Court upholds city parking ban

The university's attempt to halt parking ban east of campus was dealt a serious blow yesterday.

Superior Court Judge Vincent Bruno handed down a decision denying the university's request for a preliminary injunction against implementation of the ban.

Approved by the city council during the summer, the ordinance would ban parking for non-residents on 12th through 17th streets from 1 to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 1 through 4 p.m. on decision immediately. The university's legal counsel, Richard Mayers, from the state attorney general's office, was not available for comment yesterday.

The mayor's representative, Joan Corsiglia, said the mayor is pleased with the decision, but is not sure when the ban will go into effect.

mayor was unavailable for comment yesterday afternoon. Corsiglia said parking ban signs would have to be put back up before the ban could be enforced.

The city put up the signs in late August, but was forced by the September 7 court edict to take them down pending yesterday's

The signs were originally installed at a cost of $16,600. The cost for removal of the 400 to 450 signs totalled $707, according to Joe Oehlert, business manager with San Jose Department of Public Works.

Judge Bruno's two-sentence pronouncement also dissolved the temporary restraining order which held the situation in limbo pending this decision.

Originally the parking or-dinance was to go into effect Sep-tember 8. But the day before, university attorney Mayers managed to argue for a temporary

According to SJSU officials the university's brief argued the ban was unconstitutional because it made a distinction between classes

City attorney Willie Lott argued that the ban is legal citing a state statute supporting preferential parking.

He said the ordinance is reasonable and necessary because it relieves traffic congestion.

Mayers claimed the ban would give "favored nation" status to residents and discriminate against Commenting on the decision, Lott said, "He obviously felt that the ordinance was constitutional and the university was not being injured."

The decision, he added, allows the city to "do whatever we want

The city may implement the ban immediately or wait until a university appeal goes to court.

Bunzel's statement yesterday was brief.

"We are disappointed with Judge Bruno's decision," it read. "We are particularly concerned about the hardship the ruling will impose on students, staff and other members of the university

Approximately 10,000 commuting students compete daily for about 5,600 campus parking spaces The remaining students are forced to park on streets near the campus.

"We will, of course, immediately appeal the decision," the statement concluded.

Judge Bruno's statement read, "The application of the plaintiff pursuant to an order to show cause for a preliminary in-junction is ordered denied.

The temporary restraining order heretofore ordered is herein ordered dissolved."

Faculty forms committee; calls for greater power

By David Koenig

Faculty election of the university president is among the proposals urged in a letter signed by 19 professors.

The letter written to the Spartan Daily by Robert Gliner, associate professor of sociology, calls for increased faculty power in university governance.

Gliner has named the group "the Committee for a Democratic President John Bunzel's administration with "inadequately and incompetently" handling low faculty morale, an inflexible SJSU bureaucracy, loss of enrollment in liberal arts areas, deterioration of relationship with community leaders and "lack of initiative" in solving the parking problem. Bunzel made no response to the charges, although both his office and University Relations were contacted Carbon copies of the letter were sent to Bunzel; Assemblyman John Vasconcellos, D-San Jose, chairman Vasconceilos, D-San Jose, Chairman of the Assembly Subcommittee on Post-secondary Education; state Senator Jerry Smith, D-Saratoga; and Assemblywoman Leona Egeland, D-San Jose.

Gliner's letter proposes that faculty demand election of the president, all deans and "senior administrators" to three-year campaign period precede elections, 'debates on critical campus issues" between representatives of administration and faculty be held during lunch hour every Monday.

"We hereby wish to announce the first election of Deans and Senior Administrators for Nov. 8, 1977 and invite the incumbents to place their names along side other candidates for election," the letter reads. (The entire letter is on page 2.)

The 19 professors who signed the letter are split on the possibility of the proposals ever coming to pass

'No, I don't think it's realistic," Math Prof. Anthony R. Lovaglia said. "It's kind of dramatic."

"It's kind of like gorilla theater," History Prof. George Moore said. "It's more to call people's attention to the situation."

James Steele, associate professor of psychology, said the proposal could occur "if the faculty were united in defining the goals of a university.

"It represents an ideal state for the governance of a university."

A spokesman for the group, who wished to remain anonymous, said the group is "making a serious effort" to obtain faculty election of administrators, although legally Bunzel has the power to veto any such proposal.

He suggested that the group might try to get legislation enacted that would grant professors that power.

"We're going to go ahead on this as if it were legal," the spokesman said.

He added that "The whole thing flexible...open to debate and change.'

Several of the signers said they expect at least informal backing from the Academic Senate, United Professors of California and other faculty groups.

The general idea (of elections) is to increase faculty involvement. and...bridge the communication gap between the administration and students and faculty," the spokesman said.

Runyon faces prosecution, denies guilt

San Jose City Councilman David Runyon and an SJSU student were charged Friday with a misdemeanor complaint by the district attorney's office, stemming from their altera downtown cation outside t a month

The first-year councilman and Scott Lewis Allen, 21-year-old Spartan Daily photographer, both denied their guilt in the matter.

Runyon is charged with one count of delaying and obstructing a police officer and with one count of battery of an officer.

The maximum penalty for the first charge is a fine not exceeding $1,000 and one year in jail. second charge carries the penalty of a fine not exceeding $500 and six months in jail. Allen, a journalism major from Alamo, is accused of one count of battery on a woman in Runyon's party. The maximum penalty for that crime is a fine of $500 or six months in iail. "I am not guilty and I will be vindicated," said Runyon.

"I don't think they have grounds for the case. I don't think I'll be convicted," Allen said.

The district attorney's office would not comment on the matter.

Charges stem from a downtown incident that occurred early Friday morning. Sept. 2. Allen and his companion, SJSU advertising senior Daniel Grady, incurred Runyon's wrath after Allen picked up Runyon's friend, Bonnie Priest, and kissed her in the parking lot outside the Farmer's Union on San Pedro

Runyon, trailing behind his friends - Priest, her husband, and a female acquaintance - appeared just as Allen was lifting Priest off the ground. An angry Runyon, ac-cording to Grady, picked up two handfuls of gravel and threatened to throw them at the students.

Police arrived soon after and Runyon demanded they arrest the two students. When officers refused, Runyon became abusive, police said.

Police tapes of the incident, published in the San Jose Mercury, revealed the councilman made numerous references to the police force's pay raises and threatened officers on the scene with demotions and suspensions.

Runyon publicly apologized to the police and the City Council soon after the tapes were published.
Council members refused to censure Runyon for the incident.

'As of this time, I haven't reviewed the charges against me, Runyon said Friday, reading from a prepared statement. "However, up until now my case has been tried through leaks to the media. I will now be allowed to present my side of the situation in open court.

"Had I not been indicted, there would always have been a question in the minds of my fellow citizens as to the truth of the insinuations and innuendos earlier made against

He added that it "will not affect my political future...because I don't think I'm guilty."

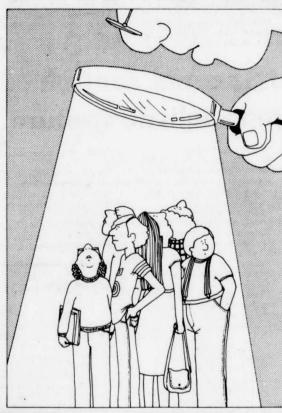

Runyon appeared in Municipal Court yesterday for booking and arraignment.

Allen said he was unaware of .

when his court date was. Runyon is believed to be the only councilman in modern San Jose history ever criminally charged while in office.

Bus service

Santa Clara County transit officials have let their patrons down again.

Two weeks ago, transit authorities informed SJSU that bus service to the campus would be "increased" to help alleviate the parking problem.

A week ago, angry student commuters criticized the inefficiency of bus routes to campus. They claim buses are frequently late, rarely follow schedules and sometimes don't even appear.

When appraised of this discontent, a county transit official admitted that bus service, in reality, would not be upgraded for at least another year.

We find county transit's poor handling of this matter deplorable. The delay in improving transit service is only serving to keep SJSU commuters in their respective vehicles.

