Going 'Undercover': History tackles the true story of undercover informant Charles Falco

By Cassie Dresch
TV Media

It's a story right out of Hollywood. A man, fully immersed in the drug culture of Southern California, deals methamphetamine to the tune of more than $500,000 a year. The only direction he's headed is straight to the pen, especially after he's caught in a raid by the Drug Enforcement Agency. Except, the DEA gives him a choice: go to prison for 22 years with no chance of parole or become an undercover informant.

While it may seem almost too good to be true, there's no denying that this story did, in fact, take place. The born-again informant is none other than Charles Falco, a burly man whose exploits as an undercover operator for the DEA and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives in three of the most notoriously dangerous biker gangs in SoCal are the stuff of legends.

In 2013, Falco published a memoir detailing his rise as an undercover agent titled "Vagos, Mongols, and Outlaws: My Infiltration of America's Deadliest Biker Gangs." Now, History has created a six-episode fact-based drama that draws its material from the book and Falco himself, and offers viewers a look inside the life of this zero-turned-hero of sorts. With only one episode left, it's time to hunker down as "Gangland Undercover" brings the chills and the thrills when the season finale airs Tuesday, March 31, on History.

Falco is a fascinating man. Born and raised in Los Angeles, he saw his life take a turn for the worse that landed him at rock bottom. After being contracted by the ATF to infiltrate the Vagos in 2003 (and later the Mongols and Outlaws), he quickly rose through the ranks of the biker gangs and gathered evidence that led to 62 total arrests. Now, due to the nature of his past efforts, Falco is in the witness protection program. This, however, doesn't stop him from actively being involved in telling his story — spearheading "Gangland," writing for the show and even appearing before each episode.

"Right from the start, he was available to me," "Gangland's" star Damon Runyan ("One Starry Christmas," 2014) told TV Media. "In preparation for the role, I could contact him at any point. When we were doing the exterior shots in Arizona, he came down and he was accessible to all of us. I still talk to him pretty much on a daily basis now."

Paulino Nunes ("The Firm," "Bitten") — who plays Schizo, the primary antagonist in "Gangland" and the Vagos president — says that he first met the real-life Falco when they were shooting in Arizona and was struck by how cool he was.

"He's a really super nice guy," he said in the same interview with TV Media. "I know that sounds like a kind of banal thing to say, but ... it's not necessarily what you'd expect. It was really cool meeting him, and it was hard to reconcile the guy you were meeting with the guy in the book and the guy who did all that stuff."

"All that stuff" being some truly horrific and gruesome acts he had to witness and commit, including beating up rivals, watching Vagos bikers kill rivals and civilians, selling drugs and even going to prison for an assault committed by another Vago, where he had to suffer through solitary confinement in order to avoid blowing his cover.

But through it all, Falco remained unwavering in his newfound pursuit of justice. He was given a second shot at life, and he took it. His intelligence shone through with each day that he went deeper undercover, and it's something that was not lost on Nunes or Runyan as they acted out his story.

"He's a keen observer of human nature, and he had to be to do what he did," Nunes said. "It was pretty apparent that this was a guy who, if his circumstances had been different, could have done something very different with his life. As it turned out, because of the bad choices that he made early on, this was kind of his shot at redemption, going into the situation and taking these guys down."

"His intelligence is the thing that kept him alive and also was able to allow him to get so deep," Runyan added, "and not only do one gang, but three gangs."

These days, Falco has put his active undercover work behind him. He's since earned a graduate degree in criminal justice and works as an instructor for a national law enforcement training institute, not to mention adding "Gangland" to his resumé. Of course, for him, there'll always be a nagging fear for his safety.

"I think you always have to fear for your safety," Falco said in an interview with "Los Angeles Magazine." "I have a witness protection program ID that I use. I don't hang out in bars. I don't live in an area where any of these groups live. You've got to always look over your back."

Catch the season finale of "Gangland Undercover" when it airs Tuesday, March 31, on History.

Q&A hollywood

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: We love "Downton Abbey," but the seasons only last seven or eight weeks. Why is it so short?

A: The basic problem is that "Downton Abbey" is a British show made for British TV, and the Brits make their shows short.

A season with episodes in the single digits ("Downton" started with seven, but later seasons have had nine) is the norm for British drama and comedy shows.

