Major review of programs in June, 1983

Budget cuts shouldn't affect accreditation

Staff Writer

SJSU's accreditation will not be affected by the 5 percent state-wide budget cuts, according to Maynard Robinson, associate academic vice president in charge of education planning and SJSU President Gail Fullerton has said the effect of the budget cut would be 'disastrous.'

"Resources would be too thin to maintain accreditation," she said. Robinson said SJSU is "overall very much in compliance" with accreditation guidelines

Accreditation signifies official authorization and approval from the Western Association of Colleges and Schools. It is needed for a public university to operate.

"This is the consequence of our sensitivity to the guidelines," Robinson continued. "We're a large public agency accustomed to a lot of reviews and also we do a fair job of reviewing ourselves.

"I don't see the budget cut affecting accreditation on the university level. The Western Association of Colleges and Schools is made up of public institutions who are all suffering cuts."

SJSU will undergo a major reac-creditation review in June of 1983. University reaaccreditation reviews take place every 10 years, with a five-year update between the decade-long span.

SJSU must prepare a self-study of the university following accreditation guidelines, to be used by the association along with other criteria to determine reaccreditation.

Areas to be explored in the self-study are: purpose (the distinctive mission of the campus), governance and administration, educational program, faculty and staff, library and other learning resources, student services, physical resources, financial resources and special educational programs.

Fullerton has been asked by the association to assemble a committee and prepare the self-study in spring 1982. The committee will need to pick a chairperson, determine its direction and solicit staff work to create a document that will help determine accreditation..

Along with review of the self-study, the association will visit SJSU in fall 1983 for three to four days.

The team will meet with students, departments to test the claims of the selfstudy and determine compliance with standard guidelines.

The team then writes a report on the basis of the self-study and the campus visit. The report details status of the campus and recommends action: whether or not the team believes SJSU is in compliance with guidelines and merits ac-

The report assesses potential problems, strengths and weaknesses of the campus under review.

"If all goes well," Robinson said, "the campus will be accredited for 10 years."

The association decision to reaccredit "doesn't absolve the campus during the 10year span," he continued. SJSU must file annual reports on accreditation status an must send representatives to annual meetings on accreditation policy updates.

SJSU also undergoes an intensive fiveyear review to assess what has been done to strengthen weak areas. The results of that review, if unfavorable, can result in a revisit by the accreditation team and even loss of accreditation.

Robinson re-emphasized there is "not much concern" over SJSU's maintaining accreditation.

"Where I do see problems is in the special programs," he said. "The budget cut will be particularly harmful to business and engineering where it's already difficult to be competitive in hiring faculty. It's difficult to put supply and equipment money to update engineering equipment.'

This semester, a telephone survey was taken of 460 students who withdrew from SJSU during the cond week of late add/drop.

The results showed most students withdrew from school due to classes not being available, personal reasons and tranfers to

The smell of dried leaves is not the only fragrance lingering in the brisk autumn air.

A most distinct odor, unpleasant robbed his male victim.

By Julie Levy Staff Writer

A motion to declare unconstitutional the special circumstances provision in the murder trial of former SJSU student Donald James Cummings was denied Wednesday by Mark Thomas Jr., Santa Clara County municipal court judge. Cummings, 25, is charged with the Nov. 4, 1979 killing of SJSU student Blythe Nielsen and the January 1981 murder of Phyllis Higdon. Both murder charges carry two provisions for special circumstances: felony murder in the commission of a burglary and multiple murder.

If convicted of murder with special circumstances, Cummings could face the death penalty.

The California felony murder rule states a killing, even if accidental, in the commission of a felony is murder automatically Thomas said the rule was constitutional and allowed the special circumstances provision to stand.

Public Defender Brian Schechmeister refused to nter a plea to the murder with special circumstances charges for Cummings.

The judge then entered a plea of not guilty for the defendant. Schechmeister