BULLETIN/ALUMNI JOURNAL/SUMMER 1968

A SPECIAL RESPONSIBILITY

The pace of violence has moved at an almost incredible rate. Since the last issue of this magazine, two national leaders have been assassinated. The Ursinus community with America as a whole has mourned for Dr. King and Senator Kennedy and shared a concern for the quality of the life we have made in this nation.

Many of us undoubtedly felt on June 6 a nauseating sense of drift, the culmination of a long-growing despair at the randomness of events. The circumstances of the Kennedy tragedy affected us more deeply because of the King tragedy of only two months before. And how similar those circumstances were to the ones we remembered from President Kennedy's assassination in November 1963—an obscure youth with a gun, a mortal head wound, a stoic wife, a rush to the hospital, a crowd standing vigil outside, a solemn and ceremonious funeral, and on it all the omniverous eye of TV.

Was there nothing that could be done to save America from more such devastating experiences? For many, it was a difficult question to face during those numbed hours of another period of public mourning.

Yet it is perfectly clear that we cannot give up the effort to contain our national life within the boundaries of good sense. And it seems equally clear that those who share the liberal tradition in learning have a special responsibility toward that effort.

To deflate rhetoric that incites the unthinking to violence; to affirm pursuits that allow the creative playing out of passion; to encourage civility as well as conviction in the public dialogue; to favor decisions that bend technology to human needs rather than the reverse; to discern in the shape of present events the patterns that are constant in human experience; to recognize that after all the explanations of life are in, something remains unexplained; to demonstrate that the good life is a matter of qualities not quantities. . . .

Those are some of the things that the liberally educated are naturally inclined to do. As a corrective to these fiery and bewildered days, it is important that they be done with renewed conviction. Those who are dead demand no less.

CAPP QUIPS CLEVERLY AT COMMENCEMENT

"On the shifting ground between humor and philosophy, seen by some as a sharp-eyed satirist of the world about him, Mr. Capp reveals the rare gift of drawing absurdities of human behavior with a corrosive pen, and making his human constituency turn daily and eagerly to his page to see themselves portrayed. In his world of power-hungry monsters and slobbering innocents we see ourselves mocked—or our neighbors, if we are overly sensitive—and it is a tribute to his genius that we recognize the truth of the picture and ever come back for more.

"The location of Li'l Abner's world may not yet have been pinpointed on any map, but Dogpatch and Lower Slobbovia have entered deeply into the folklore of the American nation, as have the names of Abner Yocum and Daisy Mae, not to mention Sadie Hawkins and Bullmoose.

"For his devastating yet understanding penetration beneath the veneer of our society into the self we are loath to recognize, as much as for his use of an often despised medium to say of us what Hogarth and Goya said of their worlds, I present Mr. Capp, so that you may adorn him with the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters."

Mr. Capp was introduced to the class of 1968 by Dr. William D. Reimert, President of the Ursinus College Board of Directors. As a newspaper

“By every standard of privilege and power, they are the editor and publisher (The Allentown Call-Chronicle), Dr. Reimert seemed to take particular pleasure in this duty: “Among the first newspapers to feature ‘Li’l Abner,’ we have had Mr. Capp on our payroll for 30 years.”

Addressing the Ursinus seniors, Al Capp said, “We know what your sort want: a chance to lead a useful life, a peaceful life and, if it’s convenient, to get some fun out of it. Those are modest wants.

They were kidding

“(But) The question we, your elders, are asking as we watch our well-fed, well-defended and well-deferred young tear the place apart is: What in hell do they want?”

A list of Mr. Capp’s observations of what the protesting, “rampaging” students say they want, differs from his analysis of what they really want.

“They said (at Columbia) they’d go on rampaging until the Academic Community had nothing further to do with any decisions of the Department of Defense.

“But of course they were kidding because they themselves want to (help decide) whom the nation should be defended from, and who, exactly will be drafted to do the defending.

“At Fiske they said they wanted to learn to speak Swahili. I heard them say that on TV. But they hadn’t even learned to speak English.

“At Harvard they said they were tormented into committing a little kidnapping and a little arson because they had been denied courses in their African heritage, when, clearly, they’d completed only half the course in their American heritage. They’d learned all the past errors of their American heritage—but none of its present goodness, generosity and opportunity.

“At Berkeley, the young rebels said they wanted to be treated as adults. No adult would have dared to do what they did, because he knew he’d be treated as an adult . . . They dared to at Berkeley because they knew they’d be treated with the indulgence and restraint we show to unhousebroken infants.

“At Northwestern they said they wouldn’t give the University back to the people who paid for it unless it instantly got rid of its investments in South Africa—to show their loathing for apartheid—which the University did. At the same time they demanded exclusively black dormitories separate from the whites.”

Al Capp’s good-humored recital of the campus protests of the past year reminded the listeners of his cartoon characters. He seemed to draw some of his famous pictures with word descriptions of the student disruptions of the various colleges and universities. The “caricatures” of the unruly students were pungently presented. He spoke of “the rampaging, rioting, tantrum-having students,” “a student leader, housebreaker and petty thief,” “our well fed, well defended and well deferred young” and “a kid as frantic for publicity as any Hollywood starlet who will pull her neckline down to any extreme.”

A piece of the action

The question of what “they” want was never really answered—the message was clear enough, however, in the questions Mr. Capp asked.

“At NYU they put it this way —we want a piece of the action!”

“What action?”

“Was it such action as the millions of man-hours of toil other men had put in, to earn the taxes to build NYU? Or the decades of thoughtful action by generations of underpaid, overworked educators who formulated the courses taught there? Did they want a piece of that action? Or did they want to smash to pieces all that the sober and sane acts of other men had created?

“Some people say what they really want is to destroy the establishment. I say nonsense. By every standard of privilege and power, they are the Establishment. Not us. Not dumb, helpless, stunned, loving, bewildered, ox-like us. And not you graduates. You’re merely on your way to becoming us.

“They are our moneyed leisure class. We’re here to feed them, shelter them, defend them, go bail for them and clean up after them.

“And yet . . . we have failed our young campus activists—(that’s a full-time pest and criminal whose lawyer can prove he’s also a part time student).—We have failed to give them the one thing they really want; the one thing that, in their heart of hearts they’ve really been begging for—if only we’d been listening. We’ve granted them everything they’ve demanded except the only thing they need to straighten them out—and that is a swift kick in the pants!” □

ALUMNI DAY '68

THE HAPPY TIME

Under the chairmanship of William Shuster, '39, Alumni Day 1968 was a happy occasion. Some stayed over a night or two in the dormitories, others came for only one of the many features of the day, most attended all the events.

The beautiful first day of June was marked with posters and banners on campus welcoming Alumni and Alumnae back to Ursinus. As the Executive Committee of the Alumni Association was called to order by Joseph T. Beardwood III, '51, Alumni were signing in, greeting old friends and enjoying the art show exhibited in Wismer Hall (thanks to Dean of Women Ruth Rothenberger, '36). Many of the classes met in pre-arranged rooms in Wismer Hall, all classes were assigned areas according to their "decades" (40's, 50's, 20's, 30's, etc.).

Just before the annual luncheon, Dr. and Mrs. Donald L. Helfferich, 21, greeted returning Alumni in the beautiful Parents' Lounge where appetizers were served. Those Alumni who played a round of golf at the Limerick Golf Club and others who took a walking tour of the campus arrived at Wismer Hall in time for the reception. Many faculty and staff members of the College were on hand to renew friendships and to make new friends among Alumni.

The huge circular dining room was colorful in a decor of red and gold linens decked with white potted plants. A smorgasbord luncheon was presented to add another dimension to Alumni pleasure. "Zacky" awards were presented by Bill Shuster to Alumni and Alumnae who traveled the longest distance, who had the best class attendance and to emeritus club members.

The feature of Alumni Day was the presentation of an abridged version of Ionesco's "The Lesson" by Emile Schmidt, '51 and his charming wife, Patricia Schmidt. The play reading was followed by a discussion of that play and of the plays read by Alumni who followed the Liberal Arts Committee topic of the year, Contemporary Drama. This presentation was the culmination of the work of the Liberal Arts Committee which included a presentation of the South Central Pennsylvania Club meeting in Gettysburg by Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt in the spring. The undergraduate Curtain Club presented a one act play to the South Jersey Club earlier this spring in cooperation with the Committee. This was characterized as a most successful intellectual venture under the direction of the Schmidts and Joe Beardwood.

