VIRGINIA COLLEGE BULLETIN

AUGUST 1977

ON THE COVER: Myrin Library stands at the center of the Ursinus College campus where the first College building, Freeland Hall, once stood. The Library, originally housed in Freeland, actually predates the College. Read more about the Library and more than a century of its "Friends" on page 4.

URSINUS COLLEGE BULLETIN Under previous permit, LXXV, No. 4, August 1977. Second Class postage paid at Collegeville, Pa. 19426. The Ursinus College Bulletin is published in January, March, August and November. Entered as second class matter at the Post Office, Collegeville, Penna., under the Act of August 24, 1912. Editor — Andrea Vaughan, '72 (Mrs. Donald R. Dettlerline). News Notes Editor — Blanche Allen.

President's Memo

TO: FELLOW ALUMNI AND FRIENDS
FROM: RICHARD P. RICHTER

New York, Washington, Bucks County, Southeastern Pennsylvania (York), Center City Philadelphia, South Jersey — at meetings of these alumni area clubs this spring and early summer, I had the pleasure of talking about Ursinus with many fellow graduates, some of them long-time friends and some of them newly met. At meetings such as these, I am usually asked to bring a report from the campus, but the main value for me is learning from those attending what interests them most about Ursinus 1977. Here are just a few of the topics from question/answer sessions and from informal conversation during the social hour.

How is the enrollment? The enrollment picture for this fall looks good. The number of applicants increased by more than 100 students over last year (about a ten per cent increase). From those accepted we expect to have about 330 or more new students. Because of the high number of resident male freshmen, we were forced to convert the large lounge in Wilkinson Hall into rooms for students.

Despite these healthy signs for the year, our admissions officers are not complacent. Ursinus faces increasing competition, students transfer more readily now than they once did, and in the next few years we would like the total enrollment to average around 1200 rather than the present 1075-1100. To augment their recruiting efforts, Geoff Dolman and his staff will be organizing a group of alumni and have encouraged faculty members and students to become more active in recruiting. We hope that every graduate will recommend Ursinus to high school students, particularly those in the upper fifth of their class, from which we still draw the majority of our students.

How much is tuition now? When I tell alumni that tuition is $3,030 for 1977-78, and room and board charges are $1,370, they usually draw a dramatic comparison with the lower charges they paid as students. We have had to increase charges steadily to keep in line with the higher cost of running the College — and no doubt will have to increase further in the future. Yet Ursinus remains at the lower end of the scale among competing colleges in our area.

My chief concern is that families who might want their sons and daughters to attend Ursinus will assume — mistakenly — that they cannot afford it. Over and over I have urged alumni not to omit Ursinus from consideration merely because of our charges. We now have a full-time Financial Aid Officer. Every family, regardless of income, is welcome to apply for aid on the basis of need. Federal and state grants, guaranteed loans, and Ursinus's own scholarship funds are used by the Financial Aid Office and the Scholarship Committee to help meet family needs. Many will not finally qualify for aid, of course, because of the amount of their usable family income. But I think most would be surprised to know how many students from so-called middle income families are receiving some aid.

Do you still have finals after the Christmas Holiday? The normal academic calendar across the nation once was very much like the one Ursinus used for many years — and still uses. In the last decade this model ceased to be the norm. When I announced in January that the administration favored a change in our calendar, faculty members and students responded affirmatively to the principle. Since then we have had a great deal of talk on campus about specifics, and action is expected this fall. There seems to be a clear consensus on campus for starting the fall semester earlier and holding final examinations before Christmas. If action by the faculty and the Board of Directors takes place as expected, a calendar change will be effective for the 1978-79 academic year.

Do you still have a demerit system for students? Graduates of recent years ask often about such aspects of student life outside the classroom. This spring the administration and the Student Government worked together on a revision of the student handbook, mainly to make it more informative and stylistically more in keeping with an undergraduate atmosphere. One of the substantive changes for this fall was the elimination of demerits as a way of penalizing students for failure to follow the campus code. Several forms of warning have been substituted. The quality of student life will be reviewed more generally in the coming academic year, and I hope that substantial improvement will be made.

