UNIVERSITY of PUGET SOUND

SANCTUARY for the SOUL

As the largest capital improvements program in the University's history gathers momentum, a new master plan ensures that campus buildings and grounds will be developed with a sense of history and a concern for human interaction.

Few who have strolled the oblique walkways of Karlen Quad—with the ivy-covered brick of Tudor Gothic facades on three sides and a soaring canopy of Douglas Fir overhead—will deny that the Puget Sound campus is a place that lifts the spirit. Here, tangible constructs of stone and wood urge students and teachers toward the more ephemeral activities of a community dedicated to the life of the mind.

"When I returned to the University recently, something about the surroundings—the campus feel—transported me back 38 years to a time when we thought we could do anything," says Boyka Dincov Thayer '61, a Seattle interior designer who consulted with the University on the Wheelock Student Center renovation. "I suddenly realized how much I cherished those days. What a wonderful transition the University provided for us, coming in as innocents and leaving four years later with an unshakable grounding we'd carry wherever we went."

That such a "feel" exists on the Puget Sound campus is no accident. In 1920, the University's new permanent home at 15th and Warner was little more than a huckleberry field. But legendary President Edward H. Todd knew that if clothes make the man, as Booth Tarkington observed, then physical surroundings make the institution. He had the good sense to hire the architectural firm of Sutton, Whitney and Dugan to design an inspirational landscape with the flexibility to grow with the University as it attained national recognition. The resulting Sutton Plan called for a campus of well-defined boundaries and prominent entrance gateways. Tudor Gothic architecture, sited in Oxford-style quadrangles, would unify the appearance of buildings, and vehicular traffic was to be kept at the campus periphery, leaving plenty of open space at the interior.

Growth with vision

But universities are constructed over the course of decades. They grow in fits and starts. Facilities become obsolete. Priorities change. While many aspects of the Sutton Plan were carried out—the entry at Sutton Quad and the consistent use of Tudor facades are examples—some never were realized. The fieldhouse and stadium, Kilworth Chapel and various temporary structures are not architecturally consistent; automobile traffic, especially in front of the residences facing Todd Field, invaded the interior of campus; and a second primary entry on Union Avenue was not built.

With this in mind, the University set about to ensure that the next wave of growth would preserve, even extend, the feeling of intellectual sanctuary that already has a strong foothold at Puget Sound. Together with the architectural planners, Zimmer Gunsul Frasca Partnership, University administrators, faculty, students, staff, neighbors and City of Tacoma representatives met for nearly a year to produce a Framework Master Plan.

"The Framework Plan was really about perpetuating the human values of this community," says Director of Facilities Jon Robins. "It considered the campus in relation to the University's mission, the people who live and work there and

Puget Sound ranked in 2nd tier of national liberal arts colleges

Puget Sound is on the move. The University placed 61st among national liberal arts colleges in U.S. News and World Report's annual college rankings.

President Pierce was pleased with the ranking but was also quick to point out that such rankings can be misleading. "It takes a long time for an institution's reputation to catch up with its quality, in either direction," she said. "We've changed drastically in recent years."

U.S. News reviews a broad set of indicators to arrive at its rankings. Puget Sound scored well in academic reputation, graduation and student retention, and student selectivity. Its weakest showings when compared to peers were in financial resources.

Prominent analyst finds social ills in Puget Sound area

Like many other metropolitan areas, the Puget Sound region is suffering from the cancer of concentrated poverty.

So said Myron Orfield, a Minnesota lawmaker and author, at a conference titled "What Future for the Puget Sound," which convened on campus September 17-18. About 150 people, including Pierce and King County executives, attended.

Regional leaders met on campus in September to discuss disturbing demographic trends in the Puget Sound area.

Orfield gained national prestige for his exhaustive demographic research in Chicago, Portland, Baltimore and San Francisco. He recently completed a similar study of the Seattle-Tacoma area which revealed a pattern that is becoming all too familiar: Newer, fast-growing suburbs such as Redmond, Bothell and Bellevue are sucking money and resources from older, more established communities, especially the South Sound.

Orfield takes the controversial position that urban areas should be governed regionally in an attempt to combat such problems. But this requires a sweeping realignment of traditional political jurisdictions as well as a firm commitment to the social needs of all communities.

"This is a national issue and it is about time we begin to deal with it in the Puget Sound," said Don Hopps, director of the Institute for Washington's Future, co-sponsor of the "What Future for the Puget Sound" conference.

Also discussed at the conference were transportation, education, taxation, land use and growth management, and housing.

Bright new light illuminates old campus theatre

Mrs. Norton Clapp joined President Pierce for the Inside Theatre renaming ceremony.

The Inside Theatre was renamed the Norton Clapp Theatre in a ceremony on campus October 29, giving it the name of one of the most prominent trustees in the University of Puget Sound's history.

The name change was approved by the Board of Trustees in a meeting last spring.

Trustee Nathalie Simsak, a longtime colleague of Clapp's, said, "I think it is a great idea. He gave so much to the University over the years (in) time and love."

As illness sapped his energy prior to his death, "one thing he didn't want to give up was his connection to the University," she said. Simsak added that the naming of the theater after Clapp is "important to me as somebody who cares a great deal about him."

Clapp was a member of the board from 1932 and served as chairman for 19 years after being elected to that post in 1967.

Clapp, who died in 1995, is credited with encouraging student involvement on trustee committees, spearheading the drive to improve academic quality and boosting fundraising efforts. He was a chairman of the Weyerhaeuser Co. and of the Laird Norton Co.

The theater has been in existence, in one form or another, since shortly after Jones Hall was built in 1923. It was the performance space for the Campus Playcrafters for decades as they staged works such as Our Town. Orson Welles appeared there in 1947 during a country-wide tour speaking for National Brotherhood Week.

In recent years the theatre department has produced performances of Amadeus, Grapes of Wrath, Equus and Guys and Dolls, among other works. —Bill Pritchard

Alumni in Action help recruit new freshman class

"Great contact! She really likes Puget Sound and is visiting. Hook up with her. She's awesome and sounds like she's perfect."

"Undecided between us and the University of the Pacific. Told about my own choice of Washington over California. The weather in Tacoma is far more favorable for studying!"

Volunteers wrote these comments and many others like them after their conversations with prospective students during the 1998 spring pilot of Alumni in Action, a joint project developed by the Puget Sound admission and alumni offices.

"Alumni in Action (AIA) began by recognizing the need to systematically involve alumni in admission's recruitment efforts," said Dila Perera, admission counselor and AIA program coordinator.

Peter Johnson '93 had been thinking about a way to get involved in the University again when he received an invitation to join the program.

"I read about the program and thought it sounded great," Johnson said. "Volunteering with AIA has allowed me to meet other alumni and give back to the University. You can look at it as helping out a new generation of college students."

An AIA volunteer speaks to prospective students, represents the University at college fairs, telephones accepted students and attends receptions for accepted students and their parents.

Alumni in Action is active in Seattle and Portland. Perera says once the program is established in these two areas, the University hopes to expand into other locations.

Athletic Hall of Fame inducts five more

The University of Puget Sound Athletic Hall of Fame inducted five new members during ceremonies at the Hall of Fame football game on October 17, 1998, against Lewis and Clark at Baker Stadium. The list of 1998 inductees includes some of the biggest names in modern Logger athletic history.

The Class of 1998 represents a variety of athletic endeavors and eras, from football players Dan Kuel, who led the tenacious Logger defense, to Mike Oliphant who dazzled fans and opponents in the 1980s all the way to the NFL. The finest volleyball player in the nation in 1987, Cathy Flick began the tradition of national caliber volleyball at Puget Sound. Athletic administrator Doug McArthur directed the Logger programs during their national NCAA Division II prominence. A first for the Puget Sound Athletic Hall of Fame is the induction of Joe Peyton in the coaching category. Peyton is already a member of the Hall of Fame, inducted as an athlete, and now enters after an amazing 29-year coaching career that touched hundreds of people and produced top performances on the conference, regional and national level.

Cathy Flick Pollino (Athlete 1984-87)

Pollino was a two-time NAIA first-team All-America selection and two-time NAIA National Tournament Most Valuable Player in 1986 and 1987. She was the Reebok and American Volleyball Coaches Association Player of the Year in 1986 and 1987 as well as the NAIA District Player of the Year. A team captain and multiple all-conference performer, she garnered the Puget Sound Female Athlete of the Year award twice and was selected for induction in the NAIA National Hall of Fame in 1996.

Dan Kuehl (Athlete 1973-77)

In 1976 Dan Kuehl was selected to the second-team Associated Press NCAA D-II All-America team and was a first-team pick on the American Football Coaches Association All-America team. He was a first-team Little

All-Northwest defender. He anchored a defense which ranked third nationally in NCAA Division II allowing opponents just 72.8 yards per game rushing.

Doug McArthur (Administrator 1969-78)

As Logger athletic director, he led Puget Sound to NCAA Division II national prominence. He held numerous coaching positions, including the first Puget Sound women's fastpitch teams, head golf coach and assistant baseball coach. He was the Logger sports information director and executive director of the Puget Sound Alumni Association. He served on the national NCAA public relations committee four years and was the radio and television voice for many of the Logger broadcasts. He founded the Logger Hall of Fame.

Mike Oliphant (Athlete 1984-87)

Oliphant was a three-time NAIA All-America selection and a Kodak College Division I first-team All-America 1987. He became the first player in Puget Sound history to rush for 1,000-plus yards in a season in 1985. He established five school records during his career, averaging 8.59 yards per carry and scoring 42 touchdowns in a Logger uniform. He was the Columbia Football League Player of the Year in 1987. He played professionally for the Washington Redskins and Cleveland Browns after his selection in the third round as the 64th player picked in the NFL draft.

Joe Peyton (Coach 1968-97)

During his 29 years as the head track and field coach for the Loggers, Peyton's leadership and enthusiasm was legendary. He guided more than 50 student-athletes to All-America honors and helped produce dozens of Academic All-Americans. He was an active member of numerous coaching and NAIA organizations and was honored by the NAIA in 1996 as a member of its National Hall of Fame. He was the force behind the beginnings of the women's track and field program as well as the cross country programs at Puget Sound. —Robin Hamilton

A fifth in national Directors' Cup competition

Award recognizes overall excellence in athletics

Perhaps the toughest championship to win in collegiate athletics is the Sears Directors' Cup, a barometer of the success of an institution's overall athletics program. The Directors' Cup is sponsored by the Sears Corporation and the National Association of College Athletic Directors.

In 1998 the University of Puget Sound Logger athletics program finished in fifth place among all National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) institutions. The program awards points based on conference, regional and national competition. The Loggers tallied 380 points in the race, the highest finish among all Northwest schools.

In 1998 alone the Loggers garnered conference championships in women's and men's cross country, volleyball, women's swimming and women's tennis. Men's and women's soccer advanced to the conference playoffs, and the women's basketball team to the conference and national championship.

Women's tennis and men's and women's track teams made it to the national championships. Softball advanced to the regional tournament while women's cross country finished in second place at the national cross country meet. The Puget Sound men's swimming team finished second at the NAIA National Championship and the women's swimming team set the final jewel as they were crowned NAIA national champions.

The success of the Logger athletics program is across a wide range of sport, and not confined to women's or men's sports, individual or team events. The Directors' Cup, more than any other competition, exposes the comprehensive success of Logger athletics.

A brief look at recent history in Puget Sound athletics reveals that overall success is nothing new for the Loggers. A 1976 NCAA II men's basketball national championship started the ball rolling, women's cross country jumped on board to win four consecutive national titles, volleyball remains the only non-Hawaii or California institution to ever win an NAIA national volleyball championship. Softball advanced to the national championship game twice. Men's and women's swimming has dominated with six national championships. Puget Sound has garnered 11 national titles and 12 national runner-up finishes during the past decade. —Robin Hamilton

That reading assignment was how many chapters?

Making time for sports means making personal sacrifices

Time management is something all college students learn or have forced upon them during their time at the University of Puget Sound. With classes, labs, group projects and countless reading assignments, the educational experience becomes full time. So for the nearly 450 University of Puget Sound students who add athletic participation to their to-do lists, time management becomes a necessity.

The success level that many of the Logger teams and individuals have reached magnifies when you consider all that team members invest just to maintain participation. Two-hour practices six days a week are common for most programs. Once games begin, depending on the sport, two or three contests per week take place, many on the road. All of this seems reasonable but, like other top students on campus, there is a strong correlation between work-ethic and success among student-athletes. For them, good enough is not good enough.

