To the Alumni:

I often pause and congratulate myself when I ponder the results of having selected Ursinus as my alma mater. When I warm myself with the memories of the campus, I am also gratefully conscious of the importance to me that many other people made the same choice. Ursinus College would have been a dreary place indeed if President Omwake, Dean Kline, Professor Yost, and my classmates had not made the same decision. This is why on Sunday, September 26, at a formal convocation I congratulated the new students upon their choice of Ursinus as their college.

Each year the pattern of the campus population changes. The students who entered Ursinus this year will grow as individuals under a combination of circumstances which have not occurred before on the Ursinus campus and which will never again take the same form nor have an identical effect. These differences help give the educational process utility and vitality. For education, as distinct from mere training, is fundamentally effective with an individual. A fire company or a Fourth of July committee, a pinocle club cannot be educated. Such groups can only be trained. While training has its place and importance it is well to remember that we can escape from a group, but we cannot escape from ourselves. Furthermore, the world depends upon the well-educated, individual human being. What we do for and with ourselves is deeply significant for others, just as surely as what we do for others is important because it has an effect on us. And, if we rightly understand the Christian message, God frequently achieves His purposes through the individual.

We are, of course, to some degree the product of our environment. The people who form the environment at Ursinus are important. If their influence is helpful we are enlarged through that association. They in turn benefit from our influence. Indeed, man has learned from experience that when each one contributes his best in a cooperative plan, all gain more than any could gain working alone.

The recognition of these educational values makes the reading of the report of last year's Loyalty Fund a satisfying experience and the making of plans for the new Loyalty Fund both exciting and meaningful. I know that Ursinus will continue to serve its unique function more effectively as more alumni contribute to this cooperative plan.

Please send your gift to the Loyalty Fund promptly, for it will immediately be translated into education of the individual at Ursinus College.

President

Founders' Day

Founders' Day, October 23 this year, as a fitting sequel to Old Timers' Day. At the Sunday convocation the College honored six Ursinus alumni and bestowed the LL.D on another benefactor and friend.

One of the sons whom she honored, Dr. Frederick Binder, President of Hartwick College, delivered the Founders' Day Address. Speaking on the topic, "Revolution For Progress," Dr. Binder said, "I am convinced that this college stands as a functioning symbol of progress in mind and spirit in a time when there are too few evidences of this in American higher education."

Commenting on the worship of mediocrity and the retreat from excellence, he insisted that "a revolution for progress was never built on self-satisfaction or the complacent attitudes of a people."

He continued, "The slow death of the competitive spirit is a tragic thing to behold. I sometimes think its last ditch and is being made in American sports, but even here there are some signs of weakness. Fair and open competition is the life-blood of progress. But the aggressive American is slowly becoming an anemic American as competition and initiative are drained away by such things as heavy taxes, the restriction of risk capital for small businesses, and the faceless and formless equality of our educational system adjusted downward to the average pupil.

"It seems only proper that the call for a new revolution for progress should be issued by those who are in the area of higher education. We must sift out the talented, broaden our programs of accelerated study and honors work, and strengthen the arts and sciences. We must expect more of all students, but especially more of the gifted. We must produce better teachers and better scientists and humanists, ministers, lawyers, doctors, and engineers. We cannot be satisfied with mediocrity, for that will be the death knell of our nation. We must continually appeal to the public, to our alumni and to industry for financial support of higher education. We must persuade our best minds to enter the teaching profession. Already some encouraging signs are appearing. If there is to be a new dawn through a revolution for progress, if we are to move from the trough to the crest of that wave as it rolls toward the beach of the future, if we believe with Wolfe that our America is a dream to be accomplished, we must begin now by slaying the enemies of progress which are in our midst. We can do this by first admitting that they are there.

"Americans who call themselves 'educated', will have to re-assess their standards of values, rethink their basic philosophies, cast out their devils, and stop interpreting progress simply in terms of production. The revolution for which we call is not one for material progress or even for technological superiority, but a revolution in morals and values, a revolution for excellence, a revolution for integrity and spiritual regeneration. Without these things, material progress is an illusion and we will wallow in the trough of that wave forever."

FREDERICK M. BINDER, LL.D.

Dr. Binder was graduated from Ursinus in 1942 and received his Ph.D. in 1955 from the U. of Pa. His dissertation won the Newcomen prize. He served in the Navy during the war, taught at Somerville (N. J.) High School, was assistant registrar at Temple U., and from 1955 to 1960 he held the positions of Professor of History, Academic Dean, and Vice President at Thiel College. He is married to the former Grace Brandt, '43, and has one daughter. He received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

ALFRED C. BARTHOLOMEW, D.D.

Dr. Bartholomew, '39, awarded the Doctor of Divinity degree, received his Bachelor of Divinity from Lancaster Theological Seminary in 1942 and his Ph.D. from Drew University in 1950. At present he is professor of rural church work at the Lancaster Theological Seminary. In 1958 he was visiting lecturer at Taylor Union Theological Seminary in Japan. Dr. Bartholomew's wife is the former Joyce Studemund, '41. They have three children.

WARREN K. HESS, LL.D.

The Honorable Warren K. Hess, '31, graduate of the U. of P. Law School, practiced law in Berks County from 1935 to 1945. In 1936 he was elected to the Pennsylvania General Assembly and served for four years. In 1940 Judge Hess became Assistant District Attorney of Berks County, an office he held until 1945. He is now the President Judge of the Berks County Court of Common Pleas. He was awarded the degree of Doctor of Laws.

ROBERT LAKE BATEMAN, Sc.D.

Dr. Bateman, '31, Director of Marketing Development for the Union Carbide Chemical Company of New York, received the degree of Doctor of Science. He completed his M.S. at the U. of Pa. in 1933, was awarded his Ph.D. in 1935, and has an impressive list of publications to his credit. He is co-author of

"Petrochemicals Today" and "The Scope and Growth of the Petrochemical Industry." In the field of chemical marketing Dr. Bateman is an acknowledged expert, having helped to publish such papers as "Polyox Goes to Market" and "Which Develops First, The Chemical or the Market."

He is married to the former Isabel Rickley, '30; they have two children.

HERMANN FREDERICK EILTS, LL.D.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was awarded to Mr. Eilts, '43. After serving in the United States Army in Europe and North Africa during World War II, he took his graduate study at the Johns Hopkins University School of International Studies. Having completed his work with distinction, he received his M.A. in 1947.

Mr. Eilts began his career as a Foreign Service officer in the State Department shortly afterward. He served in the United States Embassy in Tehran, Iran, and in Saudi Arabia. In 1954-56 he was attached to the Embassy at Baghdad, Iraq. From 1957-59 Mr. Eilts was Officer-in-Charge of CENTO (Central Treaty Organization), formerly the Baghdad Pact, and in 1960 he was appointed Officer-in-Charge of Near East Regional Affairs.

RALPH E. HEIGES, LL.D.

Dr. Heiges, '25, was awarded the degree of Doctor of Laws. He completed his M.A. in 1928 and his Ph.D. in 1933 at Columbia. In 1936 he became a member of the faculty at the State Teacher's College at Indiana, Pa., in the department of Social Studies. In 1940 he was appointed the Head of the Secondary Education Department at Indiana. Dr. Heiges, a member of the Pennsylvania State Education Association and the American Political Science Association, is now President of Shippensburg State College.

Wayne Brown Memorial

On October 14th Mr. George S. Runyan, Vice-President of Crown-Zellerbach Corporation, acting in behalf of the Wayne Brown Memorial Fund Committee, presented the Committee's check for $5000 to Dr. Donald L. Helfferich, President of Ursinus.

The fund will be used for the establishment of a scholarship at Ursinus to assist those deserving students who "demonstrate qualities of leadership on the campus and athletic field."

During his years at Ursinus, Wayne A. Brown, '17, was a competent student, a leader in campus social activities and an outstanding athlete in both football and basketball. After graduation, he devoted many successful years of service to the paper industry.

His death in May, 1959, deeply saddened his college and his business associates, and shortly afterward his many friends in the paper and allied industries acted to set up a memorial fund. The goal of $5000 was quickly realized.

At the ceremony conducted at the regular chapel service in Bomberger Hall, the Wayne Brown Memorial Fund Committee was represented by the following members:

Mr. Jack Cowie, Committee Chairman, of Hollingworth & Whitney Division of the Scott Paper Company; Mr. S. D. Fleet, Vice-President of the Albe-marle Paper Company; and Mr. L. W. Gould, Assistant Vice-President of Crown-Zellerbach Corporation.

