Student membership lacking on history course committee

Students have not been appointed to the History Department's curriculum committee since 1974, despite a fiveyear-old university policy allowing their participation.

The policy, outlined in the SJSU

Burns says spirit violated

Academic Vice President Hobert Burns criticized the History Department for not adhering to the "spirit" of the university policy requiring that students have an opportunity for participation on the faculty curriculum committee.

Burns said the policy has not been technically violated, because it requires students have only an "opportunity" for participation.

"As far as I am aware that much is provided by the History Department," he said. But he criticized the department for not actively soliciting students as it has in previous years. The intent of the policy was to get students on those committees," Burns said. "I would think that would include publicizing the fact that students are allowed on them." "While the letter of the policy has not been violated," he said, "in my opinion the spirit of it certainly has been."

He pointed out a larger matter is that no students have been on the committee

He said he had spoken about that with Dean James Sawery of the School of Social Sciences and expects the matter will be resolved soon.

Informed that the History Department believes it is receiving adequate input through informal contacts with graduate students and its honor society, Burns replied, "That may be, but the policy remains" that students should be on that committee.

Responsibilities," requires that students have an "opportunity" for revising and improving curriculum by serving on "operational" curriculum committees.

It was approved by the Academic Senate and President John Bunzel effective January 1971. History Department Chairman Gerald Wheeler admitted he was "not familiar with the policy but would now seek students for his department's curriculum committee.

However, he said, only graduate students would be sought because they have "more expertise" in the field and could thus provide "more valuable advice" then undergraduates.

The history department curriculum committee structures the department's program for majors and suggests new courses.

Wheeler explained students were banned from all department committees by a "department consensus"

He said the consensus was made after three-year experiment in 1969-71 allowing students on committees 'didn't work out too well."

'I was struck by the students' record of non-participation," he said, adding that "the student representatives had didn't always show up for meetings.

'After the experience, we decided we weren't going to put students on the committee again.'

Student representation suspended in fall 1972 and spring 1973, and temporarily restored the following academic year, Wheeler said.

Since then, students have not been solicited for any department committees

Asked if the absence of students from the curriculum committee might deprive the department of needed input, Wheeler replied student input was obtained by other means.

"Phi Alpha Theta (a history honor society) was periodically asked for advice on curriculum matters and graduate students were also consulted," he said.

Also, class colloquiums were held from time to time to "see what students wanted" for courses, Wheeler added.

Wheeler acknowledged, however, the department could use more student

He said students have not been solicited for the curriculum committee because of an assumption of "pretty

I believed students did not want to be on the committee," he said.

However, he said he was "curious" to find out if present history undergraduates are interested in serving on the committee, and added if the demand were great enough he "might consider" soliciting them in addition to graduate students.

Expanding on why he prefers graduate students for the curriculum committee, Wheeler said "since they have a certain amount of history behind them, what they have to say can be taken seriously.

'I have yet to see an undergraduate who is an experienced historian," Wheeler said. "I prefer to take my advice from someone who knows what he talks about."

Wheeler downplayed the importance of the curriculum committee.

"It only meets on an 'on call' basis and actually meets only when a major renovation of the curriculum is in or-

Athletic Director John Caine goes to University of Oregon

By Dennis Wynne

Dr. John Caine, athletic director at SJSU for the past four years, has been named to the same post at the University of Oregon. At a press conference held yesterday in Eugene, Ore. Caine was named to the post vacated four months ago by Norv Ritchie, who retired to go into private business. Oregon President William Boyd said at the press conference, "We are delighted to have John Caine become the new director of athletics at the university.

"He is an experienced athletic administrator and brings to Oregon an exceptional record of achievement in sports information," Boyd added.

Caine, 52, said he was pleased to be chosen as Oregon's new athletic director but had mixed emotions about 'leaving a really fine program at SJS and an awful lot of good people I've been associated with. 'However, the Oregon position is the type of opportunity at this stage of my career I cannot afford to pass up.'