The fitness center, which is open between 7 a.m. and 10 p.m., is a hub of activity on campus for athletes. An hour of weight-lifting three days of week is common for most of them. And almost every sport demands some type of additional effort. Baseball and softball players take extra batting practice, football and basketball players often watch videos to improve performances, track and cross country athletes may put in more miles to improve conditioning. Swimmers are in the water twice a day and lift weights during peak training times, and the Puget Sound crew set their alarms for 5 a.m. practices on American Lake.

Time management is even more crucial for two-sport athletes. Erin Peterson, a junior from Walla Walla, Wash., lives the two-sport life as a member of the women's basketball and softball teams and works to earn her way into the physical therapy program. Peterson was a member of the Logger women's basketball team that competed at the NAIA National Championship Tournament last March.

When the team was eliminated from the tournament she and teammate Erin Dahlgren, a sophomore from Ft. Collins, Colo., boarded the first flight out, landed in Seattle, boarded another flight to Spokane, and arrived for the second game of the Logger softball doubleheader against Whitworth College. Peterson started at catcher in the second game and Dahlgren delivered a game-winning double.

Peterson considers the typical response that athletics takes too much time away from studies: "I find it easier to be committed to athletics year around. I know when I need to study, and I don't procrastinate as much. I like being on deadline to finish a paper or project early so I can go on a road trip and relax and enjoy playing sports. The support of my teammates at the University doesn't stop when we walk off the field. It continues into the classroom as your teammates become your study partners and academic resources."

The list of academic accomplishments and incredible loads carried by student-athletes goes on and on at Puget Sound. The sacrifices made by students for an opportunity to represent Puget Sound is remarkable. Jeff Sakamoto, a senior from Redmond, Wash., is a starting linebacker on the Logger football team and the starting catcher for the baseball squad. Jeff is also a fine student, dedicated husband and father of two-year-old Colton. Juggling academics, athletics and a new family is a formidable task. But athletic participation serves as a perfect discipline for his academic and family commitments.

For students like Sarah Blawat '00, #20, success in the classroom and on the playing field is a graceful balancing act.

Often people lose sight of how much effort is put forth by student-athletes when they read a box score in the paper or see the conference standings. But coaches know that no player goes up to bat trying to strike out and no player intentionally misses a free throw. National championships and All-America honors should never be taken for granted, as countless hours have been invested in representing Puget Sound.

THE FACULTY

Asian Studies at Puget Sound:

Unique learning opportunities await

"As a professor in my former life," Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright told the Asia Society last June, "I used to ask my students to put aside the map we customarily use, which shows North and South America as the center of the world.

"Instead," the diplomat-scholar explained to her New York City audience, "I would turn the globe to the great Asian land mass and make the point that, to most of the people on Earth, that is the center of the world."

Asia is a sprawling continent—more than 17 million square miles—and home to 3.5 billion people out of a global population of 5.9 billion.

"No work is more important for the 21st century," Albright said, "than promoting understanding across the Pacific."

The University of Puget Sound's wide-ranging and multidisciplinary Asian Studies Program reflects the spirit of Albright's sentiment. It gives students unique opportunities to study and experience the politics, economics, history and cultures of peoples stretching from Katmandu and the soaring Himalayas to the Shinto shrines and shores of Japan.

And, once every three years, students and faculty use Asia as a laboratory, spending an exciting and challenging nine months probing Asia first-hand as members of the Pacific Rim/Asia Study-Travel Program (PRAST). The next program with 16 students is slated for August 1999-May 2000—giving students the memorable experience of celebrating the turn of the century overseas.

"Our program is larger than many and of longer duration than many," said Suzanne Barnett, professor of history, a specialist in modern China and Japan, and Puget Sound's Robert G. Albertson Professor, 1998-2003.

About 13 faculty teach in the program, which, on average, 50 students select as a

"They had a profound impact," Fields said.

PRAST: The power of observation

PRAST is a distinctive part of Puget Sound's Asian Studies Program—and illustrates, according to Fields, the University's strong commitment to Asian Studies. The flagship program has taken as many as 25-35 students, plus the program's director and an assistant, to seven countries over nine months. Typical itinerary stops—perhaps lasting an average of six weeks—are India, China, Nepal, Korea, Japan, Vietnam and Thailand.

"There's no other program like it," Fields said. "It's unique. Asia is the classroom."

Barnett adds that in today's world professionals can find themselves working almost anywhere, and PRAST spurs an attitude of openness to new things that is very important in our personal and professional lives.

Elisabeth Benard, assistant professor of Asian Studies, is director of PRAST, which combines classroom work and travel. She confirms PRAST's uniqueness, pointing out that other programs typically are just a semester long and cover a handful of countries, but students selected for PRAST spend an entire year enrolled in an orientation course.

"Students come to my house every Wednesday night for two hours," Benard said, referring to the orientation course. "We cover business aspects of the travel course—things like passports and shots. But we also learn about intercultural communication since we will travel to different cultures. We ask students to get into small groups, divided up by the countries we will visit."

From an academic standpoint, Benard sees some real pluses for students by linking the orientation and travel portions of the course.

"The students," she explained, "can directly apply readings in the course and what they've heard in lectures and immediately go out there (to Asia) and examine it—you observe and then analyze."

Reminiscing about the last PRAST excursion, Benard described the program's scope and impact by pointing to an experience in Vietnam.

"We stayed in a hotel," she said, referring to the group's five-week stint in Hanoi "and teachers from the University of Vietnam at Hanoi came to the hotel to lecture. We looked at projects around Hanoi like the Ho Chi Minh Museum and Mausoleum. On weekends we took excursions to different places.

"We took an 11-day journey by bus from Hanoi to Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon) and saw many villages," Benard said. "Our host showed us where his family lived, and we stopped at his house, met his mother and had tea and bananas."

Their host's mother, Benard explained, had lost her husband, a daughter and a son during the war, yet "she welcomed us."

Benard conceded that some parents initially were leery about their children traveling to Vietnam and were surprised by the favorable reports they heard following the trip. In fact, Benard said, parents are generally "surprised about how much more mature their children are" after making the Asian journey.

One gauge of PRAST's impact is the fact that 24 students made the last trip and almost half of them returned to Asia following graduation. According to Benard, two PRAST alumni are in China working on intensive Chinese language skills, five are teaching English in Japan, and another is working in Japan for a development program, two are in Taiwan teaching English for a year, one is in Hanoi teaching English and two more are in Thailand teaching English.

A high point of the upcoming PRAST trip will be a two-week stay in Katmandu, Nepal, where conservation biology will be a focus. An 11-day trek through the Himalayas will give students the chance to apply theories read in books and heard in lectures.

Study grants and scholarships

Several other initiatives characterize the Asian Studies Program's continuing development and expanding scope: the new Luce professorship, the Chism visiting professorship, Puget Sound's continuing participation in ASIANetwork and the naming of an Asian Studies faculty member to the Albertson professorship.

The new Luce professorship was launched by a grant from the New York City-based Luce Foundation, named for Time magazine co-founder, long time editor and old China hand, Henry Luce.

"I believe that undergraduate grants from the Luce Foundation are unusual," Barnett said. "This grant deservedly recognizes the University."

Nick Kontogeorgopoulos, who earned a doctorate in geography from the University of British Columbia, is the new Luce Professor of Political Economy. Kontogeorgopoulos, an assistant professor of comparative sociology, was hired after a national search. He is a geographer with expertise in Southeast Asia, especially Thailand.

Various humanities departments sponsor semester-long Chism professorships on a rotating basis as a result of a gift Puget Sound received in the early 1980s.

During the spring semester of 1999, the Chism Professorship in Asian Studies will be filled by Tetsuo Najita, a University of Chicago history professor.

"Najita is a distinguished professor of Japanese history," Barnett said, "who specializes in modern Japanese intellectual history. In recent years, he has published work having to do with ideas in connection with political economy."

All Chism professors direct a faculty seminar, teach an undergraduate course and deliver a public lecture. Najita will teach a course, "Intellectual History of Modern Japan: Intellectual Crises and How They Relate to Issues of Political Economy."

Puget Sound also is an active member of ASIANetwork, a group founded in 1992 to promote Asian studies. Barnett is the group's 1998-99 chair and is in the midst of a three-year term on ASIANetwork's board of directors.

"ASIANetwork is a consortium of more than 120 liberal arts colleges and smaller private universities," Barnett explained, "with programs and activities that promote the study of Asia at the undergraduate level."

A key benefit of ASIANetwork membership is access to grant-funded initiatives. For example, a grant from the Vermont-based Freeman Foundation supported two ASIANetwork programs: a study-abroad program and a program where student-faculty teams travel to Asia together to work on student research projects. Stacey Brown '98, a Puget Sound Asian studies major, received a grant, working with Benard. Brown was to travel to Bali to study death rituals. However, political unrest in Indonesia triggered a reshuffling of Brown's research focus, which was redirected to India.

Asian studies students can take a wide range of courses in art, Asian studies, business and public administration, comparative sociology, foreign languages, history, humanities, politics and government, and religion.

The Charles Garnet Trimble Endowed Fund in Chinese Studies and several other funds provide numerous scholarships for students who study Asian cultures on campus, in study-abroad programs or through individual research projects on Asia.

Asian studies graduates go on to various careers. Some pursue graduate education at major institutions such as the University of Chicago, Cornell University, the University of Pennsylvania and Yale University. Others have opted for careers in banking, marketing, law, international business and journalism.

—Bob Aaron

"We can't ignore Asia and Asia's peoples.

By 2025, 65 percent of the world's wealth will be in Asia."

major and 50 more as a minor. About one-third of all graduating seniors have taken an Asian Studies course, reflecting the program's scope.

Karl Fields, associate professor of politics and government, a specialist in East Asian political economy and director of the Asian Studies Program, confesses that he was "bitten by the Asia bug" as a teenager, when at age 19 he spent two years on a Mormon mission in Taiwan.

"We can't ignore Asia and Asia's peoples," Fields explains. "By 2025, 65 percent of the world's wealth will be in Asia."

However, Fields cautions, students shouldn't just be concerned about wealth and shifts in commerce and capital. Their interests, he points out, also should focus on diverse cultures and the arts.

Puget Sound's Asian Studies Program contributes to clearing up misperceptions, stereotypes and inaccurate assumptions about the region, ranging from vilification and demonization to placing the far-flung region on a pedestal as a model for other regions.

This range of opinion—seeing Asia as either a close friend or enemy—Fields believes, is a "result of misunderstandings that also are true with policy makers."

Fields believes that it's easy to teach courses about Asia "because the students are interested." He credits much of the strength and scope of Puget Sound's Asian Studies Program to the directors who preceded him, including Barnett and Associate Professor Christopher Ives, who specializes in Japanese religion and culture.

Campus welcomes 10 tenure-line faculty

They come from Ulm, Germany, Pittsburg and Kansas. They teach an eclectic group of subjects: math and computer science, English and history, foreign languages and literature, philosophy and physics, politics and government. They are a musician, a physical therapist, an editor and several who speak numerous languages. They are the new tenure-line faculty members who joined Puget Sound this fall.

Roger J. Allen, assistant professor, department of physical therapy

Allen was a physical therapist at the University of Washington Medical Center and Swedish Medical Center. Highly accomplished in his academic field, Allen is also self-taught in descriptive astronomy and navigation. He served for two years as celestial navigation instructor aboard Ocean Star, a 90-foot schooner in the North Atlantic.

Alix Cooper, assistant professor in history and environmental studies

Cooper's research concerns the history of modern ideas of natural resources and biodiversity. She chose teaching at the University of Puget Sound for several reasons, among them: "the chance to participate in building a strong environmental studies program at Puget Sound."

Heather E. Douglas, assistant professor, department of philosophy

Nineteen ninety-eight has been a year of accomplishment for Douglas. She finished her doctorate, got married, was hired by Puget Sound, bought a house and moved to Tacoma.

Nick Kontogeorgopoulos, assistant professor, department of comparative sociology, and Luce professor of the political economy of Southeast Asia (or Luce Professor of Political Economy)

Kontogeorgopoulos taught geography at the University of British Columbia and was a teaching assistant at the University of Toronto. He says he was attracted to the University of Puget Sound because of its size and orientation toward the liberal arts, and the interdisciplinary nature of his position which makes it possible to pursue several areas of inquiry.