The paper industry was represented by:

Mr. K. Heston, Treasurer of Kraft Paper Manufacturing Association, and Mr. Ross Fife, former Secretary, now retired.

In his address, Mr. Runyan expressed the hope that the "establishment of this fund would inspire other Associations and other industries to make similar, much-needed donations to institutions emphasizing the liberal arts, for there is still, in this highly specialistic and technological age, a great demand for those broadly knowledgeable graduates of liberal arts colleges." And there is no finer way of honoring the memory of distinguished alumni and friends.

Ritter Receives Degree

President Helfferich awarded Rolland A. Ritter, Director and Chief Executive Officer of Ritter Finance Company of Wyncote, Pa., the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at the Founders' Day convocation on October 23. Mr. Ritter was reared and educated in Bucks County and in 1927 joined the Household Finance Corporation. In 1946 he founded his own company which now consists of 57 offices serving a six state area. Mr. Ritter has devoted a great deal of his energy and resources to charitable work, particularly in the field of helping underprivileged children. He is a trustee of Roxborough Memorial Hospital in Philadelphia and has also been active in the Shrine work for crippled children.

Admissions' Report

College opened this fall with a total of 921 students in the Day School and 415 in the Evening School. The Freshman class consisted of 164 men and 111 women, making a total of 279. Only 13% of the students in the Day School commute from home.

The Freshman class is of a high caliber. 81% come from the top 40% of their senior class in high school. The average College Board score is 550; the average I.Q. is 121. Our Freshmen come from 13 states and 170 different high schools.

The Office of Admissions is now busily engaged in interviewing prospective students for the Fall term of 1960, having interviewed here at the college 1335 prospective students during the year ending October 1, 1960.

The Admissions Office in Bomberger Hall has been expanded. Room 13 has been converted into a bright and comfortable reception room with private offices for Geoffrey Dolman, Director of Admissions, and H. Lloyd Jones, Jr., Assistant Director of Admissions. Dr. Allan Rice, Assistant to the Director of Admissions, continues to visit schools and attend College Nights in New Jersey while Messrs. Dolman and Jones hold the fort at the college and cover College Nights in Pennsylvania and Delaware.

The number of applicants is continuing to rise, with no end in sight. Alumni and friends of the college are urged to send in as early as possible their recommendations and expressions of interest on behalf of applicants and to encourage prospective students to make appointments for interviews.

Lobsang Samden

Brother of Dalai Lama At Ursinus

Lobsang Samden, brother of the Dalai Lama, the spiritual ruler of Tibet now living in India, is one of the more interesting students on campus this year.

Friendly, cheerful, and quick in movement, Lobsang is genuinely interested in participating in the full life of a typical Ursinus student.

His early education was gained in a Buddhist monastery. For seven years he had been in government service. In 1950 the Red Chinese began their pressure on Tibet, causing him and the Dalai Lama to flee to India in April, 1959. Since then over 30,000 Tibetans have joined them.

The Ursinus YM-YWCA spearheaded a drive among students and campus organizations to assist Lobsang's college expenses. Already Ursinus students have contributed $500 toward his year's expenses.

Ursinus Women's Club

The Christmas Luncheon of the Ursinus Women's Club will be held December 3 at Gimbel's at 12:30 P.M. The party, in honor of Mrs. Nora Shuler Helfferich, will be an opportunity for her many Ursinus friends to join in this expression of affection and regard. Reservations at $2.25 each should be made by November 30th with Mrs. John Lentz, 1106 Warwick Road, Haddonfield, N. J.

The Executive Board of the Women's Club met Sept. 24th in Collegeville to discuss plans for the Christmas luncheon and activities for the coming year. A spring card party and the May Day luncheon are scheduled, with details and dates to be announced later.

Old Timers' Day

The Fates were kind to us on Old Timers' Day. Fair skies and a football victory (26-25 over Swarthmore) made the record-breaking crowd a happy and high-spirited one. Mr. Bailey estimated that over 4,500 saw the Bears win the thrill-packed game over the Garnets.

The New Gymnasium was packed with post-game hot chocolate drinkers. Alumni of all eras happily chewed on the free donuts as they spoke with friends and professors or eyed the photographs which lined one side of the auditorium.

At 5:30 a hundred Loyalty Fund class chairmen and vice-chairmen enjoyed the Cornish hens at the Kick-Off dinner. The day was climaxed with the crowning of Sandra Motta, '61, as the Homecoming Queen at the well-attended Varsity Club dance.

Dr. Helfferich and Dr. Sturgis, Head of the Department of Chemistry, are here shown receiving a $1,000 check from Mr. C. J. Eckhardt, Gulf's Phila. Sales Engineer.

Alumnae in Who's Who

In a recent check of WHO'S WHO F AMERICAN WOMEN and a comparison with other coeducational, liberal arts, independent colleges of the country, it was found that Ursinus ranks 1st; with respect to WHO'S WHO F AMERICAN WOMEN, among more than 1200 independent institutions of higher learning in the country, ranks 120th.

The names of Ursinus graduates that appear in the publication are as follows:

- Florence O. Benjamin, '30
- Ruth E. Grauert, '39
- Evelyn Glazier Henzel, '32
- Elinor S. Lutes, '39
- Amy E. Preston, '30
- Dorothy L. Shindel, '35
- Mildred T. Stibitz, '28
- Clara Deck Brosman, '12
- Mildred G. Fox, '35
- Jessie Royer Greaves, '92
- Mary Tershowaska Hunsicker, '44
- Eveline B. Omwake, '33
- Mabel Ditter Sellers, '39

Dr. Helfferich Honored

President Helfferich was chosen by the Mercersburg Academy as its outstanding Alumnus of the Year. He accepted the award at the Alumni Day ceremonies held at the Academy on October 29. Dr. Helfferich, Class of '17 at Mercersburg, was selected and cited for his distinguished "character, service and achievement."

Psychology's Place in a Liberal Education

RICHARD M. FLETCHER

To speak of psychology's place in a liberal education, we must start with a definition. A liberal education should liberate us from ignorance about people and things in our world and their relationship to each other and to the Creator. Not only should it pull out the weeds of ignorance, but it should also plant the seeds of purpose, such as religion provides, so that we may most effectively use our knowledge.

A liberal education should be broad; it should lead to broad understanding and broad applications. This objective is achieved not only by the more traditional liberal arts, but also by the basic sciences, which are also a part of our cultural heritage. Both the liberal arts and the sciences bring about broader understanding by emphasizing basic facts and basic principles. They also emphasize not only knowledge but methods of investigation in each field as part of the process of adding new knowledge. However, each of these study areas has its own emphasis: the liberal arts have a particular interest in purposes and values, while science attempts to discover and systematize knowledge of the physical world.

Up to now I have been referring to the liberal arts such as language, literature, and the classics; the biological and physical sciences such as biology, physics, and chemistry; the social sciences such as economics, political science, sociology, and psychology; mathematics, which is both a deductive art and a provider of the quantitative bases for science; and philosophy, which takes an overview of both the arts and the sciences.

What about the practical arts and the applied sciences? Where, you may ask, do they fit into a liberal education? Some educators believe that only the liberal arts and the basic sciences should be included. I do not agree. While it is to some extent a matter of definition where one is to draw the line, I believe that a limited number of applied courses is an integral part of a liberal education. In psychology, for example, it is dangerous to do too much skywriting in theory without occasionally barking one's shins along the trails of experience. Practical experience in psychology has led us to revise a number of theories. Even the applied statistics worked out by mathematicians have been useful not only for applied research in medicine, biochemistry, and psychology, but for basic research in these same areas.

However, a word of warning. An applied course should be liberal in that it develops an individual's power, the ability to make applications to a wide variety of everyday events. This desirable result is achieved by the way in which an applied course is taught. A teacher may easily be tempted to teach in a narrow way, to present pushbutton answers. Students are pragmatic; they want answers to practical problems they expect to face. But no teacher of psychology serves even the practical purpose well if he tries to give pushbutton answers. A particular way of handling one shy child is not necessarily good for handling another. The student of human behavior should know a good deal about motives, emotions, intelligence, personality, attitudes, aptitudes, and interests, and then, treating each child as an individual, observe whether there are difficulties in any, or several, of these areas, so that remedial measures may be tailored to fit the individual.

