Q&A hollywood

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: Catherine Bell has long been one of my favorite performers. I have enjoyed her TV work since the "JAG" days and especially in "Army Wives." When that show ended, I thought she had a contract for a new show. Did it ever get made?

A: It's fair that you missed Catherine Bell's new show — it came and went very quickly, and with little fanfare, from Hallmark Channel's schedule. But it's coming back.

Bell stars in "Good Witch" as, well, a good witch. She lives in the small town (this is Hallmark Channel, after all) of Middleton with her daughter, who shares her mother's magical powers.

As I said, the show didn't get much of a splash in the media, but that might have something to do with the fact that it's not really clear when it started. The problem there is that, like some other Hallmark shows, it started as a series of TV movies, only later transitioning into a regular series.

The regular series premiered in late February. It had just eight episodes and was gone by April (another reason why you might not know it ever happened), but it was a hit for the network, and so it received a second-season order before the first even finished.

The second season will once again be a sort of telefilm-series hybrid. The series premiere will be a two-hour special airing in the fall, while the rest of the show won't air until early 2016. Hallmark programming executive Michelle Vicary called the fall premiere "an early treat to our beloved fans."

It makes sense that Hallmark would tend towards TV movies — it's how it made its name on TV, after all. Before it ever had a channel, it was producing popular made-for-TV movies for the broadcast networks.

Q: I heard that Sarah Jessica Parker doesn't actually smoke, and every cigarette she had during "Sex and the City" was fake. Is it true?

A: I would say that it depends who you ask, but it would probably be more accurate to say that it depends when you ask. Part of the statement is true, though: the cigarettes Sarah Jessica Parker smoked on screen on "Sex and the City" were fake.

"I smoke fake cigarettes in the show," Parker told "E! Online" back when the show was still on the air. "They're called Honey Rose, they have no nicotine, and they smell funny. I think they're made of lettuce or something."

In a 2004 interview on CNN's "Larry King Live," she copped to having smoked real cigarettes off-screen "in the early years" of her time on "Sex and the City," but that she quit when she had a baby. She picked them up again later, though, while the show was shooting on location in the cigarette-friendly city of Paris.

"I smoked when I was playing — in the early years of Carrie. And, of course, when I had a baby I didn't, and didn't smoke for two years, until I went to Paris. You know, this is the great seduction of a city like Paris with great architecture and food and wine and, so ... it's not been the easiest thing."

She said in that interview that her husband, fellow film star Matthew Broderick, doesn't like the fact that she smokes. However, in an interview with "New York Magazine" four years later, Broderick said he, too, is an occasional smoker.

"I used to smoke cigarettes, and I still do, lately. I gave that up a long time ago, but every now and then I will fall off for a week."

'Food Network Star' kicks off

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

If there's any doubt out there that we're a society with a love of food, the rise of culinary celebrities should prove otherwise.

Americans love celebrities and Americans love food, so when they're put together, something amazing happens.

Yep, it's time again for Food Network's annual search for their next great culinary superstar. "Food Network Star" premiered last week and is continuing through the summer on Sunday evenings.

The yearly contest puts a group of hopefuls through their show-biz paces as Food Network executives try to nail down who they think could have what it takes to become the next Bobby Flay ("Throwdown! with Bobby Flay") or Giada De Laurentiis ("Everyday Italian").

So what's up with this year's "Food Network Star?" Longtime watchers of the program will know that the format is switched up and tweaked every season to keep things fresh, and this year's 11th season is no exception.

Twelve eager hopefuls from across the nation have come together in sunny Los Angeles where they'll be mentored and judged by Flay and De Laurentiis — down from the three mentors that were present last year.

Like last year, each week will witness the remaining hopefuls facing two challenges that will test not only their culinary skills but also their presence in front of a camera and potential "star power."

There's a good reason to test for that, too. Some of the winners from previous years have gone on to become some of the biggest stars that the Food Network has. Guy Fieri ("Diners, Drive-Ins and Dives," "Guy's Grocery Games"), Jeff Mauro ("Sandwich King," "The Kitchen") and Damaris Phillips ("Southern at Heart") are all previous winners, and most of the other winners have found some success on the network as well.

