Chancellor's copyright policy proposes royalties for state

By Mark Stafforini

The chancellor's office has proposed copyright policy that will require California State University and College (CSUC) employes to go through a clearance procedure before copyrighting any material.

The employe will have to submit the material and information on how it was obtained to a campus copyright committee, according to the draft for the copyright policy.

The committee will then determine who owns the copyright.

If the employe developed the material on his own time without university funds or equipment, he will own the copyright, the policy says.

If the author (employe) is assigned commissioned or hired to develop the material, the CSUC Trustees will own the copyright.

Royalities shared

When the material is developed with significant support from CSUC resources, the author will own the copyright, but the CSUC will receive 50 per cent of the royalties until it has received $10,000, the policy says.

According to the policy, the material involved includes writings (books and articles), musical or dramatic compositions, sound recordings, films and lecture notes

"In the past when a scientist used university equipment and then patented something, the university and he shared royalties," said Kathleen Cohen, chairman of the SJSU Art Department.

But when a book was copyrighted, the faculty author received the copyright, Cohen added.

When university equipment has been used, the university should get some of the benefits, she said, but "There has been a bit of overkill with this proposal."

The proposal gives too much to the state and will discourage faculty from doing creative work, Cohen said.

It will also require an "unbelievable amount of paperwork," she added. Faculty proposal

Cohen and Dr. Robert Sasseen, dean of faculty, prepared a report on the policy for the Academic Senate's Professional Standards Committee.

In that report Cohen and Sasseen made the following recommendations: · Books and articles should be exempted from the copyright policy.

· Materials produced on leave, paid or unpaid, should also be exempt. • The first $1,000 of royalties should go to the author, to provide incentive. After that royalties should be split 50-50 up to the amount of direct state costs (for the project; This is, for projects that are assigned.) "Significant support" should be more clearly defined, Cohen said. When state costs are less than $5,000, the author should own the copyright, Cohen said

Rovalties scaled Royalties should be shared on a explained. If the faculty member is relieved of one class to work on a project, the CSUC should receive 25 per cent of the royalties, she said. The Academic Senate will consider the proposal at its next meeting, according to Dr. Arnold Schein, chairman of the Academic Senate's Professional Standards Committee.

But Schein said he is opposed to the proposal as it reads now.

The propsed policy would "create a bureaucracy" that would delay publication of material, he said. The policy will be considered at the Chancellor's Council of Presidents (of (CSUC) on March 3, Schein said.

Bunzel's ammunition

The Professional Standards Committee hopes to supply SJSU President John Bunzel with "ammunition" against the policy, Schein said.

An SJSU task force has been set up to "feed information" to Bunzel, Schein said. Executive Vice President Burton Brazil is in charge of the task force, he added.

Schein said the faculty is working with the administration on the policy proposal.

The faculty was "alerted to the dangers" in the proposed policy by Academic Vice President Hobert Burns, Schein said.

The statewide Academic Senate's Professional Standards Committee will discuss the policy at its meeting this weekend, Cohen said.

Dr. David Elliott, chairman of SJSU's Speech-Communication Department, is the chairman of the State Professional Standards Committee, Cohen added.

Elliott refused yesterday to discuss the policy until the committee has discussed it.

"Where the students go, the resources follow," he added.

"The steady state is a false reality," said Gray. "In reality, the system and the University are caught in a path of sociological and economical forces far beyond its control."

Grav said he believes higher education is now four years into a period of instability.

One of the reasons for student decline is that babies of the post-war baby boom have passed college age, leaving empty seats, according to Gray.

"We must redefine the roles of students, faculty and staff," he said. "The only thing that can be rejected wholly is the maintenance of the status quo.

Baldridge, of Cal State Fresno, said he believes centralization is inevitable.

Bunzel's speech draws criticism

By Doug Ernst

Reaction to SJSU President John Bunzel's recent speech on affirmative action, by SJSU personnel involved in the university's Affirmative Action Program, has been lukewarm at best.

Reaction to the speech has not been favorable from University of California at Berkeley, where an agreement was reached Tuesday between that campus and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW), concerning affirmative action goals and timetables.

'Bunzel is beating a dead horse," Stephen Faustina, SJSU affirmative action coordinator said.