Dr. Fletcher, who is head of the Psychology Department at Ursinus, is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College and earned his Ph.D. degree in industrial psychology at Pennsylvania State University. After graduating from College he studied a year at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration and then worked in business, first as an accounting supervisor and later as assistant to the vice-president of a manufacturing concern. After securing his doctorate, and before joining Ursinus, he spent a year heading a Navy research project on classroom teaching methods with the results being published by the Navy. Dr. Fletcher is a member of the American Psychological Association and will be listed in the next edition of Who's Who in the East.

Now, having defined a liberal education as including the liberal arts and sciences and some applied courses taught to emphasize basic facts and principles, we are ready to see where psychology fits in.

PSYCHOLOGY'S PLACE IN LIBERAL EDUCATION

Psychology's place in a liberal education is due to serve as a bridge between the liberal arts, on the one hand, and the biological and physical sciences on the other. In my opinion, it serves this function more completely than any other subject for two reasons: first, psychology is a social science and therefore deals with one of the most important subjects of the arts, human behavior; secondly, it uses more of the methods of science more regularly than any other social science, particularly methods of measurement, covariation, and experimental techniques. In the use of each of these methods it employs scientific statistics regularly. Because it is primarily concerned with individual behavior, psychology lends itself to experimentation more than other social sciences dealing to a greater extent with group behavior.

Now let us look at psychology's relation to the arts, then at its relation to science, particularly to the methods of science.

PSYCHOLOGY'S RELATION TO THE ARTS

Both the liberal arts and psychology have as one of their main interests the study of human nature, man's reaction to the things in his environment and his relation to other men. Among liberal arts subjects, the history, language, and literature of different nations reflect their different cultures. Social psychology attempts to study the effects of such cultural patterns in shaping individuals. That learning to know the general behavioral characteristics of each nation is a step to learning to discriminate among their members as individuals was brought home forcibly to me this summer by a young man from India named Singh, a graduate student in physics in one of our American universities. In attempting to tell me what he felt that Russian engineers were more successful in building steel plants in India than were American engineers, I said that the Russian engineers are trained to know the people of India; well that they can take suggestions from native workmen, while the American engineers, not trained to understand their people, avoid attempting to find whether they have any suggestions. Internationally, an understanding of people is becoming crucial.

PSYCHOLOGY'S RELATION TO THE SCIENCES

If the subject matter of psychology

es it to the arts, its methods link it to sciences. When a nonscientist asks self, "When does a field of investigation become a science?" he may feel fazed. He thinks of knowledge argued systematically; he thinks of experiments carried out in laboratories with strict procedures, with such additions as, "Keep your test tubes an!" All this is necessary but not sufficient. Science goes far beyond these concepts, but yet, in a general way, many of its concepts can be made fairly understandable for the average intelligent person. Scientific method is not apart from actual affairs but is a very closeknit, crinating way of thinking about all things in the world with the exception of ultimate goals, which are the concern of religion and philosophy.

When I was a graduate student I heard some of my fellow students argue that a field of inquiry becomes a science when it uses the methods of science. After reading in the philosophy of science, I have decided that such a viewpoint is naive. Philosophers of science point out that its aim is prediction and, therefore, we would add, control; so we can see that if we use the general methods of science and fail to get prediction, perhaps the particular ways in which we applied those general methods are not appropriate to our subject matter. Therefore, if in a field of inquiry we fail in our aim of science—prediction, even though we have used its general methods, we cannot claim to have a science. Psychology can already claim to be a science in those areas in which it can show many examples of prediction demonstrably better than can common sense, although in any other areas there are only the most tentative of hypotheses. Because the psychologist would like to get even better results, even though he is pleased with the progress he is making, he is very consciously aware of the logical objections that various aspects of his methods attempt to answer, and so he often makes an excellent teacher of the tenets of science, perhaps better than any teachers in other sciences.

THE METHODS OF PSYCHOLOGISTS AND OTHER SCIENTISTS

The general methods used by psychologists and common to all other sciences are two in number; what I have chosen to call the empirical method, which is mainly descriptive, and the experimental, which is mainly concerned with causation. The empirical method is three divisions:

1. Observation, description, and definition
2. Measurement
3. Covariation

The experimental method has one main division, referring, of course, to the carrying out of specific experiments.

THE EMPIRICAL (DESCRIPTIVE) METHOD

The arts and the sciences have observation, description, and definition as common procedures. However, the scientist must be very careful in his definition of phenomena so that he and other scientists can reach agreement on meanings, making replication of experiments possible. Thus the psychologist's definitions are much more discriminating than any dictionary definition of intelligence, motivation, or emotion, for example.

Dr. Fletcher

Measurement is one of the important basic functions of a science. Those in the arts, such as linguists, are making increasing use of frequency counts. The psychologist not only uses frequency counts, such as the number of teenagers in a city who have been arrested at least twice, but he also wants a closer look by means of measurement at such behavioral traits as intelligence, personality, interests, and attitudes, which must be measured for each youth involved. Psychology's concern with the individual is well exemplified by its attempt to measure traits of behavior that each of us has.

In other fields of study, also, some of the most important problems are questions of degree. Few argue against foreign aid, so that the real question becomes, "How much foreign aid?" Another important national question is, "How much inflation can we shoulder?" A basic principle in psychology is that all behavioral traits are present to some degree. Psychologists do not have the ends of a scale for reference points—we have no freezing or boiling point—but measure from some middle figure or average. No one can conceive, for example, of a person's having an absolute amount of intelligence or zero intelligence. Even the idiot who turns his head in the direction of a noise, perhaps is showing some intelligence. No one is completely aggressive or completely lacking in aggressiveness. Thus it is with all behavioral traits, so that in psychology the problem of measurement is basic, as it is in the other sciences. Seeing the need for measurement is the result of taking a closer look, after seeing what factors are involved in a certain behavior, to determine to what extent each is contributing.

In covariation, or correlation, we are usually trying to express a relationship between two or more variables (in psychology, behavioral factors such as intelligence that vary from person to person). For example, a positive correlation exists between a student's intelligence and his grades; high intelligence is usually coupled with high grades and low intelligence with low grades. This statistical correlation usually ranges between .60 to .80. Since correlations range from .00—no relationship, to 1.00—a perfect relationship, a correlation of .60 to .80 is moderately high. It is not higher simply because other factors, such as interest and work habits, contribute to grades.

Correlation should not be regarded as establishing that one factor, or variable, causes another; it shows that a relationship exists which may be useful as a lead for further investigation to see whether it is causal. Suppose that in a manufacturing plant an attempt is made to see whether there is a relationship between scores made by foremen on a test of neuroticism and the number of industrial grievances filed by the union workers under them. If such a relationship is found to exist—that foremen with higher neuroticism scores have more grievances among their workmen, while those with low scores have fewer grievances—what does this mean? Our first temptation might be to conclude that it establishes that neurotic foremen upset the workers under them. But we have indicated that correlation does not necessarily indicate what is causing what. When two factors are found to vary together, as determined by common sense observation or by statistical correlation, there are always the following possibilities concerning this relationship: A may cause B; B may cause A; an underlying factor, C, may cause both A and B; or A and B may be related by chance. So we see that not only may neurotic foremen be upsetting the workmen, but particularly difficult workmen may be upsetting the foremen, or some underlying condition such as a hot and humid shop may be affecting foremen and workers, or the relationship between the foremen and grievances may be occurring just by chance. The possibility of chance occurrence is not too great a problem because psychologists concern themselves with only those correlations which, according to statistical tests, have little likelihood of having come about by chance.

Even when we do not know whether there is a causal link, many correlations are useful in prediction. For example, a test of finger dexterity, even if it is not known to what extent such dexterity is inherent or acquired through work experience, may still be an excellent predictor, at the time of hiring, of how good a man's later job performance will be. In chemistry, also, knowing a quantitative relationship such as that existing between surface tension and temperature is useful, even though the cause of the relationship may not be known in a particular instance.

THE EXPERIMENTAL (CAUSATIVE) METHOD

Let us turn to the experimental method.

When an experimenter believes there is a relationship between two factors or has found such a relationship by the correlational method, he manipulates the one factor to see whether it then affects the other. If it does, the first factor is established as a possible cause of the second, pending repetition of the experiment. This does not preclude the possibility of other causes, since, in the correlational method and the experimental methods, one is attempting only to establish a particular factor as one cause of another. In our example of the foremen, we could apply a rough experimental technique by changing foremen or by manipulating another factor such as the heat or humidity. Besides manipulating the independent variable (always the variable being manipulated) to see whether it causes the dependent variable to respond in a certain manner, the experimenter attempts to control other factors that may affect establishing this link. He always tries to follow the same procedure and to control surrounding conditions. Another aspect of control involves the use of a control group, a group to which the independent variable is not applied, to make sure that, when it is absent, the dependent variable does not respond.

