

Masthead Logo

The Iowa Review

---

Volume 35
Issue 2 Fall

Article 33

---

2005

New York, West Side, 1899

Peter Sordillo

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Sordillo, Peter. "New York, West Side, 1899." The Iowa Review 35.2 (2005): 124-124. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.6084>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

PETER SORDILLO

New York, West Side, 1899

Across Columbus, under the white trees of winter,
The wind puts out a cigarette, bends a collar to the cold.
Down a sidewalk drunk with streams of water,
The wind waits for a woman it used to know,

And thinks of the last time it saw her, there outside her room:
Streetcars flamed in amber light,
As she stepped into a coach on Amsterdam,
And turned once to look back. She held her hand out

For the wind to touch.

Even now the wind can hear
White horses flying on the cobblestone,
And the coachman laughing, in the rush of summer.
It would shudder her blue dress, caress her arms.

Tonight, perhaps, she will wake to discover
The wind, in a lover's voice, outside her window,
The murmur of a dream she can barely remember,
Last footsteps of the horses growing silent in the snow.