See exclusive online content and multimedia at spartandaily.com

Weather: Clear

H: 80 L: 51

Printed on recycled paper

INSIDE

P. 6 Sports: Spartan football looks to close out its last road game with a win over the New Mexico State Aggies

P. 7 Opinion: Kelsey Lynne Lester-Perry gives her advice on dealing with anger and abuse in the latest 'In My Experience'

P. 8 A&E: Students show off their winter apparel in new 'Spartan Threads'

since 1934
Volume 139 / Issue 38
Tuesday, November 6, 2012

ELECTION 2012

Election day: Why do we vote on Tuesday?

By Melanie Martinez @meltinez

Most voters are not ecstatic about battling crowds at the polls and rearranging work schedules to vote on Tuesday.

Glen Gendzel, history associate professor at SJSU, said that the trademark Tuesday makes voting difficult for many eligible and registered voters since it conflicts with their daily schedules.

"Making voting inconvenient does not have a random or equal impact on all voters," Gendzel said. "Some people's jobs allow them much more flexibility, or they don't have to work at all, whereas other people's jobs are not flexible."

As droves of Americans rearrange their schedules to flock to voting polls today, many don't pause to ponder amid the voting chaos why we actually vote on Tuesday.

A recent NPR interview with historians and political activists cleared up the mystery.

Really, the decision goes back to the 1800s and good old-time horses and buggies that were used to travel to distant polling places, which turned the day into a type of celebration, Senate Historian Don Ritchie told NPR in an interview on Oct. 23.

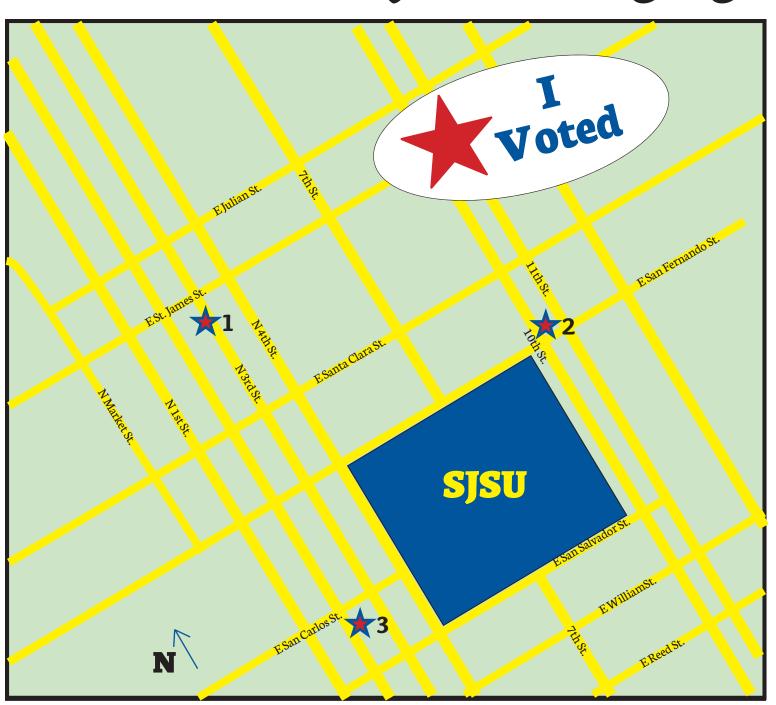

"In the 1840s, elections were a big to-do — there was a lot of hoopla, there were parades," Ritchie said. "Whole families would come on wagons from the farms; people would get dressed up for the occasion."

According to Ritchie, Congress settled on Tuesday for federal elections in 1845 because weekends were often inconvenient travel days that would conflict with Sunday, the Sabbath, a day when many Americans of the time didn't travel.

SEE VOTE ON PAGE 3

ELECTION 2012

Exercise your voting right

Infographic by Nick Celario

Local polling centers around downtown

1) Town ParkTowers60 N. 3rd St.

2) Grace Baptist Church 484 E San Fernando St.

3) First Immanual Lutheran Church 374 S. 3rd St.

Go to the Santa Clara county website to find your polling place: http://eservices. sccgov.org/rov/

Be sure to follow Spartan Daily on our website and Twitter. Use #SJSUvotes and look for your tweets in Wednesday's issue.

CAMPUS

SJSU students deliver meaningful mentoring for elementary students

By Natalie Cabra @SD_ncabral

A lunchtime bell signals the presence of Fuerza Escolar every Friday for students at Washington Elementers

The program Fuerza Escolar is run through SJSU's Cesar Chavez Community Action Center and has been providing college mentors for Washington Elementary students during their lunchtime since 2008, according to program assistant Ben Vargas.

Washington Elementary is a local San Jose school located on Oak Street just a few blocks away from SJSU.

Vargas, a sociology major, said the program reaches beyond simple tutoring and help with literacy.

"We do help with literacy, but a lot of these kids don't have a role model at home," Vargas said, "Many of them come from rough family backgrounds."

That lack of a role model in the home, Vargas said, is something the program adapts to with the help of college student volunteers.

A little more than 94 percent of Washington Elementary students were considered socioeconomically disadvantaged during the 2010-2011 school year, according to the San Jose Unified School District's accountability report for Washington Elementary.

Vargas said it is a percentage many SJSU students are unaware of.

"It's very eye-opening to a lot of SJSU students," Vargas said, "So many students here don't notice the underprivileged community around them."

Students who volunteer for the program, according to Vargas, aren't limited to just students seeking required volunteer hours either.

Sociology major Thy Truong joined the program in Spring of 2012 and said the first steps to becoming a mentor weren't easy.

"At first I was really nervous because the word mentor is something I take very seriously," Truong said.

After meeting her student, however, Truong said the benefits of the program just fell into place.

"My student reminded me of myself just because she was so quiet," Truong said, "But once we knew each other, she'd hold my hand and tell me all about her weekend. We both got out of our shells."

Fuerza Escolar, according to Vargas, impacts students beyond their lunchtime visits as well.

"The problem with many of these kids isn't that they don't like to read," Vargas said, "It's that they just aren't good at it."

Vargas said some of the program's students went from struggling with

Fuerza Escolar program mentor Vania Alfaro helps two boys practice their literary skills during lunchtime. Photo courtesy of Ben Vargas

sentences to reading in front of class-

During his second semester of mentoring, Vargas recalled being paired with a third-grade boy who struggled with basic reading skills.

"I started off with easy books for him like picture books about sharks," Vargas said, "I would then act dumb and ask questions about the sharks and he would answer me without even thinking about it."

According to Vargas, the young boy eventually worked his way up to longer books such as those from the "Captain Underpants" series.

"What was really amazing, was that just weeks later he was really reading," Vargas said.

SEE ESCOLAR ON PAGE 3

Student inspires himself, others in effort to maintain health

By Kimberley Diaz @SD_KDiaz

With a passion to help others be physically fit and improve his own lifestyle, Pat Gimeno believed becoming a fitness instructor was the right path to take.

Gimeno, a senior kinesiology major, is a big supporter of staying fit, so he helps others as a fitness instructor at the SJSU Sport Club Fitness Center and the 24 Hour Fitness Super-Sport club in Sunnyvale where he teaches BodyPump, bar sculpting and Despite his success with fitness, Gimeno wasn't alwavs as fit as he is now.

