chemistry Teachers at the University of North Carolina under grants of the National Science Foundation. These programs were each six weeks in length. The participants had an opportunity to hear lectures given by more than twenty-five experts in chemistry, to use new equipment, and to learn more about modern laboratory technique. Fresh outlook, new understanding, and genuine inspiration can be developed in an experience of this type. Our courses, which are ever-growing, suddenly spurt following stimulation of that kind.

The DuPont grants which have come our way have helped us to improve our book collection and the quality and quantity of our laboratory equipment, and to defray expenses of the staff in attending scientific meetings.

But the real test of our success is measured by the effect of our program upon the students. For several years our leading senior student has won an award of the American Institute of Chemists, and a twenty-five dollar prize is presented annually to an Ursinus senior in chemistry by the Philadelphia Section of the American Chemical Society. These awards are made at dinner meetings of the respective societies in Philadelphia.

We have recently received a National Science Foundation grant that will permit us to remunerate under-graduates who assist in research projects. Two members of the staff this year will present papers at regional meetings of the American Chemical Society. Three members of the staff have engaged in research and/or consultation regularly over several years. One member of the staff conducted a pioneering experiment concerned with teaching college chemistry to better-than-average high school graduates during the summer of 1959.

Ruth H. Rothenberger, '36 Dean of Women

As announced in the July Journal, Miss Rothenberger, a native of Pennsylvania and an alumnae of Ursinus, assumed her duties as Dean of Women. She returns to Ursinus from Lasell Junior College, Auburndale, Mass., where she was also Dean of Women.

During the academic year 1959-60 a visiting professor will spend three days on our campus and give a series of lectures on recent advances in chemistry. He will be sponsored by the American Chemical Society. We are gratified, too, at the records of our graduates in graduate schools. In twelve years one hundred eighteen graduates of the College have majored in chemistry. Eighty-four of these were men and thirty-four were women. Eleven have entered medical school, and a very substantial number have continued with graduate work. Eleven of the fifty-six chemistry majors graduating between 1948 and 1953 have earned Ph.D. degrees.

We believe that alumni are happy to hear this report of our program, and we proudly bear the good news.

Faculty Summers

It's impossible to keep track of what the faculty members do during the summer; many of them continue to teach and do part-time administrative work at the College. Others travel through the States or to Europe. What follows is a cross-sectional view of our faculty during the summer.

Dr. Evan Snyder, accompanied by his wife and three children, journeyed to New Mexico, where he taught an eight weeks' course for high school teachers of science and mathematics in atomic physics and quantum mechanics at New Mexico State University. The institute at which he taught was sponsored by the National Science Foundation. On the trips to and from Las Cruces, the seat of the university, the Snyders visited several national and state parks and Indian reservations.

The Steins, with their one-year old daughter, Misty, adventured in the wilds of British Columbia, where Dr. Stein, holder of a grant from the National Science Foundation for scientific study of Traill's Flycatcher, continued the observations he had begun on a similar trip in 1958. Alumni may read further of this latter trip in the Nov. 1958 Journal. The 1959 excursion was described in an article written by Mrs. Stein which appeared in Today, the magazine supplement to the Sunday Inquirer of Oct. 18. The article is entitled "Hunter With A Microphone."

Dr. Eugene Miller, as a delegate, attended the National Convention of Pi Gamma Mu at the University of Denver. There he was elected to the National Board of Trustees. Along with Mrs. Miller, he is writing an Ecological Study of Congregations for Reading Synod of the United Church of Christ.

Dr. A. G. Kershner spent the summer teaching at Perkiomen Prep in Pennsylvania.

Dr. Donald Zucker taught a seminar in Presidential-Congressional Relations at the Penn State University summer session.

Professors Sturgis, Staiger, and Fortnum attended the American Chemical Society meetings in Atlantic City (held after the "Miss America" contest!). Dr. Fortnum has received word that one of his papers, written in connection with research which he began at Brown University and is now continuing, will soon be printed in the Journal of the American Chemical Society.

Dr. Tyson took a fifty-one day trip through the Mid-west and West, and

Mr. Jones spent six weeks in and around London.

President Helfferich and Professors Creager, Parsons, and Wilcox were delegates to the General Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church held at Oberlin in July. Dr. Helfferich is on the important "Committee on the Constitution" for the newly formed United Church of Christ.

National Science Foundation Grant

The National Science Foundation, Wash., D.C., granted the College $2,300 for support of basic research in Isoctic Anhydride, a field in which Dr. Staiger has already done much research.

The grant is designed primarily to give senior students, working under Prof. Staiger, an opportunity to familiarize themselves with the sort of work that will be expected of them in graduate school or in industry. Dr. A. T. Waterman, Director of the N.S.F., revealed in his letter to Dr. Helfferich that the grant will cover two years' work, effective from Sept. 25, 1959.

Dean Whatley

Whatley, Dean of Men and Assistant Football Coach

Mr. Richard J. Whatley, a graduate of the University of Maine and holding a Master's degree from Springfield College, joined the Ursinus faculty this fall as Assistant Professor of Physical Education. He will act as assistant football coach and also serve as Dean of Men.

Mr. Whatley comes to Ursinus from the University of Rhode Island, where he was assistant coach in football and track. Previously, he had been head coach at Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, Pa., and an assistant coach at Springfield College, Springfield, Mass.

A COMMENTARY: American Arms Policy

by DAVID HUDNUT, '56

Hanson Baldwin, the military analyst of the New York Times, suggests in the course of a recent Atlantic article that "an idea has peculiar vitality; it cannot be destroyed by the sword; from death and destruction it springs phoenix-like to new dimensions." This remark, in its context, is part of an argument against becoming involved in what Mr. Baldwin calls an ideological war, an unlimited war waged for some single over-riding principle which will not be compromised or forsaken by its adherents. It is perfectly obvious that for more than ten years we have been dangerously close to such a war with Russia and that in spite of recent gestures toward friendship we still ride near its edge. We have engaged in a nuclear arms and missile race with Russia because our policy-makers believe that only through holding over our potential enemy the threat of massive atomic retaliation will we prevent her from launching, with or without provocation, an attack against the West. I want to explore, briefly, this defensive position and the decisions which brought us to it. I am drawing major arguments from Baldwin's Atlantic article ("Limited War," May, 1959) and from another Atlantic piece, "The Morals of Extermination" (October, 1959), by Lewis Mumford, who is one of our most important contemporary thinkers—a city planner, a cultural historian and philosopher.

