Bridging the gap: 'Game of Thrones' plot is about to catch up with the novels

By Rory MacDonald-Gauthier
TV Media

Winter may have come and gone here in North America, but for the citizens of Westeros, winter is still coming, and at an alarming rate. Dragons have evolved from myth to threat, self-proclaimed kings have been disposed of, and the safety of the realm is at stake.

Luckily for us, the much-anticipated return of "Game of Thrones" is in sight. The new season of the critically acclaimed fantasy drama premieres Sunday, April 12, on HBO.

For those unaware, "Game of Thrones" is the television adaptation of author George R.R. Martin's seven-part fantasy novel series, A Song of Ice and Fire. While the first book in the series, "A Game of Thrones," was released in 1996, there has been little information presented as to when the sixth novel, "The Winds of Winter," will be released. In January, Martin's publisher stated that there was no new information on the expected delivery date of "The Winds of Winter," but it likely won't be in 2015.

Since then, Martin has canceled several appearances at various conventions, stating that he has too much to work on. Optimistic or not, fans hold mixed feelings — the demand for new content is high, but the necessity of that content being flawless is greater. And let's be honest — while Martin has joked that every time someone asks him when the next book will be completed he kills a Stark, we've learned not to poke the proverbial bear.

Season 4 focused heavily on the unraveling of the powerful Lannister family. The Lannisters, like their neighbors to the north, suffered their own version of the infamous "Red Wedding," which resulted in the poisoning and death of the greatly despised and twisted child-king Joffrey Baratheon (Jack Gleeson, "Batman Begins," 2005). With Joffrey dead, his younger brother Tommen (Dean-Charles Chapman, "Before I Go to Sleep," 2014) is set to take over his brother's role — in all aspects. The royal twin will wed Joffrey's widow, Margaery Tyrell (Natalie Dormer, "The Tudors"), who is now on her third fiancé, shortly after his coronation as king. Bad things do come in threes, as they say.

The Lannisters, however, are just one piece in the Game of Thrones. A major development in season 4 was set thousands of miles to the north, with Jon Snow (Kit Harington, "Pompeii" 2014) protecting the realm from the Wildlings, who intended to raid the Seven Kingdoms by passing through the Wall, an immense fortification made of solid ice. After the Wildlings' failure to take the Wall, Jon's plans to broker a peace with their leader, Mance Rayder (Ciarán Hinds, "Rome"), are immediately interrupted by the arrival of Stannis Baratheon (Stephen Dillane, "The Tunnel"), who plans to put Mance on trial for his crimes against the realm. Season 5 will play out this trial and lay the groundwork for the future of the Wildlings, Stannis' claim to the throne, and Jon's inner struggle of sworn duty vs. his own beliefs.

It's important to remember that Jon, bastard by birth, is still half a Stark by blood. As for the Stark children who are still breathing, Arya (Maisie Williams, "Robot Chicken"), rumored to be dead, is in fact on her way across the Narrow Sea to the free city of Braavos, and Sansa (Sophie Turner, "The Thirteenth Tale," 2013) has fled to the Eyrie with the aid of Petyr Baelish (Aidan Gillen, "The Wire"). Still AWOL and believed to be dead, Bran (Isaac Hempstead Wright, "The Awakening," 2011) and Rickon (Art Parkinson, "Dracula Untold," 2014) won't be making an appearance in season 5.

This season will also expand upon the Martell family, which rules the independent nation of Dorne. The "Sand Snakes," a group of bastard daughters of Prince Oberyn Martell (Pedro Pascal, "Graceland"), seek retribution for the death of their father. Obara Sand (Keisha Castle-Hughes, "The Almighty Johnsons"), Nymeria Sand (Jessica Henwick, "Silk") and Tyene Sand (Rosabell Laurenti Sellers, "Mia and Me") will spend the bulk of season 5 plotting, misleading and eliminating all those who stand in the way of providing justice for their slain father.