How is Professor -----? The keen interest shown by alumni at area meetings in their former teachers seems to prove our claim that close student-teacher relationships characterize our kind of undergraduate education. The most asked-about professor this year probably was Calvin D. Yost, Jr. Calvin, who retires after 43 years of teaching, gave hundreds of students a sense of the importance that words written and spoken can have in an educated person's life. I know they remember him with deep gratitude and hope he roams for many years in literary fields. I know because I am one of them.

A TRADITION OF TRANSITION

Harry E. "Chuck" Broadbent '69
LIBRARIAN

*Myrin Library

It hardly seems possible that the library collection of Ursinus College predates the founding of the 108-year old institution: actually, it has its origins in the seminary which the college succeeded in 1869. The catalogs of Freeland Seminary, for 1868, and Ursinus College, for 1869, boast:

"A fine library, selected with care, expressly for the institution, furnishes ample means for an extensive course in reading. A large Reading-room is provided for the special accommodation of students, to which they may repair in the intervals of school."

As Freeland Hall was the only building, the library was afforded a central location.

Impetus for library growth came from students who organized the Zwinglian Literary Society in 1870. In 1873, they felt the need to establish a library for society members.

The Library circa 1912 when it was housed in Bomberger Memorial Hall Room 7.

Contributions of books and money, and solicitation of friends, provided the initial collection which was housed in their meeting room in the basement of Derr Hall, adjoining Freeland on the east.

Meanwhile, the rival Schaff Literary Society was founded in 1872; they started a library in their meeting room on the fourth floor of Stine Hall, on the west side of Freeland. In 1878 or 1879, Schaff moved to the fourth floor of Derr Hall, and the Zwinglian's moved to Stine, locating their library on the third floor.

The presence of three libraries on the campus, two of which were restricted to members only, led the Alumni Association, in 1882, to establish and maintain the Alumni Library which would be open to all students. Again, the call went out to alumni and friends of the college for contributions. In 1888, Dr. E. M. Hyde, Professor of Latin, advocated the formation of the Ursinus College Library by merging the three collections. After considerable debate, the merger was achieved.

Growth of the college led to the construction of Bomberger Hall which opened in 1892. The college library and reading room occupied the northeast corner of the first floor of the new facility and in 1893, the Faculty Library Committee began to oversee operations. The Alumni Association, through delegates from the original societies, continued their support through representation on the Library Committee.

When the Bomberger Hall facilities were strained to the limits by the continued development of the college and the library collection, the Alumni Association again assumed the leadership in funding the construction of the Alumni Memorial Library, in honor of those who fought and died in World War I. Opened in 1923, the new facility housed the book collection in closed stacks, and provided classical style, vaulted reading rooms for study.

In the 1960's, continued growth necessitated a new library building, designed to meet the future needs of the college. The importance of a central location for the new facility, and the deterioration of the original seminary building, led to the demolition of Freeland Hall to make way for the construction of a new library. In 1970, the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the college, the library returned to its original location at center of the campus. The Myrin Library, named in memory of H. Alarik W. Myrin, provides facilities for the college's second century.

Reflecting the latest thinking in academic library design, the Myrin Library collections are housed in open stacks surrounded by study carrels and tables which accommodate over half of the student population. Services of the college library in its second century include on-line computer cataloging, audio-visuals, and statewide resource sharing. The familiar library services of reference, circulation, and periodicals are designed to meet the changing needs of students and teachers in a world where access to up-to-date information is central to the education process. The library program includes instruction in the use of the many resources available.

In 1977, the library collection — "selected with care" — includes over 119,000 volumes, 92,000 microforms, 1,000 audio cassettes, 7,000 slides and 700 current periodical subscriptions as well as films, maps, and pamphlets. Since 1963, the college library has been a selective depository of U. S. government documents.