"When I was a kid, I was one of the more fatter kids in class," Gimeno said. "I would eat junk food and go on an eating binge. As a result, I had health problems and I couldn't handle stuff with stress that was coming towards me like school and different job opportunities."

Gimeno said that his 100-year-old grandmother was the one who inspired him to change and get into fitness when he had to keep her active after a stroke that put her in a wheelchair more than 10

"Every weekend I would come and take care of my grandmother by being her physical therapist or psychical instructor," Gimeno said. "I'd go in everyday, and I'd be in a chair too, and we'd get our hands up and just doing a lot of things that would keep somebody active. She would get a sweat and she would feel a lot happier during the day."

Helping his grandmother be active and happy inspired him to get more into fitness, but another reason that inspired him was his trouble with anxiety.

His anxiety led to panic attacks, and he became overweight. His mother decided to take him to fitness classes two years ago.

There he met a fitness instructor named Patrick who was vibrant, energetic and inspired people in his class to keep moving and communicate with one another.

"Through that (the class), I started losing weight, I started saying, 'maybe this is something that I want to do,"

Christina Maino, a fitness coordinator at the Sport Club and Gimeno's boss, first met him when he came into her office to ask for more information about becoming a fitness instructor.

"We sat down and talked. and then he ended up going through a fitness training program over the summer, auditioned and now he's on staff," she said.

In order to became a fitness instructor, Gimeno had to take a 10-week fitness instructor course and audition to be considered.

"He was nervous," Maino said. "Everyone is always nervous the first time they audition or teach a full class. But it was good. He had high energy and knew what he was doing."

From then on, Maino noticed how dedicated Gimeno became, as he is always working on a way to better himself as an instructor.

Despite dedication, Maino said that Gimeno had one problem during his training, and that was keeping up with the beat of the music and being able to quickly change exercises smoothly with the

"For most people, that is going to be the hardest part," Maino said. "But he worked on it all the time. He came in the office constantly, asking me questions, working on it with me and he nailed it."

Gimeno now has a few regulars that come to his classes who keep coming back not only for the hard workout, but for the energy

Graduate student Jessica Johnson is a regular student in Gimeno's cycling class at

She didn't care much for cycling and found it boring, but her friends encouraged her to attend Gimeno's class.

"I am not a fan of cycling at all," Johnson said. "When we went to Pat's class, for me it was really exciting from the very start. Even the warm ups, he has us stretch and high-five each other, sing along to songs and afterwards you don't even notice the time you've been doing this strenuous exercise."

Johnson and her friends entered Gimeno's class five weeks late, but he helped her and her friends feel welcome.

"When we came in, he immediately noticed," Johnson said. "He came right up to us, talked to us, made us feel welcome and assured us that even though we missed the first five weeks that it was not going to be a problem. It was really nice. He made us feel really welcomed."

Johnson said she wants to take another one of his classes next semester and is excited to keep attending his

"He makes the classes go by really quickly," Johnson said. "Its partially because of his personality coming out of the class and it makes it so you enjoy spending time with him in class and you don't notice that you're doing a hard workout."

In addition to his journey to become a fitness instructor and help others, Gimeno also began to do the INSAN-ITY workout, a vigorous program that helps people lose weight in 60 days. He did it in order to lose some weight and have more energy, look better for himself and his

"I wanted to look good for my students especially," Gimeno said. "I'm a role model for people when I go out there and do my workouts. Would you want to have a fat instructor on stage? I don't think you would."

He initially weighed 217 pounds and is currently around 190 pounds, five pounds away from his goal of 185.

Gimeno is currently expanding his repertoire and has become RIPPED (Resistance, Intervals, Power, Plyometrics, Endurance and Diet) certified, which is a choreographed boot camp, according to Maino.

Gimeno hopes to continue as an instructor next semester, to keep strong and to continue to live by a motto that he finds important: "Live to give."

"Don't think about what you can get from people, but what you can give to people," Gimeno said. "Whether it be energy, your smile, a gift, a helping hand, anything you can give to people without asking for it in return."

Kimberley Diaz is a Spartan Daily Staff wirter follow her on Twitter at @SD_KDiaz.

Longtime SJSU professor celebrates 90th birthday on campus

By James Tensuan @itensuan

In room 205 of the Music building, cupcakes and napkins rested on top of a piano and faculty and students waited for the arrival of Gus Lease to surprise him on his 90th birthday.

"I can't believe I'm 90!" Lease said as he was welcomed with a song and cupcakes. After blowing out the candles, the youthful baritone led the class in "Hail Spartans" with the help of some band members.

Lease's daughter, Vicky Smith, and her husband flew in from Okoboji, Iowa just for the celebration.

Smith said Lease opted for a small and quiet party over the weekend with only family, which was a stark contrast to the ruckus his birthday party made in room 205.

After the band left and the party simmered down, Kim Plowman, an old friend of Lease's, sat down at the piano and reminisced about the good times they had as she played music for the class.

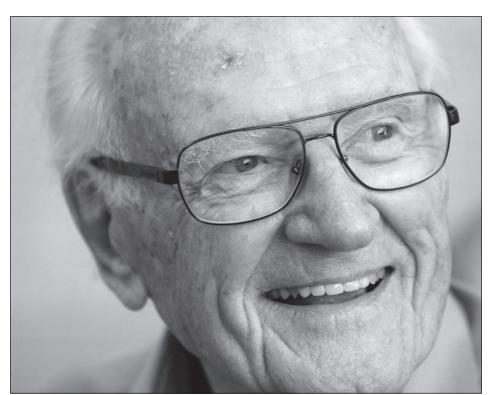

"We're so proud of him," Smith said. Lease has been teaching at SJSU for 63 years and is currently teaching Music

"As long as the students don't say that old fuddy-duddy better get out of here, I'll keep teaching," Lease said. He said his favorite part about teaching is the students and feels like they are his children.

James Tensuan is the Spartan Daily multimedia editor. Follow him on Twitter at @jtensuan.

Gus Lease blows out the candles during his surprise 90th birthday party in room 205 of the Music Building. Some family traveled from out of state to celebrate with him. Photo by James Tensuan /

Gus Lease smiles as he celebrates his 90th birthday with friends and family. Photo by James Tensuan

| Spartan Daily

Gus Lease gives a kiss to long-time friend and piano accompanist Kim Plowman during his surprise birthday party. Photo by James Tensuan / Spartan Daily

ELECTION 2012

ELECTION Electronic voting Thirty-one states allow U.S. troops and overseas civilians to submit absentee votes electronically. Voting methods these states permit: Fax and Limited fax Full internet voting email and email* Email only R.I. 🗌 Del. D.C. *Can be used only if voter is in imminent danger, emergency or complications © 2012 MCT Source: Common Cause, Verified Voting Foundation, Rutgers University law School Constitutional Litigation Center NOTE: Alaska and Hawaii are not to scale Graphic: Judy Treible

Pentagon pushes email voting for troops despite security concerns

By Greg Gordon McClatchy Tribune

WASHINGTON — Counties in 31 states are accepting tens of thousands of electronic absentee ballots from U.S. soldiers and overseas civilians, despite years of warnings from experts that Internet voting is easy prey for hackers.

Some of the states made their technological leaps even after word spread of an October 2010 test of an Internet voting product in Washington, in which a team of University of Michigan computer scientists quickly penetrated the system and directed it to play the school's fight song. The Michigan team reported that hackers from China and Iran also were on the verge of breaking in.