In his book The Course of American Democratic Thought, Ralph Henry Gabriel sets out in plain sight an unpleasant truth: we were the first people to use atomic weapons in actual warfare. Lewis Mumford indicates that no great moral upheaval was required to use the bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki because earlier in the war we had already made the requisite basic moral decision in adopting what he calls the policy of extermination. "In principle," Mumford says, "the extermination camps where the Nazis incinerated over six million helpless Jews were no different from the urban crematoriums our air force improvised in its attacks by napalm bombs on Tokyo." Mumford sees the shift from comparatively straightforward war to "collective extermination" as the most significant shaping event in modern history; formerly war could end, but now "no one has the faintest notion how nuclear extermination, once begun, could be brought to an end." He further suggests that it was our post-war readiness to abandon efforts at negotiation to set up effective international restraints on the use of atomic weapons which contributed as much as Russian hostility to the chaotic situation in which we find ourselves. As he remarks, we held the trump cards at that one brief moment: we were the only nuclear power. In spite of the realization that shortly and predictably we might no longer be the sole nuclear power, we did not push through to some sort of agreement on the use of atomic weapons or even to large-scale, open discussion of the peaceful uses of atomic power. I don't want to parrot

On this page and on the following three pages you will find provocative statements on a subject of importance to us all. Alumni are urged to read both articles, for they complement and oppose each other.

Mr. Hudnut was graduated from Ursinus, studied at Yale University for a year, and has completed his requirements for his Ph.D. degree at the University of Penna. He teaches in the English Department at Ursinus.

Dr. Zucker, a graduate of Rutgers, earned his Ph.D. degree at Penn State University. He spent a year at the University of Florence in Italy on a Fulbright Scholarship and now teaches in the Political Science Department at Ursinus.

through the remainder of Mumford's highly significant article; his argument, briefly, is this; in adopting the principle of extermination we underwent a crucial moral change; we opened up a channel leading us to our present commitment to what is in the main a single-weapon strategy, because once we accepted the principle of extermination it followed that we had to cleave to the best weapon yet devised to implement it, the fission or fission-fusion bomb. We have physically damaged ourselves and others in developing this weapon. And the logical end of this strategy seems to be death for all of us, in that almost any use, on any significant scale, of nuclear weapons will, in addition to killing millions of people, render large portions of the earth's surface uninhabitable and drastically alter (he might add) the genetic structure of the human race. (What is to happen to those people who are exposed to less-than-lethal dosages of radiation through direct irradiation near the bomb's point of impact or fall-out at a distance?) Mumford says, "While every scientific advance in nuclear weapons and intercontinental missiles only widens to planetary dimensions the catastrophe we have been preparing, our leaders still concentrate the nation's efforts on hastening these advances."

Of course, we do not intend to use these weapons. The basis of our official stand, as noted earlier, is that the threat of our retaliation will defer Russia from moving against the West, so that the consummation of what Mumford calls our immorality remains in limbo in our minds, like adultery thought of but not committed. No one can at this moment resolve the issue of whether or not our policy is really effective in deterring Russia from large-scale territorial aggrandizement by military force, but we can at least question the strength of Russia's need to make an open move against us, and we can inquire into the overall effectiveness or utility of our present arms policy.

If we assume that a nation is operating on something like a rational basis we can assume that she will not perpetrate the physical act of war if the socio-economic and ideological ends of war can be met by other means. I would sketch a case at this point in support of the opinion that she is achieving her aims, at least in part, through penetration into new territory via propaganda and fast-dealing economic aid. If one of her aims is world domination, she must already be feeling something akin to the pride of this ultimate socio-political power: the magnitude of her new force is reflected in the fact that our foreign policy seems at times to be nothing more than a series of reactions to Communist moves, and that we now question our whole educational system and even examine our basic cultural values as a result of Russia's moves toward domination in space technology. I would also point out that her need for territory to augment her power would have to be extremely strong for her to launch a nuclear attack against Western Europe, because, as Baldwin suggests, the territory is badly formed for the controlled use of offensive nuclear weapons (negative radiation effects cannot be curbed) and because, as many people would add, she is not likely to completely destroy territory and cultural institutions she wishes to control. Nor would she be likely to make such a move, without considerable provocation, before the eyes of the leaders of the rest of the world.

(If she were to use the weapons, perhaps the world could absorb the radiation which would result from the initial Russian attack on our bases, as well as the accompanying desolation of large areas and the accompanying genetic changes in perhaps several millions of people. But the effects of our certain retaliation and of the Russians' counter-retaliation would be too much. We would have saved national honor, we would have gone down fighting, but as Mumford points out, we would have made a decision for all mankind for all time: we would have decided for all future generations that the human experiment had better come to an end.)

About the overall effectiveness of our arms policy: we may concede, for the sake of argument, that perhaps we do forestall the full-scale attack by holding to our defensive nuclear stance, but a number of quickly-retired generals have insisted that we render ourselves incapable of waging the smaller wars which the Communist world force continues to put on in the several corners of the earth, the limited wars it wages to assist in gaining the ends of all-out, unlimited war. Why don't we face the fact, as Baldwin suggests, that the Communists are going to continue to move ahead on a multiplicity of fronts, that they are going to continue precipitating small wars which we, in all probability, are going to have to participate in, and then stop our frantic downhill ride, jump off the figurative sled, which, like Ethan Frome, we are consciously directing toward contact with the impenetrable elm at the curve in the slope, and prepare ourselves to fight insane small wars for insignificant bits of territory, if to do so is the only way to contain Communism and the only way to prevent a catastrophe for all mankind? Baldwin explores the possible tactical use of atomic weapons in such wars and concludes that we have no way of knowing whether or not we could hold in check the far-ranging radiation effects if such weapons, even the allegedly "clean" ones, are used offensively; he does indicate that in certain types of terrain such weapons might be successfully used defensively without danger of unexpected and catastrophic spread of effect. He points out that the mere emplacement, on Quemoy, of eight-inch howitzers, conventional weapons capable of firing atomic shells, cut the probability of Communist invasion of that island. Baldwin's main worry is that what he calls a limited war—one fought for definite, well-defined political aims, within a restricted geographical area and with certain agreed-upon weapons—will get out of hand and develop into the unlimited war which he, as does Mumford, feels could end in nothing less than disaster for all of us. He urges that we continue holding up the threat of massive nuclear retaliation as the only means to prevent small wars from becoming the last big one, and he calls strongly for the development of a highly competent, mobile, conventional force capable of fighting any kind of war, anywhere; Mumford takes the larger, and I think more mature, step of suggesting that since we have already harmed ourselves physically through development of nuclear weapons and since the presence of nuclear weapons already provides a fantastically dangerous pile of tinder for a civilization-wide conflagration, we ought to discard nuclear armament, whether Russia does it bi-laterally with us or not.