The concept of a control group has wide applicability in everyday thinking. A manufacturer, instead of trying a new sales promotional program in all his territories at once, may try a limited number of typical areas at first to see how much increase in sales he can achieve as compared to his control group—the territory not included in the promotional program. If he were to apply his promotional program to all his outlets from the start it would be difficult to tell to what extent his sales are being affected by the program or by market conditions, so that he might spend money needlessly.

An example of the use of both the empirical and experimental methods in a field other than psychology concerns cigarette smoking and lung cancer. A correlation establishing a possible relationship was found between the frequency of cigarette smoking and the incidence of lung cancer. One experimenter tried for experimental verification by having cattle inhale cigarettes in a smoking machine! A number developed lung cancer. Now cow's lungs are not human lungs but they are similar in many respects, increasing the likelihood of a causal relationship between cigarette smoking and lung cancer in human smokers.

THE SCOPE OF PSYCHOLOGY

In studying human behavior psychology applies the methods of science to a wide variety of subject matter. Educational psychology is concerned with the growth and development of people of all ages from small children to adolescents to adults. We must know the mental, physical and personality development that can reasonably be expected of people at different ages so that teaching methods may be most effective. The educational psychologist is also interested in examining the learning process—a fascinating study of how we learn, particularly the new and the difficult. Teaching and learning are opposite sides of the same coin. People learn more by their own efforts than by the teacher's; thus the teacher should function as a guide to learning. With their knowledge of the learning process psychologists have recently devised teaching machines that can often teach arithmetic, algebra, languages, and psychology faster than conventional methods. Such machines may probably serve best as aids for teachers. Johnny could be requested to catch up on his algebra with a teaching machine, which is not as horrendously mechanistic as it sounds, since the effectiveness of the machine is largely dependent on the nature and arrangement of the material in it, based on sound principles learning.

Understanding abnormal psychology is necessary for the prevention of mental illness because so much of abnormal behavior represents exaggerated normal behavior patterns rather than a difference in kind. We should become aware of the various ways, common to all of us, in which we "kid" ourselves part of the time, to avoid the mentally person's tendency to "kid" himself most of the time.

Industrial psychologists help in selecting workers for shop to executive positions, are concerned with personnel training and development, and deal with labor-management relations. The prediction requirement for science is achieved by tests and other selection procedures, which provide better than common sense prediction of how a worker will perform after learning his job. In World War II the Air Force, following the best selection methods known, nevertheless had 20% of its prospective pilots wash out in training. After psychologists set up scientific selection procedures, only 5% washed out—a considerable achievement.

The experimental psychologist is mainly concerned with the design and carrying out of experiments and often tests basic psychological theory. However, psychologists with graduate degrees in any area of psychology are usually well trained in experimental method and may have as much as several years of statistics, which have become an integral part of experimental design.

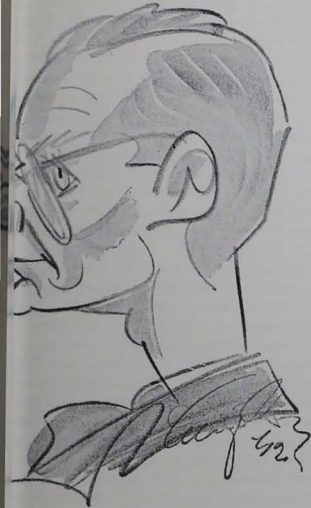

Psychologists are also working in other areas: the selection and training of persons for space exploration; application to medicine—speech difficulties, psychotherapy; and the development of scientific methods for vocational guidance which Dr. James B. Conant regards as a central problem in our schools.

Because psychology and the arts have a common interest in human behavior because psychology, next to the biological and physical sciences, uses the experimental and related methods vigorously and so explicitly that students have an excellent opportunity for developing critical thinking, it serves as a bridge between the liberal arts and the biological and physical sciences. Thus it becomes a vital span in the journey to liberal education.

On the cold, bleak dawn of November 9, 1960, there was one warm spot in the nation. The Nixon forces may have gone down to a sort of nip-and-tuck defeat in many places, with a magnifying glass often needed to tell who really was who. But not in Colledgeville, where the Republican forces held out in fine style. Hawaii and California could have seduced our G. Sieber Pancoast '37, professor of Political Science and baseball coach. Sieb was chairman of the local Nixon-for-President organization, covering Colledgeville and surrounding territory, in charge of fund-raising, coffee auctions and Nixon rallies, and as a consequence we had none of your wishy-washy election results in these parts. Thanks to our Sieb, Colledgeville was soundly three-to-one on the right side of the ledger. Or would you call it the wrong side? Solidly, anyhow.

In another presidential race another of our prominent faculty members really brought home the bacon. The bacon in his case was the presidency of the Presbyterian Historical Society, and the victor was none other than our Dr. Maurice Armstrong, chairman of the history department. The Society is the center for much historical research in church history and American civilization. Dr. Armstrong had not, at latest reports, received congratulatory word from Mr. Khrushchev.

So many of our faculty were abroad this past summer that the campus is all but awash in first-hand reports on foreign climes. Dr. George Hartzell (German) had a pleasant and profitable visit in Germany and Austria. Dr. Elizabeth Foster (History) toured Western Europe in a Ford bus with her husband and four sons. Dr. and Mrs. George Tyson (Psychology) were busy criss-crossing Europe once more. Mr. and Mrs. Ned Seelye (Spanish) were in Guatemala, ducking bombs. I myself was in Sweden most of the time with my little tribe, growing mildew all over myself in the wettest summer since 1785. I also came home an expert on the Soviet Union, having spent nearly four days there.

But I don't know why I harp on all these old hands when the big news is the new faces on the faculty this fall.

We might start with a team known locally as the Drs. Doane. Roland Doane is a rolling stone as you will see. A Yankee and a Harvard man, he has taught 35 years at the University of Vermont and studied at Grenoble, and has a Parisian doctorate and a Dutch wife. This cosmopolitan character is now teaching French among us.

But speaking of cosmopolites, what about Dr. Caroline Doane, a dainty Dutch damsel with a Yankee husband? She has descended upon us via Vermont with Rollin' Roland, and via Grenoble and Paris, too, and with a Paris Ph.D., to boot. Some of our more hide-bound alumni are going to claim she isn't real Dutch, not coming from Up-State but only from Holland. Be that as it may, she is making a name for herself here by teaching not only French but Russian, for after doing time at Middlebury Russian school she (and her husband) spent last summer in Russia, not just traveling but living, and thus she brings a whiff of the auld sod to the Ursinus Russian course, whose theme song might be:

Than to be with Carolina
Learning Russian!*

The language office in Bomberger is getting cluttered and no mistake about it. We've only scratched the surface here. I don't want to overuse that word c-s-m-p-l-t-n, but what else can you call it when I tell you we have yet a third new arrival in there in the form of an accomplished young musician-linguist and German teacher, Miss Annemarie Gropp. If she weren't a native of our own Allentaun, up Lecha County way, we could have presented her as our luscious new Hamburger, for she has spent the better part of her life in the German metropolis and done part of her studies there, continued at Temple in Philadelphia, and is finishing at the University of Pennsylvania.

Don't go away, there's more! Mr. Redjeb Jordania has also been swept into office — our office — and here's another Parisian and another musical linguist. A symphonic composer, no less, Mr. Jordania speaks, in addition to a sort of English, French, German, Spanish, Russian and Georgian. He is teaching Spanish here, has taught various languages in Germany, Spain and France, has been a news correspondent, but, despite his rich Georgian overtones he has never, so far as we know, been in Atlanta. They probably wouldn't recognize him as one of their own in Atlanta, for his Georgian accent is more that of Tiflis (Tbilisi to you). His father was president of Georgia, you may recall, Joe Stalin's old home county. Mrs. Jordania is from Brooklyn, but doesn't speak it.

But, whew! let's get out of this crowded language office, where all the old faces are still at, or struggling to get to their desks—except that of one who is deeply missed and sadly mourned, who would be there no more were his well-loved features and presence not indelibly burned into the memories of those of us who laboured many years in the vineyard at his side. How pleased he would have been at the vigorous full tide now sweeping into the old place!