The reason seems to be that British shows are made by smaller teams, especially when it comes to writing. "Downton" creator Julian Fellowes has written all 43 episodes of the show — two other writers were credited with helping, but only on one episode each. The belief seems to be that a single writer can't feasibly produce more than nine episodes in a year.

Compare this with "Downton's" American-made Sunday night competitor, "The Good Wife," which has made use of 25 different writers over its 127-episode run. Note, too, that it has produced three times as many episodes as "Downton" but has only been on the air for one more year.

The result can also be seen in the number of years a show lasts. Most people say that the fact that British shows are produced by very small creative teams means that those teams burn out faster, so to speak, and end their shows after just a few seasons.

"The Office" is the clearest way to compare both of these phenomena. The original British sitcom, one of the best-loved British comedies of recent years, consisted of two seasons of six episodes each, plus a two-part Christmas special. All of it was written and directed by Ricky Gervais and Stephen Merchant.

When NBC produced its own version of "The Office" for American TV, it employed 55 directors and 38 writers, to produce 187 episodes over nine seasons.

This may just be the way the businesses have developed, but artsy types can also chalk up to differing philosophies about creativity. The argument for the British style is that a show stays true to a single artist's "vision," while the U.S. style can be seen as more collaborative, making use of more people's creativity.

Q: I haven't seen Roz since "Frasier" ended. What is she up to now?

A: Peri Gilpin has yet to find a hit like "Frasier" again, but she's stuck to TV all the same. And things are looking up.

She was just cast in NBC's upcoming sitcom "Mr. Robinson." No premiere date has been announced, but NBC Entertainment boss Bob Greenblatt said it will probably premiere this summer.

Up till now, though, it's understandable that you haven't seen Gilpin at all, since there likely wasn't much audience crossover between "Frasier" and her next longest role, on ABC Family's teen drama "Make It or Break It."

Gilpin played the mother of one of the three Olympic-hopeful gymnasts who were the focus of the show.

Unfortunately, "Make It or Break It" only ran for three seasons, premiering in 2009 and ending in 2012.

Other than that, she's been spending her time doing guest spots. In all, she's done pop-ins on 15 shows since "Frasier" ended in 2004, including an episode of "Hot In Cleveland." That series, of course, starred her former "Frasier" co-star Jane Leeves (who played Daphne).

Rich foods: Culinary entrepreneurs are scoring big money

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

Do you know what show I love? "Shark Tank" on ABC. Hopeful entrepreneurs pitching their innovative ideas and products in front of a group of investors, then reaping their just rewards if they've got what it takes? That's the American dream right there on full display.

It's not an uncommon site for culinary entrepreneurs to feed the sharks their tasty morsels, and with so many great food ideas out there, it really was only a matter of time before a similar show popped up with a focus on food.

Make no mistake, this is no criticism, nor is "Food Fortunes" a ripoff of "Shark Tank." The new Food Network show premiered a few weeks ago and has been airing on Mondays, and it's definitely its own distinct beast.

Culinary entrepreneurs looking for investment dollars are brought before both a panel of food industry titans and a live audience. Why the audience? Well, so that they can test out the product, of course! It's instant feedback from consumers, the kind of instant data that the investors love to have on hand.

From an American take on Indian food to a robotic personal chef, the pitches range from comfort foods to uncomfortable head scratchers. The investors, though, have a history of success, and they're pretty good at knowing where to park their own food fortunes.

So who are these investors? The panel rotates from episode to episode, but it includes Robert Earl (Planet Hollywood's founder and CEO and host of "Robert Earl's Be My Guest"), Willie Degel ("Restaurant Stakeout"), Scott Gerber (CEO of the Gerber Group) and Dan Glickberg (the founder of Dan Glickberg Food).

And that's not all. Some of the other investors include international culinary expert Daniel Green; the founder of online service Taste Savant, Sonia Kapadia; and Pat LaFrieda, star of "Meat Men."

Of course, not every hopeful is going to walk away with a big investment, but for those with the best ideas, a real food fortune awaits. If you haven't already, check out "Food Fortunes," airing Monday nights on the Food Network.