Mr. Hudnut

He acknowledges that doing so might be an invitation for immediate territorial aggrandizement by the Russians, but adds that this could hardly be worse than the territorial setbacks already suffered by the free world since World War II under our rigid arms policy. I think we might suggest to him that the loss of France and Germany and England, to name a few potential victims, might very well be worse than the losses, however awful, the free world has already sustained. But, with Mumford, we can posit that if we dismantle our nuclear forces, "Russia would no more be able to escape the impact of our humane plans and moralized proposals than it was able to avoid the impact and challenge of our nuclear weapons. If we rallied the forces of mercy, human-heartedness, and morality with the vigor with which we have marshalled the dehumanized forces of destruction, what government could stand against us and face its own people, however strong its cynical suspicions and misgivings?" We are in a dilemma, and so are the Russians: unless under some provocation we descend to the irrational, we (they) cannot ever actually face them (us) in direct and open conflict because to do so would mean nuclear warfare on a large scale and this would probably mean the liquidation of mankind. We (they) cannot even oppose them (us) directly with conventional weapons because there is little likelihood that either side would be able to resist turning to nuclear force if defeat seemed imminent. But until one or the other of us or some as yet unformed international body establishes dominion in space, we may expect to be involved in small wars in obscure trouble spots if we stick with our basic policy of containing world Communism. Can we not realistically propose an eclectic policy of (1) nuclear disarmament, unilateral if necessary, to avoid the fact of contamination through testing and the possibility of complete disaster through use, with (2) accompanying positive negotiations for the peaceful use of atomic power, and with (3) realistic development of conventional arms to meet Russia or world Communism indirectly but effectively in the small wars of its making? We may continue to move toward space, but with scientific and humanistic aims: to arm space stations to match Russia's would be to extend further the absurd posture of strange dogs meeting; Russia will not be able to dominate us much better from space than she can at present from Moscow when she already has rockets with sufficient thrust to bridge the gap to Washington, D.C. In space exploration, we are at the threshold of something great; do we not want to explore our small universe gracefully, with rational aims and with great care? We have a unique chance to do something new, well, for the first time since the Garden, or, to be more prosaic, since the discovery of the New World.

There is the chance that we would be surrendering our political sovereignty. But although Erich Fromm might label our conduct the manifestation of a collective death-wish, of a collective wish to submit tiredly and gratefully to an end to our problems via the imposition of complete exterior control, we would be plumping for death no more strongly than we are at present with our nuclear stance, and we would have made a decision for man in the long run if not for Americans in the present, because the alternative seems to be that some night or some day we must expect to see for an instant a sight-splitting flash, after which we may expect to die, shortly.

CRITIQUE

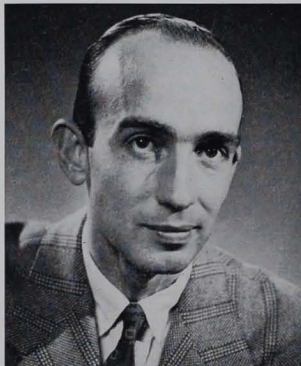

by F. DONALD ZUCKER

I commend Mr. Hudnut for tackling the most momentous problem of our age with such courage and candor. He is no doubt correct that full scale nuclear war would end only in the collective extermination of mankind, and certainly the danger is real of a limited war fought with weapons of the conventional and "defensive" nuclear variety erupting into an atomic holocaust, especially by action of the side that thinks it is losing a conventional conflict. He is more than realistic in his appraisal of the damage already done through testing, the inevitable contamination of the earth from large scale use of such weapons (which he cites as the reason Russia won't use them in a Europe she seeks to control), and the horrid effect radiation would have on human and animal genetic structures.

While there is virtual unanimity on these statements, I concur with Mr. Hudnut on other points he makes that might fail to muster such general support. I agree fully that we should not become involved in war solely in defense of "some single over-riding principle" or ideology. He is also essentially correct in his contention that the history of the cold war is one of the Soviet Union acting and the United States reacting to its various policies and probes. Certainly our most recent reexamination of our educational system and philosophical values was due to Soviet stimulus. Such reexamination, however, should be constantly in process, and generally is; the most recent reappraisal merely had the advantage of providing more sensational grist for the publicists' mills. Finally, I find myself in emphatic agreement with Mr. Hudnut and Hanson Baldwin on the need for first class conventional forces to fight the "brush fire" wars that seem constantly to recur.

Here, however, I begin to part company with Mr. Hudnut in terms both of his analysis and his recommendations. Hanson Baldwin, representing the best of our strategic thinking, contends that in addition to effective traditional armaments we must also keep our nuclear retaliatory power in readiness, not so much to strike the retaliatory blow as to maintain Soviet awareness that we are ready and able, though less than willing, to do so. We are serving notice that there will not be much of a world left for them to communize should such weapons be employed and they be victorious. I think this position sound.

While it seems to be the case today that the Soviet Union is making significant strides towards its apparent goal of world domination by other than direct military measures—political, economic, social and psychological means—such are effective only if physical force is ultimately behind them. (This was made amply clear to President Roosevelt when, in response to his suggestion that the Pope be invited to the peace conference, Joseph Stalin inquired, "How many divisions does he command?") So whether we like the idea or not, whether it seems right or moral, it is a fact of international and domestic political life that any policy or law rests ultimately on physical coercion. Moral codes can exert great influence in social control if most people adhere to the codes. But when a significant minority fails to conform, those supporting the codes must appeal to coercion or acknowledge that the codes are not worth enforcing.

Dr. Zucker

Mr. Hudnut, for the sake of argument, concedes that our current strategy might be deterring an overt Soviet attack on the West of such a nature that we would react with nuclear weapons. But he also points out that Russia is gaining without resorting to such methods. Therefore, he continues, she has no need for them in order to achieve her objectives. He concludes, in agreement with Lewis Mumford, that we then have no need to maintain our own stock of strategic bombs, that we should dismantle what we have and abandon the atomic race (except for peaceful purposes, in agreement with the Soviet Union) and the missile race (except for the adventure of exploring space).

