1. Introduction & Background

1.1. Background & Relationship with Trans Metadata Collective

This document is the result of two years of work by a group of nearly one hundred knowledge organisers, cataloguers, librarians, archivists, scholars, and information professionals with a concerted interest in improving the metadata treatment of queer people, communities, and items in GLAMS (Galleries, Libraries, Archives, Museums, and Special Collections) and other informational institutions. Their work has been supported by over 800 peer reviewers; combined, these groups make up the Queer Metadata Collective (QMDC; queermetadatacollective.org).

The QMDC builds upon earlier work done by the Trans Metadata Collective (TMDC; transmetadatacollective.org), a similarly-organised group of metadata workers and information professionals with a concerted interest in improving the metadata representation of trans and gender-diverse people. The work of the TMDC culminated in Metadata Best Practices for Trans and Gender Diverse Resources,¹ focusing on the description, cataloguing, and classification of information resources as well as the creation of metadata about trans and gender-diverse people, including authors, communities, and other creators. Following the publication of the Best Practices, several TMDC members founded and developed the QMDC over the summer of 2022.

Like the TMDC, the Queer Metadata Collective's primary goal was the development of a set of best practices (this document) for the treatment of queer metadata—the description, cataloguing, and classification of information resources as well as the creation of metadata about queer people, including authors, resources, and other creators.

For these reasons, the structure and language of this document take significant inspiration from the Best Practices—sometimes down to the sentence level. Like the TMDC document, this document also claims the Cataloguing Code of Ethics and A4BLiP (Archives for Black Lives in Philadelphia) as proximate inspirations and models, and echoes the A4BLiP's charge:

A4BLiP encourages white archivists and non-Black archivists of colour who are combating anti-Black archival description to first take time to familiarise yourself with anti-oppressive terms, concepts, and norms in order to deconstruct the white supremacist values that permeate American society, and by extension, the archival field.

More information about the Queer Metadata Collective, its history, and its members may be found in Section 5, including short biographies of the members that contributed the most to the shaping of the present document.

This document focuses on metadata by and about queer people, communities, and resources. While there is significant overlap between queer metadata and trans and gender diverse metadata, QMDC's recommendations should not be seen as excluding or superseding TMDC's, as trans and gender diverse people, communities, and resources have specific needs. For best practices and recommendations about trans and gender-diverse resources, please consult the TMDC document. If the TMDC and QMDC recommendations conflict (we are not aware of any instances in which they do), prefer the TMDC document for trans and gender diverse resources and the QMDC for other types of queer resources.

Finally, and most importantly, this document is not meant to be a panacea. It does not free its users from other moral, legal, and ethical considerations. Nor does it free users from continued education efforts. Information is meant to be accessible and should be especially accessible to those to whom the information pertains. We urge you to centre and prioritise the needs of queer communities and individuals that your institution serves through respectful (and paid) collaboration and consultation.

1.2. Definitions & Philosophy

Due to the historical inattention paid to the needs of queer communities and metadata in GLAMS and other informational institutions, as well as in the creation and implementation of metadata standards, the QMDC realised the need for this document. In this work, we follow the precept of disability advocates, saying “nothing about us without us.”²

Often, metadata is created about us, our communities, and/or our works by people who aren't familiar with queer issues, topics, or terminology. Commonly used controlled vocabularies, metadata schemas, classification systems, and description norms under- and misrepresent queer people and subjects. Common policies and recommendations offer harmful suggestions. A few examples:

² James I. Charlton, Nothing about Us without Us: Disability Oppression and Empowerment (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 1998).

- The thoughtlessly conceived and poorly implemented requirement to include the gender of a creator in RDA Rule 9.7 (a GLAMS cataloguing standard) has taken over a decade to correct in cataloguing practice, despite immediate outcry and critique. Regardless of revised recommendations and ongoing corrective work, it will likely take years before all affected records are corrected. Rule 9.7 remains unchanged in the official RDA Toolkit.³
- Women’s work and agency women’s names were often erased by common archival description practice which used only their married name (e.g. Mrs. John Smith) to credit any work done.
- Widely recognised, decades-long intimate partnerships are erased by descriptions describing queer couples as “good friends” or “roommates;” individuals’ multi-decade relationships with partners outside the bounds of traditional marriage structures—often with the knowledge of their ‘legal’ spouse—are described as ‘affairs.’
- As indicated by the TMDC and the Name Change Policy Working Group, trans and gender-diverse people are often misnamed or misgendered in metadata, which can (and does) out them and put them at risk of harm or violence.

The aim of this document and the Collective more broadly is to centre queer metadata and ways of being, establishing them as “is” and not as “other.” In other words, the goal is to unsettle, unseat, and eliminate the WEB3CH2A2MS centre of metadata systems. WEB3CH2A2MS (pronounced ‘web-cham’ (IPA: /wɛbˈʃæm/)) is an acronym originating from cataloguing literature meaning: White, ethnically European, Bourgeois, Christian, Cisgender, Citizen, Heterosexual, Able-bodied, Allosexual, Monogamous, Men Settlers,⁴

³ While the Program for Cooperative Cataloging no longer records gender in its RDA authority records, the Official RDA Toolkit includes an element for gender and the original Official RDA Rule 9.7 remains untouched. ⁴ Originally WEBCHAM from Hope Olson’s naming of the default and assumed universal centre of cataloguing and classification systems, and was expanded by Michelle Caswell to include “cis” and “citizen” at the encouragement of Marika Cifor, and later expanded by B. M. Watson to include settler status, relationship and romantic orientations. See Hope A. Olson, “Patriarchal Structures of Subject Access and Subversive Techniques for Change,” The Canadian Journal of Information and Library

It was created as a way of naming the universal, default, and assumed (yet unspoken) centre of cataloguing, classification, and description systems and practices. It is readily apparent that information infrastructure assumes a WEB3CH2A2MS centre. For example, the subject heading “Executives” (for business executives) offers “Gay executives,” “Minority executives, and “Women executives” as narrower, more specific, more specialised forms of an “Executive” (or poet, or farmer, or banker, or statistician, and so on). WEB3CH2A2MS serves the same role that more-common acronyms like LGBTQIA2S+ (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, Intersex, Asexual, Two-Spirit, and more(±)) do but rejects the premise that WEB3CH2A2MS perspectives are default positions that do not require labels and instead centres queer (and racialized, disabled, etc.) perspectives, people, and communities.

More specifically, the recommendations below aim to decenter the current cis-mono-allo-heteronormativity of metadata systems in order to equalise and make space for “queer” as something that can be described, even if we do not yet have language for certain things. Along with society, queer nomenclature and language are in a constant state of flux and shift, and what seems correct today may not be reflective in the future. As a result, “queer” is used throughout this document as an umbrella term to refer to subjects with Marginalised Orientations, Relationships, Gender identities, Asexualities/Aromanticisms, and/or those who are Intersex (MORGAI, pronounced “more-gay” (IPA: /mɔːrˈgeɪ/)).⁵ MORGAI is inclusive of LGBTQIA2S+ (and other “alphabet soup” type acronyms like QUILTBAG) but recognizes that identity terms are multifaceted, overlapping, and purposefully resistant of definition—in a word: queer.⁶

We have attempted to ensure that the best practices in this document apply to resources about MORGAI individuals, but not every recommendation below can be applied to every person, resource, or community in the MORGAI umbrella—nor should ⁵ Originally modelled off MOGI, an acronym in use in New Zealand and Australia meaning Marginalised Orientations and Gender Identities, MORGAI was coined and first used in the Catalogue & Index cited above as well as in the TMDC document.

⁶ To paraphrase Drabinski, classification and subject language can never be “corrected” once and for all, GLAMS metadata workers will have to continually engage with marginalised identity groups and knowledge areas to build shared understanding and knowledge about terminology and terminology use over time. Prompted by a reviewer of this document, it is worth noting here that this term focuses on and privileges intersectionality—i.e. we are not arguing that otherwise straight (cisgender heterosexual allosexual) polyamorous couples are queer; however, nonmonogamy or polyamory is ‘queering’ of typical relationship structures. Furthermore, alternative relational structures are more common among queer communities.

they be, nor is it desirable for them to be. Wherever distinctions arise with regards to the applicability of specific practices, we have chosen to incorporate them into the document narrative. Because these kinds of crucial nuances are not always universally known and often change over time, these best practices will continue to be periodically updated and revised.

For specific best practices for metadata about transgender people, non-binary people, trans and gender diverse people, trans and gender diverse peoples' experiences, gender identity, and gender and naming, please consult TMDC's Best Practices. In this document, we follow the TMDC's use of the term "trans and gender diverse" as an umbrella phrase to refer to individuals and communities who do not identify with the gender they were assigned at birth. Our usage of the term equally includes gender expressions and schemas that fall outside of the binary conceptions of man and woman central to Eurocentric culture.

We also follow TMDC's use of the term "resources" to refer to anything for which metadata is assigned in a GLAMS context. Examples include: books, audiovisual materials, archival collections, paintings, artefacts, individuals, communities, organizations, etc.

When we use the word "harm" in this document we are using it in a literal sense of epistemic and physical violence. As minority stress research demonstrates, improper description can have measurable health impacts: when an individual encounters feedback from society that is incompatible with their self-identity, it is compounded with everyday stress and causes an increase in the likelihood that the individual will experience negative psychological consequences, including anxiety, depression, and suicidal ideation.⁷ For queer communities, simple considerations like 'what goes into the box' are always higher and always have real-life consequences.

1.3. Scope, Limitations & Institutional Barriers

This document is designed to serve as a resource for workers in cultural heritage institutions who create metadata about queer people, communities, resources and/or topics. As the Collective is primarily made up of authors working in libraries and archives, significant portions of this document are based in those contexts. However, the authors have made a conscious effort to supplement this document with museum, gallery, and special collections-relevant advice, and have invited supplementation of this advice from reviewers of this document.

These best practices recognize that the concept and structure of GLAMS is Euroamerican and colonialist, and while there is room for critique of these institutions from those (and other) perspectives, this document is not designed as a comprehensive critique.

We also recognize that some institutions and consortia restrict a metadata worker's ability to use their own judgement when assigning metadata to resources materials. We have a few recommendations if you cannot follow these guidelines due to role limitations or administrative policies.

If you can not properly update, revise, or redescribe resources in your institution because of administrative restrictions, these are long-term changes worth advocating for. Start conversations about how to change the policies and standards set forward by your institution or consortium; if the guidelines you use are no longer serving your patrons, then they need to be changed. Library catalogers can also contact DDC, LCC, or NACO / SACO funnels to address classification gaps, outdated language, or inappropriate hierarchies. Institutions can also create public-facing notes like statements or explanations about where cataloguing language comes from, or they can integrate harmful language and classification feedback forms to help address patron concerns.

At the very least, metadata workers can advocate for a harmful metadata statement on their institution's website to acknowledge the reality of the systems within which we work, while also expressing opposition to the harmful and incorrect contents of these systems and offering a way for users to report harmful metadata or an appropriate institutional contact to remedy any issues encountered.

Finally, we realise that not everyone has the authority, power, or funding to perfectly implement everything recommended below. Perfect adherence to any singular set of rules or recommendations - even our own - is not always possible, nor is it ideal for every context. Respectfully engaging in and with our communities through an intersectional lens requires attention to the interwoven cultural contexts and identities affected by our work. As these things are neither fixed nor immutable, modifications will always be necessary to reduce additional harm. In other words, these guidelines cannot stand in for asking about and prioritising the specific needs and contexts of your users and the communities your institution serves.

Perfection is not always possible, and sometimes you just have to do your best and remember that the ultimate priority is people, not perfection. Each of the sections below are aimed to provide tools towards justice.

1.4. Structure of this Document

The rest of this document is divided into 5 main sections and several subdivisions. Section 2. History & Context, offers 1) a very brief summary history of the origins and development of gender and sexuality terminology and nomenclature and 2) a brief overview of the purposes of knowledge organisation in GLAMS. Section 3. Broad Recommendations & Principles can serve as an executive summary of the QMDC recommendations as it is the most accessible and easily distributable section of this document. Section 4. Detailed Recommendations, serves as an in-depth explanation of the recommendations found in Section 3, and includes the bulk of the Classification, Subject Headings, Names, Naming, and Authorities, and Description reports. Where possible, Section 4 includes detailed instructions on the implementation of these recommendations or recommendations drawn from interviews with over fifty GLAMS knowledge organisers, more than two dozen finding aids for queer collections, and the experience and knowledge of hundreds of authors and reviewers.

Section 5. Author Information & QMDC History, offers a list of this document's authors and their backgrounds, as well as reviewers and contributors to this document. The individuals listed in the "Authors" section have elected to appear in it in alphabetic order, whereas those in the "Reviewers" section added their names in roughly chronological order (i.e. no order).

For cisgender/heterosexual readers of this document, it is worth emphasizing that there are more than one hundred individuals who did not wish to be or could not be listed in these sections due to concerns of being outed, personal danger, employment termination, and/or prosecution due to their local political context, especially in the southern United States. The QMDC honors their contributions and extend our thanks for their participation and wisdom.

Section 6. Appendices & Resources is given over to appendices, including resources, sources, bibliographies, lists of relevant queer subject headings, classifications, alternative systems, and a glossary of terms used in this document.

2. History & Context

2.1. Gender, Sexuality, and Queer Nomenclature

Ideas about what gender or sexuality are vary by time and place and are both cultural and individual. These ideas often relate to bodies, social roles, relationships, power dynamics, and personal expression. A culture's gender schema may include ideas about how many genders there are, social roles, modes of dress, how fixed or dynamic gender is, how people of differing genders relate to each other, and how to treat people who don't fit into the gender schema. Sexuality schema might include acceptable or unacceptable types or styles of sex, the number, age, or gender of partners.⁸

Culture is a complex interplay of many factors including, but not limited to, economics, geography and migration, race and Indigeneity, religion, language, politics, and more. Within any given place, there is usually a dominant culture that exerts power and influence over the other co-existing cultures. The dominant culture in GLAMS is usually referred to as "Western culture," a term which is inaccurate and erases many cultures in the West that aren't dominant, particularly Black and Indigenous ones. We will refer to this as WEB3CH2A2MS culture in this section.⁹

The epicentre of this culture is the present-day United States, and it also predominates in Canada, Western Europe, Australia, and New Zealand. WEB3CH2A2MS culture specifically witnessed several important shifts in the way gender and sexuality are conceptualised in over the course the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries. These were not the first shifts in is not the first shift in ideas about what gender and sexuality are, and they will not be the last.

A high-level understanding of the recent shifts in ideas about gender and sexuality and their roots in WEB3CH2A2MS culture is important for ethical decision-making in the creation of metadata about queer people and topics. Below is a brief overview of the history of gender and sexuality terminology and nomenclature as it relates to queer people and some of the major shifts in dominant gender ideas in the late twentieth/early twenty-first century. This account, although written by a historian of sex and sexuality is deliberately expansive, broad-brush, and generalizing and should be used as a starting place for personal and institutional education.

⁸ "Schema" here, as in "gender schema" or "sexuality schema" is being used as shorthand to talk about things like gender roles and all associated concepts. We are not using it as a reference to Sandra Bem's cognitive theory about how individuals become gendered in society, ⁹ For more information on the acronym, see the third paragraph of Section 1.2.

Generally speaking, much of WEB3CH2A2MS culture's attitudes and nomenclature for individuals or objects belonging to MORGAI communities have post-Roman Judeo-Christian origins or derive from (earlier) theological or (later) medical terminology

For example, the ancient Greek term porneia (πορνεία) captured a vast range of sexual behaviours considered unethical/immoral within ancient Greek culture and was widely used by early Christian theologians as a stand-in for behaviour that they did not approve of.¹⁰ Porneia also demonstrates how some terms have a long and continuous history as via a circuitous route, porneia survives today in many Western languages as the root of the word "pornography."¹¹

In the Early Modern period, terms like "sodomy," "buggery," "gross indency," and others arose in the same literature to refer to specifically-sexual behaviour. These terms were used in many Western European countries to describe a range of "undesirable" behaviours: anal penetration, crossdressing, masturbation, fellatio, cunnilingus—even theatre in particularly strident morality literature.¹² While sodomy initially referred to anal penetration between any gender or sex by the seventeenth century it began to stabilise on an activity that would be described today as anal penetration involving two cisgender homosexual (or "gay") men. Likewise, buggery was initially a stand-in for 'bestiality' but took on a broader meaning after the sixteenth century.

In A Practical Guide to Searching LGBTQIA Historical Records (a highly useful resource for any archives), Norena Shopland documents terminology used for queer people, such as lesbians ("tribade" and "Sapphic," both post 1850), intersex/trans and gender diverse people ("hermaphrodite," "gusset" "effeminate" "androgynus"), and gay men, from several sources and centuries:

Catamite, an Ingle, or Boy kept for sodomy.

Pederast (Gr.) a Buggerer.

Pederasty, a lusting after Boys, Sodomy, Buggery.

Sodomit, one that commits Sodomy, a Buggerer...

Back Gammon Player. A sodomite.

¹⁰ The most comprehensive account of this is Kyle Harper, From Shame to Sin: The Christian Transformation of Sexual Morality in Late Antiquity (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 2013), which builds upon Kathy L. Gaca, Making of Fornication - Eros, Ethics, and Political Reform in Greek Philosophy (University Of California Press, 2017, orig. 2003).

