Dorms provide easy mark for burglars

By MARK SIMON Daily Staff Writer

How easy is it to steal from the dormitories?

Very easy, according to the Hous-ing Office and SJS Campus Securi-

Due mostly to the apparent negli-gence of residents, since September 1, 36 felonies and misdemeanors have been reported in the campus resi-dence halls, officer John Lux re-

Misdemeanors range from noisiness to petty theft, and felonies include violence and burglaries.

The single major reason for thefts in the dorms is simply that students don't lock their doors, officials say. "How can you impress upon students that they are the key?" Miss Berniece Ryan, housing director asks. "If they lived in their own home, they wouldn't walk out the door and leave it wide open."

"In every case I know of, it's carelessness," Cordell Koland, as-sistant housing director contends. He noted several instances of students leaving their room door open on warm

Lux cites the ease with which a person can gain entrance into the halls as a prime source of crime.

"The red brick dorms are open from any direction, with multiple entrances from each side," he points

Students are fond of propping the doors open thereby giving the thief easy access.

Lorenzo Alexander, resident advisor at Hoover Hall gives locked doors as the reason for the low crime rate in that building. The entrance doors lock automatically if closed and Lorenzo says, "There is no real reason to leave the doors open."

Miss Ryan stated the campus attracts thieves. "Any college campus is kind of a target."

Lux agreed. Lux agreed.

'Lots of students coming from out of state bring all their things from home. This makes it an ideal place for burglars to come in."

"Each person has to assess his or her responsibility," Miss Ryan noted. Aside from the neglect on student's part, the problem of duplicate keys has arisen. "Unless you're going to sit in your room, not too much can be done if the locks haven't been changed," Officer

Lux commented. He stated that West Hall particularly has suffered because a number of master keys have been previously given out.

"A number of keys are now floating around that can open up almost any room," he said.

In addition, the means for a student to get a key copied are various and sundry.

Miss Ryan and Koland contend that they are moving in the area of pre-venting this problem of duplicate keys but declined to state what approach

"There are 1,800 kids who have keys.

If they want to go somewhere and get it duplicated, who can stop them?"

Miss Ryan wondered.

Koland, Miss Ryan and Lux disagree about the seriousness of the dorm theft problem.

The Housing officials contend that the crime rate is down from last year based upon a report from the eight head residents.

"We're talking about 1,800 people living together 24 hours a day," Koland stated.

"I think it's amazing that there are so few incidents." Miss Ryan noted.
Both were particularly pleased about the sharp decrease in the theft of furniture from the dorms.

Got some poisonous drugs? Call 'Analysis Anonymous'

By BRIAN HAMLIN Daily Political Writer

'Analysis Anonymous" has come to

"Analysis Anonymous" has come to the SJS College Union.

No, this isn't a group discount plan for psychiatric care, but a relatively new drug identification program initiated here by Mike Buck, A.S. president, and Paul Sakamoto, associate dean of student services, in cooperation with the Santa Clara County Sheriff's office.

According to Sgt. Don Tam of the county Sheriff's office, the program was instituted as a public service last April to provide free drug analysis to parents, teachers, doctors, lysis to parents, teachers, doctors, and students in the community.

Tam explained that county residents frequently called the sheriff's office to report that they had found pills, powders, and liquids which they were unable to identify but believed to be dangerous or illegal drugs. "Usually the callers were parents who had found pills in their children's possession and didn't know what they were," Tam said.

Unfortunately, drug identification or advice over the phone was almost impossible, and few callers were willing to bring in the questionable substances personally.

Since April, however, people facing this problem have had a simple, anonymous method to identify dan-gerous drugs through the "Analysis Anonymous" envelope system. Tam explained that since April, anyone who comes across pills or drug substances which they want to analyze, need only go to designated health centers, high schools, clinics, or civic centers in the county to obtain a numbered envelope and instruction card.

The drug is placed in the envelope and returned to distribution point, where it is forwarded to a laboratory and analyzed. The instruction card contains a phone number the inquiring party can call in five days for the results of the analysis.

According to Tam, this system performs two important functions. First of all, it alerts the public to the presence of dangerous drugs, and secondly may save a user's life if he's dealing with drugs which have been cut with poisonous substances.

Minorities press for revised charter

City government under attack

By CELESTE ZUFFI Daily Staff Writer

The present form of government in San Jose has got to go.