We have now finished with the languages unless you could refer to English as a language. A Swedish Yankee teaching English is my next exhibit. Is there no end to this melting-pot business? John Gustavson, of New Haven, with a B.A. from Upsala and graduate work to his credit at Lehigh and Muhlenberg, has joined the English department and is also the new Director of Publicity. His wife is Swedish-Lithuanian and their children, one of whom was born only last week, are thus—well, you figure out what they are, with the rich veneer of the Pennsylvania Pretzel Belt that will be rubbing off on them here! John plays a banjo but is otherwise a highly respected new addition to the faculty. Watch for his Ursinus press releases in the front-page headlines from coast to coast.

Still more coming! There are other departments beyond the grey and hallowed confines of Bomberger. Biology has got a real shot in the arm with a new man named Robert V. Kirchen who stems from out of the West. Well, Michigan is west of here. He got his

JOHN W. CLAWSON

The history of the College seems to divide itself naturally into four periods of twenty odd years. The recollections of Mrs. Lentz and of the late Mrs. Wehler published in the March and July Journals throw interesting light on the first period dominated by President Bomberger when, before the building of Bomberger Hall in 1893, a small Academy, a small College and a small Theological Seminary shared the rooms of the old Freeland Seminary buildings.

I came to Ursinus in 1907 in the middle of the second period when Bomberger Hall was the center of activities. Dr. Paisley began his remarkable career as a Director and Miss Ermold took up her duties in the Treasurer's Office in the same year. Dr. Henry T. Spangler, an able and forceful man, the son-in-law of Dr. Bomberger, had been President from 1893 to 1904 and still took an active part in the affairs of the College. Dr. Omwake was Dean and Dr. Keigwin was about to begin his five years as President. There were about a hundred students in College, about sixty in the Academy. The Faculty of about a dozen included two or three who came from Philadelphia to Collegeville once or twice a week to meet their classes. Among these was Dr. Beardwood, who continued this service for 37 years. Among the residents were Dr. Smith, whose years at Ursinus almost coincided with those of Dr. Beardwood, and Dr. Kline, who had graduated from Ursinus

Dr. Clawson was born in Saint John, New Brunswick, in 1881 and was educated in the city schools and the University of New Brunswick in Fredericton, from which he was graduated in 1901. He was also graduated from Queens' College in Cambridge, England, in 1904. In the following year he was Lecturer in Astronomy at his old College in Fredericton and received the M.A. degree at the end of the year. After a short interval as Assistant in Physics at Ohio State University, he came to Ursinus in 1907. He received the honorary degree of Doctor of Science from Ursinus in 1929. He was head of the Mathematics Department at Ursinus from 1907 until his retirement in 1952. He was Dean of the College from 1946 to 1952.

at the end of the first period and was to continue a leading figure through all of the second and third, a total of 53 years. Incidentally, I have just equalled this record for years on the staff, although unlike Dean Kline I have been emeritus for the last eight years and also lack his undergraduate years.

The Seminary had been transferred to Philadelphia a few years before this, and the Academy was soon to be crowded out as the numbers in the College increased; but it was still a convenient place for 'candidates for matriculation' who needed further secondary school credits in order to be admitted to College.

While certainly not regretting the growth and development of the College in later years, I have nostalgic feelings of affection for the little College of the first quarter of the century. The curriculum was admirably planned to give the students a thorough training in two related fields—Latin and Greek, Latin and Mathematics, History and Politics, Mathematics and Physics, Chemistry and Biology, English and History, French and German—and at the same time a broad acquaintance with other disciplines. The classes were small and intimate. Each professor covered his entire subject, sometimes two subjects, so that breadth of interest was stressed more than narrow specialization. Each student was a member of one of the Groups, which also had some activities outside of the classroom, and also of one of the literary societies, Schaff and Zwinglian, which, dating from the first years of the College, had regular programs on Friday evenings in their hall on the third floor of Bomberger, sponsored oratorical and declamation contests and debates, and gave public anniversary programs in the Chapel which in later years were usually presentations of plays. During this period, although the number of students increased to two or three hundred by 1920, all could easily be accommodated within the inner glass enclosed Chapel where at the morning assembly they were seated by Groups with the Group Adviser keeping a record of attendance. There was no Chaplain, each member of the Faculty taking his turn at leading the service, except Dr. Smit who was accompanist for the hymns.

The library, presided over by Dr. Yost after 1910, occupied rooms 7 and 6. The Biology department was in room 3 and 4, the Chemistry department above it in the space now devoted to conference rooms, the Physics department in the room above the library. The present Treasurer's and Admissions Office were classrooms.

The fact that no classes are scheduled on Saturdays at Ursinus today is probably due to the fact that at this time members of the Faculty held Saturday morning classes chiefly for the benefit of teachers in service. The Teachers' Colleges (State Normal Schools) did not then confer the bachelor's degree. A number of excellent teachers studied on Saturdays and at Summer Sessions in order to obtain this credential and to improve their qualifications for teaching. These were added to the many other first schoolmen of those days numbered among Ursinus alumni.

Our entry into the first World War marks the end of this second period. In the winter of 1917-1918 a coal shortage caused Bomberger Hall to be closed while classes were carried on in the old Seminary buildings, a temporary return to earlier conditions. In October, 1918, the Students' Army Training Corps was formed with a unit of about a hundred men at Ursinus, brought to a sudden end with the signing of the armistice in November. But was it not the presence of the S. A. T. C. that caused the ban against dancing in the College building to be lifted? Many of our students had been drafted and sent to France before this. The names of those who gave their lives in the struggle are recorded in the vestibule of the Memorial Library.

I take the third period to be the interval between the wars. This era, during which President Omwake was the central figure, was marked by a steady growth in numbers, in buildings and equipment, by the acquisition of an enlarged Faculty, and by some departures from the methods and arrangements of earlier years. This is not to undervalue these outworn procedures. The new Ursinus rose on the firm foundations of its past. The basic aims and purposes remained; there was continuity in that the earlier Faculty and Board of Directors carried over and that alumni from the earlier period found places on the teaching staff. However, the Group system was replaced by a system of majoring in a single subject during the 1920's, the activities of the Zwinglian and Schaff societies were suspended in 1928, and the Saturday classes also faded away at this time.

A glance at catalogs shows that in 1922 there were 238 students, in 1929 344, in 1940 585, in 1944 350 together with 300 Naval trainees. In 1922 the Memorial Library was built, in 1928 the Brodbeck and Curtis dormitories, in 1932 the Pfahler Hall of Science, while various dormitories for women were added during these years. Almost all of the present heads of departments came to Ursinus during this quarter century between the wars.

I must try to pay a fitting tribute to the memory of Dr. Omwake, who was primarily responsible for choosing the members of the Faculty for nearly thirty years. I believe that I was the earliest to be selected by him in this long procession of scholars. His success in securing an excellent Faculty and in obtaining financial aid for the acquisition of necessary buildings and equipment, his wisdom and tact in leading the Faculty in making educational decisions, his friendliness and helpfulness to students and teachers, his words of advice in Chapel addresses, in Faculty and committee meetings and in private conversations, his active interest in and ready response to any suggestions for the good of Ursinus are clearly remembered by his associates, former students and friends.

Apart from its value in publicly expressing and fostering the religious aims of the College, the fact that on five days a week the entire student body, the President, the Dean, a Faculty member reading the service, and others of the staff came together for a few minutes with one accord in one place did much to establish a feeling of unity and understanding. Dr. Omwake made it his practice to be present at Chapel whenever he was not out of town. This seems to me to be a symbol of his devotion to Ursinus. Dr. Kline in his chair as Dean, and Dr. Smith on the organ bench were equally faithful. I owe a special word of appreciation to Dean Kline, for during most of my years at Ursinus I worked under his supervision in recording and averaging grades and in making schedules for classes and examinations. He was a man of positive opinions, interested in many fields, always willing to help, but not very receptive to new ideas. His whole life was centered in Ursinus. It is fitting that his portrait and that of Dr. Omwake face each other across the floor of the library, for between them in fact for many years the life of the College moved forward.

I have little to say about the last twenty years. The old leaders, each a valued friend and colleague worthy of an extended eulogium—Omwake, Kline, Smith, Yost, Beardwood, Barnard, Brownback, Tower, Witmer and the rest—dropped out one by one and were replaced by younger men. The College has been fortunate in finding men well fitted for their tasks. In particular both of the modern Presidents were undergraduates at the end of what I have called the second period and appreciate the traditions of the little College of forty years ago. Dr. McClure came back to serve on the Faculty and Dr. Helfferich to serve on the Board of Directors for most of the time between the wars. They have both done much for the College.