Karen A. Porter, assistant professor, department of comparative sociology

Porter speaks Swahili fluently and has a working knowledge of French and Chasu. Porter serves as General Editor of the journal, the Anthropology of Work Review. She has consulted in international development for USAID and the Consultative Group on International Agriculture Research, and has put her anthropological skills to work in the Rochester community, helping refugees from Sudan and Ethiopia resettle and make a life in the USA.

Sigrun I. Bodine, assistant professor, department of mathematics and computer science

Bodine, who has taught a variety of math courses at the University of Southern California, the University of Ulm and at San Diego State University, was the sole recipient of the Outstanding University Teaching Assistant Award at USC in 1995.

Jeannine DeLombard, assistant professor, department of English

DeLombard has taught at several universities including the University of Pennsylvania and St. Joseph's University. Her teaching interests include Early American literature, 19th-century American literature and culture, African-American studies, law and literature, post-colonial literature theory, and literary theory.

Kristi R.G. Hendrickson, assistant professor, department of physics

Hendrickson has taught physics at Pacific Lutheran University and at the University of Washington. She was also an editorial assistant for Reviews of Modern Physics. She lists as one of her biggest accomplishments of her research career when the barium ion trap that she built with another graduate student finally worked after months of trying.

Molly Pasco-Pranger, assistant professor, department of classics

Pasco-Pranger says, "I have to admit that I'm very proud of receiving my Ph.D. and being hired here. From the time I started college, I knew that this was what I wanted to do, and I've worked hard for the past 10 years toward this goal, but am still amazed that I've actually accomplished it. I, myself, had a wonderful undergraduate experience at a small liberal arts college: my world really opened up and I was given a chance to explore and challenge my opinions and abilities...I look forward to contributing to a similar experience for my students."

Keith C. Ward, professor and director of the School of Music

Ward's work has focused on the music of composers Arnold Schoenberg and Charles Ives, 19th-century American piano music and musical responses to the AIDS pandemic. Ward and his wife, Barbara, a native of Germany, have two children, Benjamin, 6, and Martha, 5, months. They are rearing both children bilingually.

Suzanne Barnett named to Albertson Professorship

"The classroom is not merely for recitation," says Suzanne Barnett.

"Good teachers find ways to engage students," said Suzanne Barnett, a Puget Sound professor of history and a specialist in modern China and Japan.

"The classroom," she added, "is not merely for recitation of ideas—it's also for the generation of ideas. The excitement for me as a teacher is never knowing exactly what will happen in class. Every course I teach, I take."

That's the teaching philosophy of Puget Sound's second Robert G. Albertson Professor, 1998-2003.

"Suzanne does indeed exemplify the characteristics outlined for us by the donors who endowed the (Albertson) chair," said Puget Sound President Susan Resneck Pierce. "(She has) a commitment to teaching and intellectual vitality. As the donors indicated, they wished to honor and recognize members of the faculty 'who are personally and professionally committed to undergraduate teaching and teaching excellence.' In addition, they wished to recognize a member of the faculty whose work is interdisciplinary."

During her five-year term as Albertson Professor, Barnett will expand her interdisciplinary teaching—in history, humanities and Asian studies—as well as develop a new upper-level course in the humanities and teach a freshman seminar.

Barnett has said that her "greatest interest as the Albertson Professor would be students' intellectual autonomy."

Puget Sound received a $1.5 million gift in 1991 to endow the Robert G. Albertson Professorship. The professorship is named for a retired Puget Sound faculty member in religion, who was instrumental in creating the Asian Studies Program. Barnett worked closely with Albertson for 15 years.

"I feel humbled by this appointment," Barnett said. "I'm fully aware of the remarkable talent and expertise on this campus."

In announcing the Albertson Professorship, President Pierce wrote of Barnett: "She has been previously recognized for her fine teaching. She has written and spoken extensively on matters relating to Chinese history and currently is working on a book manuscript, 'New Directions: Chinese Geographical Writings and the Early Protestant Missionary Press, 1820-1850.' It is fitting that she has over the years been a close colleague of Professor Emeritus Bob Albertson, whom the chair also honors."

Among Barnett's interests are modern Chinese history, late imperial China conceptual and cultural change, Protestant missions in China and U.S.-Chinese relations. Barnett also is the author of numerous publications. Her many academic honors include a Fulbright-Hays graduate fellowship for travel and research in Taiwan and Japan, research fellow in East Asian Studies at Harvard University, and participation in an East Asian Scholar-Diplomat Seminar sponsored by the U.S. State Department.

Barnett came to Puget Sound in 1973 after earning a doctorate at Harvard University in history and East Asian studies. She directed the Asian Studies Program from 1974-76 and 1978-90.

Prior to joining the Puget Sound faculty, Barnett was a lecturer at Boston University and Suffolk University, an instructor at Wellesley College and a visiting assistant professor at the University of Virginia.

IN THEIR OWN WORDS

By Ruth Mahre '99

as told to Beth Grubb

An OT/PT master's candidate talks about the satisfaction of teaching mountaineering, the story you didn't get in the media feeding-frenzy of last spring's Mt. Rainier avalanche and the true attributes of heroism.

Ruth Mahre's job last summer did more than provide the $1,100 a month she made as a guide for Rainier Mountaineering, Inc., (RMI): she discovered the joy of leading people into the clouds and, more, tested her own inner strength.

The youngest of nine children (including Olympic ski champions Steve and Phil Mahre), Ruth earned an undergraduate degree at the University of Nevada, Reno, on a ski scholarship. She plans to graduate from Puget Sound in May, climb Alaska's Mt. McKinley, the highest peak in North America, then take her state boards and begin her "real life as a physical therapist."

Last June, she was thrust into the national spotlight while descending Mt. Rainier with a group of RMI clients. An avalanche knocked her six-person rope team 200 feet down the mountain and over the edge of a cliff. Miraculously, the group's fall was arrested—in part because the section of rope between Mahre and the next climber snagged on a protruding rock, and in part because a safety anchor held. The climbers hung on the dangerously frayed rope for nearly three hours before rescuers pulled them up. One man died of hypothermia and injuries.

We asked Mahre about climbing and what she has learned from leading others on treks into very high places, a task that often pushes her clients to the limit of their physical endurance. Here's what she had to say.

At home on a mountain

I grew up at White Pass ski area, and I've always been in the mountains. That's home to me. My dad is a legendary mountaineer in the Northwest. He's been to Everest twice, although he didn't summit, so mountaineering was a constant in my life. I've known (revered climber and RMI co-founder) Lou Whittaker since I was a little girl about 10 years old. My dad was on his Everest party in '82 and '84. I climbed Rainier for the first time when I was 15. And I've climbed quite a bit with my dad and a handful of friends.

People talk about summiting, but I don't see climbing as conquering the mountain. It's more like conquering yourself and your own weaknesses. There's a lot of time to think when you're climbing. You can't zone out on the upper mountain, where you need to be paying attention, but there are times when you can just be, and that's incredible.

Physical therapy school is so intellectually intensive for nine months of the year that in the summers I like to do a lot of manual labor. The past few years I worked for the Forest Service, fighting wild fires and doing timber sales. But this summer I tried out as a guide for RMI. It's a two-day process. The first day they grill you with technical questions on a series of mountaineering skills, such as mountain medicine, crevasse rescue and weather predictions. The next day is a physical fitness test—a hike—and they score you by what place you come in. In the afternoon you demonstrate how you would instruct a mountaineering skill, such as how to crampon, how to rope climb, how to self-arrest. I was very happy to get the job. There were a lot of good people there.

I like sharing my passion for a sport with other people. Guiding is a lot like physical therapy. You cannot rehab somebody's knee for them—you teach them how they can rehab their knee. And it's the same with climbing. I can't climb for somebody, but I can teach them the skills. I really enjoy that. It's fun to watch people learn.

Lessons learned

Some of the guides at RMI have been there 25 years. Basically, I'm a novice climber. I got to learn from the best all summer. As a new guide you're a peon—you work hard, but it's so much fun that it's tolerable. There was great camaraderie among the guides. Everybody's personality comes out on the mountain.

The issue of people climbing who aren't prepared broke into the mainstream news media with the Everest accident in May 1996. You can pay a lot of money and your guide's gonna bust his tush to get you there. Some guides won't take you up if you're weak, but there are other guides who try to get as many people to the summit as they can.

I'm one of the guides who is probably willing to take up a weaker person because I have a soft heart and I want to get them up to the summit. But I also learned that it's really dangerous and you can't jeopardize your whole rope team by putting someone who's weak on the rope. I'm not strong enough to pull someone up the whole way. And they're not going to have fun, either, because they're going to be hurting so bad.

I learned how to talk to people about it, so usually it is their decision, versus me telling them they'd have to turn around. I never personally had to tell anyone that I wouldn't take them up, but with some folks we did a lot of debating about whether they should keep going or not.

I learned that when you're guiding, you're climbing with beginners, and it's a lot different than climbing with your friends. You have to be smart and think about what you're getting yourself into. As the summer went on, I learned how to read people a little better. It takes a while to learn the signs of who's strong and who isn't—you'd be surprised, some people will fool you.

All the guides will swear up and down that they'd rather take up a woman who's tough than a man who's in shape but mentally is a wimp. I heard senior guides say over and over that women are way tougher. I think in a lot of ways women are more stubborn about it and willing to endure more pain. Not all women, though—you can't generalize. In ski racing you always say it's 80 percent mental and 20 percent physical. And climbing's a lot the same way. It's about overcoming your body's weaknesses. And if you're mentally tough, you can push yourself a long way. That's why climbing is good for me.

Some days you're not as strong as others, no way around it. Some days you feel better when you get to the summit than others. Sometimes when they wake you up at midnight to start getting ready you think, "What am I doing?" But as soon as you get up and you're climbing with your headlamp and the sun's coming up over Little Tahoma—it's a great experience. It sounds so cheesy, but I really enjoyed every day. Being on the mountain was probably the best thing I've done for myself in a long time.

In the face of disaster

The press' reaction to the accident was overwhelming. They really went off. There must not have been anything going on in the country. I'm not minimizing Patrick Nestler's death at all, and I'm not trying to say that it shouldn't be covered, but the amount of coverage it got was incredible.

Climbing's in the spotlight right now, and the media loves a hero. It sells. Emotion sells. Unfortunately, I got turned into a hero in some aspects. And it was crazy because I was just doing my job. I didn't really do anything spectacular, other than keep my head. That's not heroic, that's survival.

It's been really embarrassing for me, because I don't feel I deserved the type of attention that I got. Many people who helped with the rescue were more heroic. And a lot of it was miscommunication. The first people there radioed down that I was holding the team. They made it sound like I was in self-arrest position for two and a half hours, and really, I just got hung up on a rock and my body weight held us there. It was pure luck.

The attention has been difficult. For example, Glamour magazine told me they were going to do a story on women guides, and I was all for that. There are seven women guides at RMI. Heather McDonald is one of the most respected women mountaineers in the world. I said they should interview her. And then they did the whole story on the accident! It disappointed me because I really think the emphasis should have been on women guides and climbing. I thought that was a terrific opportunity for Glamour to make a statement on women doing something nontraditional.

I feel blessed and lucky. I had some karma or something. When we were sliding down the mountain, I knew we were going over the cliff. I knew it wasn't good. It was pure luck when I stopped. Unbelievable luck.

I remember hanging there, and when Heidi Eichner, one of the other guides, got to me, the first thing I said to her was, "Heidi, I don't think I'm coming to work tomorrow." She just looked at me like, how could you be joking?

I took three days off, but then I was ready to get back on the mountain. I needed to get back. It's like getting back on a horse. If anything, I swore the accident would make me stronger, not weaker. You learn a lot about yourself. And it puts a lot of things in perspective about what's important in life.

Seeing the forest and the trees

Puget Sound grads are helping make the hard decisions that protect land for the public

Trading public land for private is a common—often contentious—practice these days: land swaps recently were employed to protect spotted owl habitat, to dissuade a mining company from operating near Yellowstone and to consolidate so-called “checkerboarded” tracts in the Cascades.

Arranging such deals—with their attendant scientific studies, squabbling special-interest groups and political fallout—can be mind-numbingly complex, but two Puget Sound graduates have shown that a liberal arts education can come in mighty handy when trying to facilitate the process.

