Mitford taking case to Santa Clara court

Jessica Mitford will go to court this week to seek a writ to continue teaching at SJSU, Robert Treuhaft, her husband and attorney, said yesterday.

Treuhaft said the former visiting professor will then bring her case to traial

Treuhaft said the judge will then either give Mitford an immediate write, deny the request, or set a date for further hearings.

"I haven't the vaguest idea what the decision will be,"Treuhaft said. At a meeting attended by about 350 students and faculty members in the S.U. Ballroom yesterday, Mitford said she will still conduct her now cancelled class, 'The American Way," today

Agreement takes effect immediately

A.S. budget signed Monday after delay

The long awaited A.S. budget was signed yesterday by A.S. President Rudi Leonardi and President John H. Bunzel and immediately went into Final approval of the tardy budget followed unprecedented monthlong negotiations between the A.S. and university administrators.

The budget, which before this semester had always been approved and in effect before classes began, met opposition from the administration when the A.S. made budget cuts in athletics allocations.

A.S. representatives and administrators agreed on a number of stipulations to resolve the budget dispute in closed meetings held from Sept. 10 until Oct. 1.

The athletics controversy was resolved when the A.S. agreed to allocate $21,375 to the intercollegiate athletics department with the understanding that the A.S. may reduce its athletic spending in future years.

The council will allocate $6,375 for athletic insurance, to be financed with $5,970 from the veterans affairs account, eliminated after the federal government began a program on campus this semester without A.S. money. The rest of the money for the insurance is to come out of the money for the insurance is to come out of the A.S. business office salaries allocation.

office. The position, held by Wyn Cook, was terminated two weeks ago by the A.S. council and will no longer be salaried by the A.S. after Nov. 15.

Council commends administration

Jessica Mitford's refusal to be fingerprinted and at the same time finds the requirement "irrelevant to academic endeavor and therefore unnecessary" was approved yesterday by the Academic Council.

The council passed the resolution after a 45 minute address in which President John H. Bunzel asked the council for support of the administrations's action and reaffirmed his earlier position in the matter.

Bunzel asked for council support to carry with him to a meeting of university presidents in Los Angeles this Wednesday for possible discussion of this issue.

While Bunzel reiterated his opinion that the fingerprinting policy should be reviewed and reconsidered, he said that any exception made by the administration to the system-wide ruling would only endanger any policy changes that might come before the board of trustees.

"I respect her view because she believes strongly that it is wrong," he said. "But, the university does not have the authority to waive system-wide policy. We can not make an exception.

Bunzel told the council that the administration has been making every effort to persuade Mitford to be fingerprinted.

"We have had meetings with Ms. Mitford asking her to consider allowing herself to be fingerprinted so that students will be able to go on taking the class and continue to receive credit, but she will not change her mind," he said. 'However, we are not prepared to take such a locked instance so as to be un-

Bunzel anticipated that the fingerprinting question would go to court very shortly, but he added, where it would go from there, he wasn't sure.

The council passed the motion to support the president after tangled debate and voted to refer the fingerprinting issue to its organization and government committee for study and discussion at the council's mext meeting, Nov. 5.

Faculty gives remarks on Mitford 'dehiring'

SJSU faculty members have expressed both admiration and skepticism for Jessica Mitford's refusal to go along with state university hiring regulations which required fingerprinting- a refusal which resulted in her 'dehiring' last week.

Dr. Philip Jacklin, assistant professor of philosophy, said the fingerprinting regulation was "something that bothered me when I

"Jessica Mitford's action is right morally and legally. I think she has done a great service in making an issue of this," he said.

Jacklin added, "Everyone should follow her example and try to find ways to make oppression visible.'

Professor of Political Science, Dr. James E. Watson, said there is a constitutional question involved in the incident. "It is a presumption of guilt," he said, "a violation of the fifth amend-ment which involves our accusatorial system of justice. 'Requiring fingerprinting is saying the state is presuming you are guilty before you have done anything,"

Watson stated. "In addition, it is an insult.' Although the majority of teachers questioned believed Mitford was protesting a worthwhile issue, several questioned the validity of the action:

"I think it is ridiculous. Both the oath and the fingerprinting are just drama, James R. Earle. "It is ridiculous to protest this. The clause is clearly indicated in the hiring regulations. If you don't want to do it, you shouldn't take the job."

