

Masthead Logo

The Iowa Review

---

Volume 34
Issue 3 Winter 2004-2005

Article 14

---

2004

Marvin Gaye Sings "The Star-Spangled Banner"

Jeff Fallis

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Fallis, Jeff. "Marvin Gaye Sings "The Star-Spangled Banner"." The Iowa Review 34.3 (2004): 81-82. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.S891>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

JEFF FALLIS

Marvin Gaye Sings "The Star-Spangled Banner"
(N.B.A. All-Star Game, Los Angeles, February 13, 1983)

Aviator shades
shading dark eyes,
suit conservative,
he strides up to center
court and touches the mike with the half-funky drum beat already booming forth from the P.A. Before
he's hit a note,
there's already risk
in the air, this sense
of exploratory grace that only deepens when he sings the first few bars
way down low,
soft, slow, and soulful.
Somehow the song,
hard to sing in the first place, seems a new thing, a new body
with new blood,
full of air and open
space, wounded and healed.
You don't know where he's going with it, and what's exciting is that it sounds like he doesn't know either. The ramparts, the broad stripes, the bright stars, the twilight's last gleaming, the bombs bursting in air, all

81

alive and open to oxygen again. The crowd gets more into it
as he goes along; they whoop and holler when he nails the high notes, and by the end he's won over the entire Forum, Doctor J included. It's a gorgeous moment, and Marvin, coke-sick and exhausted,
basks in the warm applause, gives 'em a grin, won't take off his shades.