Until viable transportation alternatives are available, the critical parking shortage in the central city will only

Administration reform

San Jose State University has been faced by a number of critical issues the past several years which have been inadequately and in-competently dealt with by the Bunzel administration including:

· Low faculty morale, a state of mind directly related to lack of administrative leadership, pressures to publish and execute research projects without support for such projects, loss of faculty positions, the lowest rate of promotions and the most ad-ministrative control over such promotions in the entire State College and University System, a president who is contemptuous of and frequently disregards on most important issues the only faculty voice on campus-the Academic Senate (a body, incidentally, unable to override presidential vetoes);

 Though faculty and students are the heart of the university, the administration, instead of serving a facilitative role for the learningprocess, comes to structure and dominate decision-making, so that bureaucratic dictates often take precedence over educational excellence. As a result, faculty and students often come to be viewed by the administration as "the enemy."

Serious deterioration of relationships between the office of the president and community

· Loss of enrollment in the schools of Social Sciencee and Humanities and Arts because of administration policies which discourage creative curriculum design and a viable outreach program; and · Lack of initiative in solving the parking problem.

In response to this situation, we, the undersigned faculty, wish to announce the formation of the Committee for a Democratic University (CDU), an organization dedicated to the following goals: · Increase in faculty morale and control over university policies by demanding the election of all deans and senior administrators including the Dean of Undergraduate Studies, the Dean of Academic Planning, and the Dean of the Faculty, the position of Academic University President, (no position to be held longer than two terms);

· Elections to be carried out at three-year intervals;

 Preceding each election will be a one month period of active campaigning by prospective candidates for the various positions over such issues as the directiion in which the university is to go, possible new programs, curriculums, departments, and so forth;

In the interim, debates on critical campus issues to be held during lunch hour every Monday by representatives from the current administration and interested faculty.

The Committee for a Democratic University feels that only a democratically elected university administration can be truly responsive to the needs faculty and students alike and that the existence of such an electoral apparatus will revitalize the university making debate over crucial educational issues and what to do about them the norm, rather than the exception.

We hereby wish to announce the first election of Deans and Senior Administrators for Nov. 8, 1977 and invite the incumbents to place their names along side other candidates for election. We would also like to designate Oct. 24-Nov. 7 as a period of debate between the candidates, details of which will be announced in

We invite all faculty, students, and administrators to join the Committee for a Democratic and help bring to San Jose State University democracy

"WE THINK ALIKE"

The case of Allan Bakke

After a long period of debate, the Justice Department statement said that while the Carter Administration opposes "quotas," it recognizes the legitimacy of taking race into account as a way of combating generations of discrimination against racial and ethnic minorities.

Don't go too far out on a limb, Jimmy.

However, the federal govern-ment concedes that the Bakke decision will have implications not only for university admissions but for affirmative action programs in employment.

To end special admission programs and affirmative action programs, almost in their infancy, would be a terrible mistake that would hurt everyone in this country.

After the violent eruptions of the inner-cities during the 1960s, President Johnson established the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders to study the The commission concluded that the cancer of white racism was eroding our entire society and that, unless firm steps were taken, the United States would become two separate societies: one white, one black-separate and unequal.

Affirmative action and special admission programs came to prevent this nightmare, while racial tensions were at their highest.

No one would be foolish enough to say these programs have wiped out racism in this country, but I feel the battle for racial equality has made tremendous strides in the 10 years since the Johnson commission voiced its opinion. Bill Weeks is the Assistant Forum Page Editor

Full-scale riots have all but diminished in this country's ghettos and the reasons can hardly be President Nixon's domestic policies.

The minorities of this country have historically been the scapegoats in an economic crisis, as we have had since 1972.

During the Great Depression of the 1930s, the government began a massive effort to deport Mexican-Americans so there would be more jobs for unemployed whites.

In the 1890s, during one of this country's worst recessions, the number of black lynchings in the decade reached a national all-time high. Perhaps affirmative action and minority admission programs are not the most equitable ways of insuring racial justice, but what are the alternatives?