Election watchdogs, distraught over what they fear is a premature plunge into Internet voting, put most of the blame on an obscure Defense Department unit that beckoned state officials for 20 years, in letters, legislative testimony and at conferences, to consider email voting for more than 1 million troops and civilians living abroad.

The Pentagon's Federal Voting Assistance Program persisted in its below-the-radar pitch even after Congress refused to endorse any form of Internet-related voting, delegating that responsibility largely to the National Institute of Standards and Technology in 2005. Seven years later, the program still says more research is needed.

Congress balked after Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz scrapped a live demonstration planned for the 2004 presidential election because of security concerns.

Election officials from Mississippi to Washington state who've embraced email and fax voting say that it's worth a small risk to protect troops' voting rights, and that hackers also could attack other types of electronic voting widely used at U.S. polling places, such as digital and optical scanners.

But most states have begun requiring verifiable paper trails for those systems, an option that is difficult to incorporate in Internet voting, and which compromises privacy.

It's unclear to what degree the tiny program influenced states to pass laws permitting Internet-related voting, but the Federal Voting Assistance Program and its recently departed chief, Robert Carey, are drawing fire for allegedly overstepping their mission.

David Jefferson, a computer scientist at California's Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory — who calls email and fax transmission "by far the most dangerous forms of voting ever implemented in the U.S." — said the Pentagon program's and Carey's advocacy "have done grave damage to U.S. national security, and it will be very difficult to undo it."

Jefferson, who doesn't work on ballot security issues at Lawrence Livermore but has studied them for a decade and is on the board of the Verified Voting Foundation, an election watchdog group, said that partisan, criminal or foreign hackers could alter emailed or faxed votes in several ways.

For example, he said, they could intercept ballots as they hop from server to server and — without detection — transform losers into winners. Or "malware" could sit silently on a voter's computer until he sends his ballot, which it could instantly divert to the malware designer for modification before it reaches election officials.

Infographic by MCT

Suzannah Goodman, director of government watchdog Common Cause's voting integrity project, said the Federal Voting Assistance Program leadership's advocacy was "irresponsible," given the security warnings.

"State lawmakers and election officials trusted FVAP, thinking that the Department of Defense wouldn't support online voting for the troops if it wasn't secure," she said.

Carey, a former Navy pilot and Senate Republican aide who became something of a crusader for upgrading the military's "1950s-style, paper-and-pen" voting during his three-year tenure that ended in July, rejected the criticism.

"I don't believe that I was an evangelist for the electronic return of the voted ballot," he said. "I was not going to stand in the way of election jurisdictions who wanted to pursue full Internet voting on their own authority."

He called Jefferson a zealot who wants no zero risks in electronic voting but "ignores the fact that 200,000 to 250,000 military voters are unable to successfully cast their ballots," a reference to what the military turnout would be if it matched that of other voters.

Escolar: Program looks to help local youth excel in literature

FROM PAGE 1

Mentors of the Fuerza Escolar program are trained to not only help increase reading skills, but deal with the backgrounds the children come from as well, according to Vargas.

"I always tell my mentors before they head over to the school that they need to understand the types of lives these students come from," Vargas said." I tell them that these kids will tell you things you just won't expect."

Vargas said some children would mention everything from family arguments at home to simply not eating in the mornings.

Students offering their Fridays to help out these students have found their own benefits as well.

Jenna Heise, a child and adolescent development major, said participating with Fuerza Escolar changed her life.

"I've learned a lot and changed my career focus to working with children in this demographic," Heise said. "At the least, mentors benefit by having fun and acting like a kid again."

According to Truong, the experience is more than a lesson in a classroom.

"Mentors get a sense of purpose," Truong said. "Sometimes when you're so busy with school and work, volunteering gives you that sense of

Each semester Fuerza Escolar seeks out SJSU students willing to offer their positive influences to the students of Washington Elementary and according to Heise, it's something she hopes to see grow.

"I hope that new mentors make a commitment to this program until they graduate so there can be consistency," Heise said, "The students do remember you and want you to stick around."

According to Vargas, Fuerza Escolar functions for the sole purpose of the students.

"Just seeing the smiles on their faces every Friday is amazing," said Vargas, "They can always count on us."

Natalie Cabral is a Spartan Daily staff writer. Follow her on twitter at @SD_ncabral.

Vote: Historic Tuesday voting has its roots in early America

FROM PAGE 1

Since the no-travel Sunday meant voters couldn't typically reach polls by Monday and since Wednesday was usually a market day in towns, Tuesday was chosen as the most convenient day for 19th-century Americans, Ritchie said.

While voting on Tuesday worked well for Americans in an era of limited technology and transportation, Jacob Soboroff, former executive director of Why Tuesday?, a nonpartisan organization dedicated to increasing voter turnout, told NPR the day has now become inconvenient for many voters.

"In 2012, there is absolutely no good reason whatsoever to be voting on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November," Soboroff said.

According to Soboroff and Why Tuesday?, the day has become a burden for voters who now have to reorganize their work schedules, which leads to low voter turnout.

Melinda Jackson, a political science associate professor, said California law states employers are required to provide time off to vote for employees.

"State law requires employers to provide a paid two hours off to vote but not many people actually know that," Jackson said.

Some students on campus have said voting at a polling place on Election Day has become a hassle since they have to attend class.

Justin Nguyen, a freshman justice studies major, said this is his first year voting but he wanted to avoid the hassle of voting at a crowded polling place.

"I chose the mail-in option since I figured there would be a line," Nguyen said. "I'm just being safe."

Luz Pardo, a junior human resource management/ development major, said she also mailed in her ballot and opted out of tackling the possible lines at the polls today.

"I sent my ballot in Friday morning to save time," Pardo said.

While many Americans have the ability to cast their votes via mail-in ballot, Gendzel said that's still not an adequate solution to the awkward Tuesday voting day.

"It's easy to say that people should just vote early or vote by mail, but quite a few states still don't provide those options," he said.

According to Why Tuesday?, there are still 15 states that don't allow voting by mail which leaves some Americans to scramble to the polls if they want to vote.

Though it is unknown whether Tuesday has anything to do with low voter turnout, The International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance released a report of voter percentages per nation from 1945 to 2001 that placed America as 138th with average voter turnout.

Other nations provide a more liberal schedule for voters which could increase voter turnout, Gendzel said.

"Many election experts are concerned about low voter turnout in the U.S. compared to other democracies, and one solution they suggest is to change election day to a weekend or make it a national holiday so that voters won't have to take time off from work," he said. "Many other democratic countries do this."

Why Tuesday?'s website states the group's actions have led to the introduction of the Weekend Voting Act in Congress that would have moved voting to weekends, but did not pass.

Though Jackson said pushing the voting day to weekend or making it a holiday wouldn't necessarily encourage voting.

"Research shows there wouldn't be an increase of voter turnout in the case of a voting holiday," Jackson said. "It might actually decrease voter turnout with people treating the holiday as a three-day weekend."

Despite the awkward election day and crowd of voters, sophomore advertising major Canh Ha said he is looking forward to casting his vote at the poll near his house.

"The line is part of the anticipation of voting," Ha said.

Melanie Martinez is a Spartan Daily staff writer. Follow her on Twitter at @meltinez.