Charlie Raines '70, '71 and Heidi Biggs '85 were key players in the 35,000-acre Huckleberry Mountain exchange with Weyerhaeuser last year. Raines and Biggs worked on different aspects of the negotiation: Raines, as founder and head of the Sierra Club's Cascade Checkerboard Project; and Biggs as a member of Weyerhaeuser's team, keeping legislators informed in Washington, D.C. Among many other tasks, Biggs monitored progress on a bill that extended the national forest boundary near North Bend so key lands in the exchange could be acquired by the Forest Service.

The deal, which swapped 4,362 acres of public land for 30,253 acres of Weyerhaeuser land (plus the donation by Weyerhaeuser of a 2,000-acre tract bordering the Alpine Lakes Wilderness Area), took a dozen years to complete and unified a significant portion of checkerboarded land but not without controversy.

The checkerboard conundrum

The problems surrounding checkerboarded forests can be traced back to the 1860s, when the Civil War was at fever pitch and Congress was looking for a way to strengthen the Union. As an incentive to speed westward expansion, it offered the railroads alternating one-mile-square sections on land reaching as far as 50 miles on either side of the track they laid.

This resulted in a checkerboard pattern of ownership—part public, part private—that became wildly confused as the railroads sold their holdings to settlers and timber companies or spun off their own logging operations, such as Plum Creek Timber Company, a descendant of the old Northern Pacific Railroad.

“At one time the Northern Pacific Railway had received 40 million acres along its route from Lake Superior to Puget Sound,” remarks Raines. “Not so long ago, all of the Alpine Lakes Wilderness, all of Mount Rainier National Park, all of the William O. Douglas Wilderness and the lands in between were checkerboarded. Today more than 250,000 acres of private lands still are intermingled with national forests in the central Cascades.”

Making deals without federal money

Checkerboarded lands may have made sense for the government in 1864, but today—despite the responsible efforts of land owners like Weyerhaeuser, which has instituted innovative forest-sustaining watershed analyses and wildlife and water management techniques—they pose two main problems. First, to access their holdings, timber companies must build roads across public lands; and, second, by harvesting mile-square swaths, contiguous forests that are necessary for healthy ecosystems are interrupted.

“One of the reasons land exchanges are in the news is that Congress refuses to appropriate funds to purchase these key lands,” notes Raines. “Since Congress didn’t deal us any cash, we’ve got to play the hand we’ve been dealt.”

That leaves purchase, donation or trade.

“So if you want to acquire other lands, what are you going to give up to do it?” asks Raines, who has experience on environmental issues from the perspectives of several different kinds of landowners. He was an environmental specialist for Seattle City Light from 1987 to 1993 and worked for the U.S. Forest Service in Skykomish back in the '70s.

To preserve and restore the forest ecosystem in the central Cascades, in 1993 he developed the Cascade Checkerboard Project, which, under the auspices of the Sierra Club, works with agencies, landowners and public officials along a line where science and politics meet.

“I’m looking at the land from a scientific standpoint and trying to figure out what is going on, then trying to figure out how that continues as a public policy position,” says Raines. “You can have the best science in the world, but if you don’t have the public behind you, you’re not going to get good results. And if you have the public behind you but don’t have good science, you’re likely to make bad decisions.”

Raines, a Puget Sound biology major, says his days at the University prepared him perfectly for multidisciplinary demands like this. Having been on both the Vienna and PacRim study-abroad trips, living with people from many different backgrounds helps him understand diverse viewpoints. Knowing how to integrate and interpret philosophical, social, political and scientific information helps him literally to see the forest and the individual trees. “Even my art training (he minored in art) aids in presenting visual information,” he adds.

Huckleberry Mountain: A good deal?

“We originally criticized the Huckleberry Ridge deal,” Raines says. In fact, Raines coined the oft-quoted phrase “stumps for trees” to describe the proposed trade of Weyerhaeuser and National Forest lands. “But when I came up with that we had not yet found some of the lakes, wetlands and forest groves that were in the package. And, of course, Weyerhaeuser’s donation (of 900-plus acres to the Alpine Lakes Wilderness Area) had not been tendered. The donation turned cynicism to support. It was not an insignificant factor, and the only way that land would have been added to the wilderness was through a donation.”

Still, a week-long series that ran last September in The Seattle Times called land swaps into question and specifically portrayed the Huckleberry Mountain exchange as a “backroom deal” that left the public out of the decision-making process.

Raines concedes that The Times series raised some good points, but he insists the exchange was, in fact, very public.

“The forest supervisor selected our exchange/donation alternative only after it had been publicly reviewed in the environmental impact statement,” he notes.

On the other hand, Raines lauds The Times’ discussion of the appraisal process. (The article exposed inconsistencies in the process of putting a dollar value on forested land.)

“Appraisal information has not been made public, and we did not have that information when we supported the exchange. Had we known, it probably wouldn’t have stopped the exchange, but less (public) land on Huckleberry Ridge would have been traded.”

Heidi Biggs '85 and Charlie Raines '70, '71 worked on different aspects of the controversial Huckleberry Mountain exchange: she with Weyerhaeuser, he with the Sierra Club.

All things considered, though, Raines thinks the public interest was well served, and he is not alone.

“The Times series was a disappointment to see—especially after the paper’s editorial board heralded the exchange process we used as a ‘model’ in 1996,” says Heidi Biggs, a member of the Puget Sound National Alumni Board who worked for Washington Senators Dan Evans and Slade Gorton before joining Weyerhaeuser. She recently returned to the Northwest to assist with strategic planning at Weyerhaeuser’s corporate headquarters in Federal Way.

“Land-use issues are never easy,” she points out. “But when you find a solution that gets support from Charlie’s organization, the government, other stakeholder groups and Weyerhaeuser, then a pretty good balance was probably found.”

Mack Hogans, senior vice president for corporate affairs at Weyerhaeuser and a member of the University’s board of trustees, agrees it is impossible to please everyone on an issue of such scope and observes wryly that he doesn’t need to look far to find people critical of the exchange.

“Some folks at Weyerhaeuser feel we gave away too much for what we got,” he wrote in an OpEd that appeared in The Times on October 7. Bottom line, says Hogans, if someone like U.S. District Court Judge William L. Dwyer, a revered Seattle jurist, finds the exchange negotiations were carried out “with rigor and good faith over a long period of time,” then the public interest was served.

What’s to be learned?

As long as forests are still checkerboarded, the use of private and public lands will be a contentious issue. But the Huckleberry Mountain negotiation showed how two dedicated Puget Sound graduates armed with the right knowledge and the conviction to make hard decisions can make a difference.

As Weyerhaeuser’s Hogans observed, “I’m sure Heidi Biggs’ and Charlie Raines’ time at the University of Puget Sound helped prepare them to be the leaders they are today and taught them to bring a fair perspective, perseverance and courage to complex, controversial issues like the Huckleberry exchange.”

Good data for good decision-making

Everywhere you turn, it seems, Puget Sound grads are providing the resources needed to make informed choices about the environment.

As director of the Center for Landscape Analysis at the Wilderness Society, Janice Thomson '85 and her staff have been working closely with Charlie Raines '70, '71 on the Cascade Checkerboard Project (see above story) and other natural resource projects in the Northwest and across the country. The center uses both remote sensing (digital satellite imagery) and geographic information systems (computer mapping and spatial analysis) to study the location and condition of natural resources.

“Using these technologies we combine layers of data to analyze patterns in the landscape,” says Thomson. “For example, we can see where old-growth forests are or how roads and nearby streams interrelate.”

Thomson, who majored in geology at Puget Sound and then went on to get a master’s and Ph.D. at Dartmouth, has been working at the Wilderness Society for five years. “What we do at the center is provide people with the information they need to make good decisions about land issues, such as exchanges,” she says.

BEING THERE

Our intrepid reporter sees The Hatchet, mingles with oddly garbed students and is taken aback by revelations of cross-generational Internet use, yet he emerges from it all impatient for next time.

A report from the Homecoming field by Scott Henderson '95

Despite living only a 45-minute drive away from the University of Puget Sound, I have not visited my alma mater much at all. But going back for this year's Homecoming game and reunion activities was, OK I'll admit it, downright fun.

Before the football game on Saturday more than 250 alumni enjoyed a picnic, prize giveaways and short talks by our football coach and the opposing coach, who, amazingly, turned out to be a Puget Sound graduate. A slide show of events in the University's history gave me a distinct view of our school back when it was the College of Puget Sound. President Susan Resneck Pierce took a few minutes to tell us about the Puget Sound Hatchet—a campus icon which mysteriously resurfaced recently after having disappeared for 10 years. It is now on permanent display behind apparently bulletproof glass in the Wheelock Student Center. Alas, it looks like the days of stealing The Hatchet are over. (For more on The Hatchet's history see accompanying story. — Ed.)

The stands were full for the football game, and our spirit was high. The Loggers lost, but the game featured big plays on both sides. Seeing the current students yell and scream while dressed in outrageous outfits brought back memories of losing my voice in Baker Stadium, whether or not our team was winning.

I finished off the day at the Reunion Gala at the Tacoma Country Club. Although this is not a reunion year for my class, I bumped into many old friends and spent time catching up on what they were doing with their lives. Memorabilia from the 50th reunion Class of 1948 (which was celebrating its 50th reunion) were on display for all to see and thumb through. The setting was even intimate enough that I was able to spend a few minutes talking with President Pierce. Dinner at the gala was excellent, and the entertainment was first-class, too—a jazz vocal group of current students. I sat at a table with graduates ranging from 1995 (my class) to 1948 and learned that even the Class of '48 has embraced e-mail and the Internet. It seemed as though someone's old schoolmate stopped by our table every five minutes to say hello. People had come from places as far away as Lexington, Ky., Albuquerque and Honolulu to enjoy their reunion.

The whole experience left me paging through my yearbooks, remembering four years that definitely were some of the best of my life. I find myself looking forward to my first reunion, and all the ones to follow.

Why a hatchet?

A history of the mysterious campus icon

Other colleges have their symbols, but only the University of Puget Sound has The Hatchet, an important part of campus life since 1908, when Puget Sound students discovered it in a barn they were helping to tear down on the old campus. The students thought the old carpenter's ax was an appropriate symbol for a college that called its sports teams the Loggers.

Once considered "the most prized possession on this campus" according to a 1979 issue of The Trail, the campus newspaper, The Hatchet is fairly small—a 5 1/2 x 3 1/2-inch iron head on a 10-inch oak shaft. It was old when the students first uncovered it in 1908. Each senior class took possession of The Hatchet and handed it down to the next class as they were graduating, and each year the seniors added the year of their graduation somewhere on The Hatchet. One date was welded to the head, another was applied in gold by the goldsmith father of a student. Others were simply carved into the wooden shaft.

Former students love to tell stories about The Hatchet and the role it played in campus life at Puget Sound for much of this century. "There was intrigue about it all the time," says Troy Strong '48, a retired Methodist minister and former University trustee (1969 to 1997). "It was a constant matter of interest."

Underclassmen got involved as well, and a June 1927 issue of The Trail says that one freshman class "intercepted" The Hatchet and buried it. A substitute was used for three years until the original hatchet was produced in time for the graduation of the class that had buried it.

The article noted a number of the traditions that had come to surround The Hatchet. Even then, the publication said, no one seemed to know how the tradition of "passing The Hatchet" from seniors to juniors had begun. One alumnus suggested that it was a symbol of peace between the senior and junior classes, while a faculty member wrote that The Hatchet was a symbol of peace between the upper classmen and the faculty after the students were disciplined for holding a social event without permission.

Over the years, even more customs and rituals grew up around The Hatchet. The class that held The Hatchet was required to display it publicly at regular intervals to give other classes a chance to snatch it away. Some alumni say it had to be displayed once a year. A 1980 article in The Trail says that it had to be displayed in public once a week.

Typically, students chose campus events to display The Hatchet, a disruptive practice, but one meant to impress the campus with the risky and elaborate showings. It was a test of originality and planning to organize a showing so carefully that no one could get close enough to The Hatchet to steal it.

The most famous of these stunts was when the Class of 1961 chose to display The Hatchet during a Canadian tour by a campus musical group. The Hatchet was flashed for all to see during a performance at a Methodist Church in Canada, according to The Trail, and pandemonium broke out as the Puget Sound students rushed in pursuit of The Hatchet. But the wily Class of '61 had prepared a package with a Tacoma address on it, and The Hatchet was dropped in a mail box before another class could grab it.