Messrs. Hudnut and Mumford, hoping for bilateral atomic disarmament, but settling for unilateral, concede further that if their policy were adopted, Russia might gain additional territory in Europe, perhaps all of Europe, and even take over our own continent. To this they are willing to submit because the alternative is the extinction of mankind, they seem convinced.

Messrs. Hudnut and Mumford, however, are hopeful that American unilateral atomic disarmament would not lead to Soviet dominance but rather that Russia would respond by waging any future war according to the new rules ordained by us. They feel that our opponents could not "escape the impact of our humane plans and moralized proposals" because "what government could stand against us and face its own people . . . ?" Presumably the Politburo, because of Soviet popular opinion, would decide not to take advantage of its newfound superiority, and merely to continue on its present non-atomic course. How the Russian public is to be informed and mobilized in order to express and make felt its opinion is left to conjecture. This is difficult at best in a democratic society. I suspect the authors are so much the captives of our democratic ideal that they think because the people ought to rule everywhere, and do rule somewhere, they can rule even in the non-democratic Soviet society. Given our knowledge of how Russian rulers have dealt with their own non-conformists and of the instruments of public manipulation now available to modern dictators, this is a naive assumption.

Furthermore, I submit, the history of human politics offers no hope that any contender finding himself with a superior though unsportsmanlike weapon would desist from threatening to use it, or demonstrating his capability to use it, in that unsportsmanlike undertaking called war. The United States did exactly this to Japan toward the close of World War II. If an essentially sportsmanlike, meaning moralistic, nation—the government of which is certainly more subject to popular control than that of Russia—can perpetrate such an act, what is the chance of the Hudnut-Mumford wish being fulfilled? The chances against it are increased by the belief of orthodox Communists in the Marxian doctrine of the inevitable final triumph of their system.

An unarmed power, then, has never persuaded an armed one voluntarily to equalize its weaponry with the weaker party. I do advocate an all-out effort to each an atomic disarmament agreement, the best approach to which is probably gradual stage by stage reduction, with safeguards protecting all parties. So while I differ with Mr. Hudnut on methods, I am in complete agreement on the desirability of total nuclear disarmament, again, with safeguards.

Messrs. Hudnut and Mumford acknowledge that totalitarian control of the world is a distinct possibility, should their proposed policy be adopted. But they posit that it would be better than what they are convinced would be inevitable—human extinction. Men, apparently, should continue to exist on an uncontaminated planet—uncontaminated except for authoritarian governors with all of the modern physical and psychological means of social control at their command. Has western civilization limbed from its ancient beginnings among the Greeks to the freedom and comfort enjoyed by men today only to be surrendered in exchange for mere survival? To capitulate to the self-constituted Soviet oligarchy would be to turn the clock back several millenia with no assurance that it would ever move forward again. In view of the aforementioned refined techniques of control that are in the hands of the Politburo, the chances for recovering the ground that would be lost are slim indeed.

The choice between the alternatives offered by Mr. Hudnut is influenced profoundly by the individual chooser's basic philosophy. I do not opt, with Patrick Henry, for liberty or death. I do, however, ask that I be granted hope or a good life for myself, my present family and friends, and society—or death. Call it selfish but I do not care to be a cipher in a decision for mankind "in the long run," as the Hudnut-Mumford thesis would have it. With John Maynard Keynes I observe, "In the long run we are all dead." (Italics mine.) With Henry Thoreau I insist that I came into this world to live, that is, to enjoy it, not to submit to slavery on the scale contemplated by my opponents for some great good "in the long run." To live our own lives is what we men actually want to do, despite our moralizing about duty to a distant posterity. Besides, human existence without the conditions for living as human beings is not worth passing on. So let us both live, not merely survive, and take all steps calculated to preserve for posterity that which we consider desirable if not indispensable. Thus do we fulfill our obligations to ourselves and those who are to follow.

By following the policy I am here defending, Mr. Hudnut contends that our leaders are hastening the nuclear cataclysm. I answer that it is a calculated risk I am willing to take. Mr. Mumford points out that when in 1945 we dropped the then ultimate weapon first, on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, we made a moral decision justifying nuclear mass murder. This fate, he continues, we ourselves, ironically, might suffer, if his policy is not adopted. I answer that despite what was probably a major moral and strategic error in 1945, we must face the situation of 1959 and do what our best judgment tells us is best for now. I would reply similarly to the moralistic contention that we are great sinners for not seeking an atomic arms agreement when we were the sole possessors of the bomb. Mr. Hudnut says we risk nuclear war with Russia now. I respond that we must do all in our power to discourage the Soviet leadership from their plans, and to encourage them to reach accommodations with us. But any equilibrium thus established will last only as long as we possess the force capable of countering the force which lies ultimately behind their plans.

I cannot help but call attention to the pessimistic and defeatist tone in the discussions of Messrs. Hudnut and Mumford. Neither seems to be aware of more than the two alternatives they put forward for our consideration. While time seems to be favoring the steady growth of the Soviet economy, it might also be working in favor of an eventual accommodation of West and East. As the Soviet standard of living rises, Soviet citizens may become more satisfied and less militant. There is the hope that the younger leaders now rising through the ranks of the party hierarchy, who were not among the fire-eaters of the revolutionary period, and who resemble our own men in grey flannel more than the Bolsheviks of old, will be more satisfied with a smooth-running if not expanding organization. At least we can hope they will be more realistic and less doctrinaire in their approach to world politics. That Russia might settle down and become a bit conservative, given time and the realization that their goals are impracticable because of the West's nuclear stance, I submit, is one of several alternatives that could have been placed before us.

A great danger overlooked by Mr. Hudnut but justifiably dwelt upon by Mr. Mumford is that of our becoming a garrison state controlled by the Pentagon because of the need for constant preparedness. I dread such an erosion from within as much as I do submission to forces from without our society; the end result would be identical. Prevention of this cancer depends entirely upon our remaining alert to attempts to impose unnecessary controls or demand unnecessary sacrifices, and our adamant insistence that our military shall remain subordinate to responsible civilian authority. Lastly it is indispensable that we explore and raise questions regarding the assumptions and policies of those charged with power and responsibility, and to recommend for the consideration of our fellow citizens realistic alternative approaches to world strategy. This Mr. Hudnut has effectively done and I again compliment him for the forceful clarity with which he presented his own provocative arguments.

