Preface

This edition began life in 2002 when Malcolm Godden and Rohini Jayatilaka started work on an edition of the Old English version of the De Consolatione Philosophiae with Susan Irvine, and began collecting evidence in manuscripts from across Europe of early glosses which might have contributed to the Old English version, a possibility that had been canvassed and discussed at that point for nearly a century. Having completed that edition, published in 2009, they had by then collected a substantial body of material from glossed manuscripts up to the year 1100, though it was still a long way from a complete collection. Together with Rosalind Love they then embarked on the present edition, with the plan to produce a complete edition of all glosses to the DCP up to the year 1100. (The cut-off date was initially chosen because of its relevance to the Old English version, but in practice it made sense in its own terms, since to cover all medieval glossing would have been an impossible task and the nature and content of glossing changed considerably from the twelfth century.)

The task has taken considerably longer than anticipated, thanks in part to the problems of researching the complex history of some 83 early manuscripts (some identified at a late stage in the project), finding ways to record the many different forms in which glosses were transmitted, and the challenges of early medieval German and Greek glossing. In the early stages we were heavily dependent on microfilms of the relevant manuscripts, supplemented by visits to the relevant libraries, but as the project developed we were increasingly helped by the online publication of high-quality digitised images of our manuscripts, starting with those from Swiss libraries (e-codices Virtual Manuscript Library of Switzerland), and the willingness of libraries to allow us to order such images or occasionally make our own. For this we express our immense gratitude. We have also been very grateful for the many resources made available online by the BStK project (Datenbank der althochdeutschen und altsächsischen Glossenhandschriften).

What we hope to offer here is a rich record of the responses of early medieval scholars and readers to a crucial but challenging text, as they grappled with the classical allusions, astronomical references, philosophical arguments citing Plato and Aristotle and multiple types of classical verse. Our intention has been to provide an edited corpus of all the many different glosses (totalling about 90,000) which were entered by countless different annotators working in many different places over a period of about 250 years. Except in a few instances where the surviving versions of a gloss make no sense, we have not attempted to reconstruct a hypothetical original form of a gloss, still less of a hypothetical original set of glosses, or to improve on what our manuscripts record; nor do we try to replace what the glossators wrote with what they perhaps ought to have written. Our concern throughout has been to provide a record of what readers of Boethius in the early centuries were likely to find in their copies of his work, and perhaps to use in their teaching or writings.

Our original expectation was that this edition would be published by Brepols in their Corpus Christianorum series, and much of the style and formatting, including new manuscript sigla and abbreviations, reflects their conventions and requirements. In the event Brepols were unwilling to publish the completed edition in the form that we had chosen, but we have for the most part retained the styling rather than change to anything else so late in the day. In preparing the edition we have used the extremely helpful Classical Text Editor program developed by Stefan Hagel, and are very grateful for his help in resolving our occasional queries.

Our principal debt is to the Leverhulme Trust, which generously funded the project for 2007-12, allowing us to examine the relevant manuscripts in numerous libraries throughout Europe, to employ a full-time senior research fellow (RJ) and to facilitate research leave for RL. Secondly, we are grateful to our universities, Oxford and Cambridge, and especially our departments, the English Faculty at Oxford and the Department of Anglo-Saxon, Norse and Celtic at Cambridge, for supporting our research and giving us all the resources and facilities we needed, and for the help of the English and History Faculty Libraries in Oxford. Beyond that we owe a great deal to the staff of the numerous libraries that allowed us to visit, sometimes repeatedly, to consult their manuscripts, and gave generously of their time and knowledge: in Austria, St Florian, Stiftsbibliothek; Vienna, Österreichische Nationalbibliothek; in Belgium, Antwerp, Museum Plantin-Moretus; in France, Laon, Bibliothèque municipale; Orléans, Bibliothèque municipale; Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France; Tours, Bibliothèque municipale; Valenciennes, Bibliothèque municipale; in Germany, Bamberg, Staatsbibliothek; Gotha, Forschungsbibliothek; Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek; Seligenstadt, Prälatur (Landschaftsmuseum); Trier, Stadtbibliothek; in Great Britain, Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, Trinity College and the University Library; London, British Library; Oxford, Bodleian Library and Merton College Library; in Italy, Firenze, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana; Milano, Biblioteca Ambrosiana; Naples, Biblioteca Nazionale; Vatican City, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana; in Poland, Kraków, Biblioteka Jagiellońska; in Spain, El Escorial, Real Biblioteca; in Sweden, Stockholm, Kungliga Biblioteket; in Switzerland, Bern, Burgerbibliothek; Einsiedeln, Stiftsbibliothek; St Gallen, Stiftsbibliothek; in USA, Washington D.C., Library of Congress. We also gratefully acknowledge the help of librarians at libraries which we were unable to visit: Alençon, Bibliothèque municipale; Attendorn, Kreisheimatmuseum; Berlin, Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin – Preussischer Kulturbesitz.

Preface

Among countless other individual scholars who gave of their time and knowledge we would like to mention especially Sam Barrett, Thomas Flamagne, Hannah Matis, Steve McCluskey, Pádraic Moran, Andreas Nievergelt, Sinead O’Sullivan, Richard Ovenden, Adrian Papahagi, Marina Passalacqua, Winfried Rudolf, Petrus Tax, Mariken Teeuwen, Paolo Vaciago, Joseph Wittig. And special thanks are due to Birgit Ebersperger, for endless help with the Bischoff papers and for helping us locate the Seligenstadt fragment; Susan Irvine, for her constant support throughout the entire project and reading and commenting on an early draft of the preliminaries; and Francis Leneghan, especially for guiding us through the intricacies of depositing this work in the Oxford Research Archive and communicating its presence there.

The Development of the Glosses

The DCP was probably written around 525 but the earliest convincing indication of its existence is a passage in Alcuin's De Vera Philosophia from about 780 which seems to paraphrase part of 1p1, though without mentioning Boethius.¹ The earliest manuscript evidence may well be a selection of the metres in a Paris manuscript from early in the ninth century,² but there are no glosses in that manuscript, or in the ten or more later manuscripts from our period containing selections from the metres, though some of them do have neumes to facilitate singing or chanting. The earliest full manuscripts of the DCP date from the first third of the ninth century (Fa from Fulda, On and Vb from the Loire valley). The earliest instance of glossing is probably that in Fa at Fulda in the 830s or so, long attributed (though mistakenly so) to Lupus of Ferrières. It has a sprinkling of entries, about thirty-two, providing mainly interlinear Latin interpretations of the Greek quotations and some marginal summaries of the argument in a few places. A few later manuscripts reproduce that early stage, with a similar sprinkling of entries of the same type (Mn Pa Pe). But traces of more substantial glossing are evident by the middle of the ninth century, in the fragment Mr, and by the end of the ninth century we find manuscripts with enormous numbers of glosses, some 3,000 to 5,000, including both short interlinear glosses, often explanations of single words, and long marginal comments discussing the argument or explaining allusions, and this practice of heavy glossing continues and extends through the tenth and eleventh centuries at many centres in northern Europe, with over 10,000 glosses in some manuscripts. The main early examples, from the end of the ninth century, show a wide geographical range, with Na from St Gall, Af and Vc from France, and Vb probably glossed mainly in Cornwall. There is some degree of overlap in the glosses of Na, Af/Vc and Vb, but on the whole they are independent of each other, and presumably reflect some common inspiration or requirement related to education and study rather than deriving from a single original. All four though are probably drawing on earlier glossed copies rather than being themselves the originals, though each may contain a proportion of new glosses. Na was evidently copied from a glossed manuscript since its text has some glosses mistakenly embedded in it, and there are occasional copying errors in the glosses. The glosses in Af and Vc are also found in a great many later manuscripts and the occasional copying errors indicate that these two manuscripts cannot have been the source for the others. Vb may well have been the source for some of the glosses in English manuscripts but contains a fair proportion of glosses that appear in other manuscripts which seem unlikely to depend on Vb as source. Other indications suggest that heavy glossing of the DCP goes back to at least the 860s or so. Firstly, the Laon glossary manuscript, datable between 869 and 875, contains a short list of lemmas and glosses derived from a glossed copy of the DCP, and these include examples that are otherwise found only in heavily glossed copies of the Boethius text.³ Secondly, there is the short fragment Ak, apparently written in France around the 860s and glossed around the same time. This is remarkably heavily glossed, and if the fragment is representative of the whole it would have contained more glosses than almost any other of our manuscripts. Most of the glosses appear

³ See Godden and Jayatilaka 2018.

The Development of the Glosses

in other, later manuscripts but Ak cannot be the source for these other witnesses, given the occasional variations and miscopyings. Moreover, Ak itself seems to be conflating an already rich tradition, since it sometimes has two overlapping glosses for the same point, as if drawing on more than one source. If the glosses are indeed as early as they are thought, this short fragment pushes the tradition of heavy glossing well back before the 860s. The fragments Mr and Sg may be further evidence of early developments of glossing (see below).

Most of the glossing in the manuscripts generally is in Latin but the manuscripts from the East Frankish area⁴ often include a sprinkling of entries in varieties of Old High German (up to 400 in Lf), the English ones include glosses in Old English and possibly one in Old French, and Vb has a gloss in Old Cornish. Some manuscripts, notably Ka and Lh, include Greek rhetorical terms among their annotations. Metres are often supplied with musical notation for performance, and scansion signs for construing the Latin are often added. Diagrams are commonly supplied as well, especially with reference to the concentric spheres of 4p6, and the text is often supplemented with a frontispiece depicting Philosophia and Boethius, as well as with various ancillary texts such as the introductory material on the life and times of Boethius and the meaning of his titles, and the account of the metrical forms attributed to Lupus of Ferrières (for which see below).

Our corpus comprises some 90,000 different glosses, some found only in a single manuscript, others in as many as twenty-five. The accumulation and transmission of these glosses through the ninth to eleventh centuries, witnessed by some eighty-three manuscripts, was a complex process. Earlier scholarship, from the early twentieth century onwards, hypothesised that nearly all the glosses were essentially based on just two supposed original commentaries, one attributed to Remigius of Auxerre and the other to ‘the Anonymous of St Gall’, but neither commentary in its presumed original form has ever been identified and it is now clear that the glosses were the work of many different commentators over a long period of time and working across much of Europe.⁵ Most glosses in the extant manuscripts seem to have been copied from other manuscripts rather than being original entries. In many manuscripts it is clear that the glosses were added in several stages by different hands, apparently drawing on different sources and perhaps supplemented by some newly coined. Thus the Cologne manuscript Lh was provided with a substantial set of glosses deriving from an East Frankish tradition, but this was quickly, perhaps simultaneously, supplemented with another much fuller set drawn from a West Frankish tradition. In the St Gall manuscript Ga one person provided a set of glosses on the metrical forms, another then transcribed fairly faithfully the glosses that had been entered earlier in the St Gall manuscript Na, and a third then began supplementing these in turn with another set of glosses from a different source, but abandoned the task in the course of Book 1. Different sections of the text might be glossed at different times and from different sources, as is clearest from the English manuscript Oa, where glosses were added first at St Augustine's Canterbury, then at Christ Church Canterbury and finally at Exeter, in each case using a different exemplar and adding the glosses to a different section. Essentially the same gloss might be entered twice or three times, even four, in the same manuscript and on the same page, in the course of copying from multiple exemplars (the English manuscript Ap is a striking example). Even those manuscripts which appear to have nearly all their glosses in a single hand, perhaps copied from a single source, show signs of combining multiple traditions and processes of glossing in their history, with several overlapping glosses on the same point and varying relationships with other manuscripts. Those who copied glosses from other manuscripts might be more or less selective than others in what they took, varying themselves as they went on with their task and making a different selection from others who might have copied from the same sources.

The Development of the Glosses

When a long gloss occurs in different forms with different details in various manuscripts it can be surprisingly difficult to determine which is the original or earliest form of the gloss. In the course of transmission glosses were expanded or abridged, or conflated with other glosses. Annotators would compare the glosses in one manuscript with those in another and sometimes altered the reading accordingly (Ps is a particularly striking example). Grammatical or factual errors, or supposed errors, in glosses are sometimes corrected by later readers or copyists, so that the more 'correct' form is the later one. Where glosses quote the Bible or other familiar texts such as Vergil or Isidore, we cannot be sure what reading was in the text used by the original glossator, and in some cases such quotations may have been 'corrected' to match the reading familiar to a particular reader.⁶ Readings characteristic of manuscripts from one part of Europe can nevertheless appear in a manuscript from a quite different part. Glossed copies moved from place to place and were used to supplement existing glosses in other manuscripts wherever they happened to arrive or be borrowed. Familiar examples are Vb, produced and lightly glossed in France in the ninth century, more heavily glossed after moving to Cornwall at the end of the century, and glossed again in tenth-century England, where it influenced other copies; and Ka, copied and glossed in Cologne but then taken 400 miles away to Tegernsee and influencing other copies there. In a few cases we can identify close relationships between pairs of manuscripts which might form exemplar and copy (Na and Ga, Ec and Gc) but by and large the glossed manuscripts that we have would seem to represent a small fraction of those which once existed and the relationships that are evident are looser. Some centres accumulated multiple glossed copies but these were far from identical: Einsiedeln acquired at least four copies from our corpus with different sets of glosses, though none was necessarily produced there; Tegernsee in Bavaria owned several of our manuscripts, including two with radically different sets of glosses now bound together in the same volume; Anglo-Saxon Canterbury had at least three of our manuscripts and Abingdon had two. (No single centre in West Francia stands out, though several of our manuscripts may have been at Fleury from an early date, including one (On) that was produced there.) Even quite minor houses might have at least one glossed copy, however, such as Horton in Dorset. In the centres that had multiple copies glosses were evidently copied from one manuscript to another, but there was no attempt to produce a single standard version.

The Development of the Glosses

It may be helpful, however, to identify a few groupings which are easier to identify. In very general terms there are three traditions: an East Frankish tradition mainly witnessed by manuscripts from Germanic-speaking areas, often distinguished by the inclusion of occasional Old High German (OHG) glosses; a West Frankish tradition, mainly witnessed by manuscripts from France but subsequently influencing copies in Germany and England; and an Anglo-Saxon tradition witnessed by manuscripts originating or circulating in England, mostly distinguished by occasional glosses in Old English. But there are a good many manuscripts whose glosses derive from more than one tradition, and there is much overlap between the West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon traditions.

The East Frankish glossing tradition

Firstly, there are the manuscripts reflecting an East Frankish glossing tradition, about twenty-six in all, linked especially to St Gall, Einsiedeln and Tegernsee. Virtually all include a scatter of OHG glosses as well as many Latin ones. The earliest of all is probably Fa, which was written and lightly glossed at Fulda in roughly the 830s. Its thirty-two glosses, all in Latin, probably did not originate in that manuscript (one of them, a mistaken interpretation of the miswritten Greek in 1p4, recurs a little later in Pe in northeastern France) and nearly all recur in later East Frankish manuscripts such as Na and Ed. Several of them only occur in such manuscripts, though others have wider currency. They are mostly paraphrases of the Greek quotations and indications of the subject or argument of a particular prose or metre, which often function as rubrics or headnotes in later manuscripts. More substantial glossing from roughly the same period (though of unknown origin) is suggested by the brief fragment Mr, which seems to have been written and glossed in the first half of the ninth century. It would perhaps have had some 1,500 glosses when complete, and those that survive, including one in OHG, show agreement with the later exemplars of the East Frankish tradition such as Eb, Ec and Ka.

The earliest substantial bodies of glossing from the East Frankish tradition to survive are in Mb and Na. Mb's text of the DCP was produced at probably Regensburg around the middle of the ninth century. It has about 1,800 early glosses, some embedded in the text and evidently copied from its text-source and the rest supplied by various hands soon after. Many of the glosses are unique to this manuscript but there is a substantial number that recur in other manuscripts of the region. Na was written at St Gall towards the end of the ninth century. It incorporates in its text some of the glosses seen in Fa, and about 3,500 further glosses were added at an early date, probably at St Gall. Some of these are found in a range of manuscripts across Europe, suggesting the use of a set of early glosses with a wider currency (cf, for instance, the quotation from an anonymous poet at 3p7.2), but most recur only in manuscripts reflecting the East Frankish tradition, especially To and Vh and to a lesser extent Ka and less commonly Ec; occasional errors suggest that it was not itself the source for similar glosses in other manuscripts, except for Ga and Mh, and possibly Vh. All of Na's glosses were (probably) copied early in the tenth century into another ninth-century copy of the text, Ga, at St Gall, where they were combined with headnotes to the individual metres defining the metrical form of each. Another scribe later began adding a second strand of glosses to Ga but abandoned the task after 1p1; these glosses are mostly to be found in other manuscripts of the region as well. Na, or a manuscript with virtually identical sets of glosses, was also used as a source for glosses copied into Mh in the course of the tenth century, probably at Tegernsee.

Another probably early exemplar of the East Frankish tradition is Vh, which appears to have been produced in southern Germany (possibly Reichenau) around the year 900 and supplied with some 5,000 glosses soon after. About a third of them also appear in Ga and Na, as well as sometimes in later East Frankish manuscripts, and others recur only in such later East Frankish manuscripts as Ec and Ka, and a few others in such manuscripts as Eb and Ed. All told, this early set of glosses would seem to have been copied by a single scribe but derived ultimately from two or more glossed copies, reflecting different traditions possibly from the St Gall region.

Two other manuscripts, Ed and Mh, were produced in the ninth century but mostly glossed in the tenth. Mh was produced in the middle of the ninth century in western Germany and supplied around the same time with a few glosses similar to those in Fa. But later it was taken to Tegernsee in Bavaria and there supplied with a further 1,500 glosses drawn, it seems, from the St Gall manuscript Na or a very similarly glossed manuscript. Further glosses were added in the eleventh century, apparently copied from the Tegernsee manuscript Ka, no doubt at the same time that a loss in the text was supplied by a new quire copied from that manuscript. Ed was produced in western Germany around the middle of the ninth century but was at Einsiedeln by the fourteenth century. Some 4,000 glosses were added in various hands in the tenth century: they mostly recur in other manuscripts of the East Frankish region, and it seems likely that the manuscript was already at Einsiedeln or its vicinity by that stage.

Ef was produced in the first half of the tenth century, probably at St Gall, and furnished with about 1,300 glosses, mainly in the first two books. The glosses are mostly short and seem to derive from several sources, but in particular show agreement at times with Na, at other times with Ec and Ka. Eb was likewise produced in the tenth century, probably at Reichenau, and supplied with about 4,000 glosses which seem to derive from various sources. Those in Books 2 and 3 frequently recur in the later East Frankish manuscripts Ka and Ec, but those in Books 4 and 5 appear to have been copied from Ed.

Two manuscripts which appear to have been produced beyond the main East Frankish region are nevertheless important witnesses to the East Frankish glossing tradition, Pm and Lh. Pm was apparently produced at Corbie in the tenth century, and contains not the text of the DCP but a set of about 2,300 glosses to it organised in sequence with the appropriate lemmas. These include some ninety OHG glosses, apparently in the Alemannic dialect; all but five occur also in other East Frankish manuscripts, though none has all of them (Ed is probably the closest match). The Latin glosses generally agree closely with those in St Gall manuscripts and related copies, especially Ed. Lh was produced in the first half of the tenth century, probably at Cologne, and included in its text, following 3m9, the commentary of Bovo of Corvey on that metre and another, anonymous, one. Some 12,000 glosses were added there soon after, by several hands and in different stages. These seem to be a conflation of at least three different strands: (a) glosses that are unique to Lh or otherwise found only in Ka or Ta; (b) glosses that are characteristic of the East Frankish tradition, including some fifty-three OHG glosses; and (c), the most substantial element, glosses derived from the West Frankish tradition represented by Af and Vc or by the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Another striking case is Pg, produced in France at the end of the ninth century. Very intensive glossing of an East Frankish type was entered in the tenth century but stops fairly abruptly in 2m2 and after that glossing is very light, except for a patch in 3p8-3m9 which seems to have been supplied earlier, probably by the text scribes, and affiliates with the West Frankish tradition.

Lf is a substantial fragment (about a quarter of the full text) of a heavily glossed manuscript from the tenth century, presumably from Germany. It contains some 3,400 glosses, of which about 390 are in OHG. If the surviving fragments are representative of the whole there would have been perhaps 13,000 glosses in the complete text, of which perhaps 1,600 would have been OHG, nearly all of them unique to Lf, which would have made it easily the fullest set of OHG glosses amongst our manuscripts. Of the Latin glosses about half are unique to Lf. Of the remainder, the most distinctive element is the glosses shared with Ec and Ka. There are also glosses shared with other manuscripts of the East Frankish tradition, notably Eb, Ed and Pm, but no links with manuscripts of the West Frankish tradition and strikingly little agreement with the glosses from the East Frankish tradition seen in Lh.

Closely related to Lf and Lh is Ka, one of the most discussed manuscripts of this group. Froumund of Tegernsee reports in a colophon that he copied this manuscript at Cologne (in the last decade of the tenth century it appears) and in a letter reports that he himself entered the glosses, apparently copying from a source or sources drawing on a range of glosses from the East Frankish tradition. Of the roughly 10,300 glosses, about half recur in the Cologne manuscript Lh and the others are largely shared with other East Frankish manuscripts including especially Lf but also Ec, Ed and Na, though there are also some glosses that appear in the West Frankish tradition.

The other much-discussed manuscript of this group is Ec, which in earlier scholarship was taken as the prime witness to a hypothetical commentary known as ‘the Anonymous of St Gall’. It was produced at St Gall or Einsiedeln in the second half of the tenth century and contains not the text but a set of some 9,000 glosses with their lemmas, including about 220 in OHG. A second copy (Gc) was probably made from Ec around the end of the tenth century, at St Gall. Ec would seem to be based on a glossed copy of the DCP conflating several traditions: some early glosses also found in Na and other manuscripts; a substantial body of glosses also used by Ka and Lh and others; and a body of glosses not found elsewhere and perhaps originating in the Ec source. The compiler does not seem to have made significant use of the earlier St Gall glosses in Na however: only about a third of Na’s glosses recur in Ec, and they represent barely 12 per cent of Ec’s total glosses. The manuscript also contains a separate set of glosses on 3m9 drawn from a West Frankish source, and another set drawn from an East Frankish source very similar to Ec’s main corpus of glosses.

Another witness to the tradition in the tenth century is the short fragment Tc, whose glosses show frequent agreement with manuscripts such as Ec and Ka without giving evidence of a close link with any one of them. A similar case is Bn, a fragment of a heavily glossed manuscript which might have had some 7,000 entries when complete. It draws on the East Frankish tradition, and has one OHG gloss, but cannot be placed more precisely. In the eleventh century the East Frankish glossing tradition continues with Mf (2,000 glosses on Books 1 to 4); Px, which contains some 3,000 glosses drawing on more than one branch of the East Frankish tradition but often resembling Vh; and Vg, produced at St Gall and containing just 400 glosses, plus the short fragment Fc with about 70 Latin glosses. Another brief fragment, Wa (later ninth century, about thirty glosses, some illegible), also belongs to this East Frankish tradition. A more mixed example is Go, produced in Germany in the eleventh century and lightly glossed, with about 800 entries evenly spread over the five books. Many of the glosses are unique to Go, while others look like individual recastings of common glosses (note for instance the recasting in 2p7 of a gloss on Fabricius as a note on Brutus). In Book 1 what agreements there are with other manuscripts are with East Frankish manuscripts but in later books, especially Book 5, there is also a series of long glosses that belong to the West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon glossing tradition. There are no OHG glosses. Another mixed collection is the 500 or so glossary entries, including two in OHG, in Kr (Lorsch, eleventh century), which show occasional links with both East Frankish and West Frankish traditions and perhaps draw on more than one glossed DCP.

To sum up, there is a great deal of overlap among these manuscripts of the East Frankish glossing tradition, but no two manuscripts have anything like the same set of glosses, apart from the special case of the pairs Na/Ga, and Ec/Gc, and many of them have a high proportion of unique glosses. Monasteries in the area of modern Bavaria and eastern Switzerland collected copies of the DCP from other regions and vigorously copied glosses from one manuscript to another, as well as originating new ones, but without apparently a sense of an authorised version. It is plausible that the production of glossed copies was associated with the teaching and study of the text and that individual teachers and perhaps students made their own collections of glosses drawing on various sources and the process of teaching. The proliferation of copies at Einsiedeln and neighbouring St Gall raises an assumption that those places were the originators of many of the Latin and OHG glosses that also occur elsewhere, but none of the manuscripts was actually produced at Einsiedeln (unless Ec was) and the presence of such glosses in large numbers in the Cologne manuscript Lh by the middle of the tenth century raises doubts about the place of origin. A particular issue is raised by a fragment not considered so far, Sg from Seligenstadt. It has just 123 surviving glosses on its two leaves, but seems to have come from a copy which might have contained some 4,000 glosses when complete. The surviving glosses agree generally with East Frankish manuscripts such as Ec and Ka, and there are some striking agreements with Ed, but no consistent relationship emerges. If, as appears, the glosses are contemporary with the text and hence from the third quarter of the ninth century, they are probably earlier than any of the other witnesses to the East Frankish tradition except Fa and Mr. And if Bischoff's early note was right in suggesting that the manuscript might have been written in the region of St Amand (Saint-Amand-les-Eaux) in northern France, that also makes it very distant from the areas where East Frankish manuscripts are concentrated. The three OHG glosses do not recur in other manuscripts and presumably originated in the home of the manuscript. All told, it seems possible that the starting point for the East Frankish glossing tradition may have been further north and west, represented by Fa from Fulda and Sg from Lotharingia, but that Swiss and Bavarian houses played an important part in developing that tradition through the later ninth and tenth centuries, along with Cologne.

The West Frankish glossing tradition

This tradition is largely identifiable from two manuscripts of the later ninth century, Af and Vc. Of the five earlier manuscripts from the West Frankish area, On (first third of the ninth century, Fleury) has about 3,000 glosses entered in the course of the ninth and tenth centuries but shows little overlap with other manuscripts in its longer glosses; Vb (first third of the ninth century, Loire region) has a little glossing from the ninth century in France but was mainly glossed in Cornwall around s. ix/x and then in England in the tenth century, and shows little overlap with other manuscripts from the West Frankish area; Pe (third quarter of the ninth century, northeastern France) has only four glosses; Pd (third quarter of the ninth century, France) has more than 4,000 glosses (mostly from the late ninth century) but many are unique and its closest link otherwise is with the East Frankish tradition; and La (last third of the ninth century, France) has only 350 glosses and shows virtually no connection with other manuscripts.

Af was apparently produced in northern France in the second half of the ninth century. Its roughly 4,700 glosses are partly contemporary but mainly s. ix/x. It includes some of the section headings seen in Fa and later manuscripts but otherwise shows few links with the East Frankish tradition. The glosses show fairly consistent agreement with a wide range of later manuscripts, including Kc and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts as well as a number of manuscripts glossed in France. Frequent small errors indicate that they were largely copied from another manuscript rather than originating in Af, but it is on the whole a methodical set of glosses with only a little duplication.

Vc was likewise produced in the second half of the ninth century in France, perhaps in or near Brittany. It has about 4,500 glosses of the ninth century and later, most of them also found in other West Frankish manuscripts and a relative few found also in manuscripts of the East Frankish tradition. About half recur in Af and related manuscripts such as Kc and Pq as well as Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Many of the others recur in other West Frankish manuscripts such as Pc and Pk. Sometimes Vc and related manuscripts have an identical gloss to Af but often Af and Vc have two different versions of the same gloss. In some cases the Vc tradition would seem to have adapted or abridged the archetypal gloss, in a few cases it would seem as if the Af tradition had adapted it. There is little overlap with the East Frankish tradition. The general impression is that Vc and Af represent two branches of the same archetypal West Frankish set of glosses but that both have developed independently from that base. Some later manuscripts (e.g. Lh) draw primarily on the Vc branch, others (e.g. Kc) primarily on the Af branch, but several drew on both.

One contemporary reflex of the Af tradition is evident in To, written in northeast France in the third quarter of the ninth century and glossed around the same time. It has over 4,000 glosses, ultimately of mixed origins but probably already combined in the source(s). Glosses from the East Frankish tradition appear in Book 1 and in Book 2 as far as 2p3 but disappear after that. There are also glosses otherwise found only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. But the commonest element is the set of glosses from the Af tradition, extending through all five books. Similarly Bc (last third of the ninth century, from northwest France, perhaps near Brittany) has about 1,600 glosses in various hands. They are mainly from the West Frankish tradition, showing agreement with Af but also include the headnotes seen in Fa and some links with Anglo-Saxon manuscripts and others with Mb. Of the same date is Lg, written in eastern France towards the end of the ninth century and glossed fairly extensively in the tenth century as far as 1p4 but only very sporadically after that. The glosses agree consistently with the West Frankish tradition of Af etc., apart from a single OHG gloss in 1p4, which occurs in the same spelling in the Cologne/Tegernsee manuscript Ka and was perhaps added by a German speaker.

first half of the tenth century (12,000 glosses). As noted above, it was supplied with glosses from the East Frankish tradition but these were supplemented with a very substantial body of glosses from the West Frankish tradition represented by Af and Vc. A similar case is Ta, which was written at Echternach in the late tenth century and has about 8,500 glosses. The glosses seem to be mainly in one hand but are clearly a conflation of several strands. The commonest element is composed of glosses from the West Frankish tradition represented by Af and Vc, but there is also a substantial number of glosses from the East Frankish tradition, including many OHG glosses. Ta shows close links with Lh in both the West Frankish and East Frankish glosses, and especially in the OHG glosses. A similar and perhaps related example is the short fragment Tb (early tenth century text and glosses), whose longer glosses are mainly drawn from the West Frankish tradition of Af and Vc but include some from the East Frankish tradition of Ec and Ka; it shows a particularly close link with Lh. The lightly glossed Bamberg manuscripts Ba and Bb from the end of the tenth century similarly show a mixture of West Frankish and East Frankish glosses. Again, Pp (tenth century, Saint-Évre-lès-Toul in northeastern France) has some 9,400 glosses. The majority are from the West Frankish tradition, showing agreement with either Af or Vc or both, but there are also many glosses from the East Frankish tradition represented by Ec, Na and Ka and others, as well as a sequence of headnotes which are also consistently found in Ka and Lh. Sometimes Pp has glosses making the same point that are drawn from all three traditions, even where the Af gloss and the Vc gloss are very similar and seem to have a common origin (see e.g. 4p4.2, 5p1.9). Similarly, Pp's shorter interlinear glosses often conflate brief glosses of a single word or phrase from several traditions into a string of synonyms. Pp was adopted by Courcelle as the archetype of the so-called 'Remigian' commentary, but turns out to have very mixed origins.

A previous, and in some respects more appropriate, selection by modern scholars as the representative of the West Frankish tradition was Kc, produced around the middle of the eleventh century, possibly at Tegernsee (it is bound with the Froumund manuscript Ka, but that may be a post-medieval development). It contains some 4,500 glosses arranged as glossae collectae. The great majority occur in a range of other manuscripts, and despite the apparent origins of the manuscript itself they agree consistently with the West Frankish tradition of Af and related manuscripts. Both the lemmas and the glosses are very inaccurately transcribed, suggesting that it is at some remove from the glossed text from which it originated. Other tenth- and eleventh-century reflexes of the West Frankish glossing tradition are Bd (France), Mk (fragment), Pc (France), Pk (France, about 5000 glosses and showing links with Pc), and Pq (France). But later examples often show an independent spirit, with glossators radically rewriting or generating new glosses. Thus St (France, eleventh century) draws mainly on the West Frankish tradition represented by Af, but the glosses are all heavily rephrased and often miswritten. There are also many unique glosses, though these often look like adaptations of the common Af type. Ph (France, eleventh century) is very lightly glossed, with about 160 glosses altogether. Many of the longer ones are unique to Ph, though some are found in Af or Vc and others recur only in St, including one in the same triangular shape as that used by St. Similarly Pj (France, tenth-century fragment) was heavily glossed around the year 1000 and shows knowledge of the West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon traditions but is largely independent in its glossing. And Vd (extensively glossed in the tenth and eleventh century but of unknown origin) generally belongs to the West Frankish tradition of Af and Vc but has a great many unique glosses, some looking like individual recastings of standard West Frankish entries, and a sequence of glosses to 3m9 that are otherwise only found in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.

One important subgroup of the West Frankish tradition is represented by five manuscripts largely located in eastern Francia: Fd (eleventh century, St Florian Austria: 9,200 glosses), Lc (s. x/xi, possibly northern France: 480 glosses, ending in Book 3), Ld (s. x/xi, Germany: 7,400 glosses), Pt (s. x/xi, France: 8,000 glosses) and Vf (tenth century, Germany, possibly Lorsch: 6,500 glosses). The majority of the longer glosses in this group belong to the West Frankish tradition of Af, Kc and Vc, though they often share minor variants to these glosses. The five manuscripts also share a fair number of mainly shorter glosses that are unique to this group, some of them evidently designed to supplement the West Frankish glosses. Thus in 3p7 Fd Lc Ld Pt reproduce the Af-type gloss on Brutus but then question it with the words ‘Sed hoc non tam bene huic sententiae congruit’. Similarly, at 3p8.10 they all reproduce without comment the erroneous Af-type gloss which identifies Alcibiades as a famously beautiful woman before going on to supply a more accurate gloss identifying him as a young man and friend of Socrates. There is also a stratum of glosses in Books 3 and 4 that are otherwise found only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Three of the five manuscripts were apparently written and glossed in eastern Francia and a fourth, Pt, incorporates a characteristically East Frankish gloss in its text, but none has OHG glosses and they show very little connection with the East Frankish glossing tradition, though Vf does include some of the headnotes seen in Ka and Lh. Nor do they connect particularly with the best-known eastern witness to the West Frankish tradition, Kc. They seem to represent a substantial presence of the West Frankish tradition in German-speaking areas, notwithstanding the odd links with the Anglo-Saxon glossing tradition. Possibly drawn from the same sub-tradition are the glossae collectae to Book 5 in Mg. These were added, probably in Germany in the eleventh century, at the end of a copy of the DCP (Mf) whose glosses to Books 1 to 4 evidently derive from the East Frankish tradition, but the glossae collectae (together with the small number of glosses against the text of Book 5) show no connection with that tradition and instead affiliate strongly with the West Frankish tradition of Af etc. and show some links with the Fd group. One further witness to this group is the late tenth-century fragment Mm, probably from Germany. It has 356 glosses on 4p4 and 4m4 from the tenth century but when complete it would probably have been more heavily glossed than any of them, with perhaps 15,000 entries. It agrees consistently with the other manuscripts of the group, especially Vf.

As is evident from these details, ‘pure’ examples of the West Frankish tradition are relatively uncommon beyond the main witnesses Af, Kc and Vc. Most are found mixed with a smaller number of East Frankish glosses or with the further developments seen in the Fd group. And important further witnesses to the circulation of the West Frankish corpus of glosses are the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.

The Anglo-Saxon glossing tradition

At least one heavily glossed copy of the DCP was evidently available in England at the end of the ninth century or early in the tenth when it was used by the anonymous Anglo-Saxon author who produced the Old English adaptation.⁷ Separately, the early ninth century copy Vb (produced in the Loire region, but heavily glossed in Cornwall at the end of the century) was present at Glastonbury in probably the 930s, when glosses were added by St Dunstan and others. But the Anglo-Saxon glossing tradition is primarily established by the cluster of nine copies produced and very heavily glossed around the end of the tenth century and beginning of the eleventh, primarily at Canterbury and Abingdon: Ap Ck Ct Er Ge Oa Pb Pn Ps. There is much overlap amongst them, including occasional signs of glosses being copied from one to another, but also much variation. Most have some glosses in Old English but these are for the most part unique to individual manuscripts.

Six of these manuscripts can probably be treated as a group: Ap (s. x/xi Canterbury or Abingdon, 15,000 glosses); Ck (s. x/xi, Canterbury or Abingdon, 12,000 glosses); Ge (s. x/xi, probably Christ Church, Canterbury (?), 12,000 glosses); Pb (s. x/xi, Christ Church, Canterbury, 11,000 glosses); Pn (second half of tenth century, Christ Church, Canterbury (?), 11,000 glosses); Ps (s. x ex., probably Christ Church, Canterbury, 14,000 glosses). They have a great many glosses in common, though no two are at all close to having the same set. At least three strands can be identified among the glosses in these manuscripts:

1. Glosses characteristic of the West Frankish glossing tradition exemplified by Af and Vc.
2. Glosses (mainly in the first two books) that otherwise occur only in Vb and in many cases appear to derive from Vb.
3. Glosses that occur only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Some at least of these were evidently in circulation in England by the beginning of the tenth century since they were known and used by the author of the Old English Boethius.

To give just one example of the different strands, out of many thousands, the lemma Euripi at 2m1.2 has five longer glosses in these manuscripts, of which two are only in the English manuscripts, a third is only in English manuscripts plus Vb, a fourth is in seven English manuscripts plus five Continental ones (Lh Pc Pk Ta Vc) and a fifth is in seven English manuscripts plus fourteen Continental ones, led by Af.⁸

Several of the other manuscripts draw in various ways on the same tradition. Cc (s. xi in, Canterbury) has about 2,000 glosses to Books 1 and 2, agreeing fairly closely with Ck and Ge and others, but in Book 3 has instead an interlinear Old English gloss, as far as 3p9, with just a sprinkling of Latin glosses in Books 3 to 5. Cg (s. xi med., St Augustine's, Canterbury) has 7,000 glosses which generally correspond to those in Ap, Ck, Ge and related manuscripts but often Cg has an adapted, generally abridged, version of the longer glosses seen in the other manuscripts, perhaps reflecting the fact that, unlike the earlier manuscripts, it was not designed to receive glosses and was short of space. Oa (Canterbury) with about 2500 glosses, was extensively glossed in short stretches, at different times and using different sources, at Canterbury and later at Exeter, but always showing agreement with the other manuscripts of the Anglo-Saxon tradition.

A more complicated case is Ct, produced in the second half of the tenth century, possibly at Canterbury. It has some 8,000 glosses, mainly in one hand contemporary with the text, but more were added, including the four OE glosses, in the second half of the eleventh century. The main source seems to be a conflation of two traditions: there is a substantial number of glosses characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon tradition, but also a range of glosses from the West Frankish tradition that seem to have been acquired independently of the similar glosses in the other Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.

The Development of the Glosses

Er (s. xi in, Dorset) has about 7,500 glosses. Various strands of glossing tradition are evident, sometimes varying from one part of the text to another. In places there is very close agreement with Ct, in other places (such as Book 5) or other glosses Er shows no agreement with Ct, but sometimes shows links with the other English manuscripts, sometimes seems to be quite independent of them. Er shows some familiarity with the distinctive and substantial body of glossing seen in Ap Ck etc. but often uses different glosses or variant forms, and seems not to pick up the glosses from Vb that are seen in other English manuscripts. Possibly it drew on an earlier and more limited form of that corpus and supplemented it with another Continental tradition also used by Ct.

The fragments Le (s. x ex., probably Abingdon, 37 glosses) and Om (s. x/xi, 138 glosses) seem to draw on the same general Anglo-Saxon tradition, with Le showing a close connection to Ps. (But the fragment Od is probably of Continental origin and its sixteen glosses draw on the West Frankish tradition of Af etc. without sharing the distinctive variants of the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.)

Three Continental manuscripts are important witnesses to the history of the Anglo-Saxon glossing tradition, though their evidence is hard to interpret. Vb (Loire region, early ninth century) has nearly 6,000 glosses, added at several different times and in different locations. A few glosses were entered early on, in a Continental hand dated to the second half of the ninth century, probably before the manuscript left France. The great majority of the glosses, both interlinear and marginal, are written in an insular script of a Celtic type, dated s. ix/x. They are the work of one or more glossators, apparently working in southwest Britain. Another hand, using Caroline minuscule but apparently working at the same time as these, entered a gloss in Cornish in 4m3. Other glosses, mostly at the beginning of the manuscript, were entered by various hands using an insular-influenced Caroline minuscule, mostly subsequent to the glosses in insular script and generally dated to the early tenth century and Glastonbury. One of these hands has been identified as that of St Dunstan.⁹

Many of the glosses, perhaps as many as half of them, both interlinear and marginal, are unique to Vb. Many others, amounting to some 25 to 30 percent of the glosses in Books 1 and 2 but becoming much less frequent thereafter, appear only in the later copies from England (Ap Ck Ge etc.) and Va (on which see below). They include some that had apparently been entered into Vb in France, many others that were apparently entered in Cornwall a little later, and still others that were entered later apparently in England. The simplest explanation is that these glosses in later English manuscripts were derived from Vb itself, at a time when it had accumulated glosses from several different traditions and regions. A plausible hypothesis is that St Dunstan took the manuscript to Canterbury when he became archbishop, and combined its glosses there with an already existing glossing tradition, related to the one used earlier for the vernacular version. The occasional errors in Vb which are not matched in the later manuscripts can perhaps be explained by subsequent correction.

The Development of the Glosses

Va (s. xi, Saint-Amand-les-Eaux) has some 7,000 glosses. They are of mixed origins, including some from the East Frankish tradition, but a substantial element is a body of glosses that are otherwise found only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts and Vb (including many in insular hands in Vb). Given the late date of Va and the other evidence of Anglo-Saxon Boethius manuscripts moving to France it seems likely that this strand of glosses in Va derives from an Anglo-Saxon manuscript. The same may be true of the batch of glosses on Book 3 in Pf, which show very close links with Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, especially Ct and Er; but the glosses on 5p6 in this manuscript show no links with the Anglo-Saxon tradition, though they do show links with the West Frankish tradition and particularly Va.

The most difficult case is Ak. This is a heavily glossed fragment from Book 4, which Bischoff dated to the second or third third of the ninth century (that is, roughly 830-900 but perhaps centring on the decades around 865) and located in France, noting that the glosses appeared to be contemporary. It contains about 140 glosses in a short stretch from 4p1.6 to 4p2.2. If the whole text had been glossed to the same extent (and Book 4 is never one of the more intensively glossed books in other manuscripts) that would suggest a total of some 9,000 glosses, far in excess of any other set of glosses from the ninth century. The frequent agreements with a range of other manuscripts, the occasional evidence of miscopying and the presence of near-duplicates show that these glosses did not originate in Ak itself but are compiled from a well-established set of glossing traditions. Some are evidently from the West Frankish tradition exemplified by Af and Vc, a few others show links with the separate tradition represented by Fd and others. But the most striking feature is the agreement with Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Of the approximately fifty longer glosses still visible in Ak, some forty-eight recur in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts and no fewer than twenty-four are found only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, and always in a significant range of them. Occasionally too, Ak's version of a gloss that reflects the West Frankish tradition of Af and Vc has variants that align it with the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. If Bischoff's dating is correct (and the script of the glosses does appear to be similar to that of the text and of other early manuscripts) then we have to conclude either (1) that Ak used an early Continental collection of glosses which drew on the West Frankish tradition but also on a substantial corpus of glosses that is not evidenced in any other Continental manuscript of the sixty or so that survive but is evidenced in English manuscripts, and that this collection reached England and became a primary source for the English glossing tradition in the tenth century; or (2) that in addition to a West Frankish collection of glosses related to Af and Vc, Ak drew on a corpus of glosses that had developed in England around the middle of the ninth century and reached the Continent but never surfaced in Continental manuscripts except in Ak. (Unfortunately, but not surprisingly, the short fragment contains no examples of glosses that seem to derive from Vb and none that can be shown to have been known to the author of the Old English Boethius.) Neither explanation seems very probable. Given what is usually assumed about scholarly culture in ninth-century England the second hypothesis seems unlikely, but since the existence of the Old English version proves that there was an interest in the text in England and a body of Boethian commentary available by the early years of the tenth century at least, it cannot be ruled out (not least because of the occurrence of insular 'g' in the fragment). Slightly more probable, perhaps, is that the Ak glosses are a unique witness to a very substantial glossing tradition in northern France that surfaced in tenth-century England in time to be used by the intensive Boethian industry associated with Canterbury and Abingdon.

The Development of the Glosses

Similarly problematic are the later manuscripts Fb and Mo. Fb, of uncertain origin but later at least in Italy, is heavily glossed, with some 7,000 entries in four books, most showing affiliation with the West Frankish tradition but some linking rather with manuscripts of the Anglo-Saxon tradition. Mo (eleventh century, northern Italy) is a selection of some 2,000 glosses with lemmata, taken from a moderately heavily glossed copy of the DCP and partially recast in glossary format. The shorter glosses, and a few of the longer ones, show a particularly close link with Fb. It seems likely that both derive from a fairly heavily glossed copy combining the West Frankish tradition of Af with another strand that appears mainly in English manuscripts, with a few elements from other branches.

3m9 attracted exceptional interest and controversy amongst glossators and commentators, and came in for special treatment. In many manuscripts the sheer volume of glossing that had accumulated around this metre in their main sources forced compilers to extend on to separate leaves that were included or inserted for the purpose: so in Bd, Ph from the West Frankish area, Ta from Trier, Ap from England, and Fb. An extension of this practice is evident in Lh, where the glosses derived from its East Frankish source are included in the normal location, in the margins and between the lines of 3m9, but the glosses from its West Frankish source are entered not on separate leaves but against the relevant lines in the margins of the commentary on 3m9 by Bovo II of Corvey which follows the text of 3m9 in the manuscript. But in some cases sets of glosses on 3m9 seem to have circulated independently of the main corpus: Ec has two such sets, one composed of glosses from the West Frankish tradition and copied directly after the glosses on 3m9 from its main East Frankish source, and the other containing glosses from the East Frankish tradition, many duplicating what was in Ec's main collection; Mc has a similar set of West Frankish glosses, entered in a manuscript that does not contain the text of DCP. Finally there were more discursive commentaries on 3m9: one written in the early tenth century by Bovo II of Corvey, which was included after 3m9 in Lh and at the end of the whole text in Vd; and an anonymous one from presumably the late ninth or early tenth century which follows Bovo's in Lh and was added in part on a spare page in Ed, but at some distance from its text of DCP. The material and style of these two commentaries are too different from our corpus of glosses to be collatable with it, and since they have already been edited and printed by Huygens we have not reproduced them in this volume. Also excluded, on the same grounds, are the so-called Anonymous of Brussels commentary, printed by Silvestre (1952), and the commentary attributed to Adalbold of Utrecht, printed by Huygens (1954).¹⁰

Metrical Notes

Many of the manuscripts (more than fifty of them) include brief notes on the metrical form of the various metres. Sometimes these are in the form of rubrics and were apparently entered by the scribe of the text at the head of the relevant metre (e.g. Ka, Lh). Sometimes they were entered after the text was finished but as a separate exercise from the glossing of the text (e.g.

¹⁰ For discussion of these commentaries see Beaumont 1981, esp. pp. 293-295; more recently, Love 2012, pp. 111-113.

The Development of the Glosses

Cg, Ga, On). And often they were entered as part of the general glossing process. They are in evidence from the third quarter of the ninth century (Sg) and from all regions, from St Gall to Cornwall. Most of these notes probably derive from the treatise on the metres of the DCP attributed to Lupus of Ferrières which appears separately in many of our manuscripts: the longer notes often reflect the layout and wording of the treatise, and the shorter examples generally correlate well with its definitions. The one striking exception is 4m5. Here the notes in the East Frankish manuscripts generally correspond with Lupus's statement that it uses the same metre as 1m2 (a claim that is said to be particularly unconvincing¹¹) but the West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon manuscripts identify it instead as 'metrum falleutium'. Generally the notes occur across a range of manuscripts (about twenty-five to forty for most metres) but 1m1 and 3m9 are exceptional in the paucity of comment: 1m1 has metrical notes in only six manuscripts and 3m9 in only nine, of which seven have a brief definition as a rubric copied with the text and only two have a gloss. These perhaps reflect gaps in the glossing tradition on which the manuscripts draw. But the wide availability of the Lupus text in manuscripts of the DCP always allowed glossators to return to that source.

Headnotes

In addition to the metrical notes, individual prosae and metra are often headed with brief phrases or sentences indicating their theme or otherwise relating (not always clearly) to their general subject. Sometimes these are entered as titles in the body of the text, often rubricated; sometimes they are entered in the margins at or near the beginning of the prosa or metrum, in some cases in similar form to the ordinary glosses, in other cases in a more formal script. We have printed these at the beginning of each prosa or metrum, identified as Headnotes. Occasionally there are similar subtitles part way through a prosa; these are printed at the point where they seem to refer.

All but two (1p6, 3p12) of the prosae and 21 of the 39 metra carry such headnotes in some manuscripts. The most striking cases are the group of apparently early headnotes to 3p2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, of the form 'pecunia beatos non fieri' (3p3) etc. These occur as marginal additions in the early Fulda manuscript Fa, probably copied there from another manuscript, but they evidently circulated widely, recurring in various forms in a range of later manuscripts from the end of the ninth century onwards (nineteen in the case of 3p3), including representatives of the East Frankish, West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon glossing traditions, though not in other early manuscripts such as On, Pe, Vb. Other examples, though, are found only in manuscripts of a particular glossing tradition. A particularly interesting set are those in the Cologne manuscripts Ka and Lh, which are generally written as rubricated titles, and recur mainly in Pp. This set includes the headnotes seen in Fa but other instances seem sometimes to have absorbed stray notes, often in the form of Greek terms and their Latin equivalents, which have little to do with the text that follows. Another such case is the headnote to 2m3 which occurs in Vb and Pd and several English manuscripts but seems unrelated to the DCP.

¹¹ See Brown 1978, pp. 75-76.

Note on Ancillary texts

In the earliest manuscripts, such as Fa, On and Pe, the DCP begins simply with the title followed by 1m1, but from the middle of the ninth century onwards it was increasingly common for manuscripts to include as well various kinds of ancillary material preceding or following the text or alongside the title and first metre. These include the short treatise on the twenty-seven metrical forms used in the DCP attributed to Lupus of Ferrières, various accounts of Boethius's accomplishments and the circumstances leading to the composition of the DCP, verse epitaphs on Boethius and his wife, formulaic notes on the purpose, date and circumstances of the work, and explanations of the various names and offices of Boethius that are specified in the title.

The Lupus treatise appears, in whole or in part, in twenty-one of our manuscripts (not counting brief extracts), ranging from the ninth century onwards and in all regions. The earliest instance is probably Ed, from the second third of the ninth century (though there is also a separate copy in Valenciennes, Bibliothèque municipale MS 411, which may be slightly earlier). In eight of them, dating from the tenth and eleventh centuries, it is adapted to run straight on from the end of an account of Boethius (Prologi 2 and 3). Only Ka and Va name Lupus as author. Many of the manuscripts supply the same or similar descriptions of the metrical forms in the form of glosses or rubrics at the beginning of the individual metres, apparently drawn from the Lupus treatise in most cases, and these are recorded at the relevant places in this edition, but the treatise is not reprinted here.¹ The only known edition of the treatise, by Rudolf Peiper, did not include a final sentence which appears in fourteen of our manuscripts:

Obserua autem quisque legeris finalem syllabam in omnibus metris indifferenter accipi; dimetrum uero uel trimetrum uel tetrametrum in metris iambicis trochaicis et anapesticis per duplices in reliquis per simplices computari.

The sentence would even so appear to be an integral part of the treatise: it also occurs at the end of the treatise in the separate ninth-century copy, Valenciennes, Bibliothèque municipale MS 411, and at the beginning of the treatise in our Ka and Va; it draws like the rest of the treatise on Servius's De Metris; it was drawn on for the glosses to 5m5 in several of our manuscripts; and of those manuscripts in our corpus that include the end of the treatise, only Ec, Ed and Go fail to include this sentence.

The other introductory material, which varies considerably among the manuscripts, was sometimes written by the scribe of the text, but more often it was added subsequently, frequently in conjunction with the glossing process. Mostly it was written on pages preceding the text and/or in the margins of the first page of text, but sometimes further material of this kind was added at the end of the text or within it, and material was sometimes duplicated. These various texts and notes have mostly been reproduced below, at the beginning of our edition, but we have not included material that was added to our manuscripts after 1100, or taken account of the same or similar material found in copies of other works by Boethius or in other contexts.

Six of the introductory accounts of Boethius and his work were printed by Peiper in his edition of the DCP, under the heading 'Vitae Boeti', and have generally been known by that name, though it is not a term found in any of our manuscripts. Of these, Vitae I, II, III and

Note on Ancillary texts

IV are included here, along with variant versions of I and IV which were not printed by Peiper. (We have used the term ‘Prologi’, as used by some manuscripts, rather than ‘Vita’.) Peiper’s ‘Vita V’ appears to be a collection of notes on the title and the author which are only found en bloc in one of our manuscripts (Go) and which otherwise appear separately and selectively: the various notes are recorded here separately therefore under the appropriate headings and lemmas. Peiper’s ‘Vita VI’ occurs only in manuscripts from well beyond our period and is not included here. The piece known as ‘Notker’s prologue’, which appears (in Latin) in Notker’s German version of the DCP and may or may not be by Notker himself, also occurs in two copies of the Latin text from our period and is recorded here from those two manuscripts only, as Prologus 7. A further ‘vita’ was reconstructed by Fabio Troncarelli from passages occurring in several of our manuscripts,² but seems rather to be a collection of separate items and notes, like ‘Vita V’; the various elements have been printed in this edition under the appropriate headings and lemmas. Of the nine verse epitaphs or eulogies printed by Peiper under the heading ‘Elogia Boeti’ we have printed the two which occur in our manuscripts. Seven of our manuscripts (Af, Ba, Ed, Fa, Kc, Pa, Vf) contain an epigraph of four lines attributed to Walafrid Strabo, beginning ‘Ut gaudere solet ...’.³ In three of these (Fa, Pa, Vf) it is preceded by an anonymous epigraph of three lines also using sea imagery, beginning ‘Ut laetus ponti ...’;⁴ the last line of this also appears preceding the Walafrid Strabo epigraph in Kc. We have not included these.

The title of the work, usually in the form of an incipit to the first book, varies somewhat among the manuscripts, but generally consists of Boethius’s four names and a list of his offices and dignities in a heavily abbreviated form. The commonest version reads something like: Anicii Manlii Seuerini Boetii excons. ord. patr. philosophiae (or philosophicae) consolationis incipit liber primus. Another version gives a fuller list of dignities: Anicii Manlii Severini Boetii v.c. et inl. excons. ord. ex mag. off. atque patr. philosophiae consolationis liber primus incipit. The abbreviations for the dignities are expanded in various ways, either in the body of the title or in marginal glosses: so excons. ord. is interpreted sometimes as ‘exconsulis. ordinarii’, sometimes as ‘ex consulum ordine’ etc. The annotations on the title sometimes discuss these alternative expansions and their meanings. Individual manuscripts often include explanations of wording that does not in fact occur in their own version of the title, or in some cases when they have no title at all, and several include explanations of the name of Symmachus, which does not in fact occur in any versions of the title (these are presumably taken from glosses to the title of another work by Boethius, the De Trinitate, which is addressed to Symmachus). The annotations to the title found in our manuscripts, mostly keyed to the individual elements of the title, are included in this edition (including those printed by Peiper as ‘Vita V’ and by Troncarelli), apart from those added after 1100. Similar titles or rubrics occur at the beginning of the other books but are generally not glossed. A common feature is for manuscripts to use the shorter form of the title for the earlier books but the fuller form for the fifth book, and this seems to be a phenomenon going back to the earliest copies (Fa La On Vb) though it became widespread.

These ancillary texts, with the exception of the Lupus treatise, are printed below under the general heading Accessus at the beginning of our edition.

Description of Manuscripts

The 83 Boethius manuscripts we include here range in date from the early 9th to the 11th centuries. Some 27 manuscripts are now imperfect, in that they lack folios or parts thereof. In some cases the manuscripts have lost leaves at the beginning or end of the manuscript, or both, in other cases random leaves or, in a few cases, entire quires are missing from the body of the manuscript. Fourteen are fragments that survive from once complete texts. Of the 83 manuscripts we have inspected all but the following handful of manuscripts in person: Af, Ak, Bn, Fg, Mm, Mr and Kr.

Of the 83 manuscripts, 76 contain glossed texts of the DCP, which include fragments and imperfect copies that are witnesses to once complete manuscripts. Some 11 of the 83 contain separate sets of glossae collectae, sometimes in the same codex as a complete glossed text and sometimes in isolation. Five of these glossae collectae comprise glosses to only parts of the DCP: Gal and Na1 comprise glosses to parts of Book1 added to originally blank pages in the manuscripts containing the glossed texts Ga and Na respectively; Lc comprises only glosses to Books 1 to 3 and precedes a complete text of the DCP with glosses (Lb); Mg comprises only glosses to Book 5 and comes after a complete text of the DCP with glosses (Mf); Mc comprises glosses only to 3m9 and is embedded in a miscellany of texts on various subjects. The remaining 6 sets of glossae collectae draw on glosses from all five books of the DCP: Ec, Gc, Kc, Kr, Mo, and Pm;¹ of these 6, only Kc is bound up with a glossed text of the DCP (Ka). All these early glossae collectae survive in manuscripts of Continental origin and date from the tenth and eleventh centuries.