We've already dealt with issues involving quotas and reverse discrimination," Faustina said.

"White males as the object of discrimination is not what affirmative action is," said Faustina.

Sid Walton, a student and author from Berkeley confronted Bunzel after his Friday address at a Commonwealth Club luncheon, openly challenging Bunzel's speech.

"His speech was reactionary," Walton told the Daily.

"It encourages a clear and unequivocal retreat from many serious commitments to a meaningful Affirmative Action Program for women and minorities," Walton added.

Presently working toward a law degree at Berkeley, where he once taught ethnic studies. Walton is a contributing editor for the Black Scholar Journal, and has authored "ZBC 1994," a book on long-range affirmative action goals.

Carlene Young, chairwoman of Afro-American studies at SJSU, commented on Bunzel's speech.

'One of the advantages of being in a majority position like Bunzel's is to be able to define what is right, good and acceptable," said Young. "He tends to posture a philosophy, and then he develops it so it meets his own values and ideas," Young said.

James C. Goodwin, assistant to the vice president at Berkeley, was seated at the head table during Bunzel's address and, when contacted by telephone, commented on the speech.

"His speech sounded politically oriented," said Goodwin.

"He's a very good orator, and was making a dramatic narrative. I disagreed with his narrative," Goodwin added.

Bunzel told Commonwealth Club members discriminating against whites to make up for wrongs committed by previous generations against blacks, "means that white people are ... to become victims of discrimination not because they are guilty, but because they are white."

Faustina believes this argument is not only old, but resolved.

"There have been some isloated cases of discrimination against whites," said Faustina, "but I'm'sure that's not the case at SJSU."

"We should quit whipping that dead horse, and get on to operating a true and legal Affirmative Action Program.

"If the university in its efforts to establish an affirmative action program, adhered to higher education guidelines put out by the Department of HEW there would be no difficulty in regard to 'reverse discrimination.'

Faustina insisted that he dislikes the term, "reverse discimination."

"There is only one form of discrimination and that's illegal discrimination," Faustina said. Continued on page 8 of the UC Berkeley Affirmative Action Task Force. Walton called the talk on affirmative action "reactionary."

Quotas not issue in affirmative action

By Phil Trounstine

SJSU President John Bunzel has been using the pages of the San Jose Mercury and last week a speech before San Francisco's Commonwealth Club to criticize the federal government's Affirmative Action Policy in higher education.

He accuses the policy, which requires employers to make a search for qualified women and minority job candidates, of imposing quotas onto academe.

But Bunzel uses quotas as a straw man. Not only are quotas not demanded, they have been recently outlawed.

That's not to say that the court decisions prohibiting quotas were wise; the point is that Bunzel is making a demogogic plea in order to gain sympathy with his opposition to affirmative action in general.

In fact, Bunzel wants the federal government to keep out of higher education so that colleges and universities can get on with their "essential mission" of educating students.

Before we substantiate that, one more example of Bunzel's illogic is in order.

Unfair footrace

In his Commonwealth Club speech, Bunzel used his old "unfair footrace" parable.

"Absolute egalitarians believe that justice requires equality not at the beginning of a race but at the end. They want the minority or female runner to be given more than equal treatment with the white male runner." Bunzel charged.

"It is as if they were asking the scorekeeper to ensure that the minority and female runners win a certain percentage of the races," he added.

Bunzel should take an undergraduate philosophy course in logic. He's completely lost his bearings.

Using Bunzel's footrace example, women and minorities are running the race with a ball and chain around their comment regulations (at least) to force universities to hire women and minorities. Bunzel's stance is not new, he's following in the footsteps of Lester

Maddox, George Wallace and the South Boston busing foes. Their defense, like Bunzel's, was to charge that the federal government was violating white peoples' rights by enforcing equal protection regulations.

What he wants If Bunzel doesn't like affirmative action and yet claims a commitment to social justice, just what does he want? His latest Mercury column provides us the answer. 'Higher education should exhibit and foster an attitude of working toward" equal opportunity, he says.

Sure they "should," Dr. Bunzel, but they "aren't." What "should" we do to make sure the university is working toward equal opportunity? Evidently nothing.

Bunzel lists a couple more "shoulds" to which most everyone will agree. But when it comes to concrete proposals to correct the failure of universities to hire qualified women and minorities, Bunzel passes the buck.