Evening School

With its opening enrollment of 379 students the Evening School registers a gain of fourteen per cent over last year. Forty-nine veterans are enrolled to do work under G.I. Benefits. Thirty-two courses are being offered. The class rooms in Pfahler Hall that are suitable for other than laboratory work are taxed to capacity on the three nights a week the Evening School is open, while the parking space, is crowded to the limit.

ALUMNI ACTIVITIES

Directory to Be Sent To All Living Alumni

By January 1, 1960, the long-awaited Directory of all living Ursinus alumni will be ready for distribution. The last Directory, edited by Dr. Yost, and then called the Alumni Register, was issued in 1948.

All alumni will be listed under three categories in the new Directory: alphabetically, geographically, and by year of graduation. The short biographical sketch of each alumnus will appear under his name in the class listing.

Indispensable for those interested in knowing where their classmates and friends now live, and useful to those who want to know who among the Ursinus graduates lives near him, alumni will receive copies of the Directory early in January.

The Executive Committee of the Alumni Association voted to distribute the Directory to every living alumnus. Opportunity will be given to those who may wish to help defray the cost of publication.

North Jersey-Shore Regional Organized

Spear-headed by Tom Phillips, '53, "Whistler" Donahue, '51, and Marge (Paynter) Devlin, '51, a new regional group in northern New Jersey held its initial meeting on Nov. 1 in Livingston.

Thirty-one alumni and friends attended the informal Smorgasbord dinner, where they were entertained by "Whistler's" incomparable Barber-Shop Quartet.

Other meetings are being planned, and alumni in the area are invited to attend and to share in the fun.

Old Timers' Day

Hundreds of alumni were happy that they disregarded the weather predictions to return to the campus on Nov. 7. Despite an especially heavy rain on Friday, which turned into a drizzle on Saturday morning, the clouds broke and no rain fell after 1 P.M.

The grand-stand was filled to capacity to see the high-spirited Ursinus eleven sink Haverford 7-6, in a thrilling game which had the spectators on their feet much of the time.

The free coffee, hot chocolate, and donuts attracted a crowd which overflowed the new gym. Immediately following this informal social hour, the Loyalty Fund Kick-Off Banquet was held in Freeland Hall, with over ninety guests enjoying a delicious meal which featured Cornish hen.

Other fraternity, sorority, and informal dinner parties took several hundred more alumni to near-by restaurants and banquet halls.

"Well, hello Curley; you ARE Curley, aren't you?"

Schoolmen's Week Luncheon

On Friday, Oct. 16, in the Dining Room of the Pennsylvania Station at 30th St., Phila., thirty Ursinus alumni gathered for an informal luncheon. Most of those who attended were teachers and administrators who were in Philadelphia for Schoolmen's Week.

Mr. Robert Strine, '30, Supervising Principal of the Upper Merion schools, presided. Mr. Harold Wiand, '28, was in charge of the arrangements.

Impressions of Sweden

(The comments which follow are observations which Marna Feldt, '53, sent Dr. Rice, professor of Swedish at Ursinus, while she was studying in Sweden during the past academic year.)

Tollare folkhogskola
Klinton, Sweden

Dear Friends:

Swedes reflect their national personality in many inanimate ways. They are people who try to be perfect—streets and sidewalks are swept first and then washed; newspaper pages are stapled together; news headlines are printed on posters and hung up on the news kiosks so that the dignified Swede doesn't have to shout the headlines; seats are reserved in the movie houses as well as at concerts, opera, and legitimate theatres; and one doesn't enter a movie theatre after the picture has begun.

Trolleys, buses, and subways are seated and have foam rubber seats; an efficient system of collecting fares is effected by uniformed conductors who do not have to drive the vehicle at the same time as they collect fares. An unusually efficient system of signs and numbers leads the passenger to the right bus—signs which have arrows which point the direction the bus or trolley will travel, for the benefit of us foreigners who still look the "wrong" way when crossing the street. Left hand traffic on the streets leads logically enough to left hand traffic on sidewalks—the result being that the right-hand oriented person finds himself perpetually bumping into people on stairways and sidewalks. On Sundays seemingly the whole population turns out on the streets or on the paths in the fields and forests for a Sunday walk, mostly in company with the whole family. Those who don't walk go a ride in the car. The Swedes are "fresh air enthusiasts." Throwing the windows open is a national pastime here—even in the classroom, where this is done every 45 minutes during the pause between classes. A natural result of this is a different way of dressing when indoors. People wear more clothing, woolen sweaters, long underwear, woolen stockings, etc. This has affected me personally and I find it a little difficult to remember how it was to wear regular nylon stockings the whole winter, or sit comfortably in a room with only a blouse and no sweater over that.

Shopping in Stockholm is like shopping in New York, Philadelphia, or Ann Arbor . . . crowded stores, waiting in turn, anxious salesmen. There are a few differences. It is easier to recognize sales personnel and the different levels of personnel by the clothing they wear. And waiting one's turn is a little more just, since everywhere there are little number machines where one takes a piece of paper with a number on it and the number of the person being served is shown on an electric machine behind the counter. It insures a person his proper turn—but the poor foreigner who forgets to take a number is left out in the cold. Very often one must pay to a cashier the cost of the purchased item. This involves a lot of paper work, but it relieves the regular clerks of handling money.

A shopping trip, or any trip for that matter, usually includes a stop at a konditori. I've gotten over the once compulsive desire to try all the cakes that they show in the case. I've become so well acquainted with konditori-living that I have even got my favorite places and favorite cakes now. Konditories always seem to be filled with people, quiet self-respecting, dignified Swedes, or rapid-speaking Germans, Italians and, in the summer, Americans. One of my first and lasting impressions of Stockholm is how cosmopolitan it is. There are many languages and styles of dress. In many ways it is impressed upon the observer that Sweden is a rich land to which foreigners readily immigrate.

One other aspect of life here in Stockholm which I have not yet mentioned is how the city actually looks. It is built on granite, as is New York. But the rock is seen here. It pushes up out of the ground in all imaginable shapes and proportions, at the most unexpected places. It forces the city engineers to build steps into it so that pedestrians have to climb up from one street level to another, streets which often lie at levels 50-100 feet above each other. At some places it causes pedestrian tunnels to be built, tunnels which are unique for their mosaic tiling. Mosaic tiling is in fact commonplace. The "Pennsylvania station" stop on the subway is an artistic masterpiece. Mosaics can even be found in the bricks of market places, in parking lots, and in the shopping centers, which lie outside the city center.