Abandon these programs and leave the decision of how many minorities should be admitted to a school or company to corporate executives or local school districts?

Include disadvantaged whites in these programs and watch racial hatred soar on the question of who is more disadvantaged? Forget all about minority admission programs and doom the nation to another era of racial

Hopefully, some day in this country there will come a time when special admission and affirmative action programs for minorities will no longer be needed to safeguard against racial discrimination in school placement and jobs.

U.S. canal control: imperialistic venture

By John Weiland

The era of United States domination of Panama is over. It is time to begin giving Panama control of the Canal Zone located within its own country.
For the last 74 years, Americans have been taught the canal was their own. Unfortunately, the treaty with Panama never gave up ownership rights, but only the right to control the territory. This is the only such arrangement in the modern world. As a result, Latin America and world rightfully view the American presence in Panama as big-power imperialism.

> John Weiland is a Spartan Daily staff writer

If we are to avoid the violence that occurred due to American presence in Panama in 1964, the United States must see its way to ratification of the proposed treaties, a compromise from both parties'

All this country loses is the myth that it holds the land "in perpetuity." The reality is the security of the canal can not be guaranteed even with massive troop deployment. Furthermore, it is unrealistic to assume the American people would go to war to protect its "rights." It is too soon after the Vietnam debacle. The proposed treaties before the U.S. Senate will guarantee the

the canal and establish its permanent neutrality. The purpose of the treaties is not relinquishment of control, but a preservation of peaceful access. If President Theodore Roosevelt were alive today, even he would recognize that if four American presidents (Johnson, Nixon, Ford and Carter) have worked on these treaties for the past 13 years, then it is unlikely to sell out United States interests.

If the Senate does not approve the treaties, the United States will be responsible for the potential bloodshed and ill-feeling which Morally, militarily and in the world's perspective, the United States will be in an absolutely indefensible position if the treaties are not ratified. At the end of a violent era, let us deal in peace as a sign of the maturity and strength of America.

Plasma pays off

This man made spaghetti is really tubes used to get the blood from the needle in a donor's arm into the bags, which are then stored.

Students get blood money from center

It looks like frozen orange juice in a plastic bag, but it saves an untold number of lives every year.

This orange colored solution is plasma, a component of human blood.

San Jose Plasma Center, 1469 Park Ave., pays its contributors up to $15 per week for their plasma from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

While the center does pay for the donations, $6 for the first visit and $9 for a second in the same week, it is not in business for others to make money. The plasma they buy is sent to Berkeley, where it is processed into serums which help combat tetanus, measles, whooping cough, polio, rabies and hepatitis.

To obtain the plasma, blood is drawn from the individual and centrifuged until the plasma and blood separate. The plasma is bagged and frozen at 30 degrees fahrenheit. The blood is returned to the donor with a salt solution.

Since the blood is returned to the body it is possible to give plasma twice a week, with at least 48 hours between donations.

The center services about 70 persons each day, according to director Norman Gruver. It has a percent return for the second weekly visit and 70 percent of the 4,045 donors are regulars.

the program are students, estimated Gruver

The first visit to the center takes about two hours. Before blood is taken, several tests are given, including a check for hepatitis, a urine test, a hemoglobin test and a physical, as well as blood pressure, pulse and temperature.

Subsequent visits take from one to one and one-half hours. It takes longer than a blood donation because after the plasma is taken, the blood must be transfused back to the donor, Gruver said.

Since students are often on tight school schedules. appointments are available so they don't have to wait,

Before blood can be transfused back to the donor, he or she must recite their name and donor number to the nurse or nurses aide giving the transfusion. This is to insure a person getting his or her own blood back.

If someone didn't receive their own blood a reaction is possible from receiving red cells not compatible with their own. The chances of this are very slight, and it has never happened in the San Jose major.

"I might as well get paid for it," Yolanda Chavez said, "I always give whole blood.