Caine will assume his new post on Apr. 1. Until then he will still be at SJSU. His salary will be $33,000.

The Athletic Board met in executive session vesterday to name two interim replacements for Caine. However, the Daily had not learned those names at athletic director's duties until the post is filled.

The Athletic Board will also undertake the task of selecting a new athletic director.

According to Wynn Cook the personnel committee will advertise nationally for the job in accordance with affirmative action provisions.

The committee will then select a group of finalists to come to SJSU for interviews and from these will make its That name of that person will be sub-candidate could be selected from SJSU.

'Anybody on the staff who wants to apply may," Cook said. Caine came to SJSU from CSU

Fullerton where he served as athletic director for four years. He earned his BA and master's from UCLA and his Ph.D. at the University of Northern Colorado.

Caine was a basketball coach before he went into administration. He coached both at the high school and

The terms of two of SJSU's three seats on the statewide Academic Senate expire this semester. And one of the incumbents is uncertain about running for re-election.

Dr. David Newman, director of the Counseling Center, said he has not yet decided whether to run for another three-year term on the senate.

In order to run, Newman must file a petition of candidacy by March 3. The actual ballots will go out to instructors March 24. However, Dr. David Elliott, speech-chairman of the senate, said he will run for another term. The statewide senate is composed of faculty representatives from each campus in the state university system. Elected by faculty at their respective schools, senate members make adresolutions concerning university issues to the chancellor and the board of trustees. Newman said he was uncertain about running again because he believed his senate activities might be affecting his work at SJSU, even though he is given time off to perform senate business. 'Most of us find we still have to do most of our regular work," he said. "It gets to be a burden."

and

Newman said the senate meets as a body for three-day sessions every other month, with its various committees each meeting several times in between. Newman currently chairs the senate's student policy committee.

Newman said the senate articulates faculty views on system-wide issues. He added the importance of the statewide senate has been growing so it has been playing a larger part in determining system-wide policies.

"The chancellor has been paying more attention to us," Newman said. In deciding whether to run, Newman said he is balancing his effectiveness in his job against the value of his work in the senate.

Elliott, who said he would run for reelection, called his senate position "very enjoyable," but agreed with Newman that senate and teaching duties add up to a heavy workload Elliott gets time off from teaching due to his position as senate vicechairman, but said between senate business and his classroom duties, "My family never sees me.'

'It (the statewide senate) is a job and a half in itself," Elliott said.

Elliott was elected vice chairman last year after being chairman of the statewide senate's faculty affairs committee the year before. Both he and Newman are finishing their first terms.

As chairman, Elliott said he is not in a position to influence the positions the statewide senate takes on

He also raised the possibility the current senate chairman might not run ain, making him a likely candidate for the post.

"The job is difficult to back away from," Elliott said. "It's satisfying." Elliott added he hoped Newman would decide to run again. He called Newman a "very valuable" man on the statewide senate.

Davis considers joining Econ suit

Economics assistant prof. Martin Davis may join a lawsuit brought against the university by three former Economics Department faculty members.

He will join the lawsuit if a United Professors of California (UPC) state be won in court.

Davis has charged he will not be retained after this semester for "arbitrary" and "politically motivated" He said he is being retaliated against for not supporting Dr. James Willis in his bid for re-election as department Willis would not comment on the charge because it is in litigation.

Willis ran for a second term in fall 1973 and although he lost, President John Bunzel appointed him chairman After considering Davis' charges, the executive committee of the UPC local unanimously voted last week to send Davis' request for legal support onto the state level.

UPC local President Roland Lee said the executive committee's recommendation to support Davis was routine.

The state academic freedom committee will judge the legal merits of the case, he said.

Dr. Jack Kurzweil, chairman of the UPC local grievance committee, said he thinks Davis will join the suit.

UPC attorney Sheldon Greene would not comment on the case because he said he has not "formally" reviewed it.