Dr. Franklin MacDonald, professor of English, agreed. "It is a clean cut situation," he said. "We have regulations that have to be observed until they are dispensed with."

Many, however, see the finger-printing procedure as unnecessary and mewhat embarrassing.

Dr. Marvin Lee, professor of economics, said he is "glad she did it."

"Two of the most embarrassing things for the college guest lecturer is the fact that they have to be fingerprinted and produce their college transcripts," he said.

"For years we have tried to quietly raise this subject but have gotten nowhere. I am thoroughly delighted at the courage and capabilities of Jessica Mitford in standing up to these regulations," he said. "I don't think this rule is uniformly applied.

"Did Jacques Cousteau have to be fingerprinted when he appeared in the college TV series?" he asked.

Colla's views on planning

Councilman Joe Colla discussed housing and urban planning in San Jose yesterday in Dr. Terry Christensen's Municipal Government class.

Colla's comments accompanied a slide presentation, compiled by Dr. Christensen, of the various planning areas in San Jose, including the Rose Garden, West Valley, Mayfair and Almaden districts. Colla disapproved of the current planning in the lower-income areas like Mayfair and East San Jose and added that most of the plans submitted for housing in those areas had not matched original expectations.

The coup in Chile has made people more politically aware, according to Martin Gurerro of Non Intervention in Chile. Speaking to a crowd of 250 demonstrators Saturday, Gurerro spoke of the importance of spreadking "the truth" about the coup throughout the world.

The weekend demonstration, sponsored by the Emergency Committee to Defend Democracy in Chile, was held in the parking lot of the International Telephone and Telegraph (ITT) building on McLaughlin Ave.

Before the demonstration the group marched from Kelly Park chanting, "ITT, CIA hands off Chile." It has been alleged that the CIA as well as ITT and other United States corporations aided in the military overthrow of the Marxist government of Salvador Allende.

Other speakers at the demonstration included Hillary Modell, who was working in a hospital in the capitol city of Santiago at the time of the coup. In relating her experiences, Modell described Santiago as being in "utter chaos" the day of the coup. # Man of the future?

President Nixon's choice for vice president, Gerald Ford, also seems to be his choice for Presidential nominee in 1976. He is popular, eloquent and offers little in the way of change.

Ford advocted major escalation of the Vietnam War. He has supported increases in U.S. missile capacity. He has advocated using wage and price controls in curbing inflation. In short, he has favored the majority of Nixon's policies.

But while Nixon is verbally assaulted for airing his views, Ford remains immensely popular, on Capitol Hill and among his constituents (he is serving his 13th consecutive term as a member of the House.)

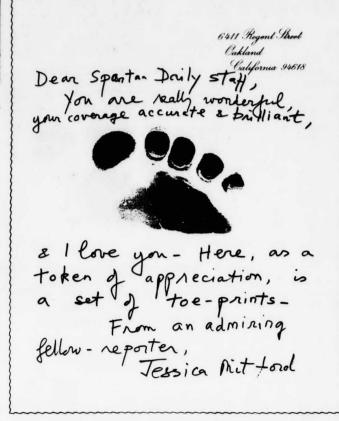

Ford has a charismatic personality and has the ability to "sell" the public on the administration's policies for the remainder of

However, as vice president he would have a good shot at the Presidency in 1976 and, unless he has changed his views of the past, his administration would not be much different from Nixon's.

With Ford as vice president, Nixon has a prominent "yes-man" and an heir apparent to his throne. What the nation gets is not a change but a high powered salesman, able to sell us back a used car.

So far, it seems the public and government leaders have accepted Ford as a new start in a stagnant administration.

But from past performances, Ford is nothing new. Hopefully that will be apparent

Future Now ------

History behind the war

– Point of View —

Ed Sessler

Despite all the news about the Arab-Israeli conflict that has appeared in the Spartan Daily, it seems that one facet that has been neglected is the historical basis for the current fighting.