Collecting loan debts: difficult, full-time job

How would you like to call people five days a week, sking them to send you money

It isn't easy, according to Laura Wiley. Yet Wiley, 28, does it for a living. An employe of the SJSU Financial Aides Office, her job is to contact people who are delinquent on their student loan payments, reminding them to repay the school.

When she started, Wiley said, "it was very hard. You feel like you're prying into their personal life when you ask them why they ve been unable to make payments."

Many of the delinquencies are not deliberate, she

Some occur "simply because people have moved or gotten out of touch," thinking the Financial Aides Office will keep track of the account, she said.

Other delinquencies occur because of economic conditions. Many students are unemployed, she said, or find themselves unable to get those lucrative jobs they were hoping for when they left school.

At first, Wiley said, a billing agency takes the accounts, sending out reminders that payments are due. If the billing agency gets no response, the account is referred back to the Financial Aides Office.

Wiley is one of five persons on the collections staff

Their job is to contact people who are behind in payments by letter or phone, find out what the problem is, and urge that person to get in touch with the office as soon

The problem is, she said, many people ignore the letters, thinking they are only reminders.

But if the office gets no response, the account is referred to the CSUC Chancellor's Office, which sends a letter on the state attorney general's letterhead advising the person that he or she is in default and should contact the Financial Aides Office.

If this does not get a positive response, the matter is turned over to a collections agency.

"Once you've called a person," Wiley said, "you can tell if it's going to be a difficult case. You can tell who is making false promises. Some people are only confused by "Many people just sign the papers when they take out a loan. They have no idea what the terms are, and don't know when the payments are due."

The office has the authority to postpone payments, Wiley said, depending on circumstances. "But people do have to stay within boundaries."

With the harder cases, she said, "well, you just have to work with them." She tries to explain the rules and procedures she operates under, the student's obligations, and what can happen if the student refuses to pay, she said.

If a case goes as far as a collection agency, the Financial Aides Office usually tries to recover collection, attorney and court costs and interest, in addition to the balance due. Although the federal government encourages turning accounts over to collection agencies, insuring a speedy return of loan funds, Wiley feels differently. 'My feeling is that we want to work with college students, not send them to a collection agency," she said. "If this means having to be repaid a smaller amount for a while, that's all right."

For those who are already behind on payments, Wiley's advice is to "be willing to work with the college Contact us.'

The Financial Aides Office might adjust rates to ease hardship and help people get back into balance, she said. There might even be some kind of deferment built into the loan policy itself.

The important thing is to get in touch," she said. "We do try to work with people.

Like other sports, only more so, roller games provide an emotional roller coaster for its followers. In the San Jose contest, the Bay Bombers, constantly behind, fought an uphill battle throughout the match. Fans exhilirated or suffered with each change in fortune.

One important difference from legitimate however, needs mentioning. In roller games, the good guys almost always win. It was not different in San Jose as the Bombers pulled another victory from the very throes of defeat.

And most went home happy and fufilled. After all, did Perry Mason ever lose a case? Or John

The skaters use just about any conceivable manuever to bypass their adversaries. Scratching, slugging, elbowing, and even biting are permissible, if not encouraged.

With all the in-fighting, free-for-alls frequently come to pass. Though the combatants would flail away frantically at each other, little damage would occur. Fans particularly enjoyed the women team's pugilism.

Spartans sputter but Stiles smiles

By Gary Peterson The clock struck 12, the tower chimes clanged loudly and the curtain went up on the Lynn Stiles Comedy Revue. The SJSU head football coach arrived for his weekly ress conference, picked up a copy of the Spartan Daily and wrinkled his brow.

"Is this a misprint?" he asked. "I was out of town over the weekend-did we really lose 52-3?"

The writers in the room breathed a sigh of relief. Having to ask questions of a coach whose team lost by seven touchdowns is usually about as pleasant as losing a

"I prefer to look at positive aspects of the game," Stiles said. "Let's see, we had no trouble securing our McDonald's hamburgers after the game...and none of the cheerleaders were hurt." When asked about his decision to go for a field goal instead of a first down in the third quarter while trailing 42-3, Stiles smiled. "What am I going to do at that point? Score a touchdown and save the game?"