At least that is the growing senti-ment among blacks, Chicanos, and other Third World groups in this community who believe that the San Jose city charter needs to be revised.

A revision, they believe, is necessary because, as several of their spokesmen have said, "the present council-manager form of government is not responsive to the needs of the people."

Blacks and Chicanos are angry because demands they have presented to the city council in the past four weeks have been denied.

These demands require that the council suspend, without pay, three police officers for their part in the shooting of a black man on Sept. 19, and fire Police Chief Robert Murphy for statements he made following the incident. Two weeks ago the council censured Murphy for his statements. Last week City Manager Thomas Fletcher refused to support the council's censure.

Also last week, Dr. Leonard Jef-fries, head of the Black Studies department at SJS, suggested that the council was "impotent" as a govern-ing body. Instead, Jeffries and other members of the audience addressed their demands to Fletcher, who alone has the power to suspend or fire a has the power to suspend or fire a city employee.

Fletcher has repeatedly refused to meet Third World demands, insisting he "will wait until an investigation of the shooting is completed by the District Attorney and the Grand Jury" before he makes a final decision.

San Jose attorney John Thorne, present at Monday's council meeting, told the council that "shooting a man for a traffic violation can never be justified, unless a weapon has been pulled and exhibited."

John Henry Smith, Jr., a black IBM chemist, was shot by police officer Rocklin Woolley following an argument over a traffic violation. Woolley said later he felt Smith was reaching for a gun. Later reports indicated no gun was found on or near the body.

Thorne said Fletcher could sustant the three officers or fire Murroll.

pend the three officers or fire Murphy if he wanted to, and cited Article IV, Section 701, of the City Charter which clearly defines the city manager's powers.

The charter reads: the city manager "subject to the Civil Service provisions of the Charter. . . . may suspend without pay, demote, discharge, remove or discipline any City officer or employee" he appoints.

Thorne continued by citing Sections 702 and 703, which state that the city manager can be removed by the council or by a recall by the people if he becomes derelict in his duties.

Fletcher explained, however, that if the council suspended the three policemen under question it would jeopardize their defense before the Civil Service Commission.

Article IV, Section 411, of the City Charter specifically states that the council cannot "dictate the appointment or removal of any city officers or employees whom the City Manager is empowered to appoint" is empowered to appoint."

The council can, though, express their views to the city manager regarding the appointment or removal of a city employee.

According to the city's charter,

then, the council's censure of Murphy two weeks ago was apparently illegal.

Frustrated by an apparent unwill-ingness from the council or Fletcher ingness from the council or Fletcher to act on their demands, Third World groups have prepared two petitions suggesting changes in the present council-manager form of government in San Jose. These petitions were presented to the council last Monday.

One petition suggests re-districting

San Jose City Clerk Francis Greiner said yesterday a city-manager form of government has existed in San Jose

When Third World spokesmen asked the council to hand the petitions over to the city attorney so he could prepare them to be placed on the ballot, the council refused.

Just as fraternities and sororities folding, so are SJS boarding houses.
The Catholic Women's Center, once

one of the largest boarding houses for college girls (housing up to 106) is now a residence hotel for approximately 30 elderly ladies.

The house stopped operating as a residence for college-age girls in June of 1970. According to Sister Carmel Rosney, who lives at the Center, the main reason for the change was the trend of more girls wanting to live in apartments rather than resident halls.

Located on the corner of Fifth and East San Fernando streets, the build-ing still retains the same name. In addition to providing room and board for its residents, the C.W.C. also houses the John XXIII Senior Citizens Here senior citizens meet, play cards, play pool, have choir practice or just visit. Field trips, picnics, dances and oil painting classes are also offered.

Although it costs almost twice as much for a woman to live in the C.W.C. now as compared to what the students once paid, the ladies think the rates are reasonable compared to what other living centers are asking. The build-ing has also had a complete facelifting with new paneling, carpets, lighting and paint.

The majority of women living at the Center are very happy with their surroundings and don't mind living near campus. One lady put it:

"It's nice to see young people around." A few of the women are around." A few of the women are living in the same place their daughters and nieces lived in over 15 years

Grievance policy unfair

"Any person who is non-tenured and opens his mouth on this campus is asking to be fired...

"These rules do intimidate people, they are repressive docu-

"I wouldn't talk to you about some of these cases because I know I could be fired."

George Sicular, professor of civil engineering for the past 17 years, made these comments last June in testimony before the American Civil Liberties Union's hearings on the state college grievance procedures.