Zionsim, the name traditionally given to the Jewish ideal of a return to an ancient homeland, has its roots in the 19th century. In that period of time, as well as other periods from the Roman conquests to the Spanish Inquisition, Jews were held as a separate people forced to live mainly among themselves and subject to the whims of the ruling class of whatever country they were living in.

After World War II, with half the Euopean Jewish population decimated by concentration camps and ovens, the quest for a Jewish homeland seemed to be an imperative. At the time, Palestine, now divided between Israel and Jordan, was ruled by a British mandate. Jews had been settling the area since 1901, and the reestablishment of a Jewish state after almost 2,000 years was uppermost in the minds of both the Jews who had already settled there and the masses of refugees left homeless by the second world war.

Clearly, a haven was desirable to them, and after clashes with the British, Israel was established.

In the 2,000 years that had lapsed since the Jews had first been forced to leave their homeland, the land was Arabic. Rightfully so, the Palestinians saw a Jewish state in their midst as an intrusion forced upon them by other nations of the world. Arabs felt that the land was unfairly divided and had in fact been taken away from them after centuries of Arab control. Their view of Israel as an intruder was certainly justified. It should be clear then to Jews and Arabs that there are viable points to both sides of the coin. The Jews see themselves as coming home, the Arabs in turn see their land as having been taken from them. Resolving an argument with valid points is always difficult, and is made no easier by large, more powerful nations' practice of supplying weapons, in exchange for influence. As long as either side has the weapons to fight, war is likely. It is the United States and the Soviet Union who should be blamed for this war, not the two peoples who each see valid reasons for their own actions.

Slow down America

With the onset of gasoline shortages and threatened power brownouts and blackouts this summer, the energy crisis has become an unwanted focal point of the American public.

It was unwanted because the American mind did not want to face gas rationing or, in tthe long run, an energy shortage which would quash its ability to consume everything its income permits.

To avoid this unbearable shock, Americans either tumbled into apathy ("the government will solve everything") or overreacted by demanding impossible, immediate energy solutions.

Immediate "solutions," such as the Alaskan pipeline (which oil companies have advertised as an answer to the energy crisis) or nuclear power plants and offshore drilling are short term solutions at best, which camouflage the environmental crisis. The Alaskan oil fields are predicted to produce between 10 and 30 billion barrels. At present, the United States oil consumption hovers near the five to six, billion barrels level per year.

Using the liberal estimate, the Alaskan oil could provide oil for five to ten years. What then? The same people believe technology will ride in on a white horse carrying a secret box of some new detergent that will cleanse our entire polluted system.

The energy crisis has passed the point of aesthetics. It is not important the pipeline will deface virgin Alaskan tundra or offshore oil wells will interrupt the hypnotic beauty of California beaches.

It has gone beyond the point of closing one mill because it pollutes or constructing rapid transit systems to clear our charred air. Most peoople believe these are the only concerns of environmentalists. Instead of piecemeal efforts, we need to confront the crux of the problem. It revolves around recycling - nature's, not man's recycling.

If our rate of consumption exceeds the earth's rate of returning waste material to natural, usable forms, we will slowly commit

Like a man marooned in space

oooooooooooooooo Mark Bussmann

with his oxygen slowly turning to carbon dioxide, usable resources decrease until none are left.

What results is pollution, a symptom of over-consumption. To treat the symptom, such as closing down polluting plants, is fruitless, because it ignores the problem.

Man in general, and especially the American must discard his ravenous appetite to consume, to possess, which blinds him to his ever-increasing symptoms.

The change requires a cultural revolution which will overturn the Protestant Ethic. (Success is acquiring more goods than your neighbor).

If this false sense of accomplishment can be conquered, man may be able to bring his ecosystem into equilibrium - consumption equaling resource recycling. If not...

mittee to renegotiate a contract with Gallo. From April 18 to June 27 the ranch committee negotiated through 18 clauses. On July 9 through 18 clauses. On July 9 Robert Gallo sent a telegram with a message saying they had signed a contract with the Teamsters.

The Farmworkers were issued a ultimatum of either accepting the contract or risk being fired. Of the farmworkers, 150 decided to go out on strike and defy this signing. Gallo also tried to evict 40 of the farmworkers living at the vineyards. The farmworker lawyers were able to deter this action by Gallo for three weeks.

