THE UNIVERSITY of Montana is one of three universities launching academic programs in Indian studies this fall. The other two are the University of Minnesota and Washington State University.

UM PRESIDENT Robert T. Pantzer has endorsed student participation in campaigns and other political activities for the general elections in November, but emphasized the institution cannot alter academic schedule for these purposes. In a memorandum Pantzer urged UM faculty members to accommodate students involved in political activities "to an extent deemed appropriate and to assure that the integrity of the student's academic program is not seriously damaged." The UM leader also said: "The University itself cannot become involved in these political issues and individuals participating personally have no authority to indicate by work or action that they represent the University."

THE GRIZZLIES open their home season against the Weber State Wildcats Saturday (Oct. 3) at 1:30 p.m. on New Dornblaser Field. Gary Hughes, UM ticket manager, said he has 500 reserved seats for the Weber contest and 4,000 general admission.