Not surprisingly, the physical make up of each manuscript is unique, even if we know one to be copied directly from another; for example, Gc appears to be a near-faithful copy of Ec and both are sets of glossae collectae, but even though Ec was written in double columns, Gc is written in a single column throughout. Undoubtedly some manuscripts share elements that are similar, but we have found no two manuscripts to be exactly alike in physical layout, let alone in content.²

Of the 83 manuscripts only 8, all of Continental origin, are written in double columns: 4 of these are complete texts of the DCP (Ed, Lg, Pg, To) all written in the 9th century and 4 are sets of glossae collectae written in the 10th and 11th centuries (Ec, Mo, Pm, Kr). The remaining complete texts, at least for the prose, and glossae collectae are written in single columns across the page; where the prose sections of the DCP are laid out in single columns the layout of the metres is variable, ranging from single to multiple columns, depending on the length of the verses or the space allowed for on the page; in some manuscripts the metres, which attract much comment, are very generously spaced. A handful of manuscripts (Ck, Ct, Mh, Na, Pe, Vb) record the metres in rustic capitals. All but a very few manuscripts have some rubrication and the extent to which the initial letters of books and sections are decorated varies greatly; in a few cases, an entire page is devoted to the title of the first book; in some cases it is evident that space for a title or illustration was left but none was added, or other ancillary texts or even material completely unrelated to the DCP was subsequently added. One manuscript opens with a full-page drawing of Philosophy (Ct) and a handful of manuscripts open with illustrations of Boethius and Philosophy (Ka, Mf, Pa, Px, Vh); in one of these codices (Pa) there is an additional illustration depicting Boethius and Philosophy embedded in a letter referring to the works of Boethius. Often the manuscripts include diagrams illustrating subject matter relevant to the DCP, most commonly on the elements and ages of man and on the relationship between fate and divine providence. Sometimes it is evident that the diagrams are copied from their exemplars, but in other instances they were added later.

Description of Manuscripts

The layout of many of the 78 glossed copies of the DCP was clearly designed to receive glosses. This is evident from the widely spaced margins and text lines as well as the generous space left around particular metres that were known to attract heavy annotation. Only a third of these codices, however, are ruled to take glosses and even those that are ruled to take glosses are often ruled sporadically and some were evidently ruled as the glosses were being entered. The more consistently ruled manuscripts are those that originated in France or England in the 10th and 11th centuries, though a few 9th century manuscripts of French origin were also partially ruled for glosses; a couple of the English manuscripts (Cc and Ck) contain an extra horizontal line between the lines of the text for an interlinear gloss. Several metres, especially 3m9, 3m12 and 4m7, attracted such enormous quantities of glossing that folios or parts of folios in some manuscripts were left blank or separate folios or parts of folios were inserted into the existing quires to accommodate any overflow of glosses.

The glosses in many manuscripts are generally neatly, though not necessarily accurately, copied; there are countless examples of copyists not understanding the glosses they wrote and expanding abbreviations inaccurately; others left gaps in the glosses, where they presumably did not understand the abbreviated symbols in their exemplar, which in some cases were probably Tironian notes. Some glossators seemed to take pride in writing glosses within carefully marked spaces in the neatest possible script, whereas others simply entered them wherever space permitted, often nowhere near the lemmas they were glossing and with no linking symbols to help a subsequent reader establish their context; in a few cases glosses were written in such a way that they were subsequently incorporated into the text of the DCP by text scribes. Others, particularly late glossators, showed no anxiety about writing over existing glosses. A few scribes wrote glosses in geometric shapes; it appears that this was rarely because of a lack of space, but more probably for the aesthetic pleasure of the glossator, or as it appears in the case of St, where the main glossator frequently wrote the glosses in a variety of shapes, perhaps for the pure playfulness of it.

Our manuscripts were produced in numerous scriptoria in Germany, Switzerland, France, Italy and Anglo-Saxon England. The physical makeup of these codices ranges widely from ordinary functional books to more deluxe copies. What is particularly striking is that the manuscripts produced in Anglo-Saxon England are by far the most ambitiously produced and perhaps the most physically alike as a group, with the aesthetics of the page seemingly very much a driving force for the design. With the exception of Cg and Er, which are rather modestly conceived, the English copies of the DCP with their glosses are beautifully and neatly, but not always accurately, written. Whereas the decoration in the Continental manuscripts is highly variable, ranging from simple initials or crudely drawn initial letters with some embellishments to occasionally more elaborately drawn initials, the Anglo-Saxon codices are more consistently decorated with beautifully executed opening initials, including one (Ck) that uses gold lettering. Perhaps the most striking feature of the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts is the high quality of parchment that is used, whose preparation is also significantly better than in most of the Continental codices, resulting in the far better survival of the glosses.

For each manuscript we provide the following information in four sections:

- (1) Siglum, shelfmark, number of folia or pages, size of leaf and number of lines, place and date of origin;
- (2) Physical description, including a brief list of contents, layout of the text of the DCP or glossae collectae and ancillary works, decoration, diagrams and figures;
- (3) Discussion of the glosses; and (4) Provenance.

Some explanatory notes:

Many of the 83 codices we include in our edition have been listed in a variety of different editions, catalogues or inventories, but none includes all the early copies listed here. In some cases, detailed descriptions have been published, particularly by Troncarelli and Codices Boethiani;³ in other cases, much has been written on the illustration and decoration of the manuscripts.⁴ We do not repeat these details here, but have included only what is particularly relevant for the consideration of the origin or provenance of a manuscript or its glosses. We refer to early catalogue descriptions primarily when they contain relevant details that have not been repeated in more recent catalogue entries. We include only a brief statement on the presence of neumes in our manuscripts as these have been discussed in great detail by Professor Sam Barrett.⁵ We do not include in our descriptions the presence of syntax marks, which were added to some manuscripts to show how the sentences should be construed.

Where there are lacunae in the text of the DCP or the glossae collectae, we record this in the table of missing text; there we provide sufficient detail so that the reader can see at a glance which sections of the text and glosses are missing. Where the DCP or the glossae collectae is preserved in a codex that combines several texts that were copied after the end of the 11th century, or in a codex that in its present form is a later medieval or modern amalgamation, we provide only brief details of these other texts. In such cases, whereas the number of pages or folios refer to the entire codex, the detail regarding size of leaf and numbers of lines refer specifically to the part in which the DCP or the glossae collectae is preserved. The origin of the unrelated part of the codex is discussed in any detail only if it is relevant to the origin or provenance of the DCP in the early medieval period.

The discussion of the glosses includes a note on whether or not the manuscript is ruled for glosses, the language and dates of the glosses, the distribution of the glosses in the five books of the DCP, and a brief note on the types of annotations entered. The transmission of the glosses is discussed in more detail in the section on ‘The Development of the Glosses’.

Apart from the manuscripts used for this edition, there are numerous early manuscripts containing excerpts from the metres, often in association with poems by other writers, but these do not have glosses and so are not included here. Also excluded are several manuscripts whose text may be just within our period but the glosses seem to us to be of the twelfth century or later. A special case is Oxford, Corpus Christi College MS 74: its text and indeed gloss may be just within the 11th century, but the glosses are mainly of a different type and tradition from those edited here and so have not been included. Two other manuscripts (Breslau, Biblioteka Uniwersytecka Rehdiger 52 and 53) from the late 10th or early 11th century only came to our attention late, having been identified by cataloguers hitherto as 12th century. In so far as we have been able to check the glosses they appear to correspond fairly regularly with the East Frankish tradition and both manuscripts contain a few OHG glosses.

The majority of our manuscripts have now been digitised and images are readily available online; however, we do not provide addresses for the websites that host these images since the addresses often change.

Description of Manuscripts

Af (= An)

Alençon, Bibliothèque municipale, Ms. 12⁶
187 folios, 310 x 250 mm. 24 lines (Part 1).
Origin: northern France, s. ix, second half.⁷

Description:

In its present form the manuscript is composite and consists of 2 originally independent parts, of which we are concerned solely with the first: Part 1 (1-59) contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP, some ancillary texts and other unrelated texts that were added to originally blank leaves; it is preceded by an unfoliated 12th-century fragment from a biblical commentary written on a separate bifolium of small dimensions. Part 2 (60-187) contains various 12th-century texts: a fragment of liturgical sermons, a collection of Vitae Sanctorum and the second half of the text of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae, prefaced by the interpolation describing the birth and prophetic powers of Merlin.⁸

The DCP is on 1r-57v. All five books are preceded by titles. Glossae in titulum were added to the upper margin of 1r and between the lines of the title to Book 1; Prologi 1, 4, 5 and 6, now only just legible, were added to the right margin of 1r in glossing script. Some leaves are missing between folios 5 and 6: in Book 1, the text jumps from half way through 1p4 to 1m6.14-15, omitting the remaining lines of 1m6.⁹ A few sections of 3p11 contain sizeable erasures (30r, 14-15 and 30v, 6-31r, 15), but no text is missing here. The text of the DCP ends on 57v, line 2 with no explicit. At 57v, line 6 the same scribe added an epigraph, attributed to Walafriid Strabo. The remainder of 57v and 58r to 59v were originally blank; a variety of annotations were added to these leaves from the 10th to the 13th centuries: a late table of human knowledge (57v); 'Versus Platonis de Deo' (58r); an illustration of a wind rose, surrounded by inscriptions and excerpts, including explanatory notes on the winds from Isidore's Etymologiae (58v); a table of the lives of saints that follows in Part 2 (59r); and an early table of human knowledge (59v).

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and the metres are mostly written in multiple columns; four metres in Book 3 were written across the page as if integral with the preceding prose, with no markers to differentiate them from the prose. Neumes were added to several metres.¹⁰ Af has some rubrication and ornamental initials. A circular ink diagram of the elements and ages of man was added to the right margin of 25r, next to 3p9.¹¹ In the left margin of 43v, next to the text of 4p6, is a crudely drawn diagram of several concentric circles.¹²

Af is not ruled for glosses; but the wide margins, the spacing of the lines of text and the spacious layout of some metres, that are usually heavily glossed, confirms that Af was designed to take glosses. Some glosses have been rendered illegible, particularly on the first few folios, as a result of wear and tear. A few glosses appear to have been deliberately erased.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Af is fairly heavily glossed with Latin interlinear and marginal glosses and a very few Greek words, some embedded in the Latin glosses. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate. Often the glosses include the lemmas.

The glosses are spread very evenly throughout the text. There is a small amount of glossing in a hand contemporary with the text (i.e. second half of 9th century), especially in Book 1, but the great majority is in slightly later hands, perhaps ix/x.¹³ Much of the glossing is in the form of long marginal comments rather than interlinear words or phrases. There are frequent small errors and occasional repetition but it is generally a methodical piece of work. The general body of glossing is unusually homogeneous. The patterns of agreement with other manuscripts are the same throughout the work, with no sign of drawing on more than one glossing tradition. On the whole, the glossing is limited to one comment, often extensive, on each point or phrase rather than the multiple comments drawing on different traditions often seen in other manuscripts. An exception to this is the rendering of Greek quotations, where Af sometimes has 2 or 3 alternative interpretations. That perhaps reflects the fact that translations of the Greek are amongst the very earliest glosses in the 9th century and multiple versions are more likely to have been available from an early date. Most of the longer glosses (phrases and sentences) in Af also occur in a group of other manuscripts, of fluctuating membership but regularly including Kc Lh Pp Ta and frequently Ap Ct Fd Pq Ps Vf. There is particularly close agreement with Ta in many places, though there are also patches of close agreement with Pq (in Books 1 and 2), with Bd, with Lh and with Vf. There is very little match with the distinctive East Frankish tradition represented by Ga Na Vh and elements of Ka. The one exception are the headnotes in Book 3, which are known to have originated early in the 9th century and circulated widely from an early stage in the development of the glossing. Nor is there any substantial link with the body of insular glosses found in Vb around the same time as the Af glosses and transmitted to the English manuscripts, or with ¹¹ Similar diagrams in Fb and Mo were added next to 3m9.

Description of Manuscripts

On. Af itself has too many errors to be a source for other manuscripts, but the general impression that it gives is that it draws primarily on a single corpus of glosses to the DCP which also fed into Fd Kc Lh Ta and more selectively into Ap Ct Pp Pq Ps Pt Va Vf and others. In the version used by Af that corpus cannot be earlier than the last decades of the ninth century, given the reference to the Hungri at 5m1.2, shared with Lh, but the other manuscripts do not have that reading and the corpus may go back somewhat earlier in the 9th century.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Af.

Provenance:

The early history of Af is unclear. The 12th-century inscription ‘Robertus Pruneriensis has glosulas esse laudem sui laboris respuit’ on 1r links Af to the Benedictine monastery at St-Évroult in Normandy, where Robert of Prunelai (d. 1151) was a monk; he was successively Prior of a cell of St-Évroult at Noyon (1107-1113) and Abbot of Thorney (1113-1151) in England. An entry for Boethius’s DCP was added to the 12th-century catalogue of manuscripts at St-Évroult, which has been hitherto identified as Af.¹⁴ Nortier proposes that Af was not written at St-Évroult and that it would not have entered the abbey library until the first half of the 12th century, when it was added to the existing list of items in the catalogue.¹⁵ It had probably been at St-Évroult at least by 1113, when Robert of Prunelai became Abbot of Thorney in England. A 14th-century hand added ‘Clemens’ to the right margin of 10r. Af was acquired for the library at Alençon in the late 18th or early 19th century. The former shelfmark of St-Évroult ‘90’ was entered on 1r.

¹⁴ The catalogue, preserved on 80v of Paris, BN, lat. 10062, was printed by Delisle (1885, pp. vii-xi); see the entry for ‘Boetius de phylosophia’ (80v, line 12) at p. ix and Delisle’s note 1, identifying the DCP with the first part of Af. Delisle prints a description of the codex, which he dates to the 10th century, on pp. xxi-xxiii, note 3.

Description of Manuscripts

Ak (= Ak)

Attendorn, Kreisheimatmuseum, s.n.

Two fragmentary leaves, probably from the same manuscript, 233 x 180 mm. 24 lines.

Origin: France, s. ix, second or third third.¹⁶

Description:

One of the two leaves contains part of Book 4 of the DCP: the recto begins ‘domo uilia uasa’ in 4p1.6 and is followed by 4m1.1-9; the verso continues from 4m1.10 to 4m1.30, and is followed by the beginning of 4p2; the text here is barely legible, but possibly ends at ‘semper adesse’ in 4p2.2. The extant proses and metre are written in single columns. On the second leaf is a glossed section of a treatise on weights and measures.¹⁷ The marginal glosses to this treatise include an epigram thought to be written about Hincmar, Bishop of Laon, by his uncle Hincmar of Reims.¹⁸ The script of this note is very similar to some of the glosses to the DCP, and some script features on both leaves, particularly of the glosses, is characteristic of Breton script. Ak has some rubrication.

Ak is not ruled for glosses;¹⁹ but the wide margins and the spacing of the lines of text suggest that Ak was designed to take glosses. The leaves are damaged and badly worn, leading to the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Ak is very heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses mostly written by hands contemporary with the text. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs, others are simply written in close proximity to the lemma in the text; at least one gloss repeats the lemma it annotates.

Ak shows that very extensive glossing had developed well before the end of the 9th century. Ak reflects numerous strands of glossing: those found only in Ak and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, possibly originating with Ak and not found in other Continental manuscripts; glosses from the Af tradition; glosses from the Vc tradition; and glosses shared with the Fd group. Ak is the earliest example of heavy glossing and is one of the most heavily glossed of all pre-1100 manuscripts of the DCP - perhaps the most heavily glossed. The errors suggest that the glossator was copying existing glosses and the duplicate glossing shows that he (in Ak itself or an antecedent) was conflating more than one glossing tradition. Around half the longer glosses are from a tradition known otherwise only from Anglo-Saxon

Provenance: Unknown.

Description of Manuscripts

Ap (= A)

Antwerp, Museum Plantin-Moretus, M. 16.8 (olim lat. 190 [Salle iii.55])

116 folios, 290 x 215 mm. 18 lines.

Origin: England (Canterbury or Abingdon), s. x^{ex}/xiⁱⁿ.²⁰

This manuscript was probably once bound with Antwerp, Museum Plantin-Moretus, M. 16. 2 [47 (Salle iii.68)] + London, British Library, Additional 32246, and Brussels, Bibl. Royale, 1650.

Description:

The DCP is on 1r-116v. Books 2, 3 and 4 are preceded by titles, and though space was left for the titles of Books 1 and 5, these were not supplied. The text of the DCP ends on 116v, line 5 with no explicit. Glossae in titulum were added to Book 1, on 1r by a contemporary scribe. 'Boethius | De Consolat.' at the foot of 1r was added in the 16th century. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and the metres are mostly written in a single column. Two narrow half sheets were added to take glosses only: the first for glosses to 3m9 is in quire 7 (f. 55), whose recto is replete with glosses, finishing on line 13 of the verso; the second for glosses to 3m12 is in quire 9 (folio 68), where the recto remains blank and the verso contains only one incomplete gloss. It is conceivable that much of the folio that remains blank (96r, lines 1-13) above the opening of Book 5 was left not only for the title to Book 5, which may have occupied roughly 3 to 4 lines, but also for an anticipated overflow of glosses to the normally heavily glossed 4m7, which precedes immediately. Ap has some rubrication. A list of incipits from the proses and metres of the five books of the DCP were added in the 14th century on 116v.

Ap is partially ruled for glosses: the left and right margins were ruled for glosses, but the upper and lower margins were not. The upper edges of the manuscript were badly damaged either by vermin or moisture, resulting in the loss of parts of a great many glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, Old English, Old French(?)

Ap is very heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses and a couple of Greek words, embedded in the Latin glosses, written in hands contemporary with the text. There are three OE glosses in Ap (one on 25r and two on 36r) and one possibly Old French gloss (25r).²¹ Both the Old French and OE glosses on 25r were written by the same scribe

²¹ Ker (Catalogue, no. 3) reports the two on f. 36r, 2m7 ('riclicum' and 'waclicum'), but not 'uuiife' on 25r, 2p4; also on 25r, 2p4 'en altre' may be Old French. Porter (2002, pp. 7-8) shows that a Frenchman, Herbert, was at Abingdon in the early 11th century, and that who wrote the adjacent Latin glosses. The OE glosses on 36r are written by a scribe who does not otherwise write glosses on this page. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemmas they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate or are added wherever there is space. Occasionally the marginal glosses repeat the lemmas.

The glosses are fairly evenly spread throughout the whole work, though lessening slightly in the last book. Many of these glosses, however, especially the longer marginal ones, occur twice or even three or four times, on the same or contiguous pages. Generally it would seem that several scribes operating around the same time copied glosses extensively from two or more exemplars without checking whether the manuscript already had the glosses being transcribed; and occasionally the same scribe would add duplicate glosses on the same page. Sometimes batches of additional glosses were transferred wholesale with their own reference system, sometimes they lack references and are slotted into gaps in the margins. Two main sources possibly account for the great bulk of the glosses: (a) a corpus of glosses (preserved in one heavily glossed manuscript or a group of manuscripts) that was also extensively used by other English manuscripts, notably Ck Ge Pb Pn but also Ct Er Ps; and (b) a corpus of glosses that occur extensively in Continental manuscripts but not generally in English ones apart from Ps, which regularly has the same glosses as Ap though it is not closely related. Of the glosses from (a), a great many are found only in English manuscripts and presumably originated in England, but many others also occur in Continental manuscripts. Ap often shows a particular affinity with Pb (from Christ Church Canterbury) though there are also occasional matches specifically with Ck. Those from (b) occur in a range of Continental manuscripts including East Frankish examples such as Fd Kc Ld as well as West Frankish ones and Ps. Their source was presumably a manuscript, or group of manuscripts, of the DCP that was available in England but not used by other English manuscripts apart from Ps, where it was similarly (but independently?) used to supplement material derived from English sources. There are also a smaller number of glosses unique to Ap which may have originated with Ap or have been copied from a further source. Ap was itself the source, it seems, for the glosses in Oa in Books 1 and 2, which were apparently entered at Exeter in the late eleventh century. Ap may have been borrowed for the purpose since its connections are otherwise with Abingdon.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Ap.

Provenance:

Ap was probably in England at least until the 15th century as suggested by notes of this date referring to Trivet (36r) and to Richard Swineshead (111v), and a long annotation on 72r ending 'hoc scripsit sutton'.²² It is thought that the manuscript was subsequently owned by the Antwerp merchant and humanist Theodorus Pulmannus (1507-1581), who produced several editions of classical texts for Christopher Plantin, including one of the DCP, related manuscripts from there contain French glossarial interpretations.

published by Plantin in 1562.²³ After Pulmannus's death in 1581, part, or possibly all his library passed into Plantin's possession, including *Ap.*²⁴ Several copies of works by Boethius, including the DCP, were listed in two old catalogues (dated 1592 and 1650) of the manuscripts in the Plantin-Moretus collection.²⁵ Many manuscripts thought to have been in Pulmannus's collection have associations with Oxford colleges, and may have been taken to the Continent by English Catholic recusants.²⁶

Description of Manuscripts

Ba (= Ba1)

Bamberg, Staatsbibliothek Msc. Class. 2 (olim M.IV.2)

54 folios, 295 x 213 mm. 18 lines.

Origin: possibly northern Germany, s. x, second half.²⁷

Description:

Ba contains an imperfect copy of the DCP on 2r-52v. Prologi 1 and 5 on 1r-1v, and glossae in titulum, written en bloc, on 1v are followed by the title to Book 1 on 1v. Prologus 5, which precedes Prologus 1 on 1r, is written in a smaller script than the rest and may have been added by another scribe. Book 1 begins at the top of 2r with the first line of metre 1. Several folios are lacking from Ba, between 3 and 4, 20 and 21, 38 and 39: in Book 1, the text jumps from 1p2 to 1p4; in Books 2 and 3, the text jumps from 2p7 to 3p7; and in Book 4, the text jumps from 4p4 to 4p7.²⁸ All but Book 3, whose opening is missing, are preceded by titles. The explicit on 52v is followed by an epigraph, attributed to Walafrid Strabo. A line was drawn beneath this verse and the final line of Boethius's 1m1, 'qui cecidit stabili non erat ille gradu', was added here by another scribe. A fragment of Ambrose's De excessu fratris Satyri follows on 53r-54v.²⁹

The first three folios of the manuscript are written in double columns and from folio 4 onwards the prose text of the DCP is written in a single column. The layout of the metres is variable, with most written in multiple columns. Ba has some rubrication. 'Simon iohannes' is written twice on 36r by a hand contemporary with the text.

Ba is not ruled for glosses, but the spacing between the lines of text is fairly wide. Parts of a few marginal glosses have been lost to trimming and the loss of about 6 or 8 letters of a text correction in the outer margin of 46v indicates that the outer margins were heavily trimmed.

Glosses: Latin

Ba is lightly glossed with Latin glosses entered in the 10th and 11th centuries by several scribes. Much of the glossing is on 1m1 and 3p8 to 3p9 and the glosses are mostly written between the lines, with a few written in the margins. Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, which are often given nearly as much prominence as the titles to the books. The marginal glosses are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

The glosses are a mixture of East Frankish glosses, West Frankish glosses of an Af type and some entries of a primarily Anglo-Saxon type.

Provenance:

The early history of Ba is unknown. The DCP was in Bamberg by 1611, where it was bound

Description of Manuscripts

Bb (= Ba)

Bamberg, Staatsbibliothek Msc. Class. 3 (olim M.V.12)

183 folios, 228 x 168/175 mm. 20 lines (Part 1).

Origin: possibly Trier or the Lower Rhine region, s. x, end.³⁰

Description:

The manuscript containing a glossed copy of the DCP forms Part 1 (ff. 1-90) of a codex now made up of three originally independent segments. Parts 2 (containing a 9th-century copy of Jerome's translation of the Libri Salomonis) and 3 (containing a 9th-century copy of homiletic excerpts from Isidore, Gregory the Great, and others) appear to have circulated together from an early stage.

The DCP is on 1r-90v. Book 1 begins at the top of 1r with the first line of metre 1 and ends at the foot of 90v, where its explicit is barely legible. Though in its present state the manuscript lacks a title to Book 1, the survival of a few glossae in titulum on 1r suggests there may once have been a title on a preceding leaf. The remaining four books are all preceded by titles. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the metres are mostly written in a single column, with a few written in multiple columns. Bb has some rubrication. There is an ink drawing of concentric circles at the foot of 69r³¹ and of a face on 87r.

Bb is not ruled for glosses except on the first leaf, which shows faint traces of a few lines added to the upper and outer margins to take glosses. However, judging by the loss of about 6 or more letters from the rubric on 15r, the manuscript originally had wide margins and the spacing between the text lines is generous. Parts of some marginal glosses have been lost to trimming.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Bb is lightly glossed with marginal and interlinear Latin glosses added in the 11th century by several scribes. A single interlinear OHG gloss was written on f. 30v (to 3m1.2) also in the 11th century.³² A single Greek word, written in the same reddish orange as the rubrics, was added on 15r (to 2m1.1). The thinly-dispersed additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Where the leaves haven't been trimmed, it is evident that a few marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

A few sections of Book 1 (1m1, 1p1, 1p3 and 1p4), the second part of Book 3 (from 3m7 to the end) and 4p6 and 4m7 contain several glosses. Longer glosses appear mainly in

Description of Manuscripts

1m1 and 1p1 and 3p8 to 3p9, 3p10 to 3p12, otherwise Bb has mainly short glosses and headnotes. The longer glosses draw partly on the West Frankish traditions represented by Af and Fd, occasionally on an East Frankish tradition. The headnotes are shared with Ka and Lh. Generally, Bb seems to reflect the West Frankish tradition as it developed in East Frankish areas.

Provenance:

The early history of Bb is unknown. The DCP is thought to have been in Bamberg by the 11th century, where the OHG gloss on f. 30v may have been added.³³ The present codex of three originally independent parts was bound together in 1611 in a white leather binding with the golden coat of arms of the Bamberger Dombibliothek. The codex subsequently became the property of the Bamberger Staatsbibliothek, when the monasteries and convents of the former bishopric became the property of the Bavarian State in 1803.

Description of Manuscripts

Bc (= B)

Bern, Burgerbibliothek, Cod. 179

64 folios, 310 x 225 mm. 23-25 lines.

Origin: northwest France (near Brittany), s. ix, about the third third.³⁴

Description:

Bc contains a glossed copy of the DCP written in the 9th century and some ancillary texts added in the 10th century. The DCP is on 1v-63v. Prologi 1, 5 and 6, and glossae in titulum, written en bloc, were added in the 10th century to the originally blank 1r by several scribes; further notes were added to 1r in the 11th century. The text of the DCP ends at the foot of 63v with an explicit. A glossed fragment of Priscian's Partitiones XII uersuum Aeneidos principalium was added to 64r-v in the 10th century.

All five books are preceded by titles. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column. The metres are mostly written in a single column, some are written in multiple columns; others are written in long prose lines, with no clear delineation of the verse lines. Neumes were added to 1m2. Bc has an opening ornamental initial and some rubrication. On 33r there is an ink drawing of a scribe writing and on 48v there are two ink drawings of concentric circles, of which one is intersected by a cross in its inner circle.³⁵ Pen trials and scribbles added to 47v, 61v, 62v and 63v in the 10th and 11th centuries, include some Latin and Germanic names.

Bc is only occasionally ruled for glosses, but the space between the lines of text is fairly generous and the outer and lower margins are of quite generous proportions.

Glosses: Latin

Bc is fairly heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses entered in the 9th and 10th centuries by several scribes, but primarily by a single scribe of the s. ix/x. The main glossator is decidedly idiosyncratic, presenting his marginal glosses in varied geometric shapes, such as triangles, or writing them sideways on to the page, sometimes in both directions (i.e. with the page turned 90 degrees clockwise or anticlockwise or both). He uses a variety of different forms for the same letter, such as 'a', 'g' and 'r'. At least one glossator uses a flat-headed 'g'

³⁴ Bischoff, Katalog 1, no. 548. There is general agreement on the early date of Bc (but see Weinberger (1934), Bieler (1984), Jeudy (1991, p. 485): s. ix/x and Courcelle 1939, p. 122; 1967, p. 406: s. xi). Some scholars agree with Brittany as a possible place of origin, others have also proposed the Loire region: Homburger (1962, p. 131), Troncarelli (2005, no. 111), Mostert (1989, p. 61, BF 100), Jeudy (1991, p. 485), CB 2 (Switzerland, no. 17), Wittig (2007, p. 187); Papahagi (2010, pp. 33-34, n.76, pp. 51, 54, 63, 147-51, 175) specifies Fleury. Homburger's evidence for a Fleury connection is based on what he sees as the work of a Breton illustrator in the manuscript and the script of a gloss on folio 1r, which is apparently characteristic of some manuscripts known to have been written at Fleury; however, according to Bischoff the glosses on folio 1r were added in the late 10th century. In her review of Homburger, Pellegrin (1962, pp. 205-207) finds his attributions to Fleury based on script and decoration somewhat fragile.

³⁵ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Bc at pp. 147-151.

Description of Manuscripts

and abbreviations characteristic of Breton script. A few glosses on 42r include Tironian notes. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by a variety of symbols, including letters of the alphabet, Tironian note forms, and arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols. Occasionally the glosses include the lemmas.

There are inexplicable gaps in the glossing in Bc, so that 1p4 and 1m7 are hardly glossed at all, and likewise the pages containing most of 3p2 and 3m2, even though there is heavy glossing in, apparently, several hands on the text before and after these gaps. Further gaps include from the middle of 3p10 to the end of Book 4 and from 5p3.9 to the end. It is hard to tell whether these odd gaps, which correspond sometimes to divisions in the text and sometimes to a new page in the manuscript but within a prose or metre, are due to lack of interest on the part of the glossator(s) or lack of material, or to some accidental interruption in the process of glossing. But whichever it is, it suggests that the glossing is a more coherent and individual exercise than the nature of the hand(s) would otherwise suggest; that is, if the glossing is the work of several hands, the subsequent ones followed the lead of the earlier one who left the gaps, or they were relying on the same defective sources and had no further material.

Most of the glosses in Bc recur in other manuscripts, usually many others. The longer marginal glosses draw generally on the West Frankish tradition. Affiliations with subgroups of this tradition, such as that with Pc and Pk in Books 1 and 2 (but not after the middle of Book 2), appear occasionally but not consistently. There are some very occasional early glosses of East Frankish origin such as the headnotes to 3p2 and 3p5 and one of the 2 translations of the Greek at 5m2.1. And after the gap in glossing covering most of 3p2 and 3m2 there is a sequence of glosses otherwise found only or mainly in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. And throughout, but especially in Book 2, there are short glosses and occasional longer ones that otherwise appear only in the Regensburg manuscript Mb. Given that these different affiliations don't correspond to differences of hand, it would seem that the glossator(s) of Bc drew on an already mixed corpus of glosses that derived mainly from the West Frankish Af tradition of the 9th century but incorporated some from early East Frankish traditions and some from a manuscript that came to influence the Anglo-Saxon tradition.

Provenance:

Bc was at Fleury by the 11th century, when the names of two monks known to be at Fleury (Isembardus and Frater Hisembertus) were added to 1r.³⁶ It was annotated by the Orléans lawyer, bibliophile and scholar Pierre Daniel (1530-1603) on 1r; Daniel had in effect salvaged numerous manuscripts from Fleury in the 16th century, during the sacking of the monastery by the Huguenots. Bc subsequently came to Bern by at least 1632 in the collection of another French scholar, originally from Orléans, Jacques Bongars (1554-1612).

³⁶ Homburger 1962, p. 131. Pellegrin (1962, p. 207) notes that these two names were also added to another Fleury manuscript at the beginning of the 11th century, Vatican, Reg. lat. 1586, 1r (see also Helena Gamer's review of Homburger in Speculum 38, no. 2 (1963), pp. 361-365 at 365).

Description:

Bd contains a glossed copy of the DCP on 1r-83v. The 11th-century copy, which lacks the last few lines of the text, ends at the foot of 83v in the midst of 5p6.42 and the missing text as well as an explicit was supplied in the lower margin by a 14th-century scribe.³⁸ Each book begins on a new page and though space was left for the titles of each, none was added. Instead of the title to Book 1, the rubric Fortuito casu pulsus de sede priori Manlius hic recipit solantis verba sophiae, written in green, precedes metre 1 on 1r; the rubric is unique to Bd. An excerpt from the introduction to the Lupus treatise on the metres of Boethius (Peiper, lines 1-6) in the upper margin of 1r, lines 1-2 is followed by Distinctio 4 on lines 3-4. A gap of 9 blank lines on 43r follows the end of 3m9, which is lightly glossed by a contemporary scribe. Immediately following these blank lines, the scribe of the text wrote a sequence of glossae collectae on 3m9 from 43r-45r.

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column. The metres are mostly written in single columns, with a few written in multiple columns; the verse lines are sometimes carelessly written out of order and occasionally lines have been omitted. Neumes were added to 1m5 and 2m2. Bd has some rubrication and has a few ornamental initials. The last few folios are damaged.

Bd is only sporadically ruled for glosses. The space between the lines of text is fairly generous and, of the wide margins, only the outer and upper margins were ruled for glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Bd is fairly heavily glossed with Latin marginal and interlinear glosses and a couple of Greek words entered by several contemporary scribes. Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

There is a moderate amount of glossing in Books 1 to 3, with the first 18 folios being particularly heavily glossed; thereafter the glosses are mostly short and there are none after 4p2. The glossae collectae on 3m9 are written in the same script as the text on leaves integral to the quire. Many of the longer glosses are unique to Bd. Those glosses that do recur elsewhere show links with the West Frankish traditions of Af and Vc, and occasionally with Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, and there are occasional close agreements in glosses with Pq and in variants with Ph, both late copies from France.

Bd is heavily annotated by later medieval scribes.

Description of Manuscripts

Provenance:

The early history of Bd is unknown. An inscription on the foot of 1r notes that the manuscript was donated to the Sorbonne by ‘Magister Egidius de Tyllia’ in the 14th century and it has also been identified with an entry made in the 1338 catalogue of the unchained codices in the parva libraria of the Sorbonne.³⁹ The manuscript came to Bern by at least 1632 in the collection of the French scholar and humanist, originally from Orléans, Jacques Bongars (1554-1612).⁴⁰

⁴⁰ Supposedly owned by the Célestines of Metz (see Jeudy 1991, p. 485; Troncarelli 2005, no. 112; CB 2 (Switzerland, no. 18). Hagen (Catalogus, p. 239) makes no mention of this in his catalogue, nor does Brayer (1960, p. 42, n. 3), although Brayer includes Bern, Burgerbibliothek MS 421, another late manuscript of the DCP, where there is a clear ownership mark of the Célestines of Metz at the foot of 9r.

Description of Manuscripts

Bn (= Bn)

Berlin, Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin – Preussischer Kulturbesitz, Fragment 83
Fragmentary bifolium, 212 x 167 mm; of the second leaf only the inner half is preserved, currently 212 x 102 mm.⁴¹ 28 lines.
Origin: Unknown, s. x.⁴²

Description:

Bn was used as a pastedown in a 15th-century manuscript binding. The first of the two leaves contains the end of 2p8 (2p8.6 ‘aestimandum putas ... amicos inuenisti’), all of 2m8, the explicit for Book 2, the incipit for Book 3, all of 3p1 and 3m1 of the DCP. The second leaf contains the end of 3p3 (3p3.18 ‘penitus nam si haec’ ... 3p3.19 ‘praestare credatis’), all of 3m3 and 3p4 and the first two lines of 3m4. Since this second leaf is only about two-thirds of its original size, parts of the proses have been lost in the heavily trimmed outer margins. The prose sections, 3m1 and 3m3 are written in single columns, and 2m8 and 3m4 are written in double columns. Bn has some rubrication.

Bn does not appear to have been ruled to take glosses.⁴³ However, the wide margins and the spacing of the lines of text suggests that Bn was designed to take glosses. In addition to the heavy trimming of the second leaf, the leaves are worn and darkened in places, show traces of glue and are slightly damaged, leading to the loss of parts of, or entire glosses.

Glosses: Latin, OHG

The fragment Bn is heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses entered in the 10th and 11th centuries. A single interlinear OHG gloss was written on f.1v (to 3m1.3), probably added in the 10th century.⁴⁴ Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, which are given much prominence. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs, others are simply written in close proximity to the lemma in the text.

Bn draws consistently on the East Frankish tradition as witnessed by Ec Ka and Lh.
A few late-medieval annotations were added to Bn.

Provenance:

The early history of Bn is unknown. According to a note at the foot of 1v, the leaves were detached in 1888 from the binding of Berlin MS. theol. lat. fol. 120, which was a 15th-century copy of Hieronymus, Epistolae. The Jerome manuscript was already a part of the manuscript collection of the Berlin State Library in 1688, as recorded in the Catalogus Manuscriptorum created by its first librarian, Johann Raue.

⁴¹ Since we were unable to examine this fragment in person, I have relied on B&S and Winter (1986, p. 21) for its measurements.

⁴³ This observation is based on examining a reproduction of the fragment.

⁴⁴ B&S no. 43a: dialect indeterminable; place of origin is unknown.

Cc (= C)

Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 214

123 fragmentary folios, now mounted on paper. 18 lines.

Origin: England (Canterbury), s. xiⁱⁿ; ff. 78-83, 122 supplied, s. xi med.⁴⁵

Description:

The glossed copy of the DCP on 1r-122r is imperfect and fragmentary. All five books are preceded by titles and the text of the DCP ends with an explicit on 122r. Most of the leaves were badly damaged by rodents, resulting in the loss of a good deal of the text and glosses, and some leaves were lost entirely;⁴⁶ the leaves are presently mounted on paper. Folios 78 to 83 and 122 are supply leaves. On 1r glossae in titulum, written en bloc, were added to Book 1 by a contemporary scribe. Pencilled notes, now very faint, were added at the foot of 122r; ‘alfica’ was pencilled on 122v; inked pen trials and notes, including the name ‘Rodbertus’ written three times, were added to 123v by various scribes in the 11th to the 13th centuries.

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the metres are mostly written in a single column, with a couple written in double columns. Cc has some rubrication.

Cc is partially ruled for glosses: the left and right margins of Books 1 and 2 were ruled to take glosses; in these two books an extra horizontal line was ruled for the interlinear gloss between each set of lines ruled for the text. The ruling for both the marginal and interlinear glosses stops on 36v at the beginning of Book 3.

Glosses: Latin, Old English

Cc is fairly heavily glossed. The marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin were entered by several contemporary scribes. The OE interlinear glosses were added by several scribes, but mainly added by a single scribe of the early 11th century, probably somewhat later than the Latin text.⁴⁷ Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. Speech indicators embedded in the text appear where the leaves were supplied. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close

⁴⁷ Ker, Catalogue, no. 51. We do not include these OE glosses in our corpus as they have been printed by Hale 1978.

Description of Manuscripts

proximity to the lemma they annotate. Sometimes the glosses include the lemmas.

The Latin glosses were entered primarily in the first two books of the DCP and a fairly continuous interlinear OE gloss was added in the first part of Book 3. From 1r to the end of 25r (part way through 2p5), there is fairly extensive marginal and interlinear glossing; only a handful of interlinear Latin glosses survive from the remaining sections of Book 2. In Book 3, which begins on 36r, there are a few sporadic interlinear glosses in Latin, but the majority of the glosses are in OE. The OE glosses stop abruptly above the first word on 53r (part way through 3p9), and a few more OE glosses were added to 3m12 (68rv). On 54v Latin annotations were added to an inaccurate transcription of parts of 3m9 in the upper margin, and a tree diagram explains the 'anima triplicis naturae'. Books 4 and 5 contain a sprinkling of interlinear glosses in Latin. Though much of the glossing in Books 1 and 2 has been lost, especially in the margins, Cc appears to have been heavily glossed in line with Ck and Ge. Most of the glosses also occur in the other English manuscripts such as Ap Ck Ge etc and draw on the same ultimate sources. There are no consistent signs of links with any particular manuscript within the English group.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Cc.

Provenance:

The early history of Cc is unknown. It was probably given to Corpus Christi College by Daniel Rogers (d. 1591).

Cambridge, University Library, Gg.5.35

446 folios, 223 x 152 mm. 31 lines (+ fragment, 220 x 147 mm. 40 lines.)

Origin: England (St Augustine's, Canterbury), s. xi med.

Description:

This codex, which is made up of 4 parts, contains a wide range of classical and medieval texts.⁴⁸ An imperfect glossed copy of the DCP is in the original Part 1 (1-209) of the manuscript, which contains primarily poetic texts; the text of the DCP begins on folio 170, which is the last leaf of a quire and ends with an explicit on 209v.⁴⁹ Part 4 (432r-446v), which is imperfect and which also comprises a collection of mostly poetic texts known as the 'Cambridge Songs', originally included extracts from the DCP at 442. This leaf, also known as the Frankfurt leaf, was detached from Cg in the 19th century and subsequently recovered in 1982.⁵⁰ It contains metres written in double columns from Books 1 to 3 of the DCP; 1m1 and 1m2 are complete, the rest mostly include the first 4 lines of each metre, and a few include the opening lines up to a maximum of 7 lines. In addition to a copy of the first six lines of 1m7 written in the second column of the folio, its first four lines were added again in the margin of this leaf. Six of the first eight metres written on the recto are neumed, and the second marginal copy of 1m7 was marked with a different set of neumes.⁵¹ None of the metres on the verso are neumed. There are significant variant readings between the text of the DCP in Part 1 and the Frankfurt leaf. There are no glosses on this fragment.

The DCP is on 170r-209v. All five books are preceded by titles and Book 1 begins at the top of 170r with the first line of metre 1. Glossae in titulum were added in the margin of 170r. As a result of a missing leaf between 180 and 181 much of 2p5 is lost.⁵² The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the metres are mostly written in long prose lines with no clear delineation of the verse lines, and a few are written in single or multiple columns. Cg has some rubrication.

Cg was not ruled for glosses and the spacing between the lines is limited, but the margins are fairly wide. The outer edges of some manuscript leaves were torn along prick lines or otherwise damaged, resulting in the loss of parts of several glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Old English

Cg is heavily glossed in Latin by contemporary scribes, with both interlinear and marginal glosses. A single OE gloss was written between the lines on f. 203r (to 5m1.1) also in the 11th century.⁵³ Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Though there is adequate space in the margins for glosses, the majority of comments are written between the lines in a fairly large script, resulting in a rather crowded manuscript. Many marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

The preponderance of Cg's glosses is in the first three books, with proportionately fewer long entries than in many manuscripts, no doubt reflecting the lack of space. Most of those glosses are shared with other English manuscripts such as Ap Ck Ge and draw on the same sources, including at least two traditions of Continental glossing and a corpus of glosses found only or mainly in English manuscripts. Frequently Cg has an adapted, often abridged, version of the longer glosses seen in the other manuscripts. In addition, Cg has a sprinkling of unique glosses. In Book 4 only, Cg shows close agreement with a sequence of glosses entered in Ge, mostly in a different hand from the usual one in the latter manuscript, and in some cases drawing on a corpus witnessed also by French manuscripts such as Pc and Pp.

Provenance:

The pressmark 'Liber Sancti Augustini Cant. Di xj Gra ij' on f. iii verso, written in a 12th-century script, confirms that the manuscript was at St Augustine's, Canterbury at that time. Cg remained at St Augustine's throughout the 15th century and probably until the Dissolution of the abbey in 1538.⁵⁴ Its provenance thereafter, until it was acquired by the Cambridge University Library in 1672, is unclear.

⁵³ OE 'cludon' glosses 'scopulis'; to our knowledge, this gloss has not hitherto been noticed.

⁵⁴ The antiquarian John Leland (c1503-1552) evidently took notes from Cg, which he probably recorded not long before the Dissolution of the abbey on 30 July 1538. For details of Cg's history at St Augustine's, see Barker-Benfield (2008, vol. 3, pp. 1673-77 and 1684-86).

Description of Manuscripts

Ck (= C4)

Cambridge, University Library, Kk.3.21

104 folios, 300 x 235 mm. 22 lines.

Origin: England (Canterbury or Abingdon), s. x^{ex}/xiⁱⁿ.⁵⁵

Description:

The DCP is on 1r-103r. All five books are preceded by titles and the text of the DCP ends on 103r with no explicit. On 1r glossae in titulum were added to Book 1 by a contemporary scribe. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the metres, all written in rustic capitals, are mostly written in a single column, with a handful written in double columns. In addition to some rubrication, the opening initials to each book and that to 3p9 were written in gold leaf.

Three crudely drawn ink diagrams of circles, two with spokes, are evident on 77v, in the upper and left margins, next to the text of 4p6.⁵⁶ A diagram of concentric circles in the form of a maze containing Latin hexametrical verses for the Assumption of the Virgin was added to 103v in the 11th century, along with 12 lines of explanatory verses above and on either side of the diagram. The verses include the line 'Inserere Siweardum caeli septemplicis aula', and the explanatory notes include the note 'hanc tibi nunc Siwearde pater pro munere dedi'. On 104v the Old English 'byrnstan beoffan sunu ælfnod ælrices sunu æt hrocanlea' was written twice, once in ink and later in lead pencil; the names of winds in Latin and Old English were added by a scribe in the mid-11th century half way down 104v; untexted neumes and pen trials of varying dates were also added to this originally blank leaf.

Ck is partially ruled for glosses: the left and right margins were ruled for glosses, but the upper and lower margins were not. Between each set of lines ruled for the text an extra horizontal line was ruled for the interlinear gloss.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, Old English

Ck is very heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses and a few Greek words, mostly embedded in the Latin glosses, written in hands contemporary with the text. About a hundred OE glosses were also entered: with the exception of two inked glosses, they were written in dry point and mostly written between the lines; of those written in the inner CB 1 (no. 9): c. 1000; Love (2012, p. 84), Gneuss and Lapidge (2014, no. 23): s. xi¹ or s. xi med.; Troncarelli (2005, no. 73): s. xi in; Weinberger (1934), Ker (Catalogue, no. 24): s. xi. Some scholars have accepted Ker's attribution of Ck to be 'almost certainly from Abingdon', however, Godden (2011, p. 74) argues that 'affiliations with other manuscripts suggest it may have been written and glossed at Canterbury before moving to Abingdon'; see also Gwara (1977), who argues for Canterbury origins for other Anglo-Saxon manuscripts attributed to Abingdon by Ker.

⁵⁶ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Ck at 154-55 and 170-171; Papahagi reports a further dry-point drawing of concentric circles on the same page, which is now apparently obscured by a late gloss.

Description of Manuscripts

margins, parts may be lost in the gutters.⁵⁷ Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are for the most part linked to the lemma they annotate by a variety of linking symbols, including letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols. In some cases the glosses were added to the folio either before or after the text to which they were relevant. A few marginal glosses are written in geometric shapes; one set of glosses written on 10r is particularly noteworthy as it appears in precisely the same shape in Ge on 12r.

The glossing in Ck is sustained through the whole work but becomes a little lighter in the last two books. There are virtually no glosses unique to Ck; the great majority occur also in many of the other English manuscripts, notably Ap Ge Pb Pn Ps but also often Ct and Er, and Oa where it occurs. There are some signs that some of the glosses in Ap and Ge may have been copied from Ck itself but probably not the majority of them.

There are at least three strands of glossing that occur especially in the group of English manuscripts Ck, and mainly Ap Ge Pb Pn Ps:⁵⁸ glosses occurring in a range of Continental manuscripts reflecting the West Frankish tradition; glosses that otherwise only occur in Vb; and glosses that occur only in Ck and this particular group of English manuscripts.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Ck.

Provenance:

Ck may have been copied and glossed at Canterbury before it went to Abingdon, where it was by the first half of the 11th century: the two references to ‘Siward’ added to 103v in the 11th century probably refer to Sigeward, abbot of Abingdon from 1030-44, and the reference to ‘hrocanlea’ also added in the 11th century to 104r, has been identified with Rockley in Besselsleigh, near to and belonging to Abingdon.⁵⁹ Ck was in the manuscript collection of the Cambridge University Library by the 16th century: identified with No. 37 in the 1556-7 library catalogue; and Thomas James’s Ecloga Oxonio-Cantabrigiensis published in 1600, contains the entry (no. 101, p. 58) ‘Anicii Manlii, Seuerini, Boetii, lib.5. cum commentario, omnia bene antiqua’.

⁵⁸ These have been discussed more fully in the ‘Development of the Glosses’.

Ct (= C2)

Cambridge, Trinity College, O.3.7 (1179)

52 folios, 290 x 225 mm. 28 lines.

Origin: England (possibly St Augustine's, Canterbury?), s. x, second half.⁶⁰

Description:

The DCP is on 2r-51r, immediately followed by notes on the Trinity partly excerpted from Augustine and Hilary of Poitiers, and written as if part of the DCP (51r, 22-51v, 20), whose explicit comes after it (51v, 20-22).⁶¹ In the inner margin of 51r, alongside the line of text where the DCP ends and the passage on the Trinity begins, a contemporary scribe adds 'hic liber feliciter finit'. All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. On 2r glossae in titulum were added to Book 1 by a contemporary scribe. On 1v Prologi 5, 6 and 4, written in glossing script, are followed by a brief sequence of glossae collectae to 1m1. A version of Prologus 1 follows the explicit on 51v;⁶² that in turn is followed directly by the Lupus treatise on the metres (51v-52v); and finally the epitaph of Elpis (Epitaphium 1), preceded by the rubric 'Epi[t]aphium Helpis coniugis Boetii' was entered by another scribe (52v).

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the metres, all written in rustic capitals, are mostly written in multiple columns and a few are written in single columns. Neumes were added to 1m4. Ct has some rubrication and some opening initials are elaborately drawn. On 1r is a full-page ink drawing, highlighted with red, of Philosophy holding a book in her right hand and a sceptre in her left. In the bottom right corner of the folio where 3m9 is written (24v), is a diagram of the elements, and in the lower margin of the folio where 4p7 is written (42r) is a dry-point figure of a face.

Ct is only occasionally ruled for glosses, but the outer and lower margins and the spacing of the lines of text are of quite generous proportions. The text space is framed by double vertical bounding lines with a further single vertical line at the outer edges of the leaves creating a column to take glosses; this column is sporadically ruled for glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, Old English

Ct is heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses entered primarily by a scribe contemporary with the text; others were added in the 11th century by several different scribes. There are also a few Greek words, some embedded in the Latin glosses. Four OE glosses (on 13v, 14r, 26r, 28r) were written by at least two different scribes in the second half

⁶² The opening sentence of this version of Prologus 1, which appears in several manuscripts, is similar to that of Prologus 6, which has led some scholars to identify it mistakenly as Prologus 6 (Troncarelli 2005, no. 70; Wright and Hollis 2004, no. 90).

Description of Manuscripts

of the 11th century.⁶³ Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres (mostly entered in glossing script), rhetorical terms and speech indicators. On the whole the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; most of these linking symbols were written in red (now partly oxidised); other marginal glosses are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols. Some glosses, including those in the glossae collectae on 1v, include the lemma they annotate.

Glosses were added throughout the entire text of Ct, and stop only where the notes on the Trinity begin, between the end of 5p6 (51r) and the explicit (51v); however, the glossing becomes slightly less intensive in the last two books, especially Book 5. The main body of glossing seems to be a conflation of at least two traditions. Most of the longer glosses derive from the 9th-century Continental tradition represented by Af and Vc; where those two differ, Ct agrees sometimes with one, sometimes with the other. A good proportion of these Af/Vc glosses are also in other Anglo-Saxon manuscripts such as Ap Ck Ge Pb Pn etc, but Ct shows little sign of affiliation with any of these and seems to have drawn on the Continental traditions independently of them, though it does often show close links with Er. Interspersed with these are glosses which are characteristic of the Fd Ld Pt Vf group. In addition to this main strand, but in the same hand, are glosses found only or mainly in the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts such as Ck Ge Pb etc, though Ct rarely picks up the distinctive glosses that Ck etc seem to have derived from Vb after it reached England, or the glosses in the late-ninth-century fragment Ak which recur very regularly in Ck etc in 4p1 and 4m1. These glosses become less common after 4m3 and are almost totally absent from Book 5. It would seem that the glosses in Ct were copied from a manuscript in which a substantial body of Af/Vc type glosses had been supplemented by a smaller collection of glosses which may have largely originated in England and were also used by other Anglo-Saxon manuscripts from Canterbury and elsewhere.

Provenance:

The identification of Ct with no. 993 in the catalogue of the library of St Augustine's, Canterbury, compiled ca. 1495, places it there in the 15th century. Though the press mark has not survived, the opening word of the second folio 'limen' agrees with that of the Trinity manuscript.⁶⁴ Ct was part of a large bequest of manuscripts presented to Trinity College in 1738 by Roger Gale (1672-1744), who was a Fellow of Trinity, a scholar and a Yorkshire antiquarian and who had inherited a vast collection of manuscripts from his father Thomas Gale (1635/6-1702).⁶⁵

⁶³ The glosses on 14r/22 and 28r/5 are printed by Meritt (1945, no. 12); to our knowledge those on 13v/8 (2p5.15.1) 'sculan beon' glossing 'debentur' and 26r/10 (3p10.21) 'tala' glossing 'ratiocinatione' have not been recorded previously.

Description of Manuscripts

Eb (= E)

Einsiedeln, Stiftsbibliothek 149 (558)

178 pages, 238 x 182 mm. 24 lines (Part 2).

Origin: Uncertain, probably Reichenau, s. x.⁶⁶

Description:

This codex, which is made up of 2 originally independent parts, contains works of Prosper of Aquitaine, Boethius and Lupus of Ferrières. Part 1 (pp. 1-51) contains a 10th-century copy of Prosper's Epigrammata, his Versus in laudem and Versus Prosperi ad coniugem suam (pp. 48-51); the end of Prosper's verses and two schemata of elements were added in the late 11th century to the originally blank p. 51. Part 2 (pp. 52-178⁶⁷), with which we are concerned, contains a glossed copy of the DCP and ancillary works.

The DCP is on pp. 52-172. All five books are preceded by titles and the text of the DCP ends with an explicit on p. 172. Prologus 1 precedes the text of the DCP on p. 52 and is written by the scribe of the DCP. The Lupus treatise on the metres begins on p. 173 and ends imperfectly on p. 178 (at Peiper, line 145). The prose text of the DCP is mainly written in a single column apart from a few instances where the proses are partly written in columns. The layout of the metres is variable, with the majority of metres written in multiple columns and a few written in long prose lines with no clear delineation of the verse lines. Neumes were added to 4m7. Eb has much rubrication, a couple of crudely decorated initial letters and uses multiple colours to highlight initial letters. Diagrams include inked concentric circles with intersecting lines and no inscriptions in the right margin of p. 138, next to the text of 4p6;⁶⁸ an ink drawing of the Lamb of God on p. 155 and a schema of the elements under the explicit to the DCP on p. 172. Pen trials, rudimentary drawings and neumes were added to the originally blank recto of the end leaf and pen trials were added to its verso.

Eb is not ruled to take glosses; however there is adequate space for glosses between the lines of text and the margins may have been quite wide before they were trimmed.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Eb is fairly heavily glossed with Latin glosses entered by several contemporary scribes. The first 15 pages are sporadically glossed; from p. 68 (the end of Book 1, beginning of Book 2, which also begins a new quire) the manuscript is fairly consistently glossed with interlinear glosses; marginal glosses are rare, except on 3m9 and a few others added sporadically

⁶⁸ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Eb at 167-69.

Description of Manuscripts

thereafter. A single Greek word is embedded in a Latin gloss and a brief headnote was added to 3m6. There are 64 OHG glosses recorded amongst the Latin glosses, most of which are written in cipher.⁶⁹ Where marginal glosses were added they are usually linked to the text with arbitrary signs, others are written in close proximity to the text they are glossing with no linking symbols.

In Books 2 and 3 the glosses are mainly short and Eb agrees closely with Ec and Gc, and sometimes with Ka and Lh as well or instead. In Books 4 and 5 however Eb has a high number of longer glosses and shows extremely close agreement with Ed, in both shorter and longer glosses, with often striking similarities in spelling, abbreviations and placing; probably all the glosses in those two books were copied from Ed itself.

Provenance:

The early provenance of Eb is uncertain, though its script is thought to be from Reichenau or of a Reichenau type. The independent parts of this manuscript were probably bound together in the late 11th century in Einsiedeln, when the conclusion to Prosper's Epigrammata was added to an originally blank page 51 by a late 11th-century Einsiedeln scribe; the additions to pages 1 and 2 of Part 1 have been identified with a 12th-century Einsiedeln scribe. A 14th-century ownership entry 'Iste liber est monachorum de loco heremitarum' on page 'b' is thought to be by the hand of Heinrich von Ligerz, the librarian and custodian of the Einsiedeln library in the 14th century. Two Einsiedeln library notes were added in the 17th century: on page 'a', 'XVII. 10.' and on page 1, '4. Numero 35. B.V. Einsidlensis'.

⁶⁹ B&S no. 117: dialect indeterminable; place of origin is unknown.

Ec (= E1)

Einsiedeln, Stiftsbibliothek 179 (482)

193 pages, 265 x 222 mm. 31 lines (Part 2).

