

Manifesto for the protection of the human rights of small-scale fishing communities in Colombia

The participants of the First National Dialogue Fishing for Justice: Human Rights Violations in Fishing Territories organised on March 10th at the Universidad del Magdalena (Santa Marta, Colombia), after reflecting on the problems and struggles faced by artisanal fishing communities to protect their lives, their human dignity, and their right to participate in decision-making processes that affects them, declare that:

Artisanal fishing is an ancestral art that is integral to human ways of living in marine, coastal, riverine and swamp places in Colombia. This art is one of the pillars of a "Total Peace", being an essential part of the social fabric, culture, identity, security, and food sovereignty of communities living in the Pacific, Caribbean (including insular areas), and continental areas. Fishers are peaceful by nature, they have patience in their blood, following the rhythms of fish, even waiting for hours at the seas and rivers for the first catch. Many fishing communities maintain traditional ways of living, resisting historical, colonial, extractive, and armed conflict violences. Indeed, continuing to fish in this context is in itself an act of peaceful resistance every day.

The struggle for artisanal fishing has cost the lives of many people, leading to the marginalisation of fishing communities and loss of territories both inland and in coastal-marine spaces — maritorios (traditional coastal and marine territories) and acuatorios (ancestral water reservoirs). Moreover, fishing communities are not adequately protected by the State and their legal and political rights have not yet been recognised. This has enabled and even encouraged a series of systematic human rights violations in artisanal fishing territories with differentiated racialised, gendered, and class impacts. All this in the context of environmental transformations at an abysmal speed, all of which is threatening the continuation of artisanal fishing ways of living.

An example of this is the so-called "Blue Economy", a set of extractivist policies targeting coastal and marine spaces, imagined from a capitalist perspective of the oceans and the species that cohabit it, including humans. The CONPES 3990 'Colombia Sustainable Bioceanic Power 2030' (Colombia potencia bioceánica sostenible 2030), is the national policy that defines the guidelines for the expansion of extractive activities at sea. This policy is conceived with its back to coastal life, especially fishing communities, excluding a human rights perspective that dignifies and protects their rights.

We demand the recognition of fishing communities as subjects of rights, that the protection of fishing territories, maritorios and acuatorios be safeguarded as a fundamental right of these communities, and that the activities related to artisanal fishing be declared as Intangible Cultural Heritage of the nation. Fishing communities must not only be consulted, but be central actors in the discussion of projects that affect their ways of living. This requires listening to navigating cultures using reflexive, transdisciplinary, and holistic approaches. It also involves challenging the idea that the sea is empty of people and full of resources. Finally, it demands recognising the importance and complexity of fishing ways of living as essential to the survival and flourishing of a more peaceful and equitable society. Justice is harmony in our territories, maritorios, and acuatorios; it is to encourage careful uses and enjoyment of nature; as well as the equitable distribution of costs and benefits. Without social justice there is no environmental justice.

We commit to continuing to build national, regional, and international alliances to resist injustice and work towards the protection of our bodies of water, food security, and fishing communities. From our national and international non-governmental organisations, from our universities and academic institutions, we are committed to strengthening a movement that unites the struggles of artisanal fishing communities to safeguard their rights and protect our oceans and rivers.

Union makes force.

The project “Human Rights Violations in Artisanal Fisheries in Colombia” and the “Justice in Fishing Territories” digital database (available at <http://pescayjusticia.unimagdalena.edu.co/>) seeks to give visibility to the proceedings from the Colombian Constitutional Court discussing the violation of human rights of artisanal fishing communities (see Figueroa et al. 2023)

Acknowledgements

We thank the artisanal fishing communities in Colombia who participated in this National Dialogue, their struggles and work towards maintaining their ancestral ways of living and fishing territories have been our source of inspiration. This research was funded by Fonciencias (2018, research project No. VIN2018159). The National Dialogue had the financial and logistical support from the Vice-Chancellor's Office for Research and the Vice-Chancellor's Office for Extension and Social Projection of the Universidad del Magdalena. In particular, we are grateful for the support from Jesús Jiménez, Reinaldo Sagbini and the communications team at the Universidad del Magdalena. Thanks to Kenedith Méndez Gutiérrez and Sebastián Duchêne for their support with data visualisation. We express our gratitude to the people and organisations that participated as panellists and who attended the Dialogue (in person and remotely), also to the 160 people who have digitally endorsed this manifesto for their support and solidarity.