¹² The most significant recent interpretation is Chitty's posthumous work: Christopher Chitty, Sexual Hegemony: Statecraft, Sodomy, and Capital in the Rise of the World System, Duke U.P., 2020.

Indorser. A sodomite. To indorse with a cudgel; to drub or beat a man over the back with a stick, to lay cane upon Abel.

Molly. A Miss Molly; an effeminate fellow, a sodomite.

Twiddle-Poop. An effeminate looking fellow.

Windward Passage. One who uses or navigates the windward passage; a sodomite.¹³

These are only two examples of English terms—as demonstrated by works like Francis Grouse’s Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue, hundreds of other local and provincial terms (not to mention non-English nomenclature) existed, many of which survive today (for example, “queer”).¹⁴

Until the so-called Enlightenment, the majority of Europeans (and later, Americans) followed what historians of sexuality and the body label as the “one-sex model.” This model understood bodies as representations along a male to female spectrum. Contrary to biological essentialism, this spectrum was one that was open to a significant degree of change. Many texts reflected a beliefs about ‘mannish’ women or ‘effete’ men literally becoming the opposite sex.¹⁵ Most people assumed gender based on a person’s name, outward physical appearance, clothing, pronoun usage, etc.¹⁶ Since these are all external signs, someone’s gender was considered public information. In the realm of sexuality, most people grew up in rural areas with a lot of close contact with animals and agricultural breeding and would have been very familiar with breeding; even in urban areas, bedrooms were passageways into other bedrooms (hallways were a rather recent invention) and lower class and rural families very often shared a single bed. There is greater evidence for queer sexualities and communities in these urban areas, many often living alongside cisgender heterosexual communities, but they often

¹⁵ This theory, largely advanced by Thomas Laqueur, has been limited and critiqued by several later historians such as Laura Gowing, Karen Harvery, Robert Nye and others, but remains influential (and convincing). faced prosecution by church, state, or particularly bigoted neighbours—a situation not too dissimilar from modern times.¹⁷

Following the so-called Enlightenment and until the mid-twentieth century the majority of Euroamericans moved towards understanding sex and gender as a roughly binary system, where popular conception maintained that sex and gender were more or less the same thing and determined by “biological” factors (body parts, hormones, chromosomes, etc.). While earlier generations saw sexual activity between “same-sex” youth as part of a “normal” development ending in the adoption of procreative marital upon adulthood/maturity or marriage, post-eighteenth century WEB3CH2A2MS culture became obsessed with the purity of children and preoccupied by anti-masturbation campaigns and the prevention the spread of sexual knowledge amongst younger generations.¹⁸

The nineteenth and twentieth centuries witnessed the rise of a professionalised field of medico-scientific doctors, psychologists, sociologists, and sexologists who used these credentials to subsequently pathologize, marginalize, and even criminalize various communities of people who fell outside their pre-determined vision of normalcy.¹⁹ Authors such as Richard von Krafft-Ebing, Magnus Hirschfeld, Karl Heinrich Ulrichs, and Havelock Ellis, made notable contributions to this shift and general societal ideas followed to make distinctions between sex (bodies) and gender (internal sense of self).²⁰ For example, Ulrichs drew on Linnaean biological classification, as well as his reading of Plato's Symposium, to create Urning and Dioning for homosexual and heterosexual males, then added a suffix to produce Urningin and Dioningin for females, and then finished off by combining the four prior words into Uranodioning and Uranodioningin to refer to bisexuals of either sex. Later additions included Mannlings for masculine-presenting individuals attracted to feminine men and its opposite Weiblins; Zwischenstufen for those attracted to underaged males, and the (incorrect) term Hermaphrodites to refer intersex people.²¹ Krafft-Ebing generally located the "origins" of "psychopathic" sexuality in the societal environment and the immoral decisions made by his subjects, whereas Hirschfeld argued that human embryos began as sexually neutral and then developed into types as influenced by hormones, including people who were "anders als die andern" (different from the others).²²

The purpose of this background is to contextualize the ways that these sexological processes influence the cataloguing, classification and description of queer people in GLAMS, especially the ways that sexological literature influences literary warrant, which then influences controlled vocabularies, classifications, authorities, ontologies, and other aspects of knowledge organization.

2.2. MORGAI GLAMS Metadata

As this document is aimed at metadata professionals and it is not meant to serve as an introductory or an educational work, the history of the fields is best left elsewhere for fuller treatment. However, it is important to note that library cataloguing, archival description, and museum description represent three distinct approaches institutions have taken to organise and provide access to their collections. While all three share the common goal of making their resources discoverable and accessible to users, they have developed unique methods and standards to achieve this objective. However, the digital age and the development of online library catalogues, digitised collections, and virtual museum exhibits has had a major impact on all three fields.²³ Standards and tools have begun to merge or see use in other fields, such as archivists' frequent use of Library of Congress Subject Headings (LCSH) in finding aids, the Dublin Core and MODS standards used to describe digitised materials, or ensure consistency and interoperability across digital platforms. There is a growing trend towards collaboration and standardisation across these fields, sometimes forced by austerity and sometimes brought about by the merging of institutions (for good or ill). Collaborative initiatives like Linked Data aim to create more interconnected and accessible networks of cultural heritage information, and in turn accelerate this standardisation process. By using common data models, vocabularies, and platforms like Wikidata, libraries, archives, and museums are increasingly sharing and linking their metadata, enabling users to discover and explore resources across institutional boundaries.

It is important to remember that all of these standards prioritise text-based resources which implicitly undervalues other formats based on images or sound.²⁴ One way this prioritization manifests is through the privilegisation of literary warrant as the basis for descriptive vocabularies. Literary warrant refers to the idea that the terms used in subject headings and classification schemes should be based on the language used in the resources being described. The intention is that resources in a catalogue, finding aid, or digital platform should reflect the terminology used by authors, and (therefore) familiar to users. While well-intended, literary warrant privileges texts and terminology developed by WEB3CH2A2MS authors, both because of the greater presence of those authors in earlier literature, and because those authors often presented new concepts, ideas, and terminology wrote about "others" (i.e. non-WEB3CH2A2MS individuals or communities), in anthropological, sociological, sexological texts, thus necessitating a new term.²⁵

To return to the present day and the purpose of this document, we argue that the concept of community warrant should be prioritized over literary when creating queer metadata. That is, the best-placed person to consult in the creation of metadata is the creator or community themselves. If individuals/communities use specific terminology to describe themselves terms, there should be matching terms in the systems used to describe that individual/community or their resources. Ergo, when a term, such as queer, finds itself used in a literary work, then the classification system seeking to categorise that work must to have "queer" as an available descriptor.

To put it bluntly, if there are books written about queer concepts, they need queer metadata to describe them; if there is art made by queer people there needs to be queer metadata to describe them; if there are records of queer communities, queer metadata is needed to describe them; and for all of these mediums, the specific queer individuals or community affected and/or described should be consulted.

²⁴ "Undervalues" here is meant in the sense that non-text formats are often under-supported and/or over-complicated by standards intended for objects of a different medium.

The point of all this: for living people gender and sexuality should be considered private, un-assumable, potentially fluid, and self-determined. While this way of conceiving gender and sexuality is not applicable to everyone, it is disproportionately applicable to MORGAI people and should therefore guide your decision-making regarding creating metadata about MORGAI individuals, communities, and resources. It's best not to make assumptions about someone's gender based on their clothing, appearance, or pronoun usage. You don't know someone's gender until they tell you (and what they told you in the past may have changed). An individual may prefer to keep the information private for many reasons, including safety. Ideas about the binary and fixed nature of gender are also being challenged and ideas about multiplicity and fluidity are emerging. This approach is designed to reduce harm to those described and targeted within the metadata itself, and manifests in the recommendations and policies below.

For the creation of metadata about deceased subjects, follow the Collective's Chain of Trust, by considering consultation with the following groups (if possible) in this order of preference: public statements by the individual, correspondence, partner(s) at time of death, chosen family members, community members, children (adopted or biological), and if all other options are exhausted, family of origin. The Description Working Group's Section 4.4.1.2. When to Describe Someone as Queer is an excellent starting place for the creation of metadata about deceased people.

3. Broad Recommendations & Principles

These recommendations should be seen as building upon and extending from the Trans Metadata Collective's Recommendations. Indeed, several of the below recommendations share or copy language outright from the TMDC. Despite sharing language with TMDC, QMDC arrived at the principles represented in these recommendations independently and their repetition should be understood as adding emphasis.

- The best-placed person to consult is the creator or community themselves. Trust and promote community warrant where possible, consult creators and communities and use their preferred terminology, even when it is historical or uses potentially reclaimed slurs.
 - In a museum or archival context, give depositors or donors the opportunity to submit self-description, co-create description, or review/approve description, if applicable.
 - In a library context, give creators the opportunity to provide feedback on catalogue records and holders of this data should simplify this process to make it as accessible and approachable as possible.
 - One specific recommendation: The Library of Congress should provide creators the opportunity or ability to provide feedback on Cataloging-in-Publication data.
 - In an authorities context, creators should have the ability to provide feedback on or to correct information about themselves. Holders of this data (including NACO institutions, VIAF/OCLC, ULAN/the Getty, Wikidata and others) should simplify this process to make it as accessible and approachable as possible. Institutions that lack the ability to revise authorities databases should consider the use of local authorities.
 - Prioritise terms used within a community, which may include reclaimed or self-ascribed slurs or otherwise sensitive language, and retain community terms alongside controlled vocabularies or otherwise authoritative terms.
 - Practise respectful and reciprocal collaboration with communities when possible to avoid uncritical application of terms. Follow community protocols as part of this process.
 - Prioritise using the terms the creators of the work have used in subject descriptor fields, even if those terms aren't found in controlled vocabularies.

- When creating metadata about deceased people, follow the Collective's Chain of Trust or develop one for your own collection and context.
 - Chain of Trust: In the event that the creator is deceased or no appropriate cultural contact is found, consider consultation with the following sources or groups (if possible) in this order of preference: public statements by the individual, correspondence, partner(s) at time of death, chosen family members, community members, children (adopted or biological), and if all other options are exhausted, family of origin.

- Make the process of metadata creation transparent and have harmful / historical language statement policies and procedures, including a form or an email address through which communities or creators can reach out.
 - Indicate term changes over time and be clear about if a particular term is from the source, or if a more recent term has been applied in your metadata.
 - It is likely that previous descriptive practices resulted in some descriptions that may be upsetting and insensitive to users. As the majority of organisations rely on their users to advise them of this type of description in their collections, it is recommended that all organisational websites have a harmful materials statement and an easily located space for user feedback. Some examples are listed in Section 6.3.1. Harmful Metadata Statement Examples

- Use culturally and contextually appropriate labels for queer communities, subjects, and resources.
 - There are a multiplicity of queer communities. Collaborate with the specific community that is impacted, and be aware that even individuals within a community may have terminology that differs from other members within their communities.
 - Different cultures and languages have terms and systems for classifying and understanding genders and sexuality or sexuality concepts that may not translate into the primary language of description or the dominant culture.
 - Include terms in the original language (original script and transliterated) alongside added translations and descriptions.

- Be explicit about queerphobia in collections, items, and metadata.
 - Identify WEB3CH2A2MS in catalogues and descriptions where possible. In the most radical form, this would look like adding local subdivisions for “--Heterosexual” “--Man” “--Able-Bodied” “--Allosexual” and so on. A less radical version would be making a conscious effort to add the identities of marginalised individuals, following some of the examples in Section 4.2 below.

- When describing incidents of intentional harassment, harm, and/or violence, both perpetrators and victims should be identified, including using active voice to embed responsibility within the metadata.
 - Work to proactively identify sensitive language and content, including coded language, rather than relying solely on patron reports.
 - For sensitive language that is self-ascribed or directly in the material itself (e.g. title, caption, text), include a contextualising statement and/or content warning either before the user encounters the description, or in each place the description may be encountered.
 - Correct offensive or inaccurate language provided by other metadata creators, unless it falls under the criteria detailed below.
- Give preference to alternative systems and practices that prioritise local control and authority when possible.
 - Interrogate conflicting needs in knowledge creation and discovery. There can be tension between diverse identities and discoverability to enable people to find resources by and about diverse identities. There can be challenges to assisting users in finding materials with the language they use now.
 - Make a variant heading the authorised heading. Many queer LCSH headings have variants that are a better fit than the authorised heading.
 - Use non-LCSH controlled vocabularies and ontologies where appropriate and possible.
 - Create local Cutter numbers for any orientation, identity, or topic that is not represented. Not every system indexes the same topics, and it is almost impossible for one system to index every topic. For more information on this, see Section 4.1.1.1.
 - Creating a subject guide or collection tag can also help gather without having to group on the shelf. Local subject headings, signage, or other communication is better than collocating by classification.
 - Identify queer content and metadata through regular assessment and prioritise for ongoing remediation.
 - Plan proactively for periodic assessment and remediation, including the identification of resources related to queer communities and individuals, especially when they exist within larger collections where they are not the focus.

- Avoid using machine learning, “AI”, or automation for batch replacement of terms. Only use them as a tool to aid assessment, alongside qualitative analysis around the rationale and impact of existing description.
- Encourage, support, or develop advocacy in your institutions and contexts for better and more sensitive metadata.
- If you are queer, trust in your own authority, knowledge, community warrant, and your “queer cataloguer’s judgement.”
 - If relevant to the resource, feel comfortable assigning headings for historical identity labels that are no longer commonly used such as “Invert.” The language used within queer communities to describe ourselves has changed and will continue to change as our communities evolve and grow.
 - Important caveat: use careful consideration in applying terms that are typically considered slurs in contemporary MORGAI communities. This can sometimes mean balancing conflicting needs: for example, older people are more likely to consider the word “queer” a slur and object to its use in describing a project, and perhaps a broader (or more specific) term would be better.
 - If you are not queer: avoid applying queer terminology or classification to a resource if the resource has nothing to do with queerness. Don’t apply queer terminology to authority files if they are not relevant.

4. Detailed Recommendations

This section contains in-depth explanations for the broad recommendations listed in the previous section as well as the bulk of working group reports.

4.1. Classification

This section discusses best practices and topics to keep in mind for metadata workers who are classifying queer materials in the context of libraries, including academic, public, and special libraries.²⁶ Some libraries, as well as most other cultural heritage institutions, tend to classify their materials by accession, a process which does not involve the same kind of biases and considerations.

Queerness inherently falls outside the standard which raises a lot of questions when trying to fit queer materials within a heteronormative classification system. This section highlights several of these questions and our suggestions for addressing them. Our topics are ranked by ease of implementation at a local institution.

In Section 6.4.2, we have also provided an update to a table entitled Library of Congress Classification Numbers Applicable to Materials for LGBTQIA Studies by Sara A. Howard and Steven A. Knowlton in their article “Browsing through Bias: The Library of Congress Classification and Subject Headings for African American Studies and LGBTQIA Studies.”²⁷ We have expanded their original focus to also include call numbers in the Dewey Decimal System.

Queer resources in library collections can either be collocated apart from all other library resources or interspersed with other materials in the same topic area. For example, a book about healthcare for queer people could be shelved in a separate queer collection or with other healthcare topics. There can be benefits and biases involved in either option, so it is important for metadata workers to be aware of the choices and implications.

Borrowing from Eve Sedgwick’s Epistemology of the Closet,²⁸ Ben Christensen applies the terms “minoritization” and “universalization” to describe these two options for classification. “Universalization” refers to emphasising concepts as a part of a whole and de-emphasising difference while “minoritization” refers to emphasising concepts as distinct and separate from a universal whole.²⁹

Early researchers supported a “minoritization” approach where resources about minorities could be separated from the whole to increase visibility.³⁰ While this stance could still be useful for public libraries with specific queer collections or queer youth collections, it “others” queer communities, treating them as non-standard or abnormal. Separating materials also makes it easier for people to opt-out of finding these voices. Unless there is a significant or institution-specific reason, we highly recommend following an approach of “universalization,” which moves against the idea of creating separate “queer” collections.

The thrust of our recommendations is to integrate queer resources into the library’s full collection rather than creating a distinct “queer” area at the general call number. Further rationale for this approach (mirroring TMDC’s recommendations for trans and gender-diverse resources):

- It acknowledges that queer people are more than just our gender/sexual/relationship identity and that we lead multi-faceted lives.
- It brings queerness, transness, and other diversity to more specific areas of a library’s collection and to the attention of people who may not otherwise seek them out.
- It may protect queer resources outside the general classification number from censorship challenges or legislation.

There are also alternatives to consider that allow for collocation without classification separation. Creating a subject guide, collection tag, or applying local subject headings can also help gather resources without having to group on the shelf. Signage or other communication is better than collocating by classification.

Some libraries may not “minoritize” these materials by classifying them separately and instead may put stickers on queer resources to identify them. Putting stickers on queer resources increases one’s ability to find items in a universalised system, but could make people feel uncomfortable or unsafe using resources.

Based on interviews with librarians serving youth, teen, and young adult populations we highly recommend NEVER physically labelling queer or MORGAI materials in teen-and youth-specific collections due to safety concerns. For adult collections, we also recommend that libraries avoid physically labelling these materials to best serve the safety and comfort of users. Metadata workers should weigh these decisions in consultation within their institutions and their local queer communities.

4.1.1. Classifications to avoid and helpful alternatives

4.1.1.1. Classification specifics and alternatives

Below are outlined some places in classification systems where you can put certain materials and cause the least harm. There are also some alternatives to consider if any of these suggestions are not feasible at your institution.

Class any materials about a specific group of people (ex. Bisexual people, Asexual people, etc.) in their related number and not with the general group number whenever that option is available. When using LCC (or other systems, where applicable), default to “LGBTQ people” followed by “Queer people” and only reluctantly “Sexual minorities” when classing materials about queer people as a group. Avoid putting non-heterosexual materials under numbers with “Gays” or “Homosexuality” as the only option. Previously “Gays” was used for any non-heterosexual person, occasionally breaking out into “Lesbians.” With the inclusion of “Sexual minorities” or “LGBTQ people” as subject headings and captions, this is where to class anything about queer people as a group, no matter the topic.

Create local Cutter numbers for any orientation, identity, or topic that is not represented. Not every system has the same topics, and it is almost impossible for one system to have everything in it. As long as the schedule allows it, local Cutter numbers are an easy way to tackle any exclusion of orientations, topics, or identities that are represented in catalogued materials.

- If your workplace or consortium does not allow catalogers to create local Cutter numbers, see Section 4.1.4. Institutional Barriers & Consortia.

Do not class any material about transgender people under numbers with the captions “Transvestism” or “Cross-dressing.” This is an extremely harmful and completely false assumption that should not be perpetuated. Transgender people and cross-dressers are not the same, and they should not be classed under the same number. If the classification system has these topics under one number, create a separate Cutter or see Section 4.1.4. Institutional Barriers & Consortia.

- For more details on cataloguing transgender resources, see Metadata Best Practices for Trans and Gender Diverse Resources.

Separate any classification that conflates gender or identity with sex, eroticism, or pornography. Previously, anything having to do with non-heterosexual sex or any media featuring non-cisgender people was often classed under erotica or pornography, even if it was not sexual in nature. This is being remedied, but sometimes the system has not changed the numbers or separated these topics out. Do not automatically catalogue non-heterosexual/non-cisgender topics with numbers about sex unless they are legitimately about those topics.

- Keep in mind: The headings “Sex role” and “Sex differences” are also often classed under Sex, and both the headings have references about gender. This means that the numbers for gender-related terms are also classed under Sex by default. Classification systems lump these two ideas together, but they should have two different Cutters.

Add subject headings or keywords to mitigate some of the harm caused by classification. If there does not seem to be a good way to class something, or if your institutional or consortial situation prevents it, adding relevant and appropriate subject headings can help. Avoid adding works to classes that imply that queerness is a result of perversion, mental illness, or some other medical issue. For example, make use of updated subject headings by the Library of Congress Subject Headings, or search Homosaurus for more nuanced and specific headings. For more information about using headings, see Section 4.2. Subject Headings.

These are suggestions to help mitigate any potential harm that current versions of classification systems might cause. Metadata workers should be as proactive as possible about expanding numbers, altering captions, and making overall adjustments to systems to align them with respectful and diverse cataloguing of MORGAI resources, individuals, and communities. If metadata workers are restricted to specific systems they should follow the recommendations below as starting points and advocate to make overall change.

4.1.2. Alternative queer classification systems

Thanks to the work of librarian activists, queer people and concepts are, for the most part, well-situated in Dewey and LC classification systems.

Classification systems inevitably reflect the biases and limitations of their creators and the era in which they were developed. While there have been many specialised queer classification systems, many of them are not currently being actively developed, or they are utilised within closed collections and archives. The exceptions to this rule (OOTS, LPC/GSLO and LLACE), along with information about the historical systems are listed in Section 6.2.1. Alternative Classification Systems. Moreover, since the 1970s, librarians have endeavoured to integrate queer concepts into the frameworks of systems like Dewey Decimal Classification (DDC) and Library of Congress Classification (LCC), making specialised systems less necessary for general collections.

In Section 6.2.1 of the appendix, we have included a few examples for further exploration and articles for further reading. There you may find ideas for shelf organisation, potential inspiration for the creation of classification systems, or for use in a permanent special collection. Each of these systems was created for a specific collection to improve access for their patrons. Regardless of the classification system that you use, these systems and case studies highlight the importance of working with your local community in order to improve shelf order and resource discovery.

4.1.3. Reclassifying/updating language

As mentioned above, classification systems and controlled vocabularies will always be imperfect products of their time, place, and creators, which means that opportunities for reclassification and revising the language applied to records will always abound. These endeavours, however, are time-intensive and highly demanding of resources. Lack of time, lack of resources, and lack of personnel to take on such projects are often real barriers to this work, as is the understanding that it is only a matter of time before more records (or the same records) will need additional updates.

However, if metadata workers are committed to improving the description and classification of queer people in GLAMS and other information systems, it is important to consider taking on reclassification and language update projects.

If a metadata worker is taking on a reclassification/language update project, either in an ad hoc, as-needed, as-reported/encountered basis or as a strategic, comprehensive project for their library, the following guidelines are available:

1. Update both subject headings and classification, where needed. Though it may be easier and less time- and resource-intensive to adjust only the subject headings and not update call numbers as originally assigned, that often leaves resources in a classification hierarchy that is just as harmful as the original language in the subject headings, thus it is still a problem that needs to be addressed.

- a. When and if multiple classifications may work well for a resource being (re)classified, strive to centre your patrons and their needs, and class the item in the section you believe your patrons are most likely to find it.
2. If your institutional system uses MARC, use an 09X field (locally assigned call number) when possible to assign a more appropriate classification number or to adjust the language of a topical cutter to be more accurate. Using the 09X will make it clear that you have made a library-specific decision based on your shelflist. The PCC Guiding Principles for Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion in Metadata Creation support this choice. For more information on assigning institution specific classification, please see MARC 09X - Local Call Numbers.
3. If you have replaced the cover of a trans author's book in the catalogue and on the shelf, you should also reclassify it under the new name. There are two primary strategies to consider when considering an existing book with the author's former name. When developing your policy, ensure that the perspectives of trans and gender diverse members of your communities are represented in the discussion:
 - a. Update the call number on the spine and in the library catalogue if needed
 - b. Buy a new copy if it's released under the new/current/chosen name
4. When classifying queer identities or topics that current systems don't address (e.g. some systems don't have "Indigiqueer" or "Cripqueer" for example) consider the following options:
 - a. Add in description fields that display in your OPAC Discovery Layer, for example 500 or 590, to more clearly describe the topic. For more information, see Section 4.4.3. Discoverability
 - b. For Library of Congress Classification, use the main category that the work belongs to and then create up a topical cutter alphabetically that best fits and prioritises the language used by the people. Make sure it fits in the shelf-listing. For Dewey or Universal Decimal Classification—which use numbers instead of letters—use the general number and devise an appropriate Cutter.
 - c. In a consortial environment, where it may be the case that your library can only use what LC offers/provides, consider adding a standardised public note to your library's holding record to acknowledge the error and harm in the LC schedule and offer a brief explanation as to why the classification still exists/why it cannot be changed in your institution's catalogue.
5. For potentially problematic historical/medical topics, consider the following:

- a. If it is intended for a general non-medical audience, then it doesn't make sense to be in medicine and should be elsewhere with queer or MORGAI topics.
 - b. Things about medicine go in medicine-related classifications, things that are more general in nature and/or about culture, go with gender-related classifications.
6. To explore currently available classification options for resources on topics related to queer or MORGAI people and their experiences, please see Sections 6.4.2.1. Library of Congress Classification Numbers and 6.4.2.2. Dewey Decimal Classification Numbers. However, remember that these currently "established" classification notations may not be adequate, so keep in mind the recommendations above.

4.2. Subject Headings

This section provides best practices on how catalogers and other metadata workers can inclusively and accessibly create and revise metadata for cultural heritage materials centred on queer people, communities, histories, and contexts. As stated in the document's introduction, we use "queer" as an umbrella term for non-MORGAI, relationships, genders, and (a)sexualities.

We hope that providing guidance on the subject assignment of queer subjects and contexts, that metadata creators will be better equipped to:

1. make queer collections more visible and discoverable for the folks that want to access them,
2. ensure that the history, culture, and identity of queer people are reflected respectfully within the subject headings and other descriptive metadata assigned or created for them, and
3. create pathways for patrons to contact the organisation with any instances of queerphobic and queer-antagonistic language in descriptive metadata so that anti-oppressive changes can be made.

4.2.1. Revision, Replacement, and Repair

This section serves as an overview of Library of Congress Subject Headings (LCSH) that can be used for queer resources. LCSH is the most widely-used subject heading thesaurus in the world, and most commonly used in archival and library contexts. It is often supported by additional subject headings; for example, in Canada, GLAMS institutions often use Canadian Subject Headings alongside LCSH.

4.2.1.1. Use of LCSH in describing queer works

This section provides best practices on the use, revision, and replacement of LCSH for the bibliographic and archival description of works centred on queer subjects. Because LCSH and its translations are arguably the most ubiquitous subject vocabulary used in GLAMS institutions, it is important to provide guidelines on how workers who are assigning metadata to queer people and topics can use LCSH in a way that centres queer perspectives as much as is currently possible. In this section we have also included resources for metadata professionals want to propose new queer LCSH, revise existing LCSH, or supplement LCSH with alternative vocabularies such as Homosaurus or the Gender, Sex and Sexual Orientation (GSSO) health sciences ontology.

4.2.1.2. Problematic LCSH

For the purpose of this document, we are defining problematic LCSH terminology as terminology showing attitudes (such as homophobia, cisnormativity, transphobia, or racism) or ideas that are offensive, outdated, euphemistic, or otherwise inappropriate and harmful. Additionally, there are instances where the terminology itself is not problematic, but the usage of that terminology in a particular instance is. This would include using only broad umbrella terms or subject headings to describe materials about queer topics when there exist more appropriate and specific terms that would improve access for users. For example, using the heading “Sexual minorities” rather than the more specific headings “Lesbians” or “Gay men” when a resource is about a particular group. Use of a broad term over existing more accurate terms can have multiple consequences. It can conflate identities that have their own unique experiences and challenges, and on a metadata level it can reduce the discoverability of materials that are about specific people and groups. At the same time, it is worthwhile to include multiple ways for users to find a work, and so when a work is about a specific queer person or group, including both narrower and broader terms is recommended.

A full list of problematic LCSH, Library of Congress Demographic Group Terms (LCDGT), LC Children and Young Adult Cataloging (CYAC), and Medical Subject Headings (MeSH) can be found in Section 6.4.1. Subject Headings. Please note that these headings are current as of [June 2024], and have been brought to the attention of the Gender & Sexuality SACO Funnel for their current and/or future revision projects.

4.2.1.3. Proposing a new subject heading

Most LCSH are created by the Library of Congress (LC) or members of a Subject Authority Cooperative Program (SACO) funnel.³¹ However, it is possible and recommended for people outside of LC/SACO to propose new topical LCSH through their formal proposal process. Proposals for new subject headings are reviewed monthly. Lists of proposed headings can be found here and comments about them can be sent to listcomments@loc.gov.

When looking to make a proposal for a new or existing queer related subject heading or group of headings, metadata workers should first consider if this work is already being done at the funnel level. Reach out to Gender & Sexuality Subject Authority Cooperative (SACO) Funnel through the email on LC's Gender and Sexuality Funnel Project with the subject heading or group of headings that you are looking to create or revise. If it is not being worked on by the funnel, you can connect with the Cataloging Lab at cataloginglab.org to begin a collaborative project, or to work on the proposal on your own. A guide for navigating the LC proposal process can be found in Beck Schaefer's How to Propose a New Topical LCSH.

4.2.1.4. Making a variant heading the authorised heading

Many queer LCSH headings have variants that are a better fit than the authorised heading. These variant headings can be found by navigating to the subject heading's authority file and looking through the 450 fields. When proposing a revised heading to LC, consider referencing the variant and requesting that be the preferred terminology.

Metadata workers can also consider using CYAC, which is sometimes more current than LCSH. Some CYAC headings are listed as variants of the LCSH authorised heading. Some headings are only in one or the other. Because CYAC and LCSH have separate creation processes, there are some inconsistencies.

- Coming out (Sexual orientation) (LCSH) vs. Coming out (CYAC)
- Transsexuals (LCSH) vs. Transsexual people (CYAC)
- Sexual minorities (LCSH) vs. LGBTQ+ people (CYAC)

³¹ SACO Funnels are groups within SACO that contribute subject headings with a particular focus. The Gender and Sexuality SACO Funnel Project creates proposals for new LC authority records and revisions to existing authority records “used in the cataloguing of resources about, for, and by transgender, gender diverse, intersex, asexual, and other queer, non-heteronormative or non-heterosexual people.” In addition to Library of Congress Subject Headings, the group also makes proposals for other Library of Congress controlled vocabularies such as the Library of Congress Demographic Group Terms. If you have an idea for a new subject heading or a revision to an existing one, it's best to get in touch with the Gender and Sexuality Funnel at <https://www.loc.gov/aba/pcc/saco/gender-sexuality-funnel.html>.

4.2.2. Use of non-LCSH controlled vocabularies and ontologies

If LCSH, CYAC, or other Library of Congress controlled vocabularies do not meet the level of specificity necessary for a work's description, there are a few other controlled vocabulary options that can be used, as well as best practices around the use of local terms.

A primary solution to many of the problems currently experienced in queer subject assignment will be to use Homosaurus, a linked data controlled thesaurus for the description and retrieval of queer resources. While the infrastructure of regularly updating Homosaurus terms in bibliographic records is still being developed, the currency, flexibility, and specificity of Homosaurus terms over LCSH will arguably lead to greater inclusivity and discoverability of queer library materials.

4.2.2.1. Supplementing LCSH with queer-specific identities and experiences

When the LCSH term is not sufficient in specificity or clarity, metadata workers should consider adding additional terminology from alternative thesauri while retaining the LCSH term(s). Homosaurus can be assigned for works of any subject. The Gender, Sex, and Sexual Orientation ontology (GSSO) can be assigned to works in the health sciences and should also be paired with MeSH when appropriate. These are the best known options for alternative thesauri for a current, continuously maintained vocabulary that cover a large scope of terms from queer communities, for both historical and contemporary use.

A third option that may be useful particularly for special collections, museums, and archives is the Getty Research Institute's Art & Architecture Thesaurus (AAT), which also supports linked data.

4.2.2.2. Replacing problematic LCSH terminology

When an LCSH term is identified as problematic, consider the following:

1. Use a Homosaurus or GSSO replacement term. Using an existing controlled vocabulary that is collaboratively maintained is easier for metadata workers and provides clarity and consistency across institutions. The Cooperative Computer Services (CCS) in Illinois in their guide to Homosaurus Subject Headings.
2. If an appropriate term can't be found in an existing controlled vocabulary and it is necessary to apply a local authority, contact Homosaurus or the GSSO and request that term be added to the vocabulary. This can help other institutions who might also want to use that same term. A local term can be applied while that new term is being developed by the vocabulary.

3. Reach out to QMDC members. QMDC will follow up with the most appropriate funnel and bring the term to their attention, if it has not been brought to them already.
4. Allow suggestions from patrons. This could take the form of a formal audit process, a submission form, or focus groups with individuals in the community.
5. Create an internal working group to review problematic terms and explore options. When recruiting members for this group, place emphasis on centring marginalised experiences and identities.

4.2.3. Prioritisation of terms used by creators

Prioritise using the terms the creators of the work have used in subject descriptor fields, even if those terms aren't found in controlled vocabularies. Controlled vocabularies are never going to keep pace with a living language, and so if subject headings are lacking, then metadata workers can and should find other places in the metadata to provide accurate and clear description.

A few ways to add uncontrolled terms to a MARC metadata record include:

- MARC field 650 _7 with a $2 local
- MARC Field 653, as an uncontrolled index term. Uncontrolled index terms are subject terms that do not belong to a controlled subject heading system or thesaurus
- MARC field 690, as a local subject term.

A few other places to add preferred language in the MARC record include:

- MARC 246, a variant title field for when the subtitle contains the term
- MARC 505, a formatted contents note for when the contents do
- MARC 520, a summary notes field

Archival collections also support subject analysis, and topical subjects are not out of compliance with DACS. For DACS compliant finding aids, these terms can generally be included in the scope and content note (MARC tag 520) or biographical and historical note (MARC tag 545). However, your institutions DACS → MARC crosswalk may differ so check compliance with your local context. that

For more information about LCSH, including how subject headings are used and assigned, see the Library of Congress' Subject Headings Manual; particularly helpful is H 180 Assigning and Constructing Subject Headings. There are also instruction sheets for various formats and topics.

4.2.3. Topics Requiring Special Attention

4.2.3.1. Prejudicial Language in LGBTQ+ Works

There are a few strategies metadata workers can use to address the outdated, discriminatory, or otherwise problematic ways that non-queer authors describe queer subjects and topics. People who are the subjects of these works should be described how they would most want to be described. If a non-LGBTQ+ author has dominated the work with their idea of who their subjects are, then that self-identification piece can be difficult.

4.2.3.2. Usage of a Harmful Content Statement

Another approach that many institutions have begun using in the last decade is to include a harmful content or harmful language statement in their library catalogues, finding aids, and digital collections platforms. These statements have several components. The statement first informs the user about the outdated/offensive language that they may encounter in the catalogue and that the institution is aware it is present. Next, they explain where that offensive language came from, be it from the archival material itself, a controlled vocabulary (i.e. Library of Congress Subject Headings), or language added by past metadata workers of the institution. Then, they make it clear that the library is in the process of remediating and revising what harmful language they can, and make it clear that remediation work is iterative and ongoing. These statements are not an opportunity to hand wave responsibility on the part of the library, but instead serve as a place of accountability and goal setting. It is also common for some institutions to include mechanisms in their statement or in their Ask a Librarian chat features to submit feedback and suggestions.