The spacious facilities in the Myrin Library house the Grumman-Dartmouth Time-Sharing Computer Center, the Pennsylvania-Folklife Society Archives, the Spangler Listening Room, the Ursinusiana Collection, and the Curriculum Materials Center which supports the teacher education program. Several categories of special collections are housed in the Founders Room: the J. A. H. Bomberger Library, Pennsylvania-German Imprints, American Imprints before 1830, and rare books. The special collections, supporting and enriching the library program, largely are gifts of generous alumni and friends.

A continuing interest in the library by alumni and friends has been characteristic of the Ursinus College library through its long history. Many strengths of the collection are the direct result of the generosity and special interests of members of the Ursinus community. For example, in the past year, Helen Detwiler Robbins, '30, donated her collection of Pennsylvania-German children's literature, including the manuscript of Katherine Milhous's Appolonia's Valentine. This collection supports the Pennsylvania-Dutch studies program. Mrs. Robbins continues to add to the collection. J. Douglas Davis, '41, Chairman of the History Department, provides current titles from the Book-of-the-Month Club to supplement library acquisitions. Recently, local resident Raymond Pearlstine, Esq., provided the opportunity for the library to improve holdings in Jewish history, literature and culture through the Jewish Publication Society.

The list of those who provide for the needs of the college through gifts to the library is long and includes cash contributions through the loyalty fund and memorials to faculty and students. The support of the library by all members of the Ursinus College community is vital in achieving the mission of the college. The Loyalty Fund Committee recently acted to add "Friends of the Library" as an optional designation in their solicitation. Anyone who uses this designation will be invited to participate in activities of the reactivated "Friends" group. Others who are committed to the "fine library" envisioned by the founding fathers are invited to contact the Library Director or Alumni Office. It is through the continuing interest of alumni and friends, that the library will be better able to meet the needs of the second century of academic excellence at Ursinus College.

ALUMNI DAY

Chuck Broadbent, '69, gives tour of Myrin Library to Class of '27 members.

Dr. Calvin D. Yost, '30, accepts the Alumni Award from President Richter.

Emeritus Club Officers, Bertram M. Light, '20; Miriam Barnet Smith, '14, and Erma Boyd Beck, '23.

45th Reunion.

On May 28, 200 alumni and friends gathered for a day full of festivities. A Bruins Club Meeting and a Friends of the Library Reception started the day off. The Emeritus Club was addressed by President Richter, '53, at their annual meeting. The Class of 1937 enjoyed a special dedication ceremony for the Helfferich Hall tree grove that their class gave to the College. The President's Reception and Alumni luncheon followed. Andrea Vaughan, '72, Alumni Executive Secretary, welcomed everyone to the annual Alumni Association meeting. She introduced Clara Deck Brosman, '12, oldest graduate present, and Shinzo Nakai, '32, of Osaka, Japan, the graduate traveling the greatest distance to Alumni Day.

President Richter addressed the alumni and presented the 1977 Alumni Awards to Dr. Calvin D. Yost, Jr., '30, and Clarence S. Livingood, M.D., '32. Dr. Yost has been teaching at Ursinus since 1934 and was the prime mover in planning, designing and implementing Myrin Library.

Dr. Livingood has had an illustrious career as a medical educator. He now serves as Chairman Emeritus of the Department of Dermatology at the Henry Ford Hospital and Clinical Professor of Dermatology at the University of Michigan Medical School. His medical career spans the spectrum from Executive Director of the American Board of Dermatology to team physician for the Detroit Tigers.

Dean Ruth Rotherberger Harris, '36, awarded the Alumni Senior Awards to George Randolph, '77, and Judith Turner, '77.

E. Kathryn Schaeffer, '66, vice president of the Alumni Association, gave the report of the years' activities of the Association and Charles W. George, '35, Chairman of the Loyalty Fund, gave the Loyalty Fund Report.

Following the meeting, reunions were held by the classes of 1927, 1932, and 1937. A party for the classes of 1936, 1938-1941 was also held at the farm of Ivan W. Hess, '39, in Trappe. Many thanks to reunion chairmen Thomas Clark, '27, Jane Mattern, '32, Louis Krug, '31, and Glenn Eshbach, '39.

