as Shoe Fest near Manteno. With a paid crowd of about 8,700 in downtown Kankakee at last weekend's MusicFest and another 2,000 when workers, talent and comp passes were factored in, that means more than 10,000 people converged for two days in the heart of the city.

"For a space that big, that's a good number," MusicFest director Allison Beasle said. "But this fest is all about celebrating where we live, and I think it's great that people come from all over to our home. That's what makes this so cool."

With a 2015 budget of $115,000 — up from $94,000 in 2014 — MusicFest has one distinct advantage over BBQ Fest: It doesn't have to make money.

Amid cries for a safe haven, ones that exist go underutilized

BY JOHN DYKSTRA jdykstra@daily-journal.com 815-937-3330

After a 7-year-old was shot at a birthday party in June, one woman gave a grim assessment.

"This happened, and it's not even 90 degrees outside yet," she said, as schools neared summer break.

"We are used to adults getting shot in Kankakee, but now, kids are getting shot," she added. "That's a heart-wrenching problem."

While the boy survived, a month later, another young man became a victim to violence. Thirteen-year-old Andrevion Jones was killed on June 11. Police later arrested a 16-year-old for his murder.

Jones' death rallied about 40 of his friends as they marched through neighborhoods in protest against violence. The march ended at Caldwell Chapel, which has since embraced the teens in two sessions.

"They want a safe haven where they can play basketball and do other activities," Pastor Lori Holmes said. "Some of the kids said they are afraid of the city now."

Get kids involved

Children involved in extracurricular activities are less likely to get in trouble, according to studies by the Youth Policy Forum, Carnegie Corporation, and National Research Council & Institution of Medicine.

However, a 2007 study by the University of Illinois Chicago and Loyola University Chicago estimated more than 7 million children in the U.S. spend a significant amount of time after school unsupervised. Thus, education officials nationwide have increased afterschool programs.

not be coming from taxpayers.

That pair of factors led to the creation of BBQ Fest at River Road Park.

"You have to think outside the box. What can be done to raise money?" Collins said. "That's how the BBQ Fest was created."

While the just-completed festival numbers are being checked, the 2013 event turned a profit of $25,469 and the 2014 event pulled in a surplus of $26,261.

But there isn't just BBQ Fest. Kankakee County is becoming home to several events requiring hundreds of thousands of dollars to produce.

There's Merchant Street MusicFest in downtown Kankakee. And the long-running Bourbonnais Friendship Festival. There also is the historic Momence Glad Festival, as well While Beasley noted that because of agreements with bands, she couldn't be specific on their costs, she noted this year's main stage headliners — 5th Dimension and The Ohio Players — each cost between $20,000 to $25,000.

Momence collector sells off his unrestored

BY DENNIS YOHNKA dyohnka@daily-journal.com 815-937-3384

The inventory might have looked like nothing more than rusty scrap iron to the uninitiated.

Many of the 40 old tractors sat on flat tires. The acres of antique farm machinery had to be cut out of the nearby tree stand. Just for fun, one ancient reaper was on sale with a portion of a tree trunk still attached, right where it grew through it.

But Thursday's auction, on a farm east of Momence, also represented a big chunk of America's agricultural past and decades of memories for owner Bill Munyon.

Two days before an anti-violence rally was set to step off at the corner of East Maple Street and Lincoln Avenue, two shootings occurred nearby, casting a pall over the event while reinforcing the need for more of them.

"We are tired of being prisoners," said Robert Ellington-Snipes, a Kankakee County Board member representing part of the city's east side. "We go in our houses and cannot come out and sit on our porches because of all the shootings."

Snipes is one of the organizers of Saturday's "Stop the violence — Increase the peace" event. He lives near the site of the shootings, which received only a brief mention in the police department's blotter. They have refused to give more details. Though there were reports one person was hit, the blotter item mentions no victim.

The rally was scheduled from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and is being staged by the African American Improvement Association.

In the past two months, several people have been shot in the city. One of the victims, 13-year-old Andrevion Jones, was killed by a single shot to the head on July 9 on North Cottage Avenue. The alleged shooter, Terrance Love, is 16.

Another shooting that occurred in the 1300 block of East Chestnut Street on June 6 injured a man and a 7-year-old girl at a birthday party. She was shot in the neck, but survived.

Forums have been held at churches on the north and east sides of Kankakee.

"This is not about divided people," Snipes said. "This is about being disconnected. We need to plug back into the community. There is no more 'We can't do it."

"You should never be too busy," he added. "You should be able to take time to open the door and do something. We need to continue to have an avenue of communications.

"You can have all the gun laws you want but you need to get them off the streets. We must take back our neighborhoods."

No more than 7 years for helping killers escape?

Light sentence for disgraced correctional officer disgraceful

Don't assume. I'm not sure where that rule falls on the lists of don'ts, but I broke it.

I assumed aiding in the escape of a prisoner was a big deal. I even assumed if the prisoner was serving a harsh sentence for a heinous crime, such as murder, the person helping with the escape would really be in big trouble. I further assumed if the person aiding in the escape of a dangerous felon was a trusted member of the corrections staff, the hammer would be even more severe.

Joyce Mitchell, the former New York Department of Corrections employee who helped two convicted murderers escape, proved how wrong my assumptions were. She helped two very dangerous men escape. She broke whatever codes of trust correctional staffers swear to uphold. She violated several rules of her position. She literally put several geographical regions on lockdown. She cost the government over $20 million to recapture her two friends.

After her guilty plea, she is facing a sentence of two to seven years in jail. I assumed it would be a whole lot more, such as life. Mitchell is 51 years old. If she serves the maximum, she'll still have a long life to live freely with people who have never stepped on an insect.

Maybe I am wrong for wanting this woman to serve the rest of her life behind bars. Maybe it is possible I am missing the redeemable value she may contribute to society down the road. Maybe in the big scheme of things, helping prisoners escape is not that big of a deal. Definitely, I'm stupid for allowing this case to stick in my craw

Joyce Mitchell didn't help in the escape of two petty pot peddlers who were unfairly sentenced. She didn't help in the escape of two computer hackers who created financial havoc for millions of citizens. She didn't help in the escape of two men falsely accused of murder. No, she picked the two worst possible people to help escape, two rightly convicted murderers, one of them a multiple murderer. This antithesis of Harriet Tubman got off light.

By her own admission, Mitchell committed several offenses. She had a personal, physical and sexual relationship with the murderers who were on the "honor" system. She made illegal contact with their family on their behalf. She brought in tools and other contraband. She failed to report the planned escape. She put her fellow employees in danger, including her husband.

Why? Because she "enjoyed the attention." She got "caught up" in the excitement of the feeling the two men gave her and "the thought of a different life." But, she's really sorry.

And for all of this, she faced a felony charge of promoting prison contraband and a misdemeanor charge of criminal facilitation. She will serve no more than seven years after she is sentenced next month. That's it, folks.

Where is the disincentive to commit such a crime? Where is the example to deter other correctional employees from doing something similar? What is to prevent another felon with great financial means from buying seven years of a prison employee's life?

Meanwhile, Rich Paul is serving 81 years for a marijuana conviction. Larry Duke is doing life without the possibility of parole for a pot-related conviction. Christopher Williams is doing 82-85 years on a medical marijuana conviction. Even former Gov. Rod Blagojevich is doing 14 years for a nonviolent conviction. I can only assume they are just not sorry.

I shouldn't assume, but I'm thinking David Sweat, the surviving captured escapee, is planning to groom his next correctional staff victim and escape.

World Vision brings atrocities home

Local exhibit details poverty, abduction, human trafficking

> BY JOHN DYKSTRA jdykstra@daily-journal.com 815-937-3330

Children from around the world are struggling with poverty, abduction, human trafficking and other socioeconomic disadvantages that some Americans can't imagine.

To put that in perspective, World Vision Experience has brought an award-winning, audio-guided exhibit to Adventure Christian Church in Bradley that puts community members in the shoes of children from Bangladesh, Syria and Uganda.

"I don't think you can walk through this experience and not be changed," tour representative Katie McKenzie said. "It's hard to see the children in these situations and not think twice about what you put your time and money toward. It makes you think outside of vourself.

In the exhibit on human trafficking in Bangladesh, an adult woman describes how being trafficked into a brothel as a child affected her and the outlook for her two daughters.

Then, there's Syria, where

MARTINTON

The Daily Journal/Tiffany Blanchette Elisha Hamilton, of Bradley, observes images Thursday as she listens to a story about child abduction in Africa during a 20-minute audioguided tour through the World Vision Experience mobile exhibit hosted at Adventure Church. The exhibit, which shows participants a variety of situations such as extreme poverty, human trafficking and refugee crises, will be open at the North Kinzie Avenue church on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

a civil war caused a refugee crisis, unhealthy pregnancies and child labor. Poverty-stricken families can't send their kids to school because of financial problems. So, the kids become subject to child labor.

The exhibit concludes with the most gut-wrenching situation for parents: Children being abducted, murdered and dismembered in Uganda. That part hit close to home with Pastor Dallas Henry, of First Christian Church in Wilmington.

"I feel the desire to see social justices communicated in a way that we can help," Henry said. "We need to do something about this.

Each stop in the tour ends on a positive note, detailing how World Vision is addressing global issues. Community members can sponsor children throughout the world to improve their country's economic development, agriculture and more.

After the tour, Henry said he wants to send more church members to the exhibit and possibly sponsor children in affected countries.

Ron Franklin, a staff member at Cornerstone Church in Bourbonnais, said sponsoring a child "opens their life up to the possibility of being something better." The 80-yearold St. Anne man is a volunteer for the tour after experiencing it five years ago at Cornerstone.

"This tour takes you out of your complacency and thinking that everything is alright in the world," Franklin added. "It almost becomes impossible, if you have any heart at all, for people to ignore the tremendous needs and the opportunity you have to transform lives through a small sacrifice."

The exhibit will remain at Adventure Christian Church, 235 N. Kinzie Ave. in Bradlev. until Sunday. On Saturday, it's open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Reservations can be made on worldvisionexperience.org. Children younger than 13 must be accompanied by an adult.

"We want to raise awareness of what these children are going through to bring about change in their communities and lives," McKenzie said.

Fair fun wraps up Sunday

Life too predictable? Than pay a visit

BY DENNIS YOHNKA dyohnka@daily-journal.com 815-937-3384

The Kankakee County Fair, which wraps up Sunday, has a 51-year tradition of blending some diverse elements. Rural life, mechanized mayhem, carnival food, music and surprising additions always have had a place on the schedule.

A Friday morning visit turned up three examples of the expected unpredictability found on this busy fairgrounds.

In the Swine barn, 5-year-old Will Wright, of Bonfield, barely was taller than his champion market gilt, but he's no rookie in the show ring. "It's his third year out here," his mother, Michelle, said. "And showing the pigs is just part of it. ... He doesn't need convincing to go out and do chores. He walks them every night.'

"I'm usually the first one up in the morning," Will added.

Near the grandstand entrance, Kara Gilmore, from upstate New York, was busy with the stars of a new show called "The Marvelous Mutts." She owns 16 dogs and travels seven months of the year, putting on demonstrations of dock-diving, Frisbee-catching and other tricks. "And all of the dogs are rescues. We find them in shelters," she said. "One of our most popular is deaf."

• In the beef barn, cattle were being prepped for the show and sale. Mason Schneider, 15, of Grant Park, was taking the grooming a little further with help from his friend, Austin Mussman, 13, also of Grant Park. "He's just really good at it," Schneider said, while Mussman used a spray adhesive and electric clippers to give an Angus the perfect spiky look on his hind quarters.

Saturday's agenda includes a horse show, a motorcycle exhibition, truck drag races, a demolition derby, a performance by the Greg Schneider Band, as well as midway attractions and other activities. Sunday's schedule features truck and tractor pulls, more demolition action, a last chance at carnival rides and other activities from the 4-H competition to the Hall of Industry exhibits.

bats could be found throughout the county. So far, 26 bats have tested positive for rabies this year in Illinois. Last year's state total was 40.

A vaccine may be required for people who are bitten by bats or touch their saliva or brain tissue without a protective barrier. Vaccines are recommended in homes where bats have been spotted. Animals can be protected through a vaccine, too.

People who have been bitten by any animal can receive a vaccine by contacting the health department at 815-802-9430 during the day or 815-937-8479 after hours.

If you spot a bat in your home or business, isolate yourself from it and call Kankakee County Animal Control at 815-937-2949 during the day and 815-936-4641 after hours. Minimize harm to the bat so it can be tested for rabies.

Community: Kankakee Public Library, Kankakee Valley Park District offer programs directed toward youth

"Kids need something that will get them to come together in a supervised environment," said Genevra Walters, superintendent of Kankakee School District 111. "They need structured supervision with caring, responsible adults.'

But what happens when school is out for the summer?

There are places to go

Several Kankakee-based organizations offer programs that are underused.

The Kankakee Public Library hosts free youth and teen programs that promote community awareness, self-empowerment and literacv

The library's Teen Zone primarily gives teens access to computers and reading materials. But it also offers events such as slam poetry

Area churches also feature inexpensive camps, ranging from Bible studies to youth sports leagues.

The Kankakee Valley Park District charges nominal fees for most programs, but also accepts grants from the Kankakee Valley Park Foundation. Anyone struggling to afford a park district program can contact the park foundation to possibly reduce costs.

At its RecCenter, the park district offers open gym hours throughout the year, in addition to a basketball league and instruction programs for basketball, volleyball, soccer and tumbling. Ice Valley Ice Center Arena also is available from the fall through spring months.

During the summer, the park district featured specialty camps for horseback riding, nature, archery and STEM, among others. It also partnered with the Kankakee school district for Learning and Fun Camp. "We don't see kids as much as we think we should during our summer programs," said Sam Jordan, the park district's athletic manager. "However, they are using our parks. sessions, open mic nights and journal writing contests. It's Hot Topics enable kids to discuss community and personal issues, too.

"These programs are a must," said Kent Wade, the library's teen program coordinator. "We need to rebuild our community through our youth, and our programs help develop our youth into productive citizens.

The development corporation discontinued its Teen Reach program on June 30 because of cuts in state funding. However, Jackson still is working need to approach programs with kids throughout the summer because that's what people in this community did for him when he was a kid.

"The milkman and mailman were a couple of the people who looked out for me," Jackson said. "Our kids need people from the community to watch out for them, too. They look for discipline and want that regimen."

In that regard, Jackson dismissed program costs as an excuse, saying the shortterm expense could save more money long term.

"Paying $400 for a season of youth hockey costs less than $25,000 in lawyer fees," he said. "Kids need something to do."

David Reedy - Bourbonnais

David Reedy, 76, of Bourbonnais, passed away Thursday (July 30, 2015) at Silverado Memory Care in Naperville.

He was born March 1, 1939, in Jarrettsville, Md., the son of James C. (J. C.) and Nannie Boggs Reedy.

in-law, Dale and Jean Reedy, Gerald and farmed and pastored several churches of the Nazarene. Out of a desire to see their children attend Olivet Nazarene College, J. C. and Nannie moved their family to Bourbonnais just in time for David's senior year of high school. That year David and his brother, Dale, became star members of the Bradley-Bourbonnais football team. David excelled as an athlete. He played baseball and basketball, but his loves were track and football. His star status earned him an invitation to play football for the University of Delaware, an offer he had to refuse.

Lisa Straw, and her husband John; his son, Ethan Reedy, and his wife Wendi; and five grandchildren, Austin and Christian Straw and Calvin, Josiah, and Lily Reedy.