He said when he looks at the case his recommendation to the state UPC will be based on its "chances of prevailing

The suit charges they were not retained because of political positions they took in the department following Willis' reappointment. The Economics Department was disenfranchised in fall 1974 because of internal conflicts within the department. A year later they were conditionally refranchised. At that time, many faculty members opposed what they called an "ad-ministration take-over" of the department. Davis charged that favorable student and peer evaluations of him were disregarded in the decision not to retain

During the semester break a faculty grievance committee heard Davis' case and denied his request to be retained.

Filing a lawsuit was Davis' only recourse. A confidential report issued by the committee stated. "The general consensus was that Assistant Professor Davis' lack of progress toward completion of his dissertation was the principal cause of his not being retained."

Davis has said his thesis was not completed because political upheavals in the Economics Department interfered with his progress.

Campus hit by flu increase

By Liz Santos

"There has been a definite in-crease of the flu syndrome on campus since the beginning of the spring semester," Dr. Raymond Miller, staff physician at the SJSU Health Services, said.

The flu took its heaviest toll on campus during the past month with a marked increase of the upper respiratory type syndrome in three to four days. The recovery rate among SJSU students has been good with relatively few complications, Miller said.

General symptoms of the type of flu seen on campus include fever, headache, muscular aches and pains, chest pain and upper respiratory infection with very little nausea, Miller said.

The peak of the flu season at

SJSU is probably over, Miller said.

This flu generally runs its course

Since the campus deals with an ideal type population, meaning a great number of students all exposed to the virus at the same time. the flu season tends to peak and subside faster than it does among the general population, Miller explained. Eighty cases of flu and 180 upper respiratory infection cases were recorded through Feb. 20, a tremendous jump for the month, according to Edward Ambrose, Health Services assistant. While the flu is not required to be reported to the county health department, trends in the county point to a significant increase in flue among the general population, Dr. Mary H. Clark, deputy director of public health for Santa Clara County, said.

There are several ways the county health department tracks the incidence of flu. One method is reviewing school absenteeism reports sent in by 12 to 15 high schools and 38 to 40 elementary schools in the county, Clark ex-

The combined school absenteeism reports showed a sudden jump for the week ending Feb. 14, Clark reported.

Not much can be done to prevent the spread of flu beyond advising people to avoid crowds and keep themselves from getting run down. The flu vaccine is not recommended for people under the age of 60, and it's really too late for a flu vaccine to be effective this season, Clark explained.

Bed rest and aspirin are recommended to combat the symptoms.

Both pieces took the Spartan Daily to task for some inept news reporting surrounding the disruption of Bunzel's bicentennial speach. I, too, read that coverage and I generally share in Bentel's and Bunzel's criticisms. The news stories were basically written from only one source and this is poor practice in journalism.

But, both men fall into the trap of arguing their cases through the use of fine-sounding cliches that, on closer scrutiny, are meaningless

Bunzel, for instance, writes: "It is the student editor. . .who separates the wheat from the chaff—and prints the chaff." The fact is there was only one reporter at the speech to write the followup. Unfortunately, the editor had very little choice on what story to print-only one was written

Also Bunzel alleges that the Spartan Daily is supported and subsidized by the A.S. This is true, to a certain extent But it is not the whole truth. Most of the tabs the newspaper runs up are paid for through advertising revenues the ad staff hussles for. The money the student body provides is used, basically, to get paper through the first days publication each semester when the advertising is being gathered.

Also Bunzel claims to be knowledgeable about the 40 years of Spartan Daily publication. Really, how can he expect us to believe this.

Last year, in a similar Mercury column, Bunzel claimed he only read the Spartan Daily over the summer break (by the way, Bunzel typically blasts the Spartan Daily once a year in his column).

Now we find out that Bunzel does, in fact, read the newspaper during the school year. But beyond that, he wants the reader to believe that he's gone through bound volume after volume of Coalition Against Forced Treatment (CAFT) of a petition in support of legislation which would ban the administration of involuntary shock treatments and other forms of psychiatric "therapy."