The half dozen classes with scheduled reunion dinners went to as many meeting places after the brief pre-dinner social hour at the Colledgeville Inn. The reunions were, as usual, most successful, especially the class of 1943 (25th reunion) at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Roger Staiger, '43, and the class of 1918 (50th) at Mooreheads, arranged by Mr. Gilbert Dietz, '18. Mr. Dietz also arranged for a 50th reunion "Ruby" to be published, to the great pleasure of his classmates. □

THE BUSINESS OF THE DAY

The Executive Committee of the Alumni Association was called to order by Joseph T. Beardwood, '51, on June 1. The agenda was a full one. The committee accepted the new constitution of the Ohio regional association sent by Charles Wallick and Carl Peek for approval. The Bruins Club, headed by Ben Maliken, '54, also presented a constitution as the Athletic Boosters Organization. These two acts followed a series of Alumni Association expansion activities in alumni clubs.

For a full account of the action of the annual meeting of the Alumni Association the minutes are reproduced here.

MINUTES OF ALUMNI ASSOCIATION GENERAL MEETING JUNE 1, 1968

The general meeting of the Alumni Association was held in Wismer after a smorgasbord luncheon. The meeting was opened by a word of welcome by William Shuster, '39, head of the Alumni Day committee and followed by recognition to Mrs. William Helfferich '93 for her continued loyalty. "Panda Bear" awards were then given to the members of the Class of 1908 in attendance: Harvey Danehower, Harvey Leidy and J. Ellis Tobias. A "Bear" award was also given to Mrs. Richard Bonner '28 for traveling the greatest distance, Washington state. Recognition was also made to the Class of '18 for its 50th anniversary and to the Class of 1943 for its 25th anniversary.

President Joseph Beardwood then called for an acceptance of the minutes and the treasurer's report which stated a balance of $4454.09 as of June 1, 1968. Both were approved as printed.

The Election Committee reported the following officers elected: Board member, Joseph Beardwood, '51; Sec-Treas. Carol Sue Habgood, '62; Faculty Representative, Katherine Kneas, '37; Alumni representatives, Keith Moyer, '60, H. Jay Ely, '52 and Walter Tropp, '34.

Mrs. J. Harold Brownback reported for the Women's Club. About ¾ of the $10,000 has been raised to furnish a lounge in the new library.

Don Estes, Alumni Director, reported a 37% participation contributing some $106,000 to the Loyalty Fund. Mention was also made of the activities of the various regional and special interest groups.

The Alumni Senior Awards were given to Richard DiEugenio and Harriet Metzgar.

The Alumni Awards were given to Marion Spangler, '03, and Austin Gavin, '30.

Paul Guest reported for the Board of Directors the passing of Robert J. Titus and the completion of the term of Thomas J. Beddow. New members are Joseph Beardwood, III '51, Roy Wenhold '42 and Russell Ball, Pres. of Philadelphia Gear. The MSA reaffirmed accreditation following evaluation with the following recommendations—reduction of teacher's schedules, increased compensation of staff and improvement of facilities. The Anniversary Drive has collected in money and pledges about half of its $2.9 million goal. Approval has also been given for the new administration building and the demolition of Freedland, Stein and Derr for the new library. A new science building addition, gym, pool and chapel are planned to be under construction in the next three years.

President Helfferich stressed the need for all alumni to strain to contribute as much as possible to keep the college on the move.

Mention was then made of the dramatic presentation of the Liberal Arts Committee headed by Emil O. Schmidt '51 which followed the meeting.

The meeting was then adjourned. □

ELECTION WINNERS TAKE OFFICE

The following persons were elected to offices in the Alumni Association in the spring election and took office at Alumni Day.

Director of the College

JOSEPH T. BEARDWOOD, III, '51

Joseph T. Beardwood, III, '51, hardly needs any introduction to Ursinus alumni. As our newly elected alumni member of the Ursinus Board of Directors, Mr. Beardwood brings fresh ideas, youth and energy to the post.

He also brings experience. As president of the Alumni Association he has been a leader in every sense of the word—the healthy status of the Association manifests his leadership.

Board member Beardwood is already a participant in the All Ursinus Anniversary Drive as a member of the policy making council. The first official Board meeting is not until the fall of '68 but Mr. Beardwood has been working for almost a year in the Drive as president of the Alumni Association.

Secretary-Treasurer

CAROL SUE (McGOLDRICK) HABGOOD, '62

Carol Sue (McGoldrick) Habgood, '62, has been elected secretary-treasurer of the Association. Before giving birth to a son on June 2, Mrs. Habgood was able to attend her first general meeting of the Alumni Association as secretary-treasurer, on the first of June. Carol is married to Lawrence M. Habgood, Jr. '61. She has taught Junior H. S. in Phoenixville for three years. She is an active member of the Community Association of North Woods and also secretary of the Philadelphia Alumni Club.

Alumni Representative

H. JAY ELY, '52

H. Jay Ely, '52 was elected for an alumni representative. Mr. Ely is a sales engineer and estimator associated with Tri-County Constructors in Glenside. He was with Westinghouse for six years before occupying his present position.

KEITH MOYER, '60

Keith Moyer, '60 was reelected for alumni representative. Mr. Moyer is sales engineer with the Furnival Machinery Co., Philadelphia. Prior to joining Furnival in 1964, he was sales engineer with US Gauge Company in Sellersville. Mr. Moyer has done graduate work in marketing at Temple University. He is married to the former Judith Brinton, and they have three children.

WALTER M. TROPP, '34

Walter M. Tropp, '34 was also elected as alumni representative for a period of two years. Mr. Tropp is a lawyer and a member of the American, New Jersey and Camden County Bar Associations. Prior to becoming an attorney he taught school in New Jersey. His graduate work was done at Temple University. He is a Judge in the borough of Merchantville and has been a council member and director of public safety in that borough. Mr. Tropp was president of the South Jersey Alumni Club.

Faculty Representative

KAY (WOOD) KNEAS, '37

A member of the Library staff, Kay Wood Kneas, '37, comes to the Alumni Executive Board as the Faculty Representative. She has served on the Faculty at Ursinus since 1967. Mrs. Kneas did her professional post-graduate study at Drexel Institute's Graduate School of Library Science and received her bachelor's degree in library science in 1938. Mrs. Kneas has a son, John, and a daughter, Lindsay, who is a junior at Ursinus.

TWO DISTINGUISHED GRADUATES HONORED

Two distinguished graduates of Ursinus were honored by their fellow alumni on Alumni Day when they were awarded the highest recognition possible by the Alumni Association—the Annual Alumni Award.

One is a business and community leader who sums up in his career and personality the qualities Ursinus values most. The other winner is a gracious lady whose life of music and whose Ursinus life are inextricably interwoven.

AUSTIN GAVIN, '30

Austin Gavin, '30, was the unanimous selection of the Award Committee headed by Charles Shellenberger, '21. Mr. Gavin follows the illustrious precedent of former award winners, Dr. Robert D. Myers, '53, in '67; Henry P. Laughlin, M.D., '38, in '66; Franklin Earnest, III, M.D., '39 and the entire class of 1911 in '65; Paul I. Guest, Esq., '38, in 1964; the late Dr. John W. Clawson, former Dean of the College, in 1963; and the late Jessie Royer Greaves, '92, in 1962.

He has served Ursinus alumni for many years in a number of capacities. Presently he is chairman of the mid-Atlantic district of the All Ursinus Anniversary Drive, a member of the Executive Committee of the Loyalty Fund, the Committee of Attorneys, the Future Giving Committee and has been prominent as well in Boy Scouts, YMCA and numerous other community services. Mr. Gavin is Vice President of Pennsylvania Power and Light Company, Allentown, Pa. He has been with the company for many years and lives in Macungie, Pa. In presenting the award to Mr. Gavin, Mr. Shellenberger cited his achievements as an undergraduate in athletics as well. He was a star on the track team.

Austin Gavin has served Ursinus and his community well with a modest and unassuming manner. The Alumni Association is justifiably proud to claim him as a productive leader.

MARION SPANGLER, '03

The second unanimous choice of the committee was Miss Marion Spangler, '03, who has served Ursinus College for more than 60 years. A feature interview with Miss Spangler appears elsewhere in this issue of the Journal. (See page 17.) □

A SALUTE TO INDIVIDUALS & ORGANIZATIONS

Alumni Day is a time for recognizing the service to the College of both individuals and organizations. In the business meeting of the Executive Committee the work of numerous alumni groups was reviewed and commended. At the general meeting two members of the graduating class were singled out for alumni recognition, and members of milestone classes shared a moment in the spotlight.

The members of the senior class who received the annual Alumni Senior Award were Harriet A. Metzgar and Richard D. DiEugenio. The Award is presented each year to a woman and a man who demonstrate leadership qualities during their student years.