He did attend Olivet where he earned a degree in accounting. He was actively involved in intramural sports and student government. At Olivet he met Donna Reedy, his wife of 27 years. After spending time in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and the Chicago suburbs, they eventually settled in Bourbonnais with their two children, Lisa and Ethan. David and Donna divorced in 1987. David married Sandy Peck Reedy and, though they too divorced, they remained life-long friends. David is probably best known in Bourbonnais for developing the Olde Oak subdivision in the late 1970s and the 80s. The subdivision features some of the most beautiful and well-crafted homes in the region. He was also passionate about the stock market and spent his later years as a successful investor. David was diagnosed with Lewy Body Dementia in 2008 and had struggled with that difficult disease in the years since. Visitation will be from 2:30 p.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday at Clancy-Gernon Funeral Home in Bourbonnais. An additional time of visitation will be from 10 a.m. Monday until the 10:30 a.m. funeral services at College Church of the Nazarene, 200 University Ave., Bourbonnais. Burial will be in Kankakee Memorial Gardens in Aroma Township.

Marjorie Hilliker – Mesa, Ariz.

After a long, full life, Marjorie (Marge) Leona Hilliker passed away quietly on July 19, 2015, at the Villa Hospice in Mesa, Ariz., surrounded by her immediate family.

Marge was born on Nov. 11, 1922, in Crown Point, Ind., the daughter of Chester and Emma Mrs. Hilliker (Changnon) Yocom.

She attended Illinois State University and graduated with a degree in elementary education. Marjorie married her high school sweetheart, Arthur James Hilliker, in 1943. After the war years the Hillikers returned to reside in Kankakee, where Arthur worked at Gould National Battery. Along with being a devoted wife, mother and grandmother, Marge taught school for 32 years. She spent more than a quarter of a century educating more than 2,000 of Kankakee's kindergarten students in Room 101 of Mark Twain Grade School. Multiple generations of students will remember watching baby chicks, tadpoles and moths hatching in her classroom. She strove to instill the wonder of learning in her students through science, reading and music.

Marge retired in 1989 and dedicated her remaining time to working and reading with students at the Mark Twain library. Through her teaching and volunteer work at Asbury United Methodist Church, time on the board of YWCA and other community activities she made a positive impact on many lives with her care and humor. Marge was an avid reader and adventurous traveler, enjoying many trips and cruises with her lifelong friends from Kankakee.

Surviving are her daughter and son-in-law, Wendy and Harold Blomquist, of Gilbert, Ariz.; her daughter-in-law, Pat Duplain (husband Russell); her granddaughter, Erin Schwab (husband Jason); and many nieces and nephews.

Preceding her in death were her husband; her sisters. Noreen Cusey and Roberta Swank; and her sons, Robert Ray and James Keith Hilliker.

Memorial visitation will be from 9 a.m. on Aug. 8, 2015, until the 10 a.m. service at Asbury United Methodist Church in Kankakee. Burial will follow at 11:30 a.m. on Aug. 8 in Kankakee Memorial Gardens in Aroma Township.

Memorial may be made in memory of Marjorie Hilliker to the Kankakee YWCA building fund. (Pd.)

MOMENCE

Auction: Sale attracts more than 100 collectors from Rhode Island to Texas, even Amish from Indiana

Munyon, 81, recently decided he was never going to get around to restoring all of these artifacts. He decided to call his friends at River Vallev Auctioneers and admit it was time for him to say goodbye to some of this mechanized family history.

The sale attracted more than 100 collectors from Rhode Island to Texas. Amish farmers came from Indiana for the horse-drawn equipment.

Shoppers from Tennessee and Kentucky came with heavy-duty trailers for carrying their prizes home. The activities crowded the farmyard and caused traffic delays on Illinois Route 114. The lunch, served in one of the toolsheds, sold out of everything except a few hot dogs

"Well, this isn't easy but I've probably got 40 more restored tractors and some other things I've collected back at my place," Munyon said, referring to the homestead about a mile west of the sale site. His farm is the one with a tractor on top of a silo.

"My wife wanted me to get rid of that silo. We weren't feeding cattle anymore," he said. "But I got that tractor put up there, and now it's a lawn ornament. You can't get rid of a lawn ornament."

The inventory was eclectic: a 1930s Packard; a Chevy panel truck; four David Bradley garden tractors; a copper washing machine; a windmill; a collection of assorted wheels; even a pile of things that were actually sold as scrap iron.

There's a big scraper back there. That's what I used to dig two ponds at my place. I guess I haven't used that in 50 years," Munyon said. "But I think this all started when I was a little boy. My dad and my uncle bought two tractors with consecutive serial numbers. When one of them got sold, I couldn't believe it. I had to go get that one back."

Other tractors didn't have any special meaning.

"I didn't drive a lot of these, but they still brought back memories of what I did drive," he said.

Meanwhile, the crowd followed auctioneers Bill Phelps and Dan Loftus as the golf cart sales center slowly cruised the grounds. Oldfashioned overalls were a common look. Straw hats, too, maybe in deference to the bygone era of the machinery. Some items would bring a surprising $600, and other equipment sold for scrap metal prices.

"It was one of the most popular sales on the auction website," Phelps said. "There are always buyers out there for this sort of thing.

... Even if Munyon is out of the market. "I used to pick things up when Bill Munyon stands in a shed and looks out at his tractors and farm equipment as he waits for the auction to start on Thursday morning.

people would tell me they saw an old tractor sitting out somewhere," he said. "And I went to sales like this when I was buying. I've been lucky: I've been married to two wonderful women and they never fought me too much on this stuff."

Auctioneer Bill Phelps takes one last look at the inventory of tractors, vehicles and farm equipment owned by Munyon.

COMMENTARY

There's more than Lolla in Chicago this August

It's Lollapalooza weekend in Chicago. Traditionally, that means

DAVEWISCHNOWSKY WISCH LIST

nied by an entourage of torrential downpours.

This year looks like it may be no different although, hopefully, the rain gets lost on the way.

But either way, August in Chicago offers much more than just the big music extravaganza in Grant Park. So, if you're taking a trip to the city this month, here are a few additional options that might be music to your ears.

Saturday and Sunday: Taste of Latin America

Now in its third year, the Taste of Latin America again brings fare both eclectic and exotic to the Windy City in a culinary celebration of the Southern Hemisphere.

Held from noon to 10 p.m. both Saturday and Sunday on West Armitage Avenue from Central Park Avenue to Avers Street, you'll find everything from fish panades and empanadas to Brazilian sausage and fried plantains.

For more information, visit chicagoevents.com.

Aug. 7-9: Retro on Roscoe

Back for the 20th year, Retro on Roscoe offers its annual automotive and musical blasts from the past along a tree-lined, six-block stretch in one of Chicago's coziest and most underrated neighborhoods.

Featuring artisans, vendors, merchants, live music and kids' activities, Retro on Roscoe is held from 5 to 10 p.m. on Aug. 7 and noon to 10 p.m. on Aug. 8-9.

And just outside the fest's entrance at Damen Avenue and Roscoe Street, you'll find the star of the show: the annual Classic Car & Motorcycle Show, showcasing more than 50 antique, classic and muscle cars during the weekend festival. For more information, visit roscoevillage.org.

Aug. 8: Bud Billiken Parade

Back in 1929, Chicago Defender newspaper founder Robert S. Abbott conjured up Bud Billiken, a character named after the Billiken, which is the guardian angel of all children, according to Chinese legend.

Abbott proceeded to launch a parade named after his brainchild, which has grown over the decades to become a fixture in Chicago's African-American community.

Focused on a "Back to School" theme, the Bud Billiken Parade is the second largest in the nation and kicks off this year at 10 a.m. at Martin Luther King Drive and Oakwood Boulevard in the city's Bronzeville neighborhood. It continues south to 55th Street at Washington Park, which serves as the site of a celebratory picnic.

For more information. visit budbillikenparade.org.

Economy: District spent $219,473 for KVPD's 2014 fest

"But we want people to come here and expect everything to be good," Beasley said. "That includes not just the bands, but the food, the vendors, how clean it is. I say, 'expect greatness, and you will have a good experience."

And how things have changed. As recently as 2010, the then two-stage music fest had a $20,000 budget, of which $8,500 was earmarked for music.

And as one can tell, as they walk through the gates, these locally produced events are not just thrown together.

The planning for the 2016 events already has begun. Collins said these events are yearlong projects.

Collins' file folders for each BBQ Fest are about three-inches thick. It's not hard to imagine. For the KVPD's 2014 festival, the district spent $219,473.

"We certainly try to keep the event affordable, but we need to make money. That's what this is here for," Collins said.

"The Chicago Park District puts on Taste of Chicago. The Naperville Park District puts on the Naperville Rib Fest. This is happening all over," he said.

In Momence, Lorri Simpson, president of the Glad Fest Association, said the five-day festival, which began in 1938, has a budget of just less than $100.000 and a volunteer force of more than 100.

Simpson said the Friday and Saturday parades alone last year cost $44,000 to produce.

And the process never stops. Simpson already is reviewing music acts for the 2016 event even though 2015's have not unfolded.

"I try to do something with the festival everyday, and I'm not alone," Simpson said.

Chicagoan Matt Robinson, the director of the rapidly growing Shoe Fest held at Camp Shaw-Waw-Nas-See just outside of Manteno, said the event attracted about 1,600 people last year. Some fest-goers were from places as far away as New York, Florida and Washington.

He noted the 5-year-old festival has grown by about 300 each year. Advanced tickets for the three-day, three-stage event are $100.

But, Robinson said, people don't mind the cost as long as the event is deemed to be of quality.

"I stressed that from the very first year," he said. "We knew we wouldn't make money if it wasn't done right.'

And, of course, there is no doubt making money is crucial for fests.

"For us to maintain our parks, we have to have money. The question is, where do you get it? We all need money, but where do you get it? I felt I was putting my head on the chopping block," Collins said.

"We knew we would either crash and burn or survive." he added. "I always tell my staff that we are not always going to be right, but you have to try.'

even kids' TV gets into the act.

Vacation is nowhere to be seen on Nickelodeon's new tween comedy "The Massively Mixed-Up Middle School Mystery" (7 p.m. today). Precocious tweens Everett (Garrett Ryan), Riley (Adam Hochstetter) and Alyssa (Haley Tju) form a detectives' club to solve mysteries that baffle their classmates. Why do the cafeteria's mozzarella sticks taste so funny? Who made the noise on the school loudspeaker? Is there any truth to the rumor of a secret swimming pool in the boiler room?

Nickelodeon's new tween comedy "The Massively Mixed-Up Middle School Mystery" stars Haley Tju, left, Garrett Ryan, right, and Adam Hochstetter as a trio of tweens who form a detectives' club to solve mysteries that baffle their classmates. Tune in at 7 tonight to see what the sleuths unravel.

Shot through with the frantic energy of a liveaction cartoon, this new series demonstrates that there is no mystery as to the enduring power of "Nancy Drew"-type detective stories for readers and viewers of a certain age.

If the kids are really good detectives, they might be able to solve the mystery of Nickelodeon's vanishing audience, which was down 15 percent last year and dropped about 35 percent in the first quarter of 2015. Many cable networks are experiencing audience erosion, but Nick's figures are terrifying.

Divide and conquer Taliban?

The Associated Press

In this July 30 picture, a man walks past a corner where a victim of a shooting was discovered in Baltimore. Murders are spiking again in Baltimore, three months after Freddie Gray's death in police custody sparked riots. This year's monthly bloodshed has twice reached levels unseen in a quarter-century.

Baltimore killings soar to a level unseen in 43 years

BALTIMORE — Baltimore reached a grim milestone on Friday, three months after riots erupted in response to the death of Freddie Gray in police custody: With 45 homicides in July, the city has seen more bloodshed in a single month than it has in 43 years.

Police reported three deaths — two men shot Thursday and one on Friday. The men died at local hospitals.

With their deaths, this year's homicides reached 189, far outpacing the 119 killings by July's end in 2014. Nonfatal shootings have soared to 366, compared to 200 by the same date last year. July's total was the worst since the city recorded 45 killings in August 1972, according to The Baltimore Sun.

The seemingly Sisyphean task of containing the city's violence prompted Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake to fire her police commissioner, Anthony Batts, on July 8. — The Associated Press

Hopes high wing flap will shed light on Flight 370 mystery

SAINT-ANDRE, Reunion — Under a microscope and expert eyes, the wing fragment that washed up on the beach of this volcanic island could yield clues not just to its path through the Indian Ocean, but also to what happened to the airplane it belonged to.

Analysts at the French aviation laboratory where the scrap was headed Friday can glean details from metal stress to see what caused the flap to break off, spot explosive or other chemical traces, and study the sea life that made its home on the wing to pinpoint where it came from.

French authorities have imposed extraordinary secrecy over the 6-foot long piece of wing, putting it under police protection in the hours before it left the island of Reunion. If the fragment is indeed part of the missing Malaysia Airlines Flight 370, it means the wreckage may have drifted thousands of miles across the Indian Ocean to this French island off the east coast of Africa.

Afghan government trying to create dissension in group The Associated Press

The new leader of the Afghan Taliban faces the twin challenges of bringing together an insurgency that he ran for years under another man's name and uniting a fractured movement that has seen fighters desert for more extreme groups such as the Islamic State. Meanwhile, the Afghan government believes it can seize on the Taliban leadership crisis it has created by announcing that Mullah Mohammad Omar has been dead for more than two years to further weaken the insurgency.

As Afghan officials quietly expressed optimism that peace will eventually prevail, the first fissures began appearing Friday in the Taliban's veneer, when Mullah Omar's son Yacoob said that he and other senior leaders rejected the manner and the result of the election for a new leader.

"The Afghan government is hoping that in dispelling the myth that Mullah Omar has been making the decisions all these years, that the Taliban will turn in on itself, eat its young and become an irrelevance," said a diplomat in Kabul.

Without Mullah Omar at the helm, officials and analysts said, the Taliban has lost its ability to compel members into obedience with the religious legitimacy he wielded as "Commander of the Faithful," who wore a cloak said to have belonged to the Prophet Muhammad.

"The Taliban movement is based on religious, Islamic principles, not on tribal and ethnic principles and as such the decisions of the ruling shuras (councils) should be accepted by all members" as religious edicts, said Wakil Ahmed Muttawhakil, who served as foreign minister in the Taliban's 1996-2001 administration.

For the past three years, the man just elected to replace Mullah Omar, Mullah Akhtar Mansoor, has purported to be speaking and acting in his name. He has entered into a peace process with Kabul, but he has also ordered battlefield commanders to intensify their war, now nearing its 14th year with the deaths of U.S. and other international forces and Afghan civilians in the tens of thousands. Taliban gunmen have believed themselves to be righteously fighting a jihad, or holy war.

"When Mullah Omar became the emir, there was a huge gathering in Kandahar, significantly inside Afghanistan, that gave him legitimacy in his claim to be the leader," said an Afghan official. "The leadership of the Afghan Taliban must be inside Afghanistan if they are to have the legitimacy of leadership. How can they claim to be the opposition to the Afghan government and to represent all factions of the organization when they are outside the country?"

Chicago poised to require breast-feeding rooms at airports

City Council members recommended Friday that lactation rooms be placed in every terminal at Chicago's two major airports, a move that one alderman said could help make it the nation's "most breast-feeding friendly" city.

The vote by the council's finance committee came after Chicago Aviation Commissioner Ginger Evans promised to install three lactation rooms at O'Hare International Airport by the end of the year, regardless of whether the ordinance passes. One such room already is in place at O'Hare and another at Midway International Airport.

A relative holds up a photo of a one-and-a-half year old boy, Ali Dawabsheh, in a house that had been torched in a suspected attack by Jewish settlers in Duma village near the West Bank city of Nablus, Friday. The boy died in the fire, his 4-year-old brother and parents were wounded, according to a Palestinian official from the Nablus area.

Suspected Jewish extremists burn Palestinian child to death

DUMA, West Bank — Suspected Jewish assailants set fire to a West Bank home on Friday and burned a sleeping Palestinian toddler to death in an attack that drew Palestinian rage and widespread Israeli condemnation. The attack, which threatens to set off another violent escalation, shines a light on the growing lawlessness of extremist Jewish settlers that Israel is either unable or unwilling to contain.