A College exists for its students. It may be known to the outside world by its buildings and grounds, by its athletic teams, or by its President or by members of its staff. But it is the quality of its undergraduates and graduates which is the fundamental mark of its achievement. What a student gets out of College is largely dependent upon what he himself puts into his life there; and, while an alumnus owes much to his College, the College also owes something to him, for he has had his part to play in building up the College. I wish to express my thanks to all my former students for their patience and friendliness in classroom and on campus. This applies especially to the alumni of the Mathematics Group of old days and Mathematics majors of later years to whom I send hearty greetings. It is a privilege to have had a small part in the education of so many estimable men and women.

I hope that the alumni of all periods, as they look back on their College days, retain much the same feeling for Ursinus that I expressed for my Canadian College when I wrote the following verses a few years ago.

What didst thou breathe into our hearts
In years of yesterday,
By comrades' deeds, by classroom arts,
By work, by dreams, by play?—
Truth many-hued may be pursued,
The chase itself a joy;
Knowledge possessed may be expressed
By diction's apt employ.

Whole-hearted work by hand or brain
Looms as life's largest lot.
These virile virtues not in vain
Sagely thy sons have sought—
Firmness for right, sincere insight,
Honor and loyalty,
Espirit de corps.— All these and more
Well did we learn from thee.

And so within thy widening walls
Old join with young to choir
The glories of these hallowed halls
Where hearts and minds aspire.
Floreat domus! May the home
Forever prosper; still
May eager youth pursue the truth
On Alma Mater's hill!

Education— Scottish and American

WILLIAM L. GODSHALK

One night during the summer as my wife Eleanor and I sat quietly reading in the patio of our summer home, our neighbor's daughter Lois walked over to join us. She sat unhurriedly in the chair across from us and asked what my wife had been reading. Eleanor replied, "Blunden's Life of Shelley."

"Shelley?" questioned Lois, "Shelley?"

Thinking that somehow my wife's Scottish accent had confused her, I answered, "Yes, the English poet, Percy Bysshe Shelley."

Lois then confessed that she had never heard of Shelley or, as a matter of fact, many other English poets. Even her knowledge of Shakespeare was quite sketchy. Since I knew Lois from the time she had been a child, I felt free to continue my questioning; and I asked her to identify some rudiments of history, the sciences, and mathematics. Lois knew nothing of Alexander the Great, vectors, chemical formulae, or quadratic equations.

Lois's lack of knowledge is only astounding, however, when seen in context. She is a sixteen year old junior in high school, taking the college preparatory course. The high school she attends is nationally accredited, and her marks would indicate that she is a fairly competent student. Seen from this point of view Lois's ignorance is a dismal indictment of the American High School; for she is hardly being prepared for any

Mr. Godshalk was graduated as valedictorian, magna cum laude, from Ursinus in 1959. He spent the academic year 1957-58 studying at the University of St. Andrews as the first recipient of the "St. Andrews Scholarship" offered by the St. Andrews Society of Philadelphia.

In June, 1960, he received his M.A. from Harvard University, where he is continuing to work for his Ph.D. degree. At present he is teaching English at Tufts.

higher education, or even for a culturally active life in a civilized community.

That evening after Lois's departure, my wife, having been trained in Scotland and having taught in New Jersey during the past year, began to compare Scottish and American education. Since I had studied in Scotland at the University of St. Andrews for a year I felt competent to aid her in the comparison. Repeatedly this topic arose in our conversations, and later we began to invite our friends to contribute their ideas.

For instance, a twelve year old Scottish girl preparing for college would have known of Shelley. In English studies she would have read some of the Romantic lyrics, the folk ballads, selections from the classics, and Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice. In history this typical Scottish student would be studying the Greek and Roman civilizations; in mathematics, algebra, plane geometry, and basic arithmetic; in languages, French (or German) and Latin. The sciences, chemistry and physics, would form an integral part of the program. Physical exercises and sports would not be overemphasized, but used to keep the student in good physical condition and to relieve the mental tension.

By fifteen the Scottish student has received his basic education and by sixteen would be specializing either in the sciences or the liberal arts. The liberal arts student would be studying in English the poetry of Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton, Pope, Goldsmith, Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, Arnold, and T. S. Eliot; the essays of Bacon, Addison and Steele, Lamb, and Hazlitt. Prose composition and interpretation would also form part of the English studies. In Latin the student would be reading Virgil, Horace, and Tacitus; in French, Victor Hugo, De Maupassant, and others. In history this sixteen year old student would be studying European history from 1493 to 1900, and British history from 1485 to 1900. Mathematics would include algebra, plain and solid geometry, calculus, trigonometry, and basic arithmetic. Having already surveyed the liberal arts in some detail, the science student would be studying chemistry, physics, and biology on a quite advanced level. In Scotland this educational program has been nationally standardized, and the Scottish authorities strive to maintain a high level both in curriculum and teachers. Viewing Scottish education, Mr. John Lees of Oxford University firmly holds that the Scottish School System is the best in the world.

Since America has no comparable standardization of education, any comparison of American and Scottish systems must be inadequate, for one has little basis for any generalization about American education. Thus some of the better American high schools do compare favorably with the Scottish, an instance of the phenomenon being Abington High School in Pennsylvania. Therefore, I will arbitrarily select Lois's high school and school district as the basis for my comparison.

Lois's ignorance of English Literature has already been demonstrated; and she also knows little more about American literature, although her English courses in her junior year should have concentrated on this aspect. Most of Lois's English training has been in grammar, the elements of which the Scottish student has grasped by the age of twelve. Lois has had two years of Latin, but she admits that she never heard of Virgil or Horace. She has had one year of German grammar, and this study seems to be one of her strongest. Since history for Lois is a dreary subject (although I should, and could, be one of the most interesting studies), she has forgotten most of the things she has learned. In mathematics, she has studied algebra and plain geometry; and in her senior year if she is conscientious and industrious she may elect to take a course in solid geometry and trigonometry. Calculus is beyond the curriculum of her high school. In science Lois has had a course in general science, biology, and chemistry. The laboratory work in all three courses, she says, was inadequate. However, apart from this inadequacy Lois's background in science far exceeds her background in the humanities; and, of course, both are excelled by the comprehensive background of the Scottish high school student.

Depth is the key word in Scottish lucation. The Scottish student is eeped in knowledge. Having obtained full and extensive background while the American student is still bothered with rudiments, the Scot is able to delve deeply into his various areas of special study. Professor Clark of Union University, New York, who was an exchange professor at the University of St. Andrews in 1957-58, estimates that the American student needs two years of intensive college training to catch up to the Scot in the sciences, and approximately four years in the liberal arts. Therefore, the American college is forced to accommodate itself to the negligence of the high school. Deficiency in necessary background studies in the high school necessitates that the college lower its standards, accepting students at or below average in knowledge, although not in ability and desire to learn given the opportunity. The first two years of college then must be devoted to work which should have been covered in high school.

The Scottish University on the other hand is not forced to give elementary courses to intelligent young students. The first year in university is simply another and somewhat larger step in education. The Scottish student obtains an Ordinary M.A. degree in three years, and an Honours M.A. degree in four. The excellent work of the Scottish high schools facilitates the work of the university.

The attitude of the Scottish people is the strong foundation of Scottish education. To the vast majority of common people here in the United States education is only evaluated by the superior salaries earned by educated people. Education is never seen as an end in itself, supremely useful in the realm of culture. In Scotland, a broader outlook exists. The Scot sees education and its concomitants knowledge and wisdom as desirable for themselves. The educated man is an admired citizen in Scotland, not simply a freak who appears on television quiz shows. Sir James Barrie's ectorial speech at St. Andrews University is the embodiment of this Scottish attitude toward education. Barrie noted that there were not four but five Scottish universities and went on to name St. Andrews, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Glasgow, and finally the Scottish people themselves who vowed that there should always be education in Scotland.

Arising from this national fervor for education which dates from the days of John Knox is the esprit de corps of the teachers themselves. In the United States there is certainly professional pride among many good teachers both in high school and college. But there is a vast number of teachers who have entered, and still enter, teaching not from love but from failure to qualify for another profession. Among many Americans the standard comment is "if you can't become an engineer, lawyer, doctor, become a teacher!" Thus most Americans—including many teachers—look upon teaching as an inferior profession. In contrast to this short-sighted attitude, the Scottish teacher considers himself (and is) a member of a select group. No teacher in Scotland is accepted into high school without having obtained an honours degree or without having proved himself a superior teacher in the junior secondary schools.