The first recommended step in considering crafting a Harmful Content Statement is to review the work that has already been completed by GLAMS institutions. Violet Fox's Cataloging Lab includes a non-exhaustive list of statements on bias in library and archives description, which includes a wide range of institutions including archives, academic libraries, museums, and public libraries. We have included examples from Collective members in Section 6.3.1. Harmful Metadata Statement Examples.

When a harmful language warning is needed for a specific work, we recommend the addition of a harmful language warning in the bibliographic record's notes field. This harmful language warning should be visible on the discovery layer when possible. Depending on your ILS/discovery layer, cataloger permissions, and user base, these advisories may be placed in a few different fields: the 500 General Note Field, 520 4/ Content Note Field, or 590 Local Note Field. It is also possible to create an alert to the content separate from the MARC record, but embedded in the discovery layer itself—we recommend you choose the one with the most visibility, and that you consider advocating for both.

Examples:

- 520 4/ $a Author uses homophobic slurs throughout text.
 - Displays as “Content advice: Author uses homophobic slurs throughout text.” Something to keep in mind with this option is that your ILS/discovery layer will need to be set up correctly for the 1st indicator to insert the “Content advice” note.
- Variant coding options:
 - 500 // $a Content warning: Author uses homophobic slurs throughout text.
 - 590 // $a Content warning: Author uses homophobic slurs throughout text.
- Alert in discovery layer, as in Figure 1.

Finally, we recommend having an action plan in place in the case of individual, local, or political pushback for its inclusion. Here are some broad recommendations from Collective members:

- Have a working group. It is easier to address internal or external pushback/feedback when the work is distributed as a group, especially with members distributed across your institution.
- Keep in constant communication with your administration and affirm/demand for specifics on why there is or may be pushback.
- Use external resources, like the Cataloging Lab list mentioned above, or statements at similar institutions in your local area, to strengthen your argument. External standards are also helpful.

- If rejected – keep going. Archive your efforts and return to the issue in a defined amount of time (preferably soon.)

4.2.3.3. Adding Controlled Prejudicial Language Vocabulary Terms

Another way of addressing or otherwise informing users of prejudicial or otherwise outdated language in a work is to include genre headings that reflect that prejudicial language. The Controlled Vocabulary for Rare Materials Cataloging includes a broad genre/form term for prejudicial works, under which can be found terms for “Anti-LGBTQ+ works”, “Homophobic works”, and “Transphobic works”, as well as other discriminatory terms. While this vocabulary is maintained by the Rare Books and Materials Section, a work does not have to be an archival or rare work to use the vocabulary for it.

The Homosaurus also has terms that name cis/heteronormative ideologies or otherwise discriminatory perspectives, such as “Amatonormativity”, “Anti-LGBTQ+ violence”, “Compulsory monogamy”, “Heterosexism”, and other examples.

The only other difference is that these vocabularies occupy a MARC 655 field (i.e. 655 /7 $2 rbmscv or $2 homoit). CVEG co-editors can be reached at vocabularies@rbms.info and accept proposals for terms via their Controlled Vocabularies Proposal Form. Homosaurus editors can be reached and accept new terms via their contact form.

4.2.4. Assigning headings for historical identity labels that are no longer commonly used

The language used within queer communities to describe ourselves has changed and will continue to change as we grow and evolve. When describing works in a historical context, it is recommended to use the language the queer creator used for themselves at that time. When that language is outdated, applied by someone not explicitly queer, or is offensive, consider using Homosaurus or RBMS CV prejudicial materials terminology.

4.2.5. Assigning headings to ambiguous materials

Some materials may contain ambiguous or undefined queer subjects. It is important to be inclusive of those who existed prior to our current understanding of gender/sexuality, and to recognize that our understandings of gender/sexuality evolve over time and across different cultures. While prioritising the self-identification of historical figures is important, we also want to make materials findable for a modern audience. In order to balance these two needs, we recommend adding queer subject headings using modern terms to make these materials findable, while also including descriptive or summary notes that clarify the nature of the material and the ambiguity therein.

4.3 Names, Naming & Authorities

This section covers updating or changing name authority records (NARs) created as part of the Name Authority Cooperative Program (NACO), but also physical items, and Wikidata items.³² This section also includes a list of recommended resources with templates that can be amended to fit most institutional needs.

Most importantly, creators are the ultimate authority on their name. Publications (both digital and print), websites, and other sources may have outdated information that cannot be used as the source of authority. The creator is the source of authority on their name, and it is important that confirmation of a current name is received from either the creator directly if possible, or a channel managed by them. In the event the creator is deceased, consider consultation with the following groups (if possible) in this order: public statements by the individual, correspondence, partner(s) at time of death, chosen family members, community members, children (adopted or biological), and if all other options are exhausted, family of origin. If conflicting information is received, try to prioritise this order to the extent possible, always documenting your decision.

The recommendations listed in this document are not exhaustive, nor will it be possible to apply all of them in every metadata scenario. There may be limitations in areas such as communication and requested privacy. The Naming Authorities Working Group acknowledges these limitations and encourages metadata workers to follow these recommendations to the best of their ability without sacrificing quality for completeness. In addition, the recommendations offered may not fit within existing cataloguing guidelines for every institution; please use this document as a foundation when updating documentation.

4.3.1. What to include in a name authority record

First, consider that name authority records are meant to disambiguate between individuals. The goal of an authority record is therefore not to comprehensively biography an individual. If including personal information is not possible or consented to, the metadata worker can include other identifying information such as: university attended, university publishing for, field of work, etc.³³

When it is deemed necessary to add information such as organisational affiliation or partners / spouses to an authority record, only include this information in consultation with the creator if possible or if it is publicly available—whether by existing authority records, or via the creator’s social media or website.³⁴ Linking partners or spouses to authority records will not be necessary for all metadata instances, and should be left to the discretion of each institution based on existing practices.

Finally, metadata and technical services professionals should keep in mind the guidelines stated by the Program for Cooperative Cataloging (PCC) and not include gender in an authority record.³⁵

4.3.2. Updating names in name authority records

When considering making significant changes to a name authority record, consult the creator, if possible, regarding the proposed change. While obtaining explicit permission from the creator is best, if that is not possible, the information may be retrieved from a site or source that the creator controls. This keeps the updated information within the creator’s realm of control, and comes from a public outlet so as to not out the creator.

Also consider the best practices set forth in the Trans Metadata Collective’s “Metadata Best Practices for Trans and Gender Diverse Resources”:

If you do not know the author’s wishes, follow these principles:

- Someone’s full body of work should be accessible using their current name.³⁶
- Former names that they have previously published under should be used as little as possible and coded not to display publicly to users.
- Former names that the author has not published under should not be included.
- Do not include pronouns in 670s if possible.

³³ Please consult the NACO Participant’s Manual at <https://www.loc.gov/aba/pcc/naco/doc-updates.html> for further guidance on what identifying information can be included.

³⁴ See “Recommended Resources” section at the end of the document for an example on personal affiliations.

³⁵ Revised Report on Recording Gender in Personal Name Authority Records PCC Ad Hoc Task Group on Recording Gender in Personal Name Authority Records (April 7, 2022): <https://www.loc.gov/aba/pcc/documents/gender-in-NARs-revised-report.pdf>

³⁶

- If you are required to, correct incorrect pronouns from source materials quoted in 670 fields, taking especial care with 678 fields to note if a pronoun is cataloger judgement or derived from the source material.³⁷

Be sure to include relevant information, and how it was obtained, from your communication with authors in the 670. This will include the author's wishes around name usage (e.g. "author requests that former name not display in public catalogue"). Consider making a 667 for specific instructions from authors (e.g. "Do not add a 400 for former name as per author's request. Former name was used on publications until 1984." or "Author requested former name be kept in the authority record, do not remove".) (TMDC 3.2.4.1)

One option is to follow George Mason University's local practice of not adding linkage to former names. If no response is received from an informational request for name authority, a separate name authority record will be created instead of updating the name in the existing record and including the former name as a variant. This policy is an option to follow locally, but it does prevent the author's full body of work from being accessible under their current name.

More information on creating records below in Section 4.3.4. How to update or change a name.

4.3.3. When to update or change a name

If the creator requests a name change, even before publishing a new work, the metadata worker should honour that request and cite personal communication in the record. If there is noticed evidence of a name change, it is best to contact the creator to confirm the change. The PCC has established a contacting contributors guide that includes sample templates for emailing creators about name authority records.

If you are working at a museum, archives, or similar cultural heritage institution where donor relations is a key function, it is recommended that the preferred public name is asked of the potential donor as part of the donation process. This prevents staff from having to repeatedly contact the donor after deeds of gift have been signed. Following this step, if the donor requests a name change, follow the guidance in the paragraph above.

³⁷ Cases such as the Public Universal Friend demonstrate that 670s using incorrect pronouns have sometimes been updated to neutralize the pronouns (a possibly even more inaccurate change) without a note as to whether the source material had changed or if this was a cataloger-induced change (with thanks to Tess Amram for this example). Chevalier d'Eon is another example of a historical figure where some institutions have made a deliberate choice to use he/him pronouns.

4.3.4. How to update or change a name

As a general guideline, this Working Group recommends following the guidance of the Trans Metadata Collective's "Best Practices" document on how to make changes in an authority record:

- "Use the same form of name throughout the bib record" (the most likely scenario is to replace any former names with the current name in brackets)
- Prioritise purchase of new editions etc. with current names
- "Change the name on the book" (TMDC 3.2.6)

When working within a local system, there are several ways to include an author's former name for enhanced searching and linking from the former name to the current name. Per the TMDC, including an author's former name should begin, if possible, with consulting the author for their wishes on the inclusion of said name. For institutions which use MARC, one potential option (if the author does not already have an authority record) is to code the former name in a 4xx field and add a nonpublic note or 667 field explaining the inclusion of the former name/former name.

Also in institutions which use MARC an author's former name can be coded as a 4xx or 5xx heading, though this is not a core requirement. To code this as a reference point or not to display the name, a "w" subfield can be added to the front of the field, which includes up to four characters. To ensure the former name will not be displayed, an "a" can be coded as the third character. (TMDC 3.2.4.2)

It is possible that a creator may request their current name not be linked to their former one. In this case, an option would be to create separate name authority records in the library's local system but not contribute these separate records to a larger database. However, it is important to consider that data that is hidden in a local system may appear and be publicly available if contributed to a larger system like NACO, VIAF, Wikidata, etc. Information suppressed in NACO records will still appear as publicly available linked data on id.loc.gov (NACO Participants' Manual, page 93). We recommend removing these suppressed fields from a record before contributing it to a larger database like NACO.

4.3.5. Linking names or other identities

According to the cataloguer's discretion on a case-by-case basis, one may choose to link identities such as drag or ball identities or former names.³⁸ Metadata workers must consider the extent to which a creator uses a name or persona publicly before linking any identities to the authority record.³⁹ Take especial care with the linking of historical authorities as examples and follow the Collective's Chain of Trust in guiding your decision.

4.3.6. Updating names on physical items

Following the updating of the creator within the metadata, best practical efforts to update the name on the physical item should be made as well.

In the case of circulating materials, if there exists an edition of the item with the creator's preferred name, it is recommended to prioritise purchasing this edition if it is within the institution's budget to do so.

In the event no updated edition exists, or if one cannot be acquired, and if it is feasible for staff based on the quantity of materials and staff time, it is recommended to relabel the item itself with the creator's preferred name. This does not necessarily mean covering the previous name in every location it appears, as this is likely not feasible when this can include page headers, the title page, title page verso, cover, and more. A label on the material connecting the updated name to the previous name is recommended, such as:

Authority Heading: Stevenson, N. D.
Alternate Name: Stevenson, Noelle

In the case of special collections, archives, and other non-circulating materials, there are considerations to give with regards to the rarity of the item. In these cases, a call slip or correction sheet can be inserted into the item.

Again, the creator is the ultimate authority on their name, and so if they do not want the two identities connected, follow their wishes and avoid doing so. For deceased creators, the best practice is to follow their last wishes for how they preferred to be referred to and what identities they connected themselves to publicly. If this is unclear, or if there ³⁸ For example, the Public Universal Friend often has their birth name added as a 400. The Friend abandoned that name and never published under it (or signed legal documents with it), although many people writing about the Friend even today use it. This is incorrect. Many other historical figures' authority files such as Antonio d'Erauso's have similar errors.

³⁹ See authority records for Shangela (<https://lccn.loc.gov/no2020093795>) and Bianca del Rio (<https://lccn.loc.gov/no2018142363>) as examples of drag identities being the primary name.

is conflicting information, consider consultation with the following sources or groups in this order: public statements; public or private correspondence; partner(s) at time of death; chosen family members; community members; children (adopted or biological); and if all other options are exhausted, family of origin. Utilise best judgement and discretion and consider how certain labels could affect still-living individuals connected to the deceased creator.

Regardless of how else the name is replaced on the material, call numbers using the creator's correct name as an accessibility point should be updated to reflect the creator's preferred name as it displays in the metadata.

4.3.7. Wikidata

Wikidata acts as central storage and the data backbone of the Wikimedia ecosystem by providing structured data to its Wikimedia sister projects, which include Wikipedia, Wikivoyage, Wiktionary, Wikisource, and so on.⁴⁰ It also serves as an important identifier and metadata hub for other GLAMS linked data aggregators and triplestores on the Semantic Web including the Library of Congress linked data Service, OCLC's VIAF, and Google.

Wikidata publishes linked open data entities in the form of internationally-shared Wikidata "items," across language and cultural boundaries, which and anyone on the Web can access and edit the item database. Human editors can edit items in Wikidata by hand, or they can create bots to do it for them.

4.3.7.1. Wikidata's Property P21

Among other entities, Wikidata items are created to describe individuals, communities, and resources they serve many of the same purposes authority records from traditional name authority databases. However, Wikidata is particularly problematic when used to record metadata about MORGAI individuals, communities, and resources, particularly because of property P21, "sex or gender," also known as "gender identity, gender expression, gender, biological sex, and sex," which conflates concepts of sex, orientation, gender identity, and gender modality.⁴¹

⁴⁰ https://www.wikidata.org/wiki/Wikidata:Main_Page

⁴¹ The name P21 comes from the fact that it is the 21st property in Wikidata. It is also the property's URI: <https://www.wikidata.org/wiki/Property:P21>. P21 also lists three related properties: "Grammatical gender," "Sexual orientation," and "Personal pronoun." The relationship P21 and these other properties is problematic because related properties bidirectional and they are used to indicate that other properties provide additional information. This means that Wikidata editors are using the values of "sex or gender" to infer the values of grammatical gender or personal pronoun. For example, a Wikidata editor examining B.M. Watson's page may use "male" in P21 assign the (incorrect) pronoun "he" to Watson. Conversely,

The property's talk (documentation) page indicates that allowed property values includes things like "male, female, intersex, trans woman, trans man, non-binary," etc."⁴² While some non-English values are included, the options are not encompassing of trans and gender diverse identities nor the diverse sociolinguistic representations of gender more broadly and (also) conflates concepts of sex, orientation, gender identity, and gender modality.

Qualifiers (limiting statements) for P21 include "start time" and "end time," among others, but these too are often applied inconsistently and conflate concepts of sex, orientation, gender identity, and gender modality.

References are not required for P21, and when they are used, they are often insufficient. Generally speaking, Wikidata statements are supposed to include references, the exceptions being a) when the value of a statement is common knowledge b) when it refers to an external source of information, or c) when the item itself is a source for the statement.⁴³

Wikidata is rife with assumptions that sex or gender can be assumed as common knowledge inferred from an individual's characteristics. For example, Wikidata contributors use private database information, old social media posts, and other information without the consent of the person.

Worse, contributor-created bots use problematic heuristics to infer binary gender identities and apply to Wikidata items for human beings on massive scales.⁴⁴ Some of the problematic heuristics used by bots include:

- "inferred from pronoun used"
- "inferred from grammatical gender used in text"

editors use grammatical gender, sexual orientation, and/or personal pronouns to infer an individual's sex or gender. These inferences are wrong and do disproportionate harm to queer and trans communities.

Finally, individuals are referred to by their former name⁴⁵ in Wikidata labels, particularly in the “Also named as” sections. Other Wikidata properties which contain or indicate the presence of former names include:

- Name \(P2561\)
- Married name \(P2562\)
- Name in native language \(P1559\)
- Nickname \(P1449\)
- Pseudonym \(P742\)
- Family name \(P734\)
- Second family name in Spanish name \(P1950\)
- Given name \(P735\)
- Official name \(P1448\)
- Short name \(P1813\)
- Alternative name \(P4970\)
- Birth name \(P1477\)

Intentionally using a person’s former name is a cruel and inaccurate metadata practice and should be avoided in order to protect the people who are the subjects of description. The TMDC recommendations has much more information on this topic.