The extremists have for years staged attacks against Palestinian property, as well as mosques, churches, dovish Israeli groups and even Israeli military bases. The attacks, known as "price tags" because they exact a price for Israeli steps seen as favorable to the Palestinians, have stirred fear in Palestinians and frustration among critics who say Israel has not done enough to quell the assaults.

"This is a direct consequence of decades of impunity given by the Israeli government to settler terrorism," said Palestinian official Saeb Erekat. — The Associated Press

Clinton releases tax, health records on busy Friday

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton and her husband paid close to $44 million in federal taxes since 2007 and she is in "excellent physical condition" — two facts that emerged Friday in a flood of disclosures about the Democratic presidential candidate pushed out by her campaign on a busy summer day.

Within a three-hour period, the State Department made public more than 2,200 pages of emails sent from Clinton's personal account, her campaign released a letter from her personal doctor about her health and she unveiled eight years of tax returns.

The Clintons earned more than $139 million between 2007 and 2014, according to the returns, and made almost $15 million in charitable contributions — including a $3 million donation to their family foundation in 2014. Last year, they paid an overall federal tax rate of 35.7 percent.

The couple made nearly $23 million from speaking fees alone in 2013.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Bristow Marchant entered a not guilty plea for Dylann Roof, 21, who faces federal charges including hate crimes, weapons charges and obstructing the practice of religion.

Employee dorm fire kills 1, injures 4 in Grand Teton

A fire at an employee dormitory in Grand Teton National Park killed one person and injured four others in the third emergency for national park concession workers in Wyoming in the past two months.

The fire ignited at a twostory Grand Teton Lodge Co. dorm at Colter Bay, an area of lodging and restaurants on the eastern shore of Jackson Lake. A fire engine arrived within 10 minutes of the emergency call just after midnight Friday, according to park officials.

Resuscitation efforts on the man who died continued for almost an hour before he was declared dead at the scene.

Greece's stock market to reopen Monday

Greece's government announced that the Athens Stock Exchange will reopen Monday, a big step toward normalcy as talks with international creditors shifted into high gear.

The exchange has been closed since June 29, when the government imposed capital controls to prevent a banking collapse.

Finance Minister Euclid Tsakalotos signed the order Friday that also includes restrictions for Greece-based traders for an unspecified time period. A 60 euro limit on cash machines withdrawal will remain in place.

Zimbabwe: Lion killer's extradition being sought

Zimbabwe intends to seek the extradition of an American dentist who killed a lion that was lured out of a national park and shot with a bow and a gun, and the process has already begun, a Cabinet minister said Friday.

"Unfortunately it was too late to apprehend the foreign poacher as he had already absconded to his country of origin," Oppah Muchinguri, Zimbabwe's environment, water and climate minister, told a news conference. "We are appealing to the responsible authorities for his extradition to Zimbabwe so that he be made accountable."

and our dire predictions turn out not to be the case, people lose confidence in public health.'

'Once we cry wolf,

AARON KING University of Michigan researcher

Martin Meltzer stands in his office at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta. Meltzer has made predictions on pandemic flu, smallpox and other contagious diseases. Experts call the work "modeling." Only a few hundred U.S. scientists do this kind of work seriously, and many of them regard Meltzer as the most famous, and infamous, disease modeler at the CDC.

Is CDC modeler more alarmist than accurate?

Controversy swirls around predictions of disease outbreaks

BY MIKE STOBBE The Associated Press

ast fall, when Martin Meltzer calculated 1.4 million people might contract Ebola in West Africa, the world paid attention.

This was, he said, a worst-case scenario. But Meltzer is the most famous disease modeler for the nation's pre-eminent public health agency, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. His estimate was promoted at high-level international meetings. It rallied nations to step up their efforts to Johnson was listening to an economist talk about the uncertainty in his forecast and the reason a range of estimates made more sense than one specific figure. Johnson was unconvinced.

"Ranges are for cattle," Johnson said, according to legend. "Give me a number."

Meltzer does not shy away from providing a number.

'Fog of war' aspect

What Meltzer does is not particularly glamorous. He and others use mathematical calculations to try to provide a more precise picture of a certain situation, or to predict how the situation will change. They write equations on chalkboards, have small meetings to debate which data to use, and sit at computers. Meltzer spends a lot of time with Excel spreadsheets.

But modelers have become

In 2014, when Martin Meltzer calculated 1.4 million people might contract Ebola in West Africa, the world paid attention. This was, he said, a worst-case scenario. His estimate proved to be 65 times worse than what happened. He dismisses his peers' more complicated calculations as out of touch with political necessities.

mates were a worst-case scenario and probably wouldn't come true, he said. But "I don't think it's possible to have exaggerated the risk the world faced in the fall."

The Associated Press

Columbia University's Jeffrey Shaman, a modeling leader, echoed the perception that existed when Meltzer was given his assignment. As far as Ebola epidemics go, "we'd never seen anything like this before. This thing looked like AIDS on steroids," he said.

Initial interest in animals

Meltzer was born in 1958 in Southern Rhodesia, a British colony in Africa — a white. Jewish boy growing up in a privileged enclave in a country that was 99 percent black. Drafted into the military at 18, he went on reconnaissance missions in the Zambezi valley during the later stages of a led to 1980 elect that brought independence and created the nation of Zimbabwe. His early scientific interest was in the health of animals, not humans. He earned a degree in agricultural economics in Zimbabwe, then wrote a doctoral dissertation at Cornell University on control of tick-borne diseases in African livestock. He was working on animal diseases at the University of Florida when some work on rabies brought him to the attention of the CDC, which was recruiting economists to develop numbers for policy discussions. He joined the agency in 1995, when disease modelers still were a tiny group on the margins of public health. "At the time I came on, hardly anyone at CDC did modeling,' said Anne Haddix, who joined the agency in 1992, and became Meltzer's mentor. Three factors were prodding more infectious disease modeling in the United States:

fight the disease. But the estimate proved to be off. Way, way off. Like, 65 times worse than what ended up happening. Some were not surprised. Meltzer has a lot of critics who say he and his CDC colleagues have a habit of willfully ignoring the complexities of disease outbreaks, resulting in estimates that overdramatize how bad an outbreak could get — estimates that may be skewed by politics. They say Meltzer and company also overestimate how much vaccine is needed and how beneficial it has been.

Overblown estimates can result in unnecessary government spending, they say, and may further erode trust in an agency that recently has seen its sterling reputation decline.

"Once we cry wolf, and our dire predictions turn out not to be the case, people lose confidence in public health," said Aaron King, a University of Michigan researcher who in a recent journal article took Meltzer and others to task for making what he called avoidable mistakes.

Meltzer, 56, is unbowed. "I am not sorry," he said.

He dismisses his peers' more complicated calculations as out of touch with political necessities, telling a story about President Lyndon Johnson in the 1960s. critical in the world of infectious diseases.

Epidemics often have a "fog of war" aspect to them, in which it's not clear exactly what just happened or what's about to happen next. That's true both of common infections and rare ones.

Take flu, for example.

Each winter, flu is so common it's impossible to test and confirm every illness. It's also difficult to determine every flu-related death — it's often not clear flu was responsible for the demise of everyone who had flu-like symptoms when they died. So, when the CDC cites an average of 24,000 flu-related deaths in the U.S. each year, that comes from modeling, not an actual count.

Ebola is another example. CDC leaders came to Meltzer early last August, when the epidemic was spiraling out of control and international health officials were quickly trying to build a response. Meltzer was asked to project how bad things could get if nothing was done, as well as to estimate how stepped-up aid could bend the curve of the epidemic.

Meltzer and his colleagues created a spreadsheet tool that projected uninterrupted exponential growth in two countries, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

His prediction — published last September — warned that West Africa could be on track to see 500,000 to 1.4 million Ebola cases within a few months if the world sat on its hands and let the epidemic blaze.

About 21,000 cases materialized by mid-January — a terrible toll, to be sure, but also just a tiny fraction of the caseload Meltzer and his CDC colleagues warned about. Today, the epidemic is considered to be on its last legs.

No modeler claims to be 100 percent correct. Indeed, modelers have a saying: "All models are wrong, but some are useful."

They mean that a model's mathematics can be correct, but the resulting predictions still can prove to be terrible if the wrong kinds of data are used or key assumptions are off. Unexpected intangibles, such as a change in the weather, also can mess things up. (Of course, the math also can be wrong — as in a ballyhooed 2004 CDC estimate of how many Americans die annually from obesity. It later proved to be over-inflated, with officials blaming a computational error.)

During last year's Ebola crisis, the World Health Organization made its own set of projections for the epidemic's course, released at about the same time as the CDC's. But the WHO chose to project cases only as far out as early November, saying 21,000 people could be infected in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone by then.

The Associated Press

Also, the WHO decided not to make a key assumption Meltzer did — that Ebola cases were being underreported by a factor of 2.5.

Did Meltzer blow it? Many say no. He and his colleagues clearly stated they were providing a worst-case scenario of how bad things could get. They also predicted a far lower number of cases if more help was sent — which already was happening when the model estimates were released.

But the worst-case figures got the most attention. The media focused on them in headlines. Health officials highlighted them in their push to get more money and manpower devoted to the epidemic. And interestingly, those are the numbers health officials describe as the most successful part of Meltzer's prediction paper.

"I think it galvanized countries — and people — to put in more effort" into fighting the epidemic, said Dr. Keiji Fukuda, formerly a colleague of Meltzer's at CDC who now is assistant director-general of the World Health Organization.

Dr. Tom Frieden, the CDC's director, said the estimates were helpful in those difficult days of pushing for more action. But he disagrees with contentions that the agency was crying wolf. The agency was clear that the esti• Advances in computers and mathematics enabled modelers to do increasingly sophisticated work.

• British scientists successfully used models to guide government decision making. Most notably, modelers influenced how the United Kingdom handled a devastating 2001 epidemic of foot-and-mouth disease in animals.

Eight-month-old Denise Mitchell, who is known to the YWCA staff as Cupcake, naps on Wednesday afternoon at the day care facility in Kankakee. Changes to the income guidelines of the state's Child Care Assistance Program could make about 90 percent of the families who use the services offered at the YWCA ineligible for the program.

Child care change counterproductive

It encourages working poor to quit jobs

"Give a hand up, not a handout" is a common remark among proponents of workfare or other welfare-to-work systems.

And while it might be overly simplistic, it also makes sense. If you put a poor person in a position to improve their life, you have given them a chance to break the cycle of poverty and become a productive member of society.

That's why the decision to revise the standards of the Child Care Assistance Program offered by the state of Illinois is troubling. On July 1, the administration of Gov. Bruce Rauner changed the threshold of how much working parents could make to qualify for subsidized day care.

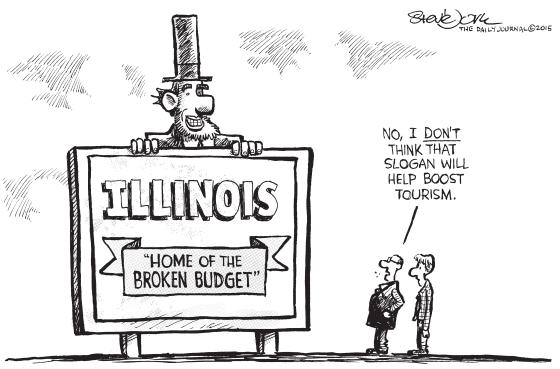

Previously, a single parent with one child could earn $2,546 per month and qualify for day care assistance. That figure now has been reduced to $664 per month, a whopping decrease of more than 70 percent.

What does this mean? Take the situation at the YWCA in Kankakee as an example. It currently provides day care services for 130 local families. These families have to requalify for the program every six months, and YWCA Executive Director Sandra Knight estimates about 90 percent of these families won't requalify under the new requirements.

That will leave them with a difficult choice. Day care is not cheap, and if left to pay for it entirely through their limited income, they might decide to do what Knight predicts could happen.

Rauner inherited a financial mess when he was elected governor. One of the primary attractions for the voters who elected him was his vow to do something about it.

Now, he's trying to accomplish that through his turnaround agenda, and while he has been criticized for the stubbornness he has displayed from Democrats who oppose the deep cuts he proposes and have not approved a budget because of it, his determination to stay the course is worth at least a bit of respect, even if it is the begrudging kind.

But it's hard to admire this move. It does more to preserve the system that helped create the crisis than it does to change it.

Predict: Meltzer's models are more easily understood and modified than the sophisticated models of his peers

The epidemic was tamed by the end of that summer, after the slaughter of millions of animals.

• In the aftermath of 9/11, government officials pushed for greater preparations against bioterrorism and disease disasters, and needed to know how much money they needed to budget.

Haddix and Meltzer helped establish a corps of dozens of economists at the CDC who performed such tasks as assessing the effect and cost of prevention programs. Their work became crucial when agency officials went to Congress for funding. The economists also were the ones who ended up doing the bulk of the agency's disease modeling work.

Some of Meltzer's peers build sophisticated models that have been likened to jet aircraft, sometimes requiring a large team of experts to create them and keep them running. Those are known as stochastic models that focus on the effects of chance and other potential factors, and emphasize the range of possibilities. Most stochastic modeling work is done at universities.

Meltzer's models are more like a bicycle; much more easily understood and modified. Deterministic, they're called. They more simply describe what might happen in a population given general trends. Meltzer says he uses these models because that's what plays well with policymakers — they are easy to explain, can be quickly altered to respond to a new question and can spit out simple answers quickly.

Within CDC, he's been lauded for his work. One Meltzer project was the creation of free software — called FluAid — that gave local health officials an idea how pandemic flu might affect different geographic areas. He's been praised for co-creating a model that helped CDC officials make the case for dropping a long-standing federal restriction that prevented HIVinfected foreigners from staying and working in the United States. The restriction was dropped in 2010.

In 2011, Meltzer discovered an error in CDC estimates of how many illnesses, hospitalizations and deaths were prevented during the 2009 flu pandemic through use of vaccines and medications. He initiated a published correction.

But some of his work has drawn ridicule. In 2001, shortly after the nation endured a series of anthrax attacks, Meltzer coauthored a paper that forecast a global smallpox epidemic could reach 77 trillion cases within a year if there were no intervention and an unlimited supply of smallpox-susceptible people. He included the number, he said, to give people an idea just how dramatically cases could escalate if unchecked by public health measures.

Some viewed that number as nonsensical, given the Earth had only about 6 billion inhabitants.

"Every now and again, Dr. Meltzer loses control of his computer," said Dr. Donald A. Henderson, a revered public health expert who led a global smallpox eradication effort in the 1970s.

Modelers like lightning rods

There is no doubt some envy among modelers for the influence Meltzer holds. Modeling-produced numbers become valuable currency in debates about what public health measures to take and what programs to fund; they can drive policy decisions.

Many modelers go into the field because "it has real implications you can see in your lifetime," said Irene Eckstrand, who, until last year, was scientific director of a government-funded modelers network called MIDAS — Models of Infectious Disease Agent Study.

CDC is supposed to prepare America for the worst, so it makes sense for CDC modelers to explore extreme scenarios. If Meltzer's estimates push policymakers to bolster public health defenses, it's all to the greater good, they say.

"The primary purpose of these models is to say why we need to take action," said Glen Nowak, a former CDC director of media relations who now heads the University of Georgia's Center for Health and Risk Communication.

But there are those who feel that the result corrupts both science and politics.

"Public health officials are well aware that their statistics get used — and misused — to justify an increase in their funding" or to bolster vaccination campaigns and other efforts, said Peter Doshi, an assistant professor at the University of Maryland School of Pharmacy and an associate editor of BMJ, the British medical journal.

Modeling — so poorly understood by the public, the media and even many people in public health — provides an opportunity to bend numbers to support goals, he argued.