Among the important segments of the Alumni Association are the area clubs in New York, South Jersey, Washington, Baltimore, Schuylkill Valley, Lehigh Valley, South Central Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Chicago, and a new addition in the state of Ohio.

The leadership of Charles Wallick, '38, and Carl Peek, '65, kicked off a different kind of area club in Ohio with the state divided into three smaller groups, all belonging to the State Association. The first meeting was held at Carl Peek's bachelor apartment in Cincinnati. A constitution was drafted to be presented to the Executive Committee meeting on June 1.

Also parts of the Alumni Association are the other clubs and organizations: The Bruin's Club, The Physician's Club and the Evening School committee. All three of these groups had a very active and productive year.

The Bruins had their first year of organizational activity in 1967-68. Under the leadership of Robert Juppe, '48, and Ray Gurzynski, '39, the Club was formed. Elections were held: Ben Maliken, '54, President; Ken Reinhart, '49, treasurer; Thomas Phillips, '53, secretary; and William Degenhardt, '65, vice president. Ben Maliken has sparked the Bruins into several meetings, but more important has been the group's service to the Ursinus athletic program. The Bruins participated in the All-Sports Banquet, helped the cross country team on an overnight trip, and secured a new electric scoreboard for the football field.

The Evening school committee also was busy in 1967-68. A highlight of the year was a golf tournament for Evening alumni students and faculty. Alan Botto, '67, Harry Hartshorn, '66, and Robert Myers, '65, were the leaders of the parade for the Evening School alumni activities. The golf tournament (a first annual) at the Kimberton Golf Club was a great success. The winners (Martin Mars, Robert Byers and Harry Hartshorn) were presented trophies at the banquet held at the Golf Club the evening of the tournament. Golfers who fail to play next year will miss a really fine outing!

Other activities of the Evening School Alumni Committee have been a newsletter, research into college services to evening students, a welcome to new graduates on Alumni Day and at Commencement; intra-mural sports activity, and a Homecoming Day luncheon. Evening School alumni and students who want to participate during the 1968-69 year should contact Don Estes in the Alumni Office (215) 489-4111, ext. 235. There are many areas where there is fun to be had, work to be done, and where there are many people already busy doing both.

Dr. Irvin Gerson, '40, has led the Physicians Club in many directions during the past year. Unlike some who "go off" in all directions at once, Dr. Gerson has been eminently successful. The physicians have several committees: the Building Advisory Committee, the Student Advisory Committee, the Executive Committee, a committee to advise the college development office on foundation and corporation support.

The student pre-med and Brownback Chemical Society were fortunate to be presented a number of fine programs by members of the Physicians Club and by other authorities in fields of medicine. Most of the programs were on campus and publicized at nearby colleges so that some visitors were able to attend programs.

The Building Advisory Committee conducted a tour of one nearby college (Dickinson) to inspect the recently constructed science facility there. Ideas picked up from such inspections are considered for incorporation into the proposed new Ursinus science building. Col. John Boyd Coates, M.D., '32, accompanied staff members from the College.

The Physicians also were able to give to the development staff invaluable advice and insight into certain foundations to which Ursinus is directing requests for grants for various science programs. Dr. Archer P. Crosley '42, is knowledgeable among the pharmaceutical corporations and has been most helpful in giving direction to these requests. More and more of the results of all of the Physicians Club activities will be seen as time goes on. At present, the membership of the Ursinus Physicians Club is of the greater Philadelphia-Montgomery County area. It may be that physicians in other parts of the country will wish to take part in the Club. If so they should contact the Alumni Office. □

OF URSINUS

Ursinus College presented "a picture of solid accomplishment," in the words of Dr. C. William Huntley, Chairman of the Evaluation Team of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools following a three-day visit to the campus from February 11-14.

Dr. Huntley, Professor of Psychology at Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., headed an eight-member team of educators. Their scheduled visit was the first on behalf of the regional accrediting organization since 1957.

In finding that the College is achieving its mission, the report of the committee observed, "When many are predicting the early demise of the liberal arts college, it is both encouraging and refreshing to find a college which somehow seems to be characterized by a spirit of courage and optimism."

Serving on the evaluation team with Dr. Huntley were Louis W. Bender, Director, Bureau of Community Colleges, Pennsylvania Department of Public Instruction; Joseph H. Brewer, Associate Librarian, Queens College, Flushing, N.Y.; Patricia M. Graham, Assistant Professor of Education, Head of Teacher Training Program, Barnard College, Columbia University; Sister M. Brendan McQuillan, President, Marymount College, Tarrytown, N.Y.; Alexander G. Sidar, Jr., Dean of Administration, Somerset County College, Somerville, N.J.; Vincent P. Stouter, Chairman, Department of Biology, Canisius College, Buffalo, N.Y.; Sister M. Thecla, Executive Vice President and Professor of English, Seton Hill College, Greensburg, Pa.

The process of self-evaluation for Middle States accreditation began more than a year before Dr. Huntley and his colleagues visited. Every aspect of the College was studied by the faculty and administration, and a lengthy summary of findings and recommendations was printed. This document was studied by the team members prior to their visit so that they would have a clear idea of what the campus community thought of itself.

The visiting team acknowledged a "tremendous transformation" at the College in the last three decades. It took particular note of

- President Helfferich's "forceful leadership";
- steady progress in faculty salaries;
- important additions to the physical plant;
- support from dedicated Board members;
- "The significant number of graduates who have made the annual giving program an appreciable factor in the operating budget";
- an uncommonly prudent management ("each dollar has been carefully and thoughtfully spent");
- The high level of dedication characteristic of many faculty people.

Middle States Association team finds "solid accomplishment"

Dr. Huntley and his team in their three-day visit tried to capture the special "flavor" of Ursinus. The Committee felt that a strong identification with the values of the church led to a "pervasive kindness and concern for the well being and growth of its students." For the same reason, the committee felt it saw "an insistence upon a strict code of personal conduct and conformity somewhat unusual in today's permissiveness."

The committee also observed that Ursinus has an income level that leaves little room for the academic "luxuries" that enhance the collegiate atmosphere.

It commented on what appeared to be an undue regard for what outsiders think of the College. "The visitor finds this something of a puzzle, for Ursinus would appear to have shoulders of sufficient breadth that it can accept a somewhat more free and spontaneous expression from its students and faculty."

In its self-evaluation the faculty and administration pinpointed with a good deal of precision the areas in which advancement is necessary.

In broad outline, the ten-year development program appearing on the back cover of this issue is designed to raise the funds to deal with the major problems of the College.

Representative comments

The evaluating team reinforced and underscored areas for advancement and in some instances offered suggestions for solution. Following is a report of representative comments and suggestions.

Scholarly activity. An intensification of the atmosphere for "intellectual excitement" was recommended. (The creation of a Research Fund is part of the ten-year program, along with an increase in the assignment of gifts to the educational and general budget. The intention to limit teaching load should also contribute to this end.)

Promotion and Tenure. The evaluating team suggested establishment of an advisory faculty-administration committee on salaries, tenure and promotion.

Administrative Structure. A realignment of teaching and administrative functions was suggested. Age and service limitations on Board membership also were suggested.

Curriculum change. Although commending the greater flexibility brought into being by the Ursinus Plan, adopted in 1966, the team concurred with the College "in finding the Plan still too conservative when greater innovation had been hoped for." It recommended further experimentation with the aid of consultants and greater released time to coordinate details. The team made reference to the problem of understaffing as it relates to effective curriculum change.

Library. The team generally endorsed plans for the new library, and in particular said "the projected ultimate goal of 300,000 volumes seems none too big." (The ten-year development program calls for $500,000 in gift income toward the budget for new books.)

Student Affairs. The team felt some thought should be given to appointing a Dean of Students to "coordinate this area and give clearer direction to the entire student life program."

Financial Aid. The team observed that, while the financial aid office appears to function well, the College is fully aware of its very real need for a sizeable increase in its scholarship funds. (The ten-year development program calls for an increase of $2,300,000 in scholarship funds.)

Admissions. The team commended the admissions officers on their experience and knowledge and the high standard of judging candidates for entrance. They urged a widening of the racial and the economic diversity of the student body, goals already in the plans of the College. It was also suggested that as two-year community colleges in the area develop, Ursinus might give greater attention to the possibility of transfers from those colleges to Ursinus in the junior and senior years.

Fiscal matters. The evaluation report commended the College's "envious position of financial stability." "It seems readily apparent that the institution enjoys sound management practices, perhaps in some measure because its chief officer is widely experienced in the business world."