Speaking of justice, season 5 will explore the responsibility of power in Daenerys Targaryen (Emilia Clarke, "Dom Hemingway," 2013), who is struggling to keep the peace in her conquered establishments. In retaliation of her forced authority and dragons murdering innocent civilians, a group of rebels known as the Sons of the Harpy begins a shadow war against Daenerys and her military. She may not be alone in this struggle, however, as one Tyrion Lannister (Peter Dinklage, "X-Men: Days of Future Past," 2014) will find himself upon Daenerys' shores after fleeing Westeros at the end of season 4.

In a recent interview with the Oxford Union, HBO's "Game of Thrones" creators Dan Weiss and David Benioff confirmed that once this season wraps up, the show and books will be on par.

"Luckily, we've been talking about this with George for a long time, ever since we saw this could happen, and we know where things are heading," Benioff said. "There might be a few deviations along the route, but we're heading towards the same destination. I kind of wish that there were some things we didn't have to spoil, but we're kind of stuck between a rock and a hard place. The show must go on ... and that's what we're going to do."

Indeed, the show must go on, and for fans of all things Westeros, the show must happen soon. Catch the season 5 premiere of "Game of Thrones" airing Sunday, April 12, on HBO.

Q&A hollywood

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: I would like to know if "Beauty and the Beast" will be back on.

A: It will be back on, and will remain on for quite a while.

CW pulled a pretty odd trick with this one. The first two seasons each had 22 episodes and premiered in the fall. But this past fall, when season 3 should have premiered, there was no sign of it, and no word from the network on when it would be back.

It was only in February, four months after the season should have premiered, that the network announced that it would return on May 21.

As if to apologize for the delay, CW renewed it for a fourth season at the same time.

That sounds like a pretty good deal, except season 3 will only have 13 episodes instead of 22. If the fourth season is short as well, that means that committing to the third and fourth seasons at once only results in four more episodes than a single full season would have.

This all sounds very diabolical, but of course it probably isn't. It seems as if the main decision was to switch "Beauty and the Beast" from a fall show to a summer show for season 3, and generally summer shows only get 13-episode orders.

Looking at it that way, it was an act of fairness to give the show a fourth season at the same time.

As for when the fourth season will air, the network only said "later in the 2015-2016 season," but it seems likely it will be the summer again. (The third season ends in August, so it's pretty unlikely the show will move back to the fall.)

Q: Have any of the Disney princesses been voiced by any big names?

A: That's a pretty big question, since there are so many Disney princesses, and the rules for getting into the surprisingly exclusive club are somewhat unclear.

To start with, you don't have to be royalty. Mulan, from the 1998 animated film of the same name, is not part of a royal family, but is officially a Disney princess. Her voice was performed by Ming-Na Wen, who is best known now as Agent May from the ABC series "Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D."

What is clear is that it's not just a matter of being a female protagonist in a Disney movie. There are official coronations at Disney World, and until you are crowned, you are not a princess.

The most recently crowned princess was Merida from 2012's "Brave," who only received her coronation a year after her film's release. Merida was voiced by Kelly Macdonald, who previously starred in "No Country for Old Men" (2007), "Trainspotting" (1996), HBO's "Boardwalk Empire" and other roles unbefitting of a princess.

Given that she was the most recent, that leaves out the two sisters of 2013's phenomenal hit "Frozen." This means Kristen Bell, the former "Veronica Mars" star who voiced Anna, and Idina Menzel, the Broadway star and former "Glee" actress who voiced Elsa, will have to wait for their crowns.

The rules of Disney royalty also leave a number of big-name actresses out of the "princess" fold, such as Demi Moore, who voiced Esmeralda in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" (1996), and Neve Campbell, star of the "Scream" films, who voiced Kiara in "The Lion King 2" (1998).

How bizarre, how bizarre: Travel Channel's culinary adventure is on the road again

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

So, what's the weirdest, most outlandish thing that you've ever eaten? Me, I've chomped down on some crickets, ants and grasshoppers a few times, and of course I'd had more than my fair share of raw meats; steak tartar and sushi are just too tasty to pass up.