Origin: Einsiedeln or St Gallen?, s. x, second half.⁷⁰

Description:

This codex is made up of 2 originally independent parts: Part 1 (pp. 4-93) contains a copy of the Epistolae of Gregory I and Part 2 (pp. 94-193), with which we are concerned, contains a set of glossae collectae to Boethius's DCP and some ancillary works, written in double columns throughout. Early pen trials and scribbles and the title 'Boetius de consolatione philos{ophiae}', added by a modern hand, were added to the originally blank page 94. Pages 95a-96a contain various preliminaries: Prologi 4 and 1, Distinctio 1, Prologus 8 and glossae in titulum. The glossae collectae to the DCP on 96a-185b, which follow the order of the text, begin without a title immediately beneath these preliminary texts. Between the glossae collectae on 3m9 and 3p10 of Ec is another set of glossae collectae to 3m9 on pp. 145b-149a (Ec1); a further set of glossae collectae to 3m9, headed by the rubric 'item annotatio{nes} tertii libri', is recorded at the end of the glossae collectae to the DCP, on 185b-187a (Ec2). The Lupus treatise on the metres follows on 188a-191a;⁷¹ 192 and 193 remain blank. The preliminaries and Books 2 to 5 are preceded by brief incipits, but Book 1 opens with a simple enlarged letter. Ec has some rubrication. An ink diagram of a framed ladder with the Greek characters theta and pi, at the head and the foot of the ladder respectively, was added in the central margin between the two columns on p. 98.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

The high number of Latin and OHG glosses recorded in the glossae collectae of Ec suggests that they were drawn from a heavily glossed copy (or copies) of the DCP. Ec's lemmas are frequently abbreviated. The majority of glosses compiled in the glossae collectae are in Latin. There are also several Greek words, many embedded in the Latin glosses. In addition there are 223 OHG glosses, of which roughly a quarter are incorporated into the body of the glossae collectae and the rest are interlinear and mostly entered by the scribes of the text; the ⁷⁰ The scholarly consensus is that Part 2 of Ec was copied in the 10th century: Weinberger (1934), Courcelle (1939, pp. 120, 121 and Courcelle 1967, p. 404), Jeudy (1991, p. 486), Wittig (2007, p. 188), Love (2012, p. 85). Hoffmann (2004, vol. 1, pp. 96-97), Lang (2009) and B&S no. 120: Part 2 (pp. 94-193) copied at Einsiedeln. Tax (2002, p. 129), says it 'was most likely composed during the last quarter of the 10th century in St Gall'; however, in a subsequent publication Tax (2008, vol. 1, p. xxxii) grudgingly notes Hoffmann's attribution of Einsiedeln, claiming that there is no conclusive evidence for this attribution. Tax himself wishes to posit a St Gallen origin because he suggests that Notker used Ec for his translation and therefore would have had long-term or repeated access to the manuscript. Jeudy (1991, p. 486), Wittig (2007, p. 188): St Gall. If, as Tax (2002, p. 130) has also proposed that Gc is a direct but often incompetent copy of Ec, Ec may have been at St Gallen by s. x^{ex}/xiⁱⁿ, when Gc was copied. Morel (1867, p. 249): s. xi.

⁷¹ Ec lacks the concluding sentence ('Obserua autem ...') from the Lupus treatise.

Description of Manuscripts

OHG glosses are almost exclusively written in cipher.⁷² Roughly two-thirds of the OHG glosses are unique to Ec and Gc; though Gc appears to be copied fairly faithfully from Ec, not all Ec's OHG glosses are in Gc. The glossae collectae are supplemented by occasional interlinear and marginal Latin glosses, also entered mainly by the text scribes; the marginalia were often written in geometric shapes. Though the outer margins were fairly wide at the outset, a few marginal glosses are partially lost due to trimming.⁷³ Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres. Where marginal glosses were added they are usually linked to the text with arbitrary signs, others are written in close proximity to the text they are glossing with no linking symbols.

Ec's glosses belong primarily to the East Frankish tradition. Most of Ec's glosses are either unique to Ec and Gc or shared with Ka and Lh and a few others, but there are also some shared more widely with Af and related manuscripts and a small number, particularly the headnotes in Book 3 which seem to go back to a very early stage of glossing, shared with Na and other manuscripts. The supplementary glosses to 3m9 in Ec1 derive from a West Frankish tradition but those in Ec2 show an East Frankish character very similar to Ec itself.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Ec.

Provenance:

The early history of Ec is unknown. The present binding suggests that the two independent parts were united by the 14th century. An Einsiedeln library note was added in the 17th century on p. 4: 'Fol. Numero 6. B. V. Einsidlensis'.

⁷² B&S no.120: 'Alemannisch / Oberdeutsch'; probably of Einsiedeln origin.

⁷³ A small piece of parchment (pp. 136-7) that survived the trimming process suggests that the outer margins were originally about 9 mm wider and at least 5 mm longer.

Description of Manuscripts

Ed (= E2)

Einsiedeln, Stiftsbibliothek 302 (450)

144 pages, 280 x 215 mm. 33 lines (Part 2).

Origin: probably southwest Germany, s. ix, second third (pp. 28-144), s. x addition (p. 27).⁷⁴

Description:

This composite manuscript is made up of 2 originally independent parts. Part 1 (pp. 1-26), which was copied in the 10th century, possibly in eastern France, is a miscellaneous collection of prayers and writings of Gregory the Great and Wandalbert of Prüm, some of which are excerpts. Part 2 (27-144), with which we are concerned and was copied in the 9th century with the exception of p. 27, contains works by Boethius, Lupus of Ferrières, Arator, Prosper of Aquitaine, Prudentius, Aldhelm and Boniface.⁷⁵

An anonymous commentary on 3m9 of the DCP, which also appears in Lh, was added to the originally blank opening page (27) in the 10th century; it is written in a single column and ends imperfectly.⁷⁶ The glossed copy of the DCP and its ancillary texts are immediately preceded by Arator's De Actibus Apostolorum and notices related to Arator (28a-65a, 22). Prologus 1 follows on p. 65a, line 23 and concludes at p. 65b, line 3.

The text of the DCP, which is imperfect, is on pp. 65b-110b; it opens with a title on 65b, lines 4-5 and ends at the foot of 110b, line 33 with an explicit. An epigraph, attributed to Walafrid Strabo, is written across the foot of pages 110 and 111. The Lupus treatise on the metres follows the DCP on pp. 111a-112b.⁷⁷ This is immediately followed by works of Prosper and others (113a-144b). All five books are preceded either by titles or brief incipits. Several folios are missing from the DCP between pages 70 and 71, 88 and 89, 92 and 93, 96 and 97.⁷⁸ The entire text of the DCP and the ancillary works on pp. 65-112 were written in double columns; a few metres are further divided into two columns within this double column layout. Neumes were added to 2m2 and 4m3. Ed has some rubrication. There are occasional pen trials and dry-point drawings, including a diagram of several concentric circles with

⁷⁶ This commentary also occurs in Antwerp, Museum Plantin-Moretus 250 (100).

⁷⁷ Ed lacks the concluding sentence ('Obserua autem ...') from the Lupus treatise.

⁷⁸ See table of 'missing text' for details.

Description of Manuscripts

intersecting lines at the foot of p. 97, beneath the text of 4p6.⁷⁹ An ink drawing of a schema of elements at the foot of p. 88 is mostly lost due to heavily trimmed leaves.

Ed is not ruled for glosses; though the outer margins may have been fairly wide originally, the inner margins and the spacing of the text is limited. Heavy trimming of the outer margin has led to the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Ed is fairly heavily glossed with Latin and OHG glosses entered by several scribes in the 9th and 10th centuries. The glosses, mostly single words or short glosses, were written between the lines and in the margins, including in the narrow central margin created by the two columns of text. There is a single Greek gloss. There are 79 OHG glosses, of which all but three are interlinear, and the majority are written in cipher.⁸⁰ Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs and others are written in close proximity to the lemma with no linking symbols.

The glossing apparently draws on different sources but all with East Frankish associations. The commonest link is probably with Ec but there are also many glosses found otherwise only in Pm, others appearing only in Eb and others unique to Ed, though probably copied from elsewhere. The glossing was presumably done at various times using manuscripts available in the vicinity of St Gallen or Einsiedeln, including antecedents of Eb Ec and Pm.

Provenance:

The early history of Ed is unknown. Petrus Tax suggests that the 10th-century commentary added to the opening page (27) of Part 2 was added by a scribe at Einsiedeln.⁸¹ Additions on several pages (7, 9, 13, 113, 118) identified as the writing of the 14th century librarian and custodian of the Einsiedeln library, Heinrich von Ligerz, places both parts of Ed at Einsiedeln by the 14th century and the present binding suggests that the two independent parts were united by the 14th century. An Einsiedeln library note was added in the 17th century on p. 2: ‘Fol. Numero 13. B. V. Einsidlensis’.

⁷⁹ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Ed at 159-162 and 169; Papahagi dates this manuscript to the 10th century.

⁸¹ Tax 2008, vol. 1, p. xxxiii; B&S no. 126 date this script to the 11th or 12th century in Einsiedeln.

Ef (= E3)

Einsiedeln, Stiftsbibliothek 322 (888)

310 pages, 200 x 140 mm. 20 lines (Part 1).

Origin: probably St Gallen, s. x, first half (Part 1, pp. 2-186); Einsiedeln, s. xi addition (Part 1, p. 1).⁸²

Description:

This codex is made up of 2 originally independent parts: Part 1 (pp. 1-186) contains a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP and ancillary works, written in the first half of the 10th century, probably at St Gallen; page 1 may have been added in Einsiedeln in the 11th century.⁸³ Part 2 (pp. 187-308)⁸⁴ contains Othloh of St Emmeram's Vita S. Wolfgangi, which was written in the 2nd half of the 11th century, perhaps at Einsiedeln.⁸⁵

The DCP is on pp. 2-186. Books 1 to 3 are preceded by incipits and Books 4 and 5 lack incipits, though space was left to enter them.⁸⁶ Prologus 1 was added to the originally blank page 1. Book 3p3.9 ends at the foot of p. 72; 3p3.10 'tu itaque hanc' originally continued on p. 73 line 1, but was abandoned at 3p3.11 'facere sibi nequeunt' on p. 73 line 4; a later scribe repeated 3p3.11 'opes igitur ... sufficientemque' on p. 73 line 5; the rest of page 73 remains blank, except for some pen trials. Book 3p3.10 'tu itaque hanc' begins again on p. 74 line 1 and the text of the DCP ends with an explicit at the foot of p. 186. The prose of the text is written in a single column; all but a handful of the metres are written in single columns. Ef has some rubrication and a few crudely decorated initial letters. In a couple of places (1m6, 4p5) the incorrect opening initial was added by the rubricator. There are numerous scribbles and pen trials throughout. At the foot of p. 156 there is a drawing of a bird; in the inner margin of p. 172 there is a drawing of a man and in the upper margin there is a drawing of the head of a man.

Ef is not ruled for glosses, though the space between the lines and the original outer margins is fairly wide. The trimming of pages and the poor preparation of the parchment has led to the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

⁸² The scholarly consensus is that Ed was copied in the 10th century: Weinberger (1934), CB 2 (Switzerland, no. 44), Hoffmann (2004, vol. 1, pp. 122-23), Tax (2008, vol. 1, p. xxxiii), Love (2012, p. 85); Troncarelli (2005, no. 121): s. x (ex). Lang (2009): s. x (1st half) or s. x (2nd/3rd quarter), Einsiedeln. However, Morel (1867, p. 249): s. xi.

⁸⁶ A later hand added a note in the margin '(...)ipit Lib. iiiii'.

Description of Manuscripts

Ef is fairly heavily glossed with interlinear and marginal Latin glosses, mostly short, entered by several scribes of the 10th and 11th centuries deriving from several sources. There is a single Greek gloss. There are 15 OHG glosses, mostly interlinear, and 2 of the OHG glosses are written in cipher.⁸⁷ Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs and others are written in close proximity to the lemma with no linking symbols. A single comment glossing a Greek phrase is written in a frame.

Ef is lightly glossed in the early part of the text, with about 370 entries in Book 1 and 840 in Book 2, but the glossing becomes much thinner in Book 3, with about 130 entries, and almost disappears in the last two books. Many of the glosses are unique to Ef, or unique adaptations of glosses in other manuscripts. Ef also shows agreement with the Ec Ka group or sometimes with Na.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Ef.

Provenance:

The early history of Ef is unknown. The additions by Heinrich von Ligerz, the 14th century librarian and custodian of the Einsiedeln library, place both parts of Ef at Einsiedeln by the 14th century and the present binding suggests that the two parts were united by the 14th century. An Einsiedeln library note was added in the 17th century on p. 4: '4. Numero 94. B. V. Einsidlensis'.

⁸⁷ B&S no. 132: 'Alemannisch'; place of origin is unknown.

Er (= Es)

El Escorial, Real Biblioteca, E.II.1

117 folios, 345 x 180 mm.⁸⁸ 23 lines.

Origin: England, s. xiⁱⁿ.⁸⁹

Description:

Er contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP and ancillary texts. Two salient features of Er make it stand out amongst our manuscripts as being an unusually bad witness to the early glossed tradition of the DCP: its glosses were entered with a degree of carelessness and/or ignorance not evident in other early copies and its margins were extremely heavily trimmed. The codex opens with two originally blank leaves (1-2), to which were added late medieval and modern inscriptions; Prologus 3 (3r, 3-3v, 6) opens with the rubric 'In nomine summi tonantis, Incipit Prologus Libri Boetii', which is unique to Er; the Lupus treatise on the metres follows immediately (3v, 6-8r, 8); to the remainder of 8r, which was originally blank, a late hand added 4p4.12-22 'nam quoque quid dicam ... morte corpus relinquis', which is the text that was on the now missing leaf between ff. 87 and 88. An early 11th-century scribe added 'Pas boc syllp ælfgyþ gode into horetune' above the rubric on 3r and in the right margin next to the rubric another, possibly late 11th-century scribe, made the addition, now obscured by a stain, 'R. gratia dei abati...'.⁹⁰

The text of the DCP begins with the title to Book 1 on 8v, where glossae in titulum were added to the upper margin. The text of the DCP on 8v-117r has lost leaves between folios 24 and 25, 84 and 85, 87 and 88, 102 and 103 and some text is dislocated; parts of the ⁸⁸ Antolín (Catálogo 2, p. 33), reports that the dimensions are 445 x 180 mm, a mistake that is also repeated by Troncarelli (2005, no. 105), who relied on Antolín's description and a reproduction of the manuscript for his description, and CB 4 (Spain, no. 20) and Gameson (2012, p. 29, n.66).

Two sets of foliation were added, an early one in roman numerals, which appears to correspond to the quiring, and a later one in arabic numerals; since most of the roman foliation has been lost to trimming, we refer here to the arabic foliation.

⁸⁹ There is general agreement amongst scholars about the date of Er, though some have questioned its origin in England; Ker (Catalogue, no. 115): s. xi in, perhaps English; Bolton (1977, p. 57): early s. xi, England, from Horton (Dorset); Weinberger (1934), Troncarelli (2005, no. 105): s. xi; Gneuss and Lapidge (2014, no. 823): Continent or England, s. x/xi or xi in.; Wittig 2007, p. 189: s. xi¹, England (at Horton); CB 4 (Spain, no. 20), Love (2012, p. 85): s. x-xi, English (?).

Er was probably copied in England, perhaps by an English scribe who may have worked on the Continent: Bishop identified the scribe who wrote Er as one who also wrote in a group of other manuscripts of English as well as of Continental origin (Bishop 1971, pp. xxv and 18); for further discussion of Bishop's view, see Provenance below.

⁹⁰ Following Antolín's catalogue entry, both Troncarelli and CB report this as 'R. dei gratia abas'.

Description of Manuscripts

missing text were supplied by later medieval scribes.⁹¹ In its present state some text is dislocated between folios 111v and 117r. The present arrangement is as follows: at the foot of 111v the text ends at 5p5.10: ‘etiam in his esse’; 112r to 112v contain 5p6.1 ‘status ut quatenam etiam’ to 5p6.12 ‘aequare quare non possit’; 113r to 113v contain 5p5.10 ‘credamus nihil erit’ to the end of 5p5; all of 5m5; 5p6.1 ‘quoniam igitur ... divinae substantiae’; 114r to 117r, line 21, contain 5p6.12 ‘ex immobilitate deficit’ to the end of 5p6. The text of the DCP, which ends on 117r, 21 is immediately followed by notes on the Trinity partly excerpted from Augustine and Hilary of Poitiers (117r, 21-117v, 23) and written as if part of the DCP, but ending imperfectly at the foot of 117v. The catch phrase ‘etsi equalis’ added by a late medieval scribe suggests that the text that originally followed in Er corresponded to that preserved in Ct (51v, 12-20), which also records these notes as if part of the text of the DCP (51r-51v); in Ct the notes are followed by the explicit to the DCP (51v, 20-22).

The entire text of the DCP is written in a single column. Titles were entered for all but Book 2, whose title was added by a later medieval scribe who also supplied the missing text at the end of Book 1 and the beginning of Book 2. Neumes were added between the lines to 2m5 and 4m7; musical notations were also added in the margins next to 3m1, 3p12 and 5m3. Er has some rubrication. A circular ink diagram with vertical lines and a single diagonal line was added to 41v, next to the text of 2p6; in the left margin of 93v, next to the text of 4p6, is a crudely drawn diagram of concentric circles with spokes.⁹²

Er was sporadically ruled for glosses, perhaps at the time of entering the glosses. Numerous marginal glosses are partially lost due to severe trimming.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Er is heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses and a few Greek glosses, with a couple embedded in a Latin gloss. The glosses were entered by several scribes in the 11th century, including by the scribe of the text; many glosses were duplicated by different scribes. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by a variety of linking symbols, including letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols. Occasionally the glosses repeat the lemmas. The glosses are generally badly miscopied and both the interlinear and the marginal glosses are misplaced.

The majority of the glosses appear in the first three books, with fewer in Book 4, and the first third of Book 5 has almost no glosses. The glossing generally reflects several traditions, often differing from book to book, sometimes from section to section within each book: sometimes Er agrees very closely with Ct, the two manuscripts apparently drawing on a Continental tradition that is shared with Fd Ld Pt but not with other English manuscripts; elsewhere Er shows no agreement with Ct, but shows links with the other English manuscripts; in other places Er's glosses are quite independent of the English manuscripts; where Er shows some familiarity with the glossing seen in the Ap Ck group, it often uses different glosses or variant forms; Er's glosses rarely show agreement with the Vb strand of glossing that is particularly evident in other English manuscripts.

⁹² The diagram in Er was apparently not known to Papahagi (2010, pp. 141-77).

Description of Manuscripts

Er is also heavily annotated by later medieval scribes.

Provenance:

Though the origin and provenance of Er has been unclear, since its glossing is at least partly of a characteristically English type and a great deal of the glosses were added about the same time the text was written, the probability is that Er was produced in England. Bishop links Er with a group of manuscripts generally thought to be written in the 10th or early 11th centuries in England and the Continent. Amongst this group is a Penitential now preserved in Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 311. Bishop initially proposes that the script of Escorial is ‘identical with’ that of Bodley 311, then a few lines later he proposes that the script of Bodley 311 ‘closely resembles’ that of Escorial.⁹³ He thought Bodley 311, which he dates to ‘possibly c. 1000’ was ‘a text originating in Ireland or NW. France’, though he provides no evidence for this attribution;⁹⁴ Gneuss and Lapidge say of Bodley 311 ‘s. x², N or NW France’.⁹⁵ Dumville posits a tenuous link with Worcester and Gameson, based on the partly erased inscription on 1r of Bodley 311, suggests that it is ‘of possible Worcester or south-western origin’;⁹⁶ Gameson subsequently confirms his view that it is of English origin when he includes Bodley 311 in a discussion of ‘The material fabric of early British books’.⁹⁷ Though the origin of Bodley 311 may be disputed, the link between Er and Bodley 311 is significant. The script of the text of Er, though perhaps not identical with that of Bodley 311, is decidedly similar and there are two further points of similarity that are striking. The first is the close parallels in shape, size and decoration of the two manuscripts: both are oblong in shape and have similar dimensions. Er measures 345 x 180 mm and Bodley 311 measures 350 x 180 mm. Allowing for the heavily trimmed pages of Er, the dimensions and proportions are nearly identical. The rubric in red rustic capitals and the opening letters of each chapter heading in Bodley 311’s table of contents, written in the ink of the text and highlighted in red, is identical with the simple decoration found in Er. The similarities of shape, size, script and decoration of Er and Bodley 311 suggest they were probably produced in the same scriptorium in England.

The second point to note is that donation inscriptions in Old English were added in square Anglo-Saxon minuscule to both Er and Bodley 311. In the case of Er, an early-11th-century scribe added the inscription ‘Pas boc syllþ ælfgyþ gode into horetune’ on 3r. In Bodley 311, part of an inscription survives on 1r, which Ker dates to s. x/xi: ‘... lf sancta marian for ...þ ... hys gemæccan’. Based on his analysis of the roughly fifteen letters erased before ‘sancta’ and the twelve letters erased between ‘for’ and ‘hys gemæccan’ Ker proposed reconstructing the inscription as ‘... (ulf) sancta marian for (ælfgyb) hys gemæccan’.⁹⁸ Thus the inscription in Bodley 311 attests to a lay person donating the book, on behalf of his wife, to a religious house dedicated to St Mary.⁹⁹ It seems a curious coincidence that both books, possessing similar physical attributes, should refer to ‘ælfgyb’ in their donation inscriptions. If the two ‘ælfgybs’ are one and the same, the ‘ulf’ that Ker identified may have been Ordulf or Ordwulf, who was a benefactor of Horton, died there and apparently wished to be buried there; this Ordulf was the brother of King Edgar’s wife Ælfthryth and uncle of Æthelred the Unready.¹⁰⁰

Attention to Horton as an 11th-century male congregation overlooks its early history; for instance, by noting that the abbey of Horton was founded in c. 1050, Ker implies that Er may not have reached Horton until the second half of the 11th century. However, as Donovan and Foot have shown, there probably was a religious house for women at Horton as early as the late 10th century and certainly before 1031. It was nevertheless fairly short-lived since it appears to have been in lay hands by 1033, when Cnut made a donation to a thegn at Horton, and a male community was founded there 1033 x 1061.¹⁰¹ A list of ‘nomina feminarum illustrium’ in the Liber Vitae of New Minster and Hyde Abbey, begun at the beginning of abbot Ælfwine’s abbacy (1031-1057), includes a Wulfhild ‘abbatissa Hortun coenobio’,¹⁰² whose life was written between 1086 and 1098/9 by Goscelin of St Bertin. If Goscelin’s account is reliable, King Edgar had given Wulfhild possession of the nunnery of Barking as well as five further establishments, including Horton in Dorset, probably in the 970s or 980s.¹⁰³

If indeed the text of Er was written at the end of the 10th century and the inscription written in the early 11th century, it must have been given to Horton shortly thereafter. Given that, and the female donor, it seems likely that Er was given to the nunnery before 1033, rather than to the male community after 1050. If the now obscure addition on the first page read ‘R. gratia dei abatis(sa)’, that suggests the book passed to another nunnery, conceivably Barking

⁹⁸ Ker (Catalogue, no. 307) was able to read more of this inscription on a photograph of it attached to f. iv^v, which we have unfortunately not been able to access. He cautions that only the ‘l’ in ‘ulf’ and ‘b’ in ‘ælfgyb’ are certain.

⁹⁹ Peter Stokes (2014, p. 39) proposes that ‘the reference to St Mary could support an attribution to Worcester Cathedral, but it could equally refer to several other houses in Mercia or the south-west, including Crediton, Evesham and Pershore’. Although of a later date than the inscription, perhaps it is noteworthy that a charter (Donovan 1988, no. 22), thought to be of 11th-century origin, granting a privilege by King Edward to Horton in 1061, records that the holy place at Horton is dedicated to the honour of St Mary. Whether or not the earlier establishment at Horton was also dedicated to St Mary is not clear.

¹⁰⁰ Ordulf was the sister of Edgar’s wife Ælfthryth. His wish to be buried at Horton is reported by William of Malmesbury.

Fa (= F1)

Firenze, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana, Plut. XIV, 15

90 folios, 235 x 180 mm. 26 lines.

Origin: Fulda, s. ix, first third.¹⁰⁴

Description:

Fa contains a glossed copy of the DCP, other works by Boethius and some ancillary texts. The codex, written by several scribes in the early 9th century, opens with Boethius's Opuscula sacra on 1r-29r. The DCP is on 30r-90r. All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. The text ends with an explicit at 90r, 18; after a blank line, an anonymous epigraph and a second, attributed to Walafrid Strabo, are written by the text scribe. Folios 29v and 90v are blank. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column. Some metres are written in single columns, others are written in multiple columns and a few are written in long prose lines across the page, with no clear delineation of the verse lines; a few metres are written in rustic capitals and a couple are written in glossing script. No colour is used in Fa.

The origins of Fa and its early glossing are a subject of some complexity. According to Bischoff, one hand was responsible for the Opuscula and the first three leaves of the DCP, up to the beginning of 1p4 (ff. 1-32), while the rest of the DCP (ff. 33-90) is in several other hands. Rand identified the first hand with the scribe Albinus who wrote and signed part of a copy of the Opuscula in Orléans MS 270 (226), which he attributed to the school of Fleury.¹⁰⁵ Bischoff identified the first hand as French but thought that the other hands were characteristic of Fulda.¹⁰⁶ He went on to argue that some of the annotations resembled in their method those used by Lupus of Ferrières in manuscripts studied by him and suggested that the manuscript was begun in France and then taken in its incomplete state by Lupus from Auxerre to Fulda around 829 and completed there by Fulda scribes and then annotated by him. Subsequently, in his catalogue, he refined his attribution, concluding that the first part was produced in a French scriptorium, in the Loire region including Auxerre, and specifying the annotations in question as those in rustic capitals.¹⁰⁷ Those suggestions have been repeated, reshaped and elaborated by others, who have concluded that Fa was produced very precisely around 829/830 and that the glosses to Boethius's DCP in Fa were in the hand of Lupus and originated with him.¹⁰⁸ If that is so, it is a matter of major importance in the history of commentary on the DCP since most of the glosses in Fa also appear in other manuscripts, more than 30 of them in some cases, which would suggest that Lupus was at the fountainhead of at least one widespread strand of Boethian glossing.

¹⁰⁵ Note that Bischoff (Katalog 2, no. 3736) localises and dates this part of the Orléans MS 270 (226), pp. 230-319 as 'Westfrankreich, IX. Jh., 1/2 Viertel' and only p. 320 's. X, Fleury'. A comparison of the script of the relevant pages (230-277) of Orléans MS 270 (226) with Firenze MS Plut. XIV, 15, ff. 1-32 suggests that the link between these hands is doubtful. Further, the scribe of ff. 1-32 left no signature, whereas Albinus left his signature in both the Orléans manuscript and another that Rand links with him (Paris, BN, lat. 9576 + nouv. acq. lat. 1875).

¹⁰⁶ See Bischoff 1975, p. 72. Recent commentators (Troncarelli 2005, no. 95; CB 3, Firenze, no. 50; Keefe 2012, p. 234; Love 2012, pp. 85-86) have simply followed Rand and Bischoff in noting that ff. 1-32 were written in a French scriptorium in the early 9th century and Bischoff's view that ff. 33-90 were continued in Fulda in the second quarter of the 9th century.

There are however a number of problems with these views. On the question of the origin of the Fa itself, it would appear that its text of the Opuscula belongs, like its text of the DCP, with a tradition represented by East Frankish manuscripts whereas Orléans MS 270 (226)'s text belongs with a quite different family represented by West Frankish manuscripts.¹⁰⁹ That, on the surface, would make it unlikely that they are the work of the same scribe and might suggest at least the possibility that the first part of Fa was written by a French-trained scribe at Fulda using an East Frankish exemplar. On the glossing, Bischoff himself did not claim that any of the glossing hands were identifiably that of Lupus, or indeed that the glossing in general was by him, only that a particular type of annotation, the rewriting of important words in the text in the margin as if for an index, resembled the practice shown by Lupus in other manuscripts. In his subsequent catalogue, he made it clear that he was referring specifically to the annotations in rustic capitals, of which there are a bare handful in the manuscript. These may indeed resemble Lupus's practice, but the same techniques are found in other manuscripts, of Boethius and other authors, that are unconnected with Lupus, and indeed precisely the same annotations, again in capitals, can be found at the same point in the text or nearby, in other manuscripts of the DCP unconnected with Lupus, including Orléans MS 270 (226) from Fleury and Ec Gc and Ka from the East Frankish region. They seem to be a common technique in the period, not confined to Lupus. As for the explanatory glosses in Fa's copy of the DCP, which were written in minuscule, these do not resemble Lupus's hand as seen in London, BL, Harley 2736, which may indeed explain why Bischoff did not himself attribute these to Lupus. Many of them occur in other manuscripts, especially East Frankish ones, and various points suggest that they did not originate with Fa, but were copied from another glossed manuscript. That could have been in Fulda or elsewhere if the manuscript did not stay there long, though the links with East Frankish manuscripts might suggest Fulda itself, or at least an East Frankish centre. For our purposes the important conclusion is that the glosses to the DCP in Fa were copied from another glossed copy, at Fulda or at least an East Frankish centre, early in the ninth century, and there is no reason to suppose they originated with Lupus of Ferrières. As for the manuscript itself, it would appear to have been produced early in the ninth century, but not necessarily around 829/830 and more probably at Fulda than Auxerre.

Fa is not ruled for glosses. The spacing of the lines of text is limited and the margins are narrow. The trimming of the outer margin has led to the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Fa is very lightly glossed in Latin with a few interlinear and marginal glosses added by several different contemporary scribes, including the scribes of the text. There is a single Greek gloss. The glosses are primarily short and other additions include headnotes to the prose sections, headnotes to 1m2 and 3m7, marginal annotations drawing attention to words or passages in the text. At least one glossator uses a flat-headed 'g' and a couple of glosses are written in geometric shapes. The marginal glosses are written in close proximity to the lemma in the text with no linking symbols.

Nearly all of the Fa glosses are in East Frankish manuscripts such as Ed and Na, some only in East Frankish manuscripts and a few that are unique to Fa.

Provenance:

Fa was written at Fulda. It was subsequently acquired by the Medici family and bound in the characteristic red leather binding with the Medici arms. It was part of the core collection of the Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana, when the library was opened to the public in 1571.

Description of Manuscripts

Fb (= F2)

Firenze, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana, San Marco 170

57 folios, 255 x 180 mm. 25 lines (Books 1-4); 26-30 (Book 5).

Origin: Unknown, s. x (Books 1-4) and s. xi, late (Book 5).¹¹⁰

Description:

Fb contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts. The DCP is on 1v-57v. The codex opens on 1r, 1-6 with an imperfect copy of Prologus 6, beginning at ‘de sancta trinitate’; this is followed immediately on lines 7-9 with a title to the DCP, in the form of an incipit to Book 1, and on lines 9-25 with glossae in titulum, written en bloc.¹¹¹ Another version of the title on 1v, 1-3 precedes the text of the DCP: Books 1-4 (1v-50r) were written in the 10th century and Book 5 (50r-57v) was written in the late 11th century.

Quire 1 of Fb was originally made up of 4 bifolia, whose now lost first bifolium probably contained the beginning of Prologus 6 and perhaps other preliminary material on the recto and verso of its first leaf and part of the text of the DCP on the recto and verso of its second leaf. A bifolium was supplied in the 12th century, whose first leaf numbered ‘III’ remains blank and whose conjoint leaf, folio 7, supplies the lost text of the DCP (1p4.39 to 1p5.2) on 7r and 7v.¹¹² The text of 3m9 ends at 29r, line 11; below it was added a circular ink diagram of the elements and the ages of man.¹¹³ Glosses to 3m9 were entered immediately after the text of 3m9 and continue around the diagram. In the right margin of 29r begins a long sequence of glossae collectae to 3m9, preceded by the rubric ‘Incipit commentum istorum(?) uersuum’, which ends at the foot of 29v. The full page of glossing on 29v, which is on a leaf that is integral to the quire, was not ruled to take the gloss, but it is written across the entire page in a single column in small glossing script. The text of the DCP written in the 10th century ends at 50r, line 15 with the end of Book 4. Next to the last line of 4m7, which is written in double columns on 50r, the 10th-century scribe wrote ‘Explicit’ and a contemporary glossator entered the rubric ‘Incipit horum comentum (sic) uersuum’ beneath it. The same glossator then entered 8 lines of glossae collectae to 4m7 and broke off in the midst of a gloss. Since folio 50 is the penultimate leaf of this quire in which the final leaf was excised, it is possible that the original design had been to continue the 10th-century glossae collectae to 4m7 on this and the subsequent leaf, as for 3m9, but was for some reason abandoned. To the remaining few lines of 50r, a late-11th-century scribe added the beginning of Book 5, which was completed on 57v, line 10. Several later medieval scribes added miscellaneous notes to ¹¹² See table of ‘missing text’ for details.

¹¹³ The design of this circular diagram and its inscriptions are nearly identical to that found in Mo, folio 171v, except that the diagram in Mo is filled with colour. Indeed, even the gloss that surrounds the diagram is nearly identical in both manuscripts.

Description of Manuscripts

the remaining blank space on 57v.

All but Book 5 are preceded by titles or incipits; the explicit to the 11th-century text of Book 5 was added by a later medieval scribe. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and the majority of the metres are written in double columns. Fb has some rubrication and Book 5 has some ornamental initials.

Fb is not ruled for glosses, but the outer margins are wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take interlinear glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Fb is heavily glossed in Latin. The glosses to the first four books were entered primarily by contemporary scribes, including the scribe of the text, as well as by glossators in the 11th century; some glosses entered by later medieval scribes were written over the 10th- and 11th-century glosses. Book 5 was glossed by scribes of the 12th century or later. It is rare when glosses are entered in the upper and lower margins, but when they are added, at least a line of space is left between the text space and the gloss. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to the lemma with letters of the alphabet, occasionally by arbitrary signs and sometimes they are simply written in close proximity to the lemma in the text. Often the glosses repeat the lemmas.

Most of the glosses are short and interlinear; longer marginal glosses are included to any extent only for the beginning of Book 1, up to 1p2, for 3m9 and for Book 4 from 4m3 onwards. It is probable that the glossator was working from a manuscript which had a much fuller range of long marginal glosses but chose not to include them (or perhaps abandoned his task incomplete): details which are regularly glossed in nearly all manuscripts, such as the classical figures cited in 3m12, are not glossed at all in Fb, even briefly. Long and short glosses seem though to derive from the same source, given their affiliations with other manuscripts and their links with Mo. Two main strands are evident: (1) glosses derived from the West Frankish tradition represented by Af Kc and Vc; and (2), glosses that occur only or mainly in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, often showing a particular link with Er. These are particularly dominant in Book 2 and common in Book 3, but less noticeable in Books 1 and 4. Whether these are glosses that originated in Anglo-Saxon England and migrated to the Continent, or glosses that travelled to England from some Continental source that is witnessed only by Fb, is unclear.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Fb.

Provenance:

Little is known of the early history of Fb. The 15th-century ownership note added to the verso of the second fly leaf indicates that it was bequeathed to the Dominican convent of San Marco of Florence by the Renaissance humanist Niccolò de Niccoli (d. 1437);¹¹⁴ a 15th-century shelfmark denoting the inventory number, when acquired by the library of San Marco, as well as its physical position in the library, ‘.230. de xiii° banco’, was written above the ownership note and a different scribe added ‘ex parte occidentis’ next to it. Niccoli’s Latin collection was acquired first from monasteries in Italy and, after the Council of Constance (1414-18), from

France, Germany and Switzerland.¹¹⁵ The catalogue of the library of San Marco, prepared either in 1499 or 1500, contains the entry 'Boetius de consolatione, in volumine mediocri albo in membranis', which has been identified as San Marco 170.¹¹⁶ Fb was transferred to the Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana in 1809 as a result of the suppression of religious houses ordered by Napoleon in 1808.

¹¹⁵ Some recent commentators, focussing on the 1431 list of manuscripts in German monastic and cathedral libraries desired by and drawn up by Niccoli, have suggested he acquired many of his texts primarily from Germany. Despite its title Commentarium Nicolai Nicoli in Peregrinatione Germanie, according to a letter written by the Florentine monk Ambrogio Traversari, this inventory of manuscripts was given to both cardinals Giuliano Cesarini and Niccolò Albergati with a view to the texts being located and acquired for Niccoli as they travelled through both France and Germany as papal legates; further acquisitions of classical texts from France, Germany and Switzerland were made for Niccoli by his protégé Poggio; for the formation of Niccoli's library, see Ullman and Stadter 1972, pp. 89-104 and Field 2017, pp. 233-275; for Niccoli's inventory of manuscripts, see Sabbadini 1914, pp. 4-7 and Robinson 1921, pp. 251-55.

Description of Manuscripts

Fc (= AuI)

St Florian, Stiftsbibliothek XI.14

A single leaf, 205 x 152 mm, 41 lines.

Origin: Unknown, s. xi.

Description:

Fc is an 11th-century fragment that may have been used initially as a pastedown and then as a front flyleaf, along with another 12th-century glossed fragment of the DCP, in the binding of a 13th-century copy of Gregory the Great's Moralia in Iob.¹¹⁷ Both these fragments are presently bound into the back of this same volume, which was rebound in 1975.¹¹⁸

Fc preserves part of Book 2 of the DCP: the recto begins at 'erras. Hi semper eius' at the end of 2p1.9 and ends at 'sunt iuris. Dominam' in 2p2.6; the verso continues at 'famulae cognoscunt' in 2p2.6 and ends at 'fomenta quaedam sunt' in 2p3.3. The prose is written in single columns and the metres are written in long lines. Some initials are written or highlighted in red.

Fc is not ruled to take glosses. The spacing of the lines of text is very limited. The outer and lower margins, which may once have been fairly wide, are heavily trimmed, leading to the loss of parts of glosses. The traces of glue on the verso obscure parts of the text as well as some of the glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Fc is lightly glossed with marginal and interlinear Latin glosses entered by several contemporary scribes. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres. A few marginal glosses include underlined lemmas as a means of linking the glosses to the text and others are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate.

Quite a few of the longer glosses are unique to Fc. Shorter glosses generally coincide with a lot of manuscripts and are not distinctive. Otherwise, general agreement is with manuscripts of the East Frankish tradition not surprisingly, though more with Ka and Vh than with the St Gallen manuscripts Ec and Na.

Provenance: Unknown.

Description of Manuscripts

Fd (= Au)

St Florian, Stiftsbibliothek XI.75

133 folios, 260 x 180 mm. 27 lines (Part 1).

Origin: St Florian?, s. xi.¹¹⁹

Description:

This composite manuscript is made up of two originally independent parts: both parts contain glossed copies of Boethius's DCP and various other texts. Part 1 (1-104), with which we are concerned, contains an imperfect 11th-century copy of the DCP and Part 2 (105-133) contains a 12th-century copy.

The DCP in Part 1 is on 45r-101r. It is preceded by miscellaneous texts copied in the 11th century on ff. 1r-44v, including a sermon attributed to St Augustine and several Epistolae of Jerome.¹²⁰ Some text from the end of the DCP is lost: the verso of the last folio of the penultimate quire, f. 100v ends in 5p6.10 at 'aliud interminabilis uitae totam'; f. 101r begins in 5p6.42 at 'si scientiae dei' and continues to the end of the text.¹²¹ The explicit to the DCP ends on line 20 of 101r and the remaining part of the leaf was excised. A schematic drawing of the seasons and ages of man, with a drawing of a human figure in the centre, was added in the 11th century to 101v. An 11th-century scribe added a few lines of text, only parts of which are legible, to the upper margin of 102r; below it two 12th-century scribes wrote excerpts from Isidore's Sententiae, followed by an excerpt from the Didascalicon de studio legendi attributed to Hugh of St Victor, which ends on 102v. An incomplete astrological chart with inscriptions and surrounded by text, mostly excerpted from Servius's Commentary on Vergil's Georgics, was entered on 103r by several scribes of the 11th century. A drawing in red ink representing celestial spheres was added to 103v. The prologi and distinctiones on 104 recto and verso were written in the 11th century.

All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles; interlinear glosses were written on the title of Book 1 on 45r and further glossae in titulum were added en bloc above this title in the upper margin. In addition to these glossae in titulum on 45r, three 11th-century scribes recorded notes relating to Boethius on 104r-v: the first added Prologi 1 and 6, glossae in titulum (written en bloc) and Distinctio 3 on 104r, 1-104v, 2; another scribe wrote Prologus 5 in the upper and right margins of 104r; and on 104v a third scribe wrote Prologus 4 (104v, 4-14), followed by Distinctio 1 (104v, 16-21). The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and the metres, some of whose verses were written out of order, are mostly written in double columns. Fd has some rubrication and ornamental initials. There are two crudely drawn diagrams of concentric circles with intersecting lines: one is next to the end of 2p1 and the beginning of 2m1 on f. 53v and the other, which is partially lost to trimming, is at the foot of 87v, beneath the text of 4p6.¹²²

Fd is sporadically ruled for glosses: the leaves of the first quire (ff. 45-52) were ruled in the outer margins, sometimes in the lower and upper margins; and a few leaves of the penultimate quire (ff. 93-100) were ruled in the outer margins only. The upper edges of the manuscript were damaged by vermin, resulting in the loss of parts of several glosses, and the outer margins, though once of generous proportions, have been trimmed.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Fd is heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear Latin glosses entered by several contemporary scribes. There are several Greek words, some embedded in the Latin glosses. Two interlinear OHG glosses were added in ink by different 11th-century scribes, one on 1p2 (46v)¹²³ and the other on 2p5 (58v).¹²⁴ Dry-point OHG glosses have been identified on several pages (48v, 85v, 93v), but only one on 47r can be deciphered clearly.¹²⁵ At least one gloss is embedded in the text of Fd, suggesting that Fd itself was copied from a glossed manuscript. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs, others are simply written in close proximity to the lemma in the text. Many of the glosses tied to reference marks were entered on the previous, facing or following page, rather than the same page on which the lemma is written, despite there being ample space on the page where the lemma appears. Several marginal glosses are written in geometric shapes.

The glosses are evenly spread through the five books. They draw mainly on the West Frankish tradition of Af Kc and others, but include a substantial number of further glosses or variants that are shared with Ld Pt and Vf.¹²⁶

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Fd.

Provenance:

Little is known of the history of Fd, but it is thought by some to have been written at St Florian, where it has remained until the present day.¹²⁷

¹²³ B&S no. 154: linguistic classification is uncertain; probably added at St Florian.

Description of Manuscripts

Fg (= Fg)

Fulda, Bibliothek des bischöflichen Priesterseminars MS, Fragment 9

A fragmentary leaf, 280 x 185 mm.¹²⁸ 26 lines.

Origin: Fulda?, s. ix, second third.¹²⁹

Description:

This fragment, which was used to cover a 16th-century book, contains part of Book 3 of the DCP: 3m9.19-28 and 3p.10.1-13.¹³⁰ What was apparently used as the inner side of the cover is relatively clean and therefore the text from 3m9.19 to 3p10.6, ending at 'paulo ante monstrauiimus' on the recto is legible, but for a few words that have been lost as a result of damage to the parchment. The verso, which was used as the outer side of the cover, is heavily soiled and the text, only legible in part, continues from 3p10.6 to 13, its last line being just visible up until 'id quod dederit'. The metre and prose are both written in a single column. Neumes on a few lines of 3m9 are just visible. A diagram of the elements, partly in colour, was added, apparently in the 11th century at Fulda, in the space left next to the end of 3m9 in the upper right corner of the recto.¹³¹

Fg does not appear to have been ruled to take glosses, though the space between the lines of text is fairly wide. The trimming, damage and discolouration of the fragment and the addition of later glosses over some existing glosses by a 15th-century scribe has led to the loss of parts of the early glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Fg is lightly glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses added by 10th- and 11th-century scribes. Another addition is a single headnote to 3p10. The marginal glosses are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text; what look like faint traces of linking symbols above lemma suggest that at least some glosses were linked to their lemma by ¹²⁸ Since we were unable to examine this fragment in person, we have relied on the description published by Staub (2013), especially for its measurements; see also, the more recent article by Staub (2015). Our observations and readings are based on examination of digital photographic images of the fragment supplied by Dr Staub in 2017; though we were not given access to the infrared photographs referred to in her 2015 article, we were able to read a great deal of the glosses by utilising negative imaging. We are very grateful to Professor Winfried Rudolf, who was instrumental in helping us procure a copy of the digital images from the Priesterseminar Bibliothek Fulda.

¹²⁹ According to Hartmut Hoffmann (cited by Staub 2013, p. 318), features of the script point to this date.

¹³⁰ Staub (2013, p. 317) describes the book whence the fragment was retrieved as being printed in 1585; in her subsequent article (Staub 2015, pp. 5, 8), she describes it as a 15th-century book.

¹³¹ Again Hoffmann's dating is based on features of the script (Staub 2013, p. 318). Staub (2015, p. 2) re-dates this diagram to the 12th century, with no explanation.

Description of Manuscripts

arbitrary signs.

In its longer or more distinctive glosses Fg agrees fairly consistently with other East Frankish manuscripts, the closest perhaps being Px.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Fg.

Provenance:

The earliest evidence for the existence of two copies of the DCP at the monastery library at Fulda is recorded in a 15th-century catalogue. Subsequent inventories note multiple copies of the DCP until the middle of the 16th century, but record only one entry specifying a glossed text of the DCP.¹³² An ownership inscription on the title page of the 1585 printed book, which Fg once covered, points to its presence in the Alumni Library of the Episcopal Seminary at Fulda, which was founded in 1572.¹³³

Description of Manuscripts

Ga (= G)

St Gallen, Stiftsbibliothek 844

186 pages, 220 x 162 mm. 21 lines.

Origin: St Gallen, s. ix, fourth quarter (pp. 5-186), s. x (pp. 1-4).¹³⁴

Description:

Ga contains an imperfect 9th-century glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts written in the 10th century. A separate bifolium (paginated 1-4) of the 10th century, preceding the text of the DCP and the Lupus treatise on the metres, contains Prologus 7 (Notker's prologue) on pages 1-3. A set of glossae collectae to 1m1 and 1p1 (Ga1) was added by another scribe to the bottom half of page 3, which had been left blank. Pen trials were added around the text on page 1, and to the originally blank page 4; there is a dry-point drawing of concentric circles at the foot of page 4. The bifolium is damaged, leading to the loss of some text from the prologus and the glossae collectae. The Lupus treatise on pp. 6-12 is an integral part of the manuscript of the DCP.

The text of the DCP is on pp. 13-186. Prologus 1, which ends imperfectly, was added immediately below the now barely visible explicit to the DCP in the 10th century. Several leaves are missing from the text of the DCP between pages 180 and 181 and 184 and 185.¹³⁵ Book 1 opens with 1m1 at the top of 13r and all but Book 1 are preceded either by titles or brief incipits. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and all but one of the metres are written in single columns. Neumes were added to 4m3. Ga has ornamental initials and much rubrication. There is a partly-erased drawing of concentric circles next to 1m7 on p. 38; there is also a crudely drawn diagram of several concentric circles next to the text of 4p6 in the left margin of p. 144.¹³⁶

Ga was not ruled to take glosses. The space between the lines of text is adequate for interlinear glosses and all but the inner margins were originally wide. The inner margins of pages 181 to 186 are damaged, but since the glosses are primarily in the outer margins, there appears to be no loss of glosses. Many glosses throughout Ga have been rendered illegible as a result of wear and tear.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Ga is fairly heavily glossed with interlinear and marginal glosses in Latin added by 10th century scribes. There are a few Greek words, one embedded in a Latin gloss. There are 68 OHG glosses, probably added in the 10th century at St Gallen; of these roughly two thirds are marginal and a third are interlinear;¹³⁷ many of the OHG glosses are now only partly legible. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms; some comments are written in red and some are enclosed in a frame. The marginal glosses are mostly written in close proximity to the lemmas with no linking symbols; in a few cases arbitrary signs link the glosses to the lemmas.

The first three books are more heavily glossed than that last two. The great majority of the glosses in Ga are also in Na and often laid out in a similar fashion, and Ga lacks very few of Na's glosses. The glosses in Ga (though not the text of the DCP itself) may well have been copied from Na itself, which was produced like Ga at St Gallen; though directly or not is not something anyone can say.¹³⁸ The main exception is the series of headnotes to the metres describing the metrical form in Ga, which rarely have an equivalent in Na and when they do, do not generally agree in wording. They seem to have been entered before the other glosses, possibly by the scribe of the text. They generally agree in content with other manuscripts (and with the Lupus treatise on the metres), but seldom in precise wording. The other exception is a sequence of glosses in 1m1 and 1p1 (Gal), which were entered by a second hand after the first had done his work. They generally correspond to glosses found not in Na but in other manuscripts associated with St Gallen and Einsiedeln, though a few are only found in manuscripts from further west.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Ga.

Provenance:

The oldest library catalogue of St Gallen, dated to the middle of the 9th century (St Gallen, Stiftsbibliothek, 728), does not record the presence of a copy of Boethius's DCP. Scherrer, in his 1875 catalogue of manuscripts of St Gallen, identifies Ga with the copy of Boethius's DCP listed in the 9th-century register of the private library of Abbot Grimold (St Gallen, Stiftsbibliothek, 267, p. 31), which he bequeathed to the Abbey Library of St Gallen upon his death in 872.¹³⁹ It is unclear when the first bifolium was brought together with the remaining part of the manuscript, but Prologus 7 in this bifolium, which refers to the accession of the Saxon emperors, must have been written later than 962, when Otto I was crowned Holy Roman Emperor. A 15th-century woodcut stamp of the St Gallen monastery coat-of-arms, which was added sideways on to the upper right corner of page 115, was probably added at the end of the 17th century.¹⁴⁰ The St Gallen librarian, Pater Pius Kolb (1712-1762), who compiled a catalogue of manuscripts in the 18th century, added 'Boetius de Consolatione philosophiae' to the originally blank page 5.

¹³⁷ B&S no. 242: 'Alemannisch'.

Gc (= G1)

St Gallen, Stiftsbibliothek 845

242 pages, 200 x 140 mm. 20/26/27 lines¹⁴¹.

Origin: St Gallen, s. x^{ex}/xiⁱⁿ.¹⁴²

Description:

On pp. 3-240 Gc contains an imperfect copy of glossae collectae to Boethius's DCP and some ancillary works; the codex is probably a direct copy of Einsiedeln 179 (Ec).¹⁴³ As in Ec, the glossae collectae are preceded by various preliminaries on pp. 3-6: Prologi 4 and 1, Distinctio 1, Prologus 8 and glossae in titulum. Pages 6-240 contain the glossae collectae to the DCP; as in Ec, the glosses begin without a title immediately beneath these preliminary texts. Between the glossae collectae on 3m9 and 3p10 is a further set of glossae collectae to 3m9 on pp. 158-168 (Gc1). The glossae collectae end in the midst of glosses to 4m7.17 on page 240; the remaining glosses to 4m7 and all of Book 5 are lost. Pages 241 and 242 are blank. The preliminaries and Books 2, 3 and 4 are preceded by brief rubrics indicating where the books begin. The glossae collectae are written in a single column throughout. Red was used only for the incipit and opening letter of Book 2. A glossator added the abbreviation 'cap', 'capl' or capitulum sporadically to indicate where a section of prose or metre begins in the glossae collectae.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Gc, which is written by several scribes, is probably a copy of Ec and therefore, like Ec, contains a high number of Latin and OHG glosses. The majority of glosses compiled in the glossae collectae are in Latin. There are some Greek words, some embedded in the Latin glosses. There are 178 OHG glosses, of which all but a few were written in cipher. About two-thirds of the OHG glosses were incorporated into the body of the glossae collectae and a third were written between the lines by the text scribes. Roughly two-thirds of the OHG glosses are unique to Ec and Gc. The OHG glosses were entered at St Gallen in the 10th, or possibly the 11th, century.¹⁴⁴ Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. Gc's lemmas are quoted in full ¹⁴³ Courcelle (1967, p. 404) proposed that Gc was a direct copy of Ec; Roti (1979, p. x), who produced an edition of Book 1 only of Gc, claimed that 'S (our Gc) is a conflation of manuscripts which no longer exist, on which E (our Ec) was also dependent', but added the caveat that 'the relationship of the two manuscripts is a question which must be postponed until all parts of the commentary have been carefully analyzed'; Tax (2002, p. 130) suggests that Gc is a direct but often incompetent copy of Ec.

Description of Manuscripts

or in abbreviated form and in some cases the scribes go to great lengths to reproduce the position of the glosses as they appear in Ec (for example, many of the interlinear Latin and OHG glosses in Ec are entered in Gc between the lines); though in other cases Ec's marginal glosses are copied into the body of the glossae collectae. Occasionally the scribes of Gc omitted glosses or parts of glosses recorded in Ec: sometimes this was because the scribe of Ec had continued a gloss in the space available on the line preceding the lemma and the scribe of Gc overlooked it; at other times, particularly with the OHG glosses in Ec, which are generally written directly above the lemma, the scribe of Gc appears to have omitted the gloss deliberately. In at least one instance, where a lemma was glossed in OHG in Ec (in cipher), Gc's scribe glossed it instead with a Latin equivalent, which also appears in several other early manuscripts of the DCP.¹⁴⁵ A contemporary corrector appears to have added some, but not all, of the glosses omitted by the scribe of Gc, presumably using Ec as his exemplar. A further strand of glosses not from Ec were added to Gc by contemporary scribes. Very occasionally the marginal glosses in Gc were written in geometric shapes and a few were enclosed in a frame.

Like Ec, Gc's glosses belong primarily to the East Frankish tradition. Most of Gc's glosses are either unique to Ec and Gc, or shared with Ka and Lh and a few other manuscripts, including Pm and Px.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Gc.

Provenance:

Gc was copied in St Gallen and has remained in possession of its library since. A 15th-century scribe added a few annotations to the preliminaries. An originally blank leaf between the end of Book 1 and the beginning of Book 2 now contains a woodcut stamp of the St Gallen monastery coat-of-arms (p. 69) probably added at the end of the 17th century.¹⁴⁶ A St Gallen librarian, Pater Pius Kolb (1712-1762), who compiled a catalogue of manuscripts in the 18th century, added 'Boetius de Consolatione philosophiae S.n. 400' on page 3.

Description of Manuscripts

Ge (= Ge)

Olim Geneva (Cologny-Genève), Bibliotheca Bodmeriana, Cod. 175¹⁴⁷

113 folios, 235 x 175 mm. 18 lines.

Origin: England (probably Christ Church, Canterbury?), s. x/xi.¹⁴⁸

Description:

Ge contains a glossed copy of the DCP and ancillary texts. The manuscript opens with a copy of the Lupus treatise on the metres (1ra, 1- 1vb, 21) written in double columns (40-42 lines) in glossing script. The text of the DCP on 1v-111r opens with its title at the foot of 1v.¹⁴⁹ Glossae in titulum, written en bloc, were entered on 1vb, 17-30 (next to the Lupus text) and in the upper margin of 2r; further glosses were added between the lines of the title. The text of the DCP ends on 111r, 3; an explicit and further notes were added in the 14th century. Further additions, mostly early with some later additions, were entered on 111v- 113v: an excerpt from Donatus's Ars Maior (111v-112r, 8); a classical verse (112r, 10-17); a Carolingian verse (112v); pen trials (113r); and neumes, a hymn, two proverbs and pen trials (113v).¹⁵⁰

All five books are preceded by titles. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column as are the majority of the metres; a few metres are written in multiple columns, whose boundaries are occasionally indistinct. Neumes were added to several metres.¹⁵¹ Ge has an opening ornamental initial and some rubrication. A diagram of the elements was added to the lower left margin of 55v, beneath the text of 3p10; an ink diagram of concentric circles intersected by lines and containing inscriptions was added to the left margin of 85v next to the

¹⁴⁹ The Lupus treatise was probably added after the rubricator had added the title to the DCP at the foot of 1v.

Description of Manuscripts

text of 4p6.¹⁵²

Ge is sporadically ruled for glosses: the lower and outer margins are very wide and the upper and outer margins are ruled for glosses, but not consistently. A few marginal glosses are partially lost due to trimming and fading.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OE

Ge is very heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses and a few Greek glosses, mostly embedded in the Latin glosses; the glosses were added by several contemporary scribes, many of which were duplicated by different scribes. Three OE glosses were entered in Ge (5r, 11v, 19r), possibly by three different glossators.¹⁵³ Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. Barring folio 2 of the text of the DCP, where letters of the alphabet are used to link the marginal glosses to the text, linking symbols in Books 1 and 2 are rare; some glosses repeat the lemma. The marginal glosses in the remaining three books are linked to the lemma with letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; the glosses with no linking symbols are generally written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate.

The glosses are fairly evenly distributed throughout the text, with the usual decline in intensity in the last two books. Generally it shares the glosses of Ck and related manuscripts, and draws ultimately on the same range of sources as Ck. One set of glosses in the right margin of 12r is particularly striking in that it appears to have been copied directly from folio 10r of Ck, or another manuscript like it: the glosses are written in a geometric shape and, though Ge copies all but one of the linking symbols that appear in Ck along with the glosses, these reference markers are not added to the lemma in Ge. Specific relationships with other English manuscripts vary from book to book: Book 1 shows a sprinkling of glosses otherwise found only in Ck, Book 3 has some glosses apparently derived from Pb and others from Ck, while Book 4 has a number of glosses, generally in a different hand, that are either unique to Ge or otherwise found only in Cg.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Ge.

Provenance:

The early history of Ge after it was first produced is unclear, but it may have remained in Canterbury until the late medieval period. The 14th-century glosses and colophon have been identified as French in character, suggesting that the codex may have reached the Continent by the late medieval period. The first known recorded sale of Ge in England was in 1785, when it was sold at Sotheby's from the library of the physician, classicist and bibliophile Dr Anthony Askew (1722-1772). From that point on Ge lived a rather peripatetic life in England, with ¹⁵³ With the exception of the second of these OE glosses on 11v, 'lybcraefte' glossing 'maleficio' (1p4.41) printed by Stokes (2014, p. 218), to our knowledge 'genipb' glossing 'stetit' on 5r (1m3.4) and 'olæcuggæ' [= 'olæcungæ'] glossing 'fauore' on 19r (2p2.4) have not hitherto been noticed; 'occasional dry-point glosses (as on fol. 9r, for example)' have also been reported (Sotheby's Sale Catalogue 2005, no. 80).

Go (= Go)

Gotha, Forschungsbibliothek, Memb. II. 103 (olim Gotha, Landesbibliothek, Membr. II. 103)
125 folios, 220 x 145 mm. 21 lines.

Origin: Germany, s. xi.¹⁵⁵

Description:

Go contains a glossed copy of the DCP, other works by Boethius and some ancillary texts. Go opens with a copy of the Lupus treatise on the metres of Boethius on 1r-4r, followed by Boethius's Opuscula sacra on ff. 4v-42r.¹⁵⁶ The DCP is on 42v-123v. All five books of the DCP are preceded by brief titles or explicits and incipits and the text of the DCP ends with no explicit at 123v, 6. A gap of 4 lines is left blank before the beginning of several Prologi: 1 (123v, 11-124r, 5), 4 (124r, 5-16), 5 (124r, 17-124v, 14) and 6 (124v, 14-125r, 3); these are followed immediately by Distinctio 3 (125r, 4-5) and glossae in titulum written en bloc (125r, 5-23). Numerous notes written from the 12th century onward were added to 125v. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the majority of the metres are written in multiple columns. Neumes were added to 1m7. Go has some rubrication. On 105r, next to the text of 4p6, is an ink drawing of concentric circles, intersecting lines and inscriptions.¹⁵⁷

Go is not ruled to take glosses, but the margins and the spacing of the text allow for the addition of glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Go is lightly glossed with primarily interlinear and some marginal Latin glosses, added by a variety of contemporary scribes. Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text and occasionally they are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs. In at least one case a long marginal gloss, with no linking symbol, was separated from the text it related to by a couple of folios.

The glosses are fairly evenly spread over the five books. Many of the glosses are unique to Go; some are simply different versions of common glosses. The glosses in Book 1 generally agree with the East Frankish tradition, whereas those in the remaining books, especially some of the longer glosses in Book 5, also reflect both the West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon glossing traditions.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Go.

Rockar, mistakenly reports that Go was 'possibly written at Echternach, where it was owned in the twelfth century'; however, Rockar is referring to Gotha, Forschungsbibliothek, Memb. I. 103 (and not our manuscript, Memb. II. 103), which is a copy of Boethius's De institutione arithmetica.

¹⁵⁶ Go lacks the concluding sentence ('Obserua autem ...') from the Lupus treatise.

Description of Manuscripts

Provenance:

The early history of Go is unknown. The 12th-century inscription ‘Liber sancte Marie de Monasterio Halesbrunnensi’ places Go at the Cistercian Abbey of Heilsbronn after 1132, when the abbey was founded, and by the 15th century at the Cistercian Abbey of Trium Fontium, according to the inscription on 1r, ‘Lib moy III fontis’. The 18th-century library stamp ‘Bibliotheca Ducalis Gothana’ was added to the foot of 1r.

Ka (= Ma1) and Kc (= Ma)

Kraków, Biblioteka Jagiellońska, Berol. lat. 4 , 939 (olim Berlin, Staatsbibliothek der Stiftung Preussischer Kulturbesitz, lat. 4 , 939; Maihingen, Bibliotheca Wallersteiniana, I, 2, lat. 4, 3) 114 folios, 272 x 220 mm. 27 to 29 lines.

Origin: Ka: Cologne, s. x, last decade; Kc: possibly Tegernsee, s. xi, med.¹⁵⁸

Description:

This codex is made up of two originally independent parts: Part 1 (Ka) contains a 10th-century glossed copy of the DCP and Part 2 (Kc) contains an 11th-century set of glossae collectae to all five books of the DCP. Both parts contain texts ancillary to the DCP.

Ka (ff. 1-57)

The preliminary quire of Part 1 is made up of 3 leaves and the foliation begins from its second leaf.¹⁵⁹ Folio 1r-v includes: a copy of a forged ecclesiastical privilege of Pope Nicholas I; a 10th-century deed for St Pantaleon of Cologne; a version of the regula formatarum or instructions for encoding ecclesiastical letters of safe conduct in Greek, associating letters of the Greek alphabet with numerical values;¹⁶⁰ and a defective copy of a letter from Archbishop Bruno of Cologne. Folio 2r contains a rota uentorum, with Latin, Greek and OHG inscriptions, similar in design and content to that in Mf (1r) and London, BL, Harley MS 2688 (17r) and folio 2v is blank. The foot of folio 3r, which begins the next quire and is otherwise blank, contains a colophon written by Froumund of Tegernsee (fl. ca. 960-1008) noting that he wrote the manuscript at Cologne and subsequently presented it to the Abbey of Tegernsee. Froumund also records in a letter (Strecker 1925, Epist. 17) that he copied two of Boethius's books (it is usually assumed that he was referring to the DCP), into which he himself transcribed (depinxi) the gloss; in this same letter he says that he kept one of these copies in his possession and left the other in Augsburg, in exchange for a copy of Boethius's De institutione arithmetica.¹⁶¹

Courcelle (1939, pp. 120, 122): s. x (ff. 1-57), s. x/xi (ff. 60-112) and Courcelle (1967, pp. 404-405): s. x, for entire manuscript; Weinberger (1934), Bieler (1984), Krämer (1989-90, vol. 2, p. 753): s. x/xi (ff. 1-57); Jeudy (1991, p. 486): s. x-xi (ff. 60-112). See also description in Eder (1972, pp. 37-39, no. 13), who relies entirely on earlier studies, since at the time of publication, the manuscript's whereabouts was not publicly known.

¹⁶¹ In another letter written by Froumund (Strecker 1925, Epist. 45) he refers to a manuscript being returned to him with damaged leaves: 'librum nostrum totum rugosum

Description of Manuscripts

The title to the DCP was written on folio 3v beneath an elaborate inked illustration of Boethius and Philosophy; annotations to the title were entered in the margin, between the lines and above the illustration; unidentified Latin verses, which include Latinised Greek vocabulary and annotations, a dry-point sketch and an ink drawing, were added in the surrounding space; Distinctio 2, which draws on Servius's commentary on Vergil's Aeneid and a life of Vergil, was written at the foot of 3v.

The text of DCP is on 4r-57v. All five books are preceded by titles. The proses are written in single columns and the majority of the metres are written in multiple columns. Ka has much rubrication and some ornamental initials. On 28v, in the midst of the text of 3m9, is a colourful diagram of the elements with inscriptions. The explicit to the DCP on 57v, 18-20 is followed on lines 21- 23 by an introductory note to the Lupus treatise on the metres (written in green): 'Incipiunt genera metrorum in librum Boetii, quae dom[i]nus Lupus ut facilius studiosus lector accipere potuisset, in lucem produxit'; this is then followed on lines 24-28 by a version of the passage that usually concludes the Lupus treatise in other early copies of the DCP, beginning 'Obserua autem quisque legeris, etc'. The order in which these passages are written in Ka only appears in one other of our early manuscripts, Va, where they are followed by the remainder of the Lupus treatise, beginning 'Quinque libros philosophicae consolationis insignis auctor Boetius XXVII' etc. Since the last folio of the final quire of Ka was excised at some stage, it is possible that it, along with a few further leaves, may once have contained a complete copy of the Lupus treatise.

The text of Ka shows quite remarkable similarities in layout and content to the Cologne manuscript Lh, especially in the inclusion of rubrics and Greek figures of speech, often written in red and sometimes embedded in the text, but also in such errors as the cenosum parteque disruptum recepi ... in capite eiusdem libri inserta erant duo folia; in uno erat circulus continens scripturam quattuor plagarum mundi, in alio epistola, quam formatam nuncupant, quae rogo genua vestra amplectens ut mihi remittatis'; Schepss (1881, pp. 11-13) links this with our Ka suggesting that 'totum rugosum cenosum' was probably an exaggeration. There is no reason to suppose that the material in this separate quire was not in both Froumund's copies and given that Ka in its present state is in very good condition, it seems likely that letter 45 refers to Froumund's second copy, which was his lending copy, as opposed to Ka, which according to his wording was the one he kept in his possession and later gave to the Tegernsee library. In his analysis of the wind diagram in Ka, Berschin (1995, p. 29) is inclined to accept Schepss's identification of the damaged book as Ka, but nevertheless proposes that the 'R' to whom letter 45 is addressed is probably Reginbald of Augsburg, rather than Reginbald of St Emmeram (as suggested by Strecker); if Berschin's identification is correct, this suggests a further link between Froumund's letter 45 and his lending copy of the DCP.

Wind diagrams are well-known and appear in several other early manuscripts unconnected with Boethius; see Obrist 1997 and Teresi 2018. Though Berschin accepts that wind diagrams are part of a long tradition, he argues that the inscriptions in Latin, Greek and OHG in the Ka windrose reflect Froumund's particular linguistic interests and therefore attributes the origin of this 'trilingual' wind diagram to him; however, Berschin does not take into account the wind diagram that is nearly identical, which also contains Latin, Greek and OHG inscriptions, preserved in London, BL, Harley 2688 (17r), and which was copied somewhat earlier in the 10th century than that in Ka.

Description of Manuscripts

inclusion of a gloss in the text at 5p3.14. This might suggest that Froumund copied from Lh itself, but very occasional differences in the text, especially in the cruces at 2p5.4, and the lack of the two separate commentaries to 3m9 found in Lh, seem to rule out that possibility, and it seems more probable that he was copying from a manuscript at Cologne that was very similar to Lh, and closely related to it, but had had its text ‘corrected’ at the relevant places (or indeed Lh may derive from a copy that had had its readings altered to suit another textual tradition).

Ka is not ruled to take glosses. A few marginal glosses are partially lost due to trimming. The note ‘re gira folium et inuenies notas glossarum’ is written at the foot of 35r, where Book 3 ends.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Ka is very heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses, evenly distributed throughout the text; there are a great many Greek words, written either as rubrics or embedded in the Latin glosses; there are also 104 OHG glosses to the DCP, of which one glosses a Greek gloss on the title to the DCP twice; the OHG glosses were entered primarily between the lines and occasionally in the margins.¹⁶² The majority of the glosses were written by Froumund, who copied the text at Cologne, though several glosses were entered by other contemporary glossators. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by a variety of linking symbols, including letters of the alphabet, Tironian note forms, and arbitrary signs. Others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols. On some pages Latin and Greek words that have no obvious relationship to the DCP, together with their Latin or OHG interpretations, have been entered in the upper (22v, 24v, 57v) and lower margins (5r, 9r, 22v, 24v, 25r, 26r). One of the OHG glosses on f. 22v is written in cipher.¹⁶³

The roughly 10,300 glosses in Ka seem to have been mainly entered at one time, by Froumund, but come ultimately from various sources. About half recur in Lh, though seem not to have been copied from Lh itself and they are largely confined to the East Frankish element in Lh rather than the more numerous West Frankish stratum. About a quarter of the others recur in Lf, in the parts that survive of that manuscript, and many of the glosses that recur in Lf or Lh also appear, along with others, in East Frankish manuscripts such as Ec Na Ed, while some others are characteristic of the West Frankish tradition of Af. Of the 98 OHG glosses, 27 are also in Lh and 56 are in Ec (including many of those that are in Lh). Froumund was presumably copying the glosses from a manuscript at Cologne which had accumulated entries from more than one source, though mainly within the East Frankish tradition. The ¹⁶² B&S no. 45: ‘Mittelfränkisch / Oberdeutsch’; entered in Cologne.

¹⁶³ Schepss (1884), who printed these lemmas and glosses, identified the majority as drawing on the metrical Gesta Apollonii, others from the description of the palace in the Passio of St Thomas and still others from the works of grammarians including Donatus; he argued that since Froumund drew directly on several sources for these lists that he had compiled them in the course of his various readings with a view to including them in a glossary, rather than copying them directly from an existing glossary. See also Eder 1972, pp. 38-39.

Description of Manuscripts

glosses are quite unrelated to those in the glossae collectae now bound up with Froumund's copy (designated Kc), which are predominantly from the West Frankish tradition.

Ka itself shows no sign that the glosses were assembled in various stages and from various sources (the corpus of glosses is well organised and there are only occasional signs of further entries being squeezed in subsequently), so it seems likely that Froumund assembled the glosses in another copy (presumably the second copy of the text which he claims to have made at the same time in Cologne and given to Augsburg in exchange for other works) over a period of time and Ka is his fair copy of that assemblage.

Kc (ff. 58-113)

The glossae collectae and the preliminaries in Part 2 appear to have been copied in quires by numerous scribes.¹⁶⁴ They are mostly written in a single column and only the opening 58r and 100r-112v were written in double columns. Kc is riddled with errors. Kc opens with various ancillary texts on 58r-58v: Prologi 5 (58ra, 1-28), 6 (58rb, 1-16), 1 (58rb, 16-58v, 3) and 4 (58v, 3-9);¹⁶⁵ and the Lupus treatise on the metres (58v10-60r9). These preliminaries are followed on 60r9-12 by the title 'Finit Anitii Manlii Seuerini Boetii uiri clarissimi et illustris ex consulum ordine et magno officio (!) atque patricio hpilosophice (!) consolationis. Liber I incipit', on 60r 12-13 by Distinctio 3 and on 60r14-25 by glossae in titulum, which are written en bloc (as in Mj) with no symbols to link them to the title.

The glossae collectae to the DCP (60r25-112va 26) begin immediately after the end of the glossae in titulum, with no obvious boundary separating them from the preliminary texts, except for the addition of superscript 's' over the lemmas, which may have been entered by a contemporary scribe. Boundaries between a gloss and the following lemma are often separated by a double 'ss'. Brief incipits and explicits demarcate the five books. The boundaries between the proses and metres are only occasionally marked by slightly enlarged letters in Book 1; these are more consistently marked by enlarged initials in the remaining books. The glossae collectae end with the rubric 'explicit commentum' at the foot of 112va. A single line from an anonymous epigraph, followed by an epigraph attributed to Walafrid Strabo, was added in the second column of 112v. To 113r a scribe added 'Spiritus ingenii concedit munera scripti' and there are pen trials and neumes on 113v. Colour is rarely used in Kc.

In the midst of the glossae collectae to 3m9 on 86v are two ink diagrams: that on the left is on the elements and in other manuscripts it is usually linked to 3m9; that on the right is a diagram of concentric circles intersected by lines and containing inscriptions, which is usually drawn in other manuscripts in proximity to 4p6.¹⁶⁶

¹⁶⁵ These prologi are written in the same order as they are in Mj and Ta.

¹⁶⁶ This diagram in Kc was apparently not known to Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

The number of glosses recorded in the glossae collectae of Kc suggests that they were drawn from a fairly heavily glossed copy of the DCP. Kc's lemmas are quoted in full or in abbreviated form and, with some exceptions, the lemmas are written in the order of the text. The majority of glosses compiled in the glossae collectae are in Latin. There are a couple of Greek words amongst the Latin glosses. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. A few interlinear and marginal annotations were also added to the glossae collectae; some of these are corrections to defective readings, of which there are many in both the lemmas and the glosses in Kc.

Apart from Book 1, which is the most heavily glossed part of the text, Kc tends to have only one substantial gloss to each point or lemma with little duplication. Many of the glosses in Kc are found in several manuscripts and particularly in manuscripts of the 9th century, such as Af and Vc, representing strands of the West Frankish tradition.

Most of the glosses are found in many other manuscripts, and the great majority occur in Af and related manuscripts, indicating that they go back to at least the ninth century and probably France. Occasional variants link Kc with another Tegernsee manuscript of the early eleventh century, Mj. There are scarcely any glosses derived from the East Frankish traditions represented by such manuscripts as Na Ec and Ka. There is equally no evident link with the glosses in Ka, the earlier copy with which Kc is bound (except perhaps the translation of the Greek added above the line at 4p6.38), and no reason to think the 2 copies had any connection.

Provenance:

It is unclear when Ka and Kc were united as a single codex. Schepss suggests that the two parts may have been bound together immediately after the second part was written and that certainly by the time Bernhard Pez saw the text in 1717 in Tegernsee, it had long since been bound together.¹⁶⁷ However, with the one exception noted already, the glosses in Ka and Kc seem quite unrelated. The codex was acquired between 1812 and 1817 by Ludwig von Öttingen-Wallerstein of Tegernsee, who expanded the Princely Öttingen-Wallersteinschen library. Maihingen, which had been a Birgittine nunnery from the time of its foundation in the 15th century, was dissolved during the Peasants' War; from the early 17th century it was revived as a Minorite monastery and it was subsequently secularised by the Öttingen-Wallerstein family in 1802. A large collection of the family's medieval manuscripts was sent to Maihingen and by 1817 the manuscript was at the former abbey of Maihingen. The Maihingen shelfmark 'I 2 (Lat) 4° 3', appears twice on the front pastedown and the stamp 'F. Öttingen Wallerstein'sche Bibliothek' appears on the front and back pastedowns and on the recto of the first half-page. The stamp of the Staats-Bibliothek Berlin appears on the verso of the first half-page, on 1r, on 99r and on 113v. The Berlin Prussian State Library acquisition note 'Acc. MSS. 1935.37' at the foot of 1r was added after its purchase of the manuscript in 1935, when part of the Öttingen-Wallerstein collection was auctioned at Karl and Faber in Munich.¹⁶⁸ During World War II, this codex was part of the Prussian State Library collection in Berlin that was dispatched to the monastery at Grüssau in Silesia for safe-keeping. When Grüssau became part of Poland after 1945, the manuscript collection was transferred to the Biblioteka Jagiellońska in Kraków. The Kraków library shelfmark 'Lat. qu. 939' appears in the upper margin of 1r. The existence of the manuscript, which was part of what was known variously as 'Berlinka' or the 'Prussian hoard' in the Biblioteka Jagiellońska, did not then become public knowledge until after 1980.¹⁶⁹

Kr (= Kr)

Karlsruhe, Badische Landesbibliothek, St Peter perg. 87, ff. 94-99

6 folios, in a codex of 106 folios (ff. 94-99). 335 / 340 x 238 / 240 mm. 41 lines.¹⁷⁰

Origin: Lorsch, s. xi.¹⁷¹

Description:

This codex is made up of two parts: Part 1, ff. 1-2 and 62-106, probably written at Lorsch in the 11th century and Part 2, ff. 3-61, written at an unknown location, in the 14th century; folios 58-61 remain blank. Part 1, with which we are concerned, contains numerous glossaries to a variety of texts, including to Biblical books, the Regula Sancti Benedicti, Gregory the Great's Regula pastoralis and Dialogi, Donatus's Ars grammatica and Sedulius's Carmen paschale.¹⁷² The entire codex is written in double columns.

Folios 94v to 100v contain a section of glosses headed by the rubric 'Incipiunt glosae de diversis auctoribus'. These glosses are drawn primarily from a glossed copy (or copies) of Boethius's DCP, supplemented by some that are probably from Eutyches's Ars de uerbo and other sources.¹⁷³ The glosses beginning on 94va, line 40 and ending on 99rb, line 25 mainly draw on the DCP; there is no rubric identifying the source of the glosses. The preceding glosses on 94va, lines 2-39 probably draw on the preliminaries that are often transmitted with the DCP and the glossae in titulum. The text added to the right margin of 97r in a glossing script is biographical material that often circulates with the text of the DCP: Prologi 1 (lines 1-26) and 8 (lines 26-39) are followed by glossae in titulum (lines 40-74), written en bloc.¹⁷⁴

In addition to the over 500 Latin glosses included in the part of this glossary drawing on Boethius's DCP, there are 2 OHG glosses in Kr; both appear on 95rb, line 10: one in the line of text and one interlinear gloss on the same line of text, probably also entered by the main ¹⁷⁰ Since we came upon this material quite late on in the project (cf. Godden and Jayatilaka 2018, p. 399), we were unable to inspect the manuscript personally. However detailed descriptions of the manuscript in Heinzer and Stamm (1984, pp. 179-181) and B&S no. 324 and ease of access to the digital copy made our work on this manuscript possible.

¹⁷¹ SS (IV, pp. 409-410, no. 73): s. xi; Hoffmann (1986, vol. 1, pp. 209), Bischoff (1989, pp. 106-107): middle or 3rd quarter of the 11th century; Hoffmann assigns it to the scriptorium at Lorsch. B&S no. 324: probably the beginning of the 11th century.

¹⁷⁴ B&S no. 324 recorded the existence of this material as 'marginal Vita des Boethius'.

Description of Manuscripts

scribe.¹⁷⁵ Neither OHG gloss appears elsewhere in the early manuscripts of the DCP. The material assembled in Kr might be described as a set of glossae collectae in the format of a glossary: that is, it is written in a glossary format of lemma, or occasionally two lemmas on a single line, followed by a gloss or glosses, ranging from single-word glosses to longer expositions; however, the lemmas are not written in alphabetical order and they rarely adhere to the order of the text of the DCP and often go backwards and forwards between the sections of proses and metres, with no indication of the precise source of a lemma within the DCP.

The majority of the glosses are short, often single words, as befits a glossary, and so offer little information on transmission. The longer glosses often make the same points as glosses found in other manuscripts, but rarely have wording similar enough to indicate particular links, and at times it appears that they were the work of a glossator who was familiar with the glossing tradition for the DCP but either preferred to use his own wording or worked from a general familiarity with the tradition rather than copying directly. In the Prologi 1 and 8 and in the glosses to Book 2 there are links to the East Frankish tradition, but in Books 3 and 5 there are firm links rather with West Frankish manuscripts, which suggests that the entries are taken from a manuscript of mixed origins or, more probably, from more than one copy of the DCP.

Provenance:

The two parts of this codex were probably bound together in the 14th or 15th century, as suggested by the date of its binding and of the script on the label '[Ex]posiciones terminorum Biblie' on the front cover.¹⁷⁶ In the 15th century the manuscript may have been in the private library of Peregrinus and Lambertus de Goch, who were canons in the Collegiate monastery of St Marien in Erfurt.¹⁷⁷ Krämer proposes that it was in the possession of the Erfurt Cathedral library at one time.¹⁷⁸ A purchase note 'Emit Philippus Jacobus Abbas ad 1781' on 3r indicates that the codex was acquired by the library of the Abbey of St Peter in the Black Forest in the 18th century, where Philipp Jakob Steyrer (1715-95) was abbot from 1749 until his death in 1795. Upon the dissolution of the abbey in 1806 its possessions were transferred to the State, whence the manuscript came into the possession of the Badische Hofbibliothek and Landesbibliothek in Karlsruhe in 1807.

¹⁷⁵ SS (IV, p. 242) include these in their edition of the OHG glosses (MCCXXVII).

¹⁷⁶ A note at the foot of the inside back cover records that the binding was restored in April 1977.

Description of Manuscripts

La (= La)

Laon, Bibliothèque municipale, Ms. 439

54 folios, 250 x 167 mm. 22-23 lines.

Origin: France, s. ix, about the third third.¹⁷⁹

Description:

La contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP on 1r-54r: it begins on 1r at 2p5.27 'infra infima quaeque' and ends on 54r at 5p6.48 'iudicis cuncta cernentis', the conclusion of the DCP.¹⁸⁰ Books 3, 4 and 5 are preceded by incipits; the final folio 54 was cut immediately below line 16, where the text of the DCP ends and a later scribe added an explicit. The prose of the DCP is written in a single column, and the metres are mostly written in long prose lines with no clear delineation of the verse lines. There is some dislocation of the text between 40r and 49v, and some rewriting of the text on 40r, though the quires here appear to be regular: 40r: 4p6.46 'expectans(!) et se cum' to 4p6.47 'quibusdam permissum'; 5p4.39 'iudicium iudicantis actus' to 'potestate perficiat'; 5m4.1-40; 40v-41v: 5p5.1 to 5p5.8 'simile est quod humana'; 4p6.47 'puniendi ius ut exercitii' to 4p6.57 'ulteriora contendas'; 4m6.1-18; 4p7.1 to 4p7.3 'cum omnis'; 42r: 4m6.19-41; 4p7.3 'fortuna uel iucunda' to 4p7.9 'exercet aut corrigit prodest'; 42v-43r: 4m6.42-48; 4p7.9 'fateor inquam' to end of 4p7; 4m7.1-24; 43v-49v: 4m7.25-35; 5p1 title; 5p1.1 to 5p4.39 'nam cum omne'; 5p5.8 'ratio divinam' to 5p5.9 'ita disseris si qua'. From 50r the text of Book 5 continues as normal from 5p5.9 'certos ac necessarios' to the end of 5p6.48 on 54r.¹⁸¹ A corrector helpfully annotates the text indicating where it is dislocated. La has some rubrication. A diagram of a circle with slanting lines drawn inside was added to the upper left corner of 3v, where 2p6 ends and 2m6 begins.

Miscellaneous notes, quotations and pen trials were added to 54v in the 10th and 11th centuries: the phrase 'lege hunc librum doctior eris A(...)' was written at the foot of 54v in an impossibly small script; 'incipit uita sanctae margarite uirginis' may have led to the identification of this volume of the DCP with a copy of the life of St Margaret.¹⁸² Numerous pen trials were also added in the 9th to the 12th centuries to the remnants of the final Contreni (1978, p. 46, n. 30) proposed that La was produced in the scriptorium of the Abbey of Saint-Germain-des-Prés in Paris, a suggestion accepted by Bischoff (Katalog 2, no. 2119); more recently, Muzerelle (2013, p. 180) notes that this attribution is not based on any concrete evidence and therefore La's origin remains uncertain.

¹⁸¹ The verse lines of 4m6 and the prose text of 4p7 on 41v-43v are written in parallel columns.

Description of Manuscripts

fragmentary leaf, including the 9th-century ‘Grimoldus fe[cit]’.¹⁸³

La is not ruled for glosses, though the outer margins are wide and the space between the lines of text is sufficient to take glosses.

Glosses: Latin

La is lightly glossed with primarily interlinear and some marginal Latin glosses, entered by a variety of contemporary scribes, probably soon after the text was written. Other additions include a couple of headnotes to the metres. The glossators often use Tironian notes. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma with arbitrary symbols, others are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate.

The glosses are scattered evenly over the text that survives. The glosses are all very short, one or two words, apart from three longer glosses. Many are unique to La, and those that are shared with other manuscripts show no particular patterns of agreement and could well be independent - they are mostly fairly obvious interpretations or synonyms. Quite a few instances are textual variants with a gloss suggesting an alternative reading. Most could well be responses to reading the text rather than copied from another glossed manuscript of the DCP, though some at least of the textual variants suggest comparison with another version. And the absence of any glosses on the Greek quotations suggests that the glossator had no access to the general glossing traditions for the DCP. The three longer glosses are all on metres (3m8, 3m12, 4m3), perhaps suggesting that the metres were a special object of study for the glossator or that he had access to an anthology of Boethian metres with some glossing, though the layout of the text suggests that the text scribe had no special interest in the metres. Two have their closest parallel in Ef and the other with a group of East Frankish manuscripts - Ec Ed Gc Ka Lf Pm. And the unexpected interpretation of 4m7 as referring to the sacrifice of Polixena by Pyrrhus/Neoptolemus rather than to the sacrifice of Iphigenia by Agamemnon has a parallel only in the East Frankish manuscript Ec Gc Ka (and a partial parallel in the English manuscript Cg). Perhaps these particular glosses, and maybe others in La, were copied to or from another manuscript of the DCP which found its way to St Gallen or Einsiedeln, since La shows no familiarity with the fuller East Frankish tradition on which Ec Gc and Ka draw.

Provenance:

The early history of La is unknown. Although the scriptorium at Saint-Germain-des-Prés in Paris has been suggested as a place of origin, evidence for this remains doubtful. The 17th-century binding is of the Cathedral of Laon.¹⁸⁴

¹⁸³ Since this is one of many pen trials it does not necessarily identify the scribe of this volume (Muzerelle 2013, p. 180).

Description of Manuscripts

Lc (= Lc) and Lb (= L)

London, British Library, Add. 15601

108 folios, 250 mm x 145 mm. Lc: 37-38 lines; Lb: 34-44 lines.

Origin: possibly northern France, s. x/xi.¹⁸⁵

Description:

This composite manuscript is made up of two originally independent parts: Part 1 (1-74), with which we are concerned, contains the works of Boethius, Lupus of Ferrières and Persius. Part 2 (75-108) contains works by Calcidius, Prudentius, Gennadius and others.¹⁸⁶ Part 1 (1r-74v) contains an imperfect set of glossae collectae to Boethius's DCP (Lc), a complete glossed copy of the DCP (Lb), the Lupus treatise on the metres, a complete glossed copy of Persius's Saturae, and an incomplete set of glossae collectae to the Saturae.

Though both the glossae collectae and the glossed text of the DCP appear to have been written in the same scriptorium, overlap is evident in only three one-word glosses and one long gloss; for sake of clarity we describe here the two sets of glosses separately.

Lc (1r-16v):

The glossae collectae to the DCP are on 1r-16v. They were written on 2 quires, with 37 to 38 lines per page, and end in the middle of 16v at the end of a gloss to 3m9.13. A later medieval scribe added a Latin annotation of five lines in the space left immediately after the glossae collectae. The glossae collectae are written in a single column throughout. There are no titles to any of the three books, but the rubric 'incipit liber iii' was written by the original scribe on 11v. Lc opens with a crudely drawn initial on 1r and there is little use of colour. The margins of Lc were trimmed, but there is no apparent loss of text or glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

The majority of glosses compiled in the glossae collectae are in Latin; a few Greek words are embedded in the Latin glosses. The glossae collectae in Lc seem to have been copied from a manuscript in the same format since on 12v a line or two of commentary has been omitted and added at the top of the page, and it covers parts of two distinct glosses on different lemmas, so the mistake is unlikely to have been made when copying from a glossed text. Sometimes the glosses to each prose and metre begin with the opening line of the relevant section, but these are not usually highlighted. As a rule Lc's glosses are not preceded by lemmas; the glosses are sometimes separated by markers, some of which were later highlighted in red, presumably by the same scribe who struck through in red ink one brief gloss and a couple of words in Greek for emphasis. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres.

The number of glosses in Lc are relatively few and are predominantly longer glosses with a great many individual variants. The glosses are almost entirely those of the West Wittig (2007, p. 189) proposes a south German origin, but gives no reason for thinking it is so. Marshall (1983, p. 193) dates ff. 102v-108r of Part 2 to s. xii/xiii, northern France.

Description of Manuscripts

Frankish Af tradition, and often show variants shared with Fd Ld Pt and sometimes Vf. Scattered through Books 2 and 3, however, are a few additional glosses that do not occur in the main witnesses to the Af tradition (Af Kc Vc etc) but do occur in (some of) the related manuscripts Fd Ld Pt and in some cases also in the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.

Lb (17r-59r):

The DCP is on 17r-59r. The title to Book 1 of the glossed text of the DCP was crudely written in the blank space left at the bottom of 16v, probably at the time the two parts were united. The remaining four books have brief rubrics indicating the end of one book and the beginning of the next; all five rubrics were struck through with red ink for emphasis. The text of the DCP begins on 17r on a fresh quire; the lines per page in these subsequent quires which contain the DCP, the Lupus and Persius texts are highly variable, ranging from 34 to 44 lines per page. Folio 58 is less than half the size of the other leaves of the manuscript, and the layout of the text suggests it was so from the outset. The glossed text to the DCP ends on 59r, line 4 with ‘Explicit Liber Boecii de consolatione’. The Lupus treatise on the metres begins on 59r, line 5 and concludes on 60v, line 14. A space of one line, to which a later medieval scribe added a rubric identifying Persius’s Saturae, was left between the Lupus treatise and a complete glossed copy of the Saturae (60v-70r); this is followed immediately by an incomplete set of glossae collectae to the Saturae (70r-74v); and a 14th-century scribe added a couple of verses from the Epistulae of Horace beneath it on 74v.

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; rather than being written in distinct columns, the metres are mostly written in multiple verse lines to each manuscript line. Lb has a few ornamental initials and some rubrication. An ink diagram of concentric circles was drawn in the left margin of 49v, next to the text of 4p6;¹⁸⁷ space was clearly left for the diagram, since the text neatly surrounds the right side of it. There are traces of two further circles outside the existing diagram, which appear to have been erased before one of the interlinear glosses was added to the text here. The trimming of the margins of the manuscript has resulted in the partial loss of the diagram.

Lb is not ruled to take glosses. There is also very little space between the lines of text and, although the outer margins were heavily trimmed at some stage, the inner margins are relatively narrow. Some marginal glosses are partially lost due to the trimming.

Glosses: Latin

Lb is fairly heavily glossed, mainly by contemporary scribes. The glosses, which are almost exclusively single-word entries, are mainly interlinear and marginal glosses are rare. The marginal glosses are mostly written in close proximity to the lemmas, though in a few cases arbitrary signs link the glosses to the lemmas.

The occasional longer glosses are mostly unique to Lb (and include a rare instance of Arabic numerals in the gloss to 3m9.10), though there are occasional instances of glosses from the West Frankish tradition of Af/Vc early on. The glossator generally seems unfamiliar with the common identifications of proper names, hence examples like ‘Catullus: quidam philosophus’, ‘Achaemeniae: locus est quidam’, and ‘Homerus: philosophus’. Other additions include a single headnote shared with Ka Lh for 2p4, which is misplaced in Lb and ¹⁸⁷ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Lb at 148, 151-52.

Description of Manuscripts

written above 2m3 and a headnote defining the metrical form of 4m2.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Lb.

Provenance:

It is unclear when the two parts of this codex were first bound together. The 14th-century inscription on 108r 'Iste liber est monasterii fratrum Celestinorum Avinionum ex hereditate magistri Iohannes Busqueti' places Part 2 at least at the monastery of the Celestines in Avignon by the 15th century. An inscription on prosody was added to 108v by another late hand. The British Museum purchased the manuscript from the bibliophile Charles Motteley in the 19th century, as noted by the inscription on the recto of a modern fly leaf (f. v): 'Purchased of Tho. Rodd, 8th Nov. 1845. (From M. Motteley's Collection, Paris)'.

Description of Manuscripts

Ld (= L1)

London, British Library, Add. 19726

98 folios, 276 x 200 mm.¹⁸⁸ 31 lines (Part 1).

Origin: Germany?; s. x^{ex}/xiⁱⁿ.¹⁸⁹

Description:

This codex is made up of two originally independent parts: Part 1 (1-57), with which we are concerned, contains a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP and Part 2 (58-98) contains a copy of Adamnan's Vita Columbae;¹⁹⁰ the front and back pastedowns and fly leaves are from a 14th-century liturgical manuscript.

The DCP is on 2r-57r. Book 1, which begins with 1m1, has no title;¹⁹¹ brief rubrics indicating the end of one book and/or the beginning of the next were entered for Books 2, 3 and 5 and, though space of a single line was left between Books 3 and 4, no explicit or incipit was supplied. The explicit on 57r is followed by the colophon 'qui uitium superare cupit uirtutibus almīs / sepe legat uires quas continet iste libellus' written by the scribe of the text. Beneath it two further lines were written and rubbed out; from what little can be read of the first of these lines, it appears to be repeating the second line above it and may have been a pen trial by a later scribe. On 57v is a liturgical fragment with neumes that may derive from a commentary on the 'Canticum Canticorum'.

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column, with the exception of the beginnings of 4p7 and 5p1, which follow the double column layout of the preceding metres; with the exception of a few, the metres are mostly written in single columns and occasionally the lines of metre are written out of order. Ld has some ornamental initials and rubrication.

Ld is not ruled to take glosses, but the margins are wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take interlinear glosses.

¹⁹⁰ See Esposito, 1937, p. 153 for a brief description of Part 2; however, note that Esposito's folio references for the two parts of the manuscript are incorrect. The DCP ends on folio 57, which is a singleton and the recto of folio 58, which begins a new quire, remains blank except for the addition of a 15th-century title to the Vita Columbae; the 11th-century copy of the Vita begins on 58v.

¹⁹¹ The first folio of this quire was excised and may have contained a title to the DCP and perhaps even some ancillary texts, as in many other early copies of the DCP.

Description of Manuscripts

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Ld is heavily glossed in Latin with both interlinear and marginal glosses, entered by contemporary scribes, though they peter out about half way through Book 5. There are a couple of Greek words amongst the Latin glosses. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly written in close proximity to the lemmas, though in a few cases letters of the alphabet or arbitrary signs link the glosses to the lemmas. Some glosses are written in geometric shapes.

Ld forms a very consistent group with Fd Lc Pt and more selectively Vf, witnessing both shorter and longer glosses. The majority of the longer glosses in this group draw on the West Frankish tradition represented by Af Kc Vc, and often show variants in the Fd Ld group. Some of these glosses seem to have originated as supplements to the Af-type gloss, correcting errors; on the other hand, there are instances where they all reproduce an erroneous Af type gloss without further comment. In various parts though there is evidence of glosses from other traditions. Book 2 shows a number of glosses that appear only in Ld plus Anglo-Saxon manuscripts (and Fb in some cases). From 3p11 to 4p5 there are many cases where the Fd Ld group and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts share glosses that are not found in other manuscripts, though often the two groups show distinctly different versions of such glosses. And in parts of Book 5 there are glosses that appear in the Fd Ld group and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts and also some West Frankish manuscripts such as Pc Pk. And very occasionally there appears a gloss that is more characteristic of East Frankish manuscripts such as Ka or Ec.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Ld.

Provenance:

The early history of Ld is unknown. The earliest evidence of Ld being in Tegernsee appears to be the 15th century, since the DCP is bound in a 15th-century binding with a copy of Adomnan's Vita Columbae, which is thought to have been produced at Tegernsee. Eder classifies the script of Part 2 (Adomnan's Vita Columbae) as being written in the 11th-century 'third-style generation' of Tegernsee and identifies the 15th-century note on 98r with the two founders of the monastery there.¹⁹² Eder also argues that the Boethius text must have passed to Tegernsee by the middle of the eleventh century on the grounds that the copy of Adomnan's Vita was begun on the last leaf of the DCP, but in fact it begins on a separate leaf of a new quire;¹⁹³ furthermore, the first leaf of Part 2 (58r) is badly discoloured, suggesting that the Vita remained unbound and unprotected for some time after it was produced. The British Museum purchased the manuscript from the print dealer and bibliophile Edwin Tross of Paris in the 19th century, as noted in the inscription on the front pastedown.

¹⁹³ Eder appears to have been relying on Esposito's inaccurate description of Ld here; see note on his description above.

Le (= L2)

London, British Library, Egerton 267, fol. 37

Fragmentary remnant of a single leaf, c. 202 x 105 mm (text space), 20 lines.

Origin: England (probably Abingdon), s. x, late.¹⁹⁴

Description:

This former pastedown is presently mounted on a modern stub in a collection of unconnected fragments. The facing leaves on either side of folio 37 (36v and 38r) contain modern transcripts of the content of 37r and 37v. Folio 37 contains part of Book 1 of the DCP, beginning in the middle of 1p4.34 ‘pro uerae uirtutis’ to 1p4.44 ‘ultimam esse aduersae’; there is no text missing between the bottom of 37r and the top of 37v. Though the text is mostly legible, parts of it are damaged. The surviving prose text of the DCP is written in single columns. No evidence of decoration survives.

Le is at least partially ruled to take glosses. The space between the lines of text is generous and what is left of the outer margins of the leaf was ruled to take glosses; this outer margin is slightly damaged and has a fold going through it, rendering parts of the glosses illegible. No glosses survive from the upper, lower and inner margins, which were severely cropped.

Glosses: Latin

Le is fairly heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses written in hands contemporary with the text.¹⁹⁵ The surviving marginal glosses are linked to the lemma which they annotate by arbitrary signs, including some Greek letters; some marginal glosses repeat the lemmas.

Le seems to draw primarily on the general Anglo-Saxon tradition, with a particularly close relationship to Ps (though not copied from Ps itself). There are also several glosses that are found only in a range of Continental manuscripts and Ps.

Provenance: Unknown.

¹⁹⁴ Bishop (1971, p. 13) proposes that the scribe of Le was probably the same scribe who wrote Lincoln Cathedral MS 182, ff. 18-39 and 190-6; he proposes a late-10th-century Abingdon origin for the Lincoln Manuscript; Bolton (1977, pp. 58-59), Gneuss and Lapidge (2014, no. 408), Love (2012, p. 87) agree with Bishop; Troncarelli (2005, no. 77), CB 1 (no. 107): s. x; Wittig (2007, p. 189): xiⁱⁿ, England.

¹⁹⁵ Bolton (1977, p. 58) dates the glosses to the early 11th century.

Description of Manuscripts

Lf (= L8/9)

London, British Library, Arundel 514

16 folios in a codex of 173 folios (ff. 145-160). 200 x 146 mm. 27 lines.

Origin: Unknown, perhaps Germany, s. x.¹⁹⁶

Description:

This composite manuscript is made up of several originally independent parts of varying dates, ranging from the 9th to the 14th centuries. It includes works of Boethius, Priscian and Aristotle, amongst others.¹⁹⁷ One part (ff. 108r-44v) contains an imperfect 14th-century glossed copy of Boethius's DCP and is followed immediately (ff. 145r-160v) by two fragmentary glossed sections of the DCP written in the 10th century.

The two fragmentary sections of the DCP, written on 2 quaternions by several scribes, have been bound in the following order: on 145r-52v, 4p6.40 ('confirmant') to 5p4.31 ('considerandum est nam'), and on 153r-60v, 3p2.5 ('credentes ut diuitiis') to 3m9.24 ('defigere uisus'). Only the title to Book 5 survives. The surviving prose text of the DCP, which was written by several scribes, was written in a single column. Aside from a few written in single columns, the metres were written in double columns. Neumes were added to 3m9. Lf has some rubrication (now oxidised).

Lf is not ruled to take glosses. The margins and the spacing of the lines of text allow for glosses, but trimming of the outer margins has led to some loss of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, OHG

Lf is very heavily glossed with both marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin and OHG. The Latin glosses were entered by several scribes in the 10th and 11th centuries; about half of these glosses are unique to Lf. There are also 391 OHG glosses, the majority of which are interlinear; the OHG glosses were probably entered in the 10th and 11th centuries.¹⁹⁸ Amongst the early extant manuscripts of the DCP, Lf not only preserves the largest number of OHG glosses, but the majority are unique to Lf. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections and a single headnote to 3m6. Some marginal glosses are written in close proximity to the lemmas and in other cases the glosses are linked to the lemmas with arbitrary signs as well as ¹⁹⁶ B&S no. 408 treats ff. 145-160 as a single volume, written by a single scribe of the 10th/11th century; Troncarelli (2005, no. 76) treats the text as a single volume written by several scribes of the 11th century; CB 1 (no. 101) treats the text as two separate parts (F and G) and dates both to s. ix/x (followed by Love 2012, p. 88). We take the view that the text of the two fragmentary glossed sections were originally part of a single volume written by contemporary scribes of the 10th century and, given the high number of OHG glosses, probably glossed in the East Frankish area in the 10th and 11th centuries and perhaps even produced there. The occasional use of subscript ligatures in both the body of the text as well as the glosses may point to an early 10th century date, or perhaps an early exemplar. Weinberger (1934), dating the entire codex: 's. xiv, unum solum fol. s. xi habere dicitur'.

¹⁹⁸ B&S no. 408: 'Fränkisch / Ostfränkisch / Fränkisch-alemannisch'.

some musical notations.

Given the high proportion of OHG glosses, Lf was probably glossed in the East Frankish area. It looks as if the OHG glosses were written before some of the interlinear Latin glosses, which were in turn written before some of the marginal ones. The commonest element among the longer Latin entries is composed of glosses shared exclusively with Ec Gc and Ka. There are also glosses shared with other manuscripts of the East Frankish tradition, notably Eb Ed and Pm, but no links with manuscripts of the West Frankish tradition or with Lh.

Provenance:

It is unclear when the numerous parts of this codex were first bound together. However, the presence of ‘duo quaterni ex Boetio Consolatione’ written in a 14th-century hand in the upper margin of 145r suggests that at least the two sections of the 10th-century Boethius manuscript were together by the 14th century, already in the wrong order. The inscription ‘Liber Carthus(iensium). p(ro)pe Mogu(n)cia(m)’ in the lower margin of 1r places Lf at the Carthusian charterhouse at Mainz in the 14th century. The ink stamp ‘Soc. Reg. Lond. / ex dono Henr. Howard / Norfolciensis’ also in the lower margin of 1r points to its ownership by the earls of Arundel by the 17th century. It was presented to the Royal Society of London in 1667 and thence purchased by the British Museum in 1831.

Description of Manuscripts

Lg (= L7)

London, British Library, Harley 2685

102 folios, 345 x 255 mm. 45-46 lines.

Origin: probably eastern France, s. ix, fourth quarter.¹⁹⁹

Description:

This codex contains a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP (ff. 1-23v), Fulgentius's Mythologiae (ff. 24r-35v), his Expositio Virgilianae continentiae secundum philosophos moralis (ff. 35v-39r) and Martianus Capella's De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii, Books 1-9 (ff. 39r-102r), written on 13 quires, of which 11 preserve quire signatures. The DCP is written on the first three quires, the last page of which was excised and therefore lacks a quire signature; the quire signatures on the first (8v) and second (16v) quires are letters and the signatures on the remaining quires of the codex are a sequence of roman numerals.²⁰⁰ The texts by Fulgentius and Martianus were written by contemporary scribes as a single unit on the remaining 10 quires.²⁰¹ It is conceivable that the text of the DCP was initially intended as a separate unit and was only brought together with the remaining 10 quires of this codex at a later date.

The DCP is on 1rb-23va. All but Book 1, which begins with 1m1, are preceded by titles or incipits and explicits. A glossator entered a copy of Prologus 5 in the upper margin of 1r; the Biblical verse 'in nomine domini omne genuflectatur caelestium terrestrium et infernorum' (Philippians 2:10) was added later beneath the explicit on 23va; and 23vb remains blank. The entire prose text of the DCP is written in double columns; the metres are written in single columns within this double column layout, except for 1m7, which is written in double columns. There is some dislocation of the text on ff. 21v and 22r, which a later reader highlights.²⁰² Neumes were added to 1m2 and 1m5. Space was left for the Greek in the text to be entered after the Latin text had been written - occasionally it was entered by a contemporary

scribe or rubricator and sometimes it was left out entirely; in one instance (4p6.38) a scribe entered, over a partial erasure, the Latin gloss that usually appears on the Greek text here and added the marginal comment ‘Sardismos est commixt(io) linguarum’. Lg has some rubrication.

Lg was not ruled to take glosses: space between the lines of text is limited, but the inner margins formed by the columns and the outer margins are wide. Trimming of the pages has led to the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, OHG

Lg is lightly glossed with both interlinear and marginal Latin glosses, mainly on 1r to 3r, as far as 1p4; from 3v on the glosses are sparse. The glosses were mostly entered in the 10th century, though there are a handful of contemporary glosses as well as some from the 11th century. Another addition is a single headnote to 1m5. A single interlinear OHG gloss was written on f. 2rb (to 1p4.13) by the same probably 10th-century scribe who wrote many of the one-word Latin glosses on this folio.²⁰³ The marginal glosses are written in close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

Lg generally follows the West Frankish tradition represented by Af Kc Vc, but often with individual adaptations, especially abridgements. Though only Ka has the same OHG gloss as Lg, there are no links with Ka's East Frankish glosses.

Provenance:

It is unclear when the 3 quires containing the DCP were united with the remaining 10 quires of this codex.²⁰⁴ The 15th- or 16th-century ‘Liber Maioris Ec(clesiae)’ on the recto of the parchment front flyleaf numbered ‘ii’ may be the ex libris of the Cologne Cathedral library.²⁰⁵ After passing through the libraries of several German scholars and bibliophiles in the 17th and 18th centuries, Lg was acquired by Giovanni Giacomo Zamboni, an Italian agent for the Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt residing in London, who sold it to Edward Harley in 1725.²⁰⁶ The note ‘20 die mensis Octobris, A. D. 1725’ in the upper margins of the parchment front flyleaf numbered ‘ii’ and on 24r was written by Harley’s librarian Humfrey Wanley. Harley’s manuscript collection, which was sold to the nation of Great Britain by Harley’s wife and daughter in 1753 under the Act of Parliament that established the British Museum, became part of the foundation collections of the British Library in 1973.

²⁰³ B&S no. 413: ‘Mittelfränkisch’; B&S suggest that this OHG gloss was probably added in Cologne in the 10th century.

²⁰⁴ The exception is Troncarelli (2005, no. 78), who proposes that the two parts were written in the same environment and were probably ‘reunited’ (riuniti) not long after they were written.

Lh (= L4)

London, British Library, Harley 3095

1* + 149 folios, 275 x 220 mm. 20 lines.

Origin: western Germany (Cologne?), s. x, first half.²⁰⁷

Description:

Lh contains glossed copies of several of Boethius's works. The preparation of the quires suggest that the codex was probably conceived and prepared in two parts: Part 1 (1-112), contains the DCP and ancillary texts; Part 2 (113-149) contains his Opuscula sacra, which end imperfectly. It is not known when the two parts were first bound together, but presumably it was fairly soon after they had been made since the quire signatures that were added (though not consistently) follow sequentially throughout the codex.²⁰⁸ Part 1, with which we are concerned, also contains a miscellany of other texts: a few lines of a glossary explaining early administrative titles and Latinised Greek terms for philanthropic institutions (f. 111r),²⁰⁹ an excerpt from Eugenius of Toledo's recension of Dracontius's Hexaameron (f. 111r), and neumed liturgical writings (111v).²¹⁰ Several originally blank leaves now contain additions, including pen trials, a modern acquisition note and traces of large circles (1*r), the phrase

²¹⁰ For the significance of these liturgical chants on 111v, added not long after the preceding texts, see Handschin (1954, pp. 45-46) and Huglo (1991).

Description of Manuscripts

‘Hae sunt dyptongi grecorum’ followed by two lines of Greek characters (1*v), and an ink diagram of the spheres of the universe with inscriptions (112v).

Part 1 opens with several ancillary texts: Prologi 1 (1v, 1-13) and 4 (1v, 13-21) are followed by Prologus 9 (1v, 22-2r, 2), a sequence of glossae in titulum written en bloc (2r, 2-15), and Prologus 8 (2r, 15-21). The DCP is on 2v-110v. All five books are preceded by titles and glossae in titulum appear against the title to Book 1 as well as above it, in the upper margin of 2v. Two commentaries on 3m9 of the DCP follow immediately after the text of 3m9, which ends on 47r, line 11; the first (ff. 47r, line 13-59r, line 3) is a copy of a commentary attributed to Bovo II of Corvey, which begins with a rubric and no prefatory letter; a version of the Bovo commentary also appears in Vd. The second commentary (ff. 59r, line 3-61v, line 12), which also appears in Ed, remains anonymous.²¹¹ Additional glosses to 3m9 were written in the margins of the Bovo commentary, against the relevant lines of the metre, where they are quoted in the commentary. The text of 3p10 resumes at 61v, line 13 and the DCP ends with ‘Amen’ at the foot of 110v.

The prose text of the DCP is written in single columns, as are the majority of the metres. Neumes were added to the first line of 3m5. Lh has much rubrication (now mostly oxidised). Dry-point knot patterns, some rather elaborate, were added on several pages. There is a dry-point drawing of concentric circles in the upper left margin on 46v, where 3m9 begins, and an ink drawing of two overlapping circles with inscriptions in the left margin of 47v alongside the Bovo commentary. An ink sketch of a circle and a central point was drawn at the foot of 88r, beneath the text of 4p6.²¹² As noted above, there are remarkable similarities not only between the layout and content of Lh and Ka, but also in their inclusion of errors such as the gloss incorporated into the text at 5p3.14.

Lh is not ruled for glosses, but its wide margins and ample space between the lines of text leave room for the addition of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Lh is very heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses and numerous Greek words, many embedded in the Latin glosses, entered by a variety of contemporary scribes. There are 53 OHG glosses, most of which were added between the lines, also in the 10th century.²¹³ The glosses to Lh were added, probably at Cologne, soon after the text was written. The glosses entered on the Bovo commentary on 3m9 by contemporary scribes are from a different tradition (West Frankish glosses) than those that were entered in the margins and between the lines of 3m9 of the main text (East Frankish glosses). Other additions include headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by a ²¹¹ This commentary also occurs in Antwerp, Museum Plantin-Moretus 250 (100).

²¹² Papahagi (2010, p. 154) describes this drawing as incomplete, noting that of the ‘five concentric circles sketched in dry point, only the inner one, in addition to the central point, was inked in’; however, we were unable to confirm the existence of these dry-point circles under UV light.

²¹³ B&S no. 418: ‘Mittelfränkisch’.

Description of Manuscripts

variety of linking symbols, including letters of the alphabet, Tironian notes, musical notations and arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols; occasionally the marginal glosses repeat the lemmas. Some marginal glosses are written in geometric shapes.

In addition to glosses that are unique to Lh, Lh combines two distinct branches of commentary tradition:

(1) The most substantial is represented by glosses that are found in a wide range of mainly West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, best exemplified by the ninth-century witnesses Af and Vc, but including others from the tenth and eleventh centuries such as Kc and the English group Ap Ck Ge Ps etc. What little evidence there is of consistent links with specific manuscripts within that group points only to Ta, which often shares variant readings in Af type glosses. Where there is divergence between an Af sub-branch and a Vc sub-branch, Lh sometimes has the Vc gloss.

(2) The other branch is represented by glosses that occur regularly in manuscripts associated with East Frankish centres, notably Ec and Ka. Often Lh will have two or more glosses on the same lemma from different branches, sometimes indeed making the same point.

The general layout of the glosses is fairly uniform but there are some indications that these various elements were brought together in Lh itself. Often it would seem that the glosses linked to Ec and Ka were written first and those linked to West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon manuscripts fitted around them. In the case of 3m9, the glosses from the East Frankish tradition were written around the text leaving no space for more, and the glosses from the West Frankish tradition were then entered against the text of 3m9 where it had been repeated as part of the commentary of Bovo on the following leaves. But that is not always the case and it is possible that the glossators were combining the two sources page by page rather than working through the whole text using one exemplar and then starting again using the other. The presence of 52 Franconian glosses, many shared with Ec and Ka and other manuscripts, suggests that the compilation was done in a German-speaking region, and Cologne is a plausible area for a combination of German and French commentary traditions.

In summary, there are at least three strands of glossing in Lh: glosses that are unique to Lh; glosses reflecting the East Frankish tradition, including the OHG glosses; and, the most substantial component, glosses reflecting the West Frankish tradition, represented by Af and Vc or by the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.

Provenance:

It is likely that Lh originated in western Germany, highly probably in Cologne.²¹⁴ Identification of the 10th-century inscription on 89r, ‘RVOTBERTI LIBER. NON EST ALIVS HVIC SIMILIS’ remains uncertain. After passing through the libraries of several German scholars and bibliophiles in the 17th and 18th centuries, Lh was acquired by Giovanni Giacomo Zamboni, an Italian agent for the Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt residing in London, who sold it to Edward Harley in 1725.²¹⁵ The note ‘20 die mensis Octobris, A. D. 1725’ in the upper margin of the parchment front flyleaf ‘1*’ was written by Harley’s librarian Humfrey Wanley. Harley’s manuscript

Mb (= M3)

Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 14324

70 folios, 283 x 220 mm. 36 lines (Part 2).

Origin: Regensburg, St Emmeram, s. ix, about the middle.²¹⁶

Description:

This codex is made up of two originally independent parts²¹⁷: Part 1 (1-35) is a 14th-century manuscript containing two commentaries, one by Albertus Swebelinus and another anonymous one, on Martinus de Dacia's De modis significandi, a commentary on the second book of Priscian's Institutio de arte grammatica and a text on linguistic logic. Part 2 (36-70), with which we are concerned, contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP and ancillary texts.

Folio 36r remains blank, except for pen trials, which include lines from Jerome's second revision of the Psalms 124.1-2, with neumes. Prologus 1 is on 36v, 1-16; this is followed on lines 19-26 by an excerpt from Augustine's De civitate dei VII.23, which appears as a gloss to 3m9.13 in several other early commentary manuscripts of the DCP.²¹⁸ These two texts were written by the text scribe or a contemporary. The DCP is on ff. 37r-70v. All five books are preceded by titles. Part of the text of Book 4 of the DCP between 65v and 66r (the innermost bifolium of the fourth quire) is missing; the final leaves of Mb are also lost and the text ends at the foot of the verso of the remaining singleton at 5p5.6 'uniuersum esse non posse aut igitur'.²¹⁹ The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the majority of the metres are written in multiple columns. Mb has some ornamental initials and rubrication.

Mb is not ruled to take glosses. The lower margin is fairly wide, but the space between the lines is cramped.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Mb is fairly heavily glossed with both interlinear and marginal Latin glosses and a couple of Greek words, added by a variety of scribes, some contemporary with the text and others from the 10th and 11th centuries. There are 23 OHG glosses, of which 18 are interlinear and 5 are marginal; these glosses include some that may have been added in the late 9th century.²²⁰ The

According to Bischoff (1974, p. 220, no. 72) the use of insular abbreviations in Mb may point to the use of an insular exemplar.

Description of Manuscripts

glosses are primarily concentrated in the first two books and to a lesser extent the third. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres; the headnotes are mostly written in glossing script. The marginal glosses are mostly written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols; occasionally the glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs.

The text of the DCP was evidently copied (directly or at some remove) from a glossed manuscript, given that two translations of the Greek at 2p2.13 are embedded in the text. The first is unique to Mb, the other a relatively common gloss, especially in East Frankish manuscripts such as Ec and Vh. Similarly a title to 3p4 is written as a rubric in red ink, apparently copied as part of the text from a gloss in the exemplar. The glosses in the manuscript itself, however, seem not to have been copied from a single exemplar, but to have been entered at various times by different glossators and from a variety of sources.

A surprising number of the glosses generally, including virtually all those in OHG, are unique to Mb. This might suggest the responses of a reader of the manuscript, but they have the look of transcribed glosses rather than fresh creations. An OHG gloss originally written in the wrong place in 3p1.30 and then erased and rewritten over the line below similarly suggests copying. A striking feature of the glossing is the frequency of duplicates or near duplicates, which the copyists can hardly not have recognised, given the general lightness of annotation. So at 1p1.8 there are two identical versions of the gloss beginning ‘Scena dicebatur apud antiquos’, both in the same margin. Again, at 1p2.3 two versions of the same gloss, beginning ‘hic ostenditur’ and ‘ostendit’ occur close together, in different hands. The first is found in a range of East Frankish manuscripts, the second only in Ka otherwise. These seem to be the work of different glossators drawing on different sources. Most of the Mb glosses are short. The longer glosses sometimes show links with other East Frankish manuscripts such as Ec Ka Px Vh, and in a few cases with Bc, but there is no clear pattern of relationship. The frequency of unique glosses and the duplication of those that were copied suggests that the lightness of glossing was due not to lack of interest but lack of access to a fuller range of glossing. A notable absence is the long glosses on details of classical legends and ideas which characterise many of the later manuscripts. The loci classici, 3m9, 3m12, 4m3 and 4m7, so heavily glossed elsewhere, here have very little comment. The glosses were evidently copied from a variety of different sources.

Provenance:

Both parts of the codex were probably united by the time the St Emmeram Library catalogue of 1347 was drawn up.²²¹ Clearly the manuscript in its present form was recorded in two further medieval catalogues, that of Konrad Pleystainers from 1449/52 and that of Dionysius Mengers from 1501, under the shelfmark ‘R3’.²²² A 15th-century shelfmark ‘28.12’ written in ink on a paper label in the upper margin of the front pastedown has been linked with

Description of Manuscripts

Mc (= M)

Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 14836, ff. 10-15

6 folios, in a codex of 160 folios. 138 x 112 mm. 19 lines.

Origin: Germany, s. xi.²²⁴

Description:

Mc is made up of a miscellany of treatises on astronomy, music, arithmetic, geometry, metrology, some anonymous and others including treatises and excerpts attributed to Gerbertus Aureliacensis, a late 10th-century scholar (and later Pope Sylvester II, 999-1003) and Hermannus Contractus, an 11th-century Benedictine monk of Reichenau.

A set of glossae collectae to Boethius's DCP 3m9 only is on 10v-15v.²²⁵ This excerpt is written as an integral part of the miscellaneous treatises in Mc, coming between a treatise attributed to Hermannus and a brief missive to brethren regarding healing the sick and the weak. A space of one line was left between the treatise and the glosses to the DCP, which simply begins 'O qui perpetua' on 10v, 9, with a slightly enlarged 'O' but no rubric to identify the text. The glosses end on 15v, 9 in the middle of the line, with the missive beginning immediately after the final lemma and gloss. Only brief markings by modern hands indicate the beginning and end of the glossae collectae to 3m9. Despite the brevity of this collection of glosses, it appears to have been written by more than one scribe. Some abbreviations and the use of subscript letters evident in the glossae collectae may point to the use of an insular exemplar.

Glosses: Latin

The number of Latin glosses recorded in the glossae collectae of Mc suggests that they were drawn from a heavily glossed copy of the DCP. It is possible that Mc drew on a ready-made selection of glosses on 3m9 from the West Frankish tradition that was also used by Ec1 and Lh, given the close match in glosses used and the variant on 'sursum'; but since Mc picks up all but one of the relevant longer glosses in Af anyway, and has one that is not the same as Ec1 and Lh, and picks virtually all the shorter ones in Af (there aren't many), it is just as possible that Mc got practically the same set as Ec1 and Lh independently.

Parts of two long glosses, which had been omitted from the glossae collectae, were entered in the margins by the text scribes.

Description of Manuscripts

The early history of this codex is uncertain. An old shelfmark 'Em.k.6' places this codex at the Abbey of St Emmeram in Regensburg. In the course of secularisation of the monastery the manuscript was absorbed into the collection of the Bavarian State Library in Munich in 1811/1812.

Mf, Mg (= M4)

Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 15825

76 folios, 254 x 187 mm. 24 lines.

Origin: Germany (Freising?), s. xi.²²⁶

Description:

This manuscript contains a glossed copy of the DCP (Mf), a set of glossae collectae to Book 5 of the DCP (Mg) and some ancillary texts. On 1r is a rota uentorum, with Latin, Greek and OHG inscriptions, similar in design and content to that in Ka (2r) and London, BL, Harley MS 2688 (17r); on 1v a pen and ink drawing highlighted in red, depicts Boethius, Philosophy and the Muses; Prologus 1 is on 2r, 1-18; Distinctio 1 is on 2r, 18 - 2v, 1; and a gloss to part of the title follows at 2v, 1-2.

The glossed copy of the DCP is on ff. 2v-65v + 67r; the glossae collectae to Book 5 of the DCP are on ff. 66v + 67v-75r. The central bifolium (ff. 36-37) of quire 5 containing the text beginning on 36r at 3p10. 36 ‘coniectare licet’ and ending on 37v at 3p11.29 ‘cito in ea’ was supplied by a 12th-century scribe.²²⁷ Folio 55v was originally blank, but for the quire signature ‘vii’ at the foot of the leaf: 4m7 ends on 55r and a different scribe begins Book 5 on a fresh quire at the top of 56r. A contemporary scribe entered several glossae in titulum en bloc to 55v, presumably with reference to the title to Book 5 on 56r. In its present state, the leaves at the end of the manuscript have been misbound, so that a singleton folio (66), containing part of the glossae collectae, intervenes in the midst of the glossed text of the DCP: thus 65v ends at 5p6.40 ‘propriae cognitionis’, 66rv contains glossae collectae to 5p4 and 5m4, and the glossed text of 5p6.40 at ‘retorquet ac reuocat’ to the end of 5p6 resumes on 67r, ending on line 18. A later medieval scribe added an explicit and the remainder of the page remains blank. The glossae collectae to Book 5, which begins on 67v, were apparently designed to be circulated with the glossed copy of the DCP; it ends imperfectly at the foot of 75r in the midst of a gloss to 5m4.19. Folios 75v-76v were originally blank: a note on number theory and music was added to 75v and verses from Vergil’s Aeneid, 4.174-188 were added to 76r; both were added by different scribes, probably later in the 11th century. Fifteenth-century notes were added to 76v.

All but Book 4 of the DCP, which begins with 4p1, are preceded by titles that were entered at different times: the titles to Book 1 and 5 were added by contemporary scribes; that to Book 2 was entered by the text scribe; and an incipit written by a 15th-century scribe was added where space was left for a title to Book 3. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column, with the exception of the beginnings of 3p3, 4p1, 4p7 and 5p5, which were written in double columns, following on from the layout of the metres which preceded them. A gap of 9 lines between 3m9.12 and 13 on 33v may have been left by the text scribe to add a long gloss or perhaps even glossae collectae from the exemplar. Roughly half of the metres are written in single columns and the other half are written in multiple columns - the latter not clearly demarcated. Neumes were added to 1m7 and 4m7. The large gaps that were left between some proses and metres were apparently left for the addition of headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres; when entered, these were mostly written in rustic capitals between the preceding prose and the following metre to which each refers and occasionally they were entered after the metre. Mf has some rubrication and ornamental initials. Some abbreviations and the use of subscript letters evident in the glossae collectae may point to the use of an insular exemplar.

The glossed text of the DCP in Mf is not ruled to take glosses, but the margins are wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take interlinear glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Mf is fairly heavily glossed with both interlinear and marginal Latin glosses and a few Greek words, some embedded in Latin glosses, that were entered by several contemporary scribes. There are 27 inked OHG glosses in Mf, of which roughly two-thirds are interlinear; the OHG glosses were all added in the 11th century, except for one in the 13th century.²²⁸ There are also 3 dry-point OHG glosses.²²⁹ Other additions include rhetorical terms and a single headnote added in glossing script to 3p4. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to their lemma with letters of the alphabet, Tironian notes and arbitrary signs, though some are written in close proximity to the lemmas with no linking symbols. The lemmas of the glossae collectae (Mg) are frequently abbreviated and, as in other glossae collectae generally, boundaries between a gloss and the following lemma are often separated by a double 'ss'.

The glosses to Book 5 of the DCP (Mf) and the glossae collectae to Book 5 (Mg) are of a piece and from a different source to the glosses on Books 1 to 4. Many of the glosses on Books 1 to 4 are longer, marginal ones. Some of them recur in East Frankish manuscripts such as Ec and Ka, but many of them, perhaps the majority of the longer glosses, are unique to Mf. Some of these look like adaptations or expansions of glosses found elsewhere, especially in East Frankish manuscripts, but many seem to be original and often thoughtful additions, though copying errors suggest that they didn't originate in Mf itself. The OHG glosses are also mainly unique to Mf. The glosses are perhaps taken from a manuscript which had been glossed by someone who was familiar with the text and its commentary tradition but was glossing the text on his own account, sometimes reproducing traditional glosses, sometimes adapting them, sometimes supplying his own new interpretations. A second hand adds further interlinear glosses in places, also showing links with East Frankish manuscripts. Glossing in Book 5 is in a different hand and much lighter, mainly interlinear, and showing links not with East Frankish manuscripts but with West Frankish ones such as Af and Vc. The separate glossae collectae on Book 5 incorporates lots of longer glosses, showing consistent agreement with West Frankish manuscripts such as Af and Vc and not at all with Ec Ka etc. It may therefore have the same source as the interlinear glosses in Mf's Book 5. Since it appears from the quiring and layout of Mf that Books 4 and 5 were probably copied by two sets of scribes simultaneously, it is conceivable that Book 5 and its glosses and the glossae collectae following it were in fact copied from an entirely different exemplar.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to the glossed copy of the DCP in Mf.

Provenance:

The early history of Mf/Mg is unknown. A 14th-century ownership note at the foot of 76v begins 'Iste liber est memoriale domini Heinrichi de Eberh...'.²³⁰ The red number '215' on the front of the 15th-century Salzburg binding has been identified with an entry in the library catalogue of the Salzburg Cathedral Library compiled by Johannes Holveld about 1433.²³¹ An inscription in pencil inside the front board of the binding notes 'Bibliotheca Monasterii ad S. Petrum [Sa]lisburgi'. Library stamps on ff. 2r and 76v place the manuscript in the Bibliothèque nationale de France at Paris. Presumably it was from here that the manuscript found its way to the Bavarian State Library in Munich.

²³⁰ The inscription is printed in full by Foltz (1877, p. 40) and Möser-Mersky and Mihaliuk (1966, p. 24, no. 9).

Mh (= M2)

Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 18765

74 folios, 260 x 205 mm. 28 lines.

Origin: probably western Germany, s. ix, about the middle;²³² ff. 33-39 supplied at Tegernsee, s. xi, third quarter.

Description:

This codex opens with a fragment from an arithmetical treatise on ff. 1r-2r and a glossed copy of four of Boethius's Opuscula sacra on ff. 2r-15r (De Trinitate, Utrum Pater et Filius, Quomodo Substantiae and De fide Catholica), followed immediately by a glossed copy of the DCP on 15r-74v. The text of the DCP begins immediately after the concluding line of Boethius's De fide Catholica on 15r, line 1, confirming that this copy of the DCP was intended to be circulated as a unit with his Opuscula sacra. The text of the DCP ends on 74v; two brief explicits were entered by different scribes, along with some pen trials. The original fifth quire of Mh is missing and was replaced in the third quarter of the 11th century by a supply quire (ff. 33-39), believed to have been copied from Ka, or a manuscript very like it, at the Benedictine Abbey of Tegernsee.²³³ The front inside cover contains a pastedown, probably written in south Germany about the third quarter of the 9th century, of an excerpt from the Gospel of Mark (5.3-16). The pastedown inside the back cover, which has come adrift, contains on its recto pen trials, neumes, scribbles, ink and dry-point sketches, Greek and Latin word-lists, excerpts from the writings of Ovid, added in the 10th to the 11th centuries, and the inscription 'attinet tegernsee monasterio', added perhaps in the 15th century;²³⁴ the verso of this leaf contains the remnants of numerous pen trials and drawings.

9th-century text (15r-32v: 1m1 to 2p7.2 'uirtutum perfectione'; 40r-74v: 3p6.6 'iudicio prouenit' to the end of Book 5):

Books 1, 2, 4 and 5 are preceded by titles. The prose text and all the metres of the DCP are written in single columns; all but two metres (1m1 and 5m5) are written in rustic capitals, mostly written in red - only the first line of 1m1 is written in rustic capitals and 5m5 is written entirely in minuscule. In some cases, the spacing of the Greek in the body of the text suggests it was probably entered after the Latin text was written. A singleton (64) was inserted after folio 63: the end of 4m7 (4m7.19 - 35) was entered on 64r and 64v remains blank except for a quire signature, a set of dry-point concentric circles, another larger circle bisecting these circles, a wavy line almost in the centre of the page and pen trials for what may have been the opening 'D' of Book 5 on 65r; there are similar dry-point pen trials for a majuscule 'D' and folios 15r-32v and 40r-74v (9th century text: 1m1 to 2p7.2 ‘uirtutum perfectione’; 40r-74v: 3p6.6 ‘iudicio prouenit’ to the end of Book 5):

‘S’ at the foot of 65r.²³⁵ Neumes were added to 1m2, 5 and 7. The 9th-century text in Mh has much rubrication.

11th-century supply leaves (folios 33r-39v):

The text of the DCP supplied here begins in 2p7.2 at ‘perductas allicere possit’ and ends in the midst of 3p6.6 at ‘dignam puto quae nec’. The title to Book 3 was not entered, though space was left for it. The prose text is written in single columns and most of the metres are written in double columns, with little space left between the columns. The only colour used in the supply leaves appears in the elaborate opening initial of 3p1.

Mh was not ruled to take glosses: though the space between the lines of text is limited, the outer margins were originally wide.

Mh is fairly heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses and several Greek words entered by a variety of scribes. Of 84 OHG inked glosses, the majority are interlinear and the rest are marginal; two OHG glosses were written in cipher and many are abridged. The majority of the OHG glosses were entered by a single scribe, who also added many of the Latin glosses; the OHG glosses were entered in the 9th and late 10th centuries.²³⁶ A Latin pen trial on the former rear pastedown is also glossed in OHG.²³⁷ In addition to the mostly inked Latin and OHG glosses recent work has identified numerous dry-point glosses in both Latin and OHG, entered in the late 9th to the mid-10th centuries.²³⁸ Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. The majority of the glosses are written in close proximity to the lemma they are glossing with no linking symbols, though occasionally they are linked to the lemma with Tironian notes or arbitrary signs.

The glosses in Mh are mostly single words or short phrases and there are very few long glosses. Unusually, glossing is heavier in the later books and Book 2 is particularly lightly glossed (an effect only partly due to the inclusion of the supply quire). A few glosses were added at the same time as the text, in a hand contemporary with the text (i.e. mid 9th century), perhaps indeed the text hand, and these often correspond with glosses in other early ²³⁵ Papahagi (2010, pp. 151-52) describes this dry-point drawing as one that was ‘erased’. It remains unclear if this drawing represents the ‘orbes’ he discusses or whether they are the traces of a windrose as Troncarelli (2005, no. 66) suggests.

Description of Manuscripts

manuscripts, such as Fa. But the great majority were supplied much later, towards the end of the tenth century or in the eleventh. Probably most of these (about two-thirds of all the glosses in Mh) were derived from Na, which shows remarkably close parallels in the layout and content of the glosses. Others, apparently in different hands and showing agreements with manuscripts such as Ka and Vh, were entered subsequently, apparently copied from another East Frankish manuscript (or several). There is also a significant amount of unique glossing, including many of the vernacular glosses, which may reflect the responses of readers rather than being copied from other manuscripts. But many of the 85 vernacular glosses are apparently derived from Na or other manuscripts. The supply quire covering 2p7.2 to 3p6.6 was apparently copied from Ka along with a selection of its glosses, with a few other glosses added subsequently. It is probable that some glosses in other parts of the manuscript were also copied from Ka, especially the prominently displayed Greek ones, but there seems to have been access to other glossed copies as well. If Mh was indeed at Tegernsee in the 11th century that would explain the use of Ka, which was glossed there at the end of the 10th century, but Na must have been borrowed from St Gallen (or Mh must have been sent there).

folios 33r-39v (11th-century supply leaves: 2p7.2 ‘perductas allicere possit’ to 3p6.6 ‘dignam puto quae nec’):

Though the outer margins of the supply leaves were originally wide, they were not ruled to take glosses.

The text of the DCP supplied here, presumably from Ka, is only very lightly glossed; the few glosses entered were primarily interlinear Latin glosses, some Greek words and a single interlinear OHG gloss (on 34v to 2p8.7).²³⁹ Glosses in Ka were only selectively copied into Mh and several further glosses were added by glossators also writing in the 11th century. The annotations in Greek incorporated into the text of Ka have mostly been reproduced in Mh; the space left for these annotations suggests they were probably added after the Latin text was written. Headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, which were added above or next to the metres in Ka, were not added in Mh despite space being left for them. The brief rubrics added to introduce the prose sections in Ka were only added in Mh at the head of 3p5 and 3p6. Speech indicators entered in the body of the text of Ka were not consistently copied into Mh and rhetorical terms in the margins of Ka were omitted in Mh. The handful of marginal glosses in this quire are linked to the lemmas with arbitrary signs.

Provenance:

Mh probably went to the Benedictine Abbey at Tegernsee from a scriptorium in western Germany. It was at Tegernsee by the 3rd quarter of the 11th century, where its fifth quire was supplied. Mh remained at Tegernsee at least until the 15th century, when the inscription ‘attinet tegernsee monasterio’ was added to the recto of its final leaf. Another early shelfmark of a woodcut initial ‘S’ followed by ‘39.3°’ on paper is pasted on the foot of the front binding; this style of shelfmark with a woodcut initial, probably of the 15th century, appears on several

Mj (= MI)

Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 19452

76 folios, 215 x 175 mm. 24 lines.

Origin: Germany (Tegernsee), s. xi, early.²⁴²

Description:

Mj contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP and ancillary texts. The DCP on 2r-76v is preceded by various preliminaries on 1r: Prologi 5 (1r, 1-18), 6 (1r, 19-25), 1 (1r, 25-30 and continues in the right margin from lines 1-12), and 4 (1r, right margin from lines 12-34).²⁴³ All but Prologus 5 are written in a script size normally used for glosses. Another copy of Prologus 1 was written on 1v, 1-18; this is followed immediately by an adaptation of an epistolary poem by Venantius Fortunatus on 1v, 19-24. Glossae in titulum were added in the left margin of 1v, 1-39; immediately below these glosses is a gloss to the first line of 1m1. These glosses, written en bloc and ending with the mark 'ss' much like those used to separate glosses in glossae collectae, have no linking symbols to link them to the title on 2r. The prologi on 1r were added to what was probably an originally blank page by contemporary scribes, one of whom also entered the glosses on 1v as well as to much of the text of the DCP. The prologus and epistolary poem on 1v was probably written by the same scribe who began the text of the DCP on 2r. The text of the DCP begins with the title to Book 1 on 2r and ends imperfectly at the foot of 76v at 5p4.36 'sensibilemque esse rem nullus'.²⁴⁴ The loss of the remaining leaves of the manuscript had occurred by the time the inscription 'attinet tegernsee' at the foot of 76v was added, probably in the 15th century.²⁴⁵ The upper outer corner of folio 76 is damaged, resulting in the loss of words from 5p4.21, 22, 29 and 30 as well as parts of some interlinear and marginal glosses to 5p4. All five books are preceded by titles. Except for 1m7 and the opening sentence of 2p1, which were written in double columns, the existing prose text and metres of the DCP were written in single columns. The boundaries between the metres and proses are often unclear. No colour is used in Mj.

Mj is not ruled to take glosses, but the margins and the spacing of the text allow for the addition of glosses.

²⁴⁴ See table of 'missing text' for details.

²⁴⁵ Compare Mh, where the inscription 'attinet tegernsee monasterio' was added to what was a pastedown inside the back cover of the manuscript.

Description of Manuscripts

Glosses: Latin, OHG

Mj is fairly heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses. There are also 11 interlinear OHG glosses (mostly unique to Mj), probably added at Tegernsee in the early 11th century.²⁴⁶ In addition to the scribe of the text, who entered many of the Latin glosses, several glosses were added by contemporary scribes, soon after the text was produced; others were added later in the 11th century. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and rhetorical terms. On the rare occasions when the marginal glosses in Mj are linked to the lemma they annotate, the linking symbols take the form of letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs. Frequently the glosses include the lemmas, which are often in abbreviated form, as in Kc; sometimes even a single word gloss is written in the margin with its lemma, rather than the gloss being written above the lemma of the text; occasionally the boundaries between a gloss and the following lemma are separated by a single 's' or double 'ss'. This pattern of glossing in Mj, taken with the often close agreements of the glosses with those in Kc, suggests that some at least of the glosses in Mj were copied from a set of glossae collectae to the DCP.

The great majority of Mj's longer glosses, and many of the shorter ones, are characteristic of the primarily West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon tradition best represented by Af. Nearly all of them also occur in Kc, which was like Mj at Tegernsee at some stage, and agreements with Kc in variants suggest that they may have been drawn from the same glossed copy as that manuscript. There are also a scattering of glosses that are characteristic of the East Frankish tradition represented by manuscripts such as Ec and Ka: they occur quite frequently in Book 2 and sporadically in Book 1 (in 1p4) and the other books. Some at least seem to have been written after the main set of glosses and perhaps in a different hand. They were not however taken from Ka, though most of them do occur there and Ka was present at Tegernsee too: a few show links rather with Ed, which was apparently glossed in the vicinity of St Gallen or Einsiedeln.

Provenance:

Mj was probably produced at Tegernsee in the early 11th century and apparently remained there until the 15th century, when the inscription 'attinet tegernsee' was added to the verso of its final leaf. Another early shelfmark of a woodcut initial 'X' followed by '3.3^o' on paper is pasted to the foot of the front binding; this style of shelfmark with a woodcut initial, probably of the 15th century, appears on several manuscripts associated with Tegernsee.²⁴⁷ In the course of secularisation of the monastery at Tegernsee, the manuscript was absorbed into the collection of the Bavarian State Library in Munich in 1803; two paper labels bearing shelfmarks were affixed to the spine: the earlier 'Teg. 1452' above the present shelfmark 'Cod.

Mk (= M5)

Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 29384(1) (olim 29026 (a))

Fragmentary bifolium, 204 x 167 mm. 17 lines.

Origin: Unknown, s. x.²⁴⁹

Description:

The fragmentary bifolium Mk, which was once used as a book cover, contains part of Book 4 of the DCP: on 1rv, 4m1.20 ‘orbisque habenas’ to 4p2.1-6 ‘absit uoluntas fru(stra sit)’ and on 2rv, 4p2.23 ‘quidem naturali officio’ to 4p2.29 ‘incessui ambulan(di)’. An earlier shelfmark, ‘Clm. 29026a’, is written in black ink in the upper margin of 1r; the book whence this cover was retrieved is noted by the inscription at the foot of the page ‘Inc. dpl. 2923 in 4°’. The outer side of the bifolium (1r and 2v) is stained and discoloured, though the text and the glosses are fairly well preserved. The extant prose and metre are written in a single column. Some initials are written or highlighted in red.

Mk is not ruled to take glosses, but ample space was left between the lines of text and in the margins to take glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Mk is lightly glossed in Latin, with marginal and interlinear glosses entered by several scribes of the 10th and 11th centuries. They draw on the West Frankish tradition and the closest link is with Lh, but they do not include any of Lh’s East Frankish-type glosses.

The marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs.

Provenance: Unknown.

Two leaves of a single bifolium, 27 lines.²⁵⁰

Origin: Germany?, s. x.²⁵¹

Description:

These two leaves, of a single central bifolium, are now bound as end leaves into a manuscript presently made up of 2 independent parts:²⁵² Part 1 (1-24) was written in the mid-13th century in southern Bavaria and Part 2 (25-85) is thought to have been written in Lotharingia in the second half of the 10th century, with the collaboration of Willihalm, a scribe known to have worked in the Freising Cathedral Library.²⁵³ The ownership note on 25v, 'Iste liber est Sancte Marie et Corbiniani Frisinge', places Part 2 at least in the Freising Cathedral Library in the 12th century. The codex contains a Biblical glossary in the first part and a Marian prayer and homilies of Hericus and Haymo of Auxerre in the second part.²⁵⁴ The binding of the codex was restored, but it is unclear when the end leaves were dislodged from it.²⁵⁵ It appears however that the two sheets from Boethius's DCP were still glued to the inside covers in 1898, when Steinmeyer-Sievers published their volume in which they include this codex.²⁵⁶

²⁵⁰ Since we came upon this fragment very late in the project, we were unable to inspect the manuscript in person and have relied primarily on the digital images made available by the Munich Bayerische Staatsbibliothek as well as on secondary publications for our description and collations.

²⁵¹ Glauche (2000, p. 23): s. x. SS (IV, p. 523, no. 337): s. xi. Daniel (1973, p. 169) links the script of the fragments to a late-10th-century manuscript also thought to be copied in Freising (Munich, BSB, Clm. 6373) and containing Boethius's De opuscula sacra, but this is not persuasive. The script of Mm is closer in character to scripts in Vf, another 10th-century manuscript, which was thought by Bischoff to be from Lorsch.

²⁵² Daniel (1973, pp. 167-169, no. 58) and Glauche (2000, pp. 23-25) describe the manuscript in two parts; B&S no. 500 describe it in three parts.

²⁵⁴ A 15th-century inscription in the upper margin of 26r identifies these homilies as 'Omellie Bede presbiteri super euuangelia ferialia quadragesime'.

Description of Manuscripts

The bifolium containing the fragment of a glossed copy of the DCP was evidently cut in two and used as pastedowns for this medieval binding; both leaves are now free-standing. However, the leaves as they are now bound are not in the order of the Boethius text and the leaf at the rear has been bound upside down; neither leaf is foliated. The two leaves together contain from 4p4.12 ‘sed ex his quae’ to the end of 4p4.42 ‘atrocior urguet improbitas’ and all of 4m4. The recto of the front flyleaf begins with 4p4.38 ‘acerbum que perpessi sunt’ and ends at the foot of the leaf with 4m4.12; the verso of the front flyleaf begins at 4p4.28 ‘addidisti’ and ends at the foot of the leaf with 4p4.38 ‘qui graue quid’. The back flyleaf (if read right side up) begins on the recto with 4p4.21 ‘liquere respondi’ and ends at the foot of the leaf with 4p4.28 ‘te ipse excellentioribus’; the verso begins with 4p4.12 ‘sed ex his quae’ and ends with 4p4.21 ‘iniustum est malum’. The prose and metre are written in single columns.

Mm does not appear to have been ruled to take glosses.²⁵⁷ However, the wide margins and the spacing of the lines of text suggest that Mm was designed to take glosses. Despite the discolouration and some slight damage, there is little loss of text but some glosses are partly illegible.

Glosses: Latin

Mm is heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses entered by contemporary scribes. Other additions include a headnote defining the metrical form of the metre entered in a glossing script next to 4m4 and speech indicators. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate. As in other manuscripts where glosses are often misplaced, Mm also has an instance of a scribe recording a gloss to 4p5.2 over 4m4.7.

If the surviving fragment is representative of the whole, Mm would have been very heavily glossed indeed, with some 15000 glosses in total. It draws very consistently on the glossing tradition represented by Fd Ld Pt and Vf, reflecting an East Frankish development of a tradition originating in the West Frankish area, exemplified by Af and Vc and later manuscripts from that area and England. In several places Mm shows a particularly close agreement with Vf, though neither seems to be a copy of the other.

Description of Manuscripts

Mn (= Mil)

Milano, Biblioteca Ambrosiana, H 31 sup.

64 folios, 221 x 180 mm. 24 lines.

Origin: possibly France, s. x, early (ff. 5-60).²⁵⁸

Description:

Mn contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP, whose first (ff. 1-4) and last (ff. 61-64) quires were supplied in the 14th century, on leaves ruled for 32 lines per page. The 10th-century text of the DCP on 5r begins at 1p4.32 ‘quanta mei periculi’ and ends on 60v at 5p5.1 ‘afficiant instrumenta sensuum’.²⁵⁹ Folio 64r remains blank and verses were added to the originally blank 64v in the 14th century.

The entire text of the DCP is written in a single column and Books 2 to 5, whose openings are extant, are preceded by titles written in rustic capitals. Mn has some rubrication.

Mn is not ruled for glosses, but the margins and the spacing of the text allow for the addition of glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Mn is very lightly glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses; only about a dozen glosses were added in the 9th to the 11th centuries, of which four are headnotes added to prose sections. A few short glosses are unique to Mn. There are hints of a link with the early East Frankish tradition in the translation of the Greek at 4p6.53 and some of the headnotes.

Numerous late-medieval annotations were added to Mn.

Provenance: Unknown.

²⁵⁸ Bischoff (Katalog 2) notes that this is not a 9th-century manuscript; Moreschini (2005): s. ix; Troncarelli (2005, no. 97), CB 3 (Milano, no. 197), Love (2012, p. 89): s. ix/x; Inventario Ceruti (3, p. 604) dates Mn to ‘saec. xii’ and describes it as ‘bonas conditionis et completus’.

Description of Manuscripts

Mo (= Mi3)

Milano, Biblioteca Ambrosiana, M 79 sup., ff. 159-171.²⁶⁰

13 folios, in a codex of 254 folios (ff. 159-171), 260 x 190 mm. 42-44 lines.

Origin: northern Italy (Piacenza?), s. xi, second half.²⁶¹

Description:

This codex contains a vast miscellany of texts and excerpts, most numerous of which are Biblical commentaries attributed to authors such as Gregory the Great and Bede, as well as material thought to derive from Biblical commentaries of the Canterbury school of Theodore and Hadrian; it also includes glossaries or word-lists to texts such as the Regula Sancti Benedicti and to texts by Isidore, Cassian, Donatus, Priscian and others.

Of particular interest to us are the glossae collectae on folios 156r-171v. The 18th-century table of contents on the flyleaves of the manuscript describe three items, no. 41 as Glossarium vocum latinarum, no. 42 as Collectanea varia. and no. 43 as Breviarium Apostolorum etc., which correspond to these folios (although the table does not make reference to the folios). In their description of the manuscript, Bischoff and Lapidge note that no. 41 is on 156r-167v and no. 42 is on 167v-171r, describing these two sections as ‘a vast collection of glossae collectae’ and ‘Collectanea uaria’ respectively; they include the content of 171v in their no. 43 ‘171v-172r: Incipit breuiarium apostolorum’, ignoring the diagram and its surrounding glosses on 171v.²⁶² The sources of the glossae collectae from 156r to 171v are not identified in the manuscript, but evidently draw on glosses to the psalms, to Donatus’s Ars Maior, Boethius’s DCP, Priscian’s Institutiones grammaticae and others. The glossae collectae on folios 156r-171v, which open with the rubric ‘Tres sunt principales lingue, scilicet Hebraea et Grega et Latina’ on 156r, are written in a single column on 156r to 158v and in double columns from 159r to 171v. The glossae collectae drawing on Boethius’s DCP are to be found on 159r-171v. In the upper centre of 171v is a circular diagram with inscriptions relating to the elements and the ages of man, which is filled with colour and surrounded by a gloss to 3m9 of the DCP.²⁶³ In addition to the colour used in the diagram, Mo ²⁶⁰ Mo was first identified as drawing on the DCP by Dr Hannah Matis in 2009; we are extremely grateful to Dr Matis for telling us of her discovery. For a detailed description of the contents of this codex, see Bischoff and Lapidge 1994, pp. 275-287; however, they do not identify the source of Mo in their description.

There are two sets of foliation in Mo; we refer here to the more recent foliation at the foot of each recto.

²⁶¹ For dating and localisation, see Bischoff and Lapidge 1994, pp. 275 and 283-4.

²⁶² Bischoff and Lapidge 1994, p. 282.

²⁶³ The design of this circular diagram and its inscriptions are nearly identical to that found in Fb, folio 29r, except that the diagram in Fb is an ink drawing with no added colour. Indeed, even the gloss that surrounds the diagram is nearly identical in both manuscripts.

Description of Manuscripts

has some rubrication.

Glosses: Latin

The glossae collectae assembled in Mo comprise over two thousand annotations drawing on a glossed copy (or copies) of the DCP.²⁶⁴ A few glosses to 4p4 of the DCP are embedded in 159ra amongst glosses to the psalms, Donatus's Ars Maior and other glosses and the main body of glosses to the DCP are written in two sequences, on 159rb-166ra and 167vb-171vb. The glossae collectae to Boethius's DCP begin on line 1 of the right margin of 159r and open with a slightly enlarged 'C' for the first word of the gloss 'Carmen', which glosses the opening word of 1m1, 'carmina', but is recorded here with no lemma; and there is no rubric to distinguish its source from the preceding glosses. This first series of glosses, which runs from 159rb to 166ra, usually include a lemma followed by a gloss, sometimes a gloss precedes the lemma and in other cases only a gloss is recorded. The glosses rarely adhere to the order of the text of the DCP, nor are they alphabetically arranged in a strict glossary format. The glossae collectae that follow this first series from 166ra to 167vb are drawn mainly from Priscian's Institutiones grammaticae. The second series of glosses drawing on the DCP, which run from 167vb to 171vb, contain a random selection from its first four books. These glosses are rarely preceded by lemma and are organised under a series of rubrics, which loosely classify their subject or thematic nature.²⁶⁵ Whereas the first series of glosses mainly consist of one- or two-word glosses or short phrases, the second series is almost entirely made up of longer glosses, ranging from a sentence to a paragraph long.

Various glossing traditions are evident in Mo: the longer glosses reflect a fairly consistent link with the West Frankish tradition represented by Af; a few glosses are shared with manuscripts of the East Frankish tradition such as Ec and Ka; and a few others are found only or mainly in the Anglo-Saxon tradition. The shorter glosses, a few of the longer ones and the inscriptions of the diagram on 171v, show a particularly close link with Fb. Given Mo's close connections with Fb, it seems likely that both derive from a fairly heavily glossed copy belonging to the West Frankish tradition, with a few elements from other branches.

Provenance:

This codex is thought to have been written in Piacenza in the 1080s. It may then have been taken to the vicinity of Brescia, where the ex libris inscription at the foot of 2r was probably added in the 16th century.²⁶⁶ It was rebound at the abbey of Grottaferrata, near Rome, in

Description of Manuscripts

Mr (= Mr)

Anhée-Denée, Bibliothèque de l'Abbaye de Maredsous Inc. 102²⁶⁸

A fragmentary leaf, in two parts. Probably 20 lines.

Origin: Unknown, s. ix, first half.²⁶⁹

Description:

A single leaf from a glossed manuscript of Boethius's DCP was cut in two parts and used as pastedowns in the front and back inside covers of a late-15th-century copy of Thomas Aquinas's Catena aurea super omnia evangelia dominicalia et ferialia. This incunable from the Premonstratensian Abbey Library of Steinfeld, in the diocese of Cologne, is now lodged in the Bibliothèque de l'Abbaye de Maredsous.

The front pastedown contains 12 lines of the text from Boethius's DCP: 3p10.18 'an hinc quoque' as far as 3p10.22 'geometrae solent de(monstratis)'; the rear pastedown contains 6 lines of text: 3p10.22 'dabo' to 3p10.25 'sed natura quidem'. The prose text is written in a single column and, judging by the lines of text missing between these two parts (3p10.22 '...monstratis propositis aliquid ... tibi ueluti corollarium'), the original manuscript page would probably have contained 20 lines of text.

Mr does not appear to have been ruled to take glosses.²⁷⁰ The spacing of the lines of text is fairly generous, as were the outer margins; however, the margins were folded and heavily trimmed in order to fit the inside covers of the incunable. The trimming as well as some slight damage to the lower part of the leaf, has resulted in the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, OHG

Mr is lightly glossed with marginal and interlinear Latin glosses entered by several contemporary scribes, including the text scribe; a few late-9th-century/early-10th-century glosses were also added. A single OHG gloss was written in the midst of a longer Latin gloss (to 3p10.22) in the right margin of the lower part of the leaf. The few linking symbols that survive over the lemma to which the marginal glosses are linked are arbitrary signs.

Mr had perhaps 1500 glosses in the whole book when complete. It agrees consistently with the East Frankish tradition represented by the later manuscripts Ec and Ka but shows no particularly close affiliation with any one other witness. Despite the early date of its glosses they show no links with the earlier glossed manuscripts of the East Frankish tradition such as Ga and Na.

²⁶⁹ Dr Thomas Falmagne, personal communication (25 October 2023). B&S no. 1107: s. ix.

²⁷⁰ We were unable to examine this fragment in person, but the reproductions we have seen do not reveal such ruling.

Description of Manuscripts

Provenance:

The title page of the incunable contains the ex libris ‘Liber ecclesie sancte Dei genitricis marie sanctique Potentini in Steinuelt.’ The library holdings of Steinfeld Abbey, near Trier, which was one of the most important cultural centres in the High Middle Ages, were partly dispersed and destroyed in the early 19th century.²⁷¹ However, nothing more is known of Mr, except that the incunable in which it is found, was part of a donation to the Abbey Library of Maredsous by the Bibliotheca Wittockiana in Brussels alongside 24 other incunabula.

²⁷¹ Bloch 1961, pp. 37-38. In Dr Falmagne’s view, the Abbey may even have had a binding workshop that recycled old manuscripts, though he is yet to confirm this hypothesis (personal communication, 25 October 2023).

Description of Manuscripts

Na (= N)

Naples, Biblioteca Nazionale, IV G. 68

237 folios,²⁷² ff. 1-92: 210 x 150 mm. 24 lines.

Origin: St Gallen, s. ix, fourth quarter and s. ix/x.²⁷³

Description:

This codex contains a variety of complete texts and excerpts, from the works of Eugenius III of Toledo (1r), Lupus of Ferrières (2r-4r), Boethius (4v-92r, 93r-103r, 107r-178v), Paulinus Aquileia (92v), Walafrid Strabo (103v-106r), Bede (179r), Vergil (179r), Prudentius (179v-204r), Martianus Capella (208r-231v), and some anonymous texts, including a glossary to Prudentius (204v-206v). In addition to the DCP (Na), the other works of Boethius include three theological tractates (De Trinitate, Utrum Pater et Filius, Quomodo Substantiae) and his De institutione arithmetica.²⁷⁴

On 1r there was formerly an excerpt from Carmina VI of Eugenius Toledo, which is now barely legible. A set of glossae collectae to 1p1, 1p3 and 1p4 of the DCP (NaI) was added to an originally blank 1v; the Lupus treatise on the metres was entered on ff. 2r-4r; this is immediately followed by Prologus 1 on ff. 4r, 18 - 4v,4. The DCP is on 4v-92r. All five books are preceded by titles; the title to Book 1, which takes up the remainder of 4v, is followed by the phrase ‘nec non et gratuite domino fauente. amen’, which is evidently unique to this manuscript. The proses and metres are all written in single columns. The titles, opening words of some proses and most of the metres are written in rustic capitals. Neumes were added to several metres.²⁷⁵ There is much rubrication in Na.

Na is not ruled for glosses, but the margins and the spacing of the text allow for the addition of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Na is fairly heavily glossed with interlinear and marginal glosses in Latin, a couple of Greek words and several OHG glosses, mostly entered by 9th- and 10th-century scribes at St Gallen. Some glosses are embedded in the text of Na, suggesting that Na itself was copied from a glossed manuscript. There are 82 OHG glosses, the majority of which are written in the ²⁷² 218 is foliated twice (218 bis and 218), hence the final leaf is foliated 236.

Na's glosses primarily reflect the East Frankish tradition, though there are also glosses with a wider currency. The glossae collectae on 1v (Na1) likewise draw on the East Frankish tradition, showing links with Ef and other manuscripts, but seem to draw on a different source from the glosses to the text in Na.

Provenance:

Na was copied at St Gallen, where it remained in the early 10th century, when glosses from it were copied into another St Gallen manuscript (Ga). St Gallen library ownership notes of the 15th century were recorded on 1r and 104r. A 15th-century woodcut stamp of the St Gallen monastery coat-of-arms was probably added to folios 1r and 206v at the end of the 17th century.²⁷⁷ Na has been identified with the entry 'H 11 Boecius in pluribus et Prudencius' in the 1461 library catalogue of St Gallen.²⁷⁸ It is unclear when the manuscript arrived in Naples, but the manuscript was not rediscovered until the late 1930s, when the earliest modern bibliographical references appear.²⁷⁹

²⁷⁶ B&S no. 713: 'Alemannisch?', contemporary with the text; however, Tax (2008, vol. 1, p. xxxvi) takes the view that the glosses were most probably added in the 10th century at St Gallen.

Description of Manuscripts

Oa (= O)

Oxford, Bodleian Library, Auctarium F.1.15 (2455), ff. 1-77

93 folios, 375 x 250 mm. 26 lines (Part 1).

Origin: England (probably St Augustine's, Canterbury), s. x, second half.²⁸⁰

Description:

This composite manuscript is made up of two originally independent parts: Part 1 (1-77) contains a glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts; Part 2 (78-92) contains a glossed copy of Persius's Saturae.

The DCP on 5r-77v is preceded by various preliminaries: folio 1 contains fragmentary parts of Prologi 5 (1r,1-20) and 3 (1r, 22-1v,11), followed by the Lupus treatise on the metres (1v,12-4v,3). Distinctio 3 was written in rustic capitals in the upper margin of 5r, which is now partly damaged. Glossae in titulum, written en bloc, were added to the upper and right margins of 5r. The explicit on 77r was added by a later medieval scribe. A bilingual inscription in Latin and Old English, recording Bishop Leofric of Exeter's (d. 1072) donation of the codex to his cathedral library and which breaks off in the midst of an anathema, was added to 77v in the 11th century. A similar bilingual inscription written by a different 11th-century scribe in a slightly different formulation, also concluding with an anathema, was added to 78r; folio 78v remains blank and Persius's text begins on 79r.

All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. The prose text is written in a single column as are the majority of the metres, with some written in double columns. The opening lines of the proses and metres are written in rustic capitals. Neumes were added to several metres.²⁸¹ The opening initials of each book are drawn with ornate interlacing, foliation and heads of beasts; the layout of these opening pages resembles those in Pb.²⁸² The titles and initial letters were written in an array of colours and take up much space on the page. There are two dry-point sketches in Oa: part of a bird or beast and foliage was added in the right margin of 29r, possibly a trial for the elaborately drawn opening initial 'I' of Book 3 on the same page; and a crude diagram of a circle with spokes was added to the right margin of 60r next to the text of 4p6.²⁸³

Oa is sporadically ruled for glosses: the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses and the outer margins are very wide, but not consistently ruled.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OE

Oa was glossed in Latin by several scribes in the 10th and 11th centuries; the glosses include a couple of Greek words. Six OE glosses were entered in Oa (2 on 7v, 3 on 8v and one on 9r), probably by more than one scribe in the second half of the 10th century.²⁸⁴ Only parts of the five books were extensively glossed: 1m1 to 1p3 (interlinear and marginal glosses), 1m4 to 1m7 and 2p1 (interlinear glosses with a few rhetorical terms added in the margins); 3m9 and the beginning of 3p10 (interlinear and marginal glosses); 5p2 to 5m4 (marginal glosses).²⁸⁵ Other additions include rhetorical terms and speech indicators.²⁸⁶ The marginal glosses are for the most part linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma in the text. Occasionally the glosses include the lemmas. On some folios where interlinear glosses were entered, linking symbols were added above the lemma, but no glosses corresponding to these signs were recorded in the margins.

The glosses to Oa were added in clusters at different times and from different sources:

- (1) The earliest set, which may have been entered by the text scribe or a contemporary, includes both marginal and interlinear glosses to 1m1 to 1m5.42, and 3p9.30 to 3p10.1 to 4; these glosses draw on a manuscript very like Pb for some, a manuscript very like Ct for others and finally an exemplar with glosses similar to those in Ck and Ge.
- (2) A second set, entered by a late-10th- or early 11th-century scribe and apparently at Christ Church Canterbury, includes marginal glosses to 5p2 to 5m4.27, and draws on a manuscript very like Ct, or possibly Ct itself.
- (3) A third set, which was added in the second half of the eleventh century apparently at Exeter, includes marginal and interlinear glosses to 1m5.43 to 2p1.13, and draws on a manuscript very similar to Ap, probably even Ap itself.

Provenance:

The presence of glosses written by a scribe identified with Christ Church Cathedral in a manuscript produced at St Augustine's Abbey in the second half of the 10th century points to Oa's association with both religious houses in Canterbury in the 10th century. The glosses added in the late 11th century have been linked with the scriptorium at Exeter. The neumes on some folios of Oa have been identified as the work of the principal Exeter music-scribe, who ²⁸⁴ Printed in Napier 1900, no. 34. Ker (Catalogue, no. 294), suggests that the OE glosses were probably written by the same scribe that added the Latin glosses on ff. 5-13.

²⁸⁶ At least two speech indicators incorporated into the body of the text in Oa were also prominently embedded in the body of the text of two other English manuscripts, Pb and Ps, at the same points (1p1.13 and 1p2.5).

Description of Manuscripts

worked between 1050 and 1072, suggesting that Oa may have reached Exeter early in the second half of the 11th century.²⁸⁷ The two manuscripts had been bequeathed by Bishop Leofric to the Cathedral Library of Exeter, where they were bound together. Leofric's ownership of both these manuscripts is confirmed by the bilingual inscriptions added to each in the 11th century. That added at the end of Boethius's DCP (77v) was written in the present tense and at the beginning of Persius's Saturae (78r) was written by a different scribe in the past tense, perhaps suggesting that the two volumes were presented by Leofric at different times and, in the case of the Boethius text, not necessarily after his death in 1072. The present leather binding was added in the 16th century over late 11th-century boards suggesting that the two parts were probably united by the end of the 11th century. Despite Leofric's possession of these two manuscripts being clear, how, when and where he acquired them in the first instance remains a vexed question. The codex remained in the possession of the Exeter Cathedral Library until 1602, when at the instigation of Canon Laurence Bodley, it was amongst a collection of eighty-one manuscripts donated by the Dean and Chapter of Exeter to the library newly founded in Oxford by his brother Sir Thomas Bodley.

Description of Manuscripts

Od (= O4)

Oxford, Bodleian Library, Digby 174 (1775), fol. iii

Fragmentary bifolium, 240 x 165 mm.

Origin: Continental (French?), s. ix, late.²⁸⁸

Description:

Od is a 9th-century bifolium of which only 1 folio (foliated 'iii' on what was originally the verso) and the stub of the other survives; it is bound as a flyleaf into a manuscript which contains glossed excerpts from the DCP, prologi, a glossed copy of the DCP, glossae collectae to the DCP, all written in the 12th century in England. These were collected together and bound with a miscellany of treatises on astronomy, geometry, metrology, and other subjects also written in England in the 12th to the 14th centuries. The present binding is a 17th-century Digby binding.

The text of Od, containing part of Book 5 of the DCP on the stub of this 9th-century bifolium, is barely legible and heavily trimmed, leading to the loss of much of the text and glosses.²⁸⁹ The text of the DCP begins on f. iii-v at 'uero ad uniuersitatis' in 5p5.7 to 5p5.12 'id audem est'; f. iii-r contains the final phrase of 5p5.12, half lines of 5m5, and ends with three words from 5p6.1 'monstratum est omne quod'. The conjugate folio contains part of the Lupus treatise on the metres (Peiper, lines 88-145) written by another scribe; f. iii-v is somewhat discoloured and faded in parts, and though the Lupus text here is complete the annotations in its upper right margin are only barely legible.

Od is not ruled to take glosses; the trimming of the leaves and the wearing and discolouration in places, have resulted in the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Od is lightly glossed in Latin, primarily with marginal glosses, entered on the Continent by contemporary scribes. The marginal glosses are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate. The use of a Tironian note is evident in one gloss.

Od draws on the West Frankish tradition represented by Af etc. Though the glosses in Od also appear in a range of Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, Od does not share their characteristic variants and instead aligns with the Continental witnesses.

Provenance:

Digby 174 was assembled by John of London (fl. c. 1300), who donated it to the library at St Augustine's, Canterbury in the 14th century; by the 16th century, the manuscript was owned by John Dee; it was then acquired by Thomas Allen (c. 1540-1632) and subsequently in the 17th century by Kenelm Digby (1603-1665), to whom Allen bequeathed his library; Digby, whose binding still adorns the manuscript, donated it to the Bodleian Library in 1634. The Digby/Allen inventory number 'A147' on f. iii indicates that Od was bound up with the other 12th- to 14th-century texts by the time Digby 174 assumed its present form in the 17th century.²⁹⁰ Scholarly tradition has maintained that this fragment was possibly in England before 1100, but there appears to be nothing to link Od or its glosses with England and presently no evidence for when it came to England.

²⁹⁰ Although there is much documentation on the provenance of the Digby manuscript, there is no clear evidence that this 9th-century fragment was associated with it before the 17th century, nor that it was at St Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury. James (1903, pp. 302 and 519) links no. 987 of the 15th-century library catalogue of St Augustine's with the Digby manuscript, but its contents list does not list the 9th-century fragment, which may have been introduced as a binding fragment, perhaps in the 17th century.

Description of Manuscripts

Om (= O3)

Oxford, Merton College E.3.12 [with York, Minster Library, 7.N.10 (currently untraceable)]
Fragments of two consecutive leaves, now 215 x 180 mm and 212 x 174 mm. 18 lines (of 19 lines).

Origin: England, s. x^{ex}/xiⁱⁿ.²⁹¹

Description:

Parts of two consecutive leaves of a manuscript, which were formerly used as pastedowns in an unidentified binding, preserve part of Book 5 of the DCP: 1r begins at 5p4.30 '(pu)ra mentis acie contuetur' and ends at 5p4.34 'ratio quoque cumquid'; 1v begins at 5p4.34 'nec sensibus utens' and ends at 5p4.39 'ut suam quisque'; 2r begins at 5p4.39 'potestate perficiat' and ends at 5m4.16 'unde haec sic animis uiget'; 2v begins at 5m4.18 'quae uis singula perspicit' and ends at 5m4.35 'tum mentis uigor excitus'. One line of text at the top of each leaf has been lost to trimming.

The Merton leaves are in remarkably good condition for having been used as pastedowns: both appear to have had one edge folded over and signs of sewing through the fold. There is also some discolouration and residue from glue. Another leaf from the same manuscript also containing part of Book 5 was apparently used as a pastedown in a 16th-century printed book, once preserved in York Minster Library,²⁹² but now lost.

The extant prose and metre are written in single columns. Om has some rubrication, though it is now mostly oxidised. The layout and general appearance of Om is very similar to the other English manuscripts of the DCP.

The outer margins of Om are ruled for glosses and there is ample space between the lines of text for glosses. The trimming of the leaves has resulted in the loss of parts of glosses and, in some cases, only a few letters of a gloss is still evident.

Glosses: Latin

Om is heavily glossed with Latin marginal and interlinear glosses entered by the scribe of the text as well as by several contemporary scribes. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to the lemmas by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate.

The glosses in Om draw on the Anglo-Saxon tradition; where its glosses appear in Continental manuscripts, Od shares the distinctive variants of the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Om.

Description of Manuscripts

The early history of Om is unknown.²⁹³ Om was ‘identified by H. W. Garrod, fellow of Merton from 1901’²⁹⁴ and librarian from 1925 to 1951. The 16th-century printed book, formerly at York Minster, in which a leaf from this same manuscript was used as a pastedown, belonged to Toby Matthew in 1568; Matthew, who had a long association with Oxford and was subsequently Archbishop of York until 1628, presented the book to York Minster.²⁹⁵

Description of Manuscripts

On (= On)

Orléans, Bibliothèque municipale, Ms. 270 (226), pp. 2-229

229 pages, 240 x 162 mm. 20 lines (Part 1).

Origin: Fleury, s. ix, first third.²⁹⁶

Description:

This codex is made up of two distinct parts: Part 1 (pp. 2-229), with which we are concerned, includes a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP copied in the first third of the 9th century in Fleury, and Part 2 (pp. 230-320) contains an early 9th-century glossed copy of Boethius's Opuscula sacra, thought to have been copied in western France.²⁹⁷ Two bifolia at the beginning and end of the codex serve as fly leaves. Both recto and verso of the first leaf of the front bifolium remain unnumbered; pen trials and a neumed verse from the 'Officium sancti Stephani protomartyris' of Stephen of Liège were added to the recto of the second leaf (designated 'I') in the 10th century; and the blank verso of this leaf is numbered '1'. To the originally blank page 2, which begins a fresh quire, were added glossae in titulum, written en bloc, in the 10th century; other scribes added pen trials, neumes and neumed Latin verses (s. x/xi).

The DCP is on pp. 3-229.²⁹⁸ All five books are preceded by titles, with interlinear glosses entered by several scribes to the title of Book 1. The text of the DCP ends on p. 229 with an explicit. The proses and metres are written in single columns, with a few exceptions: 1m1 is written in long prose lines across the page and 1m7 and 4m3 are written in double columns. Dialogues between Boethius and Philosophy are often written consecutively in individual sentence units, rather than continuously across each column; this layout often makes the boundaries between proses and metres indistinguishable. Neumes were added to 1m1, 3m8 and 4m6. There is much use of coloured initials, which are also sometimes elaborately decorated. In the left margin of p. 176, next to the text of 4p6, is a crudely drawn diagram of several concentric circles.²⁹⁹ At the end of Part 2, several pen trials and inscriptions on the originally blank p. 320 were entered in the 10th and 11th centuries, including a 10th-century Fleury ownership note, verse lines from the Psalms, brief excerpts from the text and glosses to the DCP, and neumed verse lines from the DCP.³⁰⁰ A separate bifolium at the end (pp. 321-24) is mostly blank apart from a few pen trials and sketches, both dry point and inked.

³⁰⁰ Neumes were also added to the foot of p. 318.

Description of Manuscripts

On is not ruled for glosses. The outer margins are moderately wide, and the space between the lines of text provides ample space for the addition of glosses.

Glosses: Latin

On is fairly heavily glossed with Latin interlinear and marginal glosses by several scribes; it is one of the more heavily glossed complete 9th-century copies of the DCP, with the glosses relatively evenly distributed throughout the five books. The layers of glosses are revealed more clearly in this manuscript than in most others by the different hands, inks and positioning of the glosses.³⁰¹ many are contemporary with the text scribe, others entered roughly in the middle to the end of the 9th century, and still others in the 10th century; the glossators often use Tironian notes. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Many marginal glosses are written in close proximity to the lemma they are glossing with no linking symbols; others are linked to the lemma with Tironian notes or arbitrary signs.

The On glosses are mostly short and shared with lots of other manuscripts, mainly of the West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon traditions. Longer glosses are often unique to On. The glosses in the main glossing hand of the 9th century are not particularly distinctive and often coincide with other manuscripts in short lexical glosses, but rather rarely in longer glosses. Since these short glosses are fairly obvious, agreement with any particular manuscript could be coincidental. Pd is the one other manuscript with which On shows agreement in longer glosses, and then not often. The general sparsity of glossing, despite evidence of access to other glossed manuscripts, means either that glossing in the exemplars was sparse too or that those who copied glosses into On were disinclined to add much.

Provenance:

The DCP was written in Fleury and the Opuscula sacra was copied in a scriptorium in western France; both were written in the early 9th century and it is unclear precisely when they were united as a single codex. The ownership note on p. 319 ‘hic est liber Sancti Benedicti’ is thought to be contemporary with the text;³⁰² and the ownership note, ‘hic est liber sancti ac beatissimi Benedicti Abbatis et confessoris, Floriacensi monasterii’, was entered on p. 320 in the 10th century. The addition of excerpts from the DCP and its glosses to p. 320 in the 10th and 11th centuries perhaps points to the two parts being united by the 10th century. The ex libris on p. 2 was entered in the 18th century.³⁰³ ³⁰¹ Daly (1950, p. 208) distinguishes three main glossing hands from the 9th century.

Pa (= P13)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 6401

175 folios, 280 x 195 mm. 25 lines.

Origin: England or France (Fleury?) s. x, late; 11th-century additions, Fleury.³⁰⁴

Description:

This codex, presently made up of three main segments, contains a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP and his De institutione arithmetica in the second part; the other two parts contain various texts, some of which are related to the works of Boethius.³⁰⁵

The first main segment of the codex is preceded by two folia, A and B, to which numerous 10th- and 11th-century scribes made additions: on the upper half of Ar are roughly written tables relating to the division of numbers according to Boethius, on the lower half is Epitaphium 1; on Av is Epitaphium 2; on the upper half of Br is an anonymous text relating to Pythagoras's harmony of spheres and in the lower half a related table, added by a different scribe; Bv remains blank.

Part 1 (1-13), written by several 11th-century scribes, contains an incomplete copy of the Lupus treatise on the metres (1r-1v: Peiper lines 1-51); Epistulae ad Ragimbaldum Coloniensem from Radolfus Leodiensis (1v - 11r), composed in the 11th century, which refer to works of Boethius and include several diagrams and an illustration of Boethius and Philosophy (5v); the last few pages of this quire, 11v to 12v, remain blank. Folio 13 is a singleton whose recto remains blank whilst its verso contains an elaborate full-page illustration.³⁰⁶ A further ³⁰⁴ Temple (1976, p. 59, no. 32): s. x, last quarter; Weinberger (1934), Ebersperger (1999, no. 49), Love (2012, pp. 92-93), Gneuss and Lapidge (2014, no.886): s. x/xi; Troncarelli (2005, no. 25): s. xi; Melot (Catalogus codicum IV, p. 240) dates this codex partly to the 11th century and partly to the 12th century. Several scholars have suggested that Pa was either written at Fleury or written by an English scribe at Fleury: Temple (1976, p. 59, no. 32), Bolton (1981, p. 429), Troncarelli (2005, no. 25), Ebersperger (1999, no. 49), Love (2012, pp. 92-93), etc.; others have suggested that the script, parchment and the layout of the DCP points to an English origin: Vezin (1977, p. 110), Mostert (1989, p. 212, BF 1083); Lapidge (1988, p. 56, n. 49), noting that the brief inscription '.LAN.' on 15r is thought to be an 11th-century Canterbury shelfmark, categorically asserts that it is 'unquestionably of English (and probably Christ Church) origin'; however, Gneuss and Lapidge (2014, no. 886) remain undecided on its origin, noting 'England or Fleury?'. The illuminations on 5v, 15r, 158v and 159r have been identified variously as English, Italian (Lombardy) or French in style (Nordenfalk 1964, Bolton 1981, Ebersperger 1999). Various headnotes to Book 3 in the text hand and a textual variant at 1p1.14 (verbis for versibus) suggest an East Frankish origin for the text itself, though there are also pointers to a West Frankish connection in the headnote to 5p2 and a marginal sub-heading at 5p2.8.

³⁰⁵ The codex in its present form is much too tightly bound to analyse the structure, so we have had to rely primarily on the quiring provided by Troncarelli.

³⁰⁶ Bolton (1981, p. 429) takes the view that this illustration was inserted as a frontispiece to the DCP and that the central figure is 'generally thought to be Boethius'; leaf (14) following this illustration remains blank.

Part 2 (15-159), with which we are concerned, contains the DCP on 15r-86v, line 18; an anonymous epigraph, followed by a second epigraph attributed to Walafrid Strabo, were recorded by the text scribe immediately beneath the DCP on 86v lines 19-23, as if these were part of the text of the DCP. The explicit to the DCP was written on lines 24-25 and 'feliciter explicit' was entered at the end of line 18, perhaps as an afterthought to clarify the end of the Boethian text. A glossed copy of Boethius's De institutione arithmetica follows on 87r-158r. The full-page illustration representing Boethius on 158v and the historiated initial 'I' on 159r suggests that this codex may have been designed to include Boethius's Opuscula sacra as well.³⁰⁷

Part 3 (159v-175r) is made up of a miscellaneous collection of texts added in the 11th century: one of which is a rhythmical table, which refers to the 'praecepta boetii' on 170r, and on 171r, lines 1-16, an epitaph for Gauzlinus, who was abbot of Fleury from 1005-1030.³⁰⁸

All but Book 1 of the DCP, which begins with 1m1, on 15r-86v are preceded by titles. The prose of the DCP is written in a single column; the layout of the metres is variable, with most written in a single column and a handful written in double columns. Neumes were added to 1m1. There is much rubrication in Pa and the opening ornamental initial is executed in an array of colours.

Pa is not ruled for glosses, but, despite obvious trimming, its outer margins are wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses.³⁰⁹

Glosses: Latin

Pa is very lightly glossed primarily with Latin interlinear glosses written by several scribes, and they are brief and inconsequential. But its text of Book 3 incorporates as rubrics the headnotes to 3p4, 5, 6 and 7, which were added to Fa and recur in various mainly East Frankish manuscripts, notably Ka and Lh. Its text of Book 5 similarly incorporates the headnote to 5p2 which appears in various West Frankish and East Frankish manuscripts, but in the form it takes in the French manuscripts Pc Pk and Vc, and also a marginal sub-heading at 5p2.8 which appears in 6 manuscripts from France and one from Germany. Other additions include speech indicators. On one occasion (1p1, 16r) the rubricator highlights the gloss 'uox Nordenfalk (1964, p. 54) identifies it as Philosophy. The illustrations in the works of Boethius have merited the attention of several scholars; for a summary, see Bolton 1981, pp. 428-437.

³⁰⁷ Bolton 1981, pp. 433-434.

³⁰⁸ See Troncarelli 2005, no. 25 for details of these texts; but note that his references to folio numbers are not always accurate. Neumes were added to the diagram on 170r.

³⁰⁹ It is not clear what this copy of the DCP was intended for; it is striking that though the margins are very wide, very few glosses were added to it; whereas numerous glosses were added to Boethius's De arithmetica, which follows on from 87r and was designed to circulate with the DCP.

Description of Manuscripts

philosophiae', which was embedded in the text, and adds an interlinear speech indicator in the appropriate place instead; this gloss appears in several Anglo-Saxon manuscripts as an interlinear gloss and in three French manuscripts - in one of these (Pk) it is embedded in the text in the correct position as a prominent rubric.³¹⁰ Pa's text also includes a textual variant in 1p1 (verbis for versibus) which is otherwise known only from East Frankish manuscripts (Ed Go Lh).³¹¹

Provenance:

The origin and provenance of Pa remains uncertain. It is also unclear when the various parts of this codex were first assembled together as a single unit. If Pa was written in England, it is possible that the codex was taken to France early in the 11th century, where the glosses to the DCP and De institutione arithmetica, which show characteristics of French script, were added. The epitaph for Abbot Gauzlinus of Fleury places the manuscript at Fleury by 1030, when Gauzlinus died. Many of the other texts in this composite manuscript were probably also written in Fleury. Although no reliable medieval catalogue of the manuscripts owned by Fleury survives, this codex has been identified with no. 89 of a catalogue drawn up in 1552, before the dispersal of the manuscripts at Fleury.³¹² Delisle notes that Pa was amongst the manuscripts that were in effect salvaged by the lawyer, bibliophile and scholar Pierre Daniel.³¹³ The former shelfmark 'Cod. Colb. 697' added to Ar places this codex in the library of Jean-Baptiste Colbert in the 17th century, whence it was acquired by the Royal Library in 1732.³¹⁴

³¹⁰ The Anglo-Saxon manuscripts are Ck Ct Ge Oa Pb Pn and Ps; the other French manuscripts are On (marginal gloss) and Pq (interlinear, but misplaced over another lemma).

³¹¹ Some text corrections were made in the 11th century, but curiously the variant 'tum' for 'iam' in the opening of 3p1 went unnoticed and it is not recorded as a variant reading in any of the published editions.

Description of Manuscripts

Pb (= P)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 6401A

94 folios, 280 x 225 mm. 22 lines.

Origin: England (Christ Church, Canterbury?), s. x/xi.³¹⁵

Description:

The DCP is on 1r-94v. All five books are preceded by titles. Glossae in titulum were added to the right and lower margins of 1r. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column as are the majority of the metres. The opening initials of each book are highly elaborate and there is much rubrication throughout Pb.³¹⁶ The titles and initial letters were written in an array of colours and take up much space on the page.

Pb is sporadically ruled for glosses: the wide outer margins, but not the upper and lower margins, were mostly ruled for glosses. The marginal glosses were primarily entered in the right and left margins, with a few exceptions, where they were entered in the upper and lower margins. A few marginal glosses have been partially lost due to trimming, wear and tear and modern repair work obscures a few glosses on some folios.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, Old English

Pb is very heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses that were entered primarily by one scribe in the 10th century, possibly the scribe of the text, copying from his exemplar of the DCP soon after the text was written. Numerous other scribes of the 10th and 11th centuries added further glosses sporadically throughout.³¹⁷ A couple of Greek words are embedded in a Latin gloss. Two OE glosses were entered in Pb on 22v, perhaps both by the ³¹⁵ Many dates have been suggested for Pb around the end of the 10th or early 11th century: Gameson 1998, Ebersperger (1999, no. 12), Wittig (2007, p. 191): s. x ex.; Troncarelli (2005, no. 26): s. x-xi; Avril and Stirnemann (1987, no. 21): s. x-xi (c. 1000); Wormald (1963, p. 63), Love (2012, p. 91): c. 1000; Gneuss and Lapidige (2014, no. 887): s. x ex. or x/xi; Melot (Catalogus codicum IV, p. 240), Weinberger (1934), Courcelle (1939, p. 123) and Courcelle (1967, p. 406): s. xi.

³¹⁷ Wormald (1963, p. 64) observes that one glossing hand in Pb is similar to one in Oa.

Description of Manuscripts

same glossator.³¹⁸ Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators.³¹⁹ The majority of the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet; some are linked by arbitrary signs and others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate. Occasionally the glosses include the lemmas.

The glosses are fairly evenly distributed, though they become thinner in Book 5. Its glosses generally show close links with the other Anglo-Saxon manuscripts such as Ap Ck Ge and would appear to derive from the same Anglo-Saxon collection(s), though it is inclined to include only one longer gloss for each lemma rather than the several that often appear in the other manuscripts. There are slight indications of a particular link with Ap and Pn in Book 1 and with Ge in Book 3.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Pb.

Provenance:

It remains unclear precisely when Pb arrived on the Continent, but it was probably taken from England to France in the first half of the eleventh century. Gameson argues that a scribe who added glosses around the year 1000, especially between folios 81 and 88, was the last certain witness to the presence of Pb in England.³²⁰ Wormald suggests that Pb may have influenced the style of initials found in manuscripts produced at the abbey of Saint Bertin at Saint Omer in the early years of the 11th century and at the abbey of Saint-Vaast at Arras in the second quarter of the 11th century.³²¹ Gameson, who also notes stylistic similarities between Pb and the Saint-Vaast Bible in particular, proposes that Pb was in all probability in Flanders before 1060, when the Saint-Vaast Bible was produced.³²²

A note on a bifolium now attached to the rear inner board, records that Pb was bought by Jean le Chevrier an Augustinian canon of the monastery at Seyssel (at that time in the diocese of Geneva, and now in Haute-Savoie in southeastern France) from Philippe Molliardi in 1463.³²³ The shelfmark in the upper margin of 1r 'De la Mare 241' places Pb in the possession of the bibliophile Philibert de la Mare (d. 1687) of Dijon in the 17th century; it was acquired by the Royal Library in 1719 along with the rest of De la Mare's collection;³²⁴ the shelfmark 'Reg. A981.2' was added to 1r.

³¹⁸ Although Bolton (1977, p. 49) records the presence of 'suðerne wind' above 'auster' (2m4.9) she failed to notice 'stillum faestene' glossing 'ualli' (2m4.20).

³²⁴ Delisle (Cabinet 1, pp. 361-364) discusses the sources of Philibert de la Mare's collection: a manuscript of Boethius is listed (p. 362) amongst those that may have been owned by Jean-Baptiste Lantin, an adviser to the Parliament of Burgundy.

Description of Manuscripts

Pc (= P16)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 6402

72 folios, 270 x 180 mm. 27-28 lines.

Origin: France, s. xi, late.³²⁵

Description:

Pc contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP on ff. 1r-70v. The late-11th-century text of the DCP ends at the foot of 70v, which is the last leaf of a quire, at 5p6.31 'libertate proueniunt'.³²⁶ The missing text from 5p6.31 to the end of 5p6.48 probably filled just over two sides of a leaf in the main scribe's hand. Presently the last two folios, 71 and 72 (the latter not foliated), are made up of a single bifolium, on which the final sentence of the DCP, 5p6.48 'Magna uobis est si dissimulare ... cuncta cernentis' and a brief explicit ('Explicit liber boetii') was supplied on 71r, lines 1-3 in the 12th century.³²⁷ Two more explicits were added on 71r in the 14th century, one above line 3 and the other on line 4 ('Explicit boecii de consolatione fratrum praedicatorum est'). An ex libris was added to 72v also in the 14th century.³²⁸

The entire text of the DCP is written in a single column. None of the five books are preceded by titles, though space was left to add them. Though space was also left for the opening initials of the metres and the proses, these appear to have been added much later and not consistently. Dialogues between Boethius and Philosophy are often written consecutively in individual sentence units, rather than continuously across the page. Pc has some rubrication. An ink diagram of the elements was added in the upper left margin of 35v, above the marginal glosses to 3m9, which begins on 35v, line 22.

Pc is not ruled for glosses, but the margins are very wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pc is fairly heavily glossed with Latin interlinear and marginal glosses and a single Greek word entered by contemporary scribes. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly written in close proximity to the lemma of the text with no linking symbols; others are linked to the lemma with letters of the alphabet or arbitrary signs. Where the margins are particularly wide, the glosses are sometimes entered in double columns.

The glosses are spread fairly evenly through the five books. Most of the longer glosses derive from the West Frankish tradition, many of them aligning with the Vc branch of that tradition, but there are also glosses linked to the distinct Af branch. Occasional links are evident with Pk and Pp.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Pc.

Provenance:

Little is known of the early history of Pc, except that it was probably written in France. The explicit added on 71r and the ex libris on 72v point to its ownership by a Dominican order in the 14th century. The former shelfmark on the first unnumbered leaf of Pc ‘Codex Telleriano-Remensis, 71’ places it in the library of the Archbishop of Rheims, Charles-Maurice Le Tellier (d. 1710) by the late 17th century, whence it was transferred to the Royal Library.³²⁹

³²⁹ The Royal Library shelfmark ‘Regius 5354.2’ is written beneath the Tellerian one.

Pd (= P11)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 6639

152 folios, 232 x 190 mm. 20 lines (Part 1).

Origin: France (Lyon region?), s. ix, about the third quarter.³³⁰

Description:

This codex is made up of two 2 parts: Part 1 (1-72), with which we are concerned, contains a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP and Part 2 (73-151) contains a glossed copy of his De institutione arithmetica.³³¹ The DCP on 3r-72v is preceded by a bifolium, which remains blank except for the modern foliation. The De arithmetica is on 73r-151r; diagrams and inscriptions representing geometry, arithmetic, harmony and consonance take up much of 151v; a brief text headed 'Prestaria' was added in the 10th century to the second half of 151r, immediately beneath the text of the De arithmetica. The glosses by a 9th-century scribe in both texts and the sequence of quire numbers added to both parts, which were entered by an early scribe, suggest the two texts were probably united shortly after they were copied.³³²

All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles, with glossae in titulum entered against the title of Book 1. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; about half the metres are also written in a single column, with the rest written in multiple columns. The text was carelessly written in places: for instance, the beginnings of metres were sometimes written as part of the previous prose, or the beginning of a prose was written in short verse lines, blurring the boundaries between proses and metres. No colour is used in Pd.

Pd is not ruled for glosses, but the margins are very wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pd is fairly heavily glossed in Latin with interlinear and marginal glosses and a couple of Greek words. Glossing is heaviest in Book 1, and relatively light in Books 4 and 5. The glossing seems to be mainly in one hand, not the same as the text but not much later (i.e., in the late 9th century); additional glosses were entered by scribes in the 10th and 11th centuries. The main glossing scribe was evidently working primarily, probably exclusively, from another glossed copy or more, and was not very competent. Short glosses are often in the wrong place, ³³⁰ Bischoff (Katalog 3, no. 4441). Melot (Catalogus codicum IV, p. 264), Weinberger (1934), Troncarelli (2005, no. 28), Wittig (2007, p. 192), Love (2012, p. 92): s. x.

³³¹ The folios have been numbered twice in the top right corner: we follow the first set of numbering written in ink; a later hand foliated in pencil from 1 to 10 and thereafter only every tenth folio (20, 30, 40, etc.).

³³² The DCP was written on 9 quires of 4 bifolia each: the first leaf of the first quire and the last leaf of the last quire were both removed after the quire numbers were added; they were probably blank, except for the quire number on the last leaf of quire 9. The quires were numbered again in the 17th century in the bottom right corner of the first folio of each quire, but many of these were lost to trimming.

Description of Manuscripts

words are badly corrupted and longer marginal glosses often include spaces left for words or phrases that the scribe was evidently unable to read in his exemplar(s). These were not on the whole difficult words, judging from other manuscripts, and may have been written in Tironian notes, such as those used in On. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly written in close proximity to the lemmas with no linking symbols, with some repeating the lemma as part of the gloss; in a few cases arbitrary signs link the glosses to the lemmas.

Much of the glossing is short and interlinear, and long marginal glosses are rather sparse. Difficult and demanding sections like the Platonic ideas of 3m9 or the allusions to classical legend in 4m7, which in other manuscripts are very heavily glossed, get very little attention here. A very high proportion of the glosses are unique to Pd, though often not different in substance from glosses in other manuscripts. Where longer glosses are also found in other manuscripts, Pd shows a variety of different connections: many glosses are otherwise found only in East Frankish manuscripts; others occur only in On; others again occur only in the insular hand of Vb or in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, or both. This is hard to explain. The weakness or carelessness of the glossing scribe, and the consistency of habits and glossing character through the manuscript, makes it unlikely that he himself was selecting freely from a variety of heavily glossed manuscripts from different traditions, and the mixture of traditions was presumably taken from a single exemplar. Given the comparatively low scale of glossing, especially in the parts of the text that often get a lot of glossing, it seems on the whole unlikely that the exemplar was itself selecting from several different well-glossed copies and combining traditions, and no reason why glosses that originated in that exemplar would have spread selectively to East Frankish and Anglo-Saxon centres. It would seem that the original compiler of the glosses was mainly devising his own glosses but supplemented it with material from several different traditions but had access only to lightly glossed manuscripts.

Provenance:

Delisle places Pd at the Church of Lyon in the first half of the 10th century, based on his view that the ‘Praestaria’ added to 151r emanated from Gui, archbishop of Lyon (928-948?).³³³ He identifies the 13th-century abbot named in an inscription on the upper part of folio 151v as Willelmi de Ruppe, who appears on a list of abbots at Saint-Pierre de la Tour-du-Puy in 1234. Delisle also proposes that Pd is identical with entry no. 35 in a 17th-century list of manuscripts compiled by Étienne Baluze, librarian to Jean-Baptiste Colbert (minister to Louis XIV).³³⁴ Colbert’s shelfmark (‘Cod. Colb. 3711’) and that of Pd’s subsequent home, the Royal Library (‘Regius 6017.1.a’), which acquired Colbert’s manuscripts in 1732, were both added to 3r.³³⁵

Description of Manuscripts

Pe (= P15)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 7181

174 folios, 285 x 220 mm. 34-35 lines (Part 3).

Origin: (northeastern) France, s. ix, third quarter (Part 3).³³⁶

Description:

This codex is made up of 3 originally independent parts, all containing the works of Boethius: Part 1 (1-81) De institutione arithmetica, Part 2 (82-136) De musica and Part 3 (137-174) an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP.³³⁷

The DCP, on 137r-174v, begins on a fresh quire. Part of Book 3 was omitted: 3p3 comes to an abrupt end at 3p3.12 ‘suapte natura’ on 154v, line 7; this is followed immediately by 3m3.5-6, written as if part of the prose text in long lines, on 154v, lines 7-8; 3p4.1 follows on line 9, with no indication of a new section.³³⁸ The DCP ends imperfectly at the foot of 174v, at 5p5.7 ‘quidem et quod sensibile’.³³⁹ Books 1 to 4 are preceded by titles and, though space was left to insert it, the title to Book 5 was not supplied. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column, the majority of the metres were written in single columns and the remainder were written in double columns. The metres are written in rustic capitals throughout.³⁴⁰ Pe has some rubrication. An ink drawing of a dog was added in the lower right margin of 165r.

Pe is not ruled for glosses and though the outer margins are very wide, the lines of texts are narrowly spaced.

Glosses: Latin

Pe is very lightly glossed, with only 4 glosses. It contains glosses written over the Greek on 139r and 144v by a contemporary scribe; of these the first is a mistaken interpretation of the

³³⁷ The quiring and condition of all three texts suggests they initially circulated independently: only the five surviving quires on which the DCP are written are consistently signed (from ‘i’ to ‘v’); the quire signatures on the first two Boethian texts are not always evident.

³³⁹ See table of ‘missing text’ for details.

³⁴⁰ The exceptions are where the scribe wrote 3m3.5-6 as part of the prose text (154v) and the last two lines of 3m4 (7-8) as part of 3p4 (155r).

miswritten Greek in 1p4.1, which is identical in wording and form with the gloss in Fa. There are also two headnotes defining the metrical forms of metres written in glossing script next to metres 1m2 and 1m4, probably entered in the 10th century.

Provenance:

The early history of Pe from the time of its origin in France is unknown and it is unclear when the three parts of the present codex were united. It came to the Royal Library from the private collection of the Dutch humanist Erycius Puteanus, also known as Henri Dupuy (1574-1646), who had an interest in music.

Description of Manuscripts

Pf (= P12)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 7183
66 folios,³⁴¹ 280-290 x 200 mm. 26 lines (Part 3).
Origin: France, s. xi, early (Part 3).³⁴²

Description:

As presently bound, this codex contains three incomplete texts by Boethius produced at different times and probably in different scriptoria: Part 1 (1-15) preserves a partial glossed copy of the De institutione arithmetica (2nd quarter of the 9th century);³⁴³ Part 2 (16-23), a partial glossed copy of his In Porphyrii Isagogen commentorum (11th century); and Part 3 (24-65), an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP (early 11th century). Verses on Saint Stephen were added to 65r-66v in the 11th century.

The text of the DCP on 24r-65v begins on folio 24r at 1p5.6 ‘meorum sententias collocaui’.³⁴⁴ Titles were inserted for Books 2 to 5. A 14th-century scribe added ‘primus finit’ and ‘incipit ii’ and a modern hand added ‘Boetius de consolatione’ to the upper margin of 25r, where Book 2 begins. The prose text is written in a single column and the metres, with the exception of a handful written in single columns, are written in multiple columns; often the boundaries between the verse lines are unclear. Neumes were added to 1m6, 1m7 and 2m1. Pf has little rubrication.

Pf is not ruled for glosses, but the margins are fairly wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pf is lightly glossed with Latin interlinear and marginal glosses and several Greek words entered by contemporary scribes. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs and others are written in close proximity to the lemma with no linking symbols.

³⁴¹ There are two sets of modern foliation: one added after the initial part of the DCP was lost, but before it was bound with the other two parts of this codex; the other added after the three independent parts were united. We use this latter foliation for the DCP, written in red ink, beginning at 24 and ending at 66.

³⁴² Troncarelli (2005, no. 30): s. xi (in), for DCP; Melot (Catalogus codicum IV, p. 323), listing all three parts, suggests that the codex is partly 10th century and partly 11th century; Weinberger (1934), Moreschini (2005), Wittig (2007, p. 192), Love (2012, p. 92): s. x/xi.

³⁴³ According to Bischoff (Katalog 3, no. 4427) the missing folios of the now incomplete De institutione arithmetica are preserved as Paris, BN, lat. 7186; he proposes that this text was written in Paris or its environs.

³⁴⁴ See table of ‘missing text’ for details.

Description of Manuscripts

The glossing is very light with the exception of two patches with intensive glossing, one running from 3p9.9 to the middle of 3p11 and the other covering 5p6.9 to the end. In both cases the glossing starts not at the beginning of a prose or metre but at the beginning of a quire; it is in a hand or hands similar to that of the text. The batch of glosses in Book 3, some 400 of them, show a very consistent link with the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, especially Ct and Er. They may then derive from an English source, though the occasional witness of individual Continental manuscripts such as Fb and Ld allows the possibility that these were of Continental origin but survived mainly in England. The batch of glosses in 5p6 however show no link with Anglo-Saxon manuscripts; many of them occur otherwise only in Va, others are from the West Frankish tradition represented by Af and Vc but often share variants with Va. In addition to these two batches another, slightly later, hand using a darker ink added throughout the work a series of glosses, mainly Greek rhetorical terms and headnotes, that recur in Ka and Lh and occasionally other manuscripts.

Provenance:

The early history of Pf is not known. It is unclear when the three parts of this codex were bound together, but the wear and tear evident on the first folio of Pf (24) and the last few folios (64-66), suggests that the first part of the DCP was probably lost at an early stage and that the DCP was in circulation in an unprotected state before the three parts of the codex were united. The numbering added to the foot of 3r is evidently characteristic of the Abbey of St Denis in Paris, linking at least the first part of this codex to St Denis in the 14th century. The former shelfmark 'Codex Colb. 5078' added to 1r and the upper margin of 24r, where the DCP begins, places this codex in the library of Jean-Baptiste Colbert in the 17th century; lists of manuscripts belonging to Colbert compiled by his librarian Étienne Baluze in the late 17th century lists all three parts of this codex together under shelfmark '5078'.³⁴⁵ Colbert's library was sold to the Royal Library (shelfmark 'Regius 5449.5' on 1r) in 1732.

Description of Manuscripts

Pg (= P3)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 8039, ff. 51-77

27 leaves, 342 x 268 mm. 42-43 lines.

Origin: France, s. ix, end.³⁴⁶

Description:

As presently bound, this codex is made up of two independent parts, produced in the same scriptorium about the same time: Part 1 (1-50) contains a glossed copy of Lucan's Pharsalia; Part 2 (51-77), with which we are concerned, contains a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP. The DCP is on 51r-77v. Book 1 of the DCP is preceded by a title and Books 3 and 4 are preceded by explicits and incipits; though space was left, neither was added to Books 2 and 5. Glossae in titulum to Book 1 were entered on 51r, between the lines of the title as well as in the margins. The text of the DCP was written in double columns throughout; within this double column layout all but one metre (1m7), which was written in two columns, were written in single columns.

The text of 3m9 ends on 63va, line 29; the text scribe left the remaining lines in column a and the first 15 lines of column b blank for diagrams; he resumed writing at 63vb, line 16, with a set of glossae collectae to 3m9, whose glosses begin at 3m9.13, with a unique gloss to 3m9.10 concluding this sequence of glosses. The glossae collectae end at 64va, line 41 and the remainder of the glossed text of the DCP resumes at 64va, line 42, with 3p10. Presumably the scribes of Pg were following an exemplar with a layout not uncommon in some early DCP manuscripts, where a lack of space to add extensive glosses around 3m9 prompted scribes to write the glosses in a continuous format on additional sheets of parchment. The DCP ends on 77v, line 10. At the foot of 77v is an inscription, perhaps added in the 12th century, noting 'Iuuenalis, Prudentius, Boetius de consolatione philosophiae et Lucans in una uolumine'.

The Greek quotations seem to have caused some difficulty to the text scribe at the beginning of the work. The first, in 1p4.1, was omitted altogether but added in the margin and glossed. At 1p5.4 the text scribe again omitted the Greek but instead wrote the standard translation of it in his text, and that was in turn revised and annotated by the glossator. Then at 2p2.13 the Greek has been added in another hand, apparently over an erasure in the text and extending into the margins, and then glossed. It appears that the text scribe either omitted the Greek, leaving a space, or substituted a translation. The Greek in 3p6, 3p12, 4p6 and 5m2 seems not to have caused a problem however.

Pg has some rubrication and ornamental initials. A circular diagram of the earth incorporating the divisions of the zodiac was drawn in the lower inner margin of 63r. Since the text of 3p9 was written around its right side, the diagram was evidently part of the original layout of the text, but the inscriptions were entered by later scribes. Two further diagrams were added to the blank spaces left on 63v: a diagram of the elements, with 10th-century inscriptions, was added beneath the text of 3m9 in the left column; the outline of a circular diagram was added to the space above the glossae collectae in the right column, but left incomplete; a correction to the text of 3m9 and long interlinear glosses were entered over this outline.³⁴⁷ An 11th- or 12th-century diagram of the planets and divisions of the zodiac was added to the blank space beneath the end of the text of the DCP on 77v.

Pg is not ruled for glosses, except for the upper inner margins of the two opening folios of the DCP. The space between the lines of text is limited, as is the inner margin formed by the double columns; however, the outer margins are fairly wide. Many leaves are badly worn, rendering some glosses illegible.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pg is fairly heavily glossed with Latin interlinear and marginal glosses, but they occur mainly in just two batches, covering 1m1 to 2m2 and 3p8 to 3m9. The two batches of glossing are different in character: the first of these batches was mostly added in the 10th century and probably added from a different exemplar, whereas the second batch is mainly contemporary with the text and comes from the main exemplar, though with some later 10th-century additions as well. The rest of the text has very little glossing. A single Greek word is embedded in a Latin gloss. Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Some marginal glosses are linked to the text by arbitrary signs, but mostly they are written in close proximity to the text.

The glosses on 1m1 to 2m2 are mainly single words or short phrases. Many of them are unique to Pg and those that do agree with other manuscripts show no consistent pattern and the agreements may well be coincidental. Of the occasional longer ones that do occur in other manuscripts, several show matches with East Frankish manuscripts such as Ec Na To and Vh. There are also occasional matches with Anglo-Saxon or West Frankish manuscripts but nothing very telling. In so far as the glossing is not independent it would seem to be drawing mainly on an East Frankish tradition. The second batch, on 3p8 to 3m9, is quite different, with a great many longer glosses generally shared by the Af tradition.

A particular complication is 3m9. Following the text is a diagram, and then a further space apparently intended for a diagram too, and then a long sequence of glosses to the second half of the metre, written in a continuous sequence by the scribe of the text over the rest of the page and over the next few pages, before resuming with the text on f. 64v. In addition the usual glossing hand supplies interlinear and marginal glosses to the whole metre. There is a certain amount of duplication between the glossator's entries and the glossae collectae, and the latter includes some single word glosses as well as longer ones, suggesting that the two sets did not originate simply by dividing a single batch of glosses. Moreover the set of glossae collectae bears a striking resemblance, in content and form, to the similar sequence, of West Frankish affiliation, in Ec1 Gc1 and Lh, suggesting that it had some prior history and circulation beyond Pg itself and its immediate exemplar. It would seem that the scribe of Pg's text incorporated into his work a set of glossae collectae on the second half of 3m9 which had ³⁴⁷ The scribe of the text, or a contemporary, added 3m9.12, which was omitted from the original text.

Description of Manuscripts

probably been attached to, or copied into, his exemplar, while the early glossator added material, some of which duplicated the glosses, from his usual sources. Since the text was written around the end of the 9th century, the set of glossae collectae used by Pg Ec Gc and Lh was evidently in existence well before the end of the 9th century.

The patchiness of the glossing, the frequency of unique glosses, and the apparent use of different sources in different parts, all suggest that the glossator(s) had limited material available. The text scribe was evidently copying from an exemplar with some glossing, such as the translations of the Greek and the separate glossae collectae on 3m9.12ff, but that may have been all.

Provenance:

The early history of Pg is not known. It is unclear when the two parts of this codex were bound together, but the wear and tear evident on the first folio of Pg (51) and, to a lesser degree, on the last folio (77), suggests that the DCP was in circulation for some while in an unprotected state before the two were united.

A note at the foot of 1r 'Jac. Aug. Thuanus' places this codex in the library of the French historian and bibliophile Jacques-Auguste de Thou (or Thuanus; 1553-1617), who also became the director of the Royal Library in 1593. The codex subsequently became a part of the library of Jean-Baptiste Colbert in the 17th century; lists of manuscripts belonging to Colbert compiled by his librarian Étienne Baluze in the late 17th century record both parts of this codex together under the former shelfmark '1822', also added to 1r.³⁴⁸ Colbert's library was sold to the Royal Library (shelfmark 'Regius 5083.2' on 1r) in 1732.

Description of Manuscripts

Ph (= P4)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 8308

72 folios,³⁴⁹ 230 x 150 mm. 29-31 lines.

Origin: France, s. xi, second half.³⁵⁰

Description:

This codex in its present form contains glossed copies of Prudentius's Psychomachia and of the DCP and ancillary texts. The opening leaf of the first quire was left blank and the foliation begins on the second leaf with '1'. A schema of vices and virtues and miscellaneous notes were added to the verso of the first unfoliated leaf, probably in the late 11th or early 12th century, perhaps by the same scribe who entered the text on 71v, lines 27-30. The Psychomachia (1r-15r, line 16) is written on the first two unsigned quires and is immediately followed by Prologus 5 (15r, line 17 to 15v, line 2) and an abbreviated copy of Prologus 6 (15v, lines 2 to 8), conceivably both written by the same scribe as the Prudentius text;³⁵¹ the rest of the page remains blank. The preparation of the parchment, the presence of quire signatures on some quires of the DCP and the prologi that often circulate with the DCP recorded at the end of the Psychomachia, suggests that the two texts may have been conceived as two independent parts, but that they were bound together and circulated as a single codex shortly thereafter.

The text of the DCP on 16r-71v begins on a fresh quire. Titles to Books 1, 2 and 3 and an incipit to Book 5 were supplied; although space was left for one, no title was entered for Book 4. A set of glossae collectae on 3m9.13 onwards was written on 41v-43r, line 14 by the text scribe. The scribe follows on immediately (43r, lines 14-29) writing various learned notes, some written in double columns, including mnemonic calendrical verses³⁵² and an excerpt from the 4th-century Roman poet Ausonius relating to zodiacal signs. The DCP ends on 71v, line 15 with an explicit; it is followed by a copy of Prologus 4 (71v, lines 16-23) and the first few lines of the Lupus treatise on the metres (71v, lines 24-26: Peiper, lines 1-4); a later scribe entered Eugenius of Toledo's Heptametrum de primordio mundi immediately below this (71v, lines 27-30).

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the majority of the metres are written in multiple columns, which are fairly well delineated, and a handful are written in single columns. The metres are written in a slightly smaller script than that of the proses. Neumes were added to the upper margins of the folios on which 1m5, 1m7 and 2m5 are recorded; and to the lower margin of the folios where 4m3 is recorded. Ph has some rubrication and ornamental initials. A diagram of the elements, drawn in the ink of the text with some red highlights, takes up about two-thirds of the upper part of 41r; it is preceded by 3m9.1-12 at the bottom of 40v and followed by 3m9.13-28 at the bottom of 41r. An ink diagram of concentric circles was drawn in the left margin of 58v, next to the text of 4p6.³⁵³

³⁵¹ Prologus 5 shares significant variants with St and this abbreviated version of Prologus 6 otherwise only appears in St.

Ph is not ruled for glosses and, though the space between the lines is limited, the outer margins are wide.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Ph is lightly glossed in Latin with both interlinear and marginal glosses and a single Greek headword. Some glosses were entered by the scribe of the text, others by contemporary scribes and still others were added by scribes at the end of the 11th century. Other additions include speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly written in close proximity to the lemma they are annotating and are only rarely linked to the text by arbitrary signs. The glossae collectae following 3m9 are introduced by lemmas. A few marginal glosses are written in geometric shapes.

Many of the longer glosses are unique to Ph, but a fair number are linked with the West Frankish tradition represented by Af or Vc. The few glosses that are otherwise found only in St were seemingly written by scribes contemporary with the text scribe; some Af/Vc glosses show Ph/St variants.

Provenance:

The early history of Ph is unclear. The neumes that were added have been identified as Aquitanian neumes, which were used primarily in southern France, especially in the southwest; however, these were not added until late in the 11th or sometime in the 12th century.³⁵⁴ In the 17th century Ph was part of the collection of the Italian Cardinal Jules Mazarin (1602-1661), chief minister of France from 1642 until his death and an avid bibliophile. In 1668 Mazarin's collection of manuscripts was deposited in the Royal Library.

³⁵³ The diagram in Ph was apparently not known to Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77.

Description of Manuscripts

Pj (= P20)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 10400 (olim Supplément latin 1895), ff. 90-93
2 fragmentary bifolia, 240 x 155/160. 32 lines.³⁵⁵

Origin: France, s. x.³⁵⁶

Description:

This codex contains a partial copy of the DCP (4m6.44 to 5p3.26) bound up with a collection of unrelated fragments, ranging in date from the 8th to the 15th centuries. The glossed text of the DCP is preserved on two bifolia, incorrectly ordered in its present form, with the central sheet being turned round and folded the wrong way. The correct order of the surviving text, which has no lacunae, is: 90rv (4m6.44 - 4m7.14), 93rv (4m7.15 - 5p1.14 'quarum improuisus'), 92rv (5p1.14 'inopinatusque concursus' to 5m2.13), 91rv (5m2.14 - 5p3.26 'incerta iudicat'). The title to Book 5 on 93r is struck through in red ink for emphasis. The entire text is written in a single column.

Pj is not ruled for glosses, but the outer margins in their original state were probably fairly wide and the lines between the texts are sufficiently spaced to take glosses. Some of the glosses are obscured by the guard paper on which Pj is presently mounted and parts of some marginal glosses have been lost to trimming.

Glosses: Latin

Pj is heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses by several scribes of the 10th and the 11th centuries. Other additions include headnotes to the prose, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols. A few marginal glosses are written in geometric shapes.

Many of the glosses are unique to Pj, especially the longer ones, and where there is agreement in the one-word glosses that could often be coincidental. However, occasional matches with other manuscripts show that the glossator(s) did know other fully glossed copies. Where the glosses show links with other manuscripts, these are usually with the West Frankish and Anglo-Saxon traditions. But much of the time the glossator(s) have preferred to supply their own, often rather intelligent, glosses, or at least to rewrite the material in their own words.

Description of Manuscripts

Pk (= P5)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 12961

125 folios, 320 x 195 mm. 25 lines.

Origin: France, s. xi, second half.³⁵⁸

Description:

This codex, written by several scribes in the 11th century, contains a glossed copy of Boethius's DCP (2-90), a glossed copy of his Opuscula sacra (93-125) and several other texts often circulated with the DCP. Prologus 1 on 1r, 1-9 and Epitaphium 1 on 1v, 1-13 were added to the originally blank first folio by two different scribes, also in the 11th century. The DCP is on 2r-90v and ends with the explicit to the DCP on 90v, 25. Prologus 3 follows on 91r, 1-14 and the Lupus treatise on the metres is on 91r, 15- 93r, 5. The remaining space on 93r was filled with miscellaneous notes, probably written by the same scribe, but perhaps after the Opuscula sacra had already been begun on 93v, since the notes are written across the left and right vertical bounding lines as well as below the horizontal bounding line in order to fit the text into the existing space on 93r. The Opuscula sacra ends on 125r and a diagram with inscriptions of the phases of the moon and the words 'hic Boethius de consolatione philosophice liber'³⁵⁹ were added to the originally blank 125v. That the DCP and its ancillary texts end on 93r in quire 12 and the theological tractates begin on 93v and continue on to 125r in quire 16, confirms that these Boethius texts were designed to circulate together.³⁶⁰

All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. The entire text of the DCP is written in a single column, with the exception of 4m3, which is written in double columns. Dialogues between Boethius and Philosophy are often written consecutively in individual sentence units, rather than continuously across each column. Neumes were added to 3m2. Pk has some rubrication. An ink diagram of concentric circles with intersecting lines and no inscriptions was added in the margin of 71v, next to the text of 4p6.³⁶¹

Pk is not ruled for glosses;³⁶² however, an additional vertical line was added to the wide outer ³⁵⁸ Delisle (1868, p. 82), Weinberger (1934), Courcelle (1939, p. 123; 1967, p. 406): s. xi; Troncarelli (2005, no. 37), Love (2012, p. 91), Wittig (2007, p. 192): s. xi²; Judy (1991, p. 487): s. xi^{3/4}. The features of the script suggest Pk was copied in France. Judy and Wittig suggest an origin in eastern France; Wittig proposes 'Lorraine, Metz? at Corbie'. Troncarelli (2005, no. 37) posits a possible German origin for the script of the text.

³⁵⁹ The remaining words were erased.

³⁶¹ See Papahagi pp. 141-77; Pk at 168-69. Though Papahagi notes that 'the text is laid out so as to leave space for the drawing' (p. 169), this diagram is in fact simply added next to the text in the margin, where space was left to add glosses.

³⁶² However, the final 4 quires (97-125) on which De opuscula sacra was written are ruled for glosses in both the inner and outer margins.

Description of Manuscripts

margins, creating two outer columns on each folio, in which double columns of glosses were sometimes entered.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pk is fairly heavily glossed with Latin interlinear and marginal glosses and a couple of Greek words. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Several marginal glosses are linked to the text they annotate by arbitrary signs; others are written in close proximity to the text with no linking symbols; and some glosses repeat the lemma they annotate.

The glosses, which are especially heavy in Book 1, were entered by a variety of contemporary scribes. They derive primarily from the West Frankish glossing tradition best represented by Vc, and witnessed also by other manuscripts from France and England. On one occasion (1p1, 3r) the gloss ‘uox philosophiae’ is embedded in the text and is given much prominence on the page as a rubric; this gloss is embedded in the text of one other manuscript (Pa), copied either in England or France, and appears in several Anglo-Saxon manuscripts as an interlinear gloss as well as in two other French manuscripts.³⁶³ Some glosses appear also or instead in Af and Kc and related manuscripts. There is a particularly close relationship, in both Vc types and Af types, with Pc, and often with Pp.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Pk.

Provenance:

The early history of Pk remains unclear, though the script points to a French origin. An early 12th century catalogue (pre-1140) of an inventory of books in the library of Saint-Maur-des-Fossés in Paris, lists two copies of the DCP, one of which includes a copy of Boethius’s De Trinitate, and which has been identified as Pk.³⁶⁴ The former shelfmark in the lower margin of 2r ‘olim 1066 S. Mauro Fossatens 43’ was identified by Montfaucon in his list of manuscripts that were transferred from the manuscripts of Sancti Mauri Fossatensis to the library of Saint-Germain-des-Prés in Paris in 1716.³⁶⁵ A modern hand notes ‘ex libris Monasterii Sancti Germani a pratis Parisiorum’ in the upper margin of 2r and its shelfmark ‘n. 164’ in the lower margin. The manuscript collection of Saint-Germain-des-Prés was acquired by the National Library of France during the French Revolution.

³⁶³ The Anglo-Saxon manuscripts are Ck Ct Ge Oa Pb Pn and Ps; the French manuscripts are On (marginal gloss) and Pq (interlinear, but misplaced over another lemma).

Description of Manuscripts

Pm (= P14)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 13953, ff. 25-41

88 folios, 200 x 150 mm. 32-33 lines (Part 1).

Origin: Corbie?, s. x.³⁶⁶

Description:

This codex is made up of 5 parts containing a miscellany of texts dating from the late 9th to the 10th centuries: amongst others, these include glossae collectae, epistolae, a glossed copy of Boethius's De fide catholica and an incomplete copy of Alcuin's De orthographia, here attributed to Bede.³⁶⁷ Since the leaves assembled together in this codex are presently individually mounted, the original quiring cannot be established; however, the varying dates of the script, the presence of blank leaves and the disparity of the texts, suggest that the codex was assembled together from different sources that originally circulated separately.

Part 1 (1-46), with which we are concerned, contains sets of glossae collectae to several poems of Prudentius (1ra-25va, 24) and to Boethius's DCP (25va, 25-41va, 19), followed by the text Dicta Candidi de imagine Dei, attributed to Alcuin's Anglo-Saxon disciple, Candidus (41va, 22-46vb, 12), all of which were copied in the 10th century. The glossae collectae to the DCP begins on 25va, line 25 with the rubric 'Glo<ssae> Boetii'.³⁶⁸ All of Part 1 is written in double columns. Pm has little rubrication.

Glosses: Latin, OHG

The glossae collectae to the DCP assembled in Pm comprise over two thousand annotations in Latin and OHG written in the 10th century. There are 90 OHG glosses embedded in the glossae collectae, of which 13 are entered in cipher;³⁶⁹ only 5 of the OHG glosses are unique to Pm.

³⁶⁶ There is general agreement that Pm (ff. 1-46) was written in the 10th century: Delisle (Inventaire ... Saint-Germain-des-Prés, pp. 122-23), Courcelle (1939, p. 120; 1967, p. 404), SS (IV, pp. 598-99, no. 515), Marenbon (1981, p. 40), O'Sullivan (2004, p. 46), Tax (2008, vol. 1, p. xxxvii), Papahagi (2010, p. 81), Love (2012, p. 93); B&S no. 766 (B&S date individual parts of the codex to the late 9th and the 10th centuries). Many have suggested the codex may have been produced at Corbie; Marenbon, who links the manuscript with other writings of Remigius of Auxerre, suggests an Auxerre origin; Tax suggests a German origin, and a possible Corbie provenance; O'Sullivan links the Latin glosses to Prudentius with East Frankish centres of learning. For recent discussions of the codex, see especially O'Sullivan 2004, pp. 46-48 and Papahagi 2010, pp. 73-96; Papahagi prints the glossae collectae to the DCP on pp. 99-139.

³⁶⁸ Papahagi (2010, p. 99) expands the rubric as 'C<onso>l<ati>o Boetii', reading the 'G' as 'C'.

³⁶⁹ B&S no. 766: 'Alemannisch'; probably written at the Benedictine Abbey of Corbie. Despite SS (IV, pp. 315-317, no. DLXVII) and Blech (1977, pp. 169-206) not

Description of Manuscripts

The glosses generally adhere to the order of the text of the DCP and the lemma are either written in full or partly in abbreviated form; sometimes omitted lemma are added in the margins, or abbreviated forms are expanded. A few interlinear glosses and a single marginal gloss, linked to the text with an arbitrary sign, were entered by other contemporary glossators.

The glosses in Pm are concentrated mainly in the first three books; most of the glosses are short and fairly limited in number. They generally agree closely with those in St Gallen and Einsiedeln manuscripts and related copies, but the closest agreement seems to be not with the glossae collectae of Ec but with the glossed text of Ed, suggesting that Pm's set is an independent selection.

Provenance:

It is unclear when the various parts of this codex were first assembled together as a single unit. Though many parts of this codex have been ascribed to the Benedictine Abbey of Corbie, the scribes transcribing the OHG glosses incorporated in the glossae collectae to the DCP in Pm show a good understanding of the language. If not written there, Part 1 (1-46) of this codex was probably in Corbie by the 12th century.³⁷⁰ A shelfmark '561', linked with Corbie, and the ownership note 'Corbeia' were both entered at the foot of 1r by two different early modern hands; this shelfmark was also added to 'Ar', an additional sheet of parchment preceding 1r, where a later hand also added 'Sti Germani a Pratis' and its shelfmark 'n. 1334'. The manuscript collection of Saint-Germain-des-Prés was acquired by the National Library of France during the French Revolution.

accepting 'ansie' as an OHG gloss to 'prescientia' in 5p3, Papahagi argues that it is OHG (see Papahagi 2010, p. 73, n. 1 and p. 136, n. g); we interpret it in our edition as a variant of Latin 'an si' glossing enclitic '-ne', as in the gloss over '-ne' in Lf. Courcelle (1967, p. 404) mistakenly reports that the OHG glosses are not written in cipher.

³⁷⁰ Burnam (1905, p. 5) links the rubric 'Glosemata (sic) de Libro Facto Contra Simmachum' on 1r of Part 1 with an entry in a 12th-century catalogue of Corbie manuscripts; the 12th-century catalogue of Corbie Library was printed by Delisle (Cabinet 2, pp. 428-32). The relevant texts are numbered as followed in this catalogue: 'Glosemata contra Simmacum' (no. 161), the DCP (no. 74) and the Prudentius texts (nos. 253, 254).

Description of Manuscripts

Pn (= P6)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 14380

102 folios, 400 x 240 mm. 30 lines (Part 1).

Origin: England (Christ Church, Canterbury?), s. x, second half.³⁷¹

Description:

This composite manuscript is made up of two originally independent parts: Part 1 (1-65) contains a glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts. Part 2 (66-100) contains a 14th-century copy of William of Conches' Glosae super Boetium, attributed to Robert Grosseteste, bishop of Lincoln (1235-1253).³⁷²

Part 1 opens with a singleton, foliated 1, that is not integral to the first quire. Some late pen trials and shelfmarks were added to 1r, which otherwise remains blank; several preliminaries, written in a glossing script by a scribe contemporary with the text of the DCP and who also added glosses to the DCP, were entered on 1v: Glossae in titulum, written en bloc (1v, 1-8), Prologus 3 (1v, 9-19), immediately followed by excerpts from the Lupus treatise on the metres (1v, 19-30: Peiper, lines 1-4, 6-17); Prologus 5 was entered in the left margin of 1v. The DCP, which begins on a fresh quire, is on 2r-64v. All five books are preceded by incipits, explicits or fuller titles. The text of the DCP ends with an explicit on 64v, line 9; some late notes and pen trials were added to the remainder of 64v and 65r, whilst 65v remains blank. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column as are the majority of the metres. Neumes were added to 1m5, 2m5 and 2m6. Pn has some rubrication.

Pn is partially ruled for glosses: the inner margins and the wide outer margins, but not the upper and lower margins, were ruled for glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, Old English

Pn is very heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses that were entered primarily by one scribe in the 10th century, possibly the scribe of the text, copying from his exemplar of the DCP soon after the text was written. Numerous other scribes of the 10th and 11th centuries added further glosses sporadically throughout. A couple of Greek words are embedded in a Latin gloss. Two OE glosses were entered in the right margin of 15v, probably by a single glossator.³⁷³ Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, Saint-Victor*, p. 11), Weinberger (1934), Courcelle (1939, p. 123; 1967, p. 406): s. x; Gneuss and Lapidge (2014, no. 899), Ebersperger (1999, no. 25), Love (2012, pp. 91-92): s. x ex; Jeudy (1991, p. 487): s. x-xi; Ouy (1999, vol. 2, p. 236), Troncarelli (2005, no. 39): s. xi; Wittig (2007, p. 192): s. xi¹.

³⁷² The table of contents on 100r describes this texts as 'Commentum Linconiensis' (sic); however, the attribution to Grosseteste was rejected in 1912 by L. Baur (cited by Minnis, 1993, p. 7, n. 23).

³⁷³ The first of these 'eastansuðan wind' is part of a longer gloss to 2m4.4 'Euri'; the second 'suðerne wind', which is also part of a longer gloss to 2m4.9 'auster' also appears above 'auster' in Pb.

Description of Manuscripts

headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The majority of the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate. Occasionally the glosses include the lemmas.

The glosses are fairly evenly distributed throughout the DCP, becoming thinner in Book 5. Pn agrees closely with other Anglo-Saxon manuscripts such as Ap Ck Ge Pb and shares the same mix of links with other manuscripts - with the Af tradition, the Vc tradition, Ak in Book 4, the Fd group in Books 4 and 5, the Pc Pk Pq group in Book 5. There are indications of a closer link with Ap and Pb in Book 1 and with Ge and Pb in Book 3.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Pn.³⁷⁴

Provenance:

It remains unclear precisely when Pn arrived on the Continent.³⁷⁵ Nauta proposes that the 14th-century Part 2 of the codex was probably from northern France. The two parts were bound by the late medieval period, when the table of contents of the entire codex was written on 100r. Part 1 at least was evidently owned by the Augustinian abbey of St-Victor in Paris in the 12th century, when an anathema was written at the foot of 2r to prevent theft or mutilation of the volume;³⁷⁶ and an elaborate ex libris in blue, yellow and red, displaying the arms of St-Victor, was added to the foot of 2v. The Abbey of St-Victor was dissolved during the French Revolution and ‘an edict issued on 11 March 1790 declared the library’s volumes property of the state’; in 1791 the library was closed and its manuscripts dispersed between the National, Mazarine and Arsenal libraries of Paris.³⁷⁷ Several shelfmarks ranging in date from the 12th to the 18th centuries were added to 1r (EE.21, 604) and 2r (303, B.d.21).

³⁷⁴ According to Nauta (1999, p. cv), apart from the glosses to 3m9, the marginal glosses by a 13th- or 14th-century scribe apparently derive in part from the William of Conches glosses.

³⁷⁵ Dumville (1993b, p. 99) includes it in a ‘List of High-status Manuscripts Exported from England after 1066’.

³⁷⁶ Françoise Gasparri (1990) notes that this formula was in use since the 12th century in the library. Delisle (Cabinet 2, p. 227, n. 4) cites an early 13th-century statute requiring canons new to their order to add an anathema to all volumes ‘in libris quos scribi fecerunt’.

Description of Manuscripts

Pp (= P7)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 15090

89 folios, 240 x 220 mm. 20 lines.

Origin: France (Saint-Èvre-lès-Toul), s. x.³⁷⁸

Description:

Pp contains a glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts. Presently the quire signatures begin with ‘C’ on the last folio of the first quire;³⁷⁹ this quiring and the original late medieval foliation, which is just visible in the upper right hand corner on some folios, suggests that the Boethius material was at some point in its early history preceded by another text of at least 20 folios, and that the text of the DCP began on what was originally foliated ‘21’.³⁸⁰

Following the modern foliation, the DCP is on 2v-88v. Folio 1r was left blank and folios 1v to 2r contain a variety of preliminary material: Prologus 5 (1v, 1-12), Prologus 6 (1v, 12-18), an excerpt from the Lupus treatise on the metres (1v, 18-2r, 1: Peiper, lines 1-5), Prologus 1 (2r, 2-9), Prologus 4 (2r, 10-15) and another excerpt from the Lupus treatise (2r, 16-20: Peiper, lines 5-12); a late hand adds a few lines of comment beneath this excerpt.

The DCP begins on 2v with a title to Book 1; the remaining four books are preceded by explicits and incipits. Glossae in titulum added to the upper and left margins of 2v are linked to the title of Book 1 with letters of the alphabet. A small piece of parchment, foliated 4, was tipped in between folios 3 and 5 of the first quire to accommodate a few glosses to 1p1 added by an early glossator and a few more glosses that were added later. The DCP ends with an explicit on 88v, 5-6 and another early scribe added Epitaphium 2 immediately beneath it on 88v, 7-20. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column. The metres are mostly written in multiple columns, with a few in single columns; 3m9 is unusually written in half lines over a few pages, presumably in order to leave a significant amount of space around the text for glosses to be added. Pp has some ornamental initials and a little rubrication. In the lower left margin of 66v, next to 4p6, is an ink diagram of concentric circles with intersecting lines.³⁸¹

Pp is only occasionally ruled for glosses. The space between the lines of text is sufficiently wide to take glosses and the outer margins are of very generous proportions; the upper and lower margins have been trimmed, resulting in some loss of glosses.

³⁷⁹ The present first quire, foliated from 1-11, is made up of 5 bifolia, plus an additional half sheet inserted between 3 and 5; thus the quire signature ‘C’ appears at the foot of 11v.

Description of Manuscripts

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pp is heavily glossed with Latin interlinear and marginal glosses and several Greek words, some embedded in Latin glosses. The glossing is heaviest in Book 1, but otherwise evenly sustained. The glosses were entered by several scribes in the 10th and 11th centuries; most of the contemporary glosses are in one hand, different from that of the text, using a fairly systematic reference system for the marginal glosses, but there are occasional glosses in other hands of the same period. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

The glosses are mostly shared with other manuscripts but seem to be a conflation of several different glossing traditions, presumably all copied from the same exemplar given the systematic organisation, with often several overlapping glosses on the same point. The commonest are the glosses drawn from the West Frankish Af tradition, which occur in great numbers throughout the work; also frequent are glosses from the West Frankish Vc tradition. There are also many glosses from the East Frankish tradition represented by Ec Ka Na and others, and the same source may have contributed the many headnotes which are also found in Ka and Lh. Sometimes the longer glosses on a lemma in Pp will reflect all three traditions; likewise, the single word or phrase written as interlinear glosses will conflate several traditions as a series of synonyms.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Pp.

Provenance:

Courcelle links Pp with entry no. 185 in a late 11th-century catalogue, ‘Boetius cum Persio Ainardi vol. I’ on the basis of the scribal identification ‘Ainardus’ on 12v and ‘Ainardus me fecit’ on 26r of Pp.³⁸² This 11th-century catalogue is written at the end of an Orosius manuscript, which is thought to have been written at Toul.³⁸³ The next entry in the catalogue, no. 186, records ‘item Persius cum Boetio vol. I’, thus distinguishing itself from the previous entry in its order of texts. If a text preceded the DCP in its original construction, as the quiring of Pp suggests, and the catalogue is precise in its description of the order of its texts, one cannot rule out the possibility that Pp is the codex described at entry no. 186. A late medieval note on 89r of Pp confirms that the Liber Persii was ‘furatus et perditus’ and that the original ³⁸² Courcelle (1939, p. 122) suggests that ‘le copiste est Ainard’; perhaps it is noteworthy that Ainardus is only one of several scribes/annotators of Pp and the name Ainardus is not uncommon in this period. See also Courcelle 1967, p. 241, n. 3.

³⁸³ The catalogue is preserved in Munich, BSB, Clm 10292, ff. 143v-146r. Becker (1885) edits the catalogue, which he dates to ‘ante 1084’ (no. 68, pp. 149-154, entries at p. 152); the relevant entries for Becker’s numbers 185 and 186 in the manuscript are at f. 145r. For a slightly more recent edition, see Fawtier 1911, pp. 123-56, entries at p. 143.