Regarding fund-raising, the team recommended a single coordinating agency be designed to be responsible for all fund-raising by the college. (Steps toward an integrated Development Department in fact were far along at the time of the evaluation, and it has now been set up and is in operation.)

Physical Facilities. The College was commended for the maintenance of the physical plant. The team concurred in the College's own concern about efficient use of small older buildings and the provision of adequate offices for all faculty members.

On some specific recommendations, the view of the visiting team and that of the College administration may have differed. But in general there was a clear consensus on Ursinus's present strengths, and on the direction it should take in the future.

The evaluation team concluded, "One leaves the campus with the feeling that if Ursinus can continue the growth in quality which has been true of the last quarter century, its future is secure." □

WHAT IS A COLLEGE?

A graduating senior sees it as a safety valve and a channeling device

by PATRICIA (LEOPOLD) PARK, '68

Leslie White, a noted twentieth century cultural anthropologist, makes a distinction between the terms evolution and revolution. Because he is a cultural, and not a physical anthropologist, I find his distinctions valid for this article. According to White, the process of evolution pertains to quantitative changes that occur within the framework of a particular system, whereas that of revolution pertains to qualitative changes that precipitate a radical transformation. We of the twentieth century find ourselves in a social revolution, and not a social evolution. Why?

First, I believe that the turmoil in which twentieth century man is involved encompasses an area more vast than just the Vietnam War or the Civil Rights issue. Nor is this type of turmoil peculiar to America. Look at the Quebec separatist movement, the guerilla warfare in Guatemala and Bolivia, the recent student riots and workers' strikes in France, the apartheid controversy in South Africa, or the student revolts in West Berlin and Rome. However, when one glances over these examples, it appears the majority are student- or youth-oriented protests. The same is true of the United States with the recent examples of Columbia, Northwestern, Colorado, Howard, Cheyney, and even Ursinus as evidence of this trend. With the advent of mass student activism at Berkeley, the character of American colleges and universities began a painful metamorphosis, the final outcome of which we have yet to witness.

In past months, I have been asked repeatedly by people of varying ages, interests, and occupations what driving force exists within my generation that motivates us to protest what we term "the injustices of our society and our educational system" with such loud vehemence, and at times, unfortunately, with violence.

My answer to this query brings me to my second reason for believing we are in the middle of a revolution. The

A COMMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

The Journal asked Mrs. Park to write the following article in order to acquaint readers with the viewpoint of a graduating senior on the respective roles of the student and the college in a period of widespread talk about social and institutional change.

It is hardly necessary to point out that Mrs. Park speaks for no one but herself. Undoubtedly there are those in her class who agree with her and others who do not. Some alumni readers may sympathize with her point of view; undoubtedly many will not, or at least will question some of her assumptions (she admits her father does not agree).

Commenting on the article at the editor's request, President Donald L. Hefferich, '21, said: "I enjoyed reading Pat's article because as I know her, she has a serious concern for the welfare of higher education. However, I see the relationship between a college and the 'real' world in a rather different light. A college cannot—and in my view should not—be completely representative of the society around it. A college has a special purpose, the transmission of accumulated knowledge and the stimulation of young intellects to add to that store of knowledge and perhaps thereby someday to attain wisdom. A college must limit itself to particular functions if it is to achieve such an ambitious purpose. It cannot hope to provide all the confrontations with reality that go into making the well-developed individual. Perhaps the best it can do is to pose the right questions about what Pat calls a 'viable philosophy' and to make possible a sampling of the experiences that lie in wait after graduation.

"I believe that as presently structured our own college is capable of channeling the tensions that students experience. I do not believe it is unrealistic to have rules on alcohol, dormitory visits, women's hours and the like.

"Students are highly mobile, both intellectually and emotionally. They are in rapid transition. Without giving up their civil rights, they are in a kind of voluntary servitude to the words and thoughts of others. They do not often realize that very soon that servitude will end and they no longer will be classed as students. It is only when they cease to be students that they can become truly effective agents within the body of society.

"Like Pat, I want our students to be more concerned with the burning social issues of the day than they are. I know the College takes greater initiative in this than is apparent to students. But I hope that they spend the great portion of their time in thoughtful preparation in basic knowledge so that they will have enlightened concern when they take up the business of running the world. I believe my generation does better than did former generations and that the next generation will do better than mine.

"I'm convinced that the colleges have a responsibility to promote the widely accepted traditions of America, its virtues and its accomplishments, and to show ways to correct the mistakes and to help strengthen the weaknesses. It has been the quality of education in the United States that has made our country great.

"Someone has called the colleges and universities important custodians of civilization. Ursinus cannot maintain that role and be a place where undergraduates are exempt from the consequences of their own action or inaction."

student of today has succeeded in articulating the heretofore unspeakable schizophrenia from which any man who reflects to the slightest degree upon the acts of mankind in the twentieth century suffers—who reflects upon all the cliché-ridden phenomena of our de-personalized, technological mass society. Man's civilization is at its zenith, but man is still a beast within the labyrinth. Our generation is not alone in suffering from this schizophrenia, but we have been, it seems to me, the first to articulate it in group form.

In fact, we have succeeded so completely in articulating it that we are in danger of being overwhelmed by it. Like the second-generation child of immigrant parents who finds himself in a cultural crossfire, the student of today finds himself in a psychological crossfire between his id and society's ego. He feels he must either speak out or drop out. He wants to effect qualitative changes in a system which he can no longer accept because he cannot reconcile the gap between what is preached and what is practiced.

PATRICIA (LEOPOLD) PARK, '68, majored in French, plans to study sociology in graduate school. At Ursinus she was co-chairman of the Student Long-Term Planning Committee, was a member of Omega Chi, and participated in the Y-sponsored tutoring program. Since her marriage to James S. Park shortly after graduation, Pat is living in Los Angeles, California.

It is in this critical area that I believe the responsibilities of the college to the American social revolution lie. The foundations upon which America was built and the nature of our constitution beg the individual to speak out, to protest against what one considers to be injustices and inequalities. To know how to protest responsibly is imperative. To know how to react to responsible protest is equally imperative. The American College has the opportunity to become one of the most significant forces in this revolution by acting as a safety valve and as a channeling device.

More realistic environment

With the allowance that, to some degree, I, and those of my generation, are propelled by the impetuosity of youth, I envision the College as a highly effective safety valve to release tensions that accumulate when our grievances go unlistened to, or, if listened to are not taken seriously. In many instances, I believe the student demands on campuses for open dorms, abolishment of women's hours, and other such reforms of a social nature are manifestations of the desire on the part of most students, not to obtain license for social chaos, but rather to create the more realistic social conditions under which they would be living if upon graduation from high school they had chosen to work in industry instead of entering college.

This same desire for a more realistic environment can be seen in the student's increased interest in the revamping of college curriculums or his wish for new courses in sociology, in Negro-African History, in nuclear physics, etc. The days when a student wished to sit in his ivy-covered tower and contemplate with a scornful eye the turmoil happening outside the campus are gone. The college student of 1968 does not want his campus to be a sterile laboratory free from the bacteria of everyday social experience. He wants more than a degree in a specific field. More important, he wants to develop as an individual, to create his own viable philosophy that is a combination of his knowledge of people as well as his knowledge of facts. The student wishes to formulate his ideals and his values within the context of a pluralistic environment where he can test them against the "cold, hard facts of reality." If a college can achieve this social realism, it leaves the students as well as administrators and faculty free to devote their creative energies to the more pressing political and social issues of the day.

Concern for larger issues

Ursinus, I feel, would do well to strive for this atmosphere. Recently, when the members of the evaluating team of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools were asked their opinion of the six Ursinus students with whom they had lunch (of which I was one), they expressed their disappointment that we, as students, were not more concerned with the larger issues of the times—i.e. Vietnam, Civil Rights. We seemed to dwell upon campus-centered issues in our discussions. Having heard this remark, I re-evaluated the activities in which I was engaged and I discovered that the majority of my political activities were campus-oriented and involved in some form or another an effort to obtain what I considered a more realistic social atmosphere on campus. I found myself in a world where classes could be cancelled in order to make Easter Monday a holiday, but where they could not be cancelled for an afternoon to bring the entire college community together for three hours of spontaneous discussion of and possible solution to campus problems and tensions. At Swarthmore College, the college community considered its internal problems important enough to cancel classes for a week—a week in which faculty, administrators, and students sat down together and talked about these issues. This is the type of activity that yields responsible constructive action because the issues are brought into the open and squarely confronted.