Users have repeatedly asked for restrictions and best practices to be put in place surrounding this issue, but no common best practices exist for applying this property to living or deceased persons with regard to privacy or consent, and policies are unclear and inconsistently enforced. As the authors of Findings on Knowledge Equity in Linked Open Data point out, P21 “functionally marginalizes accurate knowledge about LGBTQ+ and Queer communities and peoples.”⁴⁶

Difficulty with the use of Property 21 (a property conflating sex and gender) and lack of clear policy and enforcement of policy describing living people were described by almost all of the participants. The attempts to address these concerns end up in unresolved conversations and no solution for a long time. Lack of resolution of issues like this results in the potential of proliferation of incorrect information and mis-identification of people, and harms. For example, harms like dead naming, misgendering and outing people can occur. It is not safe for people to be identified in a certain way, and there is no consent process

⁴⁵ Sometimes these are referred to as “deadnames,” but generally speaking usage is trending away from that and “former name” also connects with other non-trans, but gender diverse uses, including people who change their name in marriage or for Indigenous reasons. See TMDC’s discussion of this as well as the work of the Name Change Policy Working Group (NCPWG; <https://ncpwg.org>).

⁴⁶ See Summary of findings on Knowledge Equity in Linked Open Data, submitted to Wikimedia Deutschland

for biography or description of living people. If a LGBTQ+ or Queer person is living somewhere where it is illegal to be who they are, being outed in the LOD ecosystem can be very dangerous.⁴⁷

Wikidata's sex or gender (P21) property, its lack of specific guidance against using former names, and its unclear policies and dispute resolution guidelines surrounding consent, privacy, and living people set Wikidata editors up to fail by making false and harmful inferences—inferences which disproportionately affect queer communities. More information about Wikidata and Wikipedia guidance and governance is available in 6.3.2.3. Additional Wikidata Considerations for GLAMS Metadata Workers.

4.3.7.2. Updating & Correction of Wikidata Items

This subsection is meant to serve as a “ready reference” for metadata workers undertaking wikidata updates or corrections. These processes are described and documented in greater detail (with screenshots!) in Section 6.3.2. Updating & Correction of Wikidata Items

4.3.7.1. Updating Wikidata Items

This is an overview of the process of Wikidata editing; a more detailed guide to the editing process (including screenshots) is available in Section 6.3.2. Updating Wikidata Items. The Training Resources section of the Practical Wikidata for Librarians page is also useful. To update existing authorities in Wikidata use the following steps.

1. In the search menu at the top right of the page search for the name you want to edit.
2. Search First name Last Name e.g. “Billy Porter” to find the actor's entry, which is at the URI <https://www.wikidata.org/wiki/Q4913177>
3. In the upper right of his entry click the “Edit” link
4. The first box contains the main form the person's name and you may place the cursor in the field and make desired changes
5. Following are a set of “statements” about the person such as sex, gender, sexual orientation, given name (which may contain a person's former name) and others. Each may be edited by clicking the “Edit” link in the top right corner of each box.
 - New information may be added to each statement by clicking “+Add Value” at the left.

⁴⁷ Ibid.

- You may also insert references justifying your choice of entry by clicking “+Add Reference”
 - New Statements may be added as well by scrolling to the end of the statements list and clicking “+Add Statement”
6. When finished editing, return to the top of the entry and select “Publish” to save the changes.

4.3.7.2. Correcting Wikidata Items

While some metadata professionals and Wikidata editors have proposed solutions to the issues caused by P21, as of the writing of this document there no consensus.

However, there are three helpful options:

1. Option 1: Talk it out.

When you see a piece of harmful or incorrect information, find where the information came from via the item history. Once found, go to that editor’s talk page and kindly but firmly describe how their edit was harmful and that you are removing / changing it, and then do so. Option 1 is the most emotionally taxing and time-consuming approach, but also the most effective.

2. Option 2: Undo

Find the problematic edit, hit the “undo” button, enter a brief explanation of why you are undoing the edit, correct the information, and move on. This option is less obtrusive to the person who did the initial edit, but it is also easier for them to reverse.

3. Option 3: Directly edit

Unreferenced statements can be deleted without any conversation, but they can be just as easily added back with no justification. However, deleting referenced statements with no justification is considered bad manners in Wikidata and is not recommended. Always leave a note. You can edit incorrect statements and replace them with referenced, correct statements if you have the information available

These (especially Option 1) are described in greater detail in 6.3.2.2. Correcting Wikidata Items. Information on what constitutes good references is available in Section 6.3.2.3. Additional Wikidata Considerations.

4.3.7.4. General Wikidata Recommendations

4.3.7.4.1. Preliminary Questions

Questions to consider before adding information about a person's gender identity or modality to Wikidata:

- Does recording a value add value to the item record?
- Does it increase representation of underrepresented groups in a particular field?
- Is the person's gender identity or modality important to build context about the individual's life and contributions to a field?
- Is the person's gender identity or modality an important piece of information as it relates to the person's work (i.e. are they an author who writes about gender diverse characters)?
- Do I have the cultural competency and language fluency to adequately record the gender identity or modality of the individual?
- Could recording gender information result in harm toward the person?
- Is there a direct, public record of the individual stating their own gender identity or modality?

4.3.7.4.2. P21 "sex or gender"

- P21 should only be used when the gender modality and gender identity provide context about why the person is notable.
- When using P21, only use the gender identity and gender modality as stated by the individual publicly in their own words.
- Use only culturally and linguistically appropriate terms for gender identities and modalities as stated by the individual in P21.
- All gender-related property values in P21 should have a reference that points back to the individual's statement. References should be both public and up-to-date.
- Correct P21 statements that are incorrect. Consider reaching out to the individual if you are able to inform them of the error and correction.

Additional caveat: the intersex value should only be used in P21 if stated by the person as part of their identity or work.

4.3.7.4.3. Things to Not Do:

- Do not use bots or Quickstatements to assign gender identity, gender modality, or sex to individuals based on heuristic means or anything other than public self-identification.

- Do not modify gender modality or gender identity to fit the sociolinguistic background of the Wikidata editor rather than that of the individual (no one-to-one mapping).
- Do not infer and assign gender identity or modality from absence of evidence (for example, assuming someone to be cisgender if they do not publicly identify as transgender).
- Do not provide values for gender identity, gender identity, or sex without a reference.
- Do not use “announcement” or “start date” statements (i.e. do not say someone “announced as transgender” or “started as non-binary” at such-and-such a date.
- Do not record assigned sex at birth.

4.4. Description

Description is the “body” of how GLAMS collections are contextualised in library catalogues, finding aids, digital platforms, and other sources of information about GLAMS materials. Description is essential for conveying the usefulness of a collection or asset, providing its core identifying information. Description can contain biographical or personal information, as well as broader historical, physical, or other details. As description fields are key for search and reuse in cultural heritage systems, it is vital that queer people and communities are represented properly in them. Descriptive standards, from across the cultural heritage spectrum, often do not have provisions for queer identities, with little consideration for privacy nor for plurality of being or changes in cultural understandings of queerness across time. These recommendations serve to fill those gaps and guide towards better descriptive work.

We define description in this section as any of the following:

- Alternative text
- Bibliographic records:
 - Abstracts/Scope
 - Biography and History
- Captions
- Digital collections:
 - Descriptions
 - Notes
 - Preservation descriptive fields
- Exhibit labels or curator descriptions
- Finding aids:
 - Abstracts
 - Scope and Content Notes

- Biography and History
- Record Group / Series / Fond / Folder / Item
- Processing notes
- Titles (Digital collections, exhibits, etc.)

These description types frequently contain information that identifies or describes individuals, locations, and/or appearances, often in free-text. These fields will be the subject of analysis in this section of the best practices.

These recommendations consider detailed analysis of specific descriptive standards and metadata schemas as out of scope due to their large number and their varying usage levels across GLAMS institutions.⁴⁸ Instead, the recommendations are intentionally broad in order to apply to any institution or descriptive practice in archives, libraries, museums, digital collections, and visual resource collections. This section provides recommendations based on current literature, internal documentation that was shared with QMDC by our colleagues, research interviews of queer knowledge workers, and the professional experience of Collective members.

4.4.1. General Recommendations

4.4.1.2. When to Describe Someone as Queer

“As community archives are often created under the desire to be visible, known, represented—and celebrated—the concept of representational subversion reminds us that, alongside a person, family, or group’s right to be remembered, is their equally important right to be forgotten or to forget....The right to be forgotten/unseen or to forget surfaces alongside the right to be remembered or visible.”⁴⁹

— Joyce Gabiola, Gracen Brilmyer, Michelle Caswell, Jimmy Zavala

Describing individuals in collection descriptive fields can be complicated. Sometimes, subjects make their identities clear through the ways in which they describe themselves. But, often you will be in the position of needing to describe an individual who has not clearly defined their own identities in any of the materials in front of you, and you will need to come up with your own language to use in collection and item titles, captions, alt text, biographical notes, and other areas of description records.

⁴⁸ As pointed out by a peer reviewer, DACS and Dublin Core are very widely used and also quite generic, so many other systems are similar or are based on them, so recommendations may have broader-than-stated applicability.

⁴⁹ Gabiola, Joyce, Gracen Brilmyer, Michelle Caswell, and Jimmy Zavala. 2022. “It’s a Trap’: Complicating Representation in Community-Based Archives.” American Archivist 85 (1): 60–87. doi: <https://doi.org/10.17723/2327-9702-85.1.60>

Describing someone as queer can be fraught, because it assumes what queerness must be when it can look very different for everyone. In addition, outing or identifying someone as queer without their consent can cause harm and have negative repercussions.

Out-ness is not a binary wherein any explicit self-identification of queerness found in a collection (for example, in letters to friends or partners) means that an individual was out or would be comfortable with being out more publicly. Someone might be out personally but not in their professional life, or be out to some people in their lives but not others. An individual's right to privacy around their identity does not expire, description workers should strive to respect the agency, self-identification, and subject's wishes as best as possible.⁵⁰ Considerations may include:

- What evidence is there that the subject was or was not out?
 - If there is evidence they were out, to whom were they out? Is there anyone to whom they were not out?
- Is there any indication that the subject would like to be identified as queer?

In situations where it is clear that the subject is queer but it is not clear if they were out or how they would like to be described, the decision should be made in consultation with others. Who should be consulted and what this consultation might look like will be discussed later in this section.

Describing a person as queer in a finding aid, exhibition label, or similar should always be done with purpose and care. Sometimes this will require doing research to establish the identity of the person. Before doing so, determine if this information is relevant to the material and how the items will be used. Some questions to ask can include:

- Is there evidence of any kind outside your perception of the subject?
- Would a similar description be given if the person being described was straight/cis/etc.?
- Will including this information enhance understanding of this object in context?
- Has the person being described consented to the inclusion of information on their queerness?
- Would a researcher on queer history be interested in and find relevant materials within the collection?
- Is this person out (i.e. publicly queer) or is it a resource by an "out" person?

⁵⁰ Note that we are not referring to legal rights here, but instead are speaking to our ethical obligations to the donors and subjects of our collections. Something being legally permissible does not mean that it is ethical.

If you cannot justify a purpose or intention in a queer description, reevaluate if one is necessary.

Once you have established that including queerness in a description is important and relevant, the next step is to figure out how the person would want to be described. Consultation is the best way to avoid assumptions or misrepresentations of a person's identity. Depending on if the individual in question is living or deceased, the consultation process will look different. For living subjects, ask the individual directly how they would like to be identified and described. Be sure to explain the context in which the description will be used. If they ask for their queerness not to be included, it is critical that their wishes are respected. If they do not answer, consider that a no.

For deceased subjects, consider consultation with the following groups (if possible) in this order: public statements, correspondence, partner(s) at time of death, chosen family members, community members, children (adopted or biological), and if all other options are exhausted, family of origin. Section 6.3.3. Identification of “romantic friendships,” “inseparable friends or companions,” “bosom friends,” “life friends,” and same-sex relationships may also be useful to metadata workers or users of archives or museums.

In some cases, the consultation on how to describe an individual's identity will be fairly direct, such as in cases where an individual is/was out and/or there is explicitly queer content in the material(s) being described. In other instances, some materials may contain ambiguously queer or unidentified subjects. In these cases, the consultation should be less direct in order to avoid making assumptions. For example, imagine you were processing an archival collection that contained evidence that two women lived together their whole lives and that their relationship was one that may have gone beyond that of friendship or roommates, such as if one of the women inherited the other's house upon her passing and received letters of sympathy similar to those one might receive if a spouse died. In this instance, it is important neither to assume they were merely friends/roommates nor partners. In this case, you could ask the surviving person “how would you prefer we describe your relationship with [subject]?” leaving the question as open as possible. If you are not in a position to ask, simply describe the situation with facts without putting a label on the relationship.

If it is not clear from documentation, the collection materials themselves, or from donor conversations how the individual identified, it is best to avoid making any assumptions.⁵¹ We recognize that gender and sexuality hegemony is so embedded in culture that it can take a shift in mindset to avoid this. A person wearing a dress should not, in fact, be assumed to be a woman, nor should two women who appear to modern eyes to have had a romantic relationship be assumed to be lesbians, and neither should two men who lived together for decades assumed to merely be roommates. What may seem “obvious” should not be assumed without context and evidence, to avoid mis-labelling people.

Body-oriented cataloguing, as proposed by Travis Wagner, is one example of a method of avoiding making assumptions about the gender of individuals who are being described. In body-oriented cataloguing, you describe what Wagner refers to as the “gendered ways of being” rather than the gender.⁵² For example, you can describe a photograph as being of a “person wearing a dress who is standing in a field” rather than a “woman in a field.”

The understanding of queerness in all its forms has changed over time, as has the willingness to be identified in any particular way. Cultural differences must also be respected, as different cultures describe and define queerness in different ways. Free text description, such as biographical and scope and content notes in finding aids, allow the ability to use historically, culturally, and individually appropriate terms.

4.4.1.2. Modern and Historical Terms

As a guiding rule, describe people using the names, language, and identity terms that individuals use or used for themselves.⁵³ Terminology can be community-based as well as individual, and it is vital to follow any knowledge practices communicated in the resource or in consultation.⁵⁴ Description fields, with the exception of titles, are also a useful place to provide further context about these terms, especially if they have changed in meaning over time, having the advantage of often being free text.⁵⁵

Do not allow your views on “correct” language or grammar to keep you from using language and terms that someone has described themselves. This may include reclaimed or self-ascribed terms otherwise understood as slurs. As such, this work necessitates flexibility, humility, and care.

If the creator is living, ask the individual directly how they would like to be identified and described. Consult with them about how they would like to handle pronoun and name changes, offensive terms, content warnings, or legacy descriptive practices.⁵⁶ For example, offensive terms found in folder and box titles or in materials themselves could be put in quotes or replaced with new terminology put in brackets, depending on the individual's preference.

If they are deceased, consult the list of resources, individuals and groups listed in the previous section. As always, if it is not clear from documentation or from consultation, it is best to avoid making any assumptions. For more guidance, the Subject Headings section includes recommendations regarding the use of terminology now considered historical or offensive.

4.4.2. Metadata Remediation

It is likely that previous descriptive practices have resulted in descriptions that are harmful and insensitive to users. It is recommended that organisational websites all have a harmful materials statement and consider content warnings for descriptions where they are needed. Additionally, institutions should provide either a feedback form or an email address for users who would like to provide feedback or draw attention to harmful description. The Cataloging Lab provides many examples of these types of statements and feedback mechanisms.⁵⁷

It is generally recommended to save previous versions of description fields, like descriptions, titles, or exhibition labels, for transparency and accountability.⁵⁸ There are, however, some instances in which providing access to earlier forms of description or providing public notes on what changes have occurred would be harmful to queer and trans people. For example, if names of trans people have been updated or if the descriptive content available could be considered outing by you or other metadata workers in your institution, this type of information should not be made available to the public.

4.4.3. Discoverability

Make note of how your patrons can access and search for materials. For archives, for example, are collections accessible through a library catalogue, a finding aid portal, both, or somewhere else? If your records are accessible online, are they keyword searchable? While some description fields can offer a level of flexibility in how we format collection descriptions, it is important to know if and how that affects patron searches. If the full metadata of your finding aid, catalogue record, or digital collections record is not keyword searchable, it might be necessary to put more emphasis on controlled vocabulary as a descriptive tool. An additional possibility is to consider adding community-derived terms.⁵⁹ These community-based keywords could also be implemented in bibliographic records as local authorities.

4.4.3.1. Aggregating Records

If you are aggregating your records, such as with a finding aid consortium or with a digital collections aggregator, such as the Digital Public Library of America (DPLA), review how your descriptive metadata is displayed on these different sites. Is all of the information you need to give context to the materials being aggregated? Is that information displayed in the fields and website views that you expect? For example, additional descriptive notes may be mapped to description fields, but then do not appear in browse list results or your aggregator may only harvest one description field. Within Texas Archival Resources Online (TARO), finding aid abstracts do not fully display on browse list views. To accommodate this, the University of Texas at Austin adapted other fields to include additional descriptive notes.⁶⁰ This may be something you will need to work with your stakeholders on.

4.4.3.2. Digitisation and Digital Collections

Additional considerations should be made during digitisation. Ask yourself if queer materials should be digitised, and if so, what level of granularity and types of information should be included in the description.⁶¹ Questions to ask oneself include, but are not limited to:

- Could digitization result in harm to anyone named or represented in the materials?
- Does the material being considered for digitization identify (or could lead to the identification of) any queer or trans individuals who are not out (or were not out when they were alive)?
- Was the material created in a public or private setting (was there an expectation of sharing when the material was created)?

Peter D. Fernandez and Kelly Tilton (Chicago: American Library Association, 2018), 225–239.