If just the thought of watching someone pop a few crunchy insects into their mouth is enough to turn your stomach, do yourself a favor: don't go back and watch old episodes of "Bizarre Foods with Andrew Zimmern."

Luckily for the culinary squeamish, more recent seasons of the Travel Channel favorite, which returns to the screen Monday, April 13, have been a little bit more tame.

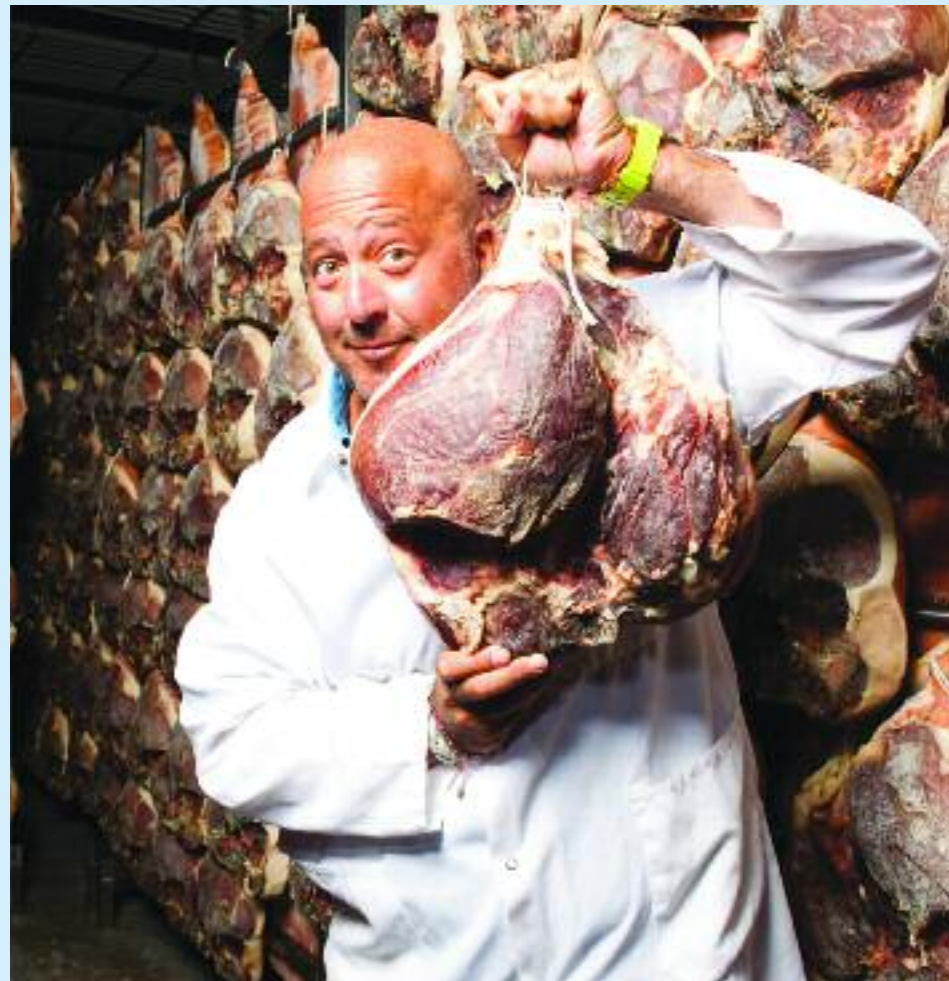

Zimmern has a passion for all foods, no matter how bizarre they may seem, and it seems that there isn't anything out there that he won't try.

What he's out to experience are local cuisines that seem a little bit — or maybe a lot — "off" by American standards. Of course, to the locals in the countries he's visiting, these foods are nothing out of the ordinary at all. This season he's off to places such as Taipei, where he'll visit a mountainside factory to sample stinky tofu; Kazakhstan, where he'll milk a horse then chow down on sheep brains; and Newfoundland, Canada, where he'll eat chicken fried seal flipper and moose pie.