More than bricks and mortar

By creating a realistic social atmosphere, a college would become more than bricks and mortar and a five-day week of classes for the student. He would see the college as part of the world-at-large because its environment would be basically representative of the world-at-large. In this context the college could act as an effective vehicle to channel social and political protest into constructive forms. The college community would become to the student a unit through which he could function effectively in society.

In the past few years, Ursinus has taken some positive steps in this direction through the "Y" which sponsors such activities as tutoring programs in local communities and voter registration projects in the Southern States during Spring vacation. But this is only a meager beginning. The very fact that most activities that involve more than the campus with few exceptions originate with the students indicates, to me, the lack of initiative on the part of the College to encourage student participation in such areas.

I do not believe that Ursinus is alone in its inadequate response to our social revolution, nor has it failed entirely to respond to this revolution. There have been several steps forward in the past year—the formation of a united student government, the involvement of students in long-term planning of the college, the presence of a student delegation before the Board of Directors to present the student body's grievances on faculty re-hiring policy. However, these are only first steps. They will mean little if they are not followed by stronger and bolder ones in the direction of creating a college community with a sense of purpose as an effective organ within the body of society.

Memories vivid for granddaughter of founder J. H. A. Bomberger

I remember my grandfather's long white beard, even though I was only eight when he died in 1890. It impressed me very much."

When Miss Marion Spangler, '03, reminisces about her childhood, it has a special significance for those interested in Ursinus. Her grandfather was Dr. John H. A. Bomberger, founder and first president of the College. And she herself has had a life-long association with Ursinus, both in personal terms and in her capacity as dedicated teacher of music.

It was against this rich Ursinus background that the 1968 Annual Alumni Award was presented to Miss Spangler on Alumni Day June 1.

Not all of Miss Spangler's memories of her noted grandfather are as vivid as her memory of his long white beard. "I do remember that his study was the room in the preceptress's living room of what is now Shreiner Hall for girls. I remember his taking me on his knee in that room and showing me the flat little throat lozenges used by smokers. He was a great pipe smoker.

"My grandfather was pastor at St. Luke's Reformed Church in Trappe, and so was my father—that's why I remain a member there, out of loyalty to them. I wish I could recall my grandfather's voice in the pulpit, but I can't honestly say I do."

One of the most poignant mementoes of Dr. Bomberger for Miss Spangler came to light just a few months ago when she was leafing through some family belongings. It was a postcard from Heidelberg, Germany, dated August 1, 1884, addressed to "My Dear Wee Marion," who was all of two years old.

"That summer," said Miss Spangler, "after fifteen struggling years to keep the new College alive, Dr. Bomberger was appointed a delegate to a church conference at Belfast, Ireland. What impelled him to go on to the Continent unless it was a powerful urge to seek the scene of the influence prevalent at Heidelberg and thus rekindle his own flame of College leadership?"

Over a now-fading drawing of the castle and town of Heidelberg, Dr. Bomberger wrote the following message which was not read by its recipient until after a lapse of 85 years: "Grandpa wants to write a little letter to you too, though you will hardly know even what it means. But I hope you will live to know, and then after a long time you will be glad to look at this card and read it, and to think that I had you in mind and heart far off here, and wrote and sent this to you from the place of which the above is a small but very good picture. The Lord bless you, and spare you to do much good in the world. Your affectionate Grandpa, J. H. A. Bomberger."

To visit Miss Spangler in Studio Cottage on the east end of the campus is literally to step into local history. Miss Spangler's home was originally a Perkiomen boat house, and looked far different than it does today. After Miss Spangler's father, The Rev. Henry T. Spangler, retired as third President of Ursinus College in 1904, and moved to Philadelphia, the house was used as a family summer home in the country. For many years the large music studio built into the cottage has been the focal point of the musical life Miss Spangler has woven around herself and her many friends, students and fellow artists.

That musical life had its beginnings on the Ursinus campus at the turn of the century when Miss Spangler was an undergraduate and her father occupied the Presidency.

"The College was small and more isolated than it is today—the old Perkiomen Railroad was your one way of getting into Philadelphia. So the College of necessity provided its own entertainment and pastimes."

The forbidden forest

In addition to music recitals, Miss Spangler and her fellow students looked to the two rival literary societies for diversion—the Schaff Literary Society and the Zwingli Literary Society. They held weekly meetings that became very social affairs, and put on annual open houses.

"And then my father introduced monthly receptions at Olevian Hall. They were very formal affairs with a receiving line. There was a great objection among many of us students, but we realized later that they did something for us in the social graces."

Many of Miss Spangler's memories of Ursinus have a tie with the places on and near the campus.

Prospect Terrace, for instance, is seldom mentioned in personal histories of the College. But Prospect Terrace was the fashionable watering place of the wealthy Drew family which stood where the Alumni Memorial Library now stands. And for Miss Spangler, it is a vivid memory. Her home, Studio Cottage, is on part of the property that made up Prospect Terrace.

"It was like the forbidden forest when I was little. Nobody ever stepped into the grounds east of Bomberger Hall. The building burned down in 1897, before Studio Cottage was there."

The memory of Dr. Bomberger in his study in Shreiner leads her to think of her own residence in the same building. "Dr. Bomberger built what is now Shreiner and named it Zwingli Hof. He lived in it himself and willed it to the College for use by the President. Our family moved in when my father became President in 1893. But the name Zwingli Hof never became familiar, and no presidents lived in the house after that.

"Since early childhood, my home has been in five houses still standing on the east, west and south edge of the campus. . . . I saw Bomberger Hall rise from a baseball field on the east campus. . . . and now I am to see grand old Freeland Hall disappear for a more adequate library."

Miss Spangler studied piano and music in Philadelphia, New York and Berlin following her graduation from Ursinus. Her year in Berlin in 1913-14 was terminated abruptly with the outbreak of hostilities. Her voice teacher there, a man named Lowe, combined a knowledge of Italian opera with that of German Lieder—a combination not very common then. Lowe was a personal friend of Brahms (“who would chide him for wanting to conduct opera”). So Miss Spangler attributes her mastery of German Lieder to the fact that she learned them by “direct transmission.”

Her musical career took three parallel tracks—those of Octave Club leader, director of music and choir at Washington Memorial Chapel in Valley Forge, and teacher.

The Octave Club of Norristown was founded by Miss Spangler in 1916, and it still flourishes today under her influence with some 250 members. It began when Miss Spangler invited a group of Norristown women to a lecture recital on old English songs. For about 30 of the Club’s 52 years, Miss Spangler directed the Club’s chorus and continues to direct the “Madrigal Singers.”

Europe revisited

Miss Spangler was music director and choirmaster at Valley Forge’s Washington Memorial Chapel from 1919 to 1954. In those years she saw members of her boys’ choir grow to manhood and join the adult group also under her direction.

As a teacher of music, Miss Spangler has been associated with Ursinus off and on throughout her career. She taught at Agnes Scott College for Girls in Decatur, Georgia in 1908-10; at Harcourt Place School in Gambier, Ohio, in 1911-13; and at Haverford Boys School, 1930-39.

Meanwhile, her own musical training continued. After her year in Berlin in 1913-14, she attended what is now Juilliard School of Music and studied music theory at Curtis Institute shortly after it opened in the 1920s.

Miss Spangler re-visited Europe in 1958, although she did not see again the Berlin she enjoyed as a young voice student. Her ’58 trip, however, was as musically oriented as her previous European trip, for it was a round of visits to music festivals both on the Continent and in Great Britain.

One of the high points of that trip of 10 years ago was the 231st Festival of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Gloucester and Hereford Cathedrals. In a record of her trip she wrote, “With a program for the week of a dozen oratorios, old and new, the Norman arches of ancient Hereford Cathedral resounded with such singing as only English choirs of several hundred voices can produce. Supported by the London Symphony Orchestra the harmonies rose and reverberated. When concluded with the thousand listeners joining in the singing, the emotions of heart and mind added overwhelming conviction to the hymn, ‘God moves in a mysterious way.’”

Commenting on modern music in an interview with the Philadelphia Inquirer on March 24 of this year, Miss Spangler said, “I’m not terribly enamored of it, I’ll admit. I like the classical composers best. I don’t like modern dissonance; however I do listen to it. Modern music may develop into something worthwhile within the next century, so it’s futile to say there’s nothing to it. You can’t tell. Even Beethoven was decried in his time.”

Dr. Super’s flute

Miss Spangler is particularly troubled by the effect of popular music on the singing voices of young people. “I think it distorts their real voices and destroys the purity of the vocal line. This destroys art.”

Despite her quick recall of the names, faces and events of many years ago, it becomes evident in a discussion with Miss Spangler that these are less essential in her life than the musical experiences she has shared with scores of people through the years.