"This is an area again where the CDC is free to produce numbers and nobody can really say they're right or wrong. You can say 'well, they don't seem plausible," but then it just looks like some experts are arguing over whose model is better, he said.

Said David Ozonoff, a Boston University environmental health professor who formerly — under the pseudonym Revere — wrote a blog on public health policy and science called "Effect Measure" that was closely read by CDC employees: "The way risk assessment is done in this country is the policymakers shoot the arrow and the risk assessors paint a target around it. There's a flavor of this with modeling, too. If you say the purpose [of a modeling estimate] is motivational, that's another way of saying it's not scientific."

Some say more of a separation between CDC administrators and the modelers might engender more trust in the numbers the agency uses. Perhaps an outside agency — an NIH institute on public health, if one ever were created — could do the modeling and report their findings to CDC, said Lone Simonsen, a research professor at George Washington University who formerly worked at the CDC and at the National Institutes of Health.

More immediately, CDC could increase its collaboration with top academic modelers, she added.

Meltzer is wary of proposals for greater collaboration or reliance on non-agency modelers. And more sophisticated models do not interest him.

"Accuracy for the sake of accuracy is merely interesting," he said. "And interesting is not good enough."

As long as Rish lives, so will her murder case

And chances are she eventually will be set free

Despite the need for finality of judgments and events in people's lives, murder cases never end when the incarcerated convicted defendant stays alive.

ays alive. The pursuit for freedom with petitions for clemency and post-trial motions is never ending. As I'll explain, in many respects it's also never-ending for families and friends of the victim. There are many examples of this nationwide. One is the Michael Skakel case in Connecticut. Skakel was convicted in 2002 of a murder that occurred in 1975. After serving 11 years in prison, he was granted a new trial on a post trial motion on the basis of incompetent counsel. That case is now up on appeal.

Meanwhile, here at the Kankakee County Courthouse, the Nancy Rish murder case with another posttrial motion is again playing out. Rish, along with Danny Edwards, was convicted for the 1987 murder of Steve Small. Here I detail some of the known facts.

The kidnapping

On Sept. 2, 1987, a Wednesday, in the early morning hours, Steve Small age 40, the great grandson of a former governor, was lured out of his home on Cobb Boulevard, Kankakee, by someone claiming to be a police officer. This person informed Steve that a burglary had occurred at the Bradley House, a battered Frank Lloyd Wright home a few blocks away from his residence which Steve was restoring.

After Steve left his home he was accosted, kidnapped, buried alive handcuffed inside an underground wooden box and held for $1 million in cash ransom.

I learned about this abduction about 20 hours after the event, roused from bed by a phone call about a kidnapping from an FBI agent (a friend). I hurried down to the police station where we discussed Steve's contacts, acquaintances and possible suspects. Here, I should wedge in that my wife and I were close friends with Steve and Nancy, his wife, having spent considerable social time with both of them both in Kankakee and Michigan. I am the godfather of one of their twin boys, who in 1987, were 10 years old.

So began three days of vigil with Steve's family and friends filled with frustration, anxiety and anguish for Steve's welfare, punctuated by moments of encouragement and optimism that somehow in the end all would turn out OK. The odds favored a victim coming out unscathed and for the first 48 hours there was considerable hope.

After a few fruitless phone calls to Nancy from the kidnappers (here I use the plural for it was felt that more than one person was involved), no further word was received. Within days there was heavy surveillance on a suspect. Late Friday, aerial surveillance located Steve's red Mercedes. The gravesite was located near the vehicle. The case was solved in less than one week.

On Saturday morning, I was out jogging in the neighborhood. As I returned, I saw my wife in the driveway crying. I knew then that the worst had happened.

Steve was found suffocated, buried in a box beneath 5 feet of dirt. In the box was a jug of water. The only air tube was a $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch pipe which extended 30 feet to slats in the box. There was no way anyone confined in that box could get enough air.

The coroner determined that Steve (a person who was claustrophobic and had trouble getting in elevators) probably was dead within a few hours.

Following this occurrence, restoration work at the Bradley House (a place everyone anticipated was going to be a work of art) was abandoned. Relationships among Steve and Nancy's friends changed and broke apart. Nancy and her three young boys moved out of state, as did Steve's older brother and sister. Fun times, holiday gatherings and dinners with the Smalls and a wide circle of friends ended. This was Labor Day weekend 1987, a time not forgotten when for many including myself, the music died.

Arrests, trials and appeals

The case was solved after the FBI and police were brought in. A trap and trace was placed on Nancy Small's telephone, which would allow police to obtain the location of any future caller. Later that evening of Sept. 2, another call was made to the Small residence, traced to an Aroma Park pay phone, where a white male was observed using the phone. Parked about 15 feet from the phone was a vehicle (revealed later to be registered to Rish) occupied by a white female, later identified as Rish.

Following this surveillance, the arrests of Edwards and Rish came quickly. Both were living together, with Rish's 9-year-old son, in Bourbonnais. A search warrant for the residence revealed incriminating evidence. On Friday, Sept. 4, both were taken into custody. Both denied any involvement with the kidnapping. After Steve's Mercedes was found, Edwards then led them to the scene of the crime where Steve's body was found.

The defendants were tried separately with jurors brought in from Rockford. The case against Edwards was a slam dunk. His defense was that he did not intend for Steve to die and that death was accidental. He was convicted of firstdegree murder and aggravated kidnapping. In a separate hearing thereafter, the jury deliberated for 11 minutes and sentenced Edwards to death. On Jan. 11, 2003, Gov. George Ryan commuted all death row sentences to life imprisonment.

Following the Edwards trial, Rish's trial proceeded. In many ways, it was a rehash of the Edwards case. Rish's defense was that she did not knowingly help or aid Edwards in the commission of the crime and that the evidence showed only that she was present when Edwards planned and carried out the kidnapping. There was no physical evidence linking Rish to the crime. However, after being taken into custody on Sept. 4, Rish over the next four days gave several statements to the police, which the prosecutor argued at the trial constituted lies and inconsistencies. If she was innocent, why lie to the police? Rish was found guilty in 90 minutes by a jury picked from residents living around Rockford. She was sentenced to life imprisonment. There was no local flavor in the decision makers and these jurors obviously were not satisfied in her disclaimer. Following her conviction, the case was reviewed by both the appellate and federal courts. Relief was denied. The Illinois Appellate

Court as to Rish said this:

"Perhaps the most telling evidence of all were the inconsistent statements given to the police after the defendant's arrest. The defendant's various versions about what she knew/ didn't know and what she and Edwards did during the early days of September 1987, damage her credibility and the jury properly could have concluded that her after-the-fact behavior amounted to an attempt to conceal the truth."

Both defendants remain incarcerated.

28 years later

On April 25, 2014, Rish filed with Gov. Pat Quinn and the Illinois Prisoner Review Board a petition for clemency. That petition included her affidavit claiming that at the time of the event both she and Edwards were cocaine addicts. Although she admitted helping Edwards in the Small kidnapping, she claimed she did so not knowing what he was doing. The petition also included the affidavit of Edwards who claimed that Nancy was not knowingly involved. He had a chance to say that as a witness in her trial 28 years ago but chose not to.

Edwards claims he is a changed man. "Instead of cocaine and crime, his life now centers on spirituality and salvation." He studies the Bible.

Claustrophobia-inducing prison cells festooned with few trimmings will do that to you. It's not like you march around to "jobs" at the facility during the day singing "hi ho." That coupled with 28 years, serious health issues and a jail sentence for life could probably induce anyone to talk, write and go public with other statements that he could have made at both trials.

With petitions for clemency all of this doesn't matter. The Illinois Prisoner Review Board, which makes recommendations on clemency petitions, is not going to retry cases. Nor are they going to pay attention to arguments as to one's supposed innocence. Rather they look at past criminal history, if any, the facts of the case, the conduct while incarcerated and review letters and comments from family and friends of both the victim and the defendant. On the basis of all of this, they then decide whether a defendant should be given clemency.

In January of this year, Rish's petition for clemency was denied.

With the main parties still breathing (except for possible trial witnesses), the case continues. A motion has been filed by Rish for a new trial. The original trial judge is not around, but fortunately a new experienced excellent trial judge will be called upon to decide whether looking at the affidavits and after hearing arguments, the hard substantive facts of the case have changed dramatically to a point that the entire case should start all over, even though one potential witness (attorney and former judge J. Scott Swaim) is dead and maybe even others.

After a person has had his day in court and has been fairly tried, there is always a proper reluctance to give the person a second trial. This is not a case of recantation, where the main prosecuting witness (as in a rape case) changes her story down the road and in consequence the incarcerated defendant seeks a new trial. Among other things, the court will have to decide after looking at the new material whether the remaining evidence alone is adequate to uphold the conviction.

All of this brings me back to the point of the beginning, namely that murder cases, even though the event occurred 28 years ago, stay alive. The cases never breathe their last until the convicted murderer or murderers are dead, and not even then. The pain and anguish of the family and friends of the deceased victim and the thoughts of what might have been perpetually exist. They get resurrected with petitions for clemency when they are called upon by the Prison Review Board to provide input. They are resurrected during holidays, birthdays, graduations and weddings for the surviving kids of the victim. They are resurrected when family and friends come together.

As an interested and arguably biased observer of this case for now close to 30 years, I anticipate that at some point down the road Nancy Rish will be granted her freedom. When it comes it will be (my view) on the basis of another petition for clemency. Once the question is again raised, the Prisoner Review Board and governor will decide what to do. Too bad Steve is not around to answer that question.

TETON VILLAGE, WY — The middle of summer looked like the middle of winter in the mountains of western Wyoming.

A cold front that moved through Monday afternoon dumped heavy rain on the valleys and snow above 9,000 feet.

Officials at Jackson Hole Mountain Resort say they saw the storm coming and shut down their tram before it hit. Resort spokeswoman Anna Olson she didn't hear of any problems from the snowy weather.

She says an inch accumulated at most, but some stuck around until Tuesday.

Photos of the snow posted by the resort on Facebook triggered excitement among skiers — with four months to go yet until ski season.

Olson says snow in July isn't unheard of but she hasn't seen it for several years.

CONCORD, NH — A 6-month-old New Hampshire boy has become the first child to get a newborn hunting and fishing license in the state.

Daylen Brickley's grandfather read about the state program in a hunting and fishing magazine. The family from Milford bought the license July 23, the first day it was available.

New Hampshire Fish and Game officials are offering a lifetime, combined hunting and fishing license that can be purchased for those under a year old.

Daylen will be able to redeem his fishing license when he turns 16 and redeem his hunting license after he completes the state's hunter education course.

The lifetime license costs $300 plus a fee of $4.50. A seasonal fishing and hunting license costs $46 per year.

DELAWARE, OH — An Ohio man who jumped a fence to pet cougars at the Columbus zoo and posted video on YouTube says he jokingly said "Here, kitty" and moved closer when the animals seemed to respond.

in the U.S.

Thirty-five-year-old Joshua Newell of suburban Gahanna pleaded no contest to a misdemeanor criminal trespassing charge Wednesday and was found guilty and fined $200.

Video posted last week showed an outer fence being jumped, then two cougars being petted through another fence as someone says, "Kitty, kitty, kitty."

Newell said the encounter lasted several minutes. He says he may have acted like an idiot but also questions the ease of access to the cats.

Columbus Zoo and Aquarium officials say safety and animal welfare are top priorities, but they'd prefer not to change the exhibit.

PAWTUCKET, RI — "Have you found Jesus?" That's what employees at a Rhode Island soup kitchen are asking after a religious statue disappeared from the kitchen's garden.

Pawtucket Soup Kitchen Director Adrienne Marchetti says on Wednesday that she last saw the statue, which depicts Joseph carrying the baby Jesus, on July 20.

Marchetti says the kitchen staff will take back the statue, no questions asked, and even offer a free meal to the person who returns it.

Marchetti says the 3-foot statue is made of plaster or a similar material and is not valuable.

She says the statue inspires the volunteers at the kitchen and brings "good mojo" to the garden where it has sat for 6 years.

Marchetti says it's possible someone took it to repair Joseph's head, which was coming loose.

How could 'Watchman' have come first? New Lee book a departure from 'Mockingbird'

Ever since I read "To Kill a Mockingbird," I admired the courage and professionalism of the main character, Atticus Finch.

Finch was a Southern gentleman lawyer who risked his place in polite society by representing a black defendant accused of rape of a white woman. I wrote an article years ago similar case of mine (although my case was for murder) and received a rather scathing letter from the family of the deceased white farmer. I was told

DENNIS MAREK I was no Atticus COLUMNIST Finch.

I longed for another book by its author, Harper Lee, but none was forthcoming. She had quit writing or had at least quit publishing. The years went by. Then word came out that she had written another book, "Go Set a Watchman." For my birthday, in February, I was given a copy, but it would not be released until July 2015.

I waited patiently. There were a plethora of really good books being written. Then a mystery arose about this latest book. Some contend it was written before Mockingbird, but others believe it was written later but kept private by Lee.

Last week, my copy came in the mail. I attacked it, reading it in only a few days. When I finished, I was somewhat depressed, confused and in wonderment of what Ms. Lee was saying this time. I had to give it some deep thought and read some other opinions on this "newest" novel.

The second book takes place with the same characters and location as the first novel, only almost 20 years later. Atticus now is 72 (my age!), arthritic, but still practicing law. Scout, the 8 yearold tomboy, is 26 and has moved to New York. Her brother, Jem, has died of a condition similar to that which had taken Scout's mother's life.

But the scene has changed dramatically. Atticus had been the white gentleman with a clear position of opposing Southern racism. It appears that Atticus in the second book is more concerned about class and education rather than the color of one's skin. His purported color blindness in Mockingbird is seriously challenged in Watchman.

Scout comes home from New York to the idyllic small town of Maycomb, Ala. In only a few days, she finds a racist tract among her father's papers. She sneaks into the "black only" balcony of the local courthouse only to find her father chairing a local pro-segregation town meeting. An out-of-town racist demagogue is touting a new word about intermarriage he calls "mongrelization." Here is a group of men, the cream of the white community. sitting down with white racists. Scout becomes physically sick. She loves her father. She loves her South, but she is having an epiphany about the truth of Southern society and color.

This is the book cover for "Go Set A Watchman," a follow-up to Harper Lee's "To Kill A Mockingbird." The latter work depicts main character Atticus Finch as a champion of equality, but the former depicts him as a man with racist views.

I did not find "Go Set a Watchman" a particularly well-written book. I also seriously doubt it was written before Mockingbird. That would make no sense. In Mockingbird, Atticus is a subtle racist at best, a trait I did not find in my reading as a young man.

In Watchman, the racism is not subtle. The explanations for his actions by Atticus to Scout show the deep racist underpinnings of the South. The North has its share of racism, often by the distinction between upper and lower class, but the South leads the field in many ways. I cannot believe an author who penned Mockingbird could have previously penned Watchman. Mockingbird would have been a much different book if it had followed Watchman.

Scout, now called Jean Louise has escaped from the narrow views of her family in her travels north. She wanted to believe in the Mockingbird Atticus, but now sees his flaws upon her return. While she sees Atticus's limitations in thinking from a life in the South, she personally hopes to transcend those views.

When I was 15, my father and I were invited to Oxford, Miss., to hunt quail. It was 1958. We stayed in a local hotel, but spent time with a man, Jack, who knew a friend of my father. We were to hunt with Jack and use his bird dogs. Jack ran a bowling alley and also had large farm equipment he would use to harvest sharecroppers' grain when the weather turned bad and they couldn't get their crops out in time. I learned that, unfortunately, his prices were like juice interest to a loan shark.

One evening, after a day of hunting, the Northern boy asked Jack if any Negro had ever attended Ole Miss, the University in Oxford. Without a smile or a hint of mirth, Jack explained there had been one young man who tried to enroll, but any black man wanting to attend Ole Miss must have been crazy, and he was committed to a mental institution. Back home, I researched that statement and found it totally true. Within three years of that conversation, however, under Federal protection, James Meredith entered Ole Miss as a freshman.