"Congress can help secure these objectives by well-conceived programs of financial support. Expanded opportunities must be provided for academic training at the un-dergraduate and graduate levels for women and minority group members," Bunzel demands.

Resources are needed because society "must be more than passive if increased employment opportunities for women and minorities in higher education are to be achieved in fact as well as in legal theory," he argues.

What is striking about Bunzel's proposals is that none of them requires the university to be anything more than passive about 400 years of injustice. He's more concerned about the enforcement of regulations than he is about the problem they are designed to combat.

The university's "essential mission" is education. Bunzel says, ignoring the reality that universities are institutions through which great social change has been and can be effected.

He's decided the university should remain part of the problem rather than part of the solution

Why fight?

One last point is needed.

Some critics of affirmative action maintain that the only reason whites support it is that they are ridden by white liberal guilt.'

This disgusting argument is a thinly veiled avowal of the status quo, yet we should understand how throughly wrong it is.

There are two main reasons for whites to support the struggles of women and minorities against racism and sexism.

First, there is the commitment to equality and justice for humanity. This is not guilt, it is a sense of right with which we are instilled.

Some of us are pained by gross injustice, not because we did something wrong but because maltreatment of our fellow man offends and grieves us.

Second, there is a matter of self interest. It may sound cold and heartless, but we must understand it.

It is in the interest of white people for women and minorities to be treated as equals. As long as they are held as a reserve labor pool, as long as they can be used as a threat to job security of the mass of white workers, then the people are divided against one another.

If people hope to struggle against inequality, injustice, racism, sexism and imperialism, they must be united. In order for that unity to occur, whites must fight for the right of selfdetermination for minorities and men must fight for equal opportunity for women That commitment is the basis of popular unity without which we are divided and impotent.

A.S. referendum provides chance to give trustees feedback on fees

Next week students will have an opportunity to voice their opinion on one of the most crucial issues of the school year.

We will be asked to decide if the present student body fee level of $10 per semester should be lowered by as much as 50 per cent or

Think it through, Mr. President, Ford must have a better idea !

By Ray Manley

If Nixon's taping system is still bugging away in the Oval Office, the following conversation might very well have been recorded. In it, President Ford is discussing economic policy with a top-flight economic adviser (TFEA): Ford-I called this brain-storming session with you because you're one of my top-flight economic advisers, and I think it's time I got some advice. TFEA-Shoot boss.

Ford-Well, I've been hearing lately that the economy is in pretty bad shape, all this stuff about inflation and recession. Am I right so far?

TFEA-That's it in a nutshell, Mr. President. Ford-Well, I'll get down to why I've called you here. I've had experience with inflation, but damn it this recession one's new to me. Historically speaking, how has this country dealt with it in the past?

TFEA-of course, the best example of how we have dealt with the problem of recession is what we did during the comment Great Depression?

TFEA-You must have heard of it Mr. President, it was in all the papers. Ford-No matter, don't bore me with all the small details. What did we do to whip it back then? TFEA-Basically, we got into WWII.

Ford-A war huh? Pretty shrewd thinking. Wars always shoot new life into the economy, don't they?

TFEA-As a rule they do, sir. But before the war we launched massive work projects funded by the federal government to pump money into the economy and raise employment.

Ford-Now I think you're on to something. See how productive these brainstorming sessions can be?

TFEA-Of course. Back then they built post offices, federal buildings, highways.

Ford-Highways! I've always liked highways. Sure, let's build highways.

TFEA-Well, I thought the idea of tax was to decrease gasoline therefore decre automobile use.

ankles while white males are unfettered. The ball and chain are racism and sexism.

If they tie at the finish line, ie. if they are being considered for a job along with a white male, presumably all are qualified for the job.

But the woman or minority has not only arrived at the finish line, he or she has also overcome a handicap, racism and-or sexism, with which the white male has not had to contend.

In the light of reality, it can no longer be judged a tie-the woman or minority has run a tougher race and yet arrived at the same time.

At that point affirmative action should demand the institution hire the woman or minority. The odds against them have been stacked all along and it's time to balance the scales.

