God and Darwin

do not get along because God is female. She is.

Although I am also female, I can't be expected to love only God because Darwin is too Dag-Gone Powerful.

You see, he climbed into my mouth with two black-haired white hands and bare black-haired white feet and a gorilla shaped head when I was twelve.

And now he sits cross-legged on my heart, making me do stuff.

I try to separate the two, to make Darwin stop sitting on top of God (I mean, why not? My brain wouldn't mind the company.), but he refuses to move, sitting there complacently pulling the strings of my life.

So they don't get along.

When I listen to Darwin too much, God grows numb underneath him (God is at least polite). But when I listen to God, Darwin throws such a fit, jumping up and down thrashing his arms about spitting everywhere and yelling loudly until I finally pay attention to him again.

It's so sad, but often God and I need his permission for some female bonding time.

It's so hard to keep Her happy like this, but I do my best to make Her understand that although She created him, it is now his world.