Many things have become by now a part of my living habit: lump sugar always for coffee and tea, handles instead of knobs to open doors, coffee never drunk without something eaten along with it, going to a bar for a meal because the thing which we call "bar" doesn't exist in Sweden, the radio and TV which send out only one or two choices of program, double windows which open in or out, never up and down, beds longer and narrower than

Mrs. Betty Knoll Streich

Among the Andean Indians

by BETTY KNOLL STREICH, '43

Fourteen years ago, my husband and I went to Ecuador with the idea of ministering to Indians in the Andean highlands. This assignment was to be the "pilot project" of the newly-formed United Andean Indian Mission, a cooperative venture among four denominational boards; Presbyterian Church U.S.A., Southern Presbyterian Church, Evangelical United Brethren Church, and Evangelical and Reformed Church. At the time, the task before us seemed in our enthusiasm an adventurous and relatively uncomplicated undertaking to live with and help, in any way we could, a needy and rather primitive group of people.

After six months of language study in Colombia, we found ourselves moving to a sterile farm, sixty miles north of Quito, in a rural county of about 16,000 population, widely-spread. The only source of water was a most undependable irrigation ditch. Summer winds began, and dust storms swirled. The hacienda house was run-down with few windows, 39 inch walls, ceilings 14 feet high, and at that altitude of 9500 feet, even on the equator, we were chilled to the bone.

After centuries of unchanging customs, these Indians were singularly confused by the coming of this foreign family into their community. Their patience and curiosity were a distinct advantage, however. On our first "doctor's day" twenty-six patients arrived for treatment. When school opened seven children came, of whom ONE brave little boy was an Indian from the farm village. The teacher who was recommended to us struggled through that first year with severe handicaps. In the nearby town, fearful storekeepers refused to sell him lard and soap. Rumors had flown that these "gringos" were devils and that it was not safe to have any dealings with us.

Perhaps our biggest blessing in disguise that year was to have employed Sr. Juan Benalcazar as our teacher. Juan and his wife, Matilde, a classmate of his at Uyumbicho, the government Normal School, together developed the mission school. These young people have become outstanding educators among the Indians, and through the years have given us invaluable counsel: what to do when there is a serenade, how to invite the county teachers' association, what to serve at a community mingo (building bee), how to deal with an adolescent scholarship boy at the Normal School who is not doing good work this trimester, whom to ask for technical advice, which families can be expected to be dependable? Through their eyes, we began to see Ecuador for the first time. Through their eyes, we were able to appreciate certain customs which at first seemed absurd to our North American eyes. Little by little, the initial shock of conflicting cultures began to wear off.

It is actually surprising suddenly to realize how much our religion and our culture are identified. It is tempting to confuse our particular customs as "Christian" simply because we have held them for so long. The problem for the missionary becomes what the anthropologist would call "relevant communication." The sacrament of Holy Communion, for instance, is more significant to the jungle Jibaro when he drinks tomato juice as "the fruit of the vine", for this is the only such fruit he knows. It is also tempting to do things for suffering people rather than to wait for them to help to do it themselves.

There are four main phases of our work, often inter-related: education (of which I have spoken), agriculture, medicine, and evangelism. For years, in mission planning, those labels were used. Then it dawned on us that the practical training program included more than just agriculture, and so that label has been adjusted to read "Social and Economic Well-Being." Over three years ago, a United States government weaving technician gave training to some of our people in weaving on an improved loom. This weaving program continues to grow, and a number of Indians are now finding their main source of livelihood in this home industry. With the population increasing, and land holdings consequently smaller than before, m

Currently the mission is sponsoring eight scholarship students at the secondary level, with partial financial aid, in a program designed to develop national leadership. We use these young people as teachers in our Sunday Schools and Bible Schools, and some of them show particular gifts and ability. Protestant activity in Ecuador is still relatively young, and therefore preparation at the secondary level and beyond has been very meager. There is no doubt that many Indians have the capacity to do superior work, if they are given the opportunity.

Living thus in another country, with a completely different group of people, presents challenges and problems which tax one's imagination to the full. All sorts of questions face us: Should the Indians become entirely assimilated into the governing White-Mestizo class? Should they be encouraged to retain their cultural heritage, their colorful dress, their intricate weaving and embroidery designs? This would mean a certain degree of separation from the other racial groups. Is there some happy medium? To what extent should work among them be carried on in Quechua, when the national language is Spanish? In what way can the church be interracial, giving Indians an equal opportunity for leadership, when the Indians' tendencies are to withdraw before the Whites? Should they be weaned away from their communities for secondary education, or should some schools be provided within their local setting? Should Indian colonies be started in the lowlands where land is still plentiful? There are no easy answers to these questions. Perhaps that is one of the appealing features about this work.

Now that the initial stages of this project are over, and the dust of the first flurries of activity has passed, we understand that this type of work is not quite as simple as it first appeared. At the same time, it is increasingly clear that tremendous satisfaction is to be found in trying to interpret the Gospel so that it frees people to find a personal relationship with Christ. We believe that there is a kind of relationship between man and God which generates power to overcome heavy physical and spiritual burdens. It is this sort of spiritual power which we covet for the Andean Indians who for centuries were exploited, denied opportunities for education and any type of advancement over the peon stage, and left with their quaint and dangerous superstitions and fears to continue their uneventful and unproductive lives in apathetic acceptance of their misfortunes. The fundamental aim of the United Andean Indian Mission is to help the Indian enter upon his rightful inheritance as a son of God through an experience of the redemptive power of Christ, and to enter into a more abundant life, physically, morally, intellectually, and socially.