In those days, it was routine for each class to form a special committee devoted exclusively to devising schemes for stealing The Hatchet. One alumnus told The Trail in 1979 that some students spent their entire four years at Puget Sound in pursuit of The Hatchet.

The Hatchet itself disappeared several times, always "under mysterious circumstances," causing students to retire The Hatchet and put it on display in Jones Hall. But a few years later, during a remodeling of Jones Hall, The Hatchet again vanished, only to resurface briefly in 1987 at the Homecoming football game, when Logger mascot Sumner Erdman '88 wore it on his belt.

In the fall of 1998, the original hatchet, missing since 1986, was ceremonially returned to the University of Puget Sound at Homecoming and placed in a secure display case in Wheelock Student Center. —Jeanne Sather the world outside, both across the street and across the nation. It presented guidelines for future improvements in a historical context."

Robins, who trained as a landscape architect and has worked at Puget Sound for 10 years, talks with passion as he tours the campus pointing out master-plan improvements, some of which were completed this past summer. "Preserving open space and a unique architectural character are principles that go all the way back to the Sutton Plan," he says.

No More Mud Football

Principles of the Framework Plan were applied to the first phase of $45 million in capital improvements, which began to be implemented in early 1998 and will continue until 2002.

The most dramatic change will be the construction of a new academic building just north and west of Warner Gymnasium (see "Building on Campaign Success," Arches Winter/Spring 1998). The first academic building to be constructed on campus since 1967, it will house the University humanities departments, opening up much-needed space in the library. Construction of the $14.7 million facility will begin in spring 1999 with occupancy planned for May 2000. The building will be "L" shaped, completing a quad enclosure at the southwest corner of Todd Field.

Todd Field itself was enlarged recently when the University converted a section of N. Warner in front of Todd and Phibbs Halls to lawn, thus broadening the central greenway and extending it south toward the athletic facilities. A drainage system was built under the field and it was regraded, bringing to an end its often boggy consistency and the resulting muddy games of ultimate Frisbee and tag football.

Other projects either already done or near completion include:

- Renovation of Baker Stadium, which was brought up to earthquake code and tidied up with University maroon and white paint. Trees will have been planted along the new sidewalks by the time you read this.
- Demolition of the old A-frames and chalets, temporary buildings that were never intended to serve as long as they did, thus opening a sightline through the trees from the proposed new entrance off Union Avenue. One chalet remains. It will be used as a construction office and removed after the humanities building is completed.
- Completion of the second phase of the Wheelock Student Center renovation, bringing the new and greatly expanded serving area, renamed The Diner, online.

- Relocation of the baseball field to the south end of campus, allowing at last a field that meets NCAA regulations. (Grass on the new field needs a full season to mature, so it will not be available for use until January 2000.)

Ambitious Agenda

But all that is just a start. "While fully realizing the new Framework Master Plan may take 20 years or more, the choices we make now and for the next five years will head us firmly in the right direction," says Vice President for Finance and Administration Michael Rothman. Projects leading up to 2002 are:

- Renovation of McIntyre Hall. This work will improve the ground-floor auditorium, create technology-ready classrooms and eliminate the hated "windows that don't open."
- Renovation of the Union Avenue houses. Each of these eight structures housing sororities and fraternities will be substantially renovated at an overall cost of $8.9 million. Among improvements planned are repairs to major systems such as heating and electricity, new furniture and reconfiguration of living spaces to bring them into line with the needs of today's students.
- Renovation of Collins Memorial Library. When the second floor of the library is vacated following completion of the new academic building, that space will be converted for library information and resource activities. The library, which was built in 1963 (with a wing added in 1974) also needs electrical, plumbing and heating systems work.
- If fundraising is successful, construction of a new facility for Occupational and Physical Therapy. The World War II-vintage temporary structure, South Hall, long ago outlasted its life expectancy. A new facility will finally provide a permanent home for the nationally respected OT/PT programs.
- Renovation of Jones Hall and Howarth Hall.

These last two will be undertaken after additional planning; no firm time frame has yet been established.

The Sutton Plan Revisited

Because of the exit off Route 16, a limited-access spur of I-5, most visitors these days approach the campus via Union Avenue, not on N. Lawrence, as they did in Sutton's day.

A food-court-like renovation of the dining area in the Wheelock Student Center opened to rave student reviews this fall.

But there is no obvious campus entrance on Union, and a major part of the new master plan is the construction of a more formal entrance on the west side of campus that will, as Facilities Director Robins notes, "Allow the visitor to look into the sanctuary at the center of campus."

New antique-style street lighting is planned for Union, and eventually the Union Avenue entrance also would establish an additional quad like the one in front of Jones Hall, while reconfiguring parking. Although several parking areas are to be modified under the plan, including the lot near the fieldhouse, the total number of parking spaces on campus will remain the same, and better lots will lure cars off the residential streets surrounding the campus.

A related goal of the master plan is a more pedestrian-friendly campus. At Puget Sound this will mean improvements campuswide to pathways and outdoor lighting, better storage for bikes and landscaping changes that will make the campus more accommodating to pedestrians.

The Bottom Line

How will the University finance this, the largest program of capital improvements in its history? The projects identified so far will be funded in a variety of ways. More than half will be covered by reserve funds and gifts to the Campaign for Puget Sound, and the rest will be borrowed. (The University is fortunate to be carrying very little debt in comparison to its peers, and it obtained a favorable rating during its credit review, permitting the University to borrow at an extremely attractive interest rate.)

"One of the most critical goals of the campaign is raising $10 million to provide sufficient and appropriate space for students and faculty to do their work," says Michael Oman, vice president for university relations. "We need to ensure that the Puget Sound landscape will continue to be a place that lifts the spirit."

ALUMNI NEWS

Puget Sound Alumni writers' network formed

Puget Sound alumni whose profession or avocation is writing have formed a special network to help answer questions from students about writing careers. Peter Hapeman '81, a long-time volunteer in the career consulting and mentoring program called the Alumni Sharing Knowledge (ASK) Network, initiated this effort to identify writers and editors from many different fields, including journalism, magazine publishing, creative writing, non-profit and corporate communications, public relations/advertising and technical writing.

"We formed this to enable students to target questions to appropriate alumni and to enable alumni to refer students to writing professionals in different industries," said Hapeman.

Hapeman saw a need to form a tighter network so that when he received a call from a student who might be interested in a writing career in something other than his particular field, which is technical writing, he'd know where to refer that student.

Writers' Network alumni make themselves available to answer questions about how they got started in their careers, what they do day-to-day as writers, and they give advice to aspiring writers. Most have provided brief career summaries. Many can hire or refer students to internships or entry-level professional positions.

"This is a great enhancement to the existing Alumni Sharing Knowledge Network," said Ron Albertson, assistant director for career services in the office of academic and career advising. "The fact that it came from the initiative of an alumni volunteer makes it even more meaningful," he added.

Students and alumni can gain access to the writers group by searching ASK Online by "career consulting field" and selecting "Alumni Writers Network." The Web address for ASK Online is <http://www.ups.edu/ask/aohome.htm>. The password for the protected Internet site can be obtained by contacting the office by e-mail (aca@ups.edu) or phone 253-756-3250. A hard copy of the alumni writers network career summaries is also available in the office.

Hapeman and Albertson encourage alumni in other careers to form similar networks. Katie Davis, career counselor and employer relations specialist in the office of academic and career advising, has constructed the ASK Online Internet site so that any subgroup can be formed and searched by career consulting field.

"The network helps build enthusiasm among alumni," said Hapeman. "It's fun for alumni to share insights with each other as well as with students."

Social workers, investment bankers, research scientists, outdoor enthusiasts—the possibilities of special alumni career networking groups are endless. If you'd like to form a group around your specialty, contact Ron Albertson in academic and career advising, 253-756-3250, aca@ups.edu.

Live on campus vicariously

Regional events offer everything you remember about the University, save the food-service oatmeal

By Susan Bladholm '87, President National Alumni Board and Chuck Cooper '66, Regional Programs Committee Chair, National Alumni Board

Quick! What do you miss most about campus life? Likely, friends and faculty members are high on your list.

How can you reconnect with those important people? Easy, and it doesn't require a trip to Tacoma. Puget Sound brings faculty and Logger kin to you through regional events.

More than 20 of these events are held across the country each year thanks to the planning efforts of fellow alums working in tandem with the University's Alumni Relations Office. These gatherings typically feature a local block-buster event (one you would want to attend on your own anyway, such as the Van Gogh exhibit in L.A. or brunch with a Boeing executive in Seattle) with an informative discussion led by a faculty representative. Often a great meal is part of the equation.

Look on the back page of this issue of Arches for the 1999 Calendar. (How's that for advance notice?!) You will receive a personal invitation for events in your area. Given the large turn-out at recent events, RSVP early, since many of the events sell out.

Will you be asked to contribute to the University at these events? Absolutely not! Regional alumni events are simply a way to keep you in touch. But you likely will get to meet recent grads, colleagues from your class and University leaders who contribute to a lively and fun event. (By the way, we're always looking for alums who want to help with events in their area. Call the alumni office if you are interested.)

And if you missed out on this year's Reunion and Homecoming, plan now for next year. Circle October 22-24, 1999, on your calendar. Attendance for 1998's Reunion doubled from the previous year, as curious alums returned to see the changes on campus: new buildings, the renovated student center, (actually edible food—the servery is an upscale food court), expanded green space at Todd Field and the baseball field construction in the old Fieldhouse parking lot.

Admit it. You miss debating with a prof, seeing your Logger chums and eating oatmeal at the SUB. We can't promise you the oatmeal, but Puget Sound will deliver the friends and faculty at a regional event near you.

Department of Education offers alums one-time, low-cost loan consolidation

Responding to temporary legislation that reduced interest rates on new student loans, the United States Department of Education has lowered its interest rate for existing-loan consolidation, a move that may help alumni save up to $50 per $1,000 over the life of their college loans.

Until January 30, 1999, only the Department of Education is consolidating student loans—allowing borrowers to combine all of their loans into one loan—at an interest rate of 4.6 percent. This rate is 1 percent lower than recently issued loans and even more of a savings for older loans. After January 30, student loans will be consolidated at a higher rate. Here are the facts:

- Borrowers may consolidate loans made through the department via the Ford Direct Lending Program (FDLP) or those made through private lenders via the Federal Family Education Loan Program (FFELP). Private FFELP lenders may also be offering competitive consolidation rates during this time period. Check with their lenders if you have private loans.
- There is no minimum or maximum loan balance to take advantage of this opportunity, and the Department of Education charges no fee to consolidate.
- If you consolidate your loans, you can still choose from a wide range of repayment options.
- If you have a Perkins loan, do not include it in the consolidation. Its interest rate of 5 percent is already lower than the consolidation interest rate.
- You can consolidate an existing consolidation loan.
- Loan consolidations take about 60-80 days to process.
- When you consolidate your loans, the Department of Education buys the loans from your lenders and consolidates them.
- After January 30, your loans will be consolidated at the weighted average of the loans, rounded up to the nearest percent.
- You can contact the Direct Loan Origination Center at 800-557-7392 for an application or you can download one from www.ed.gov/DirectLoan.

The directories are coming! The directories are coming!

All 22,000 Puget Sound alumni recently were notified of our upcoming new alumni directory and were asked for their input. If you haven't already done so, please return your questionnaire today. This will ensure that your personal information is accurate in this great new reference book.

The verification phase of this project will begin soon. Alumni will be receiving a telephone call from Bernard C. Harris Publishing Company, the official publisher of our directory. Please give the representative who calls a few moments of your time to verify your listing.

To place a reservation for a copy of the Puget Sound Alumni Directory, please advise the Harris representative during this conversation, since this will be the only opportunity to order the book.

Scheduled for release in summer 1999, the Puget Sound Alumni Directory promises to be the definitive reference for more than 22,000 alumni. Don't miss this opportunity to be a part of it.

Oops!

Just as this issue of Arches was going to press the Harris Company informed the University that in some cases they inadvertently substituted the maiden names of alumnae for the last names of their spouses in the mailing sent out for verification. Please be assured that the University is aware of this mistake. It will be corrected, and accurate information will be published.

Architecture river cruise a success

My kind of town—Chicago is!