President Richter, '53; Frank L. Miller, M.D., '37; Dr. D. L. Helfferich, '21, and Louis Krug, '37, participating in Class of '37 tree grove dedication.

Clarence S. Livingood, M.D., '32, was joint recipient of the Alumni Award.

COMMENCEMENT

During the commencement exercises on May 29 undergraduate degrees were awarded by President Richard P. Richter to 235 seniors, 112 of whom received the bachelor of science degree and 113 the bachelor of arts degree. Forty-six Evening School students also received degrees.

Dr. Theodore R. Schwalm, President of the College Board of Directors, opened the 106th Commencement exercise by saying, "Commencement convocations are steeped in ceremonial tradition, the origin of which is sometimes hidden by time. Because tradition is respected at Ursinus, we continue to hold formal affairs such as this one today. However, tradition alone cannot sustain a vital academic community. Led by its new president, Ursinus today is searching for the most workable relationship between the values of a respected tradition and the necessity of new beginnings during an unusual period in the American experience. The Board of Directors believes that this search must be made and that it will result in new achievement for our College."

Three persons, distinguished for national and worldwide service in their respective fields, received honorary doctoral degrees from Ursinus College during commencement exercises May 29.

Ron Nessen, press secretary for President Gerald Ford and distinguished television journalist, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters and was the commencement speaker during the 2 p.m. ceremonies in Helfferich Hall.

Dr. John W. Mauchly, often called the "father of the computer," former head of the Physics Department at Ursinus from 1933-1941 received the honorary Doctor of Science degree. Dr. Mauchly and J. P. Eckhart, Jr., were co-inventors of the ENIAC, EDVAC, UNIVAC AND BINAC Electronic computers.

The Rev. Dr. Robert J. Lamont, president of the Presbyterian Ministers' Fund and baccalaureate speaker, received the honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Ron Nessen assumed the post of White House press secretary after 20 years as news and television correspondent.

In his address, Dr. Nessen told the graduates, "Politics is not a dirty word. It is the system we have to choose and judge our leaders. Most people in the rest of the world wish they had that system . . . I took time out from my career to serve a period of public service and I think more people should. It's a citizen's obligation. That's the way our system should work," Dr. Nessen also made the point in his speech that television has become the single most important influence on the public today. As he put it, "There are a lot of good people around, in and out of government, who are potential leaders, even potential presidents. But you don't know about them because television doesn't show them to you." He warned that serious people must look critically at television because of its great impact on our society.

President Richter discharged the graduates by congratulating them and encouraging them to return to campus often.

Dr. Ray L. Schultz, Professor of Chemistry, and Dr. Taras D. Zakydalsky, Lecturer in Philosophy, accept Lindback Awards from President Richter.

Class of '77 officers Dell Dinacola, Carol Estes, Erwin Wenner, and George Hines.

GEORGE BAUSE, '77,
was the 1975-1976 St. Andrews Scholar to Scotland. Appearing below is a reprint of a speech that he delivered at the 1977 Cub & Key reunion recounting his experiences abroad. George is now attending Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine and hopes to pursue a career in neurosurgery.

I was #11 — Ursinus's eleventh winner of the St. Andrews Scholarship to Scotland. On my arrival in Scotland's capital city, I proceeded to the residence halls of the University of Edinburgh. There I was greeted by a fellow American and by the tumult of a Pollock Halls party. The House Warden approached us two Yanks and asked, "Excuse me, is one of you the Andrew Mutch Scholar?" I responded in the affirmative. After a brief chat he concluded, "Well, I've met the previous Scholars, but they were different from you — they were sophisticated."

If my reception seemed less than cordial, please recall that Britain was a wonderful place. I arrived there and then 1) the pound sterling fell to $1.50, 2) a major drought scorched the Isles, 3) the Pakistanis invaded, and 4) the Scottish Nationalists marched on Parliament. Thus with nary a tear, the British were anxious to see me return to the States.