The sound of Theodore Paxton (Nelson Eddy’s long-time accompanist) at the organ . . . the turn of phrase of Lili Lehmann delivering German lieder in Berlin. . . . The way Dr. Super, the College’s second president, played the flute . . . Beethoven’s Fidelio in Salzburg . . . Conducting Gounod’s Redemption at the Ursinus commencement in 1923 . . . Such are the events around which Miss Spangler articulates the memories of a life which has been perhaps mild on the outside but intensely fulfilling and exciting within. □

ALUMNI CLASSES SUPPORT COLLEGE IN 1967-1968

Ursinus alumni again in 1967-68 demonstrated their loyalty by contributing generously to the operation and improvement of the College. Appearing below is a summary by class of all gifts from alumni.

In addition to the annual appeal for gifts by class Loyalty Fund chairmen, some alumni were also visited during the last two months of the fiscal year by solicitors in the special All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive. Of the generous pledges obtained for the Drive, $16,442.56 already was paid in by alumni by June 30. A separate column has been created to show these gifts. The "Total Class Support" column at far right gives the complete picture of alumni class loyalty.

The Loyalty Fund appeal was for gifts to the operating budget of the College or to the general or scholarship endowments.

Through the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive, gifts are being sought from alumni strictly for capital expenditure for a new library, new science building, new gymnasium and swimming pool, and renovated student center.

A complete list of names of alumni supporters, with special recognition for Club 100 and President's Club contributors, will be listed in the Development Department's Achievement Report in September.

Loyalty Fund Chairman George S. Spohn, '42, had capable help from an energetic Executive Committee.

A key sub-committee, class contact, was led by Mrs. Diana Degerberg, '53, and Mrs. Elizabeth Hendricks, '49. These alumnae sparked the class chairmen with numerous ideas and a display of energy to provide an example for the chairmen to follow. They met with, dined, wrote to, called up, talked to, spoke with, joked, chided, and they may have even wept—with joy we hope—to help the class contact effort. They have succeeded.

Mr. Robert Geist also helped greatly. As the Vice-chairman he provided his presiding talents on occasions when Mr. Spohn could not. Mr. Geist gave freely of his time and advice in setting strategy for the Loyalty Fund.

The most important people we can applaud are the 442 Club 100 members and the 34 President's Club for a total of 476 very special and loyal alumni. The 2202 people who contributed to Ursinus through the Loyalty Fund are the backbone of support for the College.

Alumni of Ursinus are a group of people whom the College must seek help from. The help has always been given in good measure. But we may not rest. More is possible, more is expected and in this 100th anniversary period it is reasonable to believe that Ursinus alumni are ready to place their college high on their list of philanthropic priority. The College is justifiably proud of its alumni. They stand among the best in America.

Call it animal faith, if you like

by LINDA (HOYER) UPDIKE, '23

Linda (Hoyer) Updike, mother of novelist John Updike, has published a number of short stories in the New Yorker: "Translation" in March 11, '61; "A Predisposition to Enchantment" in March 13, '63; "The Burning Bush," in October 1, '66; "The Predator," in May 13, '67.

How did it happen—that juxtaposition of "A Predisposition to Enchantment" and "The Bulgarian Poetess"—in one of the March issues of The New Yorker Magazine three years ago? More exactly, the question was, "Would you be at all disposed to elaborate on the circumstances of that effort for the benefit of the readers of the Ursinus magazine—or, indeed, in general on the two-way literary influence that seems to have taken place between you and your son?" The very welcome letter (from Mr. Richter written at the suggestion of your President), including this question, reached me just the day before Tom Wolfe's first article about The New Yorker Magazine and the odd couples that contribute to it was printed in Sunday's edition of The New York Tribune. If you happened to see that edition of that newspaper, you will remember that Mr. Wolfe's handling of the fact that two Updike stories were in the same issue of The New Yorker was both full and fulsome.

As an old reader of The New Yorker Magazine and still-hopeful contributor to it, I was amazed by the Wolfe pieces. Certainly, at the time, more words on the subject of "mother-son efforts" did not seem to be in my vocabulary. Such words are not easily come by—even now. After three whole years, however, it surely is not too soon to answer—in celebration of our graduation with the class of 1923—a letter from Ursinus College, a letter with a special place in my collection of letters.

Getting back to the question of the two Updike stories in one issue of The New Yorker, we might say, simply, that it was the result of a lay-out man's sense of humor. Helen Hokinson's spirit still lives in that gray building with the big white number, 25, above its entrance on Forty-third Street in New York and the delicate laughter of her over-fed "girls" is not really ended there. Last May, you may remember, "The Predator," a sad little story about an old woman and her cat, appeared in the Mother's Day issue while a prescient male goat munched May flowers on the cover. Its humor, although somewhat diffident, is not dead. But who, in the Ursinus community, needs to be told that?

A word abides

The fact of the presence of two stories—the one by "Linda Grace Hoyer" and the other by "John Updike"—in the hands, together, of those shyly smiling lay-out men at 25 West Forty-third Street, New York City is not easy to explain. There is an old proverb (quoted by Isaac Bashevis Singer in a short story called "Big and Little" in his Short Friday collection of short stories) that says, "A blow heals but a word abides." Perhaps everyone who really believes that proverb can, with love, patience, and a sense of humor, learn to write like Isaac Bashevis Singer.

Perhaps this is the whole truth. But, if I may quote from another old proverb, "You can't prove it by me."

Famous novelist's mother comments on literary influences

Nor is it likely that I will ever learn to write as well as, fifty years ago, I hopefully believed I was going to be able to write. And this failure surprises me immeasurably more than my first sale to The New Yorker did—which does not mean that the latter was not an unexpected delight at the age of fifty-five. After eight years, the last line of Miss MacKenzie's first letter of acceptance has lost none of its breath-taking magic: "To come on writing like 'Translation' is like coming on treasure, and I am so pleased that Mr. Shawn has asked me to be your editor." But I was less surprised than Tom Wolfe and Miss Kitty Sembower (of The Reading Record) were, almost five years later, when "A Predisposition to Enchantment" and "The Bulgarian Poetess" appeared, side by side, in my favorite magazine.

More recently, an article in a national magazine paid me the double-edged compliment of this description: "a cosmopolitan, well-educated writer . . . since John blazed the way." Ideally, a writer finds the "way" alone—as John did. If parents can contribute anything to a writer's success, it is, I suspect—having shown him both humor and love—an awareness of their own belief that "as the old proverb says, a blow heals but a word abides." Others will teach the miserable denial that says, "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words can never hurt me." And a would-be writer can be undone by this song, or even less.

"A blow heals, but a word abides." My father tried with little success to teach me this proverb when I was a child. Words and blows were equally painful to me then, I imagine, and in our house both were so often used to remedy my behaviour that I could not choose between them.

Belatedly, therefore, I have learned the old proverb and, from time to time, when severe critical blows are being dealt to him, I repeat it for John Updike's benefit.

A world of seeming

As we know, in a speech delivered at The Rockefeller Institute, in 1964, on "The Uses of Literature in an Age of Science," Joseph Wood Krutch elaborated on "the old proverb" as follows: "Call it animal faith, if you like. But whatever you call it, our active, our emotional, and a large part of our intellectual life continues (and probably will continue as long as we are recognizable as the kind of creatures we now are) to have its being in a world of seeming rather than in the world of scientific facts. Even if you are inclined to dismiss literature as no more than an account of the universe as it really isn't, such is the universe of appearances which is in many ways more real to us than any other. If we did not have animal faith, we could not survive; and, at a minimum, literature helps us to retain an animal faith by which we can live in our human world."

It follows then that, having learned to read, we are dependent upon the writer for survival—to some degree, at least. And since this very personal essay is intended to be amusing, if not encouraging, to both the readers and writers of this magazine, I hope that I may be forgiven this final quotation—a quotation, really, within a quotation—from a recent letter sent to us by a writer.

"Susan left a note in the bathroom today, it reads, 'Daer Momy the toylot is baroken from Susan' I do like people who plunge into the English language unafraid."

So do I. In fact, I envy them. □

All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive

The first giant step into the College's second century

- NEW LIBRARY
- NEW GYMNASIUM AND SWIMMING POOL
- NEW SCIENCE BUILDING
- NEW STUDENT CENTER

Thirty-eight per cent of the $2,900,000 goal of the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive was credited in gifts and pledges by the end of July 1968. And that did not count the $500,000 challenge pledge from the Longwood Foundation.

Thus the most far-reaching fund-raising effort in the College's history was well along as plans for the 100th anniversary of the College began taking shape.