Add these new experiences to some of the strange ones he's had in seasons past — such as eating porcupine, sea cucumber or rotten shark meat (hákarl, an Icelandic specialty) — and it's clear to see that Zimmern is just reinforcing his point: a food that seems "bizarre" to one culture is just a normal, everyday snack in another.

Part culinary exploration and part travel show, "Bizarre Foods with Andrew Zimmern" is always an adventure. "Bizarre Foods" returns to Travel Channel Monday, April 13.

Hour of the wolf

Plenty of blood, action and witchcraft in store in the new season of 'Bitten'

By Jacqueline Spendlove
TV Media

I think it's safe to say, at this point, that the supernatural trend in television, books and movies won't be fizzling out any time soon. We love our vampires, our witches, our werewolves and our zombies. Heck, "True Blood" even managed to make fairies cool. Sort of.

Not surprisingly, Syfy has a pretty good handle on all things bloodsucking, shape-shifting and otherworldly. The sophomore season of the Canadian series "Bitten" wrapped up last month north of the border, and it's about to make its U.S. debut on the cable network. Catch the new season of the supernatural thriller when it kicks off Friday, April 17, on Syfy.

"Bitten" is based on the "Women of the Otherworld" book series penned by No. 1 New York Times bestselling author Kelley Armstrong. The 13-book series follows werewolves, vampires, witches and other supernatural beings as they struggle to live normal lives alongside humans in modern society.

In the TV version, Laura Vandervoort leads the chiefly Canadian cast as Elena Michaels, a Toronto photographer who became the world's only known female werewolf when she was bitten by her ex-fiancé. You may recognize the leggy blond as Kara Kent, a.k.a. Supergirl, in the CW series "Smallville." Like Superman's cousin Kara, the werewolf Elena possesses super-human strength, and Vandervoort does more than her share of butt-kicking in "Bitten." It's clear that the actress slides well into these "way stronger than she looks" roles.

Laura Vandervoort and Greyston Holt star in "Bitten"

Elena has heightened strength, speed, sight and smell, and after an initial reluctance to give up her human life in Toronto, she's now embraced her more wolfish side.

"This year, Elena knows exactly who she is, but now she has to establish herself in the pack," Vandervoort said in a "Huffington Post" interview. "Physically, as well, we have more fight scenes this year. It's more of a bloodbath and I'm pushing myself harder."

In the first episode of season 2, we see Elena yank a guy's tongue out of his head, so, yes, we can probably agree that she's allowing her more beastly side to step into the foreground just now.

Though the series has been getting mixed reviews, its popularity can't be denied. It continues to pull in solid if not mind-blowing numbers, and is the most-watched original series of all time for Space, the Canadian network that broadcasts its original run. In Canada, the season 2 premiere drew an audience of more than 401,000 — that may not sound like a lot, but bear in mind that Canada's population is roughly one-tenth of that of the U.S.

Along with ripping tongues out and taking names, Elena's getting back into the groove with her former fiancé Clayton (Greyston Holt, "Durham County") this season. You might think being bitten and turned into a supernatural wolf-lady might turn you off of a guy, but that's all water under the bridge. The two of them are working together now to hunt down Malcolm Danvers (James McGowan, "Bomb Girls"), the father of their pack leader Jeremy (Greg Bryk, "The Book of Negroes") and the source of most of last season's conflict. Their hunt puts them in the path of a coven of witches — the newest supernatural element added to the storyline this season.

"The witches bring this whole other dynamic of a supernatural world that the wolves didn't even know existed," Vandervoort said in an interview with the "Toronto Sun." "And now that they do know, they aren't really prepared to handle it. They can't just use their physicality to deal with witches. It forces the pack to re-think their methods."

So we've got buckets of blood, a coven of witches and much more. By all accounts, there's a lot of fresh material in store for fans of the supernatural drama, and we can definitely count on some twists and surprises. Catch the new season of "Bitten" when it makes its U.S. debut Friday, April 17, on Syfy.