ENGINEERING

Students engineer imagination in introductory course

By David Wong @davidleedwong

An array of 50 turbines were on display as they carried the aspirations of young engineering students through the lobby of the Engineering building.

The turbines were produced by the Engineering 10 — Introduction to Engineering classes.

Charlie Trevaskis, a sophomore electrical engineering major and lab assistant, said the class project was to design a wind turbine, where they had to build the structure from scrap and then had to design the blade for their turbine on an Auto CAD (computer-aided design) program called SolidWorks.

"They actually built (the turbine) on the computer and using the plastic 3-D printer, they printed out their own blades to use on their turbine," he said.

John Athanasiou, a lecturer in the engineering department who teaches the class, said that the students build and test the turbines, going through all the steps of the engineering process.

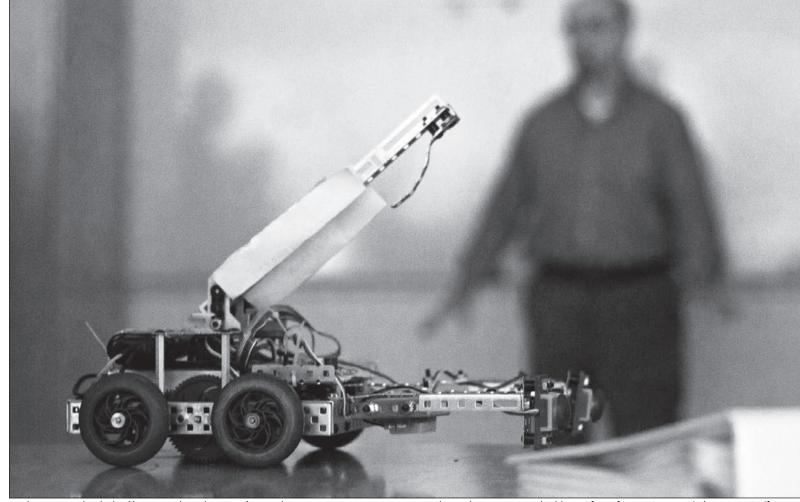

"We're testing it for the stiffness of the structure and the electrical output of the turbine (by how much power it generates based on the number of light bulbs illuminated by the power generated by the turbine)," Athanasiou said.

The class is currently working on its final project for the semester, which involves designing and building robots, according to Trevaskis.

"(With the robots), there will be a red and green (clear plastic beacon with infrared light) and they'll have to go and turn off the red one to stimulate some type of safety switch if there was some kind of meltdown in a factory," Trevaskis said. "Then they have to go to the green one which represents a person and take it out of the arena (a plastic box with one of the sides missing)."

According to Kaitlin Veltkamp, a freshman aerospace engineering major, there are teams of seven students with a clear division of labor.

Veltkamp said that her team has two people working on programming, three people working on circuitry and two people working on the hardware and design of the robot.

A robot sits on the desk of lecturer John Athanasiou's introductory engineering course yesterday in the Engineering building. Photo by Leo Postovoit / Spartan Daily

The entire process takes a month to complete as the students have to use C++ to program their robot to complete tasks as it's not remote controlled, according to Trevaskis and Athanasiou.

Eliseo Lopez, a sophomore mechanical engineering major, said he was excited about writing the code for the robots during the development process.

"It's like learning a whole different language," Lopez

On the first day of the project they were working on soldering circuit boards that will go in the robot.

"We've given them the components, we've given them the board and they are working to solder all of the components together, following the instructions and so forth," Athanasiou said.

According to Trevaskis, the projects that the students work on during the semester vary.

"They start out with just some basic (Microsoft) Excel, but this whole class is to prepare for all of engineering, so they do everything from dealing with electrical circuits and solar panels ... to the wind turbine to building the robot," Trevaskis said.

Each of the projects trains a certain set of skills that apply to the different aspects of engineering, such as mechanical and civil engineering in designing the turbines and software and computer engineering in building the robots, according to Athanasiou.

Nebay Haile (left), a sophomore chemical engineering major and Lawrence Kline, a sophomore computer engineering major assemble the frame of their group's robot on Monday in the Engineering building. Photo by Leo Postovoit / Spartan Daily

"Design is not one activity, it is a process ... we give them new knowledge, they use that to practice, then they use that to design ... their own structures, their own blades, their own robots and so forth," Athanasiou said.

David Wong is a Spartan Daily senior staff writer. Follow him on Twitter at @davidleedwong.

Major Stephanie Pinson, a freshman computer engineering major solders a circuit board yesterday in the Engineering building. Photo by Leo Postovoit / Spartan Daily

A bucket of circuit boards sits on a table in the engineering lab where the introductory engineering course met yesterday. Photo by Leo Postovoit / Spartan Daily

W. W. SPARTANON SPARTANONI

O.W.L.S. chaser T.J. Reid blocks a University of the Pacific chaser from throwing the quaffle into a hoop. Photo by Jacque Orvis / Spartan Daily

O.W.L.S. chaser Kyle Campbell cuts through University of Pacific chasers and keeper to slam a 10-point quaffle score. Photo by Jacque Orvis / Spartan Daily

QUIDDITCI

SJSU O.W.L.S. team flies circles in first Quidditch scrimmage

By Jacque Orvis
@jacqueorvis

"Hit him with the bludger," screamed Emily Knight, an SJSU Original Wizarding League of Spartans (O.W.L. S.) quidditch player.

"One beater on the quaffle at all times!"

Then she grabbed a broom and entered the game, relieving another player.

Seemingly ripped straight from the pages of a Harry Potter novel, these are commands yelled across the field during the SJSU quidditch team's first home scrimmage against Stanford, UC Berkeley, University of the Pacific, UC Davis and the Silicon Valley Skrewts on Saturday.

That's right. Quidditch. The fictional contact sport invented by J.K. Rowling is a sport played in real life, with a few "Muggle" adaptations.

According to Knight, an SJSU graduate and an O.W.L.S. founder, a Muggle is a person who "lack(s) the gift of magic."

It's a term coined in J. K. Rowling's Harry Potter — a seven-book series about a Muggle-raised orphan wizard sent to a boarding school to learn magic.

The storybook game broke into a real-life competitive sport with game regulations and a governing organization called the International Quidditch Association.

Each team has to pay membership fees to the International Quidditch Association to be considered an official team, according to Julian Rosenberg, SJSU quidditch club president and team captain.

He said there are more than 600 recognized quidditch teams in the United States.

"We train and compete like any other team," Rosenberg said. "But we're not a designated team by the school – we're a club." According to Knight, Muggle quidditch has a strong chance of becoming a sanctioned sport.

"The (International Quidditch Association) does a lot of work to make sure the sport stays legit," she said.

Each quidditch team has seven players — a keeper, three chasers, two beaters and a seeker.

Rather than fly, the players run with brooms between their legs.

The beaters throw bludgers — or dodgeballs — at chasers while they try to throw the quaffle — or volleyball — through one of the three hoops at respective ends of the field.

A quaffle toss in the hoop scores the team 10 points. The keepers are the goalies.

All the while, the seeker tries to catch a fleeting snitch, who has a tennis ball wrapped in a sock tucked into his shorts, around the field.

If the seeker catches the tennis ball from the snitch's shorts, it ends the game and scores the team 30 points.

"It incorporates a little bit of everything," said Kyle Campbell, a senior nutrition major and quidditch player , commenting on its similarities to soccer, football and other contact sports.