Well, maybe not the game, but he certainly isn't letting this year's disappointments destroy his sense of humor, at least through the first four games.

While running down the now all-too-familiar injury list, Stiles reported Steve Hines, who was subbing at left cornerback for the injured Gerald Small, will have surgery today and miss the rest of the season.

"I tell you," he said, "it's getting hard to find volunteers to play left corner. Heck, it's getting hard to find volunteers to coach."

When told "Crazy George" Henderson, SJSU's zany cheerleader, will be at the upcoming Santa Clara game, Stiles said, "Great. Does he play left corner?"

But while he uses his sense of humor generously, Stiles still retains his objectivity. 'I felt like we really broke down from a fundamental standpoint," he said. 'I'm not sure if our game was a true indication of Cal's strength because we turned the ball over seven times. You do that against a poor team and you expect to lose. You do that against a good team and it's all over Even though the Bears rang up 52 points, Stiles doesn't think Cal coach Mike White tried to unduly em-

"He (White) did tell his players that they needed a decisive win to keep their (16th) ranking," he said, "but I don't think he tried to run up the score.
"In fact I think he held it down by keeping the ball on the ground and substituting liberally. I'm certainly not going to hold it against him.

Modern mother

plays stork to housewives

By Dave Murphy

Donna Lyons has delivered 75 babies in the last year-but she could not convince herself that she was a midwife until a couple of months ago.

Until then, Lyons said she had resisted identifying herself as a midwife. She thought of herself as simply a mother who was interested in finding out all she could about having childbirth at home.

'I guess I finally admitted it to myself after I missed four days of sleep and delivered three babies in 18 hours," she said with a laugh.

In her work as midwife, Lyons has belied the notion that babies have to be delivered in hospitals by balding male doctors who have spent years in medical school.

Besides not being a balding male (she has waist-length brown hair and is a 28-year-old mother of two), Lyons also is different from the stereotype in two other ways: most of her deliveries are at the parents' home, and she has not gone to medical school.

A Palo Alto resident, Lyons does most of her deliveries in the Santa Clara County area.

Although she is supporter of home birth, Lyons said she never tries to persuade people to have their births at home.

"I don't necessarily advocate this for everybody," she said. "It's cision that the parents have to make. I don't talk them into it-they talk me into becoming a midwife for them. Lyons said that she has refused to do home deliveries for some people because she felt they were not physically or emotionally capable of having birth outside a hospital.

Among the physical ailments which would make Lyons refuse to do a home birth are if the mother has a history of kidney or heart problems, or if she has a disease such as diabetes. She said she also will not accept someone who has had troubles with a previous birth.

In order to keep the mothers healthy during the pregnancy, Lyons insists they eat a better-than-average diet and avoid

The midwife said she frequently talks with the parents to find out their reasons for having the birth at home rather than in a hospital.

Although there is a wide range of reasons, Lyons said most parents have home birth for religious, moral or spiritual reasons.

She said that occasionally she comes across a parent who wants home birth because it costs less than a hospital birth. It generally costs from $1,000 to $1,500 for a hospital birth, while Lyons said that she charges anywhere between 25 and 50 percent

"I'm kind of skeptical of taking people who say, 'I'm having a home birth because it's cheaper,' " she said. "There have to be some better reasons."

Besides encouraging the mother to exercise and have a good diet, Lyons takes many other precautions to make sure that the home birth is a safe one. If she notices any possible complications during the pregnancy, she to convince mother that it would be safer to have the birth in a hospital.

Lyons also insists that the mother have at least two visits with a doctor during the pregnancy.

"The doctor can screen for anything we may have missed during examinations," she said. Seeing a doctor is also good precaution, Lyons said, because if the mother has to be rushed to the hospital during birth, there would be someone there who is familiar with her pregnancy.

She also said that a doctor can prescribe laboratory tests, which she does not have the authority to do.

There is one other major precaution which Lyons takes.