However, the 150 farmworkers decided to launch a "Get Gallo off the shelf campaign in three areas." They disbursed 40 workers to San Francisco, 35 to Los Angeles, and 25 to San Diego.

Their primary objective is to go to every store, and ask the proprietors to remove all Gallo wines from their shelves. Gallo is the world's largest producer of inexpensive wines.

The farmworkers are asking all people to support them in their boycott efforts. What Gallo wines? Any wine that has a Gallo label on the bottle.

This probably is going to be one of the toughest battles the farmworkers will encounter since these wines are extremely popular because of their availability and inexpensiveness.

Nevertheless, the farmworkers are asking for everyone's support.

I suggest that everyone move on up to Annie Green Springs as an alternative to Gallo and support the boycott!

'Use of lies'

"We shall only accept war and the restoration of the usurped land. We have resolved to drench this land with our blood, to oust you, aggressors, and throw you into the sea" - Hafiz Asid, Syrian defense minister, 1967.

The organization of Arab students' letter to the editor yesterday spoke of the "huge Zionist propaganda machine in this country" that had perpetuated a lie when they told Americans that the Arabs wanted to push the Jews into the sea. The Syrian defense minister can hardly be called an agent of the Zionist machine.

It is with great dismay that we have received a copy of the letter Fouad Alkisswani is handing out to students on this campus. It not only offends us because we are concerned about the survival of Israel but because we are also concerned about the Jews of America. Fouad states that the American Jews "cannot serve two masters and love both. They are using this country." This line of reasoning is not anti-Israel; it is anti-Jew, which the Arab students have been trying to tell us they are not.

We are also concerned by his use of lies in stating that because Edward Kennedy wants to sup-port Israel, that he "wishes to kill more children in Port Said with nerve gas and Damascus with Napalm.

The Jewish Student Organization

Have you heard?

The Organization of Arab Students appears quite concerned about so-called Israeli "aggression." Perhaps they have not yet heard who started the nflict, or that United Nations guaranteed to Israel secure boundaries, according to the General Assembly decision of November 22, 1967.

If the Organization of Arab Students' members are so upset about Israel defending herself, why do they waste time writing letters? They should have made arrangements days ago to join their brother Arabs in the field. The way the news appears today, their help is certainly needed.

Dr. Robert E. Levinson Associate Professor of History

Concessional law

A religious conviction that political expediency is the referee of morality is not limited to the Watergate Scandal and the "team players" of Nixon's administration.

Once a rigid principle, "the law" is now expected to bend to majority behavior, elite opinion, or simply "conscience".

Instead of making our behavior conform to "the law", we have evolved a new principle, changing law to accommodate our behavior.

For example - legislative reform of the marijuana laws. Is the fact that so many young people break the law enough justification for its change?

A slight variation on the theme came with the recent conviction of former Vice President Agnew for income tax evasion.

Agnew, pegged by Represen-ative Paul N. McCloskey Jr. as "crookeder than a dog's hind leg", plea-bargained his way out of jail. Why should Agnew, whom McCloskey calls "one of the most accomplished political criminals in history", be exempt from the punishment any other man would receive? Is his humiliation or high position enough to justify total disregard of this country's Nearly a week ago, famed British authoress Jessica Mitford refused to comply with a California State University policy on fingerprinting. Mitford's subsequent dehiring was followed by excitement, anger at the administration and a flurry of supporters from many quarters.

It will certainly create no precedent in a morally corrupt and scandal torn America to disobey regulations on the basis of personal conscience.

'Poor arguments'

Yesterday's Spartan Daily contained two articles and two letters on the Middle East conflict. Only one of the commentaries was backed with facts. That one was an article by Peter Howard. While all of the commentaries express a strong bias (Peter Howard included), only the Point of View article refrained from both weak logic and name-calling (Example: "war monger".)

Peter Howard pointed out that the major obstacle which preceded possible negotiations was the fact that the Arabs wanted and Israel had not wanted to have Sinai and the Golan Heights turned over to Egypt and her allies. He also pointed out that the U.N. observers reportedly backed Israel's charge about Egypt and Syria starting the latest hostilities in the Middle East. These facts made the basis for a logical argument.