Also much like last season, the eliminated hopefuls have a chance for redemption. The web series "Star Salvation" is back on foodnetwork.com, where the contestants who've previously been shown the door have one last chance to get back into the competition.

Some say that stars are born, not made, but of course, those stars still have to be discovered. "Food Network Star," the ultimate search for the next great culinary star, is underway on Sunday evenings on Food Network.

ABC's 'The Astronaut Wives Club' rockets to the small screen

By Cassie Dresch
TV Media

The 1960s were an incredible time of discovery for the human race, highlighted by the ongoing Space Race between the Soviet Union and the United States. The first person, Russian Yuri Gagarin, went to space in 1961, and the first person, American Neil Armstrong, set foot on the moon in 1969. The Space Race featured the U.S.S.R.'s Voskhod and Vostok programs and the U.S.'s Mercury program, Gemini project and Apollo program.

The men who helmed these missions have forever been ingrained in Earth's history, but as one old saying would have it: Behind every great man there's an even greater woman.

ABC is launching a new drama series that explores these two concepts — the evolving space program of the '60s and the women behind the men. Based on true events and the book by Lily Koppel, "The Astronaut Wives Club" rockets to the small screen Thursday, June 18, on ABC.

The series centers on seven women, telling their stories from the other side of NASA's space program. While their husbands are exploring outer space and forging the foundation for many of today's modern technologies, these lovely ladies were given an equally important task — keep their homes together and functioning for the good of the space program.

"There was this whole story at home," Koppel, the book's author, told Space.com. "These wives were basically single mothers during the week who were mowing the lawn, keeping the checkbook balanced, making sure their husbands aren't overly stressed at home, per NASA's recommendations. ... [I]t really was sort of the heart of the endeavor, the emotional story of the Space Race."

ABC's 10-episode version of "The Astronaut Wives Club" will focus primarily on the wives of the astronauts from NASA's Project Mercury, but after undergoing some creative changes last year, it will also include the stories from the Gemini and Apollo missions.

Playing the seven core women are some ladies who are no strangers to television.

Fresh off last year's acclaimed miniseries "24: Live Another Day," Yvonne Strahovski — who has also been in "Dexter" and "Chuck" — plays Rene Carpenter, wife of astronaut Scott Carpenter. JoAnna Garcia Swisher ("Reba," "Once Upon a Time") stars as Betty Grissom, wife of the second American to ever fly in space, Gus. "House's" Odette Annable steps into the role of Gordon Cooper's wife, Trudy; Dominique McElligott, of "Hell on Wheels" fame, plays Louise Shepard, the wife of Alan Shepard, who holds the distinction of being the first American to travel into space.

Rounding out the seven lovely ladies are Erin Cummings ("Detroit 1-8-7") as Marge Slayton, wife of Deke; Azure Parsons ("Salem") as John Glenn's wife, Annie; and Zoe Boyle ("Downton Abbey") as Jo Schirra, wife of Wally.

Of course, being thrust into the spotlight so quickly — and becoming "America's first reality stars," according to Koppel — wasn't always as easy as the women made it out to be. Their husbands were transformed into rock stars pretty much overnight, and the focus was always on the silver-suited astronauts. The astro-wives were often forced into the background and forgotten about in the history books.

"I think that honestly they feel that they have been shut out of a lot of history," Koppel said in the Space.com interview. "Whenever there are these NASA anniversaries and everyone gathers, a lot of the times it's the astronauts and their second or third or fourth wife. These women are like: 'They didn't live through it — we did.'

The Lazarus Effect

A pair of medical researchers, Frank (Duplass) and his fiancée Zoe (Wilde) develop a serum meant to assist coma patients, code-named "Lazarus." In tests, they administer the serum to a recently deceased dog, which brings it back to life. They run tests on the animal, which show that the drug is creating new synapses in its brain and giving it strange new abilities. During a later experiment, an accident causes Zoe to be fatally electrocuted. In his grief, Frank uses the serum on her to bring her back to life, and she reawakens with strange new powers of telepathy and telekinesis. With her rewired brain also causing aggression and rage, Zoe goes on a horrifying rampage