This story was grossly inaccurate and reflected a frightening misrepresentation of the legal and moral considerations which underlye the legislation now being drafted.

As your reporter correctly pointed out, the bill recently drafted by the CAFT is not the only proposed legislation which deals with the issues of forced psychiatric treatment.

However, your reporter was totally off base in suggesting that constituent organizations who make up the coalition are attempting to conceal existance of the other legislation in an attempt to gather support for CAFT's

The whole thrust of CAFT's bill, as a minimum of research and investigation would reveal, is to close loopholes and otherwise extend the protections provided in existing legislation, including Assemblyman John Vasconcellos' bill (AB 1032) now in the state senate.

Your article quotes Sue Lange, administrative assistant to Vasconcellos, as saying that "CAFT is distorting the facts about the Assemblyman's bill."

Ms. Lange has assured us that the comparison of existing law with Vasconcellos' bill and CAFT's proposed legislation-which accompanies our circulating petitions-in no way Your Feb. 6 edition carried a story concerning the circulation by the Assemblyman Vasconcellos' bill.

Specifically, the CAFT bill would prohibit the use of shock treatment unless the expressed informed consent of the patient is first obtained.

AB 1032, by contrast, provides for the administration of shock treatment to persons who have been deemed incapable of informed consent after a court hearing on the issue.

In addition, the CAFT bill prohibits the administration of shock treatment to anyone under the age of 18, while Assemblyman Vasconcellos' bill limits the prohibition of shock treatment to minors under 16.

Under existing law, a minor under 15 years of age may be administered shock treatment if parental consent is

Most importantly, the CAFT bill would-for the first time-extend the requirements of obtaining informed consent to the administration of psychoactive drugs; neither the existing law nor Assemblyman Vasconcellos' bill deals with this

It is precisely because of the weaknesses in existing legislation and AB 1032 that CAFT developed its own legislative proposals. We would suggest that any readers, including your reporter, who would like additional information regarding this legislation contact CAFT at (415) 626-

Transit's future depends on success of Measure A

By John A. Ytreus

Low voter turnouts are customary with elections that feature only one or two measures.

When such ballots offer an increase in taxes, the low response is usually made up of "no" votes.

This Tuesday, Santa Clara County will hold a special election to raise needed additional revenues to finance the transit system.

Transit officials—as well as Rep. Norman Mineta, D—San Jose, have warned that if "Measure A" fails this Tuesday, the county will be forced to dismantle the bus system and end it entirely by July 1, 1977.

Because of the small ballot, voters are generally unaware of the issueswhether they are important or not.

The abandonment of the service 12 years ago created snarled freeways that plague motorists today. The current bus systems in Los Angeles and San Jose though have proven to be inadequate.

But is this reason to dump the system? Obviously not. If the county's bus service were to end tomorrow-or by July 1, 1977—what will students, the elderly and the low income people do to get to work, school or just get around Currently, Los Angeles is mapping out plans for a similar light rail system. They've apparently learned that a city cannot live on freeways alone.

If Measure A is passed, more funds will be available to expand the bus system as well as further the plans for a light rail system.

The outcome will affect us all. Here is an opportunity for the voters of this county to make a positive change in their communities.

Black History Week is now over and everybody can melt back into their normal life style as if nothing ever happened.

The $16,760 loss that was noted in the Spartan Daily can only be attributed to one group, namely the Black Students Organizing Committee (BSOC). The "Week," which did more harm

Looking like it should have been called "Popeye and Olive Oyl Meet the Great Gatsby." the film "Great the film "Gable and Lombard" is a travesty, ruining what could have been a classy, real-life version of "Love Story." Brolin tries to look like Gable and sound like Gable, and for a man of Brolin's acting abilities, that is too many things to do at once.