The SJSU team – the Original Wizarding League of Spartans or O.W.L.S. – played three matches at Saturday's scrimmage, winning the first game against University of the Pacific 110 – 100, losing the second to the Skrewts 170 – 100, and losing to UC Berkeley in overtime 70-90.

The matches are fast-paced, lasting about 15-20 minutes each.

The O.W.L.S. had a strong defense against University of the Pacific.

The keeper tended to block the quaffle from behind the hoops. Gilberto Ortiz, a junior psychology major and chaser, even leaned in between two hoops and tripped over a grounded bludger to block a potential score.

Offense was strong, led by chaser T.J. Reid.

For a 10-point score, the senior radio, television and film major, lept, dodged a rolling bludger and tossed the quaffle into the far right hoop from a seven-foot distance.

"Reid is one of our strongest players," Rosenberg said.

He said Saturday's scrimmage was practice for Sacramento's Quidditch regionals in February, and that he believes the O.W.L.S. have a strong chance to make it to the Florida Quidditch World Cup in April.

According to Rosenberg, they place sixth in regionals to qualify for the Quidditch World Cup.

He said last year, the O.W.L.S. placed fifth, but they did not compete because they were not International Quidditch Association members yet.

"Every time we go to a tournament, there's a new wave of motivation," he said. "We have a very good chance (at winning)."

Jacque Orvis is a Spartan Daily staff writer. Follow her on

See multimedia

spartandaily.com/?p=89258

SPORTS EXPO

Disability Sports Expo brings awareness to wheelchair sports

By Sage Curtis @sagedanielle

The Disability Sport Expo 2012 wheeled into Spartan Complex on Monday evening, giving audience members the opportunity to use a wheelchair and experience playing adapted sports.

The annual event, which is put on by the Sport and Adapted Activities class and Adapted Physical Activity Club, covered sports such as sitting volleyball, power wheelchair soccer, goalball and wheelchair rugby.

"During the expo, we take all these adapted games that most people in the general population don't know about and we play them," said LeAnn Carrillo, adapted physical activity club president. "It's all put on by the student of the class, but we are here to help them if they need it."

Students of the class taught a group of about 30 students how to play the games by explaining the rules and demonstrating the sports, before allowing them to partake in the games themselves.

"These sports aren't just for people with disabilities," Carrillo said. "They are about inclusion."

Guest speakers and sports groups were also in attendance to give students information on disability sports and encourage future involvement.

Keynote speaker Miss Wheelchair California Shira Leeder spoke to the audience about how sports have helped her fit in and given her a sense of accomplishment.

These sports aren't just for people with disabilities. They are about inclusion.

LeAnn Carrillo Adapted physical activity club president

"I have had to grow up with severe cerebral palsy, I have had to constantly teach others about my disability," Leeder said. "Participating in disability sports brings out my happiness and being on a team brought me great joy and long- lasting friend-

Leeder was a member of the San Jose Steamrollers, a local wheelchair soccer team, who demonstrated how to play the sport for audience members and talked about how the sport has helped them over the years.

"We've won a lot of tournaments along the way and done a lot of traveling, but along with that comes the memories we make," said Chris Faira, a team member and senior communication studies major. "Some of the people I've met inspired me to come to SJSU and live on my own. It's part of how I define myself."

SJSU alumna Jenny Mitchell also said that her experience with the Steamrollers has shaped her.

"When I was at SJSU, they didn't have as many disability sports here," she said. "Growing up with a disability, your friends and family never tell you can't do something. We are always aware that there are physical limitations though and sports are one of those. Power soccer is something that we can do entirely independently. It gives me a sense of accomplishment."

Many SJSU majors were represented at the event, including education, special education, nutrition, kinesiology and occupational therapy.

Student participants play wheelchair football at the Disability Sports Expo held at Spartan Complex yesterday . Photo by Sage Curtis / Spartan Daily

"We just worked with wheelchairs in my program," said Sally Chou, a first year graduate student in occupational therapy. "For my career, I think it's important to be here and see what people with disabilities can do."

. Nancy Megginson, a kinesiology professor and event organizer, said that the main benefit of coming to the event is exposure to the sports.

"[Students] can see the sport for itself and the distinction of disability gets minimized in the process of watching the sport," she said. "They can gain an appreciation for the sports, and potentially if they are in fields that deal with people with disabilities, they can utilize it in the teaching of the sports."

Sage Curtis is a Spartan Daily staff writer. Follow her on Twitter at @sagedanielle.

FOOTBALL

SJSU football team faces New Mexico State in season's final away game

Staff Report

Coming off a huge win over University of Idaho Vandals that made the team bowleligible for the first time since 2008, the Spartan football team hopes to continue its win streak against the New Mexico State Aggies in the season's final road game.

During Monday's news conference, head coach Mike MacIntyre addressed how the Spartans were able to hold their composure and seal the win, despite the team having a rough start against Idaho.

MacIntyre hopes this true grit carries over in their last games of the WAC season.

"We had to fight out some emotional deals and to be honest, that is good for our kids to see," he said. "To get down like that, had two or three bad things in a row and never hung their heads and keep fighting – I think that shows a lot of the maturity of our football team."

The Spartans defeated Idaho 42-13, but not without a few scares in the first half of the game with a pair of special team fumbles and an interception from junior quarterback David Fales.

Fales completed 27 0f 39 passes for 328 yards and four touchdowns. He was named WAC Offensive Player of the Week for his performance on Saturday and is currently ranked as the nation's leader in completion percentage at 72.7 percent, according to SJSU Athletics.

Fales is the first SJSU player to be named Offensive Player of the Week this season. Four SJSU defensive players have been named throughout this season, with senior defensive end Travis Johnson named twice and currently tied for SJSU and WAC career records for sacks.

Lopez was also named as one of 20 semifinalists for the Lou Groza Collegiate Place-Kicker Award this week.

We had to fight out some emotional deals and to be honest, that is good for our kids to see.

Mike MacIntyre SJSU football head coach

Lopez is 13 for 13 kicking field goals and is first in the WAC for field goals made per game. He is also the SJSU record holder for points scored by a freshman in a season with a record of 76 points and 37 of 38 extra point conversions.

Currently the Spartans have a 7-2 overall record, marking SJSU's best ninegame record since 1987 when the Spartans went 8-1 and finished 10-2, according to SJSU Athletics.

MacIntyre said that the upcoming matchup against New Mexico State is huge and hopes to continue SJSU's 16-3 lead in the series. Last year the Spartans defeated the Aggies 34-24, but lost in 2010 in a close 27-29 game.

"We just got to turn on Freshman kicker Austin more steam," he said. "Most of the guys in this room played there two years ago and got beat on the very last play of the game and it was a heart-crushing loss."

> According to New Mexico State Athletics, the Aggies lost to the Louisiana Tech Bulldogs on Oct. 27, with Louisiana Tech defeating the Aggies 28-14.

"Louisiana Tech came in averaging about 58 points a game and they couldn't get their 28 points until near the fourth quarter," MacIntyre said. "So this is going to be a very, very tough test for us."

The Aggies are currently 1-8 overall and 1-3 in the WAC. In the Aggies' last contest against Louisiana Tech, junior safeties Davis Cazares and George Callender recorded a total of 29 tackles for the night, with Aggie junior linebacker Bryan Bonilla contributing nine tackles of his own.