When the ball and chain have been eliminated, then it will no longer be necessary to give preference to the woman or the minority. But in order to cut lose the runners, extraordinary measures are needed for some time to come

Federal intervention

Now, by using quotas as a whipping boy, Bunzel has disguised his abhorrence of the federal government's intervention in educational matters.

He thinks the institution will right itself because it is administered by fair and just men.

But history offers no precedent for Bunzel's pipe dream.

It took federal troops to guarantee integration in Alabama; it's taking police batallions to desegregate Boston; and it takes stern federal

Or it could be the Santa Clara County Housing Development Corporation, a non-profit community organization. The councill has not yet decided whether to allow third-party groups to run the program. It could decide to have the city run the program.

The San Jose Tenants Union has a volunteer-run housing center at 255 E. William St. and has proposed to use the present center as a base for a city-wide housing center.

The union spokesman said they believe it should be considered before the other groups because it conceived the program and has made specific proposals on how the center should operate. Tenant union spokesman Jim Welsh, who is also A.S. housing director, said the steering committee is making a "farce of citizen input" and that the union's proposal is being "abused." But steering committee member William Bell, who offered the motion to let contracts out to third-party groups said the committee never made any promises to the tenants union. Staffers for Wilson agree no promises were made, but say the groups would not be allowed to re-write their proposals, leaving only the tenants union in a position to run the center. Economic and Social Opportunities made a proposal mainly concerned with buying land for the city to develop. It only made mention of a tenant counseling service and did not give details.

Housing Develop-The ment Corporation asked for funds to re-locate people from federal housing into homes that have been repossessed. It made no mention of a housing center . But Bell said the groups would be able to come back with proposals in "greater detail" so the distinction remains cloudy.

The city has decided only that a housing center will be funded.

City Manager Ted Tedesco opposed the housing center, saying the city "couldn't afford the luxury" of such a program. He urged the money be spent on street and sewer repairs and other projects that "directly reach the people.'

However the council rejected his recommendation.

"It is obvious that women have been cast by society in the role of the underdog," he said, and it helps to be able to see and understand this system."

Parsons said women office workers, holding the greatest number of clerical jobs, could not easily be dismissed without the business tumbling down. But so-called the men's leadership roles could be put aside and the women's work force would continue to operate the business.

FTE decline blamed on SJSU, Reagan

By Dan Williams

Why are students staying away from SJSU? Failure of SJSU's administrators to recognize student needs plus a conscious effort to keep students out of higher education institutions by the former Regean administration are the main causes for an ongoing full-time enrollment (FTE) drop at SJSU since 1969, according to Dr. Marvin Lee, professor of economics

Dr. John Foote, dean of academic planning, said there could be "any number of reasons.

'Pride in self-reliance keys rise of peasantry'—Berger

By Jeff Mapes

The Chinese peasant has sen from a "blundering risen from a backwoodsman" to a people who have pride in self reliance, according to Roland Berger, a trade consultant who has visited China over 25 times.

The peasant, the majority Chinese population, was in bad shape before the communist takeover in 1949. Berger said in speech Wednesday night in San Jose. Several years of war 1949 caused before widespread starvation and effective social no organization among the peasants, he said. Berger, who has recently returned from China, first saw the country in 1953 on a tour with British businessmen. Berger said collectivization was just starting. He was told by his hosts that if every peasant could have a metal hoe "that would be a revolution."

Survey reveals M.A. may not be sufficient

out of

By Irene Helm

Graduates from SJSU's School of Education must often leave California to pursue advanced studies necessary to their jobs.

According to a recent survey of alumni conducted by Dr. Roger Chapman, associate professor of administration and higher education, a large per-centage of graduates find they need more training after receiving an M.A. in Education.

James Noah, director of university relations, indicated that engineering graduates often find themselves in the same position.

Chapman says new federal and state programs are one reason education graudates must return to school.

For example, the state funded Early Childhood Education program has very stringent regulations regarding how allocated money must be spent and graduates need to learn how to administer the program, according to Chapman.

'Funding agencies are tightening regulations to insure that money is used properly, and administrators had quite a shock recently when they were required to return thousands of dollars that was improperly spent for various programs," he explained.

In January 1973, Chapman sent questionnaires to 260 alumni who received administrative credentials here between 1968 and 1973. One of the areas it attempted to measure was interest of graduates in postand masters postadministrative training. Of the 165 respondents, 40 per cent said they were required to take renewal or refresher work in connection with their present assignment or for advancement.