- Are any materials depicting or describing activities that could be used as evidence in a trial (particularly relevant for activist materials)?⁶²

Sometimes it may be possible to digitise an object without identifying individuals in order to keep them unfindable, but if there is a possibility of identification or harm to represented individuals, not digitising the object(s) in question may be the safer route. These same considerations should be made for digital preservation of queer materials. While representation is important, it is not more important than safety and privacy.

4.4.3.3. Pre-existing Description

Be cautious when relying upon pre-existing descriptions for items, such as text written on the backs of photographs or original creator's descriptions or titles. Unless you are certain that the description was written by the individual(s) described, you should not assume the recorded information is accurate. If a full collection is using the original creator's description or title and offensive language is used, consider elaborating on the source of the language, put offensive terms in brackets,⁶³ or re-consider the practice.

4.4.4. Positionality Statements

While some institutions have considered or used positionality statements (notes that clarify how metadata workers are positioned, generally in terms of identity, to the item or collection being described), we do not recommend this as a general descriptive practice. Including positionality statements in records can create search noise for users. This is particularly true for sites that employ full-text/keyword search functionalities. Considering how many controlled vocabularies are inadequate for describing marginalised people and topics, description workers and researchers often rely on keyword searching in free text fields to find relevant materials. Additionally, requiring positionality statements can result in some metadata workers having to choose between outing or incorrectly identifying themselves, or otherwise place workers in difficult situations. Description should focus on the content and context of the resource, rather than on the identity or identities of the metadata worker.⁶⁴

4.4.5. Community Collaboration and Consultation

Community collaboration and consultation can be helpful for descriptive work, especially if you are not familiar with the community and/or the materials being described. This is supported by the view that metadata workers should be facilitators rather than the voice of under-represented communities.⁶⁵ Community in this context can mean donors, individuals or organisations represented by collection materials, a university-based research community, local organisations, estates, or other institutions. However, consultation must be done thoughtfully and with sensitivity. Before contacting potential partners, institutions must review their ability and resources to conduct reciprocal collaboration, carefully defining boundaries and what items they can realistically support. In turn, asking people for a consultation is asking them to perform labour. Do not expect people to perform this labour, or feel entitled to their work. If appropriate, consider compensating people for their time.⁶⁶

Existing relationships may have already been established with community partners through outreach or through one's own contacts. If they have not, start with research on appropriate individuals or organisations in order to establish these relationships. Plan how you will reach out to the community, making sure that any collaboration is reciprocal and respects the community's knowledge practices. Again, consider compensation, financial or in kind.⁶⁷ Collaborations work best when they are not ad-hoc, but rather focused on particular descriptive projects. Creating an advisory board locally within your institution before building relationships farther afield can assist in focusing potential projects, as well as formally defining these relationships which can better cement their longevity.⁶⁸ Advisory boards can also be used to establish best practices

It is good practice to offer compensation, but be understanding if people refuse or do not consider it appropriate.

at your institution, setting uniform expectations that can ensure consistency across partners.⁶⁹

Be prepared for a wide range of reactions to your outreach and requests for collaboration. Not everyone has positive relationships with cultural heritage institutions, while materials can have difficult histories; engagement with records and those that hold them can be traumatic.⁷⁰ In turn, there may be resourcing issues, recognizing that communities may have other priorities or needs at the time of your request. Occasionally, the answer from the community may be simply “no” or “not right now.” Let them know that you respect their wishes and refocus on other materials.⁷¹

If you need to complete the descriptive metadata within a particular timeframe, rely on existing recommendations and provide avenues for metadata feedback, documenting this approach in your work. In these circumstances it is necessary to evaluate whether the existing recommendations are enough for your particular case or if the item(s) need a focused review/wait on publication.⁷² Once any changes have been made to the descriptive content, be sure to make these changes apparent in the metadata by describing the intervention or providing your general descriptive policy.⁷³

Some instances where you may want to consult other parties include:

- Material from other locations. Identify the country/state/local community and do some initial research regarding the terminology used in that area before reaching out. A number of countries have organisations that have produced their own glossaries/terminology, which could be a good starting point. Also, be aware that meanings of the same word may vary regionally.⁷⁴

- Working with a donor (whether during accessioning or after the fact). Discuss how the individual or organisation would like things to be described. This strategy is most relevant if the collections describe themselves/their organisation/estate, etc. In this discussion, you can provide examples of thesauri like the Homosaurus or other records you have created previously to help generate ideas. Another option proposed by Erin Baucom for archival materials is to create a “related topics” or “keyword access” section within finding aids. This would include non-standardized, community-based keywords contributed by respective community members.⁷⁵ This strategy can be easily repurposed for descriptions, where community-derived terms can be reused within descriptive text across the record.
- Large assessment projects of descriptions or exhibit labels. If you are considering revising large sections of your materials’ descriptive contents, it is vital to include community partners’ help to advise these broader changes due to their large impact on users. As community partners can be variously defined, you can invite campus departments and partners as well as local organisations to assist in this effort. Developing an advisory board or working group with a defined set of best practices is a good strategy for organising this work.

5. Author Information & QMDC History

5.1. QMDC History

The QMDC builds upon earlier work done by the Trans Metadata Collective, a similarly-organised group of metadata workers and information professionals with a concerted interest in improving the metadata representation of trans and gender diverse people. The work of the TMDC culminated in Metadata Best Practices for Trans and Gender Diverse Resources,⁷⁶ focusing on the description, cataloguing, and classification of information resources as well as the creation of metadata about trans and gender-diverse people, including authors, communities, and other creators.

Following the publication of the Best Practices, TMDC members B.M. Watson, Adrian Williams, Devon Murphy, Keahi Adolpho, and Rachel Newlin, along with some other TMDC volunteers and reviewers founded and developed the QMDC over the summer of 2022. Early QMDC members launched website and a broad call for participation on social media, GLAMS-relevant listservs, and elsewhere. The response to this call was large and several hundred GLAMS (Galleries, Libraries, Archives, Museums, and Special Collections) workers (and professionals from other fields) expressed interest in participation.

Like the TMDC, the Queer Metadata Collective's primary goal was the development of a set of best practices (this document) for the treatment of queer metadata—the description, cataloguing, and classification of information resources as well as the creation of metadata about queer people, including authors, resources, and other creators. A couple of large-scale meetings were held to discuss action plans, and this larger group broke out into several working groups in order to allow individuals to play to their own expertise. The initial working groups were called Description, Classification, Subject Headings, Name Authorities and Ethical Recommendations / Document Structure.

The TMDC's preexisting Slack workspace was utilized and the working groups began meetings to develop individual documents. These groups and their documents took a variety of forms, including lists, bibliographies, formal reports and others. Over the course of this two-year long process and on an as-needed basis a representative from each working group met in a Coordinating Committee, and individuals participated as they were able to—several people were involved in the initial work, and others were not involved until the later stages. As working groups "finished" their self-assigned work or goals the documents were "rolled up" into a shared document that B.M. Watson of the Ethical Recommendations / Document Structure Working Group edited together. The Broad Recommendations section was derived from shared recommendations in each group's documents, as well as ~50 interviews of queer metadata workers by Watson.

In June 2024 the QMDC undertook an internal review where all current and previous authorial or contributing members of the TMDC and QMDC were offered the opportunity for final revisions over the course of one week and nearly 60 individuals did so. Following this period, a two week peer review process was opened to all ~800 members of the QMDC more broadly and 400 of these participated by emailed comments (~150 individuals), suggestions on the Google document (~70 individuals), or reading (the remainder).

The individuals listed in the "Authors" section have elected to appear in it in alphabetic order. The ordering of those in the "Reviewers" section are listed unordered. There are several individuals who did not wish to be listed in both sections due to concerns of outing or personal danger. We would like to extend our thanks for their participation and wisdom.

5.2. Author Information

5.2.1. Classification Working Group

- Chloe Misorski - Cataloging Librarian, Cleveland Museum of Art. White, queer, cisgender woman residing in what is now called Ohio and is the ancestral land of many Indigenous people including Haudenosaunee, Anishinaabeg, and others.
- Dominique Dixon - Metadata Librarian, Princeton University
- Tiffany Day - Metadata & Catalog Librarian/Asst. Professor, University of Memphis)
- Sasha Frizzell - Catalog/Metadata Management Librarian at Binghamton University, a white, queer, chronically ill person living on the ancestral lands of the Onondaga.)
- B. L. Hendrickson, MLS - Cataloging Librarian and Assistant Professor, Pittsburg State University (KS)

5.2.1.1. Additional Classification Contributors

Emily

5.2.2. Subject Headings Working Group

- Adrian Williams - Cataloging & Metadata Librarian at the University of Kentucky. Black, queer, non-binary person residing on unceded Shawnee and Eastern Band Cherokee land. Editorial board member of the Homosaurus.
- Rachel Newlin - Cataloging Librarian at the Schaumburg Township District Library. White queer person residing on the unceded and ancestral lands of the people of the Council of Three Fires: the Ojibwe, Odawa, and Bodéwadmiakiwe.
- Em Ricciardi - Cataloger and LGBTQ+ Subject Specialist at the Library Company of Philadelphia.
- Mara Caelin - Cataloging/Metadata Librarian at Yale University's Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library.
- Allison Bailund - Monographs Cataloging Coordinator at San Diego State University. Chair of the CSU Inclusive Description Task Force residing on unceded Kumeyaay land.
- Abby Springman - Special collections cataloger & Library Assistant at the University of Minnesota Twin Cities.
- Abby Dover - Linked Data Librarian at Northwestern University.
- Abbey Thompson - cis, white, queer, disabled, fat, and neurodivergent woman; Assistant Library Director, head of Access Services & Spaces at Mount St. Mary's University-Los Angeles (former special collections & music cataloger at multiple institutions)
- Jennifer Bradshaw - Cataloging/metadata librarian at the University of Iowa.

5.2.3. Names, Naming & Authorities Working Group

- Ellis Butler (@elliscatalogs) - transmasculine cataloger and metadata librarian at Amherst College.
- Bianca Bárcenas - Latina/x/o & white, queer Metadata Associate at The Barack Obama Foundation living on the land of the people of the Council of Three Fires: the Ojibwe, Odawa, and Bodéwadmiakiwe
- Garth Tardy - cis white gay; Special Collections Catalog Librarian at the University of Missouri-Kansas City

5.2.3.1 Additional Wikidata Contributors

- Crystal Yragui (cec23@uw.edu) - white, cisgendered metadata librarian at the University of Washington Libraries
- Arielle Rodriguez (ariellerodriguez@pugetsound.edu) - Latinx, cisgender humanities & interdisciplinary studies librarian at University of Puget Sound

5.2.4. Description Working Group

- Devon Murphy - artist & metadata analyst at the University of Texas at Austin, a white/nonbinary/chronically ill settler based in Shawnee land (Kentucky.) My knowledge and understandings come from this positionality as well as from my mentors in Texas and at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. My contributions to this project were not completed during work hours as a University of Texas at Austin employee.
- Keahi Adolpho - Processing Archivist at Virginia Commonwealth University Libraries. Mixed Kanaka Maoli (Native Hawaiian) and white, queer, and trans. Currently living on Powhatan lands. Editorial board member of the Homosaurus.
- Emma Beck - white, queer, metadata librarian.
- Alison Day - PhD student in Information Studies at Victoria University of Wellington, Te Herenga Waka, as well as a Research Assistant and Tutor. They live in Te Whanganui a Tara (Wellington) in Aotearoa New Zealand.
- Andréa Tarnawsky - poet, educator, and Digital and Outreach Archivist at Simon Fraser University Library Special Collections and Rare Books. They are a white, non-binary, queer, settler originally from amiskwaciywâskahikan (Edmonton, AB), now living and creating on unceded Sk̓wx̓wú7mesh Úxwumixw, x^wməθkwəy̓əm, and səłítwətał territories (Vancouver, BC).
(ORCID:0009-0004-0692-0462)
- Gideon Goodrich - Processing Archivist, specializing in inclusive description, at the University of Michigan, Bentley Historical Society. White, queer, and disabled, currently living on Odawa and Wyandot lands (Ann Arbor, MI).
(ORCID:0000-0003-4402-1818)
- Katy Rawdon - Coordinator of Technical Services for the Special Collections Research Center at Temple University. A romance writer and poet, and a white, queer person originally from Massachusetts land and a longtime settler on Lenape land.
- Em Ricciardi - Cataloger and LGBTQ+ Subject Specialist at the Library Company of Philadelphia.

Additional Contributors to QMDC Descriptions WG:

Taylor Diken, Nix Mendy, Stephanie Luke, Anna Marie Schuldt, Sydney Jordan, Jordi Padilla-Delgado

5.2.5. Document Structure & Ethical Recommendations Working Group

- B.M. Watson (@brimwats) - Doctoral Candidate at the University of British Columbia iSchool. White, queer, non-binary, crip/disabled settler originally from N'dakinna and currently living in Skwxwú7mesh, Səl 'ilwətaʔ, and xʷməθkʷəy̓ əm. Editorial board member of the Homosaurus, Archivist and Historian for the Haslam Polyamory Collection. Administration and email for QMDC and contributor to Names and Description WGs.

Additional Contributors to Document Structure & Ethical Recommendations WG:

- Elizabeth Uchimura, MSI, MM – Music Digital Services and Special Collections Librarian at the Warren D. Allen Music Library at Florida State University, Tallahassee, Florida. Mixed race, bisexual, agender, originally from Tampa, Florida. Research interests include critical cataloging and vernacular singing practices in the United States.
- R. Carpenter - Digital Scholarship Librarian at Binghamton University. White, non-binary.
- Tim Keller - Head of Discovery and Metadata at Oberlin College.

5.3. QMDC Reviewers

- St John Karp MSLIS; Assistant Librarian, Horological Society of New York
- Brandis Malone MLS, MA. Special Collections Cataloging Librarian, University of Tulsa McFarlin Library.
- Jeremy Berg MLIS. Cataloging Librarian, University of North Texas
- Holly Wheeler MLIS. Cataloging & Metadata Specialist, Mt. Hood Community College.
- Elizabeth Uchimura MSI, MM. Music Digital Services and Special Collections Librarian, Warren D. Allen Music Library, Florida State University
- D.F. Zulida MLIS; Senior Librarian, Business & Career Center, Brooklyn Public Library, Brooklyn, NY
- Caitlin Goodman; Archivist, Swarthmore College, Swarthmore PA
- Amy Mihelich MLIS. Systems & Discovery Librarian, Washington County Cooperative Library Services, Hillsboro, OR

5.4. Glossary of Terms

- AACR2 (Anglo-American Cataloguing Rules 2nd edition): the cataloguing standard by which cataloguers provided bibliographic description for library catalogues and other bibliographic tools until the formal introduction and widespread adoption of RDA in 2013. AACR2 is still in use by some libraries.
- Cataloguing: Within the context of libraries and archives, the creation and revision of bibliographic metadata of library materials such as monographs, video recordings, archival collections, etc., within a bibliographic tool in order to connect library users with that material.

- Controlled vocabulary: An organised index of standardised terms. Controlled vocabularies are often used in GLAMS metadata. Library of Congress Subject Headings (LCSH) is an example of controlled vocabulary.
- Creator: A person or group responsible for the content in a resource, e.g. author, choreographer.
- DACS: Describing Archives: A Content Standard: DACS provides rules for description of archival materials that can be output in any format (including MARC and EAD). It includes a section for archival records and one for archival authorities. The standard is maintained by the Society of American Archivists Standards Committee's Technical Subcommittee for Describing Archives: A Content Standard.
- DDC (Dewey Decimal Classification): a library classification system first published in the United States by Melvil Dewey in 1876, currently owned and maintained by OCLC. It organizes library materials by discipline or field of study using 10 class numbers (100-900), and is used in more than 140 countries worldwide.
- Finding aid: a document containing detailed information about a specific collection of papers or records within an archives, including a description of the scope and content of the materials, their arrangement, and other metadata to help researchers locate material relevant to their work.
- GLAMS sector: An acronym for the types of cultural institutions that provide access to information. The acronym stands for "galleries, libraries, archives, museums, and special collections."
- Library of Congress (LC): the main research arm of the U.S. Congress and the home of the U.S. Copyright Office, it is also the library which maintains and revises LCC, LCSH, and the other LC vocabularies. It is de facto (but not officially) the national library of the United States.
- Library of Congress Classification (LCC): the classification system developed in the late nineteenth century to organise and arrange the Library of Congress' physical collections; LCC is ubiquitous to most academic libraries in the United States, but is also used widely across the world.
- Library of Congress Subject Headings (LCSH): The subject indexing language developed by the Library of Congress to organise and describe their physical collections; now used widely by GLAMS institutions across the world to describe and organise their materials.