Curtis Spillers '80 and Jim Brown '78, co-chairs of the Puget Sound Alumni Association Chicago Chapter, hosted some 25 alumni from all eras, parents and grandparents on an Architecture River Cruise along the Chicago River on Sept. 27, 1998. The day started out with breakfast at the Lakeshore Athletic Club, where guests got an update on campus activities from Director of Alumni Programs Sharon Babcock. They also learned that the Puget Sound men's soccer team would be playing two games in the Chicago area—against Rockford College and Northpark College—and were encouraged to turn out and cheer for the maroon and white. Then it was off to the tour boat, with expert commentary on Chicago's many notable buildings provided by the Chicago Architectural Foundation. The cruisers could not have asked for a more glorious day: "It was Indian summer in the midwest; sunny and 80 degrees. (I ordered up the weather!)," said Spillers.

CLASS NOTES

The deadline for Class Notes appearing in this issue of Arches was October 2, 1998. Notes received after that date and through January 15, 1999, will appear in the winter issue. Information for Class Notes should be directed to Arches, Office of Alumni Relations, University of Puget Sound, Tacoma, WA 98416-0078. Class Notes should be submitted on, or accompanied by, the Class Notes response form that appears in each issue of Arches. Class Notes also may be sent to the Office of Alumni Relations via e-mail. The address is <alumnnotes@ups.edu>. Please include all the information asked for on the Class Notes response form. Submissions may be edited for clarity, style or length.

William H. Sherman, a retired Olympia, Wash., school administrator, writes: "Bill Sherman '36 and Jessamine Pugh Sherman '37 celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary in June with family and friends in Olympia. Bill's best man, Charles Zittel '35, and Jessamine's bridesmaid, Anita Sherman Raymond '42, assisted in the celebration. Betty Pugh Crippen '30, the bride in the double wedding, also was honored. Their brothers, Sam Pugh '28, and Paul Pugh '35, sent greetings from Indianapolis. Sam had officiated at the wedding in the Little Chapel in Jones Hall, and Paul had escorted Jessamine down the aisle."

55th Reunion Class of 1943

Mildred DeSpain Axelson and Lynn A. Axelson of Lafayette, Calif., report they have "two little great-grandsons," adding, "We still enjoy our flowers and vegetable garden and 'RV-ing' but have regretfully given up square dancing."

1947

Norman J. Burke and his wife, Elenor Roundtree Burke '49 are retired and live in Kennewick, Wash.

50th Reunion Class of 1948

Clinton Aiton is a retired United Methodist pastor. He and his wife, Donnabelle, live in Issaquah, Wash., and have four children.

Dixie Simmons Arata has two children, five grandchildren and one great grandchild. She is a registered occupational therapist and lives in Vancouver, Wash., where she retired from the Vancouver School District. Dixie completed her certification in occupational therapy in 1950 and received a master of science degree from Portland State University in 1976.

Gerald (Jerry) Baker and Kathryn Hultgren Baker of Harwinton, Conn., have two daughters and two granddaughters. Jerry received his M.D. from the University of Washington in 1952 and was on the staff of Hartford (Conn. Hospital for 43 years. Kathryn is involved in volunteer work. Jerry plays golf and they enjoy traveling. Kathryn remembers: "Dr. Coolidge Otis Chapman, a scholar and a gentleman (rather a vanishing breed!); Dr. Paul Fossum made statistics fascinating, also very much the gentleman scholar; Miss Frances Chubb, a talented and effective teacher, rather under-appreciated. She had a great reservoir of knowledge." She adds: "Jerry's being elected president of the student body gave us both a good feeling. It's fun to win, and I think he did a good job. At the end of his studies at (Puget Sound) we were happy when Jerry was admitted to the University of Washington Medical School. The competition was considerable and intense. As undergraduates we worked hard; the days were busy."

Jacqueline (Jackie) Gibson Branch completed a degree in recreation and parks administration and is director of recreation/parks for the city of Corte Madera, Calif. She has received the Citizen of the Year award and has been named YMCA Outstanding Volunteer and Outstanding Professional by the California Parks & Recreation Society. She also is listed in Who's Who in California. Jackie's travels have taken her to the Pacific Rim, Australia, New Zealand, Thailand, Argentina and Uruguay. She has a son and three grandchildren.

L. Marshall Campbell of Des Moines, Wash., is a United Methodist Church minister. He received a master of divinity degree from Garrett-Evangelical Theological Seminary in 1951 and a master of sacred theology (STM) from Yale University School of Divinity in 1952. He also has studied at Edinburgh University and Hebrew University in Jerusalem. He and his wife, Joan, have four children and nine grandchildren. All of their children are Puget Sound graduates.

Marian Sandal Carlson of Fircrest, Wash., entered Puget Sound in 1942, left to join the U.S. Navy Waves during World War II and returned to campus in 1946. She and her husband, Harold, were married in 1947. She still has the bill from the Sir Francis Drake Hotel in San Francisco for their honeymoon—$7 per night plus $1 extra for a radio. They have two children. Marian writes: "Puget Sound has always been special to me. I grew up on North 15th and Junett, rode my bicycle all over the campus and explored the halls. I remember the old music building. Most important were the wonderful friendships over the years and the special times on the National Alumni Board." Peggy Rough Denton of Kirkland, Wash., received a degree in education from Western Washington University in 1954. She also attended the Yale Divinity School for one year. She and her husband, Stan, have two children. Early in her career, Peggy taught in the public school system. Then she and Stan opened a private school for children with learning problems (grades 3 through 12), which they operated for 25 years. Peggy's big news: birth of a grandson in January 1998.

Anna Marie Switzer Elliott and her husband, Edson Elliott '57, have two children. Marie received a master in education degree from Central Washington University in 1971. She retired from the Kennewick School District, completing 21 years in teaching and 14 years as an elementary school principal.

The Elliots, who live in Kennewick, Wash., have traveled more than 100,000 miles in their motor home across the United States.

Donald Freet and his wife, Marilyn Gilstrap Freet '44, have two children. Donald is a retired account manager with West Coast Grocery, where he began working after graduation from Puget Sound. Marilyn completed a bachelor of education degree in 1964 and is also retired. The Freet's live in Tacoma.

Warren Gipple and his wife, Phyllis, of Elizabethtown, Ky., have two children. He remembers Dr. Slater and Dr. Alcorn in the biology department and has fond memories of the senior sneak. Ruth Gustafson of Anaconda, Mont., received a master's degree in music from the Eastman School of Music in 1958. Among her favorite memories of Puget Sound are "living in Kittredge Hall (the SUB) and enjoying the friends I made there, going on tour with the Adelpheans and playing violin in the symphony and in small groups."

Lois (Vicky) Vick Hacker of Seattle completed a bachelor of arts degree in education at Central Washington College in 1949. She and her husband, Tom, have two children. They have traveled to Europe, Mexico, South America, Alaska, Australia, New Zealand, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Helen Caputo Harkness has retired from the Tacoma School District. She and her husband, Wayne, have two children and have traveled extensively, visiting Italy and other European countries, Mexico, Canada and many U.S. cities. Helen writes: "I worked my way through college, making my memories very dear to me!"

Sheila Lamar Hungerford and her husband, Ed Hungerford '47, of Ashland, Ore., have two children. She completed a bachelor of science degree in education at Central Washington University in 1962, retiring as a reference librarian for the Jackson County Library System in Oregon. She was a longtime volunteer for the Oregon Shakespeare Festival and was a member of their board of directors. The Hungerfords have traveled to Italy, the United Kingdom and France.

Frances Terry Huston and her husband, Robert Huston '49, of Huntington Station, N.Y., report: "We have discovered the joy of cruises!" Robert is pastor of the Huntington-Cold Spring Harbor United Methodist Church. Fran completed a master of fine arts degree at Parsons School of Design in New York City in 1972 and owns a company, Fran Huston Design, specializing in office space design. The couple has a daughter. Fran says she remembers Professor John Magee "for excellence in teaching, dialog and lecture content and for his meditation-linked lateness to classes!"

Gwen Dean Johnson of East Wenatchee, Wash., received a master of arts degree from Puget Sound in 1949. She and her husband, Frank, have three children and three grandchildren. They enjoy traveling, and Gwen is a doll collector.

Doreen Lockstone Jones of Eugene, Ore., taught high school English for several years. Since her husband died in 1986 she has devoted time to the League of Women Voters, Sierra Club and other environmental and local land-use organizations. She visits shut-ins and volunteers in a Peer Counseling Program.

Dorothy M. Kostenbader of Sacramento, Calif., received a bachelor of arts degree in education from Central Washington College in 1950. She taught in Ellensburg, Stockton and Sacramento.

Gerald Linder and his wife, Mildred, of Bellevue, Wash., have three children and 14 grandchildren. They celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in 1996. During World War II, Gerald served in the U.S. Navy in the Mediterranean and Pacific theatres. He received a bachelor of arts degree from Pacific Lutheran University in 1947, bachelor of education degree from Puget Sound in 1948 and a master's degree in education from the University of Washington in 1954. He was a junior high school principal in the Issaquah (Wash.) School District when he retired.

Sara Mather Lyon and her husband, Robert, a retired United Methodist minister, live in Olympia, Wash. Their hobby is amateur radio. Their son, Mark, graduated from Puget Sound in 1977 and the Puget Sound Law School in 1981.

Dorothea Meek of Tacoma received a bachelor's degree in education from Puget Sound and taught at Jason Lee and Hunt Junior High Schools. She retired in 1982.

George Miller of Fox Island, Wash., is curator-director of the Fox Island Historical Museum. He is a retired Tacoma Public Schools principal and a retired commander in the U.S. Navy Reserves. He is a past president of the Puget Sound Alumni Association.

R. Grant Mortenson of Springfield, Ore., received a master of science degree from the University of Oregon. He and his wife, Barbara, have four children.

Geraldine (Geri) Foxwell Peyran and her husband, Richard Peyran '51, live in Portland, Ore. Geri is a volunteer reading tutor for first and second graders. She enjoys reading, bridge and golf. Richard is vice president of Tri-Mac Products in Portland. They are retiring and plan to travel in the United States. They have been to Europe several times. Geri recalls: "Dr. Slater, with glorious white hair, an inspiring biology professor; Martha Pearl Jones (Teach), who gave out a pencil for a good speech; Dr. Martin, who had to tutor some of us in calculus." She also remembers "the camaraderie with just a few hundred students."

John Rafto of Ramona, Calif., received a degree in library science from the University of Washington in 1949 and a master's degree in business administration from Harvard in 1952. He and his wife, Yoli, have two sons and five grandchildren. John writes: "I am retired from Civil Service with the U.S. Navy in Hawaii. I try to keep in shape by going to senior athletic events where I throw the javelin, discus and shot. I do this I must work out regularly."

Virginia Wiley Rosar of Huntington, N.Y., received a master of science degree from Long Island University in 1971. She is a retired library media specialist with Smithtown Schools. In the 1960s, she wrote a book for parents of children with Perthes disease, "Perthes and Parents, The Care of Your Child with Legg-Calve-Perthes Disease." Virginia has three children and enjoys "music, music, music and gardening." She remembers: "John O'Connor for his enthusiasm; R. Franklin Thompson for his verbosity; James Slater for his intensity; Coolidge Chapman for teaching me to love Chaucer."

Troy M. Strong of Tacoma received a bachelor of divinity degree from Drew Theological School in 1952 and was a United Methodist Minister for 40 years, retiring in 1988. He and his wife, Helen '47, have three children, all of whom attended Puget Sound.

Marian Tregoning Vaughn and her husband, LeRoy "Foozy" Vaughn '45, of Inglewood, Calif., had two children. Their daughter, Cathy Vaughn Brewis '71, graduated from Puget Sound and her children are carrying on the family tradition. Granddaughter Stephenie DuBois '96 graduated from Puget Sound in 1996 and grandson, Russell DuBois '01, is a current student at the University. Marian and LeRoy marked their 50th wedding anniversary in June 1997. LeRoy died following surgery in August 1997. Marian was the secretary/office manager for the Inglewood Unified School District for 33 years, retiring in 1989.

George E. Williams of Gig Harbor, Wash., is a retired real estate broker. He and his wife, Margaret, have five children.

Rex Adkins of San Diego, Calif., is a freelance editor of books and magazine articles. He reports the death of his first wife of nearly 40 years, Patricia Marcelle Nisbet '48. Her obituary appeared in the Jan. 1, 1998 San Francisco Chronicle.

PROFILE

Berna Lile Miller DuPertuis '12

Alumna as old as the University

Berna Lile Miller DuPertuis celebrated her 110th birthday on Sept. 12, 1998. Seventy-eight members of the family, including her children, grandchildren, great grandchildren and great-great grandchildren from New York, Georgia, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado and California gathered at Lake Yosemite to celebrate.