Often education students Stanford's program, but they must go out of the area, or will still not receive training California to get necessary for field work, needed training, the survey Chapman said.

called a "university" now, it is a change in name only, Chapman said.

"It sounds prestigious but we weren't authorized any additional work because of the title," he said. Graduates who find they need to get a doctorate either advancement, or for further training in the field, find it difficult to gain admittance to programs in this area

The only universities that offer a Doctorate in education in Northern California are Stanford and Berkeley, according to Angelo, a former publisher of a nightclub review nagazine, said there is more stress in the current nightclub scene than in working eight hours per day. The stress, he added, is brought on by anxiety and uncertainty in one's status in relationship to the rest of the people in the club. This stress, he said, is exactly what people are going to nightclubs to escape fromafter working all day

Membership, according to Angelo, will be closed at 2,000 members; 1,000 men and 1,000 women.

The group currently has a membership of 1,400 according to Lambert.

Angelo said most of the members in the group are Lynne Lambert, people confident in them-

Clouds surround sprinter's transfer

By Nick Nasch

Sprinter Millard Hamp-ton's transfer from SJSU to San Jose City College is an accepted fact according to everyone concerned, but the views of what happened are as many as the parties involved.

State high school champion in the 220-yard dash last year in a time of 20.9 Hampton left SJSU after one semester.

Hampton, SJSU track coach Ernie Bullard, City College coach Bert Bonanno and his assistant Bobby Poynter, Hampton's coach at San Jose's Silver Creek High School last year, all have different assessments of the situation.

The main reason transferred wasn't so much the track, but education. I didn't think I was getting enough out of school at San Jose State, so I decided to transfer to City College,' Hampton said.

'Track came first at San Jose State, but education comes first to me," Hampton said. "I wanted to get closer to the teachers.

One of the reasons Hampton came to SJSU was for the aid of a scholarship to help him finance his way through school. He was considered the best 220 man in the nation among high school prospects.

Bullard said he and his assistants, Don Riggs and Larry Livers, work closely with their athletes in helping them take the proper courses and are always available for consultation on academic matters.

We do as much to help them in their classes as anyone or any other track programs," Bullard said. "I think he came to SJSU to clear his letter of intent." Hampton signed a national letter of intent to SJSU last tended SJSU for one semester, he still would have had to honor his letter of intent upon graduation from a two-year college. This rule is no longer in effect.

Additionally Hampton will not lose a year of eligibility by the transfer to a community college because National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) rules do not apply to community colleges.

Spartan Foundation President Ben Reichmuth Hampton would have lost a year of eligibility if he had and John Moran, owner of Alameda Sporting Goods and transferred to a four-year college or university. Hampton's employer at the While he said he does not time, met with the sprinter and convinced him to stay at when Hampton expressed Poynter said he had not interest in attending City talked to Hampton very College after the state high often since high school school track meet last June, because Hampton had moved from the Silver Creek immediately alerted Bullard of the neighborhood.

Poynter said he had not intended to coach this year, but was persuaded by Bonanno to join the City College staff. Both coaches alumni Bonanno and Poynter are both SJSU graduates and Poynter was a sprinter when Bonanno was a Spartan assistant from 1957 to 1960. Bonanno assumed the earlier informed Bullard of head post at City College in 1969 and both he and Poynter said they had talked of Poynter joining the City College staff since 1970.

Bullard said he expected that Hampton might want to join his high school coach as soon as Poynter went to City College.

'It would be natural for Hampton to want to join his high school coach and we saw nothing wrong with that," Bullard said. "We figured we better keep on top of him (Hampton)."

Hampton decided to go to City College as a result of family and personal problems, as well as a lack of communication between he and the coaching staff, he said

"He never communicated his unhappiness to us,' Bullard said. He said as recently as two days before Hampton told Bonanno of his transfer, Hampton was talking "positively." "Bonanno and Poynter didn't even know of my decision until I walked up to them and told them I'm in school," Hampton said. Bonanno and Poynter confirmed this.

told When Hampton Bonanno, Feb. 5, the City College coach immediately set out to find Bullard and tell him. Bullard was ill and could not be reached.