Furthermore, there is no Scottish equivalent to the American school board which allows the most uneducated of citizens to be elected and to determine the educational policy of the community. In Scotland, although all educational policies are ultimately in the hands of the people, each county has a Director of Education who is personally responsible for the quality of education in every school in his district. The Director, at one time a teacher, is experienced both in the practical and theoretical fields of education. Directly under the control of the Director are the Assistant Director and an efficient Department of Education. Through the aid of this highly organized system, the director keeps a close check on all the schools. And the Head Master of every school is immediately responsible to the Director for any deficiencies in curriculum or teaching.

However, even with this elaborate educational apparatus, Scotland is not bothered with false conceptions of Education. Education to the Scot is the teaching and the learning of knowledge. In America, it would seem by some of the most recent statements of the educators, Education has taken on some mystical quality and can be imbibed without trouble or study. For example, the Educational Policies Commission, which is sponsored by the National Education Association and the American Association of School Administrators, decried public pressure to increase factual learning in the grade school. Homework is similarly belittled. Even our most prominent educators seem oblivious to the fact that a good education is acquired only by hard work and sweat.

Educators and teachers who defend this mystical form of Education claim that the American system generates in its students an equally mystical "adaptability." But, upon closer examination this adaptability, so valued by our educational leaders, turns out to be nothing more than the ability to "cram" vast amounts of knowledge (which are usually soon forgotten) when the social reputation of the student depends on a passing grade. However, this quality seems to be a universal trait—found even in Scotland—among procrastinating students. The arts of procrastination and cramming, it seems to me, do not contribute to the intellectual life of a genuine scholar.

The second strong point of American education advanced by the educators is

"But none of those famed passing combinations ever engineered a victory any sweeter to the home cause than did the Ron Emmert-to-Dick Allebach pass-catch combo Saturday (Oct. 22) at Colledgeville. They led Ursinus to a spine-tingling 26-25 nod over Swarthmore."

With these words newspapers in the Philadelphia area reported the Old Timers' Day victory.

The Ron-to-Dick combination scored two touchdowns and a two-point extra point after a third period TD. This latter pass provided the eventual margin for victory.

And, in the final reckoning, after Swarthmore had tallied a fourth period touchdown to move within one point (26-25) of Ursinus, it was Allebach who prevented one-point defeat when he tackled John Green, trying for the two-point conversion, on the one-yard line.

After the game the Kenneth E. Walker Memorial Trophy was presented to the two outstanding players of the day: end Dick Allebach, who amassed a total of 107 yards, and halfback Tony Serمارini. (It will be of interest to alumni to note that Allebach, a junior at Ursinus, is the son of Richard S. Allebach, '32, of Lititz.)

The first two games of the season were lost to Susquehanna (33-0) and Johns Hopkins (21-6). Coming back strong, the Bears won the next two, beating Wilkes 12 to 7 and downing Swarthmore 26-25.

In the Wilkes game Allebach provided one of the touchdowns, again grabbing a pass from Emmert. For his outstanding offensive and defensive playing, Dick was given honorable mention on that week's Eastern College Athletic Conference All-Star Team.

Another thrill in the Wilkes game was freshman Ronnie Ritz's 82 yard kick-off return.

The third win of the season was scored against Haverford. Blanking the Fords 22-0, Ritz and Serمارini, another freshman, provided the touchdowns.

Wagner gave Ursinus its third loss of the season. Pitted against one of the best small college teams in the country, the Bears suffered a 49-20 defeat. End Allebach scored all three Ursinus touchdowns and gained over 160 yards for the Bears. This brought his total point-getting for the season up to 32.

PRESENT COACHING STAFF

There is no doubt that this year's gridiron successes were due to the combined efforts of the present staff of coaches. Head Coach (and Dean of Men) Dick Whatley is to be congratulated, along with his assistants, Ray Gurzynski and newcomer, Roger Pearson.

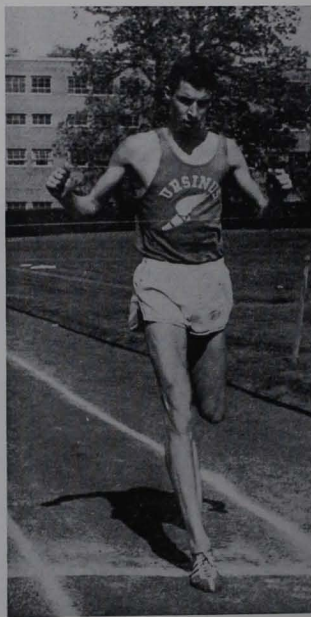

Assistant Coach Pearson, backfield coach, played quarterback for the U. of Rhode Island. During the summer he holds down first base for the Baltimore Orioles' triple A farm team.

FUTURE PROSPECTS

Alumni who are interested in the future prospects of football at Ursinus will be encouraged to learn that the starting offensive team has eight freshmen and the first-string defensive team has seven freshmen among the eleven.

Vernon Morgan, '61 Ursinus' Greatest Runner

On Sept. 17-18 at Travers Island, N. Y., Vernon Morgan won both the mile and the half mile in the National Junior Championships. His time for the mile, 4:16.1, set a new record for the National Juniors.

Vernon Morgan

The young, 6'5" honor student (1) is a pre-medder, consistently on the Dean's List, and president of the Beardwood Chemical Society) currently holds the Ursinus College records in the mile (4:13.6), the half mile (1:51.0) and the two mile (9:51.7); frequently he runs all three events in dual meet competition.

Recently, he received Montgomer County's second annual "Outstanding Athlete" award. The trophy was presented to Morgan by the first recipient of this honor, United States Olympian hurdler, Josh Culbreth.

In June Ursinus sent Morgan to the west coast to compete in the Olympic trials. He has written, for Journal readers, an account of this trip; following this is a brief digest of his rigorous training schedule. The article concludes with a resumé of his races during the summer.

The N.C.A.A. and A.A.U. Track and Field Championships.

On Sunday, June 12, accompanied by Olympian Josh Culbreth, I departed from the International Airport in Philadelphia by jet to represent Ursinus College at the Olympic semi-final tryouts in California. These were to be held in conjunction with the N.C.A.A. Track and Field Championships at Berkeley and the National A.A.U. championships at Bakersfield. I was leaving a week earlier in order to try to acclimate myself to the new environment.

The first four days of my stay were spent at the University of California at Santa Barbara to which I had immediately flown after leaving Josh in Los Angeles. At Santa Barbara I trained under Mr. Nick Carter, a former Olympian who was running near the world record time for the mile a number of years ago. Mr. Carter was a great help to me during my stay and I will always be indebted to him for the advice and encouragement he gave me. While at Santa Barbara he introduced me to Henk Visser of the Netherlands who subsequently placed second in the N.C.A.A. meet and won the A.A.U. meet in the broad jump event. Henk made the Dutch team for the Olympics, but due to an injury was unable to reach the finals at Rome.

That following Thursday Mr. Carter the California track team, and I left for Berkeley. The trip was taken by car and offered the only opportunity during my brief visit to relax and view the scenery. The next day held a real disappointment for me as I failed to qualify in my trial heat of the 800 meter run nce only three could qualify out of velve in each heat, it certainly could be ascribed as the "survival of the fittest."

Since the A.A.U. meet was the next riday, I decided to stay at the Interational House on the University of alifornia campus at Berkeley. Jon Dan-, the fine Villanova half miler, also ayed in Berkeley for awhile before ying home. During the next few days e trained, visited San Francisco (where e were treated to a fine meal by Ron elany), and, in general, "looked the lace over." Unfortunately, the time in erkeley slipped by quickly; in no time I as flying to Bakersfield for the A.A.U. hampionships. I was accompanied on is flight by Mr. Payton Jordan, the tanford track coach, who was very nterested in my training methods and the acilities at Ursinus College.

At Bakersfield I again stayed with oach Carter and the Santa Barbara rack team. In the heats of the 800 eters, the capacity to show speed over e last 100 meters again failed me. This time defeat was much more bitter nce it consisted of that tremendous mar- in of one inch. Such is the end to the ale; one had traveled about 3,000 miles o face something that an inch would ecide. This probably is the essence and eal challenge of athletics. As Mihaly gloi, the great national Hungarian rack coach said to me before I left for me, "You must be strong to win, and o be strong you must train up in 18 niles a day." Perhaps that last inch may e conquered after all?