I didn't want to find Atticus as a racist, but wanted to keep him as one of my lawyer heroes. That was undone by Harper Lee this time. She did uncover a South that openly supports equality and equal opportunity, but at the same time, persists in the task of keeping the Negro under the white man's control. I cannot say Watchman is a book that must be read. Its presales were an alltime world record, but the book makes one uncomfortable with its vivid reminder of race relations throughout America today. It does make it clear, whenever Ms. Lee wrote this book, that we sure weren't then, and aren't today, where we should be in true equality.

Pension payments albatross around state's neck

A local government official who is savvy about government budgets stopped me on the street the other day. Couldn't the present state budget impasse be solved, he asked, by simply cutting discretionary spending in the budget by $4 billion, to eliminate the gap between the budget passed by the year?

Democrats and

The short

answer is no, it

the revenue that will come in this

can't be. Otherwise, tight-fisted JIM NOWLAN Gov. Bruce Raun-COLUMNIST er simply would have imposed line-item and reduction vetoes totaling $4 billion on the enacted Democratic budget bills.

Some background. The annual state budget of $74 billion represents about $5,700 per person. Seems like we could find $4 billion to cut; after all, that only represents 5.4 percent of the total. This is where we tend to look for Half the budget is distributed to health care providers, social service agencies, schools and universities. Three million of our 13 million people receive health care through Medicaid. Two million school students and more than half a million public college and university students receive state support.

Thousands of mentally ill and disabled youngsters and adults are supported. More than 47,000 prison inmates are cared for (it only was 7,000 when I was a young legislator in 1970). Funding for our 16,000 miles of highways and other transportation services represents a surprisingly small, to me anyway, 7.8 percent of the total state budget.

Public safety and the courts, debt service and refunds represent another 12 percent of the budget, the latter two which must be paid.

Actually running our day-today state government and paying employees only takes 17.8 percent of our budget, or $13 billion. waste and corruption. As many readers know, annual pension payments of $8.2 billion, or 11 percent of the budget, represent the albatross around the state's neck

Most of this amount goes to shovel in money to make up for decades of underpayment by the state. The state Supreme Court has said we have no wiggle room to reduce these obligations, which will go into the future as far as the eye can see.

In contrast, neighboring Wisconsin has a pension system about the same size as our state systems, because smaller Wisconsin includes its local government employees. Wisconsin has, throughout history, fully funded its pensions, so its annual pavments to keep up to date only are $1 billion.

This means Illinois has about $7 billion in dead-weight payments that go to pay for the sins of our fathers and are not available for education, people services, parks, what have you shape, and we wouldn't need to talk about tax increases. We could fund education better.

So where can we cut? Well, we already have been cutting for a number of years now. Our budget problems are not new.

For example, in 1999, Illinois had 88,000 state employees (not including university faculty and staff); today, we have 64,000, a reduction of 26 percent in state jobs.

Since 2008, state expenditures other than for pensions and health care have been essentially flat, and inflation in that period has gone up 10 percent. Expenditures for children in the care of the state and for higher education have gone down, and would go down further in the Dems' budget.

(In my area, where I take my walks, the state historic site at Jubilee College near Peoria has been closed, and a nearby state park has blocked off big sections of scenic picnicking grounds, for lack of funds.)

What more can be done? I propose that the state Auditor General be empowered to audit the performance and efficiency of the thousands of private vendors that provide services to the state.

For example, the Chicago Tribune last year took a look at a number of state-funded private social service agencies and found they were paying salaries of as much as $350,000 to their top executives, more than twice as much as the state is paying to its own agency heads, the ones who let the contracts.

There always are places that cuts can be made in a sprawling operation such as a state government.

But not $4 billion worth of cuts, certainly not in the short term.

If only it weren't for the pension albatross.

Higher wages a surprising success

Seattle restaurant is a hit with patrons, staffers

BY GENE JOHNSON The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Menu prices are up 21 percent and you don't have to tip at Ivar's Salmon House on Seattle's Lake Union after the restaurant decided to institute the city's $15-an-hour minimum wage two years ahead of schedule.

It is staff, not diners, who feel the real difference, with wages as much as 60 percent higher than before. One waitress is saving for accounting classes and finding it easier to take weekend vacations, while another server is using the added pay to cover increased rent.

Seattle's law, adopted last year after a strong push from labor and grass-roots activists, bumped the city's minimum wage to $11 an hour beginning April 1, above Washington state's highest-in-the-nation $9.47. Scheduled increases that depend on business size and benefits will bring the minimum to $15 within four years for large businesses and seven years for smaller ones.

There's little data yet on how the law is working.

"To the extent that we can look at macro patterns, we're not seeing a problem," Seattle Mayor Ed Murray said.

As Washington, D.C., and other cities consider following Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles in phasing in a $15-an-hour minimum wage, Ivar's approach, adopted in April, offers lessons in how some businesses might adapt. Ivar's Seafood Restaurants President Bob Donegan decided to raise prices, tell customers that they don't need to tip and parcel the added revenue among the hourly staff.

For some of the restaurant's lesser-paid workers – including bussers and disnwasners — that's meant as much as 60 percent more. Revenue has soared, supportive customers are leaving additional tips even though they don't need to, and servers and bartenders are on pace to increase their annual pay by thousands, with wages for a few of the best compensated approaching $80,000 a year. "It's been a surprise," Donegan said. "The customers seem to like it, the employees seem to like it, and it seems to be working, at least in this location." Rochelle Hann, 25, is a second-generation worker at Ivar's. Like her mom, she has performed a variety of roles, including serving, bookkeeping and even dressing up as a giant clam. If she keeps working 30 hours a week, her annual pay will jump about $12,000 - money she's socking away for accounting classes at a community college.

After Seattle's new minimum wage law took effect last April 1, Ivar's Seafood Restaurants announced that it was jacking up its prices by about 21 percent, eliminating tipping as a routine procedure, and immediately paying all its hourly workers $15 per hour.

"Before, I felt like it was maybe not quite paycheck-to-paycheck, but now I don't even have to worry about it," she said. "I just went away for the weekend, and it was an easy expense.'

Brett Richards, a 50-year-old singer and guitarist, has worked 25 years in food service, including the past eight at Ivar's. Before, he made minimum wage, plus tips. Now, he gets $15 an hour, plus a share of the 21 percent menu price increase, plus any additional tips customers leave. He expects to make almost $7,000 more this year, money that's helping him with his increased rent and with taking his kids out to eat a little more often.

Tougher time for others

Other industries with minimum wage employees could have a tougher time as worker pay climbs.

In the restaurant industry, where many low-wage workers are employed, adapting could mean pooling tips among all workers, cutting shifts or relying on technology such as cellphone applications that let customers pay electronically, rather than having someone dedicated to running the cash register

"This last jump wasn't that far out of market, so it didn't require a lot of reworking of the financials," says Anthony Anton, president of the Washington Restaurant Association. "Those second and third jumps will be much bigger jumps. Everyone is talking about what to do.'

At Ivar's Salmon House, decorated with century-old, hand-carved canoes and tribal art, Donegan attributes at least some of his pay policy's success to Seattle's white-hot economy.

Looking out the broad windows of the dining room across Lake Union, diners can take in pleasure boats and kayaks cruising by, seaplanes landing, the Space Needle — and across the water, the ever-growing Amazon campus that has brought tens of thousands of workers to the city in the past few years. The restaurant's revenue is up 20 percent, said Donegan, who served on the mayoral committee that drafted the minimum wage law. A few other table-service restaurants have started following suit, and Donegan said he gets inquiries every day from owners wondering how Ivar's policy is working. But the approach is unlikely to be replicated among fast-food restaurants or others where servers make less in tips — even though New York City is making $15 an hour the minimum wage for fast-food chains.

"What we expect to observe is this is not going to be a policy that's universally good for everybody or bad for everybody,' said Jacob Vigdor, a University of Washington professor who is leading a study of Seattle's minimum wage law. The study includes recurring surveys of 700 Seattle businesses and ongoing interviews with about 50 lowwage workers and their families.

What will the market do when interest rates go up?

Dear Mr. Berko: I just retired at age 67, and my certified public accountant, who is a friend, insists that I hire a money manager to run my $680,000 individual retirement account. Do you have any idea how difficult it is to find a

what the Dow TAKING STOCK Jones industrial average will do when the Federal Reserve raises interest rates this year? With unemployment at 5.4 percent, which matches pre-Great Recession numbers. higher rates seem to be a certainty pretty soon. - GD,

Cleveland Dear GD: During the past dozen days, I've completed a proprietary, statistically skewed, unprofessional survey of 11 money managers, eight of whom have egos that would make Donald "Donboy" Trump blush. Most believe that when the Fed raises rates, the industrial and utility averages will fall like tears from a tall camel's eyes. And nine of those magnificent 11 believe that the Fed will raise rates too soon, causing the Dow to crash to the 15,000 level. However, two of them believe that the averages will rise when rates are increased. The following is an old adage I just made up: "The market will always do what it's expected to do but never do it when it's expected to." So it follows that because most folks expect the market to fall when the Fed increases rates. the Dow might actually rise when rates are increased. The two dissenters figure that the higher interest rates could allow the industrials to caress the 21,000 mark by 2016.

Let's look at the record, which is really kind of mixed. Researchers at Standard & Poor's looked all the way back to World War II and analyzed 16 previous ratetightening cycles. They discovered that 80 percent of the time, the Fed's move to raise rates led to stock market declines of at least 5 percent. However, a similar study by T. Rowe Price analyzed the question in a slightly different way and determined that in nine instances since 1954 when the Fed raised rates after a recession, the Dow Jones industrial average rose by an average of 14 percent a vear later. However, I can tell you with certainty that it will be a bumpy ride, and I hope the money manager you find has the proper shock absorbers in your portfolio.

I'm not so confident as most folks about the Fed and its influence on the economy. Milton Friedman, who was awarded the Nobel Prize in economics, was not a Fed aficionado. Friedman believed that the Fed does more harm than good and accused it of mismanagement and too frequently causing rough spots in the economy. Friedman said that after the Fed has reviewed its data, it acts either too soon or too late. And in today's theater, some Fed-watchers think Chairwoman Janet Yellen is repeating this mistake by relying on conflicting employment data. Yes, the unemployment rate is where it was just prior to the Great Recession.

DILBERT

And June was the third month in a row in which more than 93 million Americans 16 or older were unemployed. It's getting worse, worser and worserer! However, it seems that neither the Fed nor the Bureau of Labor Statistics considers 93 million unemployed an important number. Nor does the BLS notice the small fractures in the economy, such as Gap's laying off 255 people and the fact that Zoetis, Honeywell, Johnson Controls, Katy Industries, J. Crew, Symantec, PetSmart, The Hershey Co., eBay, Intel and Discover cashiered 165, 252, 310, 155, 175, 170, 422, 300, 286, 349 and 502 employees, respectively, just last quarter. And increasing the fracture of last quarter, JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, Viacom, IBM, Merck & Co., Hewlett-Packard, Pfizer et al. laid off tens of thousands, and A&P declared bankruptcy. If rates rise, unemployment numbers might crush the averages.

Yes, I know how difficult it is to find a money manager to trust — one who explains things clearly and is knowledgeable, wise, caring and experienced. Unfortunately, the professionals I know in Cleveland have closed their practices or raised their minimum account sizes, so I can't help you. Certainly, your CPA friend should be able to help you find the right manager.

Less Soda for You, More Money for Coke

Coca-Cola's sales were down last quarter. Its profits were way up. The reason, in part, was that consumers were willing to pay more, per ounce, for soda served in a smaller package than they would pay for soda served in a 12-ounce can or a two-liter bottle. Coca-Cola's earnings jumped 19 percent in the quarter to $3.1 billion, from $2.6 billion in the same period last year. Sales declined 3 percent, to $12.2 billion, from $12.6 billion a year ago. The company attributed its higher profits partly to small and "specialty" packages like eightounce cans and glass "contour" bottles.

Swindlers Target Older Women

RETIRING

ELIZABETH OLSON

Victims are wooed online and defrauded out of their life's savings.

At first, the constant attention seemed sweet and very special.

Janet N. Cook, a church secretary in the Tidewater, Va., area, had been a widow for a decade when she joined an Internet dating site and was quickly overcome by a rush of emails, phone calls and plans for a face-to-face visit.

"I'm not stupid, but I was totally naïve," said Ms. Cook, now 76, who was swept off her feet starting in July 2011 by attention from a man who called himself Kelvin Wells and described himself as a middle-aged German businessman looking for someone "confident" and "outspoken" to travel with him to places like Italy, his "dream destination." But very soon he began describing various troubles, including being hospitalized in Ghana, where he had gone on business, and asking Ms. Cook to bail him out - again and again. In all, she sent him nearly $300,000, as he apparently followed a well-honed script that online criminals use to bilk members of dating sites out of tens of millions of dollars a vear. Many of those targeted are women, especially women in their 50s and 60s, often retired and living alone, who say that the email and phone wooing forms a bond that may not be physical but that is intense and enveloping. How many people are snared by Internet romance fraud is unclear, but between July 1 and Dec. 31, 2014, nearly 6,000 people registered complaints of such confidence fraud with losses of $82.3 million, according to the federal Internet Crime Complaint Center.

Older people are ideal targets because they often have accumulated savings over a lifetime, own their homes and are susceptible to being deceived by someone intent on fraud. Most victims say they are embarrassed to admit what happened, and they fear that revealing it will bring derision from their family and friends.

At first, Louise B. Brown, 68, a nurse in a pediatrician's office in Burlington, Vt., also hid the fact she had been defrauded online. She said she had tried several dating sites, including eHarmony.com, because, "After my husband died, I had no spouse to talk to."

Then in 2012, on Match.com, she met a man who called himself Thomas. He said he was a road contractor in Maine and was about to leave for a business venture in Malaysia.

Warning Signs

The Federal Bureau of Investigation's Internet Crime Complaint Center offers these warnings for avoiding online romance swindlers:

¶ Be cautious of people who claim that the romance is destiny or fate and that you are meant to be together.

¶ Beware if a person says they cannot live without you, but they need you to send money so they can visit you.

¶ Swindlers typically claim they are originally from the United States (or your region) but now are overseas.

Victims typically lose $40,000 to $100,000, said Wendy Morgan, chief of the Public Protection Division of the Vermont Attorney General's Office. The highest reported loss in the state was $213,000.

Victims who are looking for romance but find online criminals instead should alert authorities, he said. "It's imperative for someone who thinks they have been scammed to move quickly and notify the bank and law enforcement authorities," he said. Even so, he admitted, "The chances are not great of seeing that money again."

While some swindlers are local, others are part of international crime rings and are more difficult to track.

Despite warnings, the digital version of the romance con is now sufficiently widespread that AARP's Fraud Watch Network in June urged online dating sites to institute more safeguards to protect against such fraud, including using computer algorithms to detect suspicious language patterns, searching for fake profiles, alerting members who have been in contact with someone using a fake profile and providing more education so members are aware of romance cons. The AARP network recommends that from the beginning, dating site members use Google's "search by image" to see if the suitor's picture appears on other sites with different names. If an email from "a potential suitor seems suspicious, cut and paste it into Google and see if the words pop up on any romance scam sites," the network advised. The lure of romance swindlers can be hard to resist, said Ms. Brown, in Vermont. "It makes me sound so stupid, but he would be calling me in the evening and at night. It felt so real. We had plans to go to the Bahamas and to Bermuda together. "When I found out it was a scam, I felt so betrayed. I kept it secret from my family for two years, but it's an awful thing to carry around. But later I sent him a message and said I forgave him."

last year, the most since it began keeping track more than 40 years ago. It was the fourth year in a row that the museum had drawn more than six million visitors, keeping it in a rarefied group that includes the British Museum and National Gallery in London and the Louvre in Paris, the world's biggest draw with more than nine million in each of the last three years.