The All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive is seeking the private support necessary to construct three buildings on the campus and to renovate the present library into a student center. The three buildings are the new library, new gymnasium with swimming pool and new science building.

The total cost of constructing these four projects will be an estimated $5,552,000. The $2,652,000 balance is being sought from federal sources. So far a grant of $645,000 and a loan of $895,000 have been given final government approval toward the cost of the library. The College will seek similar amounts for the gymnasium and pool when preliminary architectural plans are completed.

The Drive is seeking gifts from all possible sources in order to meet the $2,900,000 goal — Board, alumni, friends, parents, corporations, foundations, staff and students.

Special gifts sought through fall & winter

In a campaign of this type a certain schedule of gifts is needed to assure success. Based on experience at similar colleges in similar campaigns the Drive must obtain six to ten gifts over $100,000; three such already have been counted, again excluding the Longwood challenge. Thirty to 35 gifts of $10,000 or more are needed; at the end of July the Drive had ten such gifts in this range. The cultivation of these major gifts is the responsibility of the National Steering Committee under the leadership of National Chairman Paul I. Guest, '38.

At the special gift level, the Drive needs 125 to 135 gift pledges of $1,000 or more. Last spring special gift committees began to work toward this goal in Montgomery County and Greater Philadelphia areas. Similar committees in the New England region and the Mid-Atlantic region now are being formed. The Drive will concentrate on special gifts throughout the fall and winter.

Meanwhile, plans will be made for a general campaign to begin sometime next year. This will give everyone not previously approached an opportunity to make a commitment to this effort.

The All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive constitutes the first phase of a ten-year development program which was officially begun last fiscal year. The elements of that program are listed on the back cover of this issue.

In addition to the four goals of the Drive, the first phase of the ten-year program also includes a new administration building and a new women's dormitory. Both of these projects can be undertaken without gift income, and are therefore not considered part of the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive.

Although Phase II, Teaching and Scholarship Improvement, is dated 1970-1977, some gift income last year was assigned to the General Educational operating budget, to Endowment for faculty salaries and benefits, to Endowment for Student Aid, and to Academic Equipment. And more gift income will be added to these non-capital objectives this year and next, even while the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive for capital purposes is in full swing.

For this reason the Alumni Loyalty Fund is being continued as a separate fund-raising activity during the period of the Drive: the gifts to the Loyalty Fund will be allocated to the General Educational budget or to Endowment. In this way advances will be made on a broad front.

Alumni of the College as well as others will thus be asked to contribute twice. First they will be reached as they have been every year by their class Loyalty Fund chairman and asked for their traditional annual gift. And second they will be asked to make a pledge to the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive to help build the needed buildings. While this approach is something new for Ursinus people, it is the one long followed in most colleges with an organized program for advancement.

The Board of Directors of the College has taken a leading role in the Drive. So far Board members have given and/or pledged over $600,000 dollars, and some discussions have not yet been completed.

The Executive Council of the Drive is made up of seven distinguished members of the Board. Honorary Chairman is William Elliott, Chairman of the Board of Philadelphia Life Insurance Company. Honorary Co-Chairman is Philip L. Corson, Chairman of the Board of G. & W. H. Corson, Inc., Plymouth Meeting.

National Chairman of the Drive is Paul I. Guest, Esq., '38. Serving with Mr. Guest is William D. Reimert, '24, President of the Board of Directors; Joseph T. Beardwood III, '51, Alumni Association President and newly elected member of the Board of Directors; Roy Wenhold, M.D., '42, also a new Board member; and Donald L. Hefferich, '21, President of the College.

Leading the three major geographical areas are: in Montgomery County, W. Robert Deemer, '47, Chairman, and Louis D. Stefan, '50, Co-Chairman; in Greater Philadelphia, Thomas A. Van Tries, '38, Chairman, and C. Stewart Hebden, '45, Co-Chairman; in the other Area Campaigns, William F. Heefner, '42, Chairman.

As the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive gains momentum and more and more alumni are asked to serve and to contribute to it, all of these leaders will be looking for enthusiastic support unequalled in the 100 years since Ursinus was founded. □

SCHEDULE OF GIFTS

On the basis of the records of successful Capital Campaigns for other colleges, and our record of voluntary support by our Alumni and friends, we make the following estimates as to the size and number of gifts that will be required to achieve $2,900,000:

Gift Range	Number of Gifts Needed	Minimum Amount
$100,000 — plus	6 — 10	$1,608,000
10,000 — plus	30 — 35	360,000
1,000 — plus	120 — 135	288,000
Under $1,000	All others	144,000

$2,400,000

Plus from Longwood Foundation

from the President

On this page, I was tempted to join the legion of those knowledgeable and otherwise who have been writing about the abstract principles that are bothering young and old these days as though the principles were absolutely true or false. I believe the real question is how far are they true and to what extent the truth they contain justifies their extension into circumstances very different from those that gave them utterance.

The colleges have the responsibility of searching for the true limits between conflicting principles and of showing students how common these conflicts are in the world of affairs and how much the right limit varies with particular conditions.

I have resisted the temptation first because, at the request of the editor, I already have reacted to some of the ideas of the younger generation on page 15; and second because I want to urge the alumni to play their proper part in the changes being planned for the College by the Board of Directors, the faculty and staff, and the students.

In the last five years, many important changes have taken place. The curriculum was given greater breadth and depth through the new Ursinus Plan. In particular it introduced anthropology, fine arts, world literature. A greater awareness of the creative arts was cultivated, evidenced most recently by the acquisition of a collection of fine Japanese prints from Dr. Philip Berman. Faculty salaries have increased sharply over the last five years.

Through continuing self-study, the College has formulated a ten-year development program of further improvement in the academic program and in the physical plant. In order to make that program a reality, the College needs the concerted support of its alumni. We have supported the College in the past; we must support it in even larger measure so that the greatness inherent in the institution will come to fruition.

I believe we have conceived a challenging but realistic plan for raising the support needed in the ten-year program. For the immediate future, we must raise $2,900,000 for urgent capital construction through the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive. We are looking to a handful of alumni—perhaps 30 or 35—who have the capability of giving the truly philanthropic gifts that will enable us to reach the Drive goal—gifts starting with five figures. We are looking to perhaps 135 alumni for special gifts of $1,000 to $10,000. And before the Drive ends, we will look to all other alumni for a generous pledge to complete the program.

Even while this capital fund drive is under way, the College plans to make improvements in the general educational program, in faculty salaries and in tuition aid. We have therefore asked the Alumni Loyalty Fund to continue in full force as a separate annual giving effort. It will support these programmatic areas of the ten-year program. We hope for at least $100,000 for this purpose.

These are challenging times for Ursinus College. Our plans are equal to the challenge. And I know the alumni will help us realize them.

Sincerely,

D. L. Helfferich, '21
President, Ursinus College

FORMER HEAD OF DENOMINATION

DR. JAMES E. WAGNER RETIRES AS VICE-PRESIDENT

The Rev. Dr. James E. Wagner, former denominational executive and since 1962 vice-president of Ursinus College, retired from that office effective June 30.

His retirement brought to a close a professional career of 47 years which included 31 years as a parish minister, eight as head of the Evangelical and Reformed denomination, and the past six years on the Ursinus staff.

He will continue for the present as a consultant to the college and to the Pennsylvania Southeast Conference of the United Church of Christ in the effort which the college is making among the 227 churches of the Conference to raise funds for a Convocation Hall, Chapel, and Conference Headquarters building. This 3-year project is just getting under way.

Dr. Wagner also plans to continue as editor of the Conference's 8-page quarterly newspaper which he has edited since the first issue was published in April, 1963. The paper has a distribution of 46,000.

Dr. Wagner was president of the former Evangelical and Reformed Church 1953-61, and the latter four of those years served also as co-president of the United Church of Christ which was then in process of formation.

His two pastorates included the North Street Church of God, Harrisburg, Pa., 1922-31, and St. Peter's Reformed Church (now United Church of Christ), Lancaster, Pa., 1931-53.

During his years as a denomination executive Dr. Wagner made ten trips overseas to attend ecumenical meetings and to visit chaplains, missionaries, and native church leaders. His overseas travels covered approximately 175,000 miles to 30 countries in Europe, Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

In ecumenical activities he was a member of the General Board of the National Council of Churches from its founding in 1950 until 1961, vice-president of the Council 1954-57 member of the Central (executive) Committee of the World Council of Churches 1954-61; and a member of the Executive Committee of the World Alliance of Reformed and Presbyterian Churches 1954-64, vice-president of the Alliance 1959-64.