"I got in my truck an went right over to the track,' Bonanno said. Bonanno talked to Riggs, but said he wanted to talk to Bullard personally. The next day Bonanno came to SJSU in search of Bullard, but the SJSU coach was still ill.

Caine informed Bonanno instead talked to SJSU Athletic Director John Caine who said Bonanno informed him of Hampton's transfer.

"My conscience is clear," Bonanno said and he repeatedly mentioned in interviews with the Daily that he considers Bullard a good friend of his Bonanno noted that athletes transferring from four-year to two-year schools are not an unusual situation. He said he does not understand the furor over Hampton's transfer. City Bonanno said College presently transfer athletes has from Oregon and Tennessee, defending NCAA track champion, on their track team.

Both Bonanno and Poynter pointed out that City College has nothing to offer in the way of scholarships as SJSU does.

"If there wasn't scholarship involved wouldn't have stayed at SJSU." Hampton said. Bullard said Hampton did not transfer to City College until picking up his last 'allotment check (scholarship).

Fresno State could be trouble for cagers despite 2-4 record

By Dan Bertellotti

Fresno State is the type of basketball team that can give even the best team trouble on any given night.

The Bulldogs have the offensive power to scare even the most confident coach. But because of some inadequacies on the defensive end, the 'Dogs' are only 13-9 on the year and 2-4 in PCAA play

And they will be trying to make it 14-9 as they come into Civic Auditorium Saturday night to take on SJSU in an 8:05 PCAA game

Since Thursday's Long Beach-San Jose game was played after press time, the Spartans may have been eliminated a chance at the PCAA crown.

If the Spartans downed LBSU, then they retained their slim hopes, but a loss ended all hopes

Fresno State's biggest win of the year came at the most unlikely place, the Long Beach Arena. LBSU had won 77 straight home games until the University of San Francisco beat the 49ers in the arena early this season.

But the Bulldogs tripped up the 49ers, 71-69, on a lastsecond jumper by Roy Jones.

In the latest stats released by the PCAA, San Jose dropped to second in team offense behind San Diego State. The Spartans are now the worst defensive team in the PCAA, allowing 77 points a game.

The Fresno State-San Jose game will be broadcast over both KXRX (1500-AM) and KSJS (90.7-FM) starting at 8 p.m.

Gregory raps system

By Robin McNabb

After mistakenly going to SJSU instead of San Jose City College (SJCC), Black comedian-lecturer Dick Gregory twirled and dipped his way through a relentless barrage of accusations against what he called aspects of "the white racist system" Wednesday night.

Arriving through the side entrance of the SJCC theatre 30 minutes after the scheduled start of the 8 p.m. speech, Gregory was met with popping flash cameras and a flock of well wishers while a standing-room-only audience gave him a standing ovation.

Dressed in a black leather waist coat and blue bell bottom levis, Gregory took his position on the raised stage for a three-hour speech.

The speech evoked howls of laughter and periods of thought-provoking silence from the mostly black student audience

The tall slim comedian stroked his full beard, grasped the chest-high lecturn and screamed, "This whole world has gone crazy!"

"Only in America can there be economic shortages, auto rebates, water and air pollution at the same time. When we going to wake up?'

Suddenly leaping to the lecturn's side and aiming his right forefinger at the audience, the steely-eyed human rights activist assailed the CIA in the first of repeated attacks

'This is the first time I've been to a speech in 10 years where I've seen so many of you slimy government agents. I want to tell you sons-of-bitches something to take back to the White House.'

He let an astounded silent audience hang for a moment, continuing "If you want to kill me, you all have another thing coming," he said calmly. Flapping his arms at his side and strutting the full length of the 100-foot stage, Gregory, a 1968 Peace and Freedom party presidential candidate, shouted, "Never have the young people of America had such a heavy burden dropped on them by an older generation.

He warned the charisma-struck audience of a "danger" in having a president and vice president not elected by the people

Do you realize, or think it's an accident, that we now have an executive branch of government not elected by popular vote?

He accused President Ford of being a "stand in" for Vice President Rockefeller.

With this combination, we now have the same mentality ruling this country that Germany had when Hitler came to power, he said.

sport,

dividuals."