Disability Cutbacks

Eleven million people face a deep, abrupt cut in disability insurance benefits in late 2016 if Congress fails to replenish Social Security's disability trust fund, the Obama administration says. The trustees of Social Security say the disability trust fund would be depleted in the last quarter of 2016, after which benefits would automatically be cut by 19 percent.

"At first it made sense, but then he started asking me for money to cover expenses like work permits," she said. "Eventually, I sent $60,000."

After she ran through her savings, her suitor urged her to accept illegally obtained money from his friends, then forward the money to him, she testified before Vermont lawmakers this year at a hearing on Internet dating fraud. It was not until her credit union alerted her that she learned that "Thomas" was a swindler.

As a result of investigations into more than two dozen complaints by victims in the state, Vermont's Legislature is poised to pass a law requiring online dating sites to notify members quickly when there is suspicious activity on their accounts or when another member has been barred on suspicion of financial fraud

Swindlers can gain access to the lovelorn by hacking into a dormant dating profile and altering such information as age, gender and occupation, according to Vermont investigators. After contacting a possible victim, the swindler tries to avoid detection on the dating site by insisting that communications shift to email, telephone or instant message.

The website romancescams.org lists red flags to look for to identify such predators, who urgently appeal to victims for money to cover financial setbacks like unexpected fines, money lost to robbery or unpaid wages.

Law enforcement authorities say the swindlers follow a similar pattern. "They get the victim to trust them, then create a sense or urgency and prey on the trust they've created," said David Farquhar of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's financial crimes section.

When Impact Investing Stays Local

WEALTH

PAUL SULLIVAN

By the mid-1990s, the Houghton family, whose wealth is derived from the glass and ceramic material manufacturer Corning, was into its sixth generation. Many of the cousins felt they were drifting away from the family.

An adviser suggested that they come together around philanthropy, specifically giving money to organizations around Corning, N.Y., the place that helped their family become wealthy. The cousins embraced the idea, said James D. Houghton. And they focused what would become known as the Triangle Fund on family, community and schools to help children in the three struggling counties around Corning.

'It's giving to these rural organizations where the funding is limited," Mr. Houghton said. "It's not about replicability or getting Gates Foundation money. It's about helping these kids and providing a hot meal."

The Houghtons are not the only wealthy family giving back to the places that gave to them. In doing so, they are purposely eschewing the global search for the best and most effective use of their philanthropic dollars, a quest that drives many philanthropists today.

Many are engaging in the same type of impact investing - meaning that they measure what their dollars accomplish - that is at the heart of much global giving.

The Russell family is taking a similar path, giving to the Puget Sound area around Tacoma, Wash. In 2000, the family sold the Frank Russell Company, an investment management company and creator of market indexes, and set up the Russell Family Foundation.

Families give back to the areas where they earned their wealth.

It decided to focus its giving on two areas: environmental sustainability and the waters of Puget Sound, and grass-roots leadership in Pierce County, where the family business was located.

"The kinds of impact they can enact - they can see and touch it," said Richard Woo, chief executive of the Russell Family Foundation.

George Russell, whose grandfather founded the company, has made grants to a third area of interest to him — global peace — but had pulled back in recent years.

"He's realized there is work down the street that's just as meaningful as some of the global work he did," Mr. Woo said.

When Tom Stoner, who made fortunes in radio and then cellular towers, started the TKF Foundation with his wife, Kitty, they were focused on building urban gardens in Baltimore, Washington and Annapolis, Md., where most of their businesses had been

At first, his friends didn't know what to make of it, he said. "Some people said, 'People are starving why don't you give money to help people in the food banks?'" Mr. Stoner said. "We didn't say this to our friends, but we thought people have spiritual needs as well."

Two decades later, their foundation's Open Spaces, Sacred Places initiative has made 130 grants to gardens, from a small one close to where riots occurred in Baltimore in the spring to a quarter-acre space where the city's baseball and football stadium once stood.

Each urban garden is conceived as a meditative space, not a playground. To test their theory about the effect of open space on people, the Stoners have journals placed on an unusual bench made of wood from pickle barrels. They've collected 25,000 journal entries over the years.

"You go into Baltimore and see the rowhouses, and we thought, how do these people get the nurturing that greening did in our lives when we were younger?" Mr. Stoner said. "We wondered, Is it possible to create green spaces in these three cities that would have a social effect on people?'

Now, at 80, Mr. Stoner said he and his wife have planned a capstone project: building eight gardens around the country and hiring researchers to test their hypothesis on the effect of nature on people in cities. "There's an end to everything. We wanted to give some sort of statistical and analytical research basis to the project," he said.

For other families interested in giving locally, Robert C. Elliott of the Houghton family's Market Street Trust Company, says he recommends that they make sure they poll family members before suggesting a strategy, to get everyone on board.

"People do get a sense of pride that they can help the local community, particularly when it isn't vibrant and successful," he said.

And that, in turn, may keep the generations together.

Betting on Active Exchange-Traded Funds

JOHN F. WASIK

With the growing popularity of exchange-traded funds, the industry is churning out new products aimed at investors' needs, fears and greed. Actively traded E.T.F.s have yet to lure mainstream investors, who cling to passive funds that mirror indexes that are benchmarks for stocks and other investments.

Unlike their passive cousins, active E.T.F.s feature a hands-on manager who can make daily decisions on how to best invest. Of the 10 largest funds in this category, six manage bond portfolios.

To date, this approach has had little appeal. Slightly more than $20 billion is spread across 133 active exchange-traded funds, according to Morningstar. That is about 1 percent of the total market for E.T.F.s. The largest active fund is the Pimco Enhanced Short Maturity Active E.T.F. (MINT), with about $3.5 billion in assets. That's small compared to its flagship sister Pimco Total Return Bond fund (Pttax), at more than $107 billion. One of the largest American stock exchange-traded funds is the SPDR S.&P. 500 index fund (SPY) with more than $180 billion.

The argument for active funds is that a dynamic manager can add value by moving in and out of investments. With bonds and stocks becoming skittish as the Federal Reserve talks of raising interest rates, managers may be able to provide an extra measure of flexibility that can dodge market downturns.

"Although cost is one of best determinants of success," says Robert exchange-traded Goldsborough, fund analyst for Morningstar, "good managers can add value."

Active managers may be able to dodge any market downturns.

Let's say you were concerned about rising interest rates, which generally drive down bond prices and hurt longer-maturity bonds the most. You may favor a bond fund that can search for yield while keeping market risk low. The Pimco Enhanced Fund holds corporate and Treasury bonds that mature in less than a year while yielding 0.72 percent. The fund charges 0.35 percent in annual expenses. If you want an ultrashort bond fund that will not feel much of a pinch when rates rise, this is a consideration.

Active funds may also invest in specialized niches or alternative strategies that are bypassed by larger index funds. The First Trust North American Energy Infrastructure fund (EMLP) invests in publicly traded energy companies and master limited partnerships, complicated vehicles known for their high yields and tax complexity. It yields 3 percent and returned nearly 24 percent last year compared with a broad-based energy stock bench-mark, which lost 18 percent. If you were looking for a specialized play on the companies benefiting from the shale oil and gas boom, this fund is worth considering.

Most funds cannot consistently beat their respective indexes over time. Over the five years through 2014, some 88 percent of large-stock funds failed to beat their benchmarks, according to S&P/ Dow Jones Indices. For long-maturity government bond funds, the record is worse: 95 percent of funds tracked by S&P/Dow Jones did not outpace their peer index over the last decade.

Costs are also a concern with active funds, since hands-on management always adds to total expenses. Of course, much of active investing is built on hope and the prospect that you can find a manager whose experience will help you beat the market in the future.

Ultimately, what will determine the success of active E.T.F.s is how they perform when the chips are down in losing markets. If they can outrun the bad times, they will gain attention.

Keys That Do More Than Start Car

TECHNOLOGY ERIC A. TAUB

Because of network issues, physical keys will be around for a while.

It's not fun getting into a car when the interior is 130 degrees, which is typical during the summer for those who live in Phoenix,. But Sean O'Gorman never needs to endure a furnacelike cabin. As an owner of a Tesla Model S, he opens an iPhone app a few minutes before he gets into the car and remotely starts his air-conditioner.

Mr. O'Gorman, 32, a software product manager, can also use the app to do things that previously only a physical key could do, and more: Start the engine, unlock the doors and monitor the battery.

Tesla is not alone in offering those sorts of options; BMW, General Motors and Volvo, among other manufacturers, offer apps that perform similar functions.

They are just the latest step in the evolution of the car key. Now key fobs, as they are known, include chips to prevent theft, cannot be duplicated at the local locksmith and often never have to be removed from pockets. But despite the advances, it will be a while, if ever, before smartphone apps entirely replace keys that drivers carry around. Too many problems exist like a slow data network — to rely on smartphones alone, experts say.

GOING DIGITAL Sean O'Gorman, with his Tesla, uses an app to do things remotely like turning on the air conditioning.

tion "is not a viable way forward," said David Green, market development director at Volvo.

Slow network traffic can cause the unlocking command to take up to a minute, Mr. Green said.

If a cellphone's battery dies, or there is no data signal available, the driver could be stranded. And then there's cost. Someone will have to pay for the data that transfers information from the smartphone to the car.

H.S.A.s Can Be Confusing

YOUR MONEY ANN CARRNS

Health savings accounts are becoming more prevalent, but it's not always easy for consumers to know what they can buy with funds from the accounts.

H.S.A.s are special tax-favored savings accounts that must be paired with a specific type of health insurance plan that meets certain criteria, including a high deductible. The accounts can be used to cover your plan's deductible, co-payments and treatments your plan doesn't cover, like dental care or acupuncture. Deposits are tax-free and withdrawals are, too, as long as the funds are spent on eligible medical expenses. Money in the account rolls over year to year. And H.S.A.s go with you if you get a new job.

At the end of 2014, there were nearly 14 million health savings accounts, a 29 percent increase over the year before, according a firm based in Minneapolis that tracks the accounts. The accounts now hold more than $24 billion.

While the tax advantages may be attractive, some rules about what products and services are eligible for purchase with H.S.A. Junus can be confusing. Under a change enacted with the Affordable Care Act, most over-the-counter drugs, like pain relievers, are H.S.A.-eligible only if you get a prescription for them. On the other hand, items like sunscreen and contact lens solution are eligible for purchase. It's important to know what is eligible and what's not, said Todd Berkley, a consultant who runs the "Ask-MrHSA" website. If you are buying eligible items anyway, he said, you can use your health savings account and get a tax benefit. But if you are using your account to buy items that are not, you may be subject to a 20 percent penalty. "H.S.A.s are individually owned accounts," Mr. Berkley said. "You've got to make sure you use them correctly." Mr. Berkley directs clients to a list on hsastore.com, an online store that aims simplify purchase decisions by offering only items that are H.S.A.-qualified. The site's offerings followed the lead of an industry group that maintains a list to help merchants determine which products meet rules set by the Internal Revenue Service. Items that are eligible without a prescription have a purple check mark. Items that require a prescription are accompanied by a blue "Rx" symbol.

"The physical key will be with us for years to come," said Mark Baker of ZF TRW, a manufacturer of automobile systems.

That's because customers are purchasing cars with so-called PEPS, or Passive Entry, Passive Start capabilities. Rather than needing to pull out a key from one's pocket or purse, the key sends a signal to the car that it's nearby, and the car creates a digital "handshake" with the authorized key. Touching the door's handle unlocks it, and the car is started by pushing a button.

"This type of key is a huge convenience for drivers," said Jeff J. Owens of Delphi, a supplier of automotive systems. "A watch or phone used instead must offer more than today's key."

In some ways, they offer less, by increasing the complexity of operating a vehicle. In Tesla's case, one needs to open the app and enter a PIN to start the car or unlock it.

Using the Internet to transfer vehicle starting or unlocking informa-

Using a smartphone as a virtual key also presents unsolved security and privacy concerns. Mr. O'Gorman has found a way to mitigate these problems: He still carries his kev.

In any event, keys will evolve, and smartphones will increasingly be part of the equation.

Hakan Kostepen of Panasonic Automotive Systems said he believes that keys will eventually carry a driver's information, so that preferences for seating position, radio stations and locations could be transferred from vehicle to vehicle.

Advanced digital keys whether a physical key or a smartphone app — could also be authorized for one-time use. Audi and Volvo are experimenting with systems that allow groceries and packages to be delivered to the trunks of cars, with the owner notified.

"Ninety-five percent of the time, a car sits there doing nothing," Mr. Green said. "There are huge possibilities when keys are digital."

Ignore Market's Noise and Stick to Investing Plan

SKETCH GUY CARL RICHARDS

What happens when we're driving and we reach a red light? We stop, right? When the light turns green, we hit the gas. If we don't, it doesn't take long for the driver behind us to start honking the horn. Anyone who has survived driver's education knows we're inclined to connect certain behavior with red and green lights. In fact, sometimes we forget to consider whether the signal truly requires us to act or has somehow managed to confuse us.

For instance, the light may be green, but what if a crazy pedestrian crosses the street in front of us? We don't keep going. We stop, wait for that person to reach the other side of the road, and then go.

So the real signal to go isn't the "noise" of the green light. We need the signal of an empty road in front of us and a green light. Now, consider the stock market's signals and noises. Its performance gets measured every moment of every day, down to a tenth of a point. That's a lot of noise, and we often confuse it for a signal. The most common example has to be down days versus up days. If the market goes up, the nonrational part of our brain hears the noise of that higher number and thinks, "Oh, that's a signal to buy." If the market goes down, that same area urges us to "Sell, sell, sell."

But what if we didn't do anything? Or, what if we at least didn't do anything that wasn't based on a plan? What if we ignored the noise and instead focused on signals that relate to us personally?

Of course, if you don't have a simple financial plan guiding your overall strategy, this experiment will prove a little tricky. For now, though, let's assume you do have one. Let's say it's built on the weighty evidence of history, your goals and your values. What signals does your plan tell you actually matter? I'm betting it's not the daily movement of the markets.

In my experience, a well-designed plan relies on two signals. First, there would need to be a change in goals or values before you bought or sold stock. Second, there might be a change that you had actuallv scheduled, like selling stocks and buying bonds when stocks have gone up. In both instances, how the markets are moving and what the talking heads are reporting are not signals to act. Instead, you're weighing what you said you wanted to happen five years ago with what you want to have happen right now or five years from now.

As part of your investment strategy, did you decide to keep your portfolio divided 70/30 be-portfolio value now measures closer to a 65/35 split, that's a signal to re-

These signals are personal. They're based on what's happening to you, not what's happening in China or Greece. But we've grown used to the idea that when markets move, they're a signal for us to move, too. In most cases, we're better off ignoring the noise and doing the exact opposite.

Q&A

¶ How much can I contribute to a health savings account?

For 2015, the maximum contribution for individuals is $3,350, while the limit for families is $6,650. Recent research from financial site HelloWallet, however, found that just 5 percent of account holders contribute the maximum allowed by the I.R.S.

¶ Can health savings accounts be used to pay for health insurance premiums?

Generally, no - although there are exceptions, including premiums for long-term care insurance and for health insurance premiums paid while you are receiving unemployment benefits.

¶ How do I obtain a prescription for an over-the-counter drug?

Explain your situation to your doctor and request a prescription, Mr. Berkley suggests.

The Bears were looking to add another explosive receiver for quarterback Jay Cutler when they inked Eddie Royal to a three-year deal back in March.

Royal showed exactly why general manager Ryan Pace targeted him in free agency during Friday's practice at Olivet Nazarene University.

The 29-year-old veteran hauled in the best catch of camp thus far when he vaulted over Tim Jennings to bring a 40-yard reception from Cutler down the right sideline.