In the early '20s Dr. Wagner was a reporter for The Harrisburger (Pa.) Telegraph, and from 1947 to 1953 wrote a weekly column headed "As I See Life" for The Lancaster (Pa.) Advertiser. On his major overseas trips he wrote several series of articles for The Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer Journal.

He is the author of three books. The first, "So You're a Consistoryman!" a manual for elders and deacons in the former Evangelical and Reformed Church. First published in 1949, it was revised and expanded for use in the United Church of Christ in 1965 under title of "Perspectives for a Local Church Officer in the United Church of Christ." A third volume, "Incarnation to Ascension — A Pastoral Interpretation," was published in 1962.

He was married October 30, 1923 to the former Ruth Doutrich Felty, of Elizabethtown, Pa. They have a daughter, Callie W. Hanna, Reading, and three grandchildren.

The clergyman-educator attended the Altoona public schools, received his B.A. degree from Findlay (Ohio) College in 1921, his B.D. degree from Lancaster Theological Seminary in 1931.

He holds six honorary degrees including: D.D., from Franklin and Marshall College (1943), Chicago Theological Seminary (1957), and Findlay College (1959); L.L.D., Ursinus College (1953); Th.D., Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, Hungary (1955); and L.H.D., Heidelberg (Ohio) College (1961).

In 1967 his alma mater, Findlay College, gave him its Distinguished Alumnus Award. In 1958 he received the Knight Commander's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Federal Republic of Germany in recognition of his part in his denomination's relief activities in post-war western Germany. □

Development Department Increases Staff

PLANNING • FUND RAISING • ALUMNI RELATIONS • PUBLIC RELATIONS

Henry R. (Ted) Taylor

Frank Smith

Donald C. Estes

With the addition of two new members to the administrative staff, the College has taken a step toward the establishment of a more logically organized Development Department.

Mr. Frank Smith has been appointed Associate Director of Development. For the next year or more he will devote nearly all of his time to helping execute the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive for the $2.9 million needed for capital construction. Mr. Smith was a Development Associate at Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., prior to joining the Ursinus staff. He had also served as Director of Development at Monticello College. A graduate of Lincoln Memorial University, Mr. Smith has served twenty-three years in the Air Force. His rank on leaving active duty several years ago was Lt. Colonel.

Mr. Henry R. (Ted) Taylor has been appointed Director of Public Relations. Mr. Taylor comes to Ursinus from the Drexel Institute of Technology, where he has been Assistant Director of Public Relations and director of sports information.

He is a graduate of Temple University, had four years of experience in newspaper work in Montgomery County before entering college publicity work. Mr. Taylor will edit all regular college publications, including this magazine, handle all news and sports publicity, write and produce promotional literature and handle special public relations projects. Mr. Taylor will apply his skills to the promotional projects related to the celebration of the College Centennial in 1969-70.

Correlate activities

The newly organized Development Department is under the direction of Assistant to the President, Richard P. Richter, '53. Mr. Richter, who is chairman of the Staff Long-Term Planning Committee, will seek to correlate the activities of the Development Department with the evolving long-term policies of the institution as a whole.

There are three major functions in the Development Department: Alumni Relations, Public Relations and Fund-Raising. All three of these functions are now located in Zwingli Hall, 620 Main Street, where Mr. Richter, Mr. Taylor and Mr. Donald C. Estes have their offices.

The area of Fund-Raising is subdivided into three distinct activities: (1) annual giving from all sources (this includes the Loyalty Fund); (2) future giving, which includes bequests, life income contracts, annuities, life insurance policies, etc; (3) capital campaigns, which means the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive and the special chapel appeal.

Because of the broad scope of the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive, a completely separate office has been set up in South Hall for the duration of the campaign. Mr. Smith has his office there. Mr. Richter is staff director of the Drive. Mr. Smith and Mr. Estes are giving staff support to the volunteer committees in the areas, and Mr. Taylor is responsible for producing promotional materials.

The Alumni Office will remain under the direction of Mr. Estes, and he will be backed up by Mr. Richter and other staff members as needed. Meetings and letters on behalf of Loyalty Fund will continue to be an Alumni Office responsibility, but the receipt and record-keeping of Loyalty Fund gift income will be handled by the Fund-Raising Section of the Department.

The major responsibility of the newly aligned Department is to work for the realization of the ten-year development program of $16,977,000 adopted last year, of which the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive is the first phase. □

CHAPTER SCHOLARS

Thirteen members of the 1968 graduating class were elected Chapter Scholars by The Chapter, an association of Ursinus faculty members who hold Phi Beta Kappa keys. Recognition as a Chapter Scholar is granted for breadth of intellectual interests as well as depth in a major.

The Chapter Scholars were honored at a dinner during the spring semester and heard a guest lecture on "Botany and Medicine" by Dr. John M. Fogg, Jr., Director of the Arboretum of the Barnes Foundation.

Chapter Scholars and their majors: Alexis Anderson, English; Lawrence Bernstein, Biology; Linda Dettery, Political Science; Charlotte Frost Feerman, Physics; Jeanne Johnston, Chemistry; Elise Kabcenel, History; Carolyn Meredith, Chemistry; Thomas Miller, Philosophy; Linda Pyle, Spanish; Timothy Rupp, History; Fred Savitz, Political Science; Anderson Smith, History; Ronald Tietjen, Biology.

TAX TIP ON THE SURCHARGE

The special surcharge imposed this year by the federal government will be a tax on the regular tax for income. It follows that the lower the amount paid in regular tax, the lower will be the amount of surcharge paid. A good way to reduce the regular tax is to increase your charitable contributions to Ursinus College. This will channel the money in a direction you want it to go, and will reduce the amount of surcharge paid because it will reduce the amount of your regular tax.

BOARD ELECTS THREE

The Board of Directors of Ursinus College at its May meeting elected three new members: Mr. Russell C. Ball, Jr., President of the Philadelphia Gear Corporation; Roy Wenhold, M.D., '42; and Joseph T. Beardwood, III, '51, who was nominated by the alumni in last spring's elections.

Mr. Ball assumes a place on the College Board occupied for many years by his late father, Russell C. Ball, Sr. Dr. Wenhold and Mr. Beardwood are members of the Executive Council of the All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive. Mr. Beardwood has served for the past three years as President of the Alumni Association.

"Forty for Forty" was the slogan adopted by the committee on arrangements for the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of our graduation from Ursinus. Twenty-four members of the class attended the luncheon at the college on Alumni Day, and that is forty percent of the class. That number was increased by sixteen husbands or wives who joined in the celebration, bringing the total attendance at the class reunion to an exact forty.

KARL THOMPSON, serving as master of ceremonies, gave each member of the class an opportunity to acquaint the group with his activities and accomplishments during the years since graduation. Messages were delivered from some classmates, who were unable to return to the campus at this time.

CHARLOTTE BERGER BONNER, of Olympia, Washington, received recognition and a gift for travelling the greatest distance to attend the reunion.

Dr. Leinbach has performed an operation originated by a British surgeon to replace a hip joint destroyed by arthritis with a head and fixed socket screwed into the pelvis. This marked the first use of the surgical technique in this country.

Dr. Leinbach used his own modification of the prosthesis developed by the British surgeon for the operation. The British firm which manufactured it has used the Leinbach leg component and matched it with the British socket component. He investigated the British surgical method for two years and last September visited the surgeon who originated it. He also assisted the British surgeon in two operations. Both hips were replaced in a simultaneous operation on one patient.

Two important steps toward better understanding of the brain and its functions were announced by a Purdue University research professor.

PROF. ROBERT D. MYERS, of Purdue's Psychology Department outlined:

A totally new method for studying and analyzing chemical factors in the brain in which he demonstrated the world's first known direct intracranial transfer of hypothalamic brain fluid from one conscious animal to another.

Results of a year of tests using this method in which he controlled the temperature of a recipient animal by changing the temperature of the donor animal. The hypothalamic fluid of one animal was transmitted directly to the brain of the other and caused a marked body temperature change.

Dr. Myers said the research method may lead to a more rapid development of ways to induce or reduce specific behavior by learning more about the way the hypothalamus functions. The hypothalamus, a prune-sized cell-group at the base of the brain, is known to be the control center for temperature and emotion, hunger and thirst. Little is known about the control center's function.

Dr. Myers spoke to about 300 international scientists of the British Physiological Society at the National Institute for Medical Research in London. He was a visiting scientist in Physiology and pharmacology at the National Institute for Medical Research in London for two years, 1963-65. He left that appointment to go to Purdue as a full professor in the department where he earned the masters degree (1954) and the Ph.D. degree (1956).