MORGAN'S TRAINING SCHEDULE

I am now pursuing a training program patterned after that used by the great Swedish runner, Gundar Hägg, since Hägg rarely ran for more than a half hour in training and still was able o run well, I feel that his schedule will work favorably for anybody who is ressed for time because of studies. In sence this schedule consists of putting n bursts of from 100 yards to 1,000 yards in length and is interspersed with ogging or walking, depending how one eels on any particular day. It is im- perative that you do not allow yourself ufficient time to recover during these ntervals. This running is divided be- tween work on the track and cross- ountry build-up. It is maintained six days a week for twelve months a year. In addition to running, exercises and weight-lifting are engaged in three days a week. A typical week may be as follows:

Seven Years of Alumni Sponsorship Completed $188,473 Collected for Ursinus in This Period

Dr. Helfferich Speaks

Several items of interest to all alumni were among the facts which Dr. Helfferich reported to those who attended the Loyalty Fund Kick-Off Dinner on Old Timers' Day. Excerpts from his speech follow.

"... The operating budget is approaching two million dollars. Ursinus College is big business; but more to the point is the fact that it is important business.

"... What are the needs of Ursinus? A new boiler house—soon. A new dining room—soon. An auditorium adequate for 1000 people. More space in the library.

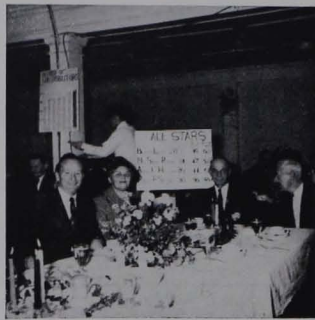

"... A good record of alumni contributions is the best argument I have when approaching a corporation executive for some of his interest and part of his substance. I am not ashamed of your record. In fact I can boast of the fact that:

- 45% of our alumni care enough to contribute;
- 45% recognize the need of future students;
- 45% realize the cold facts of operating a residential college.

"... A former student, volunteering as a responsible partner of his college, is a concept that is as American as the hot dog. When an alumnus volunteers some of his time and energy to represent his college, his college has a corresponding duty to recognize the importance of that alumnus and his job. As representatives of the College and as my personal helpers, I believe you have the right to know as much about the College as possible. You are entitled to know not only its needs; you are entitled to know about its programs, its policies, its people; and you are entitled to recognition for your labors. You have a right to be heard, to have a part in the planning, to feel free to ask questions and to make suggestions. I pledge a respect for your honest opinions.

"... All of you will carry one label for life—an Ursinus graduate. If your College declines in respect, goodness, and in importance, your degree has correspondingly less luster. You can never escape from the representation of Ursinus College, and Ursinus College can never escape from the reputation of its graduates. We are harnessed together in this wonderful business of education. Every alumnus who ignores or deserts his college depreciates the value of his degree."

Loyalty Fund All Stars

Four Loyalty Fund class chairmen were honored for their year's endeavors at the Kick-Off dinner on Old Timers' Day. During the banquet each was told that the Ursinus Captain's chair on which he was sitting was his. The All-Stars and their records were Robert Strine, '30, who pushed his class from 34% participation in 1959 to 55% in the 1960 campaign (the largest single gain); Bertram Light, '20, who led his class from 48% to 62%; Mrs. Samuel Roeder, '24, whose class record rose from 41% to 57%; and Mr. Allen Harman, '26, who sparked his class to 61% over the previous year's 54%.

1960 Loyalty Fund Report

During 1960 Ursinus alumni contributed $32,727 to the college. The total number of contributors increased from 1,927 to 2,052; eight alumni gave $1,000, while sixty-eight graduates contributed $100 or more. The average gift was $15.95, an increase of $4.00 over last year.

For seven years the alumni have sponsored this annual campaign and during this period have collected $188,473 for the school. The breakdown of gifts and givers per year follows:

Year	No. of Contributors	Amount
1954	1107	$20,598.00
1955	1580	$29,221.00
1956	1610	25,504.00
1957	1603	22,819.00
1958	1712	27,372.00
1959	1927	30,232.00
1960	2052	32,727.00

Advance Loyalty Fund Report for 1961

More money was received in the alumni office for the Loyalty Fund during the week of October 17 than had ever come in during any similar period. Contributions totaled $3,108 that week.

The 1961 Campaign opened just a month ago, October 10, and already 589 alumni have contributed $9,537.22. Included in these totals are thirty members of the Century Club, the name of the recently inaugurated fellowship of those who give at least $100 annually to the College.

The students of Ursinus were, officially, the first members of the Century Club. Each of the four classes gave $25 to the Fund. During the Kick-Off Dinner fifty freshmen, representing the entire student body, each gave $2 to Glenn Eshbach, Loyalty Fund Chairman.

With this note of confidence from the students, the Fund has had an auspicious beginning. It now remains for the alumni to push the Fund to a successful close. This year we shall work toward fifty per cent participation. Our further aim is to enlist one hundred members in the Century Club.

New Reunion Schedule to Begin in 1961

On Alumni Day, June 3, 1961, a new reunion schedule will be inaugurated. The old five-year cycle will be abandoned, and alumni will now return more frequently (usually every four years).

The real advantage is this: You will have your reunions at the same time as other classes which were here in college with you. A good many alumni have friends in the classes which immediately precede or immediately follow theirs. Now, under the new system, several classes of successive years will come back to campus at the same time.

We will not, however, interrupt the 25th and 50th reunions. Each class will return when these special anniversaries arrive.

The new schedule for reunions may be seen on this page of the Journal. Notice that the following classes will return on June 3, 1961: '11; '17; '18; '19; '20; '21; '36; '37; '38; '39; '41; '46; '51; '55; '56; '57; '58; '59.

EDUCATION

that our system creates no social inequality founded on education. They tell us that only the dullest and most stupid student is refused a high school degree in our country. No one need feel inferior from the lack of a high school diploma. These educators point out that in general British high school and university education with its high standards, strict qualifications, and different requirements tends to create a socially distinct group of people. To this statement I would add that the members of this group hold the most important positions in the government of their country; they direct the cultural activities of their nation. Their tastes are catholic; and these people excel in their chosen fields of endeavor because of their genuine ability and more than adequate education.

The educators who want to save our country from this "caste system" founded on education never see fit to point out that America is already troubled with two "caste systems", one founded on wealth, one on color. If social classes must exist, most thinking people would welcome, I believe, the extinction of our present class distinctions and their replacement by one founded, not necessarily on formal education, but at least on ability. The ideal society, of course, would be classless; but, since all men vary in intelligence and ability, every society must have a group of men who are able to guide that society in the wisest course of action. In general our country seems to be contented to give its future leaders the most mediocre of educations. And this mediocrity in education will inevitably lead to mediocrity in national leadership.

Dr. T. A. Alspach and Dr. Pierce E. Vope, friends since college days, each vied the other celebrate his 50th anniversary of ordination in to the Christian ministry.

Dr. Alspach, on the Board of Directors Ursinus, is pastor emeritus of St. Paul's C.C., where he served as pastor for 35 years. THE FACULTY, CORNERED higher education at Ann Arbor and Columbia, and at the latter hot-bed of learning he is on the verge of a Ph.D. Despite all this we are a bit disappointed in him. With all these newcomers spouting exotic languages all over the place, he, claiming to be pre-eminently an embryologist, admits he can't speak Embryo. He's such a nice fellow, though, that it is being temporarily overlooked.

And then, way down yonder in the paw-paw patch among the gyms, another new face has appeared. That's Miss Phoebe Harris in Physical Education. Miss Harris is from Springfield, over Delaware County way, and after studying at Syracuse and Smith she taught at Rhode Island and at Vassar, my dear, and is now busy whooping it up here among Snell's Belles.

While he is not strictly faculty, there is no reason why I should let another learned gentleman escape, namely Mr. Damon Holton, Director of Music in the Norristown school system. With a B.S. from Mansfield State Teachers College and an M.A. from Temple he is also a former conductor of the Norristown Civic Symphony and a versatile performer. He has spent the past fifteen summers as assistant band director at New England music camp, and—here is the punch line you have been waiting for—he has now graciously consented to serve as director of the Ursinus band. Oompah-oompah, here they come!