- Linked Data: structured data which is interlinked with other data so it can be read and queried by computers.
- Metadata: Broadly, data about data. In the GLAMS context, data that describes the primary resources that the institution collects and/or provides virtual access to. Metadata is found in bibliographic records, finding aids, etc. It may be created with reference to standards and controlled vocabularies or in a more locally defined manner. Metadata is used to help users find what they're looking for and for institutions to keep track of what they have.
- Metadata worker / Knowledge worker: A person who creates and maintains descriptive, administrative, and/or structural metadata within the GLAMS sector. Individuals may be employed professionals with degrees, technicians, or they may be volunteers at a community institution.
- Name Authority Cooperative Program (NACO): the cooperative project established by the Library of Congress where participating institutions contribute authority records for agents, places, works, and expressions to the LC/NACO Authority File.
- MORGAI (pronounced "more-gay"; IPA: /mɔɪ'geɪ/): An acronym for Marginalized Orientations, Relationships, Gender identities, Asexualities/Aromanticisms, and/or those who are Intersex. MORGAI is inclusive of LGBTQIA2S+ and other "alphabet soup" type acronyms like QUILTBAG.
- WEB3CH2A2MS (pronounced 'web-cham"; IPA: /wɛb'ʃæm/): an acronym originating from cataloguing literature meaning: White, ethnically European, Bourgeois, Christian, Cisgender, Citizen, Heterosexual, Able-bodied, Allosexual, Monogamous, Men Settlers, as a way of naming the universal, default, and assumed (yet unspoken) centre of cataloguing, classification, and description systems and practices.
- Program for Cooperative Cataloging (PCC): an international cooperative effort aimed at expanding access to library collections by providing useful, timely, and cost- effective cataloguing that meets mutually-accepted standards of libraries around the world. The PCC has four main programs that coordinate authority and bibliographic record creation. It also includes committees and task groups that consider a broad spectrum of cataloguing issues.

- Resource Description and Access (RDA): the cataloguing standard currently used in most libraries for the bibliographic description. In comparison to AACR2, RDA is more flexible and more suitable for use in today's digital landscape.
- Resource: anything for which metadata is assigned in a GLAMS context. Examples include: books, audiovisual materials, archival collections, artifacts, etc.
- Subject headings: A term or phrase used to find and organise resources on a particular topic or range of topics.
- Trans and gender diverse resources: Fiction or non-fiction about trans and gender diverse people, resources about topics related to trans and gender diverse experience or gender identity, resources about gender that are inclusive of trans and gender diverse identities and experiences.
- Universal Decimal Classification (UDC): a bibliographic and library classification system derived from the Dewey Decimal Classification, designed to cover all fields of knowledge using a system of auxiliary signs and symbols to indicate various special aspects of a subject and relationships between subjects.

6.3. Examples, Models & Tutorials

6.3.1. Harmful Metadata Statement Examples

Violet Fox's Cataloging Lab includes a non-exhaustive list of statements on bias in library and archives description, which includes a wide range of institutions including archives, academic libraries, museums, and public libraries. Here are some examples from QMDC contributors' institutions:

This example from the NC Digital Heritage Center contains a harmful materials statement at the item level, with specifics on the kind of sensitive imagery contained within.

Another example, from the Portal to Texas History, employs a harmful materials statement with instructions on how to report graphic content. Each collection record includes a prompt for feedback.

6.3.2. Updating and Correction of Wikidata Items

6.3.2.1. Updating Existing Wikidata Items

To update existing items for people found in Wikidata use the following steps.

- In the search menu at the top right of the page search for the name you want to edit. Search the person's name as it would appear in a sentence e.g. "Billy Porter" to find the actor's entry (Figure 2).

Figure 3 Alt Text: Image shows the Wikidata item for Billy Porter. Circled in yellow, is the edit link, which allows you to make changes to a person’s name, alternative names, or description. The “Edit” link is located at the upper right of the Wikidata item entry

- The “Label” box contains the main or preferred form of the person’s name in addition to other forms (“Also known as”) and a basic description of the person, and you can place the cursor in the field to make desired changes. You can also change the description and “Also known as” fields in the same way to add or alter the description or alternative forms of the person’s name
- To edit more than the first couple of languages, you can click the “All entered languages” button at the bottom of the Label box
- When you are finished making your changes, click the “publish” button to save your work. Your changes will appear in the Wikidata item immediately (Figure 4)

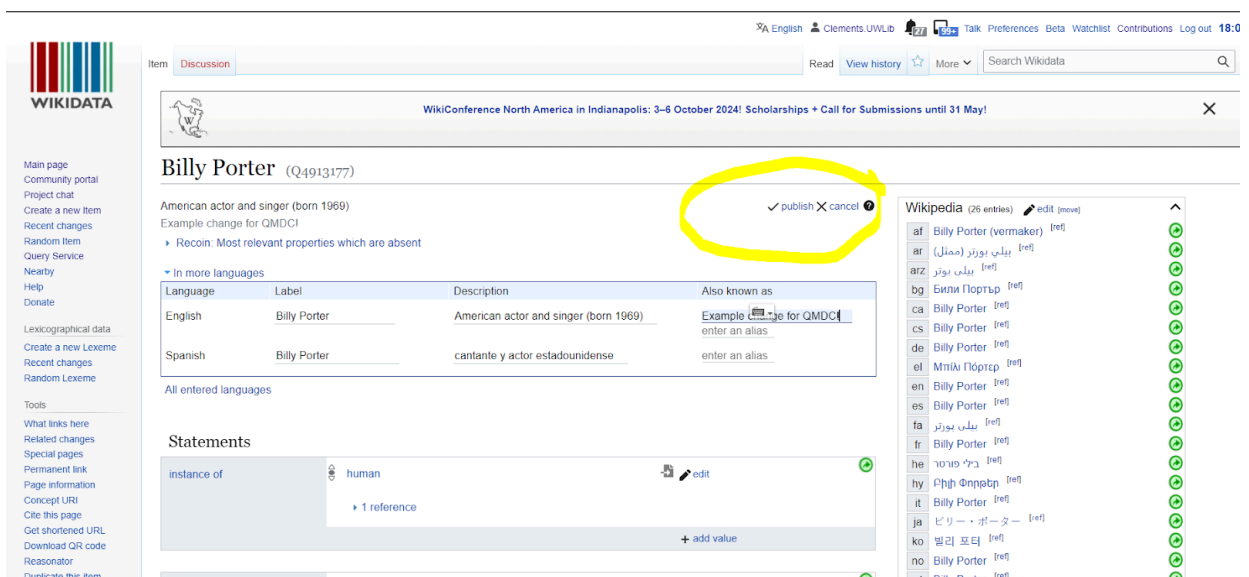

Figure 4: Alt Text: After you have edited the Wikidata item's label, description, and/or "Also known as" sections, you can click publish, on the upper right, to publish your changes.

- Outside of the box containing the labels and descriptions for the item in each language, the Wikidata item consists of a series of statements and identifiers created by adding Wikidata properties via the “add statement” button at the bottom right of each item (Figure 5).

- Statements about a person may include personal demographic information or information that may violate privacy,⁷⁷ such as sex or gender (P21), personal pronoun (P6553), sexual orientation (P91), birth name (P1477) (which may contain a person’s former name), and other characteristics. Statements may be edited by clicking the “Edit” link with a pencil icon in the top right corner of each statement box

⁷⁷ https://www.wikidata.org/wiki/Wikidata:Living_people#Statements_that_may_violate_privacy

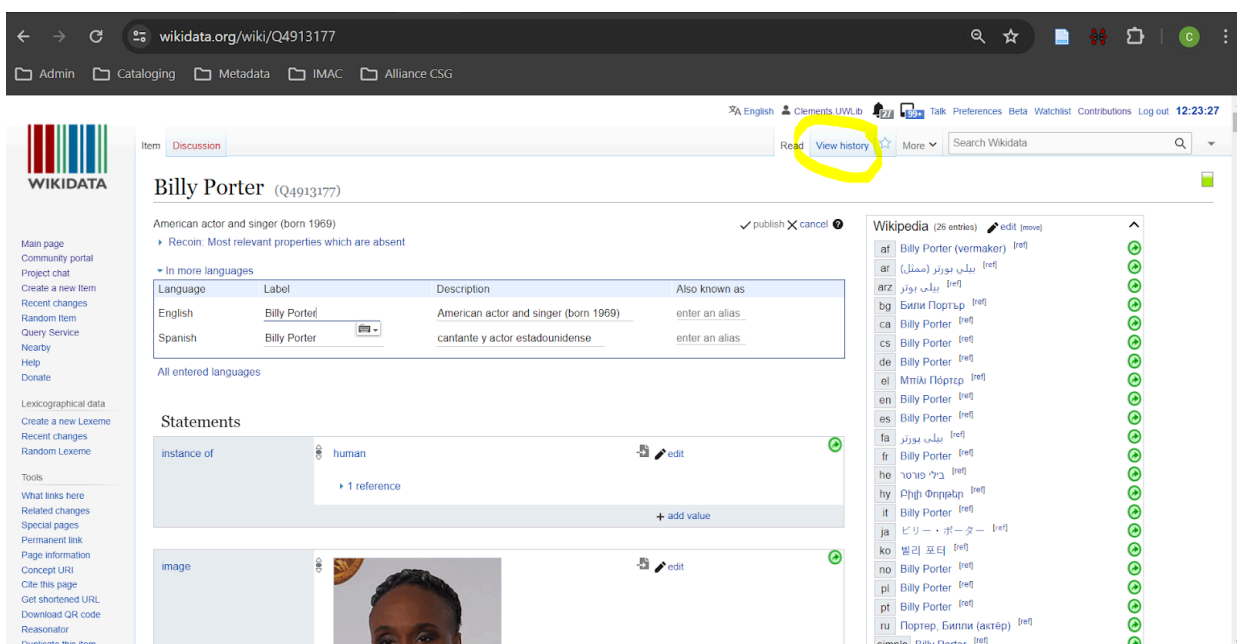

- New values may be added to existing statements by clicking “+Add value.”
- You may insert references justifying your choice of entry by clicking “+Add reference.” While all statements should generally include references, some properties will display a (!) icon to indicate a “citation-needed constraint” that a reference needs to be added.
- Values for statements may be qualified by clicking the “Edit” button in the statement box, then clicking “+add qualifier” and adding an appropriate property and value. Wikidata will display an error message upon publishing changes if you have chosen a qualifier that is not allowed for a given property.
- More advanced users may also create bots or use batch editing tools to create many statements in Wikidata at one time. Bots creating statements about living people must adhere to a few restrictions outlined in the Wikidata Policy for Living People.⁷⁸

The three primary options are:

Option 1: Talk it out.

- When you see a piece of harmful or incorrect information, find where it came from by exploring the item history (Figure 6 and 7).

⁷⁸ https://www.wikidata.org/wiki/Wikidata:Living_people#Bot_interaction_with_items_for_living_people

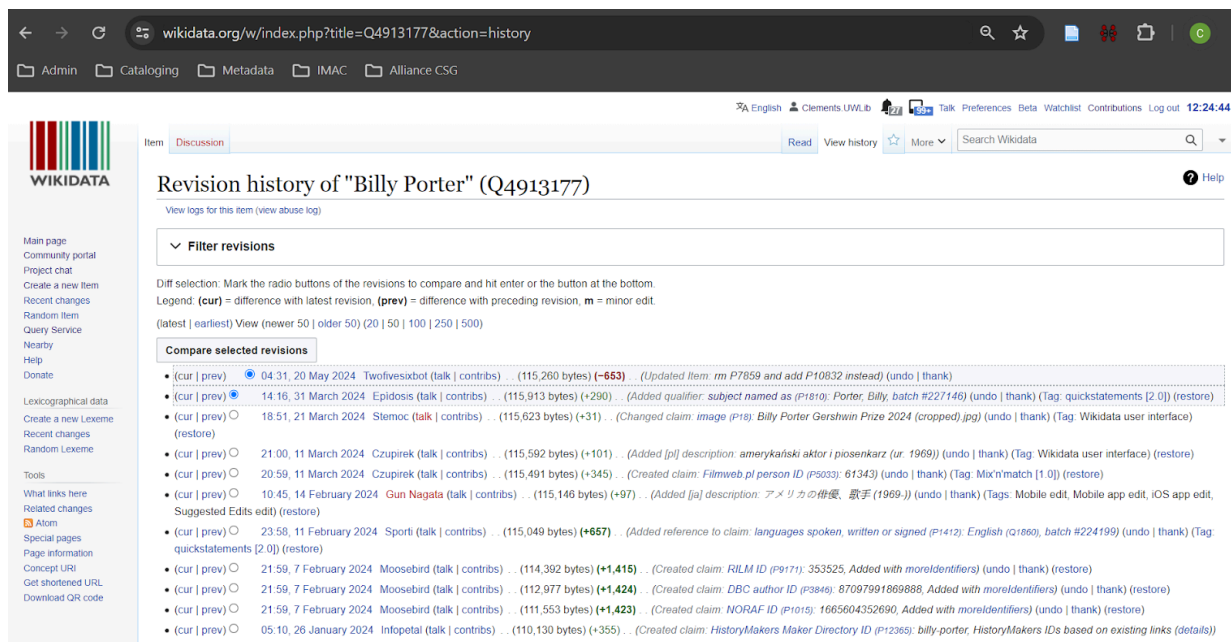

Figure 7: Alt-Text: a screenshot of the revision history for Billy Porter's page. Each revision has its own row on the screen including a time stamp and the name of the user who made the edit, click on the user name to go to their page

- Once you find the edit that caused the problem, find the link to the user's talk page and click on it (Figure 8).
 - There, you can choose to "Edit" or "Add topic". This random example is a good example of how to use Wikidata markdown to converse about an edit (click the "edit" button to check out the markdown, and then cancel your edit session when you are finished to leave the conversation unchanged). Kindly but firmly describe to the person who made the edit how their edit was harmful and that you are removing/changing it, and then do so.

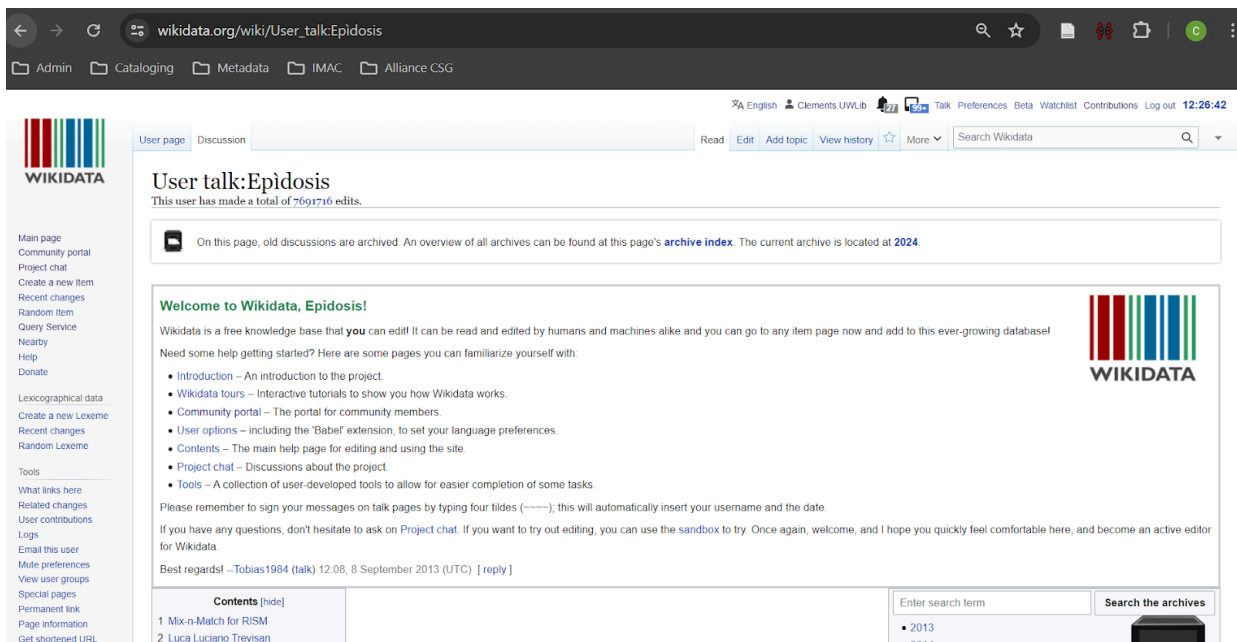

Figure 8: Alt-Text: on that user's page select either the 'edit' or 'add topic' tab to leave a message or comment for that user that communicates why their edit was harmful and that you are changing it. Comments should be kind, but firm.

1. Replace the false or harmful information with correct information when possible.
 - For example, if someone's sex or gender is not publicly known, you can enter "undisclosed gender" as the value or click the stack of three rectangles to the left of the empty value box next to the property, select "unknown value", save, and save again when Wikidata asks if you are sure (Figure 9).

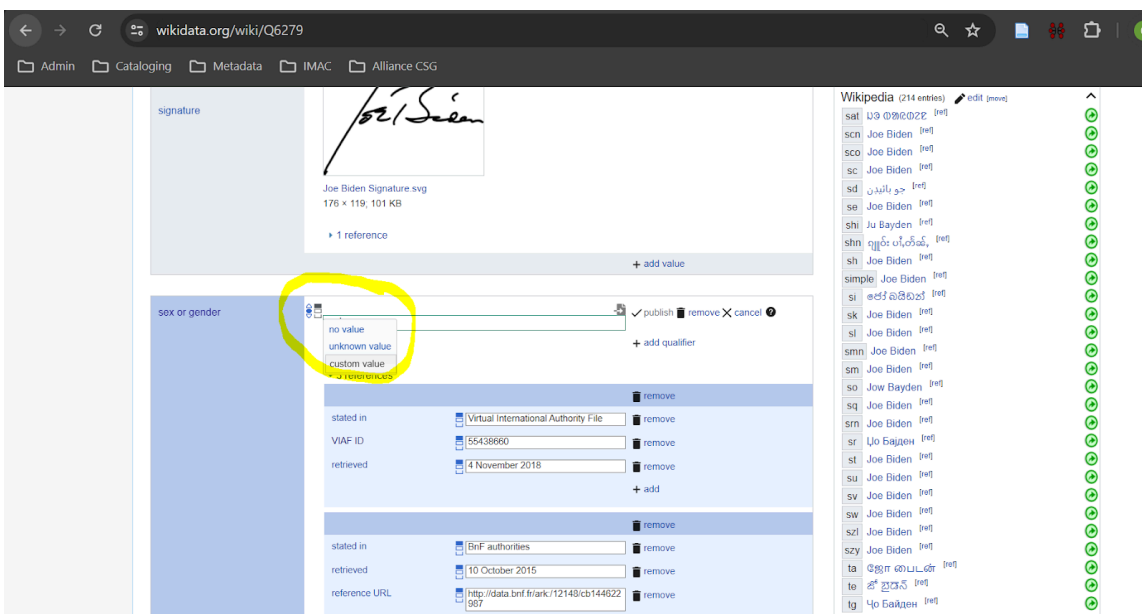

Figure 9: Alt-Text: A screenshot of an edit in progress. The location of the three rectangles is circled in yellow.