Description of Manuscripts

foliation of the DCP was ‘primus 21 ... quintus 82’;³⁸⁴ this information is also recorded by Claude de Grandrue, librarian of the Abbey of Saint-Victor in Paris (1460-1520), in his 1514 catalogue of manuscripts owned by the Abbey under the entry for ‘KKK 17’, the former Victorine shelfmark added at the top of the originally blank 1r. When Grandrue first drafted his inventory, the incipit of the second folio of this volume read ‘satire propius est’, rather than ‘comperta michi’, as it does presently; the first 20 folios were subsequently lost, as reflected in Grandrue’s later entry for Pp.³⁸⁵ Pp may have arrived in Paris via the Abbey of Saint-Victor in Marseilles.³⁸⁶ A 15th-century ex libris of the Abbey of St Victor in Paris was added to the foot of 88v and a 15th-century annotation in the right margin of 27r has been linked with the humanist and bibliophile Jean Lebègue.³⁸⁷ Several shelfmarks from the 12th onwards were added to 1r (KKK.17, 710, 1024, S. Victor 751) and 2r (D.d.27).

³⁸⁴ The old foliation was faulty in parts of Pp; where the early foliation can be read, it corresponds with the entry in the note.

³⁸⁷ Ouy 2006, p. 170; Ouy refers here to the old foliation 45r (modern 27r). Ouy notes only that Lebègue annotated the manuscript, rather than that it belonged to him.

Description of Manuscripts

Pq (= P8)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 16093

69 folios, 282 x 212 mm. 25 lines.

Origin: France, s. xi.³⁸⁸

Description:

Pq contains a glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts. The DCP is on 1r-68r, line 17; the remainder of the page was left blank. To 68v a contemporary scribe added Prologus 2 (lines 1-14) and an excerpt from the Lupus treatise on the metres (68v, 15-69r, 7: Peiper, lines 1-36); a 15th-century ownership note was added immediately beneath and the remainder of 69r was left blank. A 13th-century scribe added glossae collectae to 3m9 in two columns on 69v1a - 69v2b.³⁸⁹

All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles; the text of the DCP ends with no explicit. Glossae in titulum to Book 1 were entered on 1r by the text scribe or a contemporary. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the metres are mostly written in a single column and the remainder are written in double columns. All five books open with ornate initials interlaced with foliation or figures of birds and beasts; much colour is used here and elsewhere.

Pq is sporadically ruled for glosses. The lines of text are adequately spaced to take glosses and both the right and left margins have been ruled for glosses, but not consistently. The upper and lower margins are largely unused by the glossators.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pq is heavily glossed with interlinear and marginal glosses in Latin and a couple of Greek words. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical form of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are written in close proximity to the lemma with no linking symbols, but several glosses repeat the lemma they annotate.

The glosses were entered by the text scribe and several contemporaries and are fairly evenly distributed throughout, tailing off in Book 5. There is a sprinkling of unique glosses throughout, but otherwise Pq draws consistently on the West Frankish tradition represented by Af and Vc. Up to 2p4 it aligns closely with Af itself, but from there on it aligns fairly consistently instead with Vc, and follows the latter where Af and Vc have different glosses or different versions of a gloss.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Pq.

³⁸⁹ Courcelle (1939, p. 132; 1967, p. 411) identified these glossae as a 13th century copy of what he classifies as the 12th-century 'Anonyme de l'Erfurtensis Q. 5' (Courcelle mistakenly refers to 69r here).

Description of Manuscripts

Provenance:

The early history of Pq is unknown. Ownership notes on 1r and 69r place Pq at the Carthusian monastery of Seillon (1168-1792) near Bourg-en-Bresse in the 15th century.³⁹⁰ In the first half of the 17th century it was in the library of the Cardinal de Richelieu, attested by the note ‘Boetius de Consolatione 62’ on a small piece of parchment now bound between folios 1 and 2 and the binding, which carries the Richelieu coat of arms. It was subsequently transferred to the Sorbonne whence in 1796 it was acquired by the Bibliothèque nationale de France.³⁹¹

³⁹⁰ On f. 1r: ‘Iste liber est domus Scillionis Cartusiensis ordinis prope Burgus’ and on f. 69r: ‘Iste liber est domus Scillionis Scillionis (sic) ordinis’.

Description of Manuscripts

Pr (= P17)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 16678, ff. 9-39

213 folios, 232 x 175 mm. 34 lines (Part 2).

Origin: France, s. xi, early.³⁹²

Description:

This codex is made up of three originally independent parts: Part 1 contains a 10th-11th century copy of the introduction to Macrobius's commentary on Cicero's Somnium Scipionis (1r-8v) written at Fleury;³⁹³ Part 2, with which we are concerned, contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP (9r-39v) written in the early 11th century in France; Part 3 contains a 13th-century copy of Ugutio of Pisa's Derivationes (40r-213r) apparently written at Bolbec in northern France.

All but Book 1 of the DCP, whose opening is missing, are preceded by titles. In addition to lacking the beginning of Book 1, the text of the DCP is out of order as presently bound: the text begins at the top of 9r with 2p4.3 'sed quod tu' and continues to the end of Book 5 concluding at the foot of 32v with 5p6.48 'iudicis cuncta cernentis'; the first line of 33r begins with 1p1.2 '(ex)tulisset ipsum etiam' and continues to 2p4.2 'fuisse felicem', where the text ends at the foot of 39v.³⁹⁴

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; the majority of metres are written in multiple columns, with a few written in a single column and a handful written in rustic capitals. Pq has some rubrication and decorative initials. An ink diagram of concentric circles with inscriptions was added to the right margin of 26r next to the text of 4p6; beneath it is a dry-point diagram of concentric circles; both have lost the outer edges due to trimming.³⁹⁵

Pr is not ruled for glosses and the margins and the spacing of the text were not designed to take glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Pr is very lightly glossed with just 25 glosses in Latin entered by contemporary scribes. The glosses, which are primarily interlinear single-word glosses, are all in Book 1, apart from a translation of the Greek in Book 4; a single longer marginal gloss was added to 35r (1p4) and linked to the lemma it is glossing with the Greek letter theta; trimming of the outer margin has ³⁹² Troncarelli (2005, no. 42): s. xi (in); Delisle (Inventaire ... Sorbonne, 2, p. 158), Weinberger (1934), Love (2012, p. 93): s. xi; Mostert (1989, p. 236, BF 1224): s. x.

³⁹³ Part 1 has been identified as the quire missing from the beginning of Paris, BN, lat. 6620 (Mostert 1989, p. 213, BF 1087 and p. 236, BF 1223); Barker-Benfield (1976, p. 156) tentatively attributes this manuscript to Fleury on the basis of the textual affiliation to other Fleury manuscripts of Macrobius, but observes that 'other firm evidence of ownership is lacking'.

³⁹⁴ See table of 'missing text' for details.

³⁹⁵ The diagram in Pr was apparently not known to Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77.

Description of Manuscripts led to the partial loss of this gloss. The annotations also include speech indicators. The short glosses, of which some are unique to Pr, are unhelpful, but the long gloss suggests that Pr belongs to the West Frankish tradition of glossing.

Provenance:

The early history of Pr is not known. It is unclear when the three parts of this codex were bound together; the bad discolouration of the last leaf of the text of the DCP (32v) in its original form, and the loss of its first leaf, which would have contained 1m1 and the beginning of 1p2, suggests that the DCP was probably in circulation in an unprotected state for some time before the three parts were united.

The shelfmark '185' on 1r and the binding, which carries the Richelieu coat of arms, places the codex in the library of the Cardinal de Richelieu in the first half of the 17th century. It was subsequently transferred to the Sorbonne (former shelfmark '1573' on 1r) whence it was acquired by the Bibliothèque Imperiale, then the Bibliothèque nationale de France.

Description of Manuscripts

Ps (= P9)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, lat. 17814

123 folios, 290 x 200 mm. 20 lines.

Origin: England (Christ Church, Canterbury?), s. x, late.³⁹⁶

Description:

Ps contains an imperfect 10th-century glossed copy of the DCP and ancillary texts. An elaborate title page was added on a singleton (1r) in the 18th century, along with the ex libris ‘Codex MS Biblioth. Buherianae C. 45 MDCCXXI’; 1v remains blank. A colourful drawing of a rota ventorum was added to 2r and 2v remains blank. The preliminary texts that often circulated with the text of the DCP are recorded in the first quire and begin with Prologi 5 (3r,1 - 3v,13) and 3 (3v,14 - 4r,15); these are immediately followed by the Lupus treatise on the metres (4r,16 - 8v,14).

The DCP on 9v-122v begins on a fresh quire, whose first leaf (9r) remains blank. All five books are preceded by titles. Ps opens with the title to Book 1 on 9v, which is written in an array of colours and is enframed. Glossae in titulum, written en bloc, were entered in the left margin; further glosses were entered between the lines of the title and in the right margin. The text of the DCP begins and ends imperfectly: the upper half of folio ‘9 bis’, which is integral to the second quire of Ps, has been cut, resulting in the loss of the first half line of 1m1 ‘Carmina qui quondam’ and, in keeping with the rest of the books, presumably an ornate opening initial C to Book 1; 1m1.12-20 on the verso of this leaf is also missing. The text of the DCP ends at the foot of 122v at 5p6. 34 ‘unum prius quoque’; the remainder of the text and an explicit was supplied in the 18th century on 123r-v.³⁹⁷ Folio 104, which is a partial leaf, was inserted between folios 103 and 105 to take the glosses added to 4m7 by an early glossator; a late glossator added further comment on 104r, beneath these early glosses.

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column as are the majority of the metres. Neumes were added to 3m12. There is much rubrication in Ps and the opening initials of Books 2 to 5 are highly elaborately executed. Several diagrams were added to the body of the DCP: a diagram of concentric circles with inscriptions, now greatly rubbed and faded, relating to the earth was added to the foot of 42r, below the text to 2p7; an elaborate circular diagram of the elements was added to the right margin of 63r, in close proximity to 3m9; an ink diagram of concentric circles intersected by lines and containing inscriptions was added to the right margin of 96r next to the text of 4p6.³⁹⁸

³⁹⁶ Many dates have been suggested for Ps around the end of the 10th or the beginning of the 11th century; Bolton (1977, p. 54), Ebersperger (1999, no. 27), Gneuss and Lapidge (2014, no. 901): s. x^{ex}; Troncarelli (2005, no. 44), Wittig (2007, p. 192): s. x^{ex}/xiⁱⁿ; Delisle (Inventaire ... Notre-Dame, p. 530), Weinberger (1934), Courcelle (1939, p. 122; 1967, p. 405): s. xi. Bishop (1971, p. xxvi): probably Christ Church, Canterbury; Bolton (1977, p. 54): probably Christ Church but possibly St Augustine’s, Canterbury.

³⁹⁷ See table of ‘missing text’ for details.

³⁹⁸ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Ps at 163-166; however, note that the illustrations he provides for Ps (Papahagi’s P2) and Ge (Papahagi’s G) have been reversed.

Description of Manuscripts

Ps is sporadically ruled for glosses. The lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses and the outer margins are very wide, but not consistently ruled for glosses. Some glosses were partially lost due to trimming, or were written over by later glossators.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, Old English

Ps is very heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin and several Greek words, some embedded in Latin glosses. The glosses were entered by the text scribe and several contemporary scribes; further glosses were added in the 11th century and many glosses were duplicated by different scribes.³⁹⁹ There are eighteen OE glosses (on 21v, 32v, 36r, 37v, 50v, 51r, 51v, 58v, 65v, 107v, 114r, 120r, 122r), which were entered mainly by two or perhaps three different scribes. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators.⁴⁰⁰ The majority of the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are generally written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate; occasionally the glosses that are marked with reference markers in the margins have no corresponding signs against the relevant lemma; some glosses include the lemmas. A few linking symbols and initial letters of glosses were written in red. In some cases the glosses were entered on the folio either before or after the text to which it was relevant.

The glosses are fairly evenly distributed throughout and tail off in Book 5. Mostly Ps shares glosses with the other Anglo-Saxon manuscripts and draws on the same mix of glossing traditions, but it also includes in Book 1 some glosses that are common in Continental manuscripts but not otherwise found in Anglo-Saxon ones. There are no consistent links with any particular manuscript(s) of the English group. Alterations and variant readings to some glosses indicate that the glossators of Ps, and of its predecessor, had access to a range of other copies which drew on different branches of the glossing tradition, and endeavoured to reconcile the different versions.

Ps was also very heavily glossed by late-medieval glossators, many of whom showed no compunction about erasing or writing over earlier glosses.

Provenance:

It remains unclear precisely when Ps arrived on the Continent.⁴⁰¹ Its provenance is unknown until the 18th century: the ex libris dated 1721 on 1r places Ps in the library of the Président of the Parliament of Burgundy, scholar and bibliophile, Jean IV Bouhier of Dijon (1673-1746). Ps was acquired by a member of the Bouhier family and first appeared in a manuscript

³⁹⁹ Bolton (1977, p. 54) identifies at least three glossing hands and links one with London, BL, Harley 5431, which was produced around the year 1000 at St Augustine's, Canterbury and another with a Christ Church, Canterbury scribe.

⁴⁰⁰ At least two speech indicators incorporated into the body of the text in Ps were also prominently embedded in the body of the text of two other English manuscripts, Oa and Pb, at the same points (1p1.13 and 1p2.5).

⁴⁰¹ Dumville (1993b, p. 99) includes it in a 'List of High-status Manuscripts Exported from England after 1066'.

Description of Manuscripts

catalogue of the Bouhier collection drawn up in the 17th century. Three catalogues of the Bouhier collection are known to have been drawn up in the 17th and 18th centuries; that made in 1721 and supplemented as new items were acquired, contains a list of manuscripts that have preserved the Bouhier ex libris on the preliminary page, as on 1r of Ps. Concordance tables of the Bouhier shelfmarks from the 1721 catalogue, which is the most complete of the three, reveals that Ps was in the Bouhier collection from the 17th century.⁴⁰² However, the catalogues provide no date of acquisition for Ps. Upon his death in 1746, Bouhier's extensive library passed to his son, whence it was acquired by the Cistercian Abbey of Clairvaux in 1781. The manuscripts of Clairvaux were confiscated during the French Revolution and subsequently dispersed; in 1804 many of these manuscripts were acquired by the Bibliothèque nationale de France and preserved until 1867 in the Bouhier collection.⁴⁰³ ⁴⁰² Albert Ronsin prints an appendix by André Vernet and Raymond Étaix, which provides two concordance tables of the Bouhier shelfmarks from the 1721 catalogue with their present locations and shelfmarks and a further list of the origin and provenance of these manuscripts, where known. The first of these tables also provides the concordances with catalogues I and II; both these were drawn up in the time of Jean Bouhier III (1607-1671). See Ronsin 1971, pp. 219-244; Ps is listed at pp. 225 and 235. Unfortunately Vernet (pp. 238-244) provides no further information regarding the origin or provenance of Ps.

Description of Manuscripts

Pt (= P10)

Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, nouv. acq. lat. 1478

91 folios, 275 x 180 mm. 30-32 lines (Part 1).

Origin: France (Cluny), s. x, late.⁴⁰⁴

Description:

This codex is made up of two parts: Part 1 (1-55) contains a glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts; Part 2 (56-91) contains a table of contents of Boethius's works on logic (56r), followed by copies of Boethius's De differentiis topicis (56r-80v) and his De divisione (80v-90r), all copied in the 11th century; an 11th-century pen trial 'Hugo puer proba' and later additions, including an ownership note, further pen trials and a neumed hymn were added to 90v-91v. The amalgamation of the two parts had probably occurred by the 12th century.⁴⁰⁵

Pt opens on the originally blank 1r with several ancillary texts entered in a glossing script by a late-10th-century scribe, who also entered many glosses to the DCP: the title to the DCP (lines 1-2), followed by Distinctio 3 (lines 2-3), glossae in titulum (lines 3-12) and Prologus 6 (lines 12-19); immediately following this prologus (lines 19-25) are some lines of verse referring back to the story of Boethius; beneath this verse, which is unique to Pt, is a dedication written in rustic capitals.⁴⁰⁶ Prologus 1 begins on 1v, line 9, ending on 2r, line 3; further glossae in titulum were entered in the upper margin of 1v, lines 1-5. The text of the DCP begins on 2r, line 14 and ends with an explicit at the foot of 55v. The first few lines of the Lupus treatise on the metres was entered in the upper margin of 2r (Peiper, lines 1-13), also in a glossing script, and preceding the glosses to the DCP.

All but Book 1 are preceded by titles; though space was left to enter a title to Book 1 on 2r, only the brief rubric 'Liber Boecii de consolatione' was added here in the 14th century. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and the majority of the metres are written in double columns. Neumes were added to some metres.⁴⁰⁷ For the most part the boundaries between books, proses and metres are not clearly demarcated. Pt has a few

⁴⁰⁷ 1m5; 2m5, 7; 3m2, 3m6. In the case of 2m5 on 17v, the first line of metre was repeated in the margin and the neumes written above it; further neumes were haphazardly added in the margin next to the metre.

ornamental initials and some rubrication. An ink diagram of concentric circles with intersecting lines and no inscriptions was added in the margin of 43v, next to the text of 4p6.⁴⁰⁸

Pt is not ruled for glosses. The margins are fairly wide to accommodate glosses, but the space between the lines of text is somewhat cramped. Parts of some marginal glosses have been lost to trimming.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Pt is heavily glossed with interlinear and marginal glosses in Latin and several Greek words, some embedded in Latin glosses. Much of the glossing is contemporary with the text, though others were entered by different scribes in the 11th century. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate. Often the glosses include the lemmas, sometimes in abbreviated form.

The glosses are fairly evenly distributed throughout the text, though the glossing becomes very thin in Book 5. Pt forms a clearly marked group with Fd Ld and frequently Lc and Vf. Their shared glosses generally draw on a well-established Continental tradition best witnessed by Af, but they often share variant readings to these glosses and also have a sprinkling of additional glosses not found in other manuscripts. In Book 4 they also have numerous glosses that are otherwise only found in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Although Pt is said to have been at Cluny, Fd Ld and Vf all originated in Germany. Pt's text was possibly derived, directly or indirectly, from an Alemannic source since it has embedded in it in 3p5 a gloss that is mainly found in manuscripts such as Ec Gc Px, but the added glosses show no such affiliation and were presumably copied from a different manuscript of German derivation.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Pt.

Provenance:

Pt is thought to have been written at the Abbey of Cluny, based on the identification of the two scribes who copied the DCP and its ancillary texts: one of the scribes writes in a style similar to that used by two notaries known to have been active at Cluny in the late 10th century and the other, Durannus, was himself known to be active in the scriptorium of Cluny at the end of the 10th century.⁴⁰⁹ An entry in a 12th-century catalogue of manuscripts at the Abbey library at Cluny has been identified as Pt; the catalogue lists several copies of Boethius's DCP and the entry for no. 465 records 'Volumen in quo continetur de consolatione philosophie, librique eiusdem Boetii de topicis differentiis'.⁴¹⁰ The late ownership note on 90v and the modern ink

Px (= Po)

Pommersfelden, Graf von Schönbornsche Schlossbibliothek 39⁴¹¹

112 folios, 190 x 158 mm. 16-17 lines.

Origin: Germany (from the Salzburg area, Seeon?), s. xi, 2nd or 3rd quarter.⁴¹²

Description:

Px contains an imperfect copy of the DCP on 1v-112v. The first quire of Px originally comprised 4 bifolia, but it is presently made up of 5 leaves, now lacking the original leaves 1, 4 and 5 and the modern foliation begins on the extant third leaf with ‘2’;⁴¹³ despite the structure of the first quire, there is no loss of text of the DCP here. The text of the DCP is preceded on 1r by an ink drawing of Boethius, philosophy and the muses.⁴¹⁴ Part of the final line of Prologus 1 was added to the top line of 1r and a version of the opening line of 1p1.8 was added inside the drawing; both lines of text were added by two different scribes after the drawing was executed.⁴¹⁵ Given that several early manuscripts of the DCP are preceded by preliminaries or illustrations, it is safe to assume that Prologus 1 was written on the verso of the now lost first folio. Several leaves of the DCP, perhaps as many as 2 quires of 4 bifolia each, are missing between folios 13 and 14, resulting in the loss of much of the end of Book 1 and some of the beginning of Book 2.⁴¹⁶ The second half of 51r, on which 3p9 ends, and all of 51v were originally left blank; a dry-point diagram of connecting circles representing the elements was added to 51v; a 12th-century scribe added glossae collectae to 3m9 in a single ⁴¹¹ We are most grateful to the Graf von Schönbornsche Schlossbibliothek for putting this manuscript at our disposal at the Bamberg, Staatsbibliothek and for providing us with a digital copy of the manuscript.

⁴¹⁵ The line of text from the end of Prologus 1: ‘(...)lio in metro inferior floruit’ surrounds the upper part of the drawing; and that from 1p8, ‘Quis permisit has scenicas meritriculas accedere ad hunc egrum’ was written above and between the figures of philosophy and the muses. A third line of text, perhaps added by a different scribe again, was written in the upper margin, but this was erased.

⁴¹⁶ See table of ‘missing text’ for details.

Description of Manuscripts

column on the second half of 51r and in a double column on 51v over the dry-point diagram.⁴¹⁷ Only 7 leaves of the final quire, which was originally made up of 5 bifolia, are extant; the text of the DCP ends imperfectly at the foot of 112v in 5p6.42, with the words ‘si scientia dei’.

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and, apart from a handful written in double columns, the metres are written in single columns. Incipits and explicits were entered by the text scribe or a contemporary for Books 3 to 5; though space was left for a title to Book 1, this was only added in the 12th century; and the opening text of Book 2 is missing. In addition to the ornamental initial opening Book 1, there is some rubrication throughout Px. An 11th-century scribe added a schematic diagram of the lunar and solar eclipses, with inscriptions, in the left margin of 82v, next to 4m5; the diagram appears to be unique to Px. An ink diagram of a ladder with the Greek characters theta and pi, at the head and the foot of the ladder respectively, was added to the inner margin of 2v, next to the text of 1p1.⁴¹⁸

Px is not ruled for glosses, though the margins are wide as is the space between the lines; occasionally parts of glosses have been lost to trimming.

Glosses: Latin, OHG

Px is fairly heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses entered by contemporary scribes, including the scribe of the text. There are also 6 OHG glosses, 4 interlinear and 2 marginal, also entered by contemporary scribes, including the scribe of the text.⁴¹⁹ Other additions include rhetorical terms, speech indicators, headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres - the latter headnotes were occasionally written in rustic capitals and usually entered above or next to the metres, with at least one written as if part of the preceding prose. The majority of the marginal glosses are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols and occasionally glosses are linked to the lemma with arbitrary signs.

The glosses in Px are especially frequent in Book 3. Most glosses are short; the longer ones consistently match the East Frankish tradition, apart from a few later entries in 4m3 from the West Frankish tradition of Af. Px appears to draw on more than one source of the East Frankish tradition, but the closest match is Vh. Of the 6 OHG glosses one also appears in Ga, Na and Vh, but the rest are unique to Px.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Px.

Provenance:

Px belongs to the private library of the Graf von Schönborn, and is presently housed in Schloss Weissenstein in Pommersfelden, near Bamberg. Little is known of the origin or provenance of ⁴¹⁷ The diagram is similar to that in Vh (81v) and a 12th-century manuscript of the DCP, Bern, Burgerbibliothek, Cod. 421, ff. 5v-6r (see reproduction in Troncarelli, 2005, p. 348, plate VIII), but that in Px contains no inscriptions.

⁴¹⁸ The colour of ink, similar to glosses entered by later medieval scribes, suggests this may have been inserted after the 11th century.

this manuscript until it came into the possession of the Schönborn family in the beginning of the 18th century. It was apparently purchased by or presented to the avid collector of paintings and manuscripts Lothar Franz von Schönborn, who was the Archbishop-Elector of Mainz from 1694 to 1729 and Bishop of Bamberg from 1693 to 1729. In 1827 it was listed in the Gaibach Catalogue, which was initiated by Lothar's nephew and successor Friedrich Carl Graf von Schönborn in 1732 to record the collection housed in Gaibach Palace, the former home of Lothar. The Gaibach Library was absorbed into the collections ultimately housed in the Pommersfelden Schlossbibliothek in the early 19th century. The former shelfmark 'Gaibach V197', along with subsequent shelfmarks '2463' and '2786', are recorded on the recto of the first paper end leaf beneath 'LXII' and the present shelfmark '39'; '2786' is repeated on the recto of the second paper end leaf; and 'LXII / 39 / 2786' are noted on a paper label at the foot of the spine.

Description of Manuscripts

Sg (= Sg)

Seligenstadt, Prälatur (Landschaftsmuseum) fragment⁴²⁰

Fragmentary bifolium, 205 x 195 mm. Presently 21-22 lines (originally probably 25 lines).

Origin: Possibly northeastern France, s. ix, third quarter.⁴²¹

Description:

This fragment, which once covered a 17th-century account book written in the Benedictine Abbey of Saints Marcellinus and Petrus in Seligenstadt, contains part of Book 3 of the DCP. Sg is in fairly good condition, given that it was used as a book cover. What was used as the outside cover is soiled and discoloured, making some of the text and glosses difficult or impossible to read; the inner side of the cover is relatively clean and the surviving text is legible. Several lines of text and some glosses at the top of the bifolium and parts of glosses in the margins have been lost due to trimming.

The extant text of the DCP runs as follows:⁴²² Folio 1r begins at 3p6.8 ‘facit illi sint’ and ends at 3p7.2 ‘referre corporibus’; f. 1v continues from 3p7.4 ‘(pe)cudes quoque beatae’ and ends at 3p8.2 ‘Quid enim? pecuniamne’. Probably two bifolia are missing at this point. Folio 2r begins at 3p10.5 ‘ab integris absolutisque’, ending at 3p10.10 ‘Accipio inquam’ and f. 2v continues from 3p10.11 ‘plenissimum. Quonam, inquam’, ending at 3p10.17 ‘Ita est, inquam’. The metres and proses are written in a single column. Sg has some rubrication.

Sg was not ruled to take glosses. The outer margins are relatively wide, as is the space between the lines of text.

⁴²⁰ As far as we can tell the first person to identify this manuscript fragment was Bischoff, who intended an entry for it in volume 3 of his Katalog; we are immensely grateful to Dr Birgit Ebersperger for drawing our attention to this fragment (personal communication 20 March 2012) and who shared with us Bischoff’s notes and reproductions of it. She was also instrumental in locating the fragment, which was on permanent exhibit in the Landschaftsmuseum, and for arranging for us to meet Herrn Achim Zöller, Director of the Seligenstadt Landschaftsmuseum, who in turn kindly permitted us to spend a happy afternoon (30 May 2012) transcribing and examining the fragment. Allen (2014), who stumbled upon the fragment in an exhibition showcase in March 2013, subsequently published an article on it, in which he prints the text and glosses.

⁴²² The bifolium is not foliated, but for ease of reference we have assigned the following foliation in the order of the text: 1r (outside of the cover); 1v (its verso, inside of the cover); 2r (inside of the cover); and 2v (its verso, outside of the cover).

Description of Manuscripts

Glosses: Latin, OHG

Sg is fairly heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses entered by a variety of scribes, mainly contemporary with the text and a few others from the 10th century. Three OHG glosses, all interlinear, were entered on folio 1v by different 9th-century scribes, one of whom also wrote at least one of the Latin glosses.⁴²³ Other additions include a headnote to 3p7 and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, two of which are given much prominence. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma which they annotate by arbitrary signs, others are simply written in close proximity to the lemma in the text.

The number of surviving glosses suggest that the complete copy of Sg may have contained some 4000 glosses. These glosses agree with the East Frankish tradition and there are striking agreements with Ed and with a headnote in Ga, which is not derived from Na; however, no consistent relationship emerges. The 3 OHG glosses are unique to Sg. Though Saint-Amand-les-Eaux, where Sg is thought to have been copied, is a long way from the East Frankish area, there were perhaps links between the two regions surviving from the time of Arn, who was archbishop of Salzburg at the same time as he was abbot of Saint-Amand.

Provenance:

The early history of Sg is unclear. Apart from Bischoff's note suggesting that Sg is possibly Lotharingian, not too far from Saint-Amand-les-Eaux in northern France, all we can safely say is that it subsequently made its way to the Benedictine Abbey of Saints Marcellinus and Petrus in Seligenstadt, where it was used to cover an account book written in the 17th century.

⁴²³ Andreas Nievergelt reported our finding these glosses in June 2012, p. 377. B&S no.1075: 'Althochdeutsch'; place of origin is unknown.

Allen (2014, p. 370) reports another possible interlinear OHG gloss over 3m6.7 'proauos' ending in '-on'; since the gloss is barely legible, it is difficult to say if these letters were the final letters of a word, or indeed if they are part of an OHG word or not.

St (= St1)

Stockholm, Kungliga Biblioteket, Va5

57 folios, 248 x 190 mm.⁴²⁴ 30 lines.

Origin: western or central France (Tours?), s. xi, second half.⁴²⁵

Description:

St contains an imperfect copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts. The manuscript presently opens with a folio that is not integral with the first quire and whose recto contains a brief title written in a late, somewhat elaborate, script; its verso is blank but for some pen trials and scribbles, perhaps of the 16th century. The text of the DCP is on 1r-56r. Titles, incipits or explicits were entered for Books 1, 2, 3 and 5;⁴²⁶ the opening to Book 4 was on a leaf that is now lost. Several leaves are missing from the DCP, between folios 33 and 34, 37 and 38, 42 and 43, resulting in the loss of parts of Book 4;⁴²⁷ part of folio 32, containing the text of 3p12, was cut diagonally across the leaf at the edge of the text with no loss of text and, though there is no remaining evidence for the loss of early glosses, parts of the late glosses have been lost; folio 53, containing the text of 5m5 and 5p6.1-11 was more severely cut, and much of the text is lost here, but it is unclear whether any glosses have been lost. Prologus 5, entered by the text scribe, begins in the upper margin of 56r, continues down the right margin and ends on 56v, line 1. An abbreviated version of Prologus 6 follows immediately on 56v, 1-7, leaving the remaining portion of 56v and all of 57r blank.⁴²⁸ A contemporary scribe, whose script and use of abbreviations are characteristic of Breton script, entered the following texts on 57v: another copy of Prologus 5 (lines 1-13), a complete copy of Prologus 6 (lines 13-20) and the

⁴²⁵ CB 2 (Sweden, no. 2): s. xi 2/3; Pellegrin (1955, p. 11), Troncarelli (2005, no. 109), Love (2012, pp. 93-94): s. xi. Based on the script, Lehmann (1938, pp. 162-63) suggests an origin in southwest France in the early 11th century, taking the inscription on the first leaf to be an ownership note, which he links with Abbot Hugo (1009-1032) of Saint-André-le-Bas in Vienne; this is puzzling since Vienne is strictly in southeastern France. Pellegrin (1955, p. 11), posits an origin in Tours, based on the script: ‘Cependant la présence de a semi-onciaux à tête plate rappelle l’écriture de Tours’. There are also other features of the script, including the mingling of insular ‘g’ and caroline ‘g’ and a sprinkling of insular abbreviations, which are characteristic of Breton script; although it is conceivable that the scribe was copying from an exemplar showing these features, it is equally possible that the manuscript was written at Tours, or at a centre that came under its influence.

⁴²⁶ Only an explicit for Book 1 was entered between the end of Book 1 and the beginning of Book 2.

⁴²⁷ See table of ‘missing text’ for details.

⁴²⁸ This version of Prologus 5 shares significant variants with Ph and this abbreviated version of Prologus 6 otherwise only appears in Ph.

Description of Manuscripts

first few lines of Prologus 1 (lines 20-22). An excerpt from Jerome's Epistola LIII, ad Paulinum was entered by the same scribe on lines 23-32.

The proses and metres are written in single columns, with the exception of those metres with short lines, which are written in multiple columns. St has some rubrication. An ink diagram of concentric circles with inscriptions, was drawn in the lower half of 40v, beneath the text of 4p6.16, which ends at 40v, line 15; the text of 4p6.17 resumes on 41r, line 1.⁴²⁹

St is ruled for glosses. The outer margins are particularly wide, though the space between the lines of text is limited.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

St is fairly heavily glossed primarily with marginal glosses and some interlinear glosses in Latin and a few Greek words, some embedded in a Latin gloss. The majority of the glosses were entered by the scribe of the text, probably entering the glosses from his exemplar; a few contemporary scribes also entered glosses. Other additions include headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are often linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs and some are simply written in close proximity to the lemma in the text; where letters of the alphabet are used, the linking letter in the text is often omitted; in at least one case the linking letter is embedded in the line of text, rather than being written above the lemma. Though the glosses were mostly entered near the lemma they refer to, many appear on the following folio or sometimes even several folios later. A striking number of marginal glosses are written in geometric shapes; sometimes these glosses are continued from the bottom to the top of a column in order to accommodate a geometric shape, instead of writing them in their logical sequence from top to bottom again; this practice results in awkward word breaks and presumably led to the transmission of corrupt glosses. A few glosses are written as tree diagrams.

The glosses are fairly evenly distributed throughout the DCP. St draws mainly on the West Frankish tradition represented by Af, but the glosses are all heavily recast and often corrupt; there are several short glosses unique to St; those longer glosses that are unique often look like adaptations of the common Af type. Many glosses, particularly in Book 3, also include the Vc type. Some glosses are shared with Af type glosses in Bc and Pq, other glosses show links with Ph, Va and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. A few glosses that are otherwise found only in Ph were written primarily by the text scribe, with a couple entered by scribes contemporary with the text scribe; some Af/Vc glosses show Ph/St variants.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to St.

Provenance:

The early history of St is unknown. It is perhaps noteworthy that some glosses in St as well as versions of some of its ancillary texts otherwise occur only in Ph - another manuscript of French origin copied in the second half of the 11th-century, which may have been in the south west of France in the late 11th or 12th century. The shelfmark 'C. (or L.) 35' on 1r suggests that it was perhaps in the collection of the French classical scholar and antiquarian Paul Pétau (1568-1614), whose collection was acquired from various Continental centres. It is possible that this manuscript came to Queen Christina of Sweden from the collection of Pétau, which her librarian Isaac Vossius had bought for the queen in the 17th century.

Ta (= T)

Trier, Stadtbibliothek, 1093 / 1694

258 folios (foliated 1-246), 510 x 345 mm.⁴³⁰ 39 lines.

Origin: Echternach, s. x, last quarter.⁴³¹

Description:

This codex is made up of a miscellany of texts by Prudentius, Ausonius, Lupus, Boethius, Sedulius, Arator, Avianus, Cato and others.⁴³² The DCP on 118r-168r was copied in the late tenth century by a single scribe and it was bound up with a volume of Prudentius texts (1r-114v), whose final leaves (115r-117v) were originally blank; a miscellany of texts, including an Easter table (115r), texts ancillary to the DCP and the title to the DCP were entered on these pages by various scribes at different times in the late 10th and 11th centuries. That DCP and some of its ancillary texts were written by the scribe of some of the Prudentius texts and that the texts on 115v and the glossae in titulum on 117v appear to have been written by the main glossator of the DCP, suggests that the DCP and the Prudentius texts were probably designed to circulate together from the outset. It is unclear when the final part of this volume, containing the texts by Sedulius and others (169-246), was bound up with the rest of the codex.

Folio 115v opens with the rubric 'Incipit expositio in libro Boetii de Consolatione Philosophiae Remigii Autisiodorensis magistri' on lines 1-2, which is unique to this manuscript; Prologi 5 (115v, 2-10), 6 (115v, 10-15), 1 (115v, 15-20) and 4 (115v, 20-22) follow;⁴³³ the title to the DCP is written on lines 23-24 and is followed on lines 25-32 by glossae in titulum, written en bloc, ending imperfectly in the midst of a gloss. On 116r another scribe added an excerpt from Ausonius's epitaphs of heroes from the Trojan war, headed 'Epitaphium Diogeni(s)' (1-16), and part of a verse on an arithmetic problem (17-41). On ⁴³⁰ The entire codex is made up of 258 leaves; the modern foliation counted leaves 36, 37, 40, 43, 61, 172 twice, 64 three times and 42 five times, resulting in the foliation running from 1-246.

Nordenfalk (1933, pp. 76-81) links the work of a scribe in an Echternach manuscript (Paris, BN, lat. 8915) with one in Ta and includes Ta amongst a group of manuscripts which he describes as the 'Echternach classic group' - manuscripts containing primarily the works of classical Roman poets and characteristic of an illuminator known to have worked on codices of Echternach provenance.

⁴³² Many of these texts contain Latin and OHG glosses; for lists of contents, see Kentenich (1931), Troncarelli (2005, no. 68), Baldzuhn (2009, vol. 2, pp. 784-785), B&S no. 881.

⁴³³ These prologi are written in the same order as in Kc (glossae collectae) and Mj.

Description of Manuscripts

116v, a third scribe wrote Prologus 3 on lines 1-17 followed by an imperfect version of the Lupus treatise on the metres on 116v, 17-117r (Peiper, lines 1-71). Epitaphium 2 was added by yet another scribe on 117v, 1-12. The title to Book 1, along with interlinear and marginal glosses to it, takes up the remainder of 117v and 1m1 begins on 118r, which is the first leaf of a fresh quire. In the fourth quire of Ta (foliated 134 to 142), an extra leaf (foliated 140) was inserted between 139 and 141: 3p9 ends at the foot of 139v and 3m9 begins on 141r; folio 140r remains blank and glossae collectae to 3m9 were entered in double columns, in glossing script on 140v. The end of the DCP was written on two singletons, 167 and 168, which were inserted between the quire containing the text of the DCP and the next quire, which begins with Sedulius's Carmen Paschale on 169r. Only the upper portion of folio 168 remains and to 168v, which was originally blank, a late-11th-century scribe added a riddle, which begins with a verse from Eugenius of Toledo.

All but Book 4 of the DCP are preceded by titles, though space was left at the end of Book 3 for the title to be entered. The prose text is written in a single column as are the majority of the metres, with a handful of metres written in double columns. Neumes were added to some metres.⁴³⁴ In addition to the ornamental initials opening each book, there is much rubrication in Ta, including for headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, lemmas repeated in the glosses and speech indicators. Beneath the Lupus treatise at the foot of 117r there is an ink schematic diagram of Noah's ark with inscriptions, possibly instructions for an illustrator; the glossae collectae to 3m9 written in double columns on 140v surround a drawing of the elements in the centre of the page.

Ta is not ruled for glosses. The space between the lines of text is limited, but the margins are very wide. Several outer margins of folios were cut, primarily in Books 4 and 5, but also in Book 2; in many instances it is clear that these margins contained glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Ta is heavily glossed with interlinear and marginal Latin glosses and a few Greek words entered in the 10th and 11th centuries. There are 17 OHG glosses, the majority of which are interlinear;⁴³⁵ one of these OHG glosses, on 119r, was entered twice - once above the lemma and once in the margin, seemingly by the same scribe. The OHG glosses were entered primarily by the main glossator and a few others in the 11th century at Echternach. The Latin glossing is mainly in one hand; on several leaves of Ta the glosses are written deep into the inner margins and in some cases the glosses are written across the central fold of the folios, suggesting that many glosses were entered at the time the text was copied, or shortly thereafter, and before it was folded and bound up with the Prudentius texts. Further glosses were added sporadically by scribes in the 11th century, in some cases duplicating existing glosses. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The majority of the marginal glosses are written in close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols; others are linked to the lemma with arbitrary signs. Often the lemma is repeated and highlighted in the gloss, either in rustic capitals or in red or both. Some marginal glosses were written in geometric shapes.

The glosses are fairly evenly distributed, though diminishing somewhat in intensity after Book 2. Despite the glossing being mainly in one hand, various distinct glossing traditions are evident, perhaps already combined in an antecedent copy. The main debt is to the West Frankish tradition represented by Af Kc and Pp. Other glosses seem to derive from a tradition best represented by Vc. A close link with Lh is indicated by frequent glosses found only in those two manuscripts and by shared variants to glosses from the Af tradition. There are also glosses from the East Frankish tradition represented by manuscripts such as Ec Gc Ka and sometimes Ga Na Px and Vh and others. The 16 OHG glosses are consistently shared with Lh and sometimes occur in other manuscripts such as Ec. And there is also a sprinkling of glosses unique to Ta. The bulk of the glosses thus derive from predominantly West Frankish traditions, represented by Af and Vc, but with an overlay of material from predominantly East Frankish sources.

Provenance:

Ta was written at the Benedictine Abbey of Echternach at the end of the 10th century, after its reformation in 973. The table of contents in the upper margin of 1r, which was written by a 15th or 16th century scribe, and its accompanying shelfmark fits into the system of cataloguing that was developed at the Echternach Library in the 1620s and 1630s, confirming that Ta remained at Echternach through the later medieval period. The monastic catalogue of the 18th century contains an entry for a manuscript which is identical with the contents of Ta. The codex evidently remained in the possession of Echternach until the late 18th century, when the monastery was secularised.⁴³⁶ It then passed into the possession of the Trier collector Johann Peter Jakob Hermes (1765-1833), who donated it to the Stadtbibliothek Trier in 1827.⁴³⁷

Description of Manuscripts

Tb (= T1)

Trier, Stadtbibliothek, Fragment Box 03a, Fragment 7

1 folio, 250 x 290 mm. 27 lines.

Origin: Germany?, s. x, early.⁴³⁸

Description:

Tb is a single folio in good condition containing part of Book 3 of the DCP: its recto begins at 3m2.27 and ends at 3p3.4 ‘bonisque pluribus’; its verso continues at 3p3.4 ‘caerent, nonne liquido’ and ends at 3p3.13 ‘unde enim’. This leaf was probably the last of a quire, since a quire signature ‘iiii’ appears beneath the text on the verso. The metre and prose are written in a single column. A decorative initial opens 3p3 and some initials are written in red.

Tb is partially ruled for glosses. The margins are very wide and the spacing between the lines is ample to take glosses. The ruling evident for the marginal glosses on the recto was probably done at the time of entering the glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Tb is very lightly glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses entered by a variety of contemporary scribes. A single marginal gloss is linked to the lemma it annotates by an arbitrary sign and the rest are written in close proximity to the lemma in the text.

The glosses in Tb are mainly on 3p3. They are apparently of mixed origins: the majority of the longer glosses draw on the West Frankish tradition, as witnessed by Vc and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, including some that occur only or mainly in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, but there are also several that draw on the East Frankish tradition represented by Ec and Ka. In some cases there is a particularly close link to Lh, which also has a mix of East Frankish and West Frankish glosses, but not all of Tb’s West Frankish glosses are in Lh, nor by any means all of Lh’s West Frankish glosses in Tb, so they seem to draw independently on a mix of sources.

Provenance: Unknown.

Tb was stored in the same box of fragments as the 9th-century fragment linked by Bischoff to the now lost fragment of Koblenz, Landeshauptarchiv Best. 701 Nr. 759 (Tc). The fold, the holes and the slight discolouration of the fragment where it had been folded suggest that it may have been used as a cover for something half its width.

⁴³⁸ Love (2012, p. 94): referring to this fragment as ‘Trier, Stadtbibliothek 5’, proposes ‘later 9th or early 10th century, West Germany?’.

Description of Manuscripts

Tc (= T2)

Trier, Stadtbibliothek Mappe I, Boethius-Fragment + Koblenz, Landeshauptarchiv Best. 701 Nr. 759.

A single bifolium (Trier fragment): 250 x 220 mm. 20 lines.

A single bifolium, now lost (Koblenz fragment): 256 x 225 mm. 20 lines.

Origin: West Germany, s. ix, third third.⁴³⁹

Description:

From a reconstruction of the contents of the Trier fragment and the now lost bifolium from Koblenz and an analysis of their script and layout, it is most likely that these two bifolia made up the innermost and outermost leaves, respectively, of a quire originally made up of four bifolia, of a 9th-century manuscript of the DCP.⁴⁴⁰ The folds and discolouration on both fragments and, on the Trier fragment, the residue of glue and paper (probably once displaying shelfmarks), as well as what look like stitch marks along the spine of a book, suggest that both these bifolia were used as book covers. The inscriptions ‘Tomus 3’ and ‘Tomus 3. Anni 93’ were added by a modern hand to the Trier fragment on what was used as the outside of the book cover; on the inner side of this cover a shelfmark was added in the 19th century: ‘538./D./I./b./6’.⁴⁴¹

Presently our only evidence of the Koblenz fragment is from two photographs preserved in the papers of Bischoff, on the back of which he wrote brief notes. This material and his preliminary notes for Volume 2 of his Katalog have been indispensable for our ⁴³⁹ At the time of publication, Bischoff (Katalog 1, no. 1865) queried the origin of the Koblenz fragment in West Germany, but more recent scholars accept a West German origin. Bischoff’s entry for the Trier fragment (Katalog 3, no. 6217) mistakenly records the shelfmark as ‘Mappe III.’ and provides no further information except for a reference to Bergmann, no. 883 (I). Love (2012, p. 87), referring to this fragment as ‘Trier, Stadtbibliothek 5’: s. ix, third quarter; B&S (no. 343 (II) and no. 883 (I)): s. ix/x; Klaes (2012, p. 5): s. ix or x, preferring the later date; SS (IV, p. 625, no. 570): s. xi.

⁴⁴⁰ Although no connection is made between the two entries in Bischoff’s catalogue (Katalog 1, no. 1865 and Katalog 3, no. 6217), his notes on photographs of the Koblenz and Trier fragments preserved in his papers point to these two fragments originating from the same manuscript. The notes on the reverse of the Koblenz reproduction identify the contents, give rough dates of the script and make a connection between it and the Trier fragment: ‘dazu Trier, Fragm im Fragm I’. Likewise on the reverse of the photographic reproduction of the leaf now numbered ‘3’ from the Trier fragment, also in his papers, Bischoff notes: ‘dazu Koblenz 701/759 IV’. His notes on the Trier fragment also include 2 of the 13 OHG glosses recorded on this bifolium (edited by Klaes, 2017). Little doubt has been cast on Bischoff’s identification of the two sets of fragments coming from the same manuscript (see Tax 2008, vol. 1, p. xxxiv and Klaes 2012). As ever, we are indebted to the kind assistance of Dr Birgit Ebersperger, whose help was invaluable in interpreting Bischoff’s notes.

⁴⁴¹ For a detailed discussion of the history of the Trier fragment and the significance of these markings, see Klaes (2012).

Description of Manuscripts reconstruction. Based on Bischoff's observations and on the extant fragments housed in Trier, the Koblenz and Trier fragments, along with two further bifolia very probably made up the first quaternion of a manuscript of the DCP:

The recto and verso of the first leaf (1)⁴⁴² of the Koblenz fragment was originally left blank. To the recto was added two verses from the end of an unidentified poem,⁴⁴³ immediately followed by another lightly glossed poem headed by the rubric 'De Roma', of uncertain authorship;⁴⁴⁴ to the verso were added glosses and various notes. Bischoff dated both the poems and the annotations on the verso to the end of the tenth or beginning of the eleventh century. The two bifolia which would have followed this Koblenz leaf are lacking; given the ruling and layout of the extant Trier fragment and the reproduction of the Koblenz fragment, one might surmise that these missing leaves (2, 3) contained preliminaries to the DCP, a title to Book 1 and the text of the DCP from 1m1 to 1p1.9 ending 'necant hominumque mentes'. The Trier bifolium (4, 5), which would have been the innermost bifolium of this quaternion, begins at 1p1.9 'assuefaciunt morbo' and ends at 1p3.1 'tristitiae nebulis'. The remainder of 1p3.1 beginning 'dissolutis hausit caelum' to 1p4.4 ending 'rationem ad caelestis ordinis' was presumably recorded on the two leaves (6, 7) that are now lacking. According to Bischoff's notes, the next leaf (8), which was conjoined with the first leaf of the Koblenz fragment began at 'exempla formares' in 1p4.4 and probably ended at 'facientem obuius excepi' in 1p4.10, since the verso of this leaf, which is preserved in the photographic reproduction, begins at 'quotiens triguilam regiae' in 1p4.10 and ends at 1p4.15 'qui mihi amore'.⁴⁴⁵

The extant proses and metres in the two fragments are all written in single columns. Tc has some rubrication, including for headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, headnotes to the prose sections and some of the Greek words. Occasionally a rhetorical term written in rustic capitals is embedded in the text: according to Bischoff's notes, the rhetorical term 'syllepsis' was embedded in the text before 'Tu mihi' at 1p4.8 on the recto of the Koblenz leaf. Bischoff's use of capital letters in his notes suggests that this annotation was probably written in rustic capitals, just as 'zeugma' is, which is embedded in the text of 1m2.12 of the Trier fragment.

⁴⁴² For sake of clarity we add in brackets what would have been the folio numbers of the leaves to which we refer. We ignore the modern page numbers (1-4) assigned to the Trier fragment, which are based on the present order of the Boethius text.

⁴⁴³ That this leaf begins with the final two lines of this poem, suggests that the quaternion beginning the text of the DCP was probably preceded by more leaves or quires, as is the case in many of the extant early copies of the DCP.

⁴⁴⁴ This poem, referred to variously as 'Versus Romae', 'Versus de Roma' etc. has been attributed variously to Bede and Johannes Scottus Eriugena and versions of it are recorded in numerous medieval manuscripts, including Paris, BN, lat. 3761, 62r, 1-16 and Munich, BSB, Clm 14137, fol. 112r, 20-35; it is also printed in PL 94, 656A; PL 122, 1194B; Traube (1896), pp. 555-556.

⁴⁴⁵ For a schematic reconstruction of this quaternion, see Klaes (2012, Abb. 9); our independent reconstruction differs only slightly from his.

Description of Manuscripts

Tc is not ruled to take glosses, but even after some trimming, the margins are very wide and the lines of text are amply spaced to accommodate glosses. The trimming of the leaves, the wearing and discolouration in places, has resulted in the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Both fragments of Tc are fairly heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin and a couple of Greek words, entered by several scribes from the 9th to the 11th centuries.⁴⁴⁶ There are 15 marginal and interlinear OHG glosses to the DCP.⁴⁴⁷ Two of these, which were added between the lines, are recorded on the Koblenz fragment and the rest, both interlinear and marginal, were entered on the Trier fragment. The OHG glosses were written by several scribes and were probably added in the 10th and 11th centuries.⁴⁴⁸ A further interlinear gloss, in Old Saxon, was entered on the poem ‘Versus Romae’ in the Koblenz fragment.⁴⁴⁹ The annotations on these fragments include rhetorical terms, a gloss to the Greek in the text, headnotes to the prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres. Some marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs and others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

The glosses in Tc reflect a fondness for explanations of grammar, etymology and rhetorical figures, often unique to Tc, but they also include numerous glosses shared with East Frankish manuscripts, and none with the West Frankish tradition. There is a striking agreement in error with Ec in the headnote to 1m3 but there are also several glosses that are in Ka and not in Ec.

Provenance:

The script and layout of the text in both the Trier and Koblenz fragments and that some of the annotators added glosses to both bifolia confirms that both came from the same manuscript, which may have originated in western Germany. Both bifolia were probably used as book covers. No clear record was kept of which book the Trier fragment was dislodged from, but Klaes suggests that it was from one of a group of three manuscripts that belonged to the former Jesuit College in Trier, whence it came to the Stadtbibliothek Trier. These manuscripts, ⁴⁴⁶ Bischoff (Katalog 1, no. 1865) took the view that the glosses to the Koblenz fragment were entered in the 10th and 11th centuries; B&S no. 343 (II) and 883 (I): first third of the 11th century.

⁴⁴⁷ B&S no. 343 (II) [Koblenz, Landeshauptarchiv Best. 701 Nr. 759]: ‘Althochdeutsch’ on DCP; place of origin is unknown. B&S no. 883 (I) [Trier, Stadtbibliothek Mappe I, Boethius-Fragment]: ‘Mittelfränkisch, possibly Altsächsisch’; place of origin unknown.

⁴⁴⁸ B&S no. 343 (II) and no. 883 (I): s. xi, first third; however, they also note that at least one of the hands that enters these glosses is identical to the text hand, which they date to the ‘9./10. century’.

Description of Manuscripts

To (= To)

Tours, Bibliothèque municipale, Ms. 803, ff. 1-57

103 folios, 287 x 223mm. 31-33 lines (Part 1).

Origin: ff. 1-25, northeast France, s. ix, first quarter; ff. 26-57, northeast France (near Soissons), s. ix, third quarter.⁴⁵¹

Description:

This codex is made up of 2 originally independent parts: Part 1 (1-57) contains an incomplete glossed copy of Boethius's De institutione arithmetica (1ra-25va),⁴⁵² the Lupus treatise on the metres (26ra to 27ra), and a glossed copy of the DCP (27ra-57vb); Part 2 (58-103) contains an incomplete copy of Dicuil's Computus or Liber de astronomia.⁴⁵³ Part 1, with which we are concerned, was written by several 9th-century scribes and though the Boethius texts were probably written in two different scriptoria, the Lupus treatise and the DCP begin in the same quire as the De arithmetica ends.

The Lupus treatise ends at 27ra, line 28 and the text of the DCP begins at the top of 27rb; the few lines left blank beneath the Lupus text were subsequently taken up by glosses to the DCP. The text of the DCP ends on 57v, line 10 and is followed by an explicit on 57vb, lines 11-16. All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. Glossae in titulum to Book 1 on 27r were entered by a contemporary scribe. The text of the DCP is written in double columns; within these columns the layout of the metres is variable, with most written in a single column, but where the verse lines are short, they are sometimes written in double columns. Dialogues between Boethius and Philosophy are often written consecutively in individual sentence units, rather than continuously across each column. The boundaries between proses and metres are ⁴⁵¹ Bischoff (Katalog 3, no. 6141) gives origins and dates for both the De institutione arithmetica and the DCP as: Nordöstliches Frankreich, ix. Jh., 1. Viertel und etwa Soissons, ix. Jh., 3. Viertel. Love (2012, p. 94): s. ix; Bieler (1984), Moerschini (2005): s. ix ex.; Weinberger (1934), Troncarelli (2005, no. 51): s. ix/x; Collon (Catalogue 1, pp. 604-605): s. x. Rand (1929, p. 73, n. 2 and p. 216), presumably following Collon, initially includes To as a product of the 10th century from the Abbey of St Martin's at Tour; however, at the end of his description of To (pp. 193-194, no. 191), he notes 'possibly this book, in both its parts, should be placed at the end of the ninth century rather than in the tenth'. Rand tentatively proposes that To was produced in Tours and probably always remained there, but this seems doubtful; his analysis of the script of To as a 'revived cursive' that is 'a return to the ancient standards of Tours' is, by his own admission, based on slight evidence and does not stand up to scrutiny. Nevertheless, modern scholars have simply accepted this proposition (Troncarelli 2005, no. 51; Papahagi 2010, p. 54; Love 2012, p. 94).

⁴⁵³ Bischoff (Katalog 3, no. 6142) proposes that Ms. 803 (ff. 58-103) and the last two sheets of this manuscript, now in Paris, BN, nouv. acq. lat. 1645 (Libri 88) were produced in France (but not in the south), in approximately the second quarter or middle of the 9th century.

Description of Manuscripts often indistinguishable. To has some rubrication.

To is not ruled for glosses. Though the space between the lines is not insignificant, the narrow width of the inner margins suggests it was not designed to take glosses; the outer margins were trimmed and in places the ink has faded, resulting in the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin

To is fairly heavily glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses entered by several scribes, primarily in the late 9th century, though some were added in the 10th and 11th centuries. At least one gloss is embedded in the text of To, suggesting that To itself was copied from a glossed manuscript. Other additions include a single headnote to a prose section, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. The majority of the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs and others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

The glossing is of moderate density overall, heavy in Book 1 but lighter after that, and especially light in Book 3. Most of the glosses occur in other manuscripts as well, and they are mainly short, though longer glosses occur more frequently in Book 5. Often To has a short version of a longer gloss found in many other manuscripts, probably reflecting a process of selection and abbreviation by the glossators (possibly prompted by the lack of space for glosses in the manuscript). Although the glossing is moderately early, it evidently is a conflation of several different glossing traditions - shown most clearly by the 3 different renderings of the Greek quotation at 5m2.1, which are mostly found in separate glossing traditions otherwise, but are here entered as a single gloss in one hand.⁴⁵⁴ Much of the glossing, especially single words, is paralleled in a wide range of manuscripts, but some distinct strands or traditions can be identified, limited in some cases to particular parts of the text. Glosses otherwise found only in the East Frankish tradition seen in Ec Ga Gc Ka Na and Vh occur in Book 1 and the first part of Book 2, up to 2p3, but disappear after that. Other glosses found only or mainly in Anglo Saxon manuscripts also occur occasionally in Book 1. More sustained through the whole text is a strand of glossing from the West Frankish tradition and, in the last three books at least, shows particular links with Af Lh Ta and Va. The distinctively early glosses found widely in other manuscripts are mostly lacking in To and the sections that generated particularly heavy glossing in most other manuscripts - 3m9, 3m12, 4m3, 4m7 - are comparatively lightly glossed here. That may be partly due to the lack of space in the manuscript and the tendency of the glossators in To to select and abridge but there does seem to be either a lack of interest in mythological explications or a lack of knowledge about them. Although several different hands were responsible for the glosses we have not found it possible to identify them with distinct glossing traditions, and it seems likely that much of the conflation of traditions had already occurred in copies used by the glossators.