Henry DuPertuis, one of her eight sons, wrote the University of Puget Sound on June 27, 1998:

"It is our understanding that the University is 110 years old in 1998. I am sure you would be interested in knowing that you have an alumna who was the same age on Sept. 21, 1998. Her name is Berna Lile (Miller) DuPertuis, Class of 1912. She graduated with honors and was president of the student body as a senior.

"Berna was born in Brookings, Dakota Territory. Her family moved to Tacoma when she was a child. She graduated from Tacoma High School. I believe she was in the first graduating class from the 'new' building. That building is still in use.

"After graduation from (Puget Sound) she taught school near Puyallup for a few years before marrying Henry DuPertuis and moving to Wyoming, where they raised nine children during the Depression.

"She now lives in Merced (Calif.) and still receives Arches. She always loved the University, and through her interest, we, her family, also have a special feeling for (the University of Puget Sound).

"Some of her brothers-in-law also attended the University. At one time, at least, a chair was named for Samuel DuPertuis. He received an honorary doctorate from there in the mid-'30s.

Berna can be reached through: Henry DuPertuis, 90 E. Craig Dr., Merced, Calif. 95340.

Berna DuPertuis '12 is the same age as the University. She celebrated her 110th birthday with family at Lake Yosemite, Calif., in September. Here Berna talks with her granddaughter, Leslee Aldag, who also had a birthday, her 37th, on that day.

1950

Lenore Secord Blum of Cleveland Heights, Ohio, is a retired occupational therapist. She and her husband, Arthur, visit their sons, both geographers, in New Hampshire and Colorado. Robert E. Simons of Gold Beach, Ore., writes: "I was just re-reading my March 1995 Arches. Every time I receive a new Arches, I become more proud of attending the University of Puget Sound." He adds: "I was in the Class of 1950 with a bachelor of arts degree in geology. I was one of only two World War II vets allowed to do that in geology."

1952

Rachel Haskell Gribble is retired from the Department of Defense Schools in Germany after teaching for 43 years. She was a learning improvement specialist and chairman of the Case Study Committee for her school. Her daughter, Lisa, was married in the Heidelberg Castle last summer; and daughter, Lori, is an air traffic controller in Calif. Rachel and her husband, Rex, will continue to live in Heidelberg, Germany, for another year.

45th Reunion Class of 1953

Merle R. Clapper and Marilyn Giesy Clapper were married, April 18 in Kilworth Chapel. They dated while in high school and while attending Puget Sound. Merle is retired; Marilyn is a coordinator of a drinking-under-the-influence victims panel, a court-ordered program for offenders in Pierce County, Wash. The Clappers live in Gig Harbor, Wash.

1954

Royal LaPlante Jr. '59, M.Ed., of Tacoma has published his third novel, Cottage Cove, A Chechako in Alaska, a work of historical fiction set in Alaska's pre-statehood years of 1949 to 1954. Marvin Reinhardt of Kennett Square, Penn., retired from DCV, Inc., an animal and human nutrition research company, on Sept. 1, 1998, and recently visited the Puget Sound campus while on vacation.

1958

Roberta Greer is senior vice president of Tillicum Village in Seattle. She was elected as the 1998-1999 president of the Seattle Rotary #4 Service Foundation, the largest and fourth oldest not-for-profit rotary club in the world. She was also elected as vice chairman, Small Business Action Council, 1995-98 for the Greater Seattle Chamber of Commerce.

C. Mark Smith, director of the Office of Economic Development in Birmingham, Ala., since 1988 and former member of the Puget Sound Board of Trustees, visited Tacoma in August for a 40th anniversary reunion of his Sigma Chi pledge brothers. Puget Sound officials assisted by opening up the fraternity house, which was closed for the summer, so that Smith could present the undergraduate chapter with a copy of a certificate honoring him as a member of the Order of Constantine, Sigma Chi's highest award for service to the fraternity. Sigma Chi Chapter President Matt Lay '99, accepted the certificate on behalf of the active chapter. Lay, Tacoma Sigma Chi Alumni Chapter Vice President Bruce Sadler '85 and chapter adviser Dan Mathewson conducted Smith and 10 of his pledge brothers on a tour of the fraternity house. Jack A. Fabulich '51 also has won the Order of Constantine.

PROFILE

Leslie Ota '92

A job of Olympic proportions

The Seattle City Council has set back Seattle's bid to snatch the 2012 summer Olympic Games, but for a time Seattle's momentum was unbeatable and Leslie Ota '92 had a part in the undertaking.

Ota, a business administration graduate and veteran of the Business Leadership Program, is director, sports and event marketing, for Bob Walsh Enterprises, a firm that brought the Goodwill Games to Seattle in 1990.

"I've always been an athlete and involved in sports," said Ota, a volleyball player, referring to the attraction of working at a sports marketing firm.

Ota's Olympic odyssey grew out of an internship with Bob Walsh in 1994 after she returned to the United States from teaching English in Slovakia and a stint with Frank Russell, the Tacoma-based investment firm. As a part of the Olympic effort, Ota has focused on the development of Olympic sports and events in the region.

Bob Walsh began spearheading the Olympic bid in 1995, assembling a strong team represented by business and civic leaders in the community. Since then, eight other cities have entered the game. In the eyes of the Olympic family and sports communities, Seattle has been touted as the city to beat.

Ota characterizes Walsh as a "visionary," with an eclectic set of friends, ranging from Boston Celtic legend Bill Russell to Eduard Shevardnadze, president of Georgia and formerly Mikhail Gorbachev's foreign minister before the fall of the Soviet Union.

"The Olympics is a classic example of Bob's predisposition to pull off the impossible," Ota said. "His breadth of accomplishments is amazing—The Goodwill Games, Vancouver's NBA franchise, major real estate development in the Republic of Georgia, launching a Russian rocket—Bob has an incredible knack for turning dreams into a reality."

"If I wasn't working on the Olympics," Ota said, "I'd be working on something just as big. Bob Walsh doesn't do anything small." —Bob Aaron

Marc DiConti of Laurel, Mont., writes: "After 16 years of full-time ministry including five years at Peace Assembly church and five years at Youth for Christ, both in Tacoma, and most recently, six years as a pastor in Mont., the Lord is moving me into a new ministry. I was commissioned as a chaplain in the United States Navy in April. After my training in Rhode Island is completed at the end of October, I will be stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Training Center, north of Chicago. My wife, Jan, and five kids are excited about the Navy, the younger kids because they get 'cool Navy hats.' Our Lord Jesus has led us every step of the way. E-mail us at <diconi@juno.co>."

SAN FRANCISCO ALUMNI CHAPTER

MARCH 6

A Grand Design: The Art of the Victoria and Albert Museum

10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Brunch at Legion of Honor Café, then tour the exhibit.

Faculty speaker: Rob Garratt, Puget Sound Professor of English and chair of humanities

A Grand Design is a sweeping exhibition of 250 paintings, sculptures, designs, fashions and decorative arts spanning 2,000 years and drawn from London's immense V&A. The show will visit only five cities in North America and includes works as diverse as da Vinci notebooks, the original manuscript of Charles Dickens' The Bleak House, painting by John Constable, Mughal miniatures and Thomas Chippendale furniture.

The director of the Legion of Honor is Harry S. Parker III, parent of Catherine Parker, Class of 2000.

LOS ANGELES ALUMNI CHAPTER

MARCH 7

Van Gogh's Van Goghs, Masterpieces from the Van Gogh Museum, Amsterdam 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Pre-event at Connolly's Restaurant. Exhibit at the L.A. County Museum of Art

Faculty speaker: Wallace Weston, Puget Sound Professor of Art

Seventy Van Gogh works covering the artist's entire career, among them famous works such as Self Portrait as an Artist, The Bedroom and The Harvest. This exhibit will only appear in two U.S. cities: L.A. and D.C., a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. Professor Weston, who travels to Amsterdam every summer to study Dutch art, will provide insights.

Tribute

SEPTEMBER 1997—AUGUST 1998 DONOR REPORT

Passion—for learning and for giving something back—makes the University strong

A Message from the President

The University of Puget Sound is thriving, thanks to the support of thousands of alumni, parents, friends and the enlightened corporations and foundations listed in this annual Tribute report.

Evidence of our progress can be seen, quite literally, all around us. After a busy “summer of bulldozers”—during which we expanded and vastly improved the Wheelock Center “diner” (serving area), created a central green extending from the library to Warner Gym, renovated Smith Hall and began construction of a new NCAA III regulation-size baseball field—we once again welcomed a fine group of first-year students.

The Class of 2002 comes to us from 448 high schools in 41 states and a number of foreign countries with an average combined SAT score of 1237, a new record for Puget Sound. Behind their impressive statistics lie some equally impressive personal interests and accomplishments: the class includes several small business entrepreneurs, a race-car driver who is following in her father’s footsteps, a certified hot air balloon pilot and a popular World Wide Web publisher whose site claims more than 2 million hits.

As Vice President for Enrollment George Mills ’68 MS ’72 often says when asked to describe the “typical” Puget Sound student, there is no such entity. “But what our students all demonstrate, as did the generations of alumni who came before them, is curiosity, intellectual independence and a passion for ideas.” (For more on the Class of 2002, see page 2.)

The passion George Mills describes was translated into words by members of the Class of 1998, who were asked to relate inspirational remembrances of Puget Sound when they returned pledges for the Senior Class Gift. (Excerpts from their writings are sprinkled throughout this Tribute, and their story is on page B-12.) The voices of these new graduates echo the spirit of appreciation that inspired this publication. It is the combined commitment of parents, faculty, staff and the Campaign and Annual Fund donors listed in the following pages that provides a rich educational experience for the Class of 2002 and their fellow students.

When we publicly launched the Campaign for Puget Sound: Charting the Future one year ago (October 1997), we could only hope for the kind of stellar support that has brought us to a total of $32.6 million in campaign commitments at the August 31, 1998, close of the 1997-98 fiscal year. This new support includes $13 million dedicated to financial aid, one of the most tangible ways to help students today. We have also, through gifts and borrowing, raised nearly $11 million of the estimated cost for the new academic building.

There are days when the task of raising the last $17 million needed to complete our $50 million campaign seems daunting, but I am confident we will succeed, thanks to the dedicated work of the Campaign Steering Committee, the National Campaign Committee and our Gothic Society Volunteers, all of whom are listed on page B-19. Developing a broad and committed corps of fundraising volunteers—powerful ambassadors who carry the message of Puget Sound’s mission and achievements—will be one of the most important legacies of the Campaign for Puget Sound. Our donors and volunteers together enable us to offer programs of the kind and character that lead our graduates over time to effective and satisfying professional lives and to contribute to the larger society. Thank you for your commitment to Puget Sound.

Yours Sincerely,

Susan Resneck Pierce

Robert Young '32 named an alcove in the soon-to-be built academic building in honor of his sister, Helen G. Young '31.

In memory of a devoted sister

When Robert Young '32 learned that the University was building a new academic building, he decided to name one of the alcoves in honor of his sister, Helen G. Young '31. A perpetual memorial seemed to be the best way to honor his recently deceased sister and the relationship they had with the University of Puget Sound.

Helen and Bob were raised in the Tacoma area, where their father had a printing business. They both graduated from Stadium High School and helped each other finance their college educations. Bob recalls how he would work one year while Helen went to school and she would do the same for him. "Those were the depression years," Bob said, "and you had to make do with what you could."

Helen started her college career at the University of Redlands in California. After two years, she returned to her beloved Northwest and the College of Puget Sound. While a student—and with the encouragement of Leonard Coatsworth, editor of the Tacoma Tribune—Helen started Puget Sound's first public relations office called the CPS News Bureau. She was also president of the Delta Alpha Gamma Sorority. After college, Helen continued her work in the publishing and newspaper business and served as postmaster of the Spanaway Post Office for many years.

Helen devoted her time to numerous organizations. She was especially dedicated to the protection of the Bresemann Forest in Spanaway, contributing considerable money, time and effort to its establishment and preservation.

Bob finished his degree in international relations at the University of Southern California. He is now retired from his business career and lives in La Jolla, California, where he enjoys spending time with his children and grandchildren. "Making this gift to honor Helen gives me great satisfaction," he said.