Clayburgh is not quite as bad, perhaps because the memory of Carole Lombard is too misty to compare her with.

The film has a few high moments, as when Gable and Lombard meet and go through hate at first sight, but as soon as they begin to like each other the film degenerates badly.

Spartans in pool again

Spartan swim coach Mike Monsees is hoping a two week layoff will strengthen rather than weaken his team as they prepare for tomorrow's dual meet at University of the Pacific.

SJSU is now concentrating on the one remaining meet, followed next week by the PCAA championships at Long Beach.

To get his squad prepared for the upcoming events, Monsees has cut down his team's workouts instead of picking them up.
"We are only working out two days a week now," said Monsees, who had his swimmers in the pool two times a day, five times a week prior to this week.

"I want to make sure everyone is rested for the next two events," explained the coach.

The next two events should produce the toughest competition of the year, and Monsees hopes his swimmers can carry over some of their fine performances recorded two weeks ago in

In the four-team meet the Spartans set three school records and came close to breaking three others. Or is that set two school records and came close to breaking four others? "We don't know for sure yet," said Monsees, who which is about four seconds off the record," said Monsees.

But the girls running the official watches turned in a time of 10:42.0, seven seconds faster than Greg Henning's record setting 10:49 earlier this year.

Monsees said he will just have to wait until the official times come in the mail.

But Spartan swimmers did

Reporter blasts media coverage

By Joyce Lane "The reason why" armed propaganda (terrorism) works so well," according to M.F. Beal, "is that the act of violence itself gets you media coverage.'

Beal is covering the Patricia Hearst trial for Atlantic Monthly magazine.

'The press are suckers for violence," she said during a question and answer session coverage of the Hearst case. The program was presented by professor

Lazere for his English class, but it was open to all students. 'A good number of weekly magazines are expressing interest in the trial," Beal "I think it has to do with the notoriety of the people involved.

By Stephani Cruickshank

Patty Hearst is a "double victim" of the SLA and law enforcement, said M.F. Beal, the Atlantic Monthly magazine's reporter for the Hearst trial.

The government has already spent a "fortune" on locating and prosecuting Hearst, and they don't want their money to "go down the drain," Beal said, while feminine speaking on elements of the Hearst trial at SJSU Wednesday.

program The presented by Professor Donald Lazere for his English class, but was open the campus community

One of the reasons the SLA kidnapped Hearst was to shake up" the American system, she said.

Women victimized

"I see her as having been taken largely because she was female," Beal said. These are elements of how women are victimized in our society.

Beal said there are both negative and positive feminine aspects of the trial, some of which may help

Hearst's defense. A "popular stereotype is that it is alright for a woman to submit to 'coercion,' " she

A "princess"

The image of Hearst being "princess" of the Hearst family tends to discredit her as a serious defendant, Beal

Hearst is treated as a girl instead of a woman, Beal said, in that press reports refer to her by her first name, rather than her last

Beal claims the reporting of the Hearst trial has been biased because the press is '90 per cent white males in their 30s and 40s.'

She added that Hearst is completely almost surrounded by "middle-aged white men," including psychiatrists and law enforcement officials.

In addition, Hearst is isolated from other women inmates by being placed in a private cell, Beal said.

Although the jailers explain that this "constitutes better care," Beal said, it may be "cruel and unusual

Drug reports

Beal said she heard reports that Hearst was being drugged, even though Chief of Corrections denied the charge.

This procedure is used widely, she said, because it's so great at controlling behavior

'Middle-aged white men consider it the thing to do," Beal said. "If you're feminine, you're victimized. If you're unfeminine, you're victimized," Beal said.

Beal has written for such journals as New American Review and Paris Review. She also is the author of the "Amazone One, which concerns an SLA-type underground group.

The press has emphasized the trial as a "social event," she said, adding that it has spent much time describing such things as the clothing worn by Patty Hearst and her parents. Beal said this can seem to distort" the real news issues.