Edinburgh, with its Princes Street and Royal Mile, is certainly one of the most beautiful cities in Europe. Almost anyone will agree with that evaluation. What people don't agree on is how one should pronounce the name of the Scottish capital. Your average American's "Edin-burro" is your Englishman's "Edin-burrah" and your Scotsman's "Eddin-buddah."

My concern with pronunciation was less than casual, however. One of my Ursinus research interests, the semi-musical pronunciation of classical poetry, carried over to Scotland with my search for the musical backdrop to Homer's Iliad via computer sweep analysis. For this purpose I was likewise a visiting scholar to the National Library of Greece. Since ancient Greek was semi-musical, my program amounts to a rough translation of the epic into music. One of my reasons for choosing Edinburgh University over St. Andrews or Aberdeen was that the world's foremost authority in computer transliteration of classical poetry, the Reverend Andrew Q. Morton, was at Edinburgh.

I have had a fair share of experience dealing with reverends — my father is one. In fact he's an Air Force chaplain. (That makes me both preacher's kid and military brat — how's that for a wicked combination?) One of my father's favorite observations on life notes the way in which events seem to occur in cycles. As a young married seminary student, my father was offered a scholarship to study in Scotland at the University of Edinburgh. Mom and he turned down the scholarship to have me, their firstborn. Thus my going to Edinburgh effectively "completed" a cycle. Actually the Edinburgh cycle extends even further back. My third great grandfather, Dr. John Davy, was a physician at the University of Edinburgh School of Medicine. His brother, Sir Humphry Davy, invented the miner's safety lamp and discovered more of the chemical elements than anyone

My physics tutor at Edinburgh was himself a discoverer — he was the graduate student under J. J. Chadwick responsible for the experiment in which they discovered the neutron. Another of my research interests at Edinburgh involved using slow energy or "thermal" neutron rays for medical purposes. My work with the Scottish Universities' nuclear reactor involved measuring liver cadmium levels in battery workers via nuclear activation analysis.

When you think of Scotland, though, you don't usually dwell on nuclear reactors and such. Instead you think of bagpipes, kilts, Scotch, and, perhaps, haggis. The last is a suet concoction of sheep innards cooked in the animal's stomach. Scotsmen delight in tricking unwary tourists into searching for "the rare haggis" — a creature variously described as having one leg longer than the other (so it can scurry around steep hillsides). I spent the entire year looking for "the rare haggis" by running around Arthur's Seat, the extinct volcano at Edinburgh's center. I never did find the haggis — but I was able to elaborate a new design for an artificial leg. A Scottish course in experimental design and summer work in an Alaska Pipeline support site's machine shop combined to help me apply for a U.S. Patent entitled "Knee Prosthesis with Pneumatic Activation."

All in all, the year at Edinburgh was a genuine growth experience. Having assailed earlier the tact of the House Warden ("sophisticated"), let me redeem British diplomacy by noting the results of my poll of my Scots friends to determine whether I was 1) a swank Yank, or 2) an ugly American. No one responded.

No experience has helped me appreciate Ursinus more than my junior year abroad in Scotland. I did not fully appreciate the beauty of the Ursinus campus and the responsiveness of Ursinus's faculty — not until I had felt the impersonality of a sprawling university taped in by bureaucracy. To accomplish anything at Edinburgh University, I had to brandish my status as a St. Andrews Scholar. I never encountered such difficulties with Ursinus's administration.

One Ursinus administrator in particular has championed my projects with unflagging zeal — Dean Richard G. Bozorth. During my four years under Dean Bozorth's thoughtful guidance, I have succeeded in drafting an inter-departmental major in Biophysics and have conducted research in computer languages, in classical poetry, in nuclear physics, and in prosthesis design. Dr. Bozorth — "the Big Man" — embodies the responsive spirit I have encountered at Ursinus. Discerning Dean Bozorth at the College's forefront, I can have nothing but immense confidence in the future of Ursinus.

VONNIE GROS, 57, is best known on campus as head hockey coach of Ursinus's rival, West Chester State College. An article by Barbara Doran naming Vonnie Gros "Coach of the Year" appeared in the January issue of SPORTS-WOMAN magazine. Excerpts of that article are reprinted below. Photo by Laurie Usher.

Each sport has its Michelangelo, its architect and leader, one person whose particular personality, goals, drive and talent blend with the circumstances and people of the time to give new life and direction to stagnating situations. In tennis, Billie Jean King has made great strides for women; in basketball, it has been Cathy Rush, coach of Immaculata's Mighty Macs.

Field hockey's rescuer is Vonnie Gros (pronounced "grow"): 14-time field hockey All-American, 8-time Lacrosse All-American, 6-varsity sport player in college, and college coach who has produced more than 13 All-Americans each in hockey and lacrosse, as well as coach of the United States National hockey team.

Gros is recognized as the foremost field hockey authority in the United States today. Her greatness as a coach stems from two prime sources: her personal ability as an outstanding motivator and strategist on the field; and her role in developing American field hockey into an international power. Women's field hockey throughout the world has received the special blessing that comes with acceptance to the Olympic roster. For the Americans, it entails the responsibility of becoming one of the six top teams that will qualify for the Olympics in 1980.

Currently, the United States is ranked 10th in the world.

Three years ago, when field hockey was in its dark ages, that responsibility would have been impossible to undertake. While steadily expanding from Pennsylvania to California and from Texas to Michigan, its growth could be counted only in numbers. There had been little innovation in strategies, tactics or skill development. Internationally, the U.S. national team was known more for its tenacity and determination in playing, than for its precision. Its win-loss record abroad revealed the inconsistency of talent without direction.

But in 1974, one of hockey's greatest players and college coaches, Vonnie Gros, began to develop concepts and goals that would revolutionize hockey play in the U.S. within two years.

That year as coach of the first national collegiate champions, West Chester State College of Pennsylvania, Gros took a five-week sabbatical in England during the international playing season. Clothed in her familiar, heavy sheepskin coat, ski pants, and army-sized sealskin boots, Gros lingered inconspicuously on the sidelines watching the world's most respected teams: England, Wales and Holland — analyzing, taking notes, and comparing patterns of play she had been studying in soccer books.

Her own experience as an international player — she toured eight times from '59 to '71 on trips lasting three to eight weeks — had given her plenty of playing — and losing — experience against the world's better teams, but playing allowed little time to reflect on just what made other teams consistently stronger than the United States.

Now, Gros had a chance to watch international play "as an analyst/observer," and she began to formulate and articulate strategies and concepts of play she had always been instinctively aware of as a player, but had been unable to communicate effectively.

The results of Gros's productive sabbatical marked the beginning of the renaissance of women's field hockey in the United States. Gros saw potential for change in a sport that had used the same 5-3-2-1 formation for over 50 years with an almost religious insistence on positional play. Suddenly, there was talk of creative movement, fluidity, versatility, and control in play. Coaches from all over found themselves experimenting with different formations, without really knowing the origin of the idea.

For Gros, it marked a change in priorities. She had coached hockey and lacrosse at West Chester since 1963, amassing impressive overall season records. Her hockey team has played more than 50 consecutive games without a loss, and in November won the AIAW national championship for the second year in a row. Her lacrosse team went four and a half years without a loss or tie; she gave up coaching varsity lacrosse in 1976 because of her growing involvement with hockey. And almost the entire time she has been coaching, she has also been playing club hockey and lacrosse.

In college as a physical education major at Ursinus College in Pennsylvania (ironically West Chester's rival in hockey and lacrosse), Gros played six varsity sports: hockey, basketball, lacrosse, softball, tennis and badminton.

After college, Gros taught and coached at Upper Darby High School, a Philadelphia suburban school, for six years before coming to West Chester. It was during this time that she began to specialize in field hockey. The opportunities for success in top level play were greatest there.