How can we appraise the results and the failures of our missionary efforts in Ecuador after almost fourteen years? Are we justified in entering a community uninvited? I think the answer lies in the testimony of a number of Indian families, now Christians, whose lives have become obviously fuller, more rewarding, and who thank God for their new "life," which indeed it is. There have been recent occasions, as well, when communities in other parts of Ecuador have invited the mission to begin work, but for lack of personnel we could not accept. And there is evidence among non-evangelical leaders in the county and even on the national scale that they are grateful for our concern as citizens of a democratic country toward the neglected Indian people. In Ecuador there are outstanding intellectuals called "indigenistas," whose concern for the Indian reveals itself in rather liberal legislation toward granting him more privileges. Many times these men are stymied by lack of funds and interest to put such legislation and theory into practice. The "indigenistas" have given us good moral support and guidance.

longer can starving Indian families depend entirely on the land for sustenance. After "demonstrating" newer agricultural methods for years, the missionary agriculturist tried teaching through SHARE-CROPPING. Indians share-crop the mission land, with some supervision, including the use of fertilizer and good seed. Share-cropping is a common procedure in rural Ecuador, and, although we despise its evils, in this case of co-operative farming the results have been notable. Our agriculturist is now beginning to share-crop on lands a distance away, in order to extend this method of agricultural teaching. Renting our tractor and sub-soiler to farmers throughout the county has been a means of breaking up the hard soil, digging it deeper, and preparing it for higher productivity.

For Indians brought up on witch-doctor remedies to attend a North-American type clinic takes effort, too. Superstition plays an important role in the lives of these people. The power of inflicting disease and death is still attributed to the rainbow. "Mother earth caught my child," is a common expression among Indian mothers. Nature is not natural but supernatural and frightening. Simple sanitation and hygiene practices are all but unknown among the Indians. Although our medical staff has been very limited, we have given approximately 5000 to 6000 treatments each year.

Wrestling

Under the tutelage of Dick Schellhase, the wrestling team has already begun its work-outs. Having lost only Prutzman and Cianci by graduation, the team anticipates improving on its 3-5 record of last year.

Dick Dean, district and regional champion from Norristown, will fill Cianci's shoes at 147, and Roy Debeer, from Upper Darby High, will be a major contender to close the 157 ranks left vacant by Prutz.

Hockey

On October 10, the hockey squad opened its '59 season with a 3-1 win over the Finger Lakes Field Hockey Association team in an exhibition game played near Rochester, New York. The game was the highlight of a Sports' Day staged by the association for the high school girls in that area to promote better hockey.

After the All-College Hockey Tournament on Nov. 1 at Swarthmore College four Ursinus College girls were named to the All-College First team: Sue Wagner, Faye Bardman, Judy Moyer, and Debbie Shaw. Three other Ursinus belles placed on the second and third teams. In mid-Nov. at Ellis College these girls will compete in the Phila. Sectional Tournament.

Beset by injuries, the varsity team has been having one of its worst seasons in years; Swarthmore and East Stroudsburg STC have been among their victims, however.

Basketball

On Oct. 22 thirty-five men reported for the first basketball practice of the season. Although only three letter-men have returned (Jim Wenhold, John Detweiler, and Dennis Gould), several of the twenty freshmen who are trying out should fill the shoes left vacant by graduation. Walt Dryfoos of Hazleton looks especially good.

The sixteen game schedule begins at home on December 3 with Phila. Pharmacy. (The complete schedule of games may be found in the July issue of the Journal.)

Warren O. Fry

New Coaches

"Ace" Bailey, Director of Athletics, named two new coaches for the basketball team. Warren O Fry, Director of Athletics at Boyertown High School will act as chief mentor.

Mr. Fry, a three-letter man at Temple University, from which he was graduated in 1932, also holds an M.Ed. degree from that institution. A former pro ball player, Mr. Fry was a scout for the Phila. A's and still does some bird-dogging for Milwaukee. For many years he has been a prominent official in PIAA and collegiate basketball circles.

Mr. Fry will be assisted on the courts by Mr. Robert H. Handwerk. A well-known teacher and coach in this area,

Mr. Handwerk has coached basketball at Spring-Ford High School for the past five years. His B.S. in physical education was awarded by Pennsylvania State University in 1952.

Football

After suffering crushing defeats at the hands of previous opponents, a "fried-up" Ursinus football team defeated Haverford 7-6 in a thrilling game on Old Timers' Day.

A scoreless first half ended with Ursinus in possession of the ball on Haverford's fifteen yard line. Shortly after the second half began, a Ted Kershner punt put the ball on the Ford's fifteen yard line. As Haverford's Freilich attempted to run with the ball, Bear end, John Forrest, pulled the ball from the carrier as tackle, John Brackin, recovered the fumble on the four yard line. Sophomore halfback, Jack McCrae, plunged over for the score. Ted Kershner's placement made the score 7-0.

After Haverford's phenomenal Orman scored, he was called upon to run for the two points which would have given the victory to the Fords. A strong Ursinus line threw him for a loss.

Dick Boggio, senior halfback from Bogota, N. J., won the coveted Kenneth Walker Memorial Trophy, (which is awarded annually on Old Timers' Day) for his outstanding offensive and defensive play.

Association. Coached by Eleanor Snell, the team began its impressive string of victories during the latter part of the 1956 season.

The experience gained from a second international tour by All-Americans Vonnie Gros and Phyllis Stadler last spring made them even greater assets to the team. Phyl, who scored 38 goals during the trip in which the United States team compiled a log of 24 wins, 5 ties, 5 losses, continued her scoring ways this fall along with Adele Boyd, Marge Dawkins Garinger, Erma Keyes, and Liz Mason. Goalie Pat Woodbury Zelly backed up Ginny Dulin, Doris Greenwood Miller, Sue Justice Hodgson, Connie Poley, Winnie Leute, Vonnie Gros and newcomer, Elaine Emmeiser, on the defense.

URSINUS COLLEGE BULLETIN

Six Years of Alumni Sponsorship Completed $155,746 Collected for Ursinus in This Period

1959 Loyalty Fund Report

During 1959 Ursinus alumni contributed $30,232 to the college. The total number of contributors increased from 712 to 1927; seven alumni gave $1,000, while sixty-seven graduates contributed 100 or more. The average gift was 15.57, an increase over last year.

For six years the alumni have sponsored this annual campaign and during this period have collected $155,746 for the school. The breakdown of gifts and donors per year follows:

Year	No. of Contributors	Amount
1954	1107	$20,598.00
1955	1580	29,221.00
1956	1610	25,504.00
1957	1603	22,819.00
1958	1712	27,372.00
1959	1927	30,232.00

It may be interesting for alumni to know, too, that the total contributions from individuals to secondary schools in the U.S. was over $143 million dollars, almost double of what it was in 1955.