Royal had the best season of his career back in 2008 with Cutler in Denver. He recorded 91 receptions for 980 yards that season before the Broncos traded Cutler to Chicago during the offseason.

Royal spent the next three seasons in Denver, where he amassed 115 total receptions during that span. The 5-foot-10-inch receiver spent 2012-2014 in San Diego and is coming off his most productive season since 2008 with 62 catches and a career-high seven touchdowns.

Ideally, Royal would step into the slot position for the Bears with Alshon Jeffery and rookie Kevin White out wide; though, he could see action on the edge if White struggles early in the season. After Friday's practice, coach John Fox discussed why Royal was the right fit for this team.

"We had him in Denver and

The Daily Journal/Mike Voss Cornerback Tim Jennings returned to training camp Friday — a day after pleading guilty to reckless driving and speeding charges stemming from a January arrest in Georgia.

Jennings' return

Cornerback Tim Jennings was back in Bourbonnais on Friday, a day after pleading guilty to reckless driving and speeding charges stemming a possible DUI charge.

Jennings was pulled over after allegedly being clocked at 99 miles per hour. He told police that he was late to a parent-teacher conference but denied being drunk.

Jennings said Friday that the incident won't be a distraction while he prepares for the upcoming season.

"We've got everything resolved," Jennings said. "We kind of want to move forward to football season."

Camp's first scuffle

Friday's practice brought the first dust-up of camp with offensive guard Kyle Long and defensive end Jarvis Jenkins needing to be separated during full-team drills.

The Bears will practice in pads for the first time Saturday. Fox said that's likely for the best with his players anxious to get some contact in.

"It's hard to duplicate a padded football without pads," Fox said. "...Some of the flareups you see is [because] they're getting tired of placating to playing football that way."

Quick hits

Rookie defensive tackle Eddie Goldman left practice with dehydration, while cornerback Kyle Fuller suffered a slight ankle injury but remained on the field. ... The Bears signed undrafted free agent offensive lineman Tyler Moore following a tryout. Quick Hits

Is this the year Bears solve safety concerns?

Ryan Mundy started all 16 contests at strong safety for the Bears last season, but his starting spot isn't safe. He's being pushed by Adrian Amos and Brock Vereen for playing time with the starters.

Veterans and rookies embracing competition to solve secondary issue

BY KEVIN FISHBAIN ChicagoFootball.com

Vic Fangio has enough to sort out as he tries to put together the front seven of his 3-4 defense, but the safety position isn't set in stone yet, either. This year's fourth-round pick, safety Adrian Amos, knows every day is a position battle.

"I come in trying to compete every day. It's always a competition going "speed, agility and explosion" this past summer. "Those were the key points I really wanted to hammer home."

There's also Sherrod Martin, a veteran addition following veteran minicamp, and undrafted rookie Anthony Jefferson, competing for roster spots. When the pads come on Saturday, it could help some of the decision process for Fangio, defensive backs coach Ed Donatell and John Fox - a former safety — but without the ability to hit, the preseason games will be a big factor in finding the No. 2 safety, though some instinctual traits can be seen when the players are in shorts. "That position is such an eye-oriented position ­- having good eyes, making sure they key and diagnose the right things. they are the last line of defense in many cases," he said. "We evaluate every day. There's a skill set we look for, whether it's the physical part of the game or the skill part of the game, coachability. "Really, the games carry a little more weight in the evaluation process. But it's still way early."

The most maligned position on the Bears defense in recent history, that has seen too many starting combinations in the past decade to be successful, appears to be playing host to another competition.

"I believe it is [a competition]. This is training camp. I'm no stranger to this at all," said Ryan Mundy, last year's starter. "I've been in plenty of competitions throughout my career.

"It's a new staff. You have to earn their respect. You've got new teammates, you've got to earn their trust as well. Competition makes everybody better. It's training camp, and you should expect nothing less."

Second-year safety Brock Vereen echoed Mundy's sentiment about the positives of a competition. "It's a good thing," he said. into a camp. I'm just working every day to be the best me I can be, and then after that, it'll play itself out," he said.

Each player brings his own skill set to the position. Mundy hasn't missed a game in the past seven seasons and started every game last year while picking off four passes. Vereen showed off great athleticism prior to the 2014 draft and had flashes against the Jets and 49ers, but struggled down the stretch. Amos has the advantage of being the draft pick of this regime and already has something to prove.

"Pre-draft, they were saying I had a knock on that from my last year, but that put a chip on my shoulder coming into this season, showing everybody that I can be physical," he said.

Mundy, who has been known as a player who is better in the box than in coverage, said he focused on his

McManis eyes bigger role

Special teams standout tries to earn cornerback job

BY JAKE BARTLESON ChicagoFootball.com

With Day 3 of training camp in the books, cornerback Sherrick McManis thinks the Bears still are adjusting to each other and new coaches, but with the new staff, anyone has a shot in McManis' eyes.

Known best as a specialteams demon going into the sixth year of his career, McManis is focused on improving as a corner and continuing his role on special teams, a role he's been "making his money on," so-to-speak. McManis has appeared in 39 games, producing 22 total tackles in his three seasons with the Bears. "I always try to expect to get reps," McManis shared after practice Friday afternoon. "I always want to be prepared regardless of who's supposed to be in front of me or not. As an NFL athlete, you should prepare yourself to start.

"When those opportunities come, you have to take advantage of it, and see where the chips fall from there."

McManis maintains his focus is on himself getting better for the team in any way it sees fit, whether that's at corner, nickel, dime or special teams. Relative to a season ago, McManis feels his technique has improved, and credits the new coaching staff, including cornerback coach, Ed Donatell.

"He's a great coach. He took me aside and explained some things to me," McManis said. "[He] helped me understand the game a little bit better; slow things down a little bit."

The Associated Press/Charles Rex Arbogast

Defensive back Sherrick McManis has flashed some potential during preseason games in recent years, but the standout special teamer is looking to earn more playing time on defense when it counts.

McManis says whether having a new coaching staff is a good thing might depend on the player's position the season before, but he sees an opportunity with a fresh set of eyes on him in Bourbonnais. Additionally, McManis expects to "do great" on special teams again this year.

Perhaps there is some validity to the similar career paths of McManis and former Bear Corey Graham, who played in Chicago for five seasons as s special teams star and corner, amassing 156 total tackles in 77 games. Graham eventually went on to earn a starting role in Buffalo. McManis acknowledged the comparison, but maintains he must create his own path.

"Every year has been a grind, and I have to compete. There are no guarantees for me, especially doing special teams and coming in [defensively] when needed, but that's my mentality regardless," McManis said.

BRONCO ZONE TOURNAMENT: ACBA 10, BERWYN 4

All-City Baseball Association's Trent Koenig slides into home plate Friday during the team's 10-4 victory over Berwyn at the Bronco Zone Tournament in Chebanse. ACBA will play AFCA in one semifinal at 2:30 p.m. on Saturday.

ACBA leaves Berwyn in its dust

ACBA, RVYBL move to semifinals

Jackson is a usual suspect for the ACBA squad, but Garrett Graham had a stellar day at the bottom of the order. Graham took a fastball on the outer third of the plate and drove it over the right-field fence, giving ACBA a 5-2 lead. The undefeated squad plated another run and took command with a 6-2 lead after four innings. Graham had three hits on the day. With the offense starting stagnant early, ACBA needed another solid effort from its pitching staff. Jacob Shoven gave up just two runs in his three innings of work.

Herscher loses twice at Zone

Herscher bowed of the Mustang Zone Tournament on Friday, following a 9-4 loss to Grand Ledge, Mich., in Lafayette, Ind.

Herscher dropped its opening game of the tournament in an 8-3 decision to the host team.

BY ALLAN SCARABELLO ascarabello@daily-journal.com 815-937-3397

For the first time in the Tournament, the All-City Baseball Association squad was tested in the Bronco Zone Tournament.

Ahead just a run with the bases loaded in the fourth inning, shortstop Seth Raines cut down the tying run at the plate. After that point, the ACBA offense exploded to defeat Berwyn 10-4 on Friday evening.

"Huge play to get the out at home after the error," coach Jason Shoven said. "If you can bounce back and get an out on the play, it kind of makes you forget the error.'

But, it was a big swing of the bat by Owen Jackson, who has homered in all three games of the tournament, that really helped ACBA's offense spring to life. He got a fastball right down the middle and drove it over the fence to plate the team's third run of the game.

"We came out flat. We haven't been tested this tournament. We had a few errors and felt a little pressure," Shoven said. "Owen Jackson's home run certainly opened us up and got the bats going. We settled down, played our game and got it done.'

Southpaw Andrew Arseneau pitched two scoreless innings and Jay Lemenager pitched the last two innings.

ACBA is the top seed and will square off against AFCA in the semifinal Saturday. If ACBA wins both games, it will advance to the Bronco World Series in California.

For Graham and his teammates, a trip to California would be a highlight of their young lives.

"It would mean a lot. It would mean a lot for my family," Graham said. "We will be the first team from this area to go to California."

However, it isn't all about baseball for the young players. Win or lose, they enjoy themselves.

"It's a lot of fun, because we have fun in practice," Graham said. "We have a lot of funny people on this team. They're like family to me."

AFCA 15, River Valley Youth Baseball League 5 (6 inn.)

RVYBL scored four times in the first inning, but it couldn't hold the AFCA offense at bay.

Jason Moord led off the game with a single and eventually scored.

R.J. Dalton and Sam Williams walked in the inning.

Collin Sharmon walked and scored on Ryan Hardesty's single to account for RVYBL's final run.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL: CUBS 4, MILWAUKEE 1

Hammel continues to dominate Brewers

Rizzo homers for third straight game

BY JOE TOTORAITIS The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Jason Hammel beat Milwaukee for the seventh consecutive decision with his first win in almost two months and Anthony Rizzo homered to lead the Chicago Cubs past the rebuilding Brewers 4-1 on Friday night.

Hammel (6-5) improved to 7-0 in nine starts against Milwaukee and picked up his first victory since June 6. He allowed a run on six hits over 5 2-3 innings to beat the Brewers for the second time this season. His only mistake was a pitch Ryan Braun hit for his 19th home run in the first.

Hector Rondon pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

Starlin Castro, in an 11-for-80 slump (.138) over the last 22 games, drove in two runs with a single in the first and a fielder's choice in the sixth. Rizzo, who had a game-winning three run homer Thursday, hit a solo shot in the seventh. Addison Russell added a run-scoring single in the sixth and chased Milwaukee starter Taylor Jungmann (5-3).

Both teams made moves before Friday's non-waiver trade deadline. The Brewers, losers of 8 of 10, felt the biggest impact, with Gerardo Parra and Jonathan Broxton being dealt — making it four veteran players traded in little more than a week.

Chicago picked up a pair of veteran right-handers.

The Brewers sent outfielder Gerardo Parra, the hottest hitter on a weak-hitting team, to Baltimore, and they moved reliever Jonathan Broxton to St. Louis.

Parra was batting .460 during a career-high 14-game hitting streak. Hitting 328 overall, Parra was Milwaukee's only regular above .300.

Two-time All-Star center fielder Carlos Gomez and starting right-hander Mike Fiers were acquired by Houston on Thursday. Slugging third baseman Aramis Ramirez was traded eight days ago to Pittsburgh. Milwaukee received minor leaguers in all three trades.

Cubs get bullpen help, 5th starter

Give up 2 minor leaguers, outfielder Lake The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE— The Chicago Cubs got some help for their bullpen Friday, acquiring Tommy Hunter from the Baltimore Orioles for outfielder Junior Lake.

Hunter was 2 -2 with a 3.63 ERA in 39 appearances for Baltimore this season. The 29-year-old righthander is 44-33 with a 4.28 ERA in eight seasons with Texas and the Orioles. He won 13 games as a starter with the Rangers in 2010 and was traded to Baltimore the following season.

Since moving into a full-time bullpen role with Baltimore in 2013, Hunter is 11-9 with 15 saves and a 3.05 ERA.

Since joining the Orioles, Hunter proved to be a light-hearted presence in the clubhouse and a hard-throwing competitor on the mound.

"Tommy never has a bad day. Very infectious personality, and he can pitch," Orioles manager Buck Showalter said. "He will help the Cubs. I'm glad it's to a place that's competitive."

The trade was announced shortly after Friday's non-waiver trade deadline. Minutes earlier, Hunter joked with reporters about the rumors he would be traded, offering the shoes in his locker at a bargain price.

Haren dealt by Marlins to Cubs

MIAMI — Right-hander Dan Haren has been acquired by the Chicago Cubs from the Miami Marlins.

As part of Friday's deal, Miami is sending cash to the Cubs to cover part of Haren's $11 million salary.

Haren was 7-7 with a 3.42 ERA in a team-best 21 starts for the Marlins this season. The Cubs will become his eighth team after previous stints with St. Louis, Oakland, Arizona, the Los Angeles Angels, Washington, the Los Angeles Dodgers and then Miami.

Haren pitched Thursday in a 1-0 Miami loss to Washington, and suggested after that game that being linked to plenty of trade rumors was gnawing at him — though insisted it wasn't affecting him on the mound.

Teixeira homers from both sides as Yanks rout Sox

Accomplishes feat for record 14th time

BY MATT CARLSON The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Mark Teixeira homered from both sides of the plate for the record 14th time, hitting his 10th grand slam and a two-run homer that led the New York Yankees over the Chicago White Sox 13-6 Friday night.

Teixeira had his second straight two-homer game and leads the Yankees with 28 homers and 73 RBIs.

Batting right-handed, Teixeira's slam off Carlos Rodon (4-4) put New York ahead 6-0 in a five-run second. Batting lefthanded, he connected against Matt Albers for a 9-2 lead in a five-run fourth.

Teixeira, who went 3 for 4 with two walks, had been tied with Cleveland's Nick Swisher at 13 games homering from both sides, according to STATS. It was Teixeira's 41st multihomer game overall.

Alex Rodriguez had two hits, including a double, to reach 1,500 hits with the Yankees and also walked three times while scoring four runs. Carlos Beltran and Brendan Ryan each had three of New York's 18 hits.

A day after he was acquired from Seattle, Dustin Ackley made his Yankees debut when he pinch hit in the seventh and grounded out. Ackley, the Yankees' 49th player this season, grounded out again in the eighth. Nathan Eovaldi (11-2), making his 100th start, allowed three runs and seven hits in 5 2-3 innings. He is 6-0 in his last eight starts.

Adam LaRoche, a first baseman, had four hits and pitched the ninth in his first mound appearance since 2003 at Double-A Greenville.

Pierce

in two World Series and spent most of his 18 years in the majors with the Chicago White Sox, died Friday. He was 88.

Pierce died after a battle with gall bladder cancer, said his family and the White Sox.

The left-hander played for Chicago from 1949 to 1961, starting three All-Star games in the mid-1950s. He also played for his hometown Detroit Tigers and the San Francisco Giants, going 211-169 with a 3.27 ERA, 1,999 strikeouts, 193 complete games and 38 shutouts. He reached the series with Chicago in 1959 and pitched a three-hit victory for San Francisco in Game 6 three years later against the Yankees.

His No. 19 was retired by the White Sox in 1987, and he made it on the Hall of Fame's Golden Era Committee ballot last year though he was not voted in.

"Generations of White Sox fans lost one of their heroes today," White Sox Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf said in a statement.

Off the field, Pierce helped raise millions of dollars for Chicago Baseball Cancer Charities.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL: TRADING DEADLINE

Mets get Cespedes at deadline

16 trades made before deadline on Friday

BY RONALD BLUM The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Mets finally landed the bat they were looking for in Yoenis Cespedes just ahead of Friday's trade deadline, and Cole Hamels confirmed he blocked a trade to Houston before Philadelphia dealt its ace to Texas.