New Mexico was able to hold the Bulldogs to one touchdown for six possessions during the first half before Louisiana Tech took over the game in the second half.

The Spartans are currently ranked third in the WAC, sitting second in both scoring offense behind Louisiana Tech and scoring defense behind Utah State.

SJSU plays New Mexico State on Saturday at 1:30 p.m. in Las Cruces, N.M..

Information courtesy of SJSU Athletics.

2012 SJSU WAC Player of the Week Honorees

Player	Week	Performance
Travis Johnson, DE	Sept. 10	Six tackles for loss, SJSU v. UC Davis (W) 45-13
Vince Buhagiar, LB	Sept. 17	11 tackles, SJSU v. Colorado State (W) 40-20
Tyler Ervin, KR	Sept. 24	Returned five kick offs, SJSU @ SDSU (W) 38-34
Travis Johnson, DE	Oct. 1	Eight tackles, SJSU @ Navy (W) 12-0
Bene Benwikere, CB	Oct. 22	11 tackles, SJSU @ UTSA (W) 52-24
Cullen Newsome, S	Oct. 29	10 tackles, interception SJSU @ Texas State (W) 31-20
David Fales, QB	Nov. 5	Four TDs, 27-of-39 passes, SJSU @ Idaho (W) 42-13

Information courtesy of SJSU Athletics

SJSU Being 7-2

- Best nine-game record since 1987 when Spartans were 8-1
- First winning season since 2006
- Bowl eligible for the first time since 2008
- First time since 2006 the Spartans have two winning streaks of three or more games in a season

Information courtesy of SJSU Athletics

Classifieds

Housing

SJSU International House

One block from campus. US & International students. Safe. Friendly. Homelike. Intercultural experience. Wireless Internet access. Computer lab. Study room. Well-equipped kitchen. Pianos and game room. Assigned parking (fee). One semester contract. Apply now! 360 S. 11th St. 924-6570 or http://sjsu.edu/ihouse

2 rooms available in Santa Clara Looking for Grad Students or Faculty Rooms come fully furnished Free housekeeping & satellite T.V. Access to kitchen & pool table Asking for $1,000 per room (includes utilities) For more information call: (408) 988-6207

WE ARE SPARTANS!

DISCLAIMER he Spartan Daily makes no claim for roducts or services advertised below or is there any guarantee implied. The assified columns of the Spartan Dail consist of paid advertising and offer are not approved or verified by the newspaper. Certain advertisements in nese columns may refer the reade o specific telephone numbers o ddresses for additional information classified readers should be reminder assilied readers should be refininged at, when making these furthe intacts, they should require complet formation before sending money foods or services. In addition, reader ould carefully investigate all firm fering employment listings or coupon or discount vacations or merchandise

Announcements

Students can place classifieds in the Spartan Daily for free! Visit us at Dwight Bentel Hall, Room 209 and tell us what you want to post. This must be done in person and an SJSU ID is required. Your classified will run for a maximum of eight publication days unless otherwise specified.

Services

NEED PRIVATE STORAGE

Downtown Self Storage offers discounted rates and great customer service. Located at the 10th/11th St exit from 280 Fwy - call (408) 995-0700 for more details or reserve online at www.selfstorages an jose.com.

Employment

$$ Sperm Donors Wanted $$ Earn up to $1,200/month and help 36 create families. Convenient Palo

Alto location. Apply online: www.SPERMBANK.com

> Call us at 408.924.3270 or Visit us in DBH 209 2pm-3:30pm

ACROSS Engage in a gabfest

- Appear impressively
- large Couch/bed
- hybrid
- 14 Prayer's end
- 15 "What can I say?"
- Apparently
- amazed 17 Wash up
- 18 Do a
- farmer's job Not as well 20 Buddy from
- way back 23 Poét's
- pasture Succumb to
- gravity
- Name tags, briefly
- 28 Impish one Nuttv.
- chewy stuff Baseball starters, in number
- 38 Stick together Shorelines
- do it Tail end of the work week

- 44 Drive back 45 Type of diamond
- earring 46 Absolutely positive
- Sporting spots
- 49 Ömen 51 Explosive
- palindrome 52 Covert fed.
- group 54 One-third of IX 56 Severed all
- 65 Mistake 66 One place
- to get fresh water Romeo (sports car)
- 68 Actor's representative 69 Rent-a-car option 70 Skiers' ride
- 71 Search with a divining rod 72 Longings 73 British
- nobleman DOWN Baby
- powder ingredient 2 Asian nurse

Previous Sudoku Answer

- 3 Jeans purveyor Strauss 4 Mournful
- peal 5 Listlessness 6 Some of this and some
- of that 7 Home of
- the Nobels 8 Canasta
- plays 9 One at an expo 10 Citrus
- variety 11 Narrative
- 12 Candid 13 Stereotypi-
- cal computer programmer
- socialite, for

Previous Puzzle Answer

short 43 Sign of nerves 48 Attack 22 Strike out, in baseball 25 Prefix with woe

30 Clumps of grass 32 Samovars

burning tify with baubles

paradise Small

accessor

option in a restaurant

33 Stop

34 Beau-

35 Group

37 Earthly

39 belief

case

42 Ordering

- word 50 Penpoint 'red" or "structure" 53 Put to rest,
- 26 Less rosy as fears 27 Fools hunt it 55 Seeing red 29 Word of 56 Hoover
  - Dam lake Jason's fleece-
  - finding ship 58 Selected, as straws 59 Ages and
  - ages and ages 60 Roof rim
  - 61 Related 62 Napoleon's first exile
  - 63 A distant point 64 Unfunny
  - Marx

UNIVERSAL

Complete the grid so that every row, column and 3x3 box contains every digit from 1 to 9 inclusively.

DIFFICULTY RATING: ★★☆☆☆

OPINION

America's forgotten political parties

Jonathan Roisman's column appears every other Tuesday.

Happy Election Day, everyone! Today most of you will go cast your ballots for either the moderate candidate or the other, um, moderate candidate who pretends to be whatever you want him to be.

If that sounds boring I have some exciting alternatives so you can show off to your friends and family that you're not some lame conformist.

You can be that person at parties who tells everyone you voted for a third-party candidate because you delved deep into the American political process and saw that the Democrats and Republicans were too similar.

While your friends are laughing at you out loud or silently mock you for throwing away your vote, you can take comfort in knowing you voted for the Modern Whig Party because it sounded it cool.

And come on everyone, voting Green or Libertarian is so 2000. Get with the times!

Here are five minor political parties in the United States that desperately need your vote so they can stay afloat and waste their money again on another presidential campaign in 2016:

American Third Posi-

If you're into anti-semitism and thought 1930s Germany was the heyday of human civilization, these guys might just be right up your alley.

Independent film director Merlin Miller, who had a little face to face powwow with Iran's president, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad in September, according to U.S. News & World Report, isn't into interracial marriage and thinks Jews catch all the breaks.

If you're not sold yet, just know that Kevin MacDonald, a psychology professor at Cal State Long Beach, is one of the party's directors. Whoa!

If you're not white, these wonderful people may not be for you because their motto is "a political party for White Americans."

We know how whites have been the most oppressed group of people in the United States these past two centuries.

Socialist Party USA

If some of the things said about President Barack Obama were true, mainly that he's a socialist, he sure did fool millions of Americans.