2. Edit wars are not encouraged, and getting into arguments can suck your soul out of your eyeballs. If someone changes something back or is confrontational, start a conversation in the Project chat and alert your friends in the above groups. You can also add it to the Collection of discussions list on the WikiProjectLGBT/gender page.
 - “Most of the participants, after working to change or update a property or focus on policy for how to describe living people, at some point, decided to move on and not attempt to change it. Only a few participants continue in the effort to evolve the WD ontology as humanity evolves.”⁷⁹

Option 1 is the most emotionally taxing and time-consuming approach, but also the most effective.

6.3.2.3. Additional Wikidata Considerations for GLAMS Metadata Workers

References:

A major philosophical difference between the Wiki community and GLAMS metadata is Wikidata’s policy of needing a "source" but individual themselves is not considered a source. If references are used or required, the things which constitute an acceptable reference must be verifiable. They must be “trustworthy, up-to-date, and free of bias”⁸⁰ and can include:

- books, academic, scientific, and industry-specific publications, news sources, policy and legislation, and media;
- webpages may be used, especially if they are published by government agencies, companies, or organisations.

However, self-published sources should never be used as references for other living people. Self-publications may be used as a reference if a person is writing about themselves, but the reference needs to meet some other verifiability and notability criteria.

According to Wikidata’s Notability Criteria, a Wikidata item needs to fulfil at least one of the two goals of Wikidata:

- Centralise interlanguage links across Wikimedia projects, or
- Serve as a general knowledge base for the world at large

⁷⁹ See Summary of findings on Knowledge Equity in Linked Open Data, submitted to Wikimedia Deutschland

⁸⁰ https://www.wikidata.org/wiki/Wikidata:Verifiability#Authoritative_sources

It also needs to meet one of the three criteria:

- Contain at least one valid sitelink to another Wikimedia project,
- Refer to an instance of a clearly identifiable conceptual or material entity that can be described using authoritative and publicly available references,
- Fulfils a structural need such as making statements in other items more useful.

Wikidata and Wikipedia have some policies which also address these issues. English Wikipedia's Policy on biographies of living people states:

“Biographies of living persons (“BLPs”) must be written conservatively and with regard for the subject’s privacy. Wikipedia is an encyclopedia, not a tabloid: it is not Wikipedia’s job to be sensationalist, or to be the primary vehicle for the spread of titillating claims about people’s lives; the possibility of harm to living subjects must always be considered when exercising editorial judgment.”

Wikidata's Living People Page begins with:

“As we value the dignity of living people, the information that we store about them deserves special consideration. Instead of striving to provide all possible information about living people we strive to provide only information in whose veracity we have a high confidence and which doesn’t violate a person’s reasonable expectations of privacy. Statements that can reasonably be expected to be challenged should be supported by a reliable source. When exercising editorial judgement we should always consider the possibility of harm to living people.”

The policy is meant to cover any and all harms that might come to living persons from being described in Wikidata, and the issues described above are not specifically addressed. It appears to those who believe that deadnaming violates a person’s reasonable expectations of privacy, and who believe that misgendering in cisnormative ways generates inequitable harms to queer communities, that current widespread practices in Wikidata are in violation of the Living People policy.

However, Wikidata policies are created and enforced using a difficult-to-define version of consensus and encourages the use of the Project chat to hash out differences. This framework represents a significant hurdle for marginalised voices to be heard and respected, because Wikidata has no shortage of bigoted editors or contributors:

“There have been and continue to be many attempts to address the issues with Property 21 [sex and gender]. The minoritized group has strong feelings about it with good reason, but the decision making process around it is made by the majority so the people most affected by decisions, or lack of decision making, are overridden” - Participant⁸¹

Because consensus is required for decision making in the WD community, prevailing power structures remain in place. Sometimes when a large majority of participants in a discussion agree to make a change, one person can disagree, and then the decision is never made.⁸²

“The idea of consensus is unclear. Once having disagreement - and not finding complete consensus - there is no referee - it is space for a bully to win.” - Participant⁸³

The issue of Property 21 is a prime example of this. For years, there have been, and continue to be, numerous discussions about and proposals to change Property 21 to more accurately describe people in WD. No change has been able to be made. A complicating factor about Property 21 is that it is required for describing an “instance of” a human being. A warning error is thrown if a WD item is being created and this identifier is not added. This furthers the problem by making it required to, in some cases, misidentify an instance of a human being contributed to WD, because the person contributing the property does not know the status of the person being described and guesses. The status quo can remain in place with a lack of ability for equitable decision making about properties like Property 21.⁸⁴

Wikimedia Foundation Governance Wiki is outdated, but points to an up-to-date Human Rights Policy which expressly includes “LGBTQ+ communities” in its scope but does not address any specific protections against specific harms. The Wikimedia Foundation has a Resolution on Living People which also does not protect against the specific harms that are being done in Wikidata.

6.3.3. Identification of “romantic friendships,” “inseparable friends or companions,” “bosom friends,” “life friends,” and same-sex relationships

⁸¹ See Summary of findings on Knowledge Equity in Linked Open Data, submitted to Wikimedia Deutschland

⁸² Ibid.

⁸³ Ibid.

⁸⁴ See Summary of findings on Knowledge Equity in Linked Open Data, submitted to Wikimedia Deutschland

In A Practical Guide to Searching LGBTQIA Historical Records, Norena Shopland offers a guide to common indicators to help identify same-sex relationships, which we reproduce here for use of metadata workers.

There are common indicators which can be applied to identify same-sex relationships:

- Same-sex couples wanted to spend more time together than romantic friends did, sometimes to the point of obsession. Queen Anne (1665–1714), before she came to the throne, could hardly bear to let Sarah Churchill, Duchess of Marlborough (1660–1744), out of her sight.
- Excessive letter writing is a clue, particularly if the letters were subsequently destroyed.
- One of the familiar themes in same-sex couples is the desire to live together. While romantic friends, or the other variant terms, may express a vague desire to live together, they rarely make or carry out plans. The Ladies of Llangollen ran away together because they wanted to live together, not because they were fleeing from forced marriages, as is often claimed...Many single women did live together in companionship, but without their diaries or letters it is impossible to know the true nature of the relationship.
- In the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, women often lived together in ‘cottage ornées’, decorated or stylised ‘cottages’ inspired by the Romantic Movement, which represented a move away from formal, heavy architecture to a more ‘natural’ way of living. They were built mainly by the wealthy, even royalty, as retreats or additions to their estates. The term was coined to distinguish structures that turned a labourer’s cottage into aesthetic artefact, and the cottage ornée was seen as a pure, back-to-nature way of living where children could be brought up in a heterosexual and wholesome environment. However, by the early nineteenth century, the cottage ornée was also being utilised by women living together...As more women moved into them, the term began to fall out of favour.
- Excessive gift giving is another indicator of same-sex couples, as opposed to romantic friendships. Whilst romantic friends did give gifts, they tended not to be as frequent as those exchanged by couples and would often be accompanied by letters explaining the significance of the gift to their relationship.
- ‘Couple speak’ is a good indicator of same-sex relationships. Samesex couples describe themselves as ‘we’, ‘our’ or ‘us’, whereas romantic friends rarely do. Frances Power Cobbe peppered her own writings with ‘our house’, ‘our garden’, ‘we’ and other joint terminology about her partner Mary Lloyd: ‘We gave afternoon tea to our friends under the limes ... We often had ... as many as fifty or sixty guests. In short, I had once more a home, and a most happy one; and my lonely wanderings were over.’

- Friends would write inclusively to couples. For example, letters to Frances Power Cobbe would be addressed to ‘you and Miss Lloyd’. In various letters to John Gibson (1790–1866), writers asked him to pass on their ‘kindest regards’ to Penry Williams (1802–1885), and another asked to be remembered to Penry.
- Writings by friends should also be examined, as many individuals and couples were friends with other same-sex couples. Frances Power Cobbe and Mary Lloyd were part of a large group of friends that included Charlotte Cushman (1816–1876) and her various ‘wives’ as well as John Gibson and Penry Williams. Other people may have written about the couple, referred to them living or travelling together, or just gossiped about them.
- A significant inheritance left to someone who shared an individual’s life may also be an indicator. While romantic friends often left bequests to each other, these rarely involved leaving an entire estate, as John Gibson did for his partner Penry Williams.
- Partners in same-sex couples may have left instructions to destroy material. For example, Mary Lloyd told her partner, Frances Power Cobbe, to destroy all of her written material. Frances did so. Posterity only has Frances’s voice and silence from Mary.

Singly, the[se] criteria cannot be used to evaluate a relationship. However, by combining several, it is easier to raise the possibility and probability that individuals were in a same-sex relationship.⁸⁵

6.3.4. “Case” Studies/Examples

This section offers a “laundry list” style of examples or case studies which QMDC members or reviewers found interesting but there was convenient place to include in the text of our document.

6.3.4.1. The Five Colleges of Ohio: “Flagging”

The Five Colleges of Ohio, a consortium of private liberal colleges and universities consisting of Denison University, Kenyon College, Oberlin College, Ohio Wesleyan College, and the College of Wooster began conversations and planning around dealing with problematic metadata during a 2019 Collection Services Subcommittee meeting. With the Change the Subject documentary and its subsequent efforts, we discussed several examples of additional problematic subject terms, typically those dealing with racist or homophobic terms and acknowledged that subject headings can be difficult for researchers to navigate. Many researchers may use outdated or offensive terms in their desire to be comprehensive in their search, even when they understood the harm inherent in the use of these terms. Our subcommittee discussed the challenges of changing subject headings locally, striving to strike the balance between removing these terms from the catalog and retaining the terms to ensure retrieval of information when an outdated or offensive term is present.

Inspired in part by the actions of Twitter on President Donald Trump’s tweets in late 2020, where Twitter assigned labels to tweets that included misinformation, warning of false, misleading, or disputed information, we considered a similar approach for acknowledging problematic subject headings and fostering a habit of critical evaluation of online information. Through a flagging system, we believe there is an opportunity to invite patrons into a dialogue about the role of subject headings, the biases and problems they reflect, and continued discussion about inclusive language.

Since there is a lack of an authoritative list of problematic, vague, or harmful terms, we discussed developing and maintaining a local list of terms, but instead of reinventing the wheel, started our terms list with the list found on the community-driven initiative The Cataloging Lab. Using this list, we proposed this resources to the Director of Consortial Library System, Ben Daigle, who developed a lightweight script for Innovative Interfaces (III) Sierra WebPac, our public library interface. The script checks for the presences of each heading in the list of known problematic terms and if a match occurs, displays a red flag next to the subject heading. When a patron clicks the flag for more information, they see a panel signifying that the term is recognized as problematic and gives a brief description of the purpose of subject headings and how changes are made in a “learn more” link. The link to “learn more” leads to a page that is framed as a set of questions and answers. We view this page as a resource for providing more context about the kinds of biases that exist in our library systems, how these issues arose in the first place, and processes for changing them. This resource is framed as a pedagogical springboard for discussions with students, colleagues, and campus partners about systemic bias in a system which is conventionally considered neutral, and it offers a concrete example of how authority of information is constructed and fluid, particularly as a more diverse set of voices lend their perspectives and knowledge to those constructs.

6.4.1.4. Problematic Medical Subject Headings \(MeSH\)

6.4.1.5. Selected Queer LCSH

6.4.1.6. LCSH That Should Exist \(That Currently Do Not\)

6.4.1.1. Problematic LC Subject Headings (LCSH)

- Androgyny \(Psychology\): The parenthetical on this limits its typical usage and should be replaced with terms such as “Androgynous people.”
- Bisexual men--Relations with women
- Bisexuals’/Gays’/Lesbians’/Transsexuals’ writings (and other variants): There is not a subject headings for heterosexuals’ writings, establishing it as a default and LGBTQ+ writings as the exception from the norm; also often used in cases where the story may have LGBTQ+ characters yet the author’s identity is not known.

- Coming out \(Sexual orientation\): The current scope note only covers homosexuality; it needs an updated scope note to include more sexualities and gender identities along with the social context of coming out.
- Gay men--Relations with heterosexual women: Focuses only on heterosexual relationships with individuals of other sexualities. Narrower term “Man-woman” further normalises cis identities.
- Gay men--Relations with lesbians: Focuses only on relations with one identity; narrower term “Man-woman” further normalises cis identities.
- Gay pride celebrations: All the pride celebration/parade terms start with “Gay pride.” While there are probably specifically gay pride events, it’s more common for it to be a general non-hetero pride.
- Gays: Reductive term; preferable to use Gay people. While LC revised this in November 2023, it was a long-existing heading and libraries should check that the change is reflected in their local catalogues.
- Gender identity disorders: Outdated psychological term that treats transness or gender nonconformity as a medical disorder. Not all transgender or gender diverse people experience gender dysphoria and the term was removed from the DSM by the American Psychiatric Association in 2013.
- Gender nonconformity: The scope note of this term is problematic in that it emphasises behaviours or manifestations (i.e. cross-dressing, transsexualism, male or female impersonation) that express gender nonconformity rather than describing the identity itself and internal experiences of gender nonconformity. In describing gender nonconformity in only this way, it reduces nonconforming gender experiences to what can be physically seen or experienced.
- Gender-nonconforming people: Cataloging Lab Problem LCSH comments: “Gender-nonconformity depicts a bias that believes in the adherence to gender stereotypes of a binary gender system.”
- Husband and wife: From Cataloging Lab Problem LCSH comments “LCSH redirects “Spouses--legal status, laws, etc.” to “Husband and wife”, which has a scope note that excludes same-sex spousal pairs.”
- Man-woman relationships: Hetero- and cis-normative.
 - Man-woman relationships is the default subject heading to describe the coupling dynamic in romance novels. This practice has proliferated this heading in romance novels and had an adverse impact on romance novels that include mixed or queer orientation-couplings. The binary language places prime importance on the gender of the pairing, instead of the nature of their coupling. This heading flattens the reality of queer folks, inserting binary gender labels into what may be a relationship between queer/gender-diverse folks. While the recent inclusion of Man-man relationships and Woman-woman relationships introduces options for some queer folks, the continued focus on gender binaries continues to limit the ways that queer couplings can be defined and pointed towards.

- Outing \(Sexual orientation\) Needs an updated scope note to include more sexualities and gender identities along with the social contexts of outing.
- Relations with heterosexuals
 - Bisexuals--Relations with heterosexuals: Focuses on heterosexual relationships with individuals of other sexualities whereas there is only one heading for queer interactions with other queer folks.
 - Gay men--Relations with heterosexuals: Focuses only on heterosexual relationships with individuals of other sexualities. Narrower term “Man-woman” further normalises cis identities.
 - Lesbians--Relations with heterosexuals: Focuses only on heterosexual relationships with individuals of other sexualities. Narrower term “Man-woman” further normalises cis identities.
- Sexual minorities: Cataloging Lab Problem LCSH comments “The authorized heading does not reflect predominant usage of how LGBTQ people are referred to. The authority also has the UF Gender minorities, which deserves its own heading and is in fact a separate term in LCDGT.”
- Sexual reorientation programs: Cataloging Lab Problem LCSH comments “Authorized form is sanitized and not most commonly used form”. The scope note is similarly sanitised.
- Unmarried couples: Includes the RT “Free love.” This related term should be removed as there are many reasons why a couple might be unmarried.

6.4.1.2. Problematic LC Demographic Group Terms (LCDGT)

- Aromantic people: Should have BT Sexual minorities as well as RT Asexual people.
- Bisexuals: Reductive term; preferable to use “Bisexual people.”
- Femmes \(Lesbian culture\): Should also be a heading for Femme as gender identity.
- Parents of gays: A holdover from the use of Gays as a broad term, which conflates gay people with the larger LGBTQ+ identity. Should be revised to align with this year’s revisions if it hasn’t already.
- Sexual minorities: NTs do not include lesbians.

6.4.1.3. Problematic LC Children's and Young Adults' Cataloging Program (CYAC) Headings

- Gay Pride Day: All the pride celebration/parade terms start with “Gay pride.” While there are probably specifically gay pride events, it’s more common for it to be a general non-hetero pride.
- Gay pride parades
- Gender nonconformity: Shares the same problematic scope note as the LCSH. Centres cisnormativity as something to conform to.

6.4.1.4. Problematic Medical Subject Headings (MeSH)

- Sex Reassignment Procedures: Preferred term in common use is “Gender Confirmation Surgery”.

6.4.1.5. Selected Queer LCSH