A lot of what Gros is teaching and lecturing is what she has observed and done instinctively while a player touring abroad. As she expresses it, "I feel that I got my master's degree from playing around the world." But she laments it was a long time before she was able to articulate the need to play a more controlled, yet creative game of hockey.

Her sabbatical changed all that, and since then, she's been talking to professional and high school soccer coaches, men's international field hockey coaches, and reading books like Tim Gallway's "The Inner Game," to further prepare herself in her efforts to develop American hockey to the fullest. Gros is just beginning to investigate the use of image visualization and modified hypnotism, and hopes to incorporate proven methods into her college and national level coaching in the near future.

For now, Gros's commitment is to "upgrade the thinking level of the game and the importance of possession. I have dual goals; we want to win games, certainly. But I want to see improvement in execution and skills."

To accomplish these goals, Gros, a former U.S. fullback, wants to strengthen the role of coaching on the U.S. level.

The "hit and hustle" days of field hockey are fast disappearing under the controlled direction of one of the finest athlete/coaches in the country, Vonnie Gros. A new sense of direction, of purpose, and a new confidence and awareness of the methods needed to accomplish these goals, will be the earmarks of the next four years in American field hockey. Under the resolute leadership of "The Veege", the United States team just might find itself in Moscow in 1980.

WE WANT YOU!

The Ursinus College Women's Club is looking for more members. The club hosts three events each year: a Christmas luncheon, a Spring fund-raising card party, and a Spring Festival luncheon on Parents' Day.

Proceeds from these events have been donated to the College to furnish the Paisley Hall reception room, the Wismer Hall alcove dining room, and the Anna K. Helfferich lounge in Helfferich Hall. The Women's Club also financed the Effie Brant Evans hockey field, and this year contributed to the Women's Basketball team trip to the national finals in Pomona, California.

Alumni, parents, faculty and friends of the College are welcome to join the Ursinus College Women's Club. If you are interested in having fun and helping Ursinus, contact the Club President, Mary McPherson Justice, '51, in care of the Alumni Office.

GET INVOLVED

It has been a good year! More than 320 Freshmen will join us in September. The efforts of the staff, however, are now focused on September, 1978. Can you help?

College Days, College Nights and regional College Fairs like those listed below are used by the staff to make contact with prospective students. This past year in particular, many graduates have helped students to become interested in Ursinus.

If you know of any students who rank near the top of their class, encourage them to visit with an Ursinus staff member at one of the College Information Programs shown here. Better still, take a moment to write or call the Admissions Office giving the names and addresses of these students. Just a moment of your time could contribute to the future of Ursinus and these fine students.

On July 1, 1976, Ursinus College launched a four-year development program, ADVANCE URSINUS 76/80, to help the College continue to improve its high academic performance. The new program will build upon nearly a decade of methodical financial development. The All-Ursinus Anniversary Drive (1967-70) raised the funds needed to modernize and expand the physical plant. In the Century II Program (1970-75), the College raised funds for general and Scholarship endowment as well as operating funds and continued capital improvement. The new program seeks a minimum of $4,400,000 during the period July 1, 1976 to June 30, 1980. Existing fund-raising committees (Alumni Loyalty Fund, Parents' Committee, Corporate Committee) will continue soliciting annual gifts, all of which will be credited toward the 76/80 goal. As of June 30, $1,277,000 had been credited to the 76/80 program. ADVANCE URSINUS 76/80 will provide the voluntary funds required to keep Ursinus moving forward. The following specific objectives have been identified: $1,900,000 in endowment funds for such items as faculty salary support, student scholarships and academic programs. $1,500,000 in plant funds for such items as dormitory development, health services building, renovation of Thompson-Gay Gym, campus beautification, energy saving modifications. $500,000 in unrestricted gifts to supplement operating income. $500,000 in restricted gifts for such items as research programs, new curricular planning, lab equipment. With the continued help of our alumni and other friends of the College we will exceed our goal.