(A teacher uses the grievance procedures, which were issued last year by the chancellor's ofwhen protesting alleged unfair treatment in his efforts to obtain tenure, promotion, appointment, etc.) After hearing Sicular and other SJS faculty members, the four member ACLU panel found that grievance procedures denied faculty of due process rights and constitutional protection.

In reply to the ACLU's findings,
Dr. John H. Bunzel defended the procedures and, with the obvious guidance of the Chancellor's legal staff, scolded the ACLU's panel of lawyers for their alleged shoddy legal work.

As journalists we can't judge the legality of the procedures. But, we do know the grievance procedures are brutally unfair.

Despite repeated pleas from the ACLU, United Professors of California, and various individuals on campus, the administration has never, to our knowledge, attemped to publicly or privately clear up the fear and confusion caused by the procedures

We feel Dr. Bunzel, especially in light of his professed long-standing commitment to civil liberties, could have been more sensitive to the deeply felt fears of Dr. Sicular and others.

Although we are convinced the present grievance procedures should be scrapped, we also know there is much Dr. Bunzel can do under the present procedures to show his respect for faculty rights to due process.

Under the grievance procedures a three-member faculty committee first hears a grievant's case.

The faculty group hears evidence, rules on the validity of the complaint, and passes its findings on to the president.

But the grievance committee's findings are only recommenda-tions. The president can overrule the faculty committee in "rare instances" and for "compelling reasons.

According to UPC officials, presidents of some state colleges seldom find an instance "rare" enough to overturn the faculty panel's recommendation.

At SJS, on the other hand, according to the UPC, "rare instances" occur relatively frequently.

As things now stand, at SJS Dr. Bunzel alone determines what "rare" means, how often it occurs and what criteria are used to judge an incident rare.

We urge that Dr. Bunzel outline his concept of "rare" so the faculty will also know Dr. Bunzel's rules of the game.

When Dr. Bunzel disagrees with a grievance committee "the president and the grievance committee shall make an effort to resolve their differences," the procedures

In practice, we are told, Dr. Bunzel usually doesn't personally meet with the committee he overturns. We have even heard of cases where Dr. Bunzel has made no actual effort to "resolve the differences.

If the faculty grievance committee is to be a viable--not a token--part of grievance procedures, it would seem that Dr. Bunzel should, with an open mind, sit down with the committee he disagrees with and present his reasons for overruling the faculty

Also, according to the grievance procedures, Dr. Bunzel is to rule within five days or as soon as possible on the grievance committee's recommenda-

In practice, we are told, Dr. Bunzel often interprets "as soon as possible" to be four or five

We think that "five days" should have some realistic relationship to "as soon as possible."

In any case Dr. Bunzel should publicly outline his definition of "as soon as possible." He should also tell faculty members, who have been waiting more than five days for his decision, an estimated day of final decision, a practice that isn't now followed.

The secrecy provisions of the procedures, which say virtually all facets of the grievance procedures except the president's final decision must be confidential, are also long overdue for a detailed explanation by Dr. Bun-

We strongly urge that Dr. Bunzel immediately meet with faculty groups who have been complaining about the fairness of the procedures.

After hearing the groups, Dr. Bunzel should issue a memo, interpreting key but as yet unde-fined wording and sections of the procedures.

The Santa Clara County Board of Supervisor's meetings are so incredibly dull, it's amazing that anyone would actually want to run

For a seat on the board.

But Dan McCorquodale, Eastside San Jose teacher, is determined to win by a walk. Liter-

McCorquodale has vowed to walk every precinct in the third supervisorial district--all 210 of them--by election day next June. A former mayor of Chula Vista, McCorquodale feels the current supervisors are too conservative and not concerned enough about open space and public transportation.

So, he wants to talk to every voter in his district--Milpitas Sunnyvale and part of downtown and Eastside San Jose--and convince them to vote for him.

His only opponent in the race so far is incumbent Charles Quinn. The immediate SJS community is the second supervisorial district, where McCorquodale believes in-cumbent Sig Sanchez will be "re-latively unopposed."

Concerning the dull supervisor's meetings, McCorquodale remark-

"If I'm elected, I'll change

all that."

A name from out of SJS past being kicked around local political circles is that of Bob Pis-ano, Associated Students president in 1964-1965.