When F. Lee Bailey comes out of the courtroom," she said, "there are 40 people on him," which contributes to the circus atmosphere.

The prosecution holds that 'nobody would have said 'I am a guerilla' that many times' unless they were really involved, she said.

Beal indicated she thinks Hearst is innocent.

"I don't think that a person should be punished for forced coersion in a crime, Beal commented.

James Browning, attorney for the prosecution, she said, "has all this lucious evidence," which has not been admitted into court, "and he wants to get it out because it proves that Patricia Hearst is guilty, guilty, guilty.'

Funding control under question

An act to remove the funding authority of the Intercultural Steering Committee (ICSC) has been sent to the Campus Policy Committee for further study and revision.

The act, co-authored by council members Leslie Raderman and Haman Hawari, both members of the Third World Coalition-Progressive Slate (TWC-PS) would retain ICSC as a coordinating body for foreign student groups but discontinue its fiscal responsibilities.

The act would also change the manner in which the ICSC chairperson is selected.

The chairperson would be selected by the ICSC governing board under the Presently the chairperson is appointed by the A.S. president with twoapproval of the council.

The act would also specify that all foreign student organizations would have the right to request funding from A.S. regardless of their membership in ICSC

A.S. President John Rico said all foreign student organizations currently have that right to funding

A water purification technique which will possibly be used by astronauts on extended flights is being researched by SJSU students through a $35,999 one-year grant from the NASA-Ames

"The contaminant that particularly concerns us is urea," said Vernon Ballou, research associate at Ames. This, along with salt, are the smallest contaminants and therefore the hardest to isolate, he said.

James Clark and Donna Blood, SJSU chemistry majors researching the project, are experimenting with membrane filters which are made by a plasma generator and used to filter the water.

"It's quite an elaborate process making the membranes," Clark said. "I've learned a lot about exfected it could feasibly be adapted for commercial use, according to Ballou.

Political science attracts women

By Dean Chalios

Department Political Science, in its annual report for 1974-75 prepared by department chairman Roy Young, has shown a "remarkable" increase in the number of women political science majors.

The report indicates in the fall 1972 semester, there were only 88 women majoring in political science. This was only 12.7 per cent of the total number of political science majors. However, in the fall 1974 semester, there were 166 women majors, which constituted 24 per cent of the total number of majors in the department.

According to the report women comprise 20 per cent upper division and graduate majors and 35 per cent of the lower division majors.

Ellen Boneparth, assistant professor of political science and instructor for Political Science 137, "Women and Politics," said generally the increase can be attributed to the effects of the women's movement. 'The women's movement wants to break down the sex stereotyping in education and to encourage more women and men to move into non-traditional

This basic increase in women political science majors has risen drastically in the past couple of years. Boneparth said this may be related to the success of local female politicians. She mentioned Assemblywoman Leona Egeland, San Jose Mayor Janet Gray Hayes, County Supervisor Geri Steinberg and San Jose City Councilwoman Suzanne Wilson as those who serve as local "role models."

There are presently three women political science instructors at SJSU. They are Boneparth, Dr. Lela Noble and Dr. Fauneil Rinn, both of whom are professors of political science. Boneparth said she would like to see more women political science students enter graduate school. She said if these women eventually do enter the teaching field, they "will serve as motivators to other women" which possibly may make them go into "practical and academic" political science pursuits.

Twelve per cent of the Ph.D.'s in political science are female," Boneparth said.

Young pointed out the possibility of law school or just the fact aht women are becoming more concerned with women in politics may be reasons for the recent

'Political trust' declining

A general decline in the American public confidence in the political institutions of this country was discussed yesterday in a presentation to a standing room only crowd in the S.U. Umunhum Room by Dr. Jack Dennis. Dennis, a professor of political science at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, is presently a fellow at the Center for the Advanced Study of the Behavioral Sciences. The center is a "think tank" located in Palo Alto.

Dennis said there is a 'general alienation approach" toward the political system in this country