He must have carefully orchestrated one of the world's greatest rouses by joining the Democratic Party, a party that prides itself on capitalism with limited governmental regulation, and got himself elected president to spread his socialist agenda. Pretty clever, eh?

If any of that is true, he probably should have joined Socialist Party USA, a party that was against Obama's 2010 health care law, believes in the immediate withdrawal of U.S. forces in Afghanistan and would like a democratic socialist revolution, preferably

Its 2008 presidential candidate, Brian Moore, said Obama is not a socialist and that it's a false message spread by some Republicans. I don't know, sounds like liberal lies to me.

Prohibition Party

If you don't like alcohol, tobacco, marijuana, gambling or pornography I can't recommend the Prohibition Party, America's oldest third party.

It turns out it is not into vices. Or fun.

If you do want to get rid of alcohol, however, write in your vote for Jack Fellure, the Prohibition Party's presidential candidate this year.

Although it is not too popular in today's age of debauchery, the party did garner over 270,000 votes in 1892.

Objectivist Party

If you've ever read a novel by Ayn Rand, particularly "The Fountainhead" or "Atlas Shrugged", and didn't think she was a blowhard who actually has good ideas about individualism, this might be the party for you.

Based on Rand's political ideology of libertarianism, the Objectivist Party would repeal the federal income tax and slowly dissolve the public school system in favor of private schools, according to its official platform.

If you enjoy anarcho-capitalism and don't believe the government should have any say on how you live your life, maybe you should cast your vote for this party.

Just don't complain when you want Social Security, Medicare or the Federal Emergency Management Agency to save you from a flood. You'll have to deal with that on your own.

United States Pacifist

Democrats and Republicans go back and forth every election claiming that the other side is going to reduce the country's military.

I'm not sure why, especially since the military budget goes up every year, but it's a good sound bite.

Anyway, if you're actually against military spending, the United States Pacifist Party might deserve your vote.

The party would like to eventually reduce the military budget to zilch.

The party would also like to have unlimited immigration for anybody who wants in without any regulation, according to its platform.

It sounds good if the world held hands and loved one another, but this isn't Star Trek.

Besides, even the Federation had thousands of ships to defend against the Klingons and Romulans.

In all seriousness, please go out today and vote for the candidate you best feel represents you and the country.

It may not be a perfect society, but you'd be hard pressed to find a better country

Jonthan Roisman is a Spartan Daily staff writer. Follow him on Twitter at @ Jonroisman.

In My Experience: Dealing with anger and abuse

Kelsey Lynne Lester-Perry's column appears every Tuesday.

"In My Experience" is an all-around advice column where expert Kelsey answers your questions based on her life experience.

DISCLAIMER:

Please submit all questions to spartandaily@gmail.com, which will be kept anonymous and answered every Tuesday by Kelsey.

Dear Kelsey,

Two years ago I had a best friend who I hung out with everyday, in his room, since we live on campus.

He would pull my hair, twist my arm, walk on me when I was laying down, etc. He would also call me a bitch, slut and a whore. I told one of our mutual friends, "Jessica", and she told me not to be so hard on him. She said that he doesn't deserve to be talked badly about and that him and I wouldn't make good friends.

Now I live on campus, but in a different building than him so I don't have to worry about running into him.

I told a domestic violence survivor that I wasn't about to let him hurt me again, and she said: "You didn't let him; he took away that choice from you." It was nice to hear support, but I wish I could hear it from a friend rather than a stranger. I still hang out with Jessica, but she is still close friends with him and it really bothers me.

I am trying not to care, but she was the first person (and for a while, the only person) I told about how I was treated.

Sincerely,

Sad Friend

My dearest Sad Friend,

It seems to me you have more of an issue with Jessica and her lack of compassion than you have bad feelings about the male who mistreated you.

Actually, I find it hard to call a male who has the audacity to treat a woman (man, child, animal, etc.) with anything but the utmost respect a man, so I will call him a

I am going to be brutally honest — you need to carefully reassess the situation and think really hard about who it is that has hurt you.

In your letter to me you did not mention once that you were angry at this boy for hurting you physically and emotionally.

You mentioned that you "don't have to worry about running into him." It seems to me that you are hiding behind the hurt that this boy caused you by blaming your female friend Jessica.

You need to confront whatever emotion it is you feel about this boy and the way he treated you.

Whether you are just sad and want to speak with a counselor, are furious and want to press charges or are sick of reliving the accounts over and over again in your head and want to forgive him - I suggest you sit down and make an inventory of specific actions and your emotions concerning those actions.

Write down the boy's name. In one column make a list of all of the things he has done to hurt you, in the next column list how each of these offenses makes you

Next, write down Jessica's name and do the same.

I think you will come to realize that however badly you may be hurt by her lack of empathy, you are really just furious about the way your so-called boy "friend" treated you.

Abuse, be it physical or mental, is a very serious issue and you need to deal with it. But the good thing is you don't have to deal with it alone.

I strongly suggest that you seek professional help to deal with your mental state and possibly pursue pressing charges against

You said you are still living on campus and lucky for you, SJSU offers services that help its students with these types of issues.

Counseling Services is located in the Administration building between Seventh and San Fernando streets upstairs in room 201.

Taking the time to seek help outside of indifferent Jessica by contacting me is the first step in your recovery.

I hope you now take the information I have provided you to take yet another important step away from the past, bad friends and into the light of a bright, hopeful and non-abusive present and future.

I wish you the best of luck Sad Friend and I truly hope this response was helpful.

Love, Kelsey

Kelsey Lynne Lester-Perry is a Spartan Daily senior staff writer. Follow her on Twitter at @kelsey_lynne.

SPARTAN DAILY

EDITORIAL

Executive Editor Jeffrey Cianci

Managing Editor Samantha Clark

Derik Irvin

Production Editors Wesley Dugle

Multimedia editor lames Tensuan

Sports Editor

Nina Tabios

A&E Editor

Opinion Editor Margaret Baum

Features Editor Rebecca Duran

Production and Art Director Leo Postovoit

Communications Director Christina Molina

Copy Editors Rebecca Duran Chris Marian Julie Myhre

Staff Writers and photographers Stephanie Barraza David Bermudez

Dennis Biles Natalie Cabral Sage Curtis Kimberley Diaz Celeste Lodge Melanie Martinez Camille Nguyen Jessica Olthóf Jacque Orvis Thyra Phan Jonathan Roisman Basil Sar David Sheffer

James Simpson

Devon Thames

Senior Staff and Regular Contributors Nick Chu

Sierra Duren Eddie Fernandez Alyxandra Goodwin Ty Hargrove Jesse Jones Raphael Kluzniok Jordan Liffengren Kelsey Lynne Lester-Perry Thomas Webb David Wong Jared Gochuico

Advisers

Tim Burke, Production Chief Richard Craig, News Tim Hendrick, Advertising Kim Komenich, Photo Mack Lundstrom, News Tim Mitchell, Design Jan Shaw, News Pat Wallraven, Manager

ADVERTISING

Ad Director Justin Acosta

Assistant Ad Director Luis Marquez

Creative Director Kristine Young

Assistant Creative Director

Shanique Flynn Account Executives

Sandy Ardian Daniel Davis Oswaldo Diaz Stephanie Garcia Amir Masood Ioshua Villanueva Kara Wilson

Letters to the editor may be placed in the letters to the editor box in the Spartan Daily office in Dwight Bentel Hall, Room 209, sent by fax to (408) 924-3282, emailed to spartandaily@gmail.com or the Spartan Daily Opinion Editor, 1 Washington Square, San Jose, CA 95192-0149.