"I work with one other midwife," she said. "I try never to do it alone although a few times I

Lyons pointed out that having two midwives present means that even if both the baby and mother were in serious trouble right after birth, there would be someone with experience to help them.

If an emergency does arise during the birth, Lyons said that she either calls for a paramedic unit or rushes the mother to the hospital in her car. She added that she is very reluctant to call an ambulance.

"Most ambulance attendants are not really prepared for childbirth complications," she commented. "By and large, going by ambulance is not always the ideal thing to do."

Because of her attitude about ambulance at-tendants, Lyons feels more confident about taking the mother to the hospital herself-even though Lyons has not had a great deal of medical training.
Although she has studied the various aspects of birth and most emergency techniques, Lyons is not legally considered a midwife. She is called a "lay-midwife" because a legal midwife must be a registered nurse with two additional years with the birth, Lyons was a bit disillusioned by the atmosphere at the hospital.

She objected to many of its policies, such as taking the baby away from the mother right after birth and giving the mother drugs to prepare her for the Lyons' interest in midwifery and home birth grew a couple of years ago when a friend invited her to attend a home birth.

"That was sort of my rude awakening," Lyons said about watching the home birth. "I said to myself, 'So this is how have a birth without all the problems.' I really became conscious that there should be some sort of an option for home birth." Although she still wasn't convinced that she wanted to be a midwife, Lyons did train toward becoming one. A friend who was already a midwife gave an apprenticeship program to Lyons and 14 other women last year. Lyons said that soon afterwards, friends began calling her and asking that she help with their home births.

Her career has kept growing and growing until finally, one year and 75 births later, she has decided that she is more than just someone interested in home birth.

Besides the fact that she became a midwife, last year had another reason for being important to Lyons-she gave birth to her second child.

Rolling commercials are swarming

This VW with a tattoo is also known as a Beetleboard, an advertisement on wheels for companies.

By Gary Peterson

Look! Driving down the road!

It's a Volkswagen with a tattoo, a billboard on wheels, Beetleboard!

Yes, Beetleboards. Catching on faster than a bullet, more amusing than Steve Martin at a party, able to attract large crowds at a single red light.

The brainchild of a mild-mannered marketing consultant, Charles E. Bird, Beetleboards are privately-owned VW bugs transformed into supergraphically decaldecorated advertising vehicles, and are now swarming the streets of more than 250 cities in North America and

Bird saw the need for an alternative to traditional advertising media, so in 1972 he created Beetleboards of

Now there are 5.000 to 6,000 of these rolling commercials and what's more, their owners are receiving two free paint jobs and $20 a month for merely driving in their

Anyone who owns a VW bug, any year, in good body condition, can apply to become a Beetleboard driver. Each applicant must first meet the initial rerequisites of statutory insurance coverage and a good driving record.

Driving habits and mileage are also taken into con-

If these initial requirements are met, applicants are then screened to see which advertisement they are best suited for. Students and those in the medical profession are not allowed to advertise cigarettes, for example. The Beetleboard company doesn't want to advocate smoking in these groups.

Once accepted, the VW owner contracts the services of his bug to Beetleboards of America for six, nine or 12 The car is colorfully redecorated, and emblazoned with the logo of an advertiser.

Once the bug is properly decorated, all you have to d is drive regularly, visit a local Volkswagen dealership for a monthly inspection of the car, and wait for a $20 check.

One local man who's been picking up $20 a month for some time is Larry Gates, 813 N. Second St., who starte as a driver for Beetleboards in 1973.

Gates found out about the project from anothe driver, and is now an area field manager for the compan in addition to being a driver and a full-time employee of the San Jose Mercury News

According to Gates, Beetleboard drivers are rarel

"Somebody's always stopping you and asking abou your car," he said. "Especially in parking lots, even a red lights."

And those who don't talk turn their heads.

You get strange reactions," he said. "Especiall from the kids. They're always pointing and saying 'He mom! Look at that!

You meet a lot of people with it. People want to know how they can get involved. One guy wanted to have on put on his Pinto.'

However, only VWs are allowed.

The company picked them because of their uniquand immediately identifiable shape.