Loyalty Fund All-Stars Honored at Banquet

On Old Timers' Day, after a delicious banquet which featured Cornish men, Paul Guest, president of the Alumni Association, presented Ursinus Captain's chairs to seven alumni who did outstanding work for the Loyalty Fund during the past year.

Those who received chairs in recognition of their work for the Fund were Charles Shellenberger, '21; Randolph Helfferich, '29; Mrs. Richard Reid, '48; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Reinhart, '49; Paul Doughty, '52; Thomas Beddow, '56; and Glenn Eshbach, '39.

Publicity

Alumni in the Philadelphia area are pleased to see that news stories of Ursinus appear at least weekly in the big daily newspapers, as well as in the smaller, local papers.

Professor Wilcox, Director of Publicity, hopes that alumni living outside our metropolitan area will forward to him (or to us) any clippings concerning Ursinus which may appear in other, more remotely removed, newspapers. He, and we, are anxious to see how effective our publicity is!

Thomas Beddow

Thomas Beddow, '36 Loyalty Fund Chairman Of the Year

The article by Tucker Beddow found on this page of the Journal was written at the request of the editor. Under Tucker's leadership the class of 1936 had phenomenal success during the past year. There was a gain of 187% in contributors (43 in 1959, over against 15 in 1958, in a class of 78), and an increase of 157% in contributions ($636 in 1959 compared to $247 in 1958).

The substance of the article which appears here was presented to other Loyalty Fund chairmen at the banquet held in their honor on Old Timers' Day.

The Last Shall Be First

by THOMAS BEDDOW

In the 1958-1959 Loyalty Fund campaign, the Class of 1936 enjoyed a greater increase in its percentage of contributing members than any other class. In the 1957-58 campaign the Class of 1936 had just about the worst participation record of all the classes. The transformation from the status of wash-out to the role of hero in the space of one year is indeed pleasant for the members of the Class of 1936 to contemplate.

I have been asked, as Loyalty Fund chairman for the Class, to write about the keys to successful Loyalty Fund participation. The previous tarnish of our record is proof enough of my complete lack of qualification for this task. I dare go forward only by apologizing in advance for the inadequacy of the comments that follow.

I am convinced that the Ursinus graduate doesn't have to be sold on the idea of making a Loyalty Fund contribution. He has a predisposition to give born of love for Ursinus, a deep-rooted loyalty to the College, and a sense of obligation to others. The problem of persuading the alumnus to give scarcely exists, but the problem of trying to insure that the alumnus does not forget to give is a very major one indeed. So many things compete for a person's attention that it is easy for Loyalty Fund appeals to lie forgotten, unless the appeals are constant enough and intriguing enough to compel attention.

Since the Loyalty Fund solicitation market is a receptive, pre-sold one, it follows that if any alumni class fails to do well the fault probably lies not with the members of the class but with the Loyalty Fund chairman of the class. I am certain that the poor participation record of the Class of 1936 in the years prior to the 1958-59 campaign was the result of my own indifferent performance as Loyalty Fund chairman for the Class. At last year's Loyalty Fund dinner I was to explain the bad record of the Class of 1936, and I had to make public confession that my poor job as ours, and hooks on everything—coats, towels, etc.—so that they can be hung up instead of hung on hangers or on rods.

Some of the things which continually amaze and delight me are Swedish, the living language; shops which display a fantastic array of handicrafts; the way people change their names if they are too common or are not suitable to them, and the everlasting influence and effect of the socialistic form of government. In the end I can only come to the same conclusion as the Swedes who have formed this governmental policy. This is an experiment, in a land which is small enough and rich enough to be able to afford to experiment. The people and nations of the world certainly benefit from the fact that there is such a country as Sweden with the possibility of and the inclination toward experimentation.

ANDEAN INDIANS

Thus we work with our national Christian friends and sympathizers, accept the fine things which Ecuador offers, walk with "tino" (tact) and understanding, and enter the doors of opportunity where we can. Being welcomed into Ecuadorian homes, sharing with them good food and good humor at the table, digging earth with them for adobes for a new community school, reading the Bible with one who has just learned to comprehend, following a child to the home of a sick parent, or accompanying a small group of Indians about to take their citizenship tests in literacy (thus becoming accredited voters), playing "lobo" with a group of Bible School youngsters, entering into a lively discussion on some international affair with intelligent young teachers, walking across the fields on a bright morning with snowcaps visible on every side—all these "little" things become for us a privilege which now we could hardly do without! We welcome and encourage other members of the Ursinus family to join us around the world!

chairman was the cause. If for no other reason than my personal embarrassment knew no bounds, I resolved to put, and did put, real effort into the 1958-59 campaign. The Class of 1936 responded with its best participation record to date. These experiences indicate to me that the major key to successful Loyalty Fund participation is a sweat-provoking job on the part of the class chairman.

Now, how should the class chairman approach his task? I have developed from my own trials and tribulations as class chairman four principal "do's and don'ts."

First, do make constant appeals during the course of the campaign. One or two perfunctory letters will not get the job done. I personally believe that about four appeals spaced throughout the year, with the last one coming just before the campaign's close, are about right.

Second, don't use canned material with which to make appeals if you can avoid it. Personal letters from the class chairman to his classmates are much more attention getting and will result in a much more effective response.

Third, don't use a slick technique making Loyalty Fund appeals. This was one year when I conceived what I thought was a brilliant idea. I sent brand new quarter to each of my classmates and asked each to add something to the quarter and send the combined amount off to the Loyalty Fund. As turned out, the most charitable thing that can be said about this fund-raising technique was that it was much more brilliant than it was wise, because the response it elicited was unusually bad.

Fourth, do give your class a reasonable goal at which to aim. For example in the 1958-59 campaign, the Class of 1936 was made aware that it was dead last among all the alumni classes in the matter of Loyalty Fund participation and the goal was set for the achievement of a respectable participation record.

In closing, I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to speak briefly to the members of the Class of 1936. Primarily, I want to congratulate the upon their fine performance in the Loyalty Fund campaign just concluded, and to express to them my personal thanks for their noteworthy achievement. The I would like to express to them the hope that in the 1959-60 campaign, our class will increase its percentage participation to 75% or more. Finally, I cannot resist the temptation to observe that that hope will be most efficiently realized if each member of the Class of 1936, when he or she finishes reading this issue of the Alumni Journal, will lay hold on that moment to set off a contribution to the Loyalty Fund.