Provenance:

When Parts 1 and 2 were united is unclear and little is known about the history of To after it ⁴⁵⁴ Though all 3 of these glosses also appear in Ta, the last has an addition not in To; Cf too the 2 glosses on 'Alcibiadis' at 3p8.10.

Description of Manuscripts

was produced in the late 9th century in northeastern France. There is no obvious internal evidence that traces its route from northeastern France to the Abbey of St Martin's at Tours. Although medieval booklists of the manuscripts of Tours have yet to be found, there are several lists extant from the post-medieval period: the earliest inventory that identifies To is one from 1700, which according to Delisle, though imperfect and incomplete, remained the official catalogue of the library of St Martin's until the French Revolution. Delisle links the entry for no. 21 in this list with manuscript 803.⁴⁵⁵ ⁴⁵⁵ The note 'No. 21 de St Martin' on the front flyleaf of To is an early modern addition. Montfaucon published the 1700 inventory (1739, vol. 2, pp. 1335-1341) with the contents of the manuscripts, dating No. 21 (p. 1336) to the year 800. Delisle printed the inventory in his Manuscrits Disparus (1883, pp. 168-75) and simply links the entry for no. 21 with the present shelfmark '803' (at p. 169). A list of important manuscripts at St Martin's was drawn up in the late 17th century and is preserved in Paris, BN, lat. 9363, ff. 245v-249r; although it includes some copies of Boethius's DCP, none can be identified with To.

Description of Manuscripts

Va (= Va)

Valenciennes, Bibliothèque municipale, 298 (olim 288)

135 folios, 240 x 185 mm. 21 lines.

Origin: northern France, Saint-Amand-les-Eaux, s. xi.⁴⁵⁶

Description:

Va contains a glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts on folios 1 to 88v, line 12; folios 88v, line 13 to 135r, line 22 contain a variety of texts, including epistolae and verses of the 10th and 11th centuries, some connected with Saint-Amand-les-Eaux, as well as an abbreviated version of the third book of Abbo of Saint-Germain-des-Prés' Bella Parisiaca Urbis.⁴⁵⁷ This codex opens with an entirely independent and unfoliated bifolium containing excerpts from various texts for the celebration of the Mass.

Va opens on 1r with Prologi 1 (lines 1-15) and 4 (1r, line 15-1v, line 2); Distinctio 3 is entered in the upper margin of 1r and the remaining lines in the upper, right and lower margins of 1r contain glossae in titulum. The DCP is on 1v-84r. All five books are preceded by titles. The upper and left margins of 1v also contain glossae in titulum, which are linked to the elaborately written title on 1v with linking symbols. Several glosses to 3m9 were written in glossing script as glossae collectae from the foot of 39v, where 3p9 ends, to the upper margin of 40v; despite being written in this format, each gloss is prefaced by a letter of the alphabet, which links it to the text of 3m9 on 41r to 41v. The text of the DCP ends on 84r, line 3 with an explicit on lines 4 to 7. The Lupus treatise on the metres begins on 84r with an introductory note on lines 8 to 10: 'Incipiunt genera metrorum in libro Boetii, quae dom[i]nus Lupus ut facilius studiosus lector accipere potuisset, in lucem produxit'; a version of the passage that usually concludes the Lupus treatise in other early copies of the DCP, beginning 'Obserua autem quisque legeris, etc.,' follows on immediately from lines 10 to 14. The order in which these passages are written in Va only appears in one other of our early manuscripts, Ka. In Va, the text continues on line 14 with the usual opening of the Lupus text, 'Quinque libros philosophicae consolationis insignis auctor Boetius XXVII' etc., and concludes with an explicit at 87r, line 11. Immediately beneath it are Prologi 5 (87r, line 12-87v, line 10) and 6 (87v, line 10-88r, line 1). An anonymous text, also written by the same scribe and headed by the rubric 'De obitu neronis' on 88r, line 1 to 88v, line 12, appears as a gloss in two other 10th-century glossed copies of the DCP: Lh and Ta.⁴⁵⁸ The sequence of letters, verses and the Abbo

⁴⁵⁷ For a detailed description of the contents of Va, see Mangeart 1860, pp. 300-304; and appendix, pp. 656-661 (he uses the old shelfmark '288'); see also Troncarelli 2005, no. 52.

⁴⁵⁸ The earliest evidence of this brief text is recorded as an autonomous text in another Valenciennes manuscript, Bibliothèque municipale 414 (395), f. 24r, which is also thought to have been written at Saint-Amand-les-Eaux in the late 9th century. For an edition of the text and a discussion of its significance as an autonomous text in Va, see Bottiglieri (1998-99), pp.

Description of Manuscripts

text noted above, which are mostly written by the same text scribe as the DCP and its ancillary texts, follow on immediately from folio 88r, 13 to 135r, 22; 135v remains blank.

The prose of the DCP is written in a single column. The layout of the metres is variable, with most written in a single column; where they are written in multiple columns the verse lines are not clearly demarcated. In addition to the title to Book 1, which is highly ornate and nearly fills all of 1v, there is much rubrication and use of multiple colours for initials. Folio 40v, which faces 3m9 on 41r, is almost entirely filled with an elaborately coloured diagram of the elements.⁴⁵⁹ In the lower right margin of 64r, next to the text of 4p6, is a crudely drawn diagram of three concentric circles.⁴⁶⁰

Va is partially ruled for glosses. The lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses and the upper, lower and outer margins are ruled, but not consistently.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Va is heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin, mainly entered by the text scribe, though several other glosses were added by contemporary scribes.⁴⁶¹ A few Greek words are embedded in Latin glosses. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, rhetorical terms and speech indicators. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others that have no linking symbols are written in close proximity to the lemma they annotate.

The glosses, which are spread fairly evenly through the text, seem to be a conflation of several different sources, though mainly written as a single process and probably from a single exemplar which combined the traditions. The dominant element up to the end of Book 3 are glosses otherwise found only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts plus Vb, but these become rare in a stretch of Book 3 from 3p6 to 3m9, and disappear altogether in Books 4 and 5. The second major element is formed of glosses drawn from the West Frankish tradition represented by Af and Vc, while there are also a substantial number of glosses from the East Frankish tradition of Ec and Ka and a great many glosses that are unique or shared (in Book 5) only with Pf and/or St. In none of those traditions does Va show a particular link with any individual manuscript or group. The difficult and challenging question is the nature of the relationship to Vb and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts. Given that Va includes numerous glosses that were entered in Vb in Cornwall but also some that were apparently entered in Glastonbury, and has glosses that are otherwise only in Vb and others that are otherwise only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, it seems likely that it drew on an English collection drawing on Vb itself but supplemented with other glosses circulating in Anglo-Saxon England. That is brought in question by Va's occasional inclusion of correct versions of glosses that Vb and the Anglo-Saxon manuscripts have in ⁴⁵⁹ Mangeart (1860, p. 301) includes a drawing of this diagram.

⁴⁶⁰ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Va at 147 and 151.

⁴⁶¹ Troncarelli (2005, no. 52) dates all the glosses to the 12th century.

Description of Manuscripts

badly corrupted form, but it is conceivable, given the range of sources in use in Va, that the compiler had access to other copies of these glosses.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Va.

Provenance:

Va is thought to have been written at Saint-Amand-les-Eaux. Works by Boethius, including four copies of the DCP, are mentioned in a monastic library catalogue of Saint-Amand known as the Index Maior and preserved at the end of a 12th-century manuscript of Jerome's works.⁴⁶² Against the entry for the DCP on 201ra, Boetii quatuor de consolatione philosophiae, are the annotations 'abbas / Hellinus unum' and 'prior / Fulquinus unum'. Delisle, who prints a copy of the 12th-century catalogue, proposes that one of these copies of the DCP is to be identified with Valenciennes 288.⁴⁶³ A small parchment fragment bound at the end of Va contains miscellaneous notes written by scribes of several periods, including one written by a later medieval scribe, which includes the following: Iste liber est cenobii elnonensis. Sancti Amandi in Papula.⁴⁶⁴ Va was probably transferred from Saint-Amand-les-Eaux to Valenciennes in the 18th century.⁴⁶⁵

⁴⁶² Paris, BN, lat. 1850: Annotatio Librorum Biblioteche (sic) Sancti Amandi, 199v-202v. Though another 12th-century catalogue of the library of Saint-Amand survives, that in the Paris manuscript is more complete.

⁴⁶³ Delisle (Cabinet 2, pp. 448-58, at 453 no. 164 and Cabinet 1, pp. 308-309) uses the former shelfmark for Va (288).

⁴⁶⁴ For the complete text of eight lines, see Mangeart (1860, pp. 303-4) and Molinier (1894, p. 323). The inscription refers to two alternative names for Saint-Amand-les-Eaux: Elnonense or S. Amandus in Pabula.

⁴⁶⁵ For the history of the library of Saint-Amand, see Delisle (Cabinet 1, pp. 307-319) and Boutémy (1946).

Vb (= VI)

Vatican City, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, lat. 3363

60 folios, 270 x 178 mm. 28 lines.

Origin: Loire region (Fleury?), s. ix, early.⁴⁶⁶

Description:

Vb contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP written in the first third of the 9th century. The text on ff. Ir-IIr was supplied by two scribes in the 14th century: the first scribe breaks off at the foot of Iv at 1p1.9 ‘assuefaciunt’; on IIr, where the original text was erased, another scribe completes 1p1.9 ‘morbo non liberant’ and begins 1p1.10, breaking off at ‘uestrae detraherent’, on f. IIr, line 2.⁴⁶⁷ The remainder of 1p1 and the beginning of 1m2 is lacking.⁴⁶⁸ The original 9th-century text of the DCP begins on IIv with 1m2.14 and ends on LXr, line 14 with an explicit. On the remaining half page, which was originally left blank, a glossary to terms in Prudentius’s Psychomachia was entered in four columns, opening with the rubric ‘Incipiunt glosae huius libri’; the glossary appears to have continued on LXv, possibly in two columns, but it is greatly faded and cannot easily be read. A further list of words in four columns appears to have been added to the second half of LXv, but in addition to being very faint, this part of the page has been mostly obscured by various pen trials and notes from the 14th century and later, including a vernacular sales note by an Italian vintner. Catchwords are just visible at the foot of the versos of the final folios of many quires, presumably added in the 16th century when Vb was bound in its present form.

All but Book 1 are preceded by titles. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column. The metres, all of which are written in uncials, are written in single or double columns; some are written in long prose lines with no clear delineation of the verse lines.

⁴⁶⁶ Bischoff (1981a, p. 40, n. 4): s. ix¹, interpreted as first half of the 9th century in Bischoff, Katalog 3, no. 6877; however, in early handwritten notes of the date by Bischoff that were preliminary to his Katalog entry (copies of which were kindly supplied to us by Dr Birgit Ebersperger), Bischoff more specifically proposes a date of the 1st to the 2nd quarter of the 9th century - thus we may assume a date ca. 825. Weinberger (1934), Courcelle (1939, p. 121; 1967, p. 404), Bieler (1984), Troncarelli (2005, no. 133): s. ix; Moreschini (2005): c. 830; Mostert (1989, p. 252, BF 1313): s. ixⁱⁿ; CB 3 (Vaticano, no. 547), Love (2012, p. 94): s. ix 1/2; Wittig (2007, p. 193): s. ix¹. For a detailed account of the origin and date of Vb see Godden 2005; for a highly speculative account, see Troncarelli 2019.

⁴⁶⁷ Though the original text on IIr was erased some words are legible enough to indicate that this page originally began with 1p1.9 ‘non liberant’ and continued to the end of 1m2.13. It is puzzling why IIr was scraped clean since the 14th-century scribe who wrote on Ir-v seems to have supplied all but one word (‘morbo’) of what was missing from the original folio on Iv, and even that may have been added in the left margin just before the 9th-century ‘non liberant’.

⁴⁶⁸ See table of ‘missing text’ for details. Recent commentators describe the lacuna here as 1p1.36 to 1m2.17; however, 1m2.14-16 is present though quite faint - whilst most of lines 15 and 16 are visible to the naked eye, line 14 can be read with UV light.

Description of Manuscripts

Neumes were added to 1m5 and 3m6. Vb has some rubrication. An ink diagram of concentric circles with intersecting lines and no inscriptions was added in the margin of XLVIr, next to the text of 4p6.⁴⁶⁹

Vb was not originally ruled for glosses, but occasionally narrower rulings were added for glosses in the outer margins; the glosses added to these lines appear to be by an insular hand. The lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take glosses. Outer margins were trimmed and in places the ink has faded, resulting in the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Brittonic

Vb is heavily glossed in Latin with interlinear and marginal glosses entered by several different Continental and insular scribes from the 9th to the 11th centuries: in addition to a few early glosses entered in France in the second half of the 9th century, a great many glosses were added in southwest Britain in the late 9th and early 10th centuries and in Glastonbury in the first half of the 10th century; further glosses were added in England by a later 10th- or early 11th-century scribe. Other additions include headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs, others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

The glossing is sustained fairly evenly throughout the work but more fully in Books 3 and 4. A single interlinear Cornish gloss was added to 4m1.4 (XXXVIIr) in the 9th century.⁴⁷⁰ A dry-point annotation ‘Rogerii’ at the foot of XXXIIIr is of uncertain date. Many of the glosses are unique to Vb and many others, primarily from Books 1 and 2, appear only in later copies of Anglo-Saxon manuscripts produced at Abingdon and Canterbury and the 11th-century French manuscript Va, whose glosses may have English origins.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Vb.

Provenance:

Vb was written in France, perhaps in the region of the Loire valley, early in the 9th century and was a rather peripatetic manuscript. As the various glossing hands attest, it was in Cornwall or the south west of England by the end of the 9th century, in Glastonbury by the mid-10th century and remained in England until at least the early 11th century. The vernacular sales note on LXr places Vb in Italy by the 14th century. A 16th-century ownership note on the front fly leaf ii-r indicates that Vb belonged to the library of the Italian humanist Fulvio Orsini (1529-1600), whose book collection was acquired by the Vatican Library.

⁴⁶⁹ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Vb at 167-69, 171-76.

⁴⁷⁰ For a detailed discussion of this gloss, see Godden 2005 and Sims-Williams 2005.

Description of Manuscripts

Vc (= V2)

Vatican City, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, lat. 3865

57 folios, 250 x 228 mm. 23 lines.

Origin: France (near Brittany?), s. ix, third or fourth quarter.⁴⁷¹

Description:

Vc contains an imperfect copy of the DCP on 1-57: the 9th-century text ends on 56v at 5m4.22; a 14th-century Italian scribe supplied 5m4.23 to 5p5.12 on the final singleton, 57 (a palimpsest), ending at the foot of 57v with ‘inclusa simplicitas’.⁴⁷² The remaining text, 5m5 and 5p6, is lacking. Part of folio 1 was damaged and repaired with parchment, resulting in the loss of a few words of text, which were supplied later, and some glosses.⁴⁷³ A patch was supplied in the 12th century, where a portion of the text in the upper part of folio 7 was removed. Quire signatures in the form of Roman numerals in the lower margins of the verso of the final folio of each quire are mostly visible; sometimes a catchword was also added by a later medieval scribe.

All five books are preceded by titles. Glossae in titulum were added to Book 1, in the upper and left margins of 1r, by a contemporary scribe. The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column; and the majority of the metres are written in multiple columns. Vc has some rubrication. In the lower left margin of 28v, next to 3m9, is an ink diagram of the elements and the ages of man. In the lower right margin of 46r, next to 4p6, is an ink diagram of concentric circles with intersecting lines and inscriptions within and without.⁴⁷⁴

Vc is ruled for glosses, though not consistently. The lines of text are adequately spaced to take glosses. In addition to the repair made to folio 1, the outer margins were trimmed and in places the ink has faded, all resulting in the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Vc is fairly heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin and a couple of Greek words embedded in a Latin gloss, entered by several scribes from the 9th to the 11th centuries; many of the 9th-century glosses were probably entered by the scribe of the text, or by another soon after the text was written. According to Bischoff, the script of some glosses ⁴⁷³ The lacunae in the text were probably made good by the same 14th-century scribe as supplied the text at the end of the DCP.

Description of Manuscripts

added by other scribes are reminiscent of a script characteristic of Brittany.⁴⁷⁵ Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections, headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres and speech indicators. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs and others are written in close proximity to the lemma with no linking symbols.

The glossing is intense in the first two books, becomes a little lighter in Books 3 and 4 and then ceases altogether half way through Book 5 at 5m4.22. There are many short interlinear glosses and a substantial number of long marginal comments. Most of the glosses occur in other manuscripts as well. Generally Vc shows close agreement with later West Frankish manuscripts such as Pc and Pk, along with Anglo-Saxon manuscripts such as Ck Ge Pb Pn and the mixed manuscripts Lh and Ta.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Vc.

Provenance:

The script of Vc points to a French origin, but its whereabouts until its appearance in Italy in the 14th century is unknown.⁴⁷⁶

⁴⁷⁵ Bischoff (unpublished notes to Katalog 3, no. 6893) concerning the glosses: ‘haben zum Teil einen leicht bretonischen flavour ca. 19v ff.’.

Description of Manuscripts

Vd (= V4)

Vatican City, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, lat. 5956

72 folios (foliated 2-73)⁴⁷⁷, 260 x 200 mm. 30 and 28 lines.

Origin: Unknown, s. x.⁴⁷⁸

Description:

Vd contains a glossed copy of the DCP on 2v-65v. The same scribe, who wrote the end of the DCP, copied a commentary to 3m9 attributed to Bovo II of Corvey; the commentary, which ends imperfectly, begins on a fresh quire (66-73) with a prefatory letter and no rubric. A version of the Bovo commentary also appears in Lh. A 14th-century scribe added an excerpt from William of Conches' Accessus ad Consolationem to the originally blank 2r; notes written by various other later medieval scribes were also added to the bottom half of 2r.

All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. The prose text and all the metres are written in single columns. Vd has some rubrication and decorative initials. Beneath the explicit to the DCP at the foot of 65v is a colourful ornamental drawing in a rectangular shape.

Vd is not ruled for glosses, but the margins are wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take interlinear glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Vd is fairly heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin and a several Greek words entered by several scribes in the 10th and 11th centuries. Other additions include rhetorical terms, speech indicators, headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, which are often given nearly as much prominence as the titles to the books. Mostly the marginal glosses are linked to the lemma they annotate by letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs; others are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols.

Vd is quite heavily glossed in Books 1 and 2, but the glossing becomes much less frequent in Book 3 and especially in Books 4 and 5. The most prominent feature is the high number of long glosses unique to Vd in Books 1 to 3, some being extensive rewritings of glosses known from other manuscripts but many being wholly independent and often quite learned. Those apart, the longer glosses are drawn almost exclusively from the West Frankish tradition represented by Af Kc Vc and others, with a few indications of a particular link with Kc and Mj. In addition there are occasional instances of the headnotes and marginal citations of Greek rhetorical figures which characterise the texts of Ka and Lh, and a sequence of marginal glosses occurring otherwise only in Anglo-Saxon manuscripts in 3m9. There is no trace of the East Frankish glossing tradition.

Several late-medieval annotations were added to Vd.

Provenance:

⁴⁷⁷ The folio references followed here are those marked at the foot of each folio.

Description of Manuscripts

The early history of Vd is unknown. The binding carries the papal coat of arms of Pope Paulus V Borghese (1605-21). The ownership note attached to the bottom right corner of 2r 'Emptus ex Libris Ill(ustrissi)mi D. Lelij Ruini epi(scopi) Balneoregien(sis) an(no) 1623' places Vd in the 17th century in the library of Lelius Ruinus, who was Pope Paul's ambassador to Sigmund III of Poland and Bishop of Bagnoregio from 1612 to 1621. Several volumes from Lelius Ruinus's library were purchased for the Papal Library in 1622 and 1623.

Description of Manuscripts

Vf (= V5)

Vatican City, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, Pal. lat. 1581

72 folios,⁴⁷⁹ 222 x 150 mm. 23 lines.

Origin: Germany (Lorsch?), s. x.⁴⁸⁰

Description:

Vf contains an imperfect glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts. Folio 1r (a palimpsest) formerly contained part of a treatise on the sacrifice of the Mass.⁴⁸¹ On the upper half of this erasure a wide band was painted in red, on which a later medieval scribe wrote parts of prayers. Two concentric circles were added in ink below this band, with the inner circle containing the ex libris of the 15th-century German historian and humanist Mathias Widmann of Kemnat and the date '1473'. Pen trials are evident on several folios and various notes were added by scribes from the 11th century onwards on 69v-70v.

The DCP is on 1v-69v. All five books are preceded either by titles or incipits and explicits. A lightly glossed copy of Prologus 1 precedes the text of the DCP on 1v, 1-18. This is immediately followed by the title to Book 1 on lines 19-23. Glossae in titulum are recorded in the lower left margin of 1v and the upper margin of 2r. The contemporary annotation 'in sequenti pagine istam glosam inuenies' on 1v links the glossae in titulum on 2r to the title on 1v. Many leaves of the parchment were cut irregularly and others damaged. For whatever reason, the lower half of folio 14, which contained 2p3.2 'quidem ista sunt' to 2p3.4 'cum tempestivum fuerit' was either damaged or missing at an early stage and the text and a few interlinear glosses were supplied by an 11th-century scribe in the upper margin of 14r; subsequently some of this supplied text and its glosses were cropped, thus what remains is the text from 2p3.2 'itaque cum haec auribus' to 'cum tempestivum fuerit'. A paper restoration of the lower portion of folio 14 was supplied in the 15th century, when the missing text on both 14r and 14v were added to it.⁴⁸² The text of the DCP ends at 69v, 17; immediately beneath on lines 18-23, the scribe of the text wrote two epigraphs: an anonymous epigraph, followed by another attributed to Walafrid Strabo. A rubricator entered the explicit to the DCP in the space left around these verses. An anonymous Latin poem was added to the first five lines of 70r.⁴⁸³

⁴⁸⁰ Bischoff (1989, pp. 130-131) proposed a 10th-century German origin for Vf, later owned by the Abbey Library at Lorsch; Troncarelli (2005, no. 124): s. x (except for 34r to 35v and 43r to 70v: s. xi); Kautz (2016, vol. 2, p. 1006): s. x; Courcelle (1967, p. 405), CB 3 (Vaticano no. 458), Wittig (2007, p. 193), Love (2012, p. 95): s. x/xi; Jeudy (1991, p. 487): s. xi. Hoffmann (2004, vol. 1, p. 113) localised Vf to Trier in the second half of the 10th century, but this link remains tenuous.

⁴⁸¹ See Kautz (2016, vol. 2, pp. 1005-1009, at 1007-1008) for details.

⁴⁸² See table of 'missing text' for details. Minor portions of folios 15 and 23, were also repaired and the missing text supplied in the 15th century.

⁴⁸³ Cf. Schaller-Könsgen 1977, no. 16461 ('Tres nimium cimas...').

Description of Manuscripts

In addition to pen trials and scribbles, two lines from Servius's commentary on Vergil's Aeneid were added to the top of 70v.⁴⁸⁴

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column⁴⁸⁵ and the metres are mostly written in single columns, with a few written in multiple columns; where the metres are written in multiple columns, these are not always clearly delineated. Vf has much rubrication, red highlights and underlining for emphasis, including for a few personal names.⁴⁸⁶ A diagram of a ladder with the Greek characters theta and pi, at the head and the foot of the ladder respectively was added to the lower margin of 2v, below the text of 1p1. A circular ink diagram of the elements and the ages of man was drawn in the top right margin of 35r, next to the text of 3m9 and the glosses to 3m9 were entered around it; a rather more crude diagram of the ages of man was added beneath the Latin poem on 70r. In the lower left margin of 54v, next to 4p6, is an inked diagram of concentric circles with intersecting lines.⁴⁸⁷

Vf is not ruled for glosses, but the outer margins are wide, though now heavily trimmed, and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take interlinear glosses. The poor quality and preparation of the parchment and the trimming of margins has led to the loss of parts of glosses.

Glosses: Latin, Greek

Vf is heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin and a single Greek headword, primarily entered by contemporary scribes, perhaps at the time of copying or fairly soon thereafter; some glosses were added in the 11th century. Other additions include rhetorical terms, speech indicators, headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres, which are often given nearly as much prominence as the titles to the books. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to the lemma by letters of the alphabet, occasionally with arbitrary signs and sometimes they are simply written in close proximity to the lemma in the text. A handful of marginal glosses are written in geometric shapes.

The glosses are sustained steadily throughout the text though slightly heavier in Books 1 and 4, moderate in Book 3, lighter in Books 2 and 5. Generally there is very little duplication - that is, there is rarely more than one gloss on a particular point or word or allusion. Vf seems to draw the great bulk of its longer glosses at least from a source shared with Fd Lc Ld and Pt. This source in turn was an adaptation of the West Frankish tradition. Vf itself has in addition some headnotes otherwise found mainly in East Frankish manuscripts, especially Ka and Lh.

Very few late-medieval annotations were added to Vf.

Provenance:

⁴⁸⁴ Servius, Comm. Aen. 1.1.500 (p. 156.24).

⁴⁸⁵ The exception is the opening lines of 1p5, which begin at the end of the second column after 1m5 on 9r.

⁴⁸⁷ See Papahagi 2010, pp. 141-77; Vf at 159-62.

Description of Manuscripts

Vf is thought to have been written in Germany and, though its place of origin remains uncertain, it was later at the Abbey library at Lorsch. On 69v is a late medieval ownership note, which remains unidentified.⁴⁸⁸ Vf is one amongst several manuscripts from Lorsch that was in the possession of Mathias Widman by the 15th century, as evidenced by his ex libris on 1r. Widman (d. 1476), who was court chaplain to the elector Friedrich I and taught at Heidelberg, apparently had access to the Abbey library at Lorsch since at least 1465 and during Widman's time several manuscripts were transferred to Heidelberg.⁴⁸⁹ The remaining volumes of the library at Lorsch were integrated into Heidelberg's Bibliotheca Palatina when the Abbey was dissolved in the 16th century, whence many of these manuscripts were transferred to Rome in the 17th century.

⁴⁸⁸ 'Liber iste ...', whose owner has been identified variously as 'Hauris', 'Lauris' or 'Gauritus'.

Description of Manuscripts

Vg (= W2)

Vienna, Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, 242

85 folios, 220 x 160 mm. 22 lines.

Origin: St Gallen, s. xi, first third.⁴⁹⁰

Description:

Vg contains a glossed copy of the DCP and some ancillary texts. The DCP is on 1v-84r. It is preceded on 1r by various preliminaries: Prologus 1 (1r, 1-18) opens with the rubric ‘Prodicio Boetiis’, Prologus 4 (1r, 18-1v, 7) with ‘Ratio eius exilii eiusque libri’ and Epitaphium 2 (1v, 8-20) with ‘epitaphium Boetii. in ciuitate ticinen(si)’. The DCP is followed by Prologus 7 (Notker’s prologue) on 84v-85v.

All five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. The prose text is written in a single column and the metres are mostly written in single columns, with some written in multiple columns. In addition to the ornamental initials opening Prologus 1 and each book of the DCP, Vg has much rubrication. In the upper right margin of 3r, next to the text of 1p1, is an ink drawing of a figure with a nimbus wearing a long robe and carrying a book in its right hand and flowers in its left hand; the robe is adorned with a ladder with the Greek characters theta and pi, at the head and the foot of the ladder respectively and to which inscriptions were added between the rungs.⁴⁹¹

Vg is not ruled to take glosses, but the margins are wide and the lines of text are sufficiently spaced to take interlinear glosses.

Glosses: Latin

Vg is lightly glossed in Latin with marginal and interlinear glosses entered by several scribes in the 11th century. Vg is quite heavily glossed for its first few pages, on 1m1 to 1p3, but otherwise scarcely at all - the rest of the additions consist primarily of brief rubrics to the prose sections in Book 3 and, some glosses to 3m9 and glosses to the Greek in all five books. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to their lemma with letters of the alphabet and arbitrary signs, though some are written in close proximity to the lemmas with no linking symbols.

As far as the first gloss on 1m2.1 Vg’s entries draw consistently on the West Frankish tradition represented by Af, showing a possible link with Ld Pp and Ta in that last gloss. Glosses on the rest of 1m2 and up to 1p3 are in a different hand and show affiliations instead ⁴⁹⁰ Hoffmann (1986, vol. 1, p. 396), Tax (2008, vol. 1, p. xxxviii): s. xi, first third, St Gallen; Ostberg (1963, p. 258), citing a personal communication with Bischoff, proposes that Notker’s prologue on ff. 84v-85v ‘was undoubtedly written at St Gallen in the 11th century’; Love (2012, p. 95): s. xi; Hermann (Handschriften 2, pp. 44-45, no. 29): s.xii, southwest Germany (Reichenau or St Gallen); CB 2 (Austria, no. 64), Wittig (2007, p. 193): s. xii, probably Reichenau; Courcelle (1939, p. 122; 1967, p. 406), Krämer (1989-90, vol. 2, p. 675), Troncarelli (2005, no. 3): s. xii.

⁴⁹¹ The upper corner of this folio is discoloured and obscures part of the drawing. Though the facial features that are evident appear to be that of a man, Hermann identifies the figure as philosophy; see also Courcelle 1967, p. 78 and pl. 26.1.

Description of Manuscripts

with the East Frankish tradition, especially Ka. A third strand, possibly earlier than the other two, is indicated by the marginal headnotes in Book 3. The headnotes occur widely in various forms but Vg's resemble the versions seen in East Frankish manuscripts such as Ec Ka Na and Vh. The interlinear translations of the Greek quotations from 1p4 onwards appear to be in the same hand and may have the same source. The sporadic glosses to 3m9 are mostly unique.

Provenance:

The early history of Vg is uncertain. Hoffmann, based on the script of the text, suggests that Vg was written at St Gallen in the first third of the 11th century; he further suggests that, based on the glossing script on some folios, Vg probably left St Gallen as early as the 11th century.⁴⁹² This would be in keeping with what we have seen in the different strands of glossing evident in Vg.

An ownership inscription in the lower margin written on 1r links Vg with the Augustinian house in Regensburg in the first part of the 16th century. From sometime later in the 16th century, Vg was in Vienna: according to Hermann, a marginal note on 71r links Vg with the 16th-century Viennese humanist Alexander Brassicanus (d. 1539), though this remains uncertain; Vg was later recorded in the estate register of Johann Fabri, Bishop of Vienna (d. 1541), whose ex libris (dated 1540), pasted on the front pastedown of the 19th-century binding, notes that he bequeathed it to the College of St Nicholas in Vienna; thence to the Alte Universitätsbibliothek Wien in 1623 (the shelfmark 'Cod. Univ. 354' appears on the spine and on a paper label on the front pastedown) and in 1756 to the Imperial Court Library.

⁴⁹² Hoffmann (1986, vol. 1, p. 396) thinks that the marginal and interlinear glosses on ff. 2r-4r, 23r, 39v and 40r, for the most part, do not look like St Gallen hands.

Vh (= WI)

Vienna, Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, 271

81 folios, 210 x 160 mm. 23-25 lines (ff. 1-76r); 26-33 lines (ff. 76v-77v); 23 lines (78r-80v).

Origin: southern Germany, around 900.⁴⁹³

Description:

This codex contains a glossed copy of the DCP, to which a version of the Somniale Danielis prophetae, an imperfect copy of the Lupus treatise on the metres, Prologus 4 and an ink and wash drawing of the dream of Boethius were added at various times in the 10th century.

As with several other manuscripts of the DCP, the first folio of Vh was probably left blank for various preliminaries or illustrations. Prologus 4 and the schematic representation of ‘philosophiae genus’ beneath it, were added to 1r by the same scribe, or perhaps a contemporary, who added the Lupus treatise on 78-80, and a 14th- century scribe added the title in the upper margin.⁴⁹⁴ The drawing on 1v has been dated to the end of the 10th century.⁴⁹⁵ The DCP is on 2r-76r. The text of the DCP on 2r-75v was written around 900 and the last few lines ⁴⁹³ There are numerous views regarding the date and origin of this codex: a close analysis of the text and glossing script suggest that Vh was written around 900; Bischoff, when preparing his catalogue cites Bieler, Troncarelli and Courcelle noting ‘see Lat. 271, s. ix/x’, but he was unable to consult the manuscript again before vol. 3 of his Katalog (published posthumously) was finalised for publication, where the entry lists it as not 9th century and cites the earlier literature. Weinberger (1934), Bieler (1984), Troncarelli (2005, no. 4), Love (2012, p. 95): s. ix/x; Wittig (1983, p. 188), s. ix/x, S. Germany; Peiper (1871), Moreschini (2005): s. x; Wittig (2007, pp. 193-94): s. x^{ex}, S-W. Germany (Reichenau?).

Hermann (Handschriften 1, pp. 184-85, no. 70) proposed a date and place of origin for the illustration in the late 10th century in SW Germany, noting it resembled Reichenau work; discussing the illustration on 1v, Courcelle (1964, p. 366) cites both Weinberger’s date for the text and Hermann’s date and localisation of the illustration. CB 2 (Austria, no. 65) and Wittig (2007, pp. 193-94) seemingly apply Hermann’s date and localisation for the illustration to the entire manuscript; Roland (1999, p. 56) accepts Hermann’s dating of the illustration, but rejects its localisation.

SS (IV, p. 633, no. 587) propose a Salzburg origin in s. x; Reiche (1970) accepts SS’s date of s. x, but rejects their notion that Vh originated in Salzburg without giving an alternative origin. Hoffmann (1986, vol. 1, pp. 413 and 437) posits a Tegernsee origin at the end of the 10th century and proposes that additions were made at Seon Abbey by the 11th century and at Bamberg around the second quarter of the 11th century; B&S no. 904, Roland (1999, pp. 45, 55-56) and Tax (2008, vol. 1, p. xxxviii) accept Hoffmann’s late date and origin.

⁴⁹⁴ Hoffmann (1986, vol. 1, p. 413), proposes that Prologus 4 and Lupus’s treatise were added by the Seon master, who apparently also added a number of glosses.

⁴⁹⁵ Hermann (Handschriften 1, p. 184) suggests that the style of the drawing points to a ‘Südwestdeutsche Arbeit vom Ende des X. Jahrhunderts, Reichenauer Arbeiten nahe verwandt’.

of 5p6 were supplied on the present 76r by a later scribe.⁴⁹⁶ The Somniale Danielis (in 2 columns, on 26-33 lines) was added to the originally blank 76v-77v by different scribes thereafter in the early 10th century. Lupus's treatise begins at 'acatalectus enim est uersus' (Peiper, line 20) and was written later in the 10th century on 78r-80v (in a single column, on 23 lines). Folio 81r remains blank and the originally blank 81v contains a diagram of the elements added in the 10th century as well as numerous annotations from the 14th and 15th centuries.⁴⁹⁷

The prose text of the DCP is written in a single column and all five books of the DCP are preceded by titles. On 2r glossae in titulum were entered between the lines of the title to Book 1 as well as en bloc in the margin next to it. The metres are mostly written in single columns, with some written in multiple columns. Neumes were added to 4m1. Vh has some rubrication. At the top right margin of 59r, next to the text of 4p6, is a barely visible dry-point sketch of concentric circles.⁴⁹⁸

Vh is not ruled for glosses, though the space between the lines of text and the wide margins allow for glossing.

Glosses: Latin, Greek, OHG

Vh is heavily glossed with marginal and interlinear glosses in Latin and a couple of Greek words. There are also 112 OHG glosses, both interlinear and marginal.⁴⁹⁹ The majority of the glosses were entered primarily by a single scribe, shortly after the text was written; some others were added later in the 10th century by several scribes.⁵⁰⁰ At least one gloss is embedded in the text of Vh, suggesting that Vh itself was copied from a glossed manuscript. Other additions include rhetorical terms, headnotes to prose sections and headnotes defining the metrical forms of the metres; whereas the prose headnotes are added in a glossing script, the headnotes to the metres are mostly entered in rustic capitals, occasionally in red. The Greek in the text is sometimes repeated at the foot of the folio and glossed with the same interlinear gloss or with an alternate gloss. The majority of the marginal glosses are written in fairly close proximity to the lemma in the text, with no linking symbols; others are linked to the lemma mostly with arbitrary signs and occasionally with letters of the alphabet.

About two-thirds of the glosses are written in the same early and rather faint hand and ⁴⁹⁶ The need for the supplied text can probably be explained by the fact that this tenth quire (73-77) was originally made up of 4 bifolia, whose innermost bifolia on which 5p6.41-48 was written initially, was removed or lost.

⁴⁹⁷ The diagram of the elements on 81v is similar to that found in Px (51v) and a 12th-century manuscript of the DCP, Bern, Burgerbibliothek, Cod. 421, ff. 5v-6r (see reproduction in Troncarelli 2005, p. 348, plate VIII).

Description of Manuscripts

the rest in a slightly later hand with darker ink. The earlier set of glosses agree consistently with East Frankish manuscripts. The largest strand, amounting to about a third of all the entries, is composed of glosses shared with the early St Gallen manuscripts Ga and Na, and occasionally the early copy Fa, and sometimes the glosses in Vh are strikingly similar in layout and appearance to those in Na, though probably not copied from Na itself (noteworthy is the case where Ga Na and Vh all write the Latin word ‘manifestius’ in the cipher normally used for OHG glosses). But these are supplemented by a smaller number that recur only in the later manuscripts Ec and related copies, and a few others that occur in other East Frankish manuscripts such as Ed or Px. Where Na and Ec have distinct glosses making similar points, Vh sometimes has the Na version, sometimes the Ec version, and sometimes has both. The smaller number of glosses added in a somewhat later hand are often unique to Vh and otherwise show little connection with the East Frankish manuscripts. Of the 112 glosses in OHG added in the 10th century, about 47 are unique to Vh and the rest mainly recur in Ga and Na, as well as sometimes in later manuscripts. The main set of glosses would seem then to have been copied from a corpus compiled from more than one source, with possible links to the St Gallen tradition.

A few late-medieval annotations were added to Vh.

Provenance:

Vh was written in southern Germany about 900, but little is known with certainty of its history until it arrived in Vienna in the late 18th century. Hermann argues that the iconography of the illustration on 1v is reminiscent of the late-10th-century style of Reichenau illuminations, but notably does not propose an origin for the rest of the manuscript.⁵⁰¹ It is certainly possible that this illumination, like in other copies of the DCP, was added to an originally blank leaf at the end of the 10th century in Reichenau. However, as Reiche noted, the only certainty with respect to the provenance of Vh is that it reached Vienna in 1783, when the codex was entered into the catalogue of the Imperial Court Library in Vienna as No. 2133. Vh is covered in a 15th-century German binding, on whose front cover is a parchment label with the inscription ‘L.7 Boe(thius) de con(solatione) phi(losophi)ae’, under which is the former shelfmark ‘207’ (written over ‘177’) and on a paper label on the spine ‘375 Boetius’.⁵⁰² The front and back pastedowns are fragments of a 14th-century biblical manuscript. On the front pastedown is a paper label with the present shelfmark ‘271’ as well as a former shelfmark ‘2133’.

⁵⁰¹ Hermann, Handschriften 1, pp. 184-85, no. 70.

⁵⁰² Roland (1999, p. 56) identifies the label as belonging to Georg Ratzenberger, the 16th century humanist and rector of the Bürgerschule in Vienna (1503-37). Evidently Vh was also owned by Wolfgang Lazius (d. 1565), whence it came via the library of the Bürgerschule Sankt Stephan to the Stadtbibliothek at an unknown date (Roland 1999, pp. 46, 55-56).

Description of Manuscripts

Wa (= Wa1)

Washington D.C., Library of Congress, Rare Books and Special Collections Division, Med. Ms. 90, no. 7 (olim Ms. 118 no. 7)

A single bifolium, 210 x 165 mm, 21 lines (of 22 lines).

Origin: Germany (Corvey?), s. ix, about the third or fourth quarter.⁵⁰³

Description:

The fragmentary bifolium Wa, which was once used as a book cover, preserves part of Book 5 of the DCP:⁵⁰⁴ at least two lines of a rubric in the uppermost part of 1r have been obscured by a piece of tape attached to the topmost edge of the ‘outside’ cover, obscuring all but ‘incipit liber’ and a few other letters; the next line begins with the opening text of 5p1, ‘Dixerat orationisque’ and ends at ‘causarum conexione pro(ductum)’ in 5p1.8; 1v begins ‘(ca)sum esse confirmo’ in 5p1.8 and ends ‘si quis colendi agri’ in 5p1.13; 2r begins ‘(in)tuemur ut ea quae’ in 5p4.15 (only the lower half of the letters of this line are still visible) and ends ‘arbitrari ab integri(tate)’ in 5p4.23; 2v begins ‘(cau)sa est quod omnia’ in 5p4.24 and ends ‘nam superior’ in 5p4.31. As a result of the upper margins being trimmed, one line of text at the top of each leaf has been lost. What was used as the ‘outside’ of the cover is stained and discoloured, contains an inscription written over the text of the DCP in a dark black ink and there are two large holes in the fold of the bifolium.⁵⁰⁵ The extant prose is written in single columns and Book 5 opens with a simple enlarged letter written in the ink of the text.

Wa is not ruled to take glosses, but the proportions of the inner and lower margins are amply spaced to add glosses. The heavy trimming of the outer margins has resulted in the loss of parts of glosses and, in some cases, only a few letters of a gloss are still evident.

Glosses: Latin

Wa is lightly glossed with mainly marginal and some interlinear glosses added by several scribes in the 9th to the 11th centuries. The marginal glosses are mostly linked to the lemma they annotate by arbitrary signs and a few are written in close proximity to the lemma they gloss. As a result of trimming, some symbols are visible only above the lemma of the text, rather than against the glosses in the margins.

Though there is little to go on in this fragment, the glosses in Wa appear to be drawing on the East Frankish tradition.

Provenance:

⁵⁰³ Bischoff (Katalog 3, no. 7084); in the draft notes to his Katalog 3, Bischoff records ‘ca. Corvey ??, IX. Jh., ca. 3./4. Viertel’; on 1v is a paper label with ‘9. Jahr.’ written on it in a modern hand. Love (2012, p. 96): s. ix. De Ricci identifies Wa only as ‘Philosophy quoting “Aristoteles meus”’ and dates the fragment to the 11th century (Census 1, pp. 233-234).

⁵⁰⁴ For sake of clarity we have assigned folio numbers according to the order of the text; square brackets indicate parts of words that are no longer extant or visible.

⁵⁰⁵ The inscription reads ‘R (or H?)193’.

Description of Manuscripts

The early history of Wa is unknown. In his 1935 Census De Ricci proposes that Wa was one of a series of fragments acquired by the Library of Congress: ‘obtained in July 1927 from Maggs, who described the collection as vi-xv th c. (MS Ac. 4560,5)’.⁵⁰⁶ Wa is kept in a manuscript container marked ‘Ac. 4560(5)’ with the other fragments in this collection.

⁵⁰⁶ De Ricci, Census 1, p. 234.

Description of Manuscripts

In the edition that follows we have not provided details of the manuscripts that are ‘running’ for each prose and metre, since a full list of those containing the text might run to 60 or 70 manuscripts and some might have no glosses, or only a few, while others may have parts of the text but not all. Instead, we supply here a summary list of the parts of the text that are missing from individual manuscripts and the contents of fragmentary copies, to help indicate why a manuscript might be missing from the list of witnesses to a gloss.

Table of missing text

This table aims to record text missing from the early manuscripts of the DCP - it does not include missing text that was supplied before the end of the 11th century, but indicates where it was supplied after the end of the 11th century.

Editorial Principles

We aim to record all glosses to the DCP entered in the manuscripts before about 1100, drawing on some 83 manuscripts and fragments. We include all verbal annotations, whether in Latin, Greek, Old High German (and its various dialects) or Old English,¹ plus a single gloss in Old Cornish (in Vb) and one that may be in Old French (in Ap), but not syntax marks or metrical or musical notation or speaker attributions. Dry-point glosses are not generally reported, since they are very hard to identify with any certainty, but we have included the hundred or so dry-point Old English glosses from Ck which had already been transcribed and printed by Meritt (1961) and Page (1981, 2001).² Diagrams, which often occur in association with 3m9 and 4p6 and sometimes elsewhere, are also excluded, though we try to record the words in them when it is convenient to do so within our format. We also exclude marginal writing that does not appear to be commenting on the DCP (i.e. notes that are probably simply using the space), and the rewriting of words from the text in the margins, a common practice in our manuscripts that may relate to the making of an index or a glossary, or just be intended to draw attention to important topics. (Though we should note that it is not easy to distinguish between marginal repetitions of this kind and what might be meant as sub-headings: praescientia may be just an index word, but de praescientia may be a sub-heading or gloss.)

Glosses written in Tironian notes occur frequently in On, alongside glosses in normal script, and sporadically in La and Bc. Where we have been able to interpret them with some confidence, in the light of the other manuscripts and/or the standard handbooks on Tironian notes, we have included them without comment. But quite a number seem to be using different notations from those of other works and those which we could not interpret with any confidence have been silently excluded.

The glosses are written between the lines of the text and in the margins, sometimes in the latter case keyed by a lemma or a reference mark, sometimes merely written adjacent to the relevant text. In many cases unkeyed glosses are written some distance away from the relevant lemma, even on different pages. We have used our judgement and the evidence of other manuscripts to determine where such glosses belong and have not generally recorded details of these relocations. Similarly, glosses are often run together with others or inadvertently written within other glosses, by copyists who misinterpreted what they were copying, and we have silently disentangled such cases on the basis of the sense and the other manuscripts.

The spelling of Latin glosses is highly variable and we have imposed standardised spellings of the words in question throughout, based on the majority usage of the manuscripts within the corpus as a whole or, where that is unhelpful, on the usage of classical Latin. Note that to avoid confusion and inconsistency and to facilitate searching we have used these standardised spellings even where a gloss appears only in a single manuscript, which might use a different spelling. But imposing complete consistency in matters such as -e/-ae- variation in stems and inflexions has proved beyond us, and we have not attempted to impose classical Latin grammar. Old High German glosses also appear in a variety of spellings and

² For dry-point glosses in OHG, see especially Nievergelt 2019 and Nievergelt forthcoming.

Editorial Principles

additionally often use a cipher in which vowels are replaced by the subsequent consonant in the alphabet (e.g. b for a, f for e).³ We have used a standardised spelling for these throughout in our main corpus, based on the modern reference works, but recorded the actual spellings in an appendix. Likewise, for Greek glosses we have recorded a standardised form in the main corpus and the manuscript variations in an appendix.

Glosses may occur in only one manuscript but more often they occur in several, sometimes in twenty or more. Significant variations in the wording of a gloss are recorded in the apparatus, but not differences of spelling or word-order or minor errors. Similar but generally distinct glosses are recorded separately.

For our text of the DCP we generally follow Bieler 1984 in readings, spelling, punctuation and sentence numbering but where (as frequently happens) Bieler introduced a reading that is not found in our manuscripts, or in most of them, we retain the reading of our manuscripts (or the majority of them) since that is what the glosses relate to. Textual variants and alterations to the text of the DCP are very frequent in our manuscripts and many of them are not reported in the modern editions. We have generally recorded such variants and alterations (in brackets and small capitals immediately after the lemma) only when they are relevant to the glosses, and do not necessarily record such variations from all manuscript witnesses. Textual variants recorded only in later medieval manuscripts are not generally noted. Lemmas from the text are frequently abbreviated or miswritten when cited in glossae collectae such as Ec Gc Kc or at the head of marginal glosses in other manuscripts, and these variations are not generally cited here. (It should be noted that corrections to the text and glosses are often hard to distinguish from each other in the manuscripts, and a gloss in one manuscript may correspond to an alteration in another.) Note in particular that Greek quotations in the text of the DCP are almost invariably badly mangled and we have not reported the myriad different ways in which they are represented in the manuscripts. And note that Bieler's record of textual variants from our manuscripts is not to be relied on.

We record the sources for the glosses in earlier writings only where the use of a specific source is indicated in the text or where it is particularly clear and close, but not the myriad more general possible sources and authorities. We specify the source only for the first occurrence of a relevant gloss in a sequence of similar glosses that cite the same text.

We present three levels of notes at the foot of the page in this edition: the first provides source identifications; the second is an apparatus of variant readings; the third is occasional explanatory notes about problematic readings and misplaced glosses.

Points of detail

1. Abbreviations are silently expanded, except for the recurrent sc. for scilicet and .i. for id est which are recorded in the body of a gloss but ignored at the beginning. Where the expansion is doubtful it is enclosed in curly brackets, { }, using ellipses if the expansion is entirely uncertain.
2. Punctuation is modernised. We use initial capitals for proper nouns in the text of glosses and the lemma in the apparatus but not generally in variants in the apparatus.

Editorial Principles

3. Where glossators suggest an alternative or additional prefix, writing ‘ab’, ‘de’, ‘prae’ etc. above the prefix of the text word, we expand to the full form without comment. (To be distinguished, of course, from cases where ‘ab’ etc. are offered as prepositions.)

4. When a particular gloss occurs twice or more in the same manuscript and relating to the same lemma, we indicate this by placing (2x) etc. after the manuscript siglum, and in the apparatus distinguish the repeated glosses as (1) and (2) etc., depending on where they appear in relation to the text, on the basis that glosses repeated in the same part of the page are numbered sequentially and where they occur in different parts of the page they are numbered on the basis that interlinear precedes marginal; top margin precedes other margins; left margin precedes right margin; side margins precede bottom margin; earlier page precedes later page. So the list of witnesses to the gloss will say ‘Lh (2x)’ and the variants will say ‘Lh(1)’ or ‘Lh(2)’ or ‘Lh(1,2)’, meaning that the variant is to be found in the first example or the second or both.

5. Where there are several witnesses to a gloss and one of them cannot be read in full because of damage, fading, etc., we note that in the list of sigla, with round brackets round the siglum, but do not indicate which words are witnessed and which not. (And for the sake of simplicity we use the same system for Pd, in which the scribe leaves gaps where he/she apparently could not read their exemplar.) But where there is only one manuscript witness to a gloss or variant reading, we record the reading as best we can and indicate with round brackets what is unreadable (with letters if we can make a good guess at the lost reading, with ellipses otherwise or colons if it is possible to specify the number of letters).

6. Old High German glosses are marked with (OHG) and Old English ones with (OE). Dry-point (= scratched) glosses are marked with (dp.).

7. > means altered to; < means altered from.

8. « » encloses erased readings, with letters if we can make a good guess at the lost reading, with ellipses otherwise or colons if it is possible to specify the number of letters.

9. (!) indicates exceptionally anomalous readings.

10. (?) indicates uncertain readings.

11. [] enclose supplied letters or words, or ellipses where the scribe has left a space and we cannot confidently fill it.

Prologus 1 [= Peiper Vita I]

Tempore Theodorici regis insignis auctor Boetius claruit qui uirtute sua consul in urbe fuit. Cum uero Theodoricus rex uoluit tyrannidem exercere in urbe ac bonos quosque ex senatu neci dare, Boetius uero eius dolos effugere gestiens, quippe qui bonis omnibus necem parabat, uidelicet clam litteris ad Grecos missis nitebatur urbem et senatum ex eius impiis manibus eruere et eorum subdere defensionem. Sed postquam a rege reus maiestatis conuictus iussus est retrudi in carcerem. In quo repositus hos libros per satiram edidit, imitatus uidelicet Martianum Felicem Capellam qui prius libros De Nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii eadem specie poematis conscripserat, sed iste longe nobiliore materia et facundia ei praecellit quippe qui nec Tullio in prosa nec Virgilio in metro inferior floruit. Boetius iste de familia fuit Manlii Torquati nobilissimi uiri qui etiam peritissimus fuit utriusque linguae Graecae et Latinae. Vnde et fultus auctoritate Graecae scientiae multos libros de Greco in Latinum transtulit. Fecit commentum super Ysagogas ·i· introductiones Porphyrii. Edidit et aliud super Aristotelis Periermenias ·i· interpretationes, quod diuisit in duo uolumina quorum alterum analitica ·i· resolutoria appellauit ubi omnes syllogismi rethoricae artis resoluuntur. Composuit musicam quam transtulit de Pithagora et Ptolomeo Grecis nec non etiam arithmetica cuius partes sumpsit de Nicomacho. Fecit et alios perplures. Nouissime autem iam senex edidit hunc libellum in exilio positus hac de causa. Theodoricus rex Gothorum cum per tyrannidem rem publicam inuasisset et omnes consules nobilesque Romanorum alios occidisset alios in exilium misisset, hic iam consul factus et filios iam consules factos habens cum peritissimus sapientia ac consilio rem publicam ad libertatem reuocare uolebat.

fide et foedere rem publicam inuaserant, et nulla eis uis Romana resistere poterat, inde iam paulatim uergere tanta gloria et ad hanc defectionem quam nunc cernimus tendere coeperat. Namque contigit sub tempore Zenonis, qui ab Augusto transactis iam quingentis et viginti tribus annis quadragesimus nonus imperator extiterat, ipso in Constantinopolitana sede posito, Odoagrum Turcilingorum et Rugorum regem qui et Herulos et Scyros secum habuit Romanos et Italiam sibi subiugasse Theodoricum uero regem Mergothorum et Ostrogothorum Pannoniam et Macedoniam occupasse. Deinde ab imperatore Theodoricus Constantinopolim propter uirtutis famam accitus et magnis honoribus quasi socius regni apud eum diu habitus et familiaritati atque intimis consiliis admissus, precibus egit ut annueret ei si contra Odoagrum dimicaret et uinceret ipse pro eo Italiam regeret. Et sic eum a se discedentem magnis Zeno ditauit muneribus commendans ei senatum et populum Romanum. Ingressus ergo Italiam Odoagrum intra triennium ad deditionem coegit atque occidit. Deinde potitus est totius Italiae Romanorum autem iura consulto imperatoris primum disponens. Dehinc uero succedente Anastasio imperatore et Iustino maiore rem pro sua libidine administrare incipiens contradicentes occidit. Inter quos Symmachus patricius et gener eius Boetius gladio perierunt. Sanctissimum quoque papam Iohannem usque ad necem carcere afflixit. Ipse autem sequenti anno regni sui trigesimo, ira dei percussus est, succedente in regnum Adelrico nepote eius. Hinc Romana res publica iam nulla esse coeperat quae Gothorum regibus tunc oppressa est usque ad Narsetem patricium qui sub Iustino minore propulsatis Gothorum regibus Langobardorum manibus Italiam tradidit et simili eam fecit peste laborare. Horum autem iugum post ducentos et quinque annos ex quo intrauerunt Italiam Karolus Francorum rex abstulit et auctoritate Leonis papae qui eum ad defensionem apostolicae sedis inuitauit ipse imperator ordinatus est. Post ipsum uero et filios eius imperatoris nomen ad Saxonum reges translatum est. Ergo Romanorum regnum defecit ut Paulus prophetauit. (Ga) Vg;

1. Primitus quaerendum est tempus locus persona. Nam tempore quando Theodoricus rex Symmachum martyrizauit cuius filiam Boetius habuit, idem ipse Boetius hunc librum edidit, ac postea Boetium occidit. Persona: Boetius; locus: Roma. Ec Fd Gc Mf;
- 10 2. In exponendis au\c/toribus haec considerata sunt: poetae uita, titulus operis, qualitas carminis, scribentis intentio, numerus librorum, ordo librorum, explanatio. In tres partes diuidunt poetae carmen suum: proponunt, inuocant, narrant. Plerumque tamen duas res faciunt et ipsam propositionem miscent inuocationi quod in utroque opere Homerus fecit. Namque hoc melius est. Lucanus ipsum ordinem uertit, primo enim proposuit, inde narrauit, postea inuocauit ut est: nec si te pectore uates accipio. Ka;
3. Iste liber componitur quinque partibus ·i· de genere, specie, differentia, de proprio et accidenti. Ap Ct Fb Fd (Go) Kc (Oa) Pt Va;
- 20 4. Quis? Boetius. Quid? Librum de consolatione philosophiae. Cur? ob suam consolationem. Quomodo? Uersifice uel prosaice. Quando? Tempore Theoderici. (...) Qua facultate? Quia omnibus artibus erat doctus et ex aliis scilicet Marciano et aliis habebat exemplum. Bd.

15 HAEC DUM – AMBIGUAE: Cum dicitur (....)dum est (...) solum e(...). Tacitus quia cum solus esset turpe loqui fuisset, nisi tantum orationes. Abusiue uocant Italici querimoniam lamentationem (... ..) potest quisque queri. Officio posuit quia stilus absque officio ·i· scriptione, nisi designat. Scriptio dum fit, scriptura quando facta est dicitur. (...) querimonia est quae non est lacrimabilis et e contrario
20 utrumque posuit. Signum dicitur quod per se significat aliud praeter se, ut tabula per se ·i· per scripturam rem designat pro quae notatur. Astitisse in hoc potest intellegi an staret, an iaceret, uel sederet. Si quis corporaliter uoluerit intellegere, quia si staret, non potuisset corporaliter mulier supra uerticem astare. Si iaceret non supra uerticem seu oculos stetisset. Verum enim intelligendum est spiritum sibi accidisse. Ad modum re quod sapiens uacuuus cacumine(?) debet esse, ante cuius faciem uereantur ceteri agere stultitiam. Ignis infatigabilis est naturae, quia quanto magis sibi materia lignorum abundat, tanto plus emicat. Haud aliter sensus philosophi ex sententiarum abundantia. Per oculos interius perspicaces acumen intelligentiae philosophi, quo supra communem hominum ualentiam cernit.