As area field manager, Gates helps screen applicants keeps track of drivers in this area, helps them if they have questions or problems, and helps coordinate promotion:

One example of a Beetleboard promotion would be the time Gates had his bug adorned with an ad for "Levi's for Feet" shoes. When the Mervyn's clothing store begar selling a line of these shoes, Gates parked his car outside the store to attract attention to the footwear.

At the end of the contract with Beetleboards, the driver can either renew the contract, as Gates has done several times, or have the decals removed, receive  $\epsilon$  second paint job, and drive off into the sunset \$120 to \$240

Students used in psychology projects

(Continued from page 1) During the spring of 1977, the Ethics Committee American Psychiatric Association determined that individuals should not be "required" to participate in experiments, but suggested that universities papers. offer participation in experiments as "alternative" learning experiences to

Dr. Robert Pellegrini, who teaches several hundred prospective subjects each semester, said he does require his students to participate in "activities"-experiments-but alternatives are available to students who refuse to be involved in experimentation.

"My support of the requirement presupposes that it can be a valuable learning experience," Pellegrini said, "if it is conducted responsibly."

He requires four hours part of his class grading education requirement. criteria. This can be circumvented by doing a term representing an equivalent amount of work.

partin.
"It's real hard to remember," she said.
"The grad student was to make us freeassociate objects and find out how our backgrounds affected the way we per-ceived things."

At that time, the student was not told that she would get any feedback on the experiment, and she never found out the result of the data compiled.

"I hated having to do the experiment," the journalism senior but it was better than doing a term paper, especially since it was a freshman class and freshmen are not known for wanting to do term

Did she ever voice an objection? "No," she said, "It wasn't worth it-it was his class and his requirement.

"I think that is just about how all the students felt about it. It was just a pain. As a matter of fact, whole class was a pain.

Another student didn't mind participating in the experiment, and said the experiment wasn't very strenuous. However, he did feel that the data compiled was not a very valid sample because of the limited nature of the pool.

Both students received grades in the inof participation in an ex- troductory class and were periment or activity as taking it as a general

The types of ex-periments student subjects participate in vary widely. Some of them are:

· Perceptual learning (papers) as short as two tasks, where such things as the "recognition 'The requirement is that it threshold,' or learnability, different words is

> · Pupilary response, which involves observing student who how an individual's eye

 Surveys, sampling such things as social attitudes, values and beliefs.

All the studies utilizing undergraduate labor are conducted by students according to Pellegrini. Usually they are graduate students in the department's masters program or upper division students experimental psychology classes.

Access to information concerning the ex-periments is available to the subjects, claims Fox, who served as the acting chairman of the department following the death of Dr. Ronald Rabedeau this summer.

However, feedback on the experiments has been occasional, Pellegrini said.

"Now what I want is for the experimenters to provide the subject students with "group trend results" and "analysis of what the data means," he said.

The "pool" of students provides researchers with a continual flow of subjects the experimenters, Pellegrini said, allowing long term experiments to proceed.

"If we couldn't pool freshmen and sophomores," Pellegrini "the graduate said, students would either have to pay for subjects out of their own pockets or do no experiments involving humans.

This is something that Pellegrini sees as a threat to human psychology research.

"There are definitely forces in this country that would like to see an end to this type of study," he said. Distrust psychological experiments stem in part from the defunct practice of "deception experiments,' according to Fox.

These are studies where researchers tell subjects the experiment will be testing one thing, but the experimenters will observe some actually other behavior of the

An example of this tactic would be telling subjects that if they push a button another person will receive a massive shock, when in reality the button

the Here, perimenters view how the subject responds to this power, Fox said.

"Those types of ex-periments are dishonest," he said, "and to the best of my knowledge have never been done on this campus."

He added those types of experiments are only a 'small portion" of the total psychological perimentation picture, and blamed the media for blowing these experiments out of proportion.

Ombudsman Jo Ella Hannah said in her three years at SJSU only one student has complained about the participation requirement, and that it was easily resolved by the completion of a short term