Pisano is now affiliated with the prestigious Los Angeles law firm of O'Melveny and Myers, but rumor has it that he may return to his hometown to run for assembly. He is a Democrat.

But the possibility of Pisano being a viable candidate is, at best, a long shot. Since he's been out of the county, most of his political ties here have broken down.

Politics, as the saying goes, makes strange bedfellows. Many strange arrangements crop up in California because, by state law, the smallest unit of an official political party organization is the county, instead of East-ern-style wards and precincts. The county boundaries drawn in the 1870s, make for some strange political mixes in some areas.

The great block of Democratic support is located in Eastside and downtown San Jose -- in other words, in south county.

It was in south county where SJS-based Frontlash (nominally non-partisan, but Democraticbacked registered more than 19,000 voters in 1970-most of them Democrats.

And it was in south county where 1700 people joined John Vasconcellos's "campaign community" to return him to Sac-

This Alamo, located eight miles north of Bracketville, was built in 1961 for John Wayne's $12 million film, "The Alamo." Along with the replica of the famous mission, there is a village of 36 authentic 19th century adobe and frame buildings.

Aside from being a tourist attraction, the village has been used for such Westerns as "Bandolero" and "Two Rode West."

On November 13, 1951, the students of SJS voted to tax themselves in the form of a $20 per academic year activity fee. Some of the intended uses of these student tax monies were for student government and its subsid-iary bodies, social affairs, fa-cilities for student expression through organizations and publications, an office with permanent staff to handle activities and funds for student organizations, and to provide an informal medium for supplementing and relating to the academic and non-academic factors of education. (Education Code, section 20345.7, later changed to section 23805) Almost 20 years later, we still find the activity fee limited to $20 per academic year, (Execu-tive Order #36 from the Chan-cellor's Office, February 17, 1967), but the demand placed on the student body funds has in-creased, as well as the oper-ational cost of running the various student body activities. The major allocations of that budget support instructional related activities in the following

SJS student designs rings

By MINGO MAZZEI Daily Feature Writer

If SJS student Bob Johnson were to take his craft and step back into the Middle Ages, he would probably feel just as comfortable as he does in the present

Johnson's craft, designing rings from lumps of silver and gold, is done the same way today as when the craft was first conceived. If you do it right, he adds.

"There's a lot of crummy jewelry around," stated Johnson, "beof people going around saying you can make jewelry in your back yard. There's not any discipline involved and this is the key to making good jewelry.
The art of ring-making struck an interest in Johnson about two years ago. "I was lookstarted reading about jewelry making. I said 'gee, I could do that if I had the tools' and that's how it started."

His interest in the craft led Johnson to a summer job assisting geles jewelry maker. Johnson said he went into the shop of Joe Apo-doca during Christmas vacation and struck up a conversation. In the course of the talk, Johnson acquired the summer job of making rings from Apodoca designs.

When he first began to make rings, John-son said he purchased his materials from jewelry stores, but now he orders directly from the smelter which is cheaper. He buys most of the stones he uses for settings from gem shows.

Johnson, seeking a B.A. psychology with

"I don't know if I'd rings start around $25 if it's an original design. The prices are lower if it is a production item. Johnson stated that he will design what he terms "fad" rings but prefers to do designs that "will still look good 10 to 20 years from

Johnson feels that the American public is just now beginning to appreciate hand crafts but all too often these crafts are ruined with the introduction of do-ityourself kits not only in jewelry but in other crafts as well.

Casting is one method which speeds up the ring-making process, but Johnson prefers to work directly on the me-tal itself. This fabrication of metal as it is called, is becoming a lost art, he explained. A major step in ring making, it includes careful filing and cut-

Johnson said that currently the jewelry trade is dominated by old people who have brought the craft into this country from their homeland. Part of the craft's salvation Johnson said, will stem from the fact that so many new people are now coming out and showing their crafts, "something they wouldn't do before," he

It's a well known fact that many artists (take Van Gogh and Frans Hals for instance) gain public recognition

Los Angeles artist John Altoon, however, was appreciated during his life as well. His drawings and graphics of 1964-1968 are cur-rently in the Art Gallery, and are clear evidence why Altoon's works are so outstand-

Discussing Altoon's unique style, gallery director Bruce Radder stated his "use of color was softer and more diffused, often floating lightly in a sea of white Turneresque jets of tinted steam."