A record year for unrestricted gifts to the Annual Fund

Students at the University of Puget Sound are given the opportunity to discover their intellectual passion, engage in meaningful programs in residence halls, sports and the arts, and take pride in their accomplishments. More than 5,182 donors helped to make students' discovery and growth possible in the 1997-98 fiscal year through gifts to the Annual Fund, which totaled $977,418—a record high in unrestricted gifts to Puget Sound.

Mitzi Carletti '78, Annual Fund chair.

The Annual Fund is the backbone of fiscal health for the University. It ensures flexibility and responsiveness in providing the very best education to our students. Because it is money given without restrictions, it is used throughout the year to address needs at Puget Sound as they arise.

The ever increasing need for financial aid, updated and expanded technology and library resources, opportunities for undergraduate research and a multitude of student programs and services are supported by Puget Sound's Annual Fund. Our students deserve an education that matches their exceptional talents, and we whole-heartedly thank the alumni, parents and friends who made a real difference this year in the education of tomorrow's leaders.

We offer special thanks to our 29 Gothic Society volunteers, who assisted Annual Fund Chair Mitzi Carletti '78 in obtaining increased support for the Annual Fund and in keeping connections to Puget Sound strong.

Members of the San Francisco Committee of the Campaign for Puget Sound gathered in June '98 at the home of Dean '69 and Barbara Henry. L to R: George Jewett III '79, trustee and San Francisco committee chair; President Pierce; W. Dean Henry '69; Barbara Henry; Lowell Dawn '68, National Alumni Board vice president; Director of Development Beth Herman; and Allan Sapp '78, a trustee serving on the Campaign Steering Committee. Bay Area alumni, parents and friends interested in supporting the campaign joined the committee for a reception, program and dinner hosted by the Henrys.

A philosophy class led by Associate Professor Bill Barry enjoys two features for which Puget Sound is admired: small, lively classes and a beautiful natural setting. "I give to Puget Sound because it is still a special place," said a recent donor to a student caller at the Link, the outreach program that raises money for the Puget Sound Annual Fund. "It looks just like a college should look."

Upon his retirement from the University in 1998, Professor Gary Peterson worked to establish an endowed scholarship fund for communications students.

Peterson Scholarship: A fund for all

"I just hated to see bright young people who were dedicated to graduating not be able to return due to finances. I've thought of helping these students for a long time." After a 29-years on the University of Puget Sound faculty, Gary Peterson was ready to act. His retirement encouraged him to establish an endowed scholarship fund. He began by making his own gift and was followed by a number of faculty and staff members who joined in with their own support. So far more than 100 alumni from 1969 to 1998 have recognized Peterson's influence in their lives by giving to the new scholarship fund that bears his name.

Sitting in his office on the third floor of Jones Hall, Peterson pulls out tattered grade books dating back to 1969, his first year at Puget Sound, and shares warm remembrances of his old students.

It is a sentiment that works both ways. Alumni say they will never forget Peterson cooking breakfast or lunch at his house for the senior seminar class. They recall him adamantly pushing them to learn new computer programs. They remember his kindness and genuine concern for their success. And they have responded to Peterson's call. To date the fund has accumulated $14,000 in gifts, with a goal of $25,000 that would be applied to a perpetual endowed scholarship. Please contact Development Officer Tomitha Blake at (253) 756-8541 if you would like to help Gary Peterson complete this dream.

"DEAR PROFESSOR BARNETT, THANK YOU FOR ALL THE INTEREST YOU HAVE SHOWN IN ME OVER THE PAST SEVERAL ARCHES. THE FORGING OF THE JAPANESE TRADITION COURSE I TOOK SOPHOMORE YEAR WAS BY FAR THE MOST CHALLENGING AND EXCITING CLASS OF MY COLLEGE YEARS AND IS THE STANDARD AGAINST WHICH I HAVE COMPARED ALL OTHER CLASSES. YOU HAVE SHOWN AN HONEST CONCERN FOR MY LIFE AND MY LEARNING AND I GREATLY APPRECIATE IT."

“MY SENIOR GIFT IS MADE IN RECOGNITION OF AND THANKS TO THE COMPARATIVE SOCIOLOGY DEPARTMENT FOR THEIR DEVOTION TO THE STUDENTS’ INTELLECTUAL ENHANCEMENT AND TO OUR GROWTH AS RESPONSIBLE AND ENGAGING INDIVIDUALS. THANK YOU FOR MAKING MY YEARS AT PUGET SOUND SO MEMORABLE AND FOR PROVIDING ME WITH AN ENTIRELY NEW WAY OF UNDERSTANDING THE WORLD WE LIVE IN.”

Graduating seniors show their gratitude

If you had only a few short months to tackle your hardest courses, finish your senior thesis, apply to graduate school, look for a job and otherwise prepare for your Commencement walk, would you make time to rally your fellow students to contribute to your Senior Class Gift? This year, 12 seniors did just that. The Class of 1998 Senior Gift committee set out to raise $1,000 for five $200 book scholarships and $5,000 for the Puget Sound Annual Fund. The Annual Fund portion was to be matched by an anonymous alumnus who serves as a Puget Sound Trustee.

By Commencement in May 1998, 291 seniors had pledged $5,068 in support of their class gift; $3,800 of the total has already been paid. "It was important for us to do this," said Erin Carr '98 of the Senior Class Gift Committee. "Young alumni are going to be essential to the University's future. We want to get people feeling good about giving now."

“DEAR MOM AND DAD,
THROUGHOUT MY YEARS HERE AT PUGET SOUND, YOU HAVE ALWAYS GIVEN ME UNCONDITIONAL SUPPORT, NO MATTER THE COST— FINANCIAL OR EMOTIONAL. I TRULY APPRECIATE EVERYTHING YOU HAVE DONE FOR ME, AND IN THE FUTURE HOPE THERE WILL BE SOME WAY FOR ME TO REPAY YOU. I AM LOOKING FORWARD TO DENTAL SCHOOL SO MUCH. I HOPE THAT I WILL ONE DAY MAKE YOU AS PROUD AS I AM OF YOU. LOVE, MEGAN”

Spirited alumna helps students with a major unrestricted bequest

Tacoma native Louise M. Cumming (1908-1997) attended Puget Sound in the Roaring '20s—1926 and 1927—when flappers and the Charleston were the rage and Charles Lindbergh's non-stop flight to Paris dominated the headlines.

Years later, Cumming recalled her college days fondly, including dances and a legendary basketball game when Puget Sound defeated the University of Washington.

After she was widowed in 1966, Cumming worked as a part-time accountant for a Portland, Oregon, restaurant. Over the years, she was active in the Trinity Episcopal Church in Portland and continued her interest in dancing, which led her to meet Clemence J. Kluthe and his wife.

"She was quick to learn and enjoyed dancing immensely," says Kluthe.

Cumming's spirit of volunteerism was strong, exhibiting a willingness to help others. "The effort and talent she dedicated to the William Temple House was extraordinary," Kluthe remembered. "She helped to provide counseling, food, clothing and many other essentials for those less fortunate than she. She worked in the thrift shop a great deal."

Louise Cumming is still helping others—and will continue to do so for years to come. Upon her death, the University

Louise Cumming's strong spirit and commitment both to Puget Sound and to her community will live on forever in the hearts of future generations of students, friends and family, some of whom are shown here at a family gathering. (Back: her nephews Bill Wilson '74 and Sam Wilson '71. Front: Her nieces and nephew, Penny Lightfoot, Martha "Marty" Meeks and George Meeks.)

of Puget Sound received an $800,000 unrestricted bequest from her estate. This estate gives the University total flexibility in meeting the needs of students, faculty or others. Through this princely gift, Cumming's "youthful and bright disposition" will live on in students for many generations to come.

Academic Challenge Program builds bridges of understanding

Tacoma teachers might be surprised by the activities they see in traditional what-I-did-on-my-summer-vacation essays this fall. In addition to "went to the pool" and "hung out," some will see "studied the physics of bridge construction," "conducted tensile strength experiments in a lab" and "toured the state capitol, Pantages Theater and Seattle's King Dome."

If you think that such activities could never entice 12- to 17-year olds to spend four weeks of their summer in classes, then you haven't heard of Puget Sound's Academic Challenge Program or ACP.

Created in 1990 by David Scott, Puget Sound professor of mathematics, ACP is a summer enrichment program designed to improve academic performance among students entering grades 7 through 12. The program targets groups that are underrepresented in college populations and aims for a mix of academic abilities.

"We want to make the activities fun," says Scott, "because students learn more that way. The program exposes students to science and mathematics in a way that encourages them to continue to study those subjects in school and develop skills that prepare them for college." Scott started the program because statistics indicated that math and science are often road blocks to students of color. "If they choose general math at a certain point instead of advanced math or algebra," says Scott, "they suddenly rule out certain college majors and higher paying jobs."

From its inception, ACP has thrived because of a good working relationship with the Tacoma Public Schools, which the majority of students attend, and from the substantial private support that helps Puget Sound provide classes, materials, meals and field trips at no charge to the students.

The computing and software industry has thrown its weight behind ACP's success. This year's corporate funders—Intel, Microsoft and WRQ—are committed to community programs that enhance math and science education and promote the entrance of women and underrepresented minorities into science and engineering careers.

Microsoft, which has funded science and engineering scholarships at major universities for years, is now extending its support to pre-college programs to help build the pool of college students.

As a long-time supporter of K-12 science and math programs such as MESA (Mathematics Engineering Science Achievement), Intel Foundation found the Academic Challenge Program worthy of one of its first grants in Pierce County in 1997 and Intel Corporation supported it in 1998.

WRQ has essentially adopted ACP, providing not only financial support since the program's inception, but hosting an all-day tour of its facilities each year during which students interact with employees, listen in on technical support calls and learn how the company works.

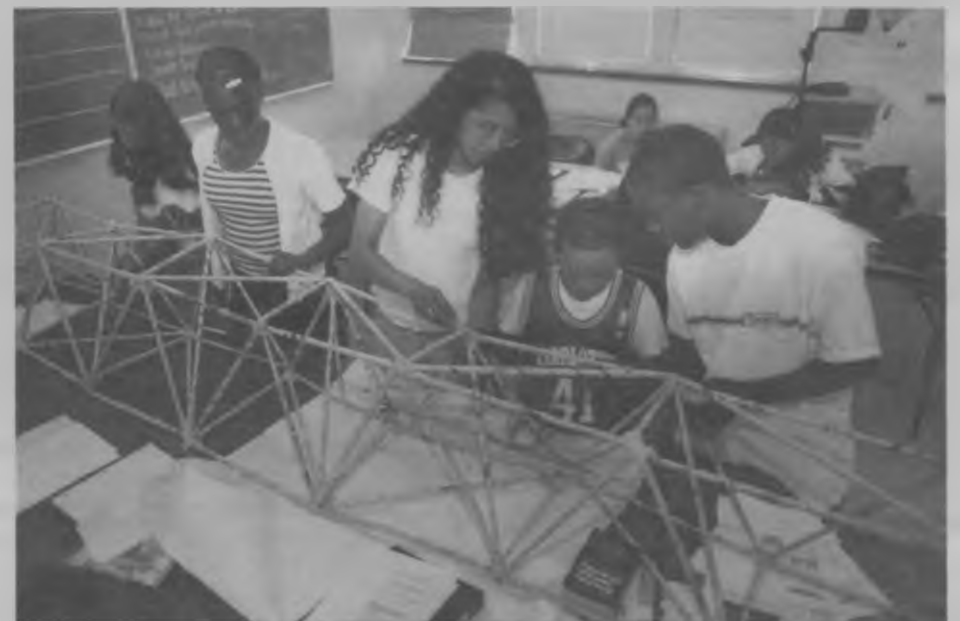

A major funder, Washington Software Foundation, supports education programs that increase the understanding and appropriate use of technology in at-risk communities. The foundation gave ACP the only grant it awarded to a higher education institution this spring. Executive Director Keneta Anderson '83 explains that her CEO-level board was impressed by ACP's "focus on students at risk, the joining of theoretical study with field trips and applied activities and the pro-active involvement of parents and family."

ACP is organized around a different theme each year, including flight, structures, communications and environment. The program engages students by asking them to apply ideas in mathematics and the sciences to their every-day-world. For example, how do engineers use a knowledge of force to make bridges and other structures stand? Seeing the real world applications of math and science and meeting the high expectations set for them by their teachers encourage students to take their school-year studies more seriously.

Since 1990, more than 300 students have participated in the program, continuing to build better bridges—to higher education, to the community and to these students' futures.
