Presented by

Edward Iglesias, The Dweller in the Dark

Dawn Emsellem, The Sane One

Staff Tutorial on: INTERNET SEARCHING

---

This tutorial explores a variety of search tools to help you gain skills in conducting research on the Internet.

This tutorial covers three basic types of tools:

1. Subject directories
2. Search engines, primarily first generation services that have been around for quite a while. More recent innovators are covered in Second Generation Searching on the Web.
3. The so-called "deep" or "invisible" Web, information that is stored in databases as well as multimedia and other files. Search engines cannot or will not index this content, so it is "invisible" to them. Directories are a good place to find deep Web content, since many databases have their own searchable Web sites. In addition, there are collections devoted to listing database sites.

FACING THE CANDIDATES ON YOUTUBE™

By Cathy Rowe, Reference and Instructional Services Coordinator

Sometimes excellent resources crop up where you least expect them. YouTube™ is making a contribution to inform and involve its viewers concerning the 2008 presidential campaign.

Visit YouChoose'08 at <https://www.youtube.com/youchoose>, and view the candidates stating their platforms on specific issues such as the economy, healthcare or the war in Iraq as well as clips from recent debates and other public forums. This site is an excellent example of how the Internet is becoming more interactive, it provides an opportunity for viewers to post their own ideas and opinions, contribute to a blog on the subject, or post a video of their own. In some ways the 2008 campaign is beginning to resemble reality TV with the possibility of any moment being captured on film and posted on the web. One advantage of YouTube is that it is involving a demographic that otherwise might not be engaged in the political process-- potential voters ages 18-30. For those who might prefer a more conventional presentation of campaign information, there is no shortage of sites available. Excellent examples include: CNN Politics at <https://www.cnn.com/POLITICS> and The Washington Post at <https://projects.washingtonpost.com/2008-presidential-candidates>.

The Millennial Generation's Attitudes toward Books and E-Books

Arlene Nicholas, Instructor, Department of Business Administration, and John Lewis, Electronic Resources Librarian, McKillop Library

McKillop Library Special Collections Room

Wednesday, January 30, 2008, 4:00-5:00 p.m.

Arlene Nicholas and John Lewis will present their research on the attitudes of Millennial Generation students at Salve Regina regarding usage of books, e-books and audio books. The Millennial generation is the most computer literate generation to enter the workforce. The value of traditional books for learning and entertainment may be limited for these technologically savvy young people. Their views give an illustration of the outlook of this generation towards the evolution of digital media and how dependent their research skills are on technology.