The Editorial article based its opinion on the logic that things are a certain way because "certain" officials made certain comments or arguments. I think this is a weak way to back an argument. The letter from the Organization of Arab Students has the same failing. Abdul K. Raja's letter failed to explain his logic in connecting an opinion (Israel is to blame) to a stated fact (Middle East has another war between Israel and Arab nations.)

So far, many Spartan Daily articles have a tendency to call names and use the Editorial articles' logic. I am tired of hearing them do little but rant on and on. If this is the only kind of literature which should be printed, the Spartan Daily won't be worth more than the paper it is printed on. If you don't want your arguments to get out of control, try to remember that these "war mongers" (or some other name), are also people.

Symphony 'rejuvenated' with vitality

SJSU choir adds to success

By Gary Milliken Special to the Daily

George Cleve continued to fulfill the sparkling promise he offered Santa Clara Valley music lovers last season, as he led the newly rejuvenated San Jose Symphony through its opening concert in Civic Auditorium Saturday night.

Cleve has taken a virtually ground level orchestra and lifted it to the mezzanine in one season. His chosen program was several cuts above any of last year in cumulative difficulty, and his legions responded to the challenge, not always per-fectly, but with remarkable warmth and enthusiasm.

Smetana's "Bartered Bride" Overture immediately gave the entire string section a perpetual motion exercise that was rather frantic until the winds came to the rescue. But the balance of the opener was carried off with lively Czech

The SJSU A Capella Choir joined the orchestra for a controlled reading of Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." The choir is one of the Music Department's shining lights, and though its large numbers (some 80 or 90) occasionally obscured some of the more fragile of Stravinsky's oblique har-monies, the devout and rather Byzantine spirit of the shone through beautifully.

It is primarily a showpiece for the winds, with only cellos and basses for string support. Cleve's prudent pacing de-emphasized the score's brightness, creating a rich, sedate sound. The scrambling triplets of the last movement were a bit much for the oboes and trumpets, but they did an outstanding job in the serenity of the exhaustingly slow final moments. The Third Symphony of Brahms requires supreme polish from even the best of ensembles, and the strings did not sound overly confident. The brass section, highlighted by Wendell Rider's sublime French horn, provided a solid foundation for fine wind solos, however.

Programming any piece of Ravel is a vote of confidence in an orchestra's ability, and in "La Valse," obviously the best rehearsed piece on the program, Cleve was astonishing. The virtuosity of the writing was handled superbly, with sumptuous depth in the strings and breathless exhilaration from

Driven by Robert Erlebach's timpani (and his almost vaudevillian visual performance,) the work whirled giddily to its exciting climax. It was an amazing job, stratospheres above what the symphony would

By Lori Rauh

Editor's note: Lori Rauh interviewed maestro George Symphony prior to Saturday night's debut of the new concert season. Here are some of Cleve's reflections.

"It's a shame that the American people have developed an ostrich-type attitude toward musical composition. When you have been trained for years and are making less than a bus boy, it just doesn't make sense," commented maestro George Cleve.

Cleve, who has been teaching conducting classes with SJSU's music faculty for two semesters is of course the flamboyant conductor of the San Jose Symphony and newlyappointed conductor of the Francisco servatory of Music.

Looked up to my many people in the music world, not to mention the San Jose community, Cleve is a warm-hearted person with deep-rooted feelings for music and a desire to help musicians learn.

Like any other human being, he gets nervous before all of his performances, but

Saturday night at Win-

terland the new Steve Miller

Band showed once again the erratic performance quality that has plagued the band

nervousness. With concern for the San Jose Symphony and the direction it is going. he emphasized that the main problem with the symphony this year is that it didn't have the entire summer to practice because of lack of funds from the community. It was apparent at our first rehearsal," he said.

He has taken large strides in his musical-conducting career, leading orchestras such as the Philharmonic in Holland, the Chamber Orchestra in Paris, and the National Orchestra in Mexico. The bushy-hearded maestro feels that there is essentially no difference between European orchestras and American orchestras. "An orchestra is an orchestra," he stressed in a matter-of-fact way. "It's just a matter of creating rapport."