Investors Daniel Green, Sonia Kapadia, Dan Glickberg and Willie Degel in "Food Fortunes"

Fiction mirrors fact

'Bones' star's second pregnancy expands real-life and on-screen families

By Jacqui Wiens
TV Media

Bones are the final remnants we leave behind after death. The structures that support our bodies are hidden from sight by layers of skin and muscle, but when they are exposed, they can speak volumes about our lives and habits — if you can interpret the clues they reveal. That is the specialty of Dr. Temperance Brennan (Emily Deschanel, "My Sister's Keeper," 2009), a forensic anthropologist working at the fictional Jeffersonian Institute in "Bones," which returned from its mid-season hiatus last Thursday and airs a new episode Thursday, April 2, on Fox.

For the better part of 10 seasons, Brennan and her FBI-partner-turned-husband, Special Agent Seeley Booth (David Boreanaz, "Buffy the Vampire Slayer"), have been investigating murders involving skeletal remains. When typical forensic investigation techniques fail to turn up any leads, Brennan and her team — including Angela Montenegro (Michaela Conlin, "Open Window," 2006), her husband Dr. Jack Hodgins (T.J. Thyne, "Angel") and Dr. Camille Saroyan (Tamara Taylor, "Party of Five") — use their expertise to reconstruct the faces and lives of the deceased.

Season 10 of "Bones" has been a roller-coaster so far, and that isn't likely to change any time soon. Beginning with an ongoing conspiracy and the death of one of the Jeffersonian's own, the first half of the season closed on the show's milestone 200th episode. The last episode of 2014 was a 1950s Hollywood tribute to Alfred Hitchcock, and the first episode of 2015 included a touching tribute to the deceased team member on what would have been his birthday.

The rest of this season will also include an exciting new addition to the quickly expanding Booth family. Booth and his ex-girlfriend Rebecca Stinson (Jessica Capshaw, "Grey's Anatomy") had a son named Parker (Ty Panitz, "How to Eat Fried Worms," 2006) four years before the series began. While Parker lives with his mother, he is featured in various episodes and was his father's best man when he married Brennan.

When Deschanel became pregnant (in real life!) with her first child in 2011, Fox decided to roll with it and write the pregnancy into the show. That's where the similarities ended, however. Deschanel gave birth to a son named Henry after what we can only assume was an ordinary labor. Brennan, on the other hand, went into labor at the conclusion of a prison riot and, due to how far away from the hospital she was, gave birth to her daughter Christine (played by twins Ali and Susanne Hartman, "Baby Daddy") in an inn's stable.

Now, Deschanel and her husband, David Hornsby ("It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia"), are expecting their second child, and "Bones" showrunners have confirmed that this baby will also be written into the series. There's no word yet on whether Christine (portrayed by newcomer Sunnie Pelant after infancy) will have a younger sister or a brother to play with, but Brennan and Booth will attempt to conceal the pregnancy from the rest of the Jeffersonian team for a while.

Back in season 7, the "Hollywood Reporter" sat down with Deschanel to discuss being a new parent. At the time, the actress took note of how closely her experience in real life matched up to the related storylines in the show.

"I'll experience something in an episode, and I'm shocked because it's exactly what I'm going through," Deschanel said. "Brennan has a different take on things, always. It's been fun to see how that unfolds."

Presumably, having covered the experience of being a first-time parent already, "Bones" will have more freedom to explore different aspects of parenthood, as well as how Christine adjusts to not being the baby of the family anymore.

Whether or not we'll actually get to see it happen, though, is still up in the air. The uncertainty seems to revolve around the fact that several key contracts are up for renewal after the current season of "Bones." A renewal will likely hinge on successful negotiations rather than the ratings. As it is, the length of the show's run to date has already exceeded many expectations.

"I never thought I'd be doing this long enough that I'd be having a child while all of this was happening," Deschanel said in the "Hollywood Reporter" interview, "or that they'd write that in."

Catch a new episode of "Bones" airing Thursday, April 2, on Fox.

The Imitation Game

The real life story of Second World War code-breaker Alan Turing is told in this Academy Award-winning biography. Although arrogant and difficult to work with, Turing (Cumberbatch) is a genius whose work on a new machine could eventually lead to cracking the "unbreakable" German Enigma code. However, behind-the-scenes politics and Soviet spies threaten to run his critical work off the rails, and his struggles to keep his illegal homosexuality a secret could spell the end of his career.

Director: Morten Tyldum. Stars: Benedict Cumberbatch, Keira Knightley, Matthew Goode, Rory Kinnear, Allen Leech, Matthew Beard, Charles Dance. 2014. 114 min. Drama.