"If we are not careful, there will be a suspension of the U.S. Constitution in exchange for the government curing the present afflictions in this country," he warned.

Gregory termed the "youth of America" the salvation of the country. 'You can turn it (the system) all around if you understand the power that rules this country," he said. Gregory accused corporate monopolies and rich aristocrats of "playing games with the world's resources.'

Citing disparities in distribution of food between developed and undeveloped countries as a major world problem, he implored the audience "not to let this continue.

"Food is the new weapon, he shouted, throwing back his shoulders and shooting his arms into the air, "and America will starve-out the world, backed by a military that rules its generals."

"America ain't for nobody but herself," he continued, as he turned his back to the audience and marched to the rear of the stage.

From that point, his raspy, baritone voice reverberated against the ceiling and bounced back upon his reverent audience, "And I know that she would sell her mama for a nickel," he continued, "America is manipulating the world.

Turning to the economy, the Chicago dynamo shook his Afro hairdo from side-to-side and fired a staccato-like attack upon what he called an "impossible situation."

'Because of inflation and recession at the same time, millions of Americans had to change their diets. They had to quit eating meat and now their eating beans and rice. 'As a result, poor people got their food prices raised.

Now what happens if the weather changes and more draughts come? Launching upon a second attack of the CIA, he challenged the audience to refute the CIA being any more than "vicious, slimy, killers."

Gregory said in 40 days he would present President Ford's commission on the investigation of the CIA, for alleged domestic spying activities, with "documented evidence the CIA's activities have been illegal."

'If the CIA were after me the way I'm after them, I'd surrender," Gregory chortled.

Waving his arms in contorted gestures and contracting his forehead into a flow of ripples, Gregory exploded at the audience, "Only moral forces can turn this country around," he shouted above a growing swell of applause, "and they had better do so quickly.

BLASTING RACISM-Dick Gregory, the comedian-lecturer, put down "the white racist system" and accused America of manipulating the world in a speech Wednesday night.

In his speech, Bunzel used a foot race to illustrate how some might view equality, in which the "scorekeeper" would insure that women and minorities win a certain number of races.

Asked about this analogy, Faustina responded, "I want to see men and women of all colors competing on an equal footing for the rewards of life.

But Faustina added, "It's very difficult, though, when it's a close race and the judges are all white males."

Question of rights

A major theme running through Bunzel's speech was question of whether the individual rights supercede group rights in hiring practices.

"Rights are held by in-dividuals," said Bunzel, "and are not held by any groups per se.

Walton said this argument is "a means of attempting to perpetuate the inequities of the status quo."

"The reason I believe the...argument is a hollow one, is that it fails to address itself to the common individual who lacks the sophistication, resources or phenomenon, "in which certain acceptable policies tend to have a disproportionate effect on women and minorities.

"Affirmative action is set up to try and root out these subtle forms of racism,' Faustina added.

wealth to attack the stitutional racism as a systematic exclusion of individuals by corporate and governmental structures," Walton said. Faustina, speaking on similar lines, noted the existence of, "subtle forms of institutional racism.

Faustina defined in-

Robinson, who conducted an the experiment on psychology of auto repairmen's treatment of "dumb" women.

"What I did was randomly pick 16 local auto repair shops to look at the bashed in left fender on my 1959 TR3," she explained.

"I divided them into two groups of eight," she said. "I acted naive and ignorant about the car with one group. and with the other group, I acted as though I was knowledgeable and understood what was going on.

"The reactions I got from the repairmen," she said, "were pretty incredible."

$198. The highest bid of the 'smart'' group was $4 cheaper than the lowest bid of the "dumb" group, she pointed out.

"What was even more interesting," she said, "was the fact that every single repairman I went to had an almost identical approach to women customers.

When she brought the car in for the estimates, she said she always used the same lines to the repairmen. At the places she acted naive, she would say, "Oh my! It looks horrible. I don't know what to do.'

Each time, according to Robinson, the repairman would say something like, me when I acted dumb." Robinson said the repairmen all behaved in a very sympathetic manner when she told them her problem.

"In fact," said Robinson, "the guy that wanted to charge me $198 was the nicest one of them all.

greatest difference in prices was not for replacement parts but the charge for labor.

Robinson will present the results of her findings at the next Spartan Psychological Association meeting.