Sixteen trades were made Friday ahead of the annual deadline for deals without waivers, but San Diego was among the buyers, not the sellers, to the surprise of some.

Hamels was the only top starting pitcher dealt following earlier trades that sent Scott Kazmir to Houston, Johnny Cueto to Kansas City and David Price to Toronto. The Blue Jays scheduled a blowout news conference at Rogers Centre to introduce Price, but instead the lefthander was sidetracked by a blowout to one of RIGHT HAND ONLY!!!"

Eleven of 15 AL teams began the day within five games of a playoff berth, and seven of 15 in the NL, where the races are more defined.

"There are a lot of buyers out there," Mets general manager Sandy Alderson said. "And that probably has something to do with the second wild card, and maybe just the reality of that second wild card has sunk in, and the tightness of various races around both leagues."

Cespedes, eligible for free agency after the season, hit .293 with 18 home runs and 61 RBIs in 102 games for the Tigers. Seeking to make the playoffs for the first time since 2006, the Mets have a talented starting rotation but rank last in the majors in runs and batting average, and 29th in on-base percentage and slugging.

29th in on-base percentage and slugging. "He's a very dynamic player," Alderson said. "We think he's going to impact us in a number of different ways. But I think also just his presence in the lineup and his presence on the team will raise the energy level — and I hope it raises the energy level in the dugout and in the stands. I think that this is the kind of player that could have a big impact both in terms of the game on the field and how team is perceived." New York already had added infielders Juan Uribe and Kelly Johnson, and reliever Tyler Clippard. The moves increased New York's payroll by about $8.2 million within the last week. Milwaukee general manager Doug Melvin said a trade fell through Wednesday night that would have sent outfielder Carlos Gomez to the Mets.

The Associated Press/Gail Burton The Mets acquired Detroit's Yoenis Cespedes, hoping for some boost in the offense.

Tiger in contention in Gainesville

Pettersen leads Women's British Open

The Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Va. — Tiger Woods showed a rare flash of anger on a mostly stress-free day when his second shot on the eighth hole failed to clear a massive fairway bunker. The best he could do was to squeeze it onto the front of the green.

The mistake on the par-5 hole set up the signature moment of a 5-under 66 on Friday in the Quicken Loans National that put Woods in contention for his first victory in nearly two years.

Woods sank the 36-foot birdie putt, which broke hard to the right and trickled over a crest and into the hole. He celebrated with a vintage fist pump and smile.

Woods was tied for fifth, three shots behind Ryo Ishikawa, who was even par for the day before he birdied the last three holes at Robert Trent Jones Golf Club. Ishikawa had a 68 to reach 11 under, one shot ahead of Rickie Fowler, who also birdied the last three for a 65, and Kevin Chappell, who shot 68.

Woods is the host and a two-time winner of the Quicken Loans National, which is being played at RTJ for the first time. His 66 was his best score in relation to par this year and only his seventh round in the 60s. In eight previous starts this year, he missed three cuts and withdrew once. His best finish is a tie for 17th at the Masters.

Women's British Open

TURNBERRY, Scotland — Norway's Suzann Pettersen shot a 3-under 69 in windy morning conditions to take a two-stroke lead after the second round of the Women's British Open.

Pettersen had a 7-under 137 at Turnberry's Alisa Course.

New Zealand's Lydia Ko, Taiwan's Teresa Lu and South Koreans So Yeon Ryu and Jin-Young Ko were tied for second. The 18-year-old Lydia Ko shot a 73 in some of the worst conditions in the rainy afternoon, when the wind swirled and gusted up to 25 mph. Lu and Jin-Young Ko shot 71, and Ryu had a 72.

Sweden's Maria McBridewas the only player to beat Pettersen's score with a bogey-free 66, but she was still way off the pace after opening with a 79.

Top-ranked Inbee Park, trying to complete a career sweep of the majors, was five strokes back after a 73. Michelle Wie withdrew after aggravating a left ankle injury when she slipped to the ground as she walked off the 13th tee. Among other deals:

• The Orioles got outfielder Gerardo Parra from Milwaukee.

• Pittsburgh got left-hander J.A. Happ from Seattle and first baseman Michael Morse from the Los Angeles Dodgers.

• Minnesota acquired right-hander Kevin Jepsen from Tampa Bay.

3M Championship

BLAINE, Minn. — Local favorite Tom Lehman shot an 8-under 64 to open a three-stroke lead in the Champions Tour's windy 3M Championship.

Lehman had two birdies and an eagle in an early three-hole stretch, added a birdie on the par-4 ninth and closed with three more birdies at TPC Twin Cities, the course he helped Arnold Palmer design. Mania and later found movie stardom, has died, the WWE said Friday. He was 61.

WWE had no additional details.

Piper, born Roderick Toombs, was the second WWE Hall of Famer to die this summer following the June death of Dusty Rhodes. Piper's death also comes days after Hulk Hogan, his biggest rival for decades, was fired by the WWE. Hogan had used racial slurs in a conversation captured on a sex tape.

Piper and Hogan battled for years and headlined some of the biggest matches during the 1980s. Hogan and Mr. T defeated Piper and Paul Orndorff on March 31, 1985, at the first WrestleMania at Madison Square Garden.

Piper was a villain for the early portion of his career, once cracking a coconut over the skull of Jimmy "Superfly" Snuka. He later starred in the movie "They Live."

SUNDAY, AUG. 2, 2015

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

 \star \star \star You'll discover a need for some solitude. Make plans accordingly, whether they involve going to the beach or off to a spiritual retreat. You'll feel as if a burden is being lifted. Your fiery ways emerge in the evening. Discussions revolve around a personal matter. Tonight: Dream on. This Week: Rest up Monday. You hit your high energy cycle Tuesday.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

 $\star \star \star \star$ Listen to news, and be more realistic about what you want. Your sense of humor draws in others, as they enjoy your perspective and playfulness. Someone who has been difficult could become a lot more relaxed, now or in the near future. Tonight: Say "yes." This Week: Use Monday and Thursday to the max.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

 $\star \star \star \star \star$ You'll accomplish a lot, and quickly at that. You might want to plan a meeting or get-together with friends and loved ones. Whatever the choice is, you will enjoy yourself and relax. Others take their cues from you. Tonight: Know when to cut the playing. This Week: Reach out to someone whose company you really enjoy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

 $\star \star \star \star \star$ Your ability to change your direction is part of your flexible nature. You're likely to detach and see a situation differently. Though you might not have intended to take a minitrip, you probably won't have a choice. Take a walk by water. Tonight: Say "yes" to an offer. This Week: You know what you

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

 $\star \star \star \star$ Someone you care about will make an overture in your direction. You might think that this person is subtly reeling you in. This individual tends to be idealistic, and sees only what he or she wants to see. Be aware of that dimension of his or her personality. Tonight: Where the fun is.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

 $\star \star \star \star$ Someone has a way of letting you know that your choices don't really suit you. Open up to a more dynamic relationship than you have experienced in the recent past, providing you can accept each other's differences. Tonight: Go along with a friend's suggestion. This Week: Others dominate. What a great week to take off!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

NFL

 $\star \star \star \star \star$ You have a way about you that encourages others to be more open. How you view their lives might be best kept to yourself. Remember that it is your opinion and no one else's. Share a favorite hobby with this person. You might be surprised by the result. Tonight: Make it easy This Week: By Tuesday, you'll get the lay of the land.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

 $\star \star \star \star$ You might not be able to see a situation differently, nor can you make the changes you want. You have a strong feeling that a lot is about to transform, but you might not have as much say as you would like. Focus on you priorities. Tonight: Hang out with a favorite person. This Week: Say "yes" to new possibilities, and let go of what no longer works.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

 $\star \star \star \star$ Your intuition is right-on as far as a family member and a domestic situation go. Deal with this person accordingly. You might not be in the mood to venture very far from home. Think rationally and make decisions accordingly. Tonight: Make it easy. This Week: Not until Tuesday do you feel up to snuff.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

 $\star \star \star \star \star$ Make calls in the morning, and catch up on your friends' news. You could be taken aback by all the gossip, but along the way, you'll make plans to meet a special someone or go off and indulge in a summer sport you enjoy. Tonight: Meet friends for dinner. This Week: Speak your mind

Monday. From that point on, you will be hard to contain.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

 $\star \star \star \star$ You will need to listen more to what is being said and make choices accordingly. Your sense of humor emerges when having a conversation with someone who is in a controlling mood. You know that this won't is go anywhere, so just take a step back. Tonight: Treat yourself well. This Week: You are likely to tell it like it is and not mince words.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

 $\star \star \star \star \star \star$ A friend might be involved in a situation where he or she would really appreciate your support. Some of your ideas could help this person get away from a controlling situation. Be aware of your need to get more exercise and keep yourself in shape. Tonight: Go for a walk. This Week: Be careful with money.

Tannehill confident, hopeful of a post-season breakthrough

QB has started every game since drafted in 2012

BY TIM REYNOLDS

The Associated Press

DAVIE, Fla. - Not long after connecting on a deep pass Friday, Miami Dolphins quarterback Ryan Tannehill slapped hands with someone in celebration and was clearly smiling underneath his helmet.

Sure, it was only Day 2 of training camp and the pads aren't even on yet.

But Tannehill is making no effort to hide his good mood - or his confidence.

He has started every game for the Dolphins since he was taken with the No. 8 overall pick in 2012, 48 games in all, exactly zero of them coming in the playoffs. Tannehill boldly expects that to change this season, saying he has "no doubt" that Miami will reach the postseason and end what would be a seven-year drought.

"I'm superbly confident in this team and what we can do," Tannehill said. "We have a lot of work to do, but I'm really excited about what we have."

The Dolphins have been starting their training-camp practices at 8 a.m. in their bubble facility, 30 minutes of air-conditioned comfort before heading outside into the summer heat and humidity that's cranked up even at that early hour. Tannehill has seemed more than just wide awake, exhibiting a big bounce in his step as he goes from one drill to the next, not minding that all eves are on him — and plenty of percentage, rating and touchdown total rose in Year 2 from Year 1, and again in Year 3 from Year 2. It all just hasn't translated into enough wins, with Miami 23-25 over the past three seasons.

Now in Year 4, Tannehill expects both he and the Dolphins will be good enough

"Ryan has all of the ingredients to be an elite quarterback," Dolphins owner Stephen Ross said. "If you look at his performance, he's gotten better every single year. I think with the tools he has around him now, he will continue to get better and I think you'll see that with our wins and losses. You've got to start with the quarterback. I can't think of a better person, a guy with the talent, the brains and the athletic ability combined to really lead this team.

With a receiving corps that includes Jarvis Landry (84 catches as a rookie last year) and newcomers Greg Jennings (552 catches in his first nine NFL seasons) and Kenny Stills (who has 13 catches of 25 or more yards in his first two seasons) — not to mention first-round pick DeVonte Parker out of Louisville — Tannehill should have plenty of good candidates to choose from when the season begins.

He never seemed to truly click with Mike Wallace, whose two-year run in Miami is now over. While there's no question that Wallace is among the league's elite, Tannehill doesn't think the Dolphins are lacking at wideout.

You ask any man on this team and they'll tell you the same thing: We're here to win a championship.

Landry was asked what changes he's seen in Tannehill this season, and offered a very quick answer.

"Focus. Focus," Landry said. "This year it's definitely critical and vital for him to not only be our leader but continue to get better as he has every year. So I don't think he feels any pressure, but at the same time he knows his potential to perform at a high level and he's going to do that for us."

The Dolphins aren't coy these days about their goals. Normally a little reserved on the bold-proclamation front, coach Joe Philbin has talked about contending for titles and that's music to Tannehill's ears.

He's not sure why Philbin is offering such outward confidence, but he's not complaining either.

"We're here to win a championship," Tannehill said. "That's what we're here to do. You ask any man on this team and they'll tell you the same thing: We're here to win a championship. We're not wasting our time out here each and every day, sweating,

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

MONDAY, AUG. 3, 2015

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

 $\star \star \star \star$ You could feel out of sorts until later today. You would be well-advised to play it low-key. Swap ideas, but be sure not to push anyone too hard. Use this time to brainstorm or to do something for you. Tonight: The world is your oyster.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

 $\star \star \star \star \star \star$ Zero in on an important matter. You might not be able to convince a key person of the rightness of your ideas just yet, but trust that you will, given some time. You have the gift of patience; you will need it here. Tonight: Make it early.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

 $\star \star \star \star$ Assume responsibility when someone else refuses to. An element of fatigue runs through your day. You might not be able to engage others in a conversation as you would like to. Use caution with spending. Tonight: Catch up on news.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

 $\star \star \star \star \star$ Your mind pushes past certain boundaries, and you'll be able to detach. As a result, you will see matters in a new light. Be willing to let go of self-imposed restrictions. Indulge yourself a little more. Tonight: Out till the wee hours.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

 $\star \star \star \star$ You will be part of a one-on-one conversation. A family member might be hesitant to get feedback. Open the door to a meeting of the minds. You'll be in the mood for a change of pace later in the day. Tonight: Listen to some great music.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

 $\star \star \star \star \star$ No matter what you do, you need to listen to your instincts. Follow through on a personal matter that could affect you financially. An associate might push you hard. Understand your limits. Tonight: Where your friends are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

 $\star \star \star$ Tap into your enthusiasm and high energy. Understand that someone could be jealous and acting out. Let it go; don't even consider pursuing a conversation. This person might not be in tune with his or her feelings. Tonight: Frolic into the night.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

 $\star \star \star \star \star$ Your mind keeps coming up with unusual and creative ideas. With the help of a trusted friend, decipher what will succeed. Focus on an important relationship. Know that you are not in control. Tonight: Choose a stress-buster.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

 $\star \star \star \star$ You could be in a position where you will need to deal with stress on a personal level. You might come to the conclusion that there is no other solution than just letting it go. Tonight: Your imagination proves to be a wonderful tool.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

 $\star \star \star \star \star \star$ You have a way of intuitively knowing what to do next. You could feel as though someone doesn't appreciate or understand the seriousness of a personal matter. Lighten up and note the issue here. Tonight: Happily head home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

 $\star \star \star \star$ Deal with a money matter without causing yourself a problem. A boss could be extremely difficult, as he or she might want to have a situation handled a certain way. Be smart. and go along with this person's ideas. Tonight: Return calls.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

 $\star \star \star \star$ Today, you'll have an edge over others. How you see a situation could change radically because of a conversation and an interaction. Be aware of your influence, but don't run someone over just to get your way. Tonight: Your treat.

"Those guys have all the weapons that we need," Tannehill said. pressure is on his shoulders. Tannehill's yardage, completion losing 10 pounds a practice to not be playing in January and February.'

JOURNAL

Send us your pictures for Local Faces in Different Places

Just make sure to follow these simple rules.

- 1. Photos must have the first and last names of all people whose faces are visible. There are no exceptions.
- 2. Please state what town a person is from (for example: Joe Jones, of Ashkum).
- 3. Identify people from left to right, and top row to bottom row.
- 4. Clear focus and good lighting are important. If a picture is too blurry or too dark, it will not run.
- 5. Pictures in bad taste (such as drinking, smoking or showing gang signs) will not run.

To submit prints by mail:

- 1. Please type or print legibly.
- 2. We will gladly return prints if a stamped, self-addressed envelope is enclosed.
- 3. Use commercial printing labs (like a drugstore) or high-quality photo paper. Photos on ink jet paper cannot be printed.
- 4. Send prints to: The Daily Journal, Local Faces in Different Places, 8 Dearborn Sq., Kankakee, IL 60901.

To submit digital photos:

- 1. Only submit one picture per email.
- 2. Send the photo as an attachment.
- 3. Send full-size images. Photos taken with a cellphone, or pulled from a website, will not run. (Thumbnail images are too small.)
- 4. Send captions in black text.
- 5. Give your photos simple, descriptive names.
- 6. Email to: localfaces@daily-journal.com.