With great expectations for the season, Cleve hopes San Jose Symphony will take an upward step as it expands its concerts this year.

The maestro also talked of conducting.

"Keeping eye contact with the musicians at all times is a crucial factor in conducting. "Your eyes are one of your most important conducting factors.

Cleve's example of a musician with fantastic conducting and directing abilities is Seiji Ozawa, conductor of the San Francisco Symphony. "Ozawa," stated Cleve with an air of honest authority, 'has a way of juffling the various elements of music.' With appeal for the San Jose community's feelings for music, Cleve hopes that the people soon will put their dollars where their interests supposedly are. Leaning pensively, on one elbow, he said, "I would like the San Jose Symphony to become orchestra people graduate to, not from which people graduate.

After the rape: victim's course

By Mona Chin

The long and tedious questioning and examinations rape victims must go through if they decide to report an incident to officals was the topic of a rape symposium sponsored by Women Against Rape (WAR) last week.

Midge Dorn, an "advocate" of WAR, said the organization was established last year to ease some of the worries and problems of most rape victims.

Police and hospital procedures were discussed at the Thursday symposium by Dorn and Robert Hoffman, a Santa Clara County attorney. Dorn spent part of the symposium telling the audience what women should expect when reporting a rape - the long waiting, the questioning and what will happen in court.

After the rape

A rape victim is admitted to Valley Medical Center in San Jose, the only place which treats rape victims, Dorn said. If the victim wishes, she can have a police matron with her at "The victim should not have showered and should bring a change of clothes. She should also write down every detail about the rape and the rapist, and expect to wait for at least two hours at the hospital until someone can examine her, Dorn said.

The victim is then taken to police headquarters for extensive questioning. There she is asked to carefully read a statement drawn up by police and sign it if she wishes to press charges against the rapist. (The police determine if she has a case to press charges, Dorn said).

"If she does sign the statement and later does not wish to appear in court, the matter is out of her hands and she can be subpoenaed," she added.

Dorn outlined the four points necessary to have charges pressed against the rapist: 1( penetration within the last 24 hours; 2) use of force; 3) fear on the part of the victim; 4) pressing charges.

Hoffman spoke of the laws and court prodecures. The victim's character

He said the judge will ask the jury to judge if the woman is of "unchaste character" - meaning if she has consented to sexual intercourse once before, she is likely to consent again; and if she had enticed the man into having sexual in-

In defense of the victim, the law books state "The conduct of the female person need only be such as to make the absence of consent and the actual resistance resonably apparent.

Dorn added the rape victim's past sex life will be brought

'So it is the woman's character that is on trial, not the man's actions," added another advocate.

It was noted that women are encouraged to learn some selfdefense.

'If women are to defend themselvs," Dorn said, "they should use self-defense not just to temporarily hurt the rapist, but to maim him or disable him enough so they can

The best techniques of self-defense are stabs in the eyes with the fingers and a hard kick to the front of the attacker's kneecaps which would temporarily disable him or even cripple him.

Whether or not a woman wishes to use self-defense depends on the situation and her psychology, said Dorn.
"If a rapist has a weapon, its better to give in and have your life spared, was the general consensus of the WAR's advocates. They added, "If you fight back, the rapist might get panicky and kill."

Rapist knows victim

The majority of the time, the rapist knows or knows about his victim - her schedule, her movements, her address and phone number, said Dorn Another advocate pointed out women should be aware of repairmen and solicitors.

I.D. cards are carried by PG&E men and policemen, and women should ask to see their cards before opening her front

A woman should never invite a man into her home unless she knows that person or if someone else is with her.

Dorn pointed out if a woman lets a man into her house, it is considered as consent, and it would be stressed in court. Hitchkikers warned

As for the hitchhiking females, WAR advocates say it is better for women to pick up other women, thus easing a transportation problem and preventing another rape.

"She may be robbed," commented one advocate, "but at least she isn't raped." Women can call the Rape Crisis line, 287-3000, for consultation, information about rape, the laws and also to report a rape. A member of WAR may accompany the victim to the police station and hospital if the victim wishes.

So far, WAR's crisis line has averaged one rape call a week, said Dorn.
