

STEREO TYPES

By DEVON O'BRIEN
and MATT WETTENGEL

Poli Sci: They think they know it all, but if you listen to what they're saying you might think otherwise. If you bring up politics be prepared to hold your ground, they aren't likely to back down from their superior views. Save all the pictures you have of them from weekends, they might come in handy in future elections.

Women's Studies: This group can likely be found in the Sloss House, where they sometimes sell vagina-shaped sweets. When around these liberal ladies, watch out for their mind-bending tactics and don't let any "That's what she said's" slip, they definitely won't let them slide.

Ag: You can spot one from a mile away by their cowboy boots, Carhart jackets and their red or green hats. The stereotypical corn-fed Iowans on campus, this crowd frequents Outlaws. Here they spend their time looking for others with a farm background so that they can have a family ready to go when they eventually take over their parents' farm.

Engineering: Grades come before anything else for these inhabitants of the third floor of Parks. Most lack a social life with the prospects of a fifth year, but the bragging rights that will come with their six-figure salary make it worthwhile.

Journalism: When their camera isn't in your face they're probably asking you 20 questions, but be wary of what you say around these grammar Nazis or it might end up in print. They're always asking the tough questions, but if you're looking to stump them have a math- or science-related problem ready.

Business: The major of choice for those who want to be back in bed by noon so as not to strain their mental abilities. Walk into Gerdin to see a crowd of Greeks sporting snap backs and Sperry's. Waking up for that 8 a.m. class is difficult after a night of partying, which is why they have their own café.

You can tell this business student will have a great BROkerage relationship with future clients.

Fashion: You won't catch this trendy bunch of guys and gals wearing sweatpants. They are in constant competition to look their best and police the rest of the world on the latest fashions. Steer clear of their judgmental glares on your off-days.

Design: All-nighters are a staple for these glorified art majors. On any given day you might hear complaints about how they were up until 4 a.m. sketching, we all know how hard that must be. They are the epitome of hipster culture, drinking PBR at a dinosaur-themed party on Saturday nights.

Kinesiology: There's a good chance they'll be at the gym or teaching a fitness class throughout the day. This is the major for want-to-be athletes who wish they were in school on a scholarship. Their bodies might leave you in awe if they weren't wearing Iowa State sweats every day.

He's got over a dozen online friends, and a girlfriend named Siri.

Education: Guys are hard to come by amongst these cheerful ladies. Hopefully they aren't hung over when they have to show up to class to read Dr. Seuss books or color in the lines. Don't test their patience because they need it for the children.

Computer Science: They've definitely got the brain capacity, but they're not usually programmed for social situations. It's unusual to catch them in the light of day, but you'll know when you see their pocket protectors or floodwater jeans.

Philosophy: Watch your words with these philosophical folk or you might find yourself hours later still conversing about the meaning of life. They're always up for an argument regardless of the topic and can keep a conversation going for longer than you thought possible.

Theater: Makeup, gypsy dresses, dramatic

Music: Constantly drum on things. Sing a lot. Something along these lines.

To be or not to be? You probably shouldn't have been.

