A Note From the Department Chair

A Note From the Department Chair

Illinois Wesleyan University's Department of Political Science and our Pi Sigma Alpha chapter are pleased to publish Res Publica, a journal of original undergraduate research. The first volume of Res Publica was published in 1996, making this the tenth volume in the series. The papers in this volume examine important questions in international, comparative and American Politics through their application of various methodological approaches. These works speak to a variety of concerns, including political beliefs, culture, and participation and, therefore, constitute a truly public thing.

This publication reflects the Department's emphasis on developing students' analytical and research skills. Most, though not all, of these papers grew out of our Senior Seminars and each highlights the caliber of work being done in Political Science. Res Publica provides an opportunity to display some of the best work underway in the Department while serving to invite discussion and critique of student-generated ideas. In a very real sense, our students have grown from mere consumers of knowledge to being producers of knowledge.

We are very pleased with our recent successes and look forward to the continued development of an outstanding and innovative political science program.