His works have been exhibited in New York, San Francisco, Tokyo, and, of course, his Los Angeles. There will be a special John Altoon comprehensive art ex-hibit are five of Altoon's lithographs and drawings from three series: "Alice in Wonderland" (1966), "Frogs and Princesses" (1967) and Cowboys and Indians' (1968).

In his erotic "Frogs and Princesses" draw-ings, nude princesses and green frogs are carthese works; this aspect is quickly overpowered Altoon's general easy-going, free style.

"Cowboys and Indians," Altoon's final series, is a woven tan-gle of pen strokes and overlapping forms. Like Jackson Pollock's paintings, the Los Angeles artist also has an ever-moving thin line to unify the rather intricate work.

The "Cowboys" series is a satirical vision of contrasting the "perfect Western lady" with the "savage" ind-

Altoon smashes this stereotyped outlook, however, by showing both women and Indians as truly human; perhaps to him we all are sensual beings.

The majority of these drawings show 19th Century women being undressed or "war painted" by Indians. Together with the light style of Altoon, the subject matter fits the techni-

USF (4-1) holds a 10-6-3 edge in the series since Spartan coach Julie Menendez arrived on the scene in 1953. The Dons have won three league crowns for coach Steve Negoesco since 1962, including the NCAA title in 1966.

Next time you're looking for a way to ward off the Dreaded Sunday Ennui, why not go fishing? Now, wait. Don't turn away in disgust until you've read a few paragraphs. Around here, there are really two basic way to do it. One of them is cheap, fun, and you usually catch fish; the other is a little more expensive, ill fun, and you often don't catch anything. Let's assume that you've never fished in your life and you want to know if you like it before you put a lot of money into it. You're going to need a little equipment. Not much, but kite string and a bent pin won't do the job.

What you do is, you go to a sporting goods store and buy some fishing line, 10-pound test, and some little hooks about as big as your finger-Get the kind with the monofilament already tied on--they're called "pre-snelled" hooks. That's all you really HAVE to have, and it shouldn't cost more than a couple of dollars.

You may also want to get some lead sinkers. If you don't want to spend the 50 cents, you can use a rock or a couple of old keys or a spark-

Go to Santa Cruz and walk out on the wharf. Stop at Stagnaro's on the right side and buy one squid or a quarter's worth of shrimp. If you tell them the shrimp is for bait, it's cheaper, but it's too old to eat yourself if the fish don't want

Now, go to the end of the wharf, or almost, and find a comfortable spot to sit. The your sinker (rock/keys/sparkplug) to one end of the line. About a foot up, make a loop and tie one of the hooks to it. Do the same thing a couple of feet farther up.

Bait the hook with a small piece of shrimp or a little strip of the squid so that the point is exposed but the rest of the hook is sort of hidden. You don't have to be as careful about hiding the hook as you do for, say, trout, but cover it up a little.

Let the line out until the top hook is a couple of feet underwater, just at the limit of visib-You don't need a fishing pole unless already have one--I once caught a fourshark from the Santa Cruz wharf with a

Within a few minutes, you should see a bunch of little fish. They'll nose the bait and generally stooge around, getting bolder all the time. Don't panic; just let 'em eat and eventually one of them will do himself in.

A lot of people keep everything they catch, but really no reason to kill the fish. like freshwater species, most saltwater fish can survive being caught. Unless you're going to eat them, why not unhook them gently and drop them

If you don't see any fish after 10 or 15 minutes, you're not likely to get any for a while. You can leave the line in the water and go into the restaurant for a cup of coffee, or you can let it down all the way to the bottom.

Let it rest on the bottom for at least half an hour at a time. The bottom feeders are rather more phlegmatic than the top dwellers and have to stumble upon things rather than having them drop from heaven.

You're likely to catch nearly anything off the f. Fishing near the top the most common are "tom cod" (little red ones with spines on their backs) and perch (roundish flat silver ones, sometimes up to a foot or 14 inches long).

On the bottom you may get flounders (flat, brownish, with both eyes on one side) skates (like a stingray, only with little fins on the tail), and stingrays (like a skate, only with no fins and a stinger near the BASE (not the tip) of the tail).

NEXT WEEK: Not-so-cheap thrills fishing the other way.

The A.S. government has announced that two seats on council, upper division, and graduate representation are open to qualified students carrying at least six units this semester.

Eleven positions on the Human Relations Committee and the Housing Board are also available.

The Human Relations Committee is designed to solve students' problems concerning legal aid, employment, and issues affecting the student body. The Housing Board
