EUROPEAN JOURNAL OF FOOD, DRINK, AND SOCIETY

About this journal

The European Journal of Food, Drink, and Society is a critical and interdisciplinary space to discuss and debate contemporary and historical issues of food and drink in everyday life. It aims to stimulate debate and progress research on the study of food and drink at global and local levels. It is also interested in the societal implications of, and responses to, the changing landscape of food and drink consumption and production

The Journal publishes peer-reviewed theoretical and empirical work, policy and practice contributions from the social sciences and humanities. It includes contributions from sociology, history, cultural studies, geography, anthropology, tourism studies, and culinary arts. The Journal also publishes high quality work related to innovative practice in food studies education, research notes and solicited book reviews.

The journal is free for authors and the editorial staff comply with the code of conduct of COPE: the Committee on Publication Ethics.

Submissions

EJFDS invites submissions that challenge and stimulate debate across contemporary and historical issues relating to food and drink within society. The Journal seeks to critically examine food and drink and their contexts within and across traditional and emerging disciplines. Submissions are invited from those engaged in research across the domains that both impact on, and are impacted upon, by the meaning of food and drink within our lives. These domains include, but are not limited to, history, archaeology, cultural studies, tradition, hospitality and education. Academic papers are the mainstay of the Journal, however the hosting of the Journal on a digital platform allows the editors flexibility and authors the opportunity of exploring a variety of formats.