Letters to the editor must contain the author's name, address, phone number, signature and major. Letters become property of the Spartan Daily and may be edited for clarity, grammar, libel and length. Only letters of 300 words or fewer will be considered for publication.

Published opinions and advertisements do not necessarily reflect the views of the Spartan Daily, the School of Journalism and Mass Communication or SJSU. The Spartan Daily is a public forum.

EACUION TREND

Spartan Threads: Hot outerwear looks for the chilly weather

Photos and Story by Thyra Phan

About her outfit: "Isort of just wanted something to wear with my boots and my lumberjack tunic and ended up with the green knit sweater. I would say that's a pretty standard look for school for me. I wouldn't get any fancier than that, but no pajamas to school."

Favorite item to wear in the cold?: "Scarf."

Must-have clothing items for fall: "Hats, scarves and rain boots."

Style inspiration?: "Other people around campus. Some look amazing every day — even at 8 in the morning, and put together pieces I wouldn't have thought of, so it's always interesting to see the imagination and creativity others put into their outfits."

Personal style: "Laid back and eclectic."

Favorite places to shop: "Target and Macy's or websites for T-shirts such as Woot or Threadless."

Chris Nguyen senior, civil engineering

About his outfit: "I like to complement colors — British, tan shoes with colorful pants go great together, in my opinion. Checkered collared shirts are my favorite patterns to wear. I threw on the tan bomber jacket to tone down my outfit a little. Even though I'm wearing a lot of colors, the colors are duller so my outfit isn't too loud, which is perfect for the fall season."

Favorite item to wear in the cold: "Jackets and coats."

Must-have clothing items for fall: "Jackets, beanies and scarves."

Style inspiration: "Ryan Gosling, Joseph Gordon-Levitt and Bobby Hundreds."

Personal style: Classy and urban

Favorite places to shop: "Cole Haan, Topshop, Levi's, Nike, H&M and Urban Outfitters."

Ngoc Tran junior, chemistry

About her outfit: "I'm skinny, so I like wearing a striped top which makes me look better. I also like the simplicity it brings.

The blazer can fit with a casual or formal style. Because I'm very busy, I need clothes that can be easily styled in five minutes."

Favorite item to wear in the cold: "Leather boots and a long coat."

Must-have clothing items for fall: "A hat and scarf."

Style inspiration: "I don't really have one. I just pick clothes that look good on me."

Personal style: Girly

Favorite places to shop?: "Hollister, Off Broadway Shoes, Forever 21 and

MUSIC COMMENTARY

Political music for a modern world: Top 10 politically-charged musicians

By David Sheffer @SD_DSheffer

The only thing that does a better job than politicallycharged bands pointing out injustices in the world and the corruption of politics are politicians themselves.

During this election year, a reminder of some of the great political music can be helpful in stirring up political ideologies

in people. 10. Bob Marley

Starting the list is Bob Marley, a Jamaican reggae singer that performed from the '70s until his death in

"Buffalo Soldiers" is about Union African-American soldiers who fought in the Civil War, but were still treated as second class citizens: "Stolen from Africa/ brought to America/ fighting on arrival/ fighting for survival."

In the song "Get Up," Stand Up," Marley sings about how people have the power to change the world: "You can fool some people sometimes/ you can't fool all the people all the time."

9. The ClashThe Clash are best known for helping introduce punk rock music to the world in the '70s.

The Clash had several politically-charged songs, but their biggest one, "London Calling," is often not viewed as a political song.

The song is about how the world is getting worse and the helplessness to stop it: "A nuclear error/ but I have no fear/ London is drowning / and I live by the river.

8. Bruce Springsteen:

Bruce Springsteen might not seem like the most obvious politically-charged musician, but his lyrics often show a dark side of the American dream.

The song "Born in the USA," is often viewed as a song of national pride, but is actually an anti-Vietnam War song: "Got in a little hometown jam/ so they put a rifle in my hand/ sent me off to a foreign land/ to go and kill the yellow man."

7. U2:

U2 is well known for their 1983 album "War" and the hit single "Sunday Bloody Sunday."

"Sunday Bloody Sunday" is about the killing of 14 Irish protestors by British troops in 1972: "Broken bottles under children's feet/ bodies strewn across the dead-end street."

The "Bloody Sunday" mas-

Rage Against the Machine's 1992 self-titled album features the f "Killing in the Name." Photo from vintagesound.com

sacre helped the Irish Republic Army get more publicity and soldiers to fight against the British.

6. Joan Baez:

Joan Baez is a folk singer that became popular in the 1960s for being outspoken for civil rights and against the Vietnam War.

Baez popularized the song "We Shall Overcome," written at the turn of the 20th century by Charles Albert Tindley, and became well known for singing at rallies with Martin Luther King Jr. and Cesar Chavez.

The song is a rally to come together and overcome a problem: "We shall overcome someday/ Oh, deep in my heart, I do believe/ We shall overcome some day."

5. NOFX:

NOFX has been around for a couple of decades, cranking out fast and angry punk music.

It was not until 2003 that they came out with the album "War on Errorism," an entire anti-Bush album, that helped establish the band as a modern political force.

The song "Franco Un-American" deals with caring about politics when no around you seems to care: "Now I can't believe; what an absolute failure/ The president's laughing 'cause we voted for Nader."

4. The Dead Kennedys:

The Dead Kennedys are a punk band formed in the Bay

Area in the 1970s.

Their song, "Holiday in Cambodia," released in 1980, is about middle-class white America ignoring the atrocities that were being committed in Cambodia under the regime of Pol Pot: "Well you'll work harder with a gun in your back/ for a bowl of rice a day/ slave for soldiers 'til you starve/ then your head skewered on a stake."

3. Public Enemy:

Public Enemy is a hip-hop group that is more concerned about rapping about political issues than how much bling they have.

The song "Fight the Power" off of 1990's "Fear of a Black Planet," album deals with the struggle of young blacks dealing with a mainly white government: "Most of my heroes don't appear on no stamps/ sample a look back you look and find/ nothing but rednecks for 400 years if you check."

2. Pete Seeger:

Pete Seeger, another 1960s folk singer, was involved in the Vietnam War protest and civil rights.

"If I had a Hammer" is a song about equality for all during the Civil Rights Move-

"It's the hammer of justice/ It's the bell of freedom/ It's the song about love between my brothers and my sisters."

1. Rage Against the Machine:

The top politically-charged band is Rage Against the Rage Against the Machine earns the top spot for being the favorite band of Paul Ryan, Mitt Romney's vice-presidential running-mate.

Tom Morello, the guitarist for Rage Against the Machine, spoke out against Paul Ryan in Rolling Stone, calling Ryan the "machine" they were raging

In 1992 Rage Against the Machine came out with their self-titled album featuring the single "Killing in the Name."

The song was a hard and aggressive rock song with lyrics dealing with racism in middle America: "Some of those that work forces/ are the same that burn crosses" and "You justify those that died by wearing the badge/ they're the chosen whites."

David Sheffer is a Spartan Daily staff writer. Follow him on Twitter at @SD_DSheffer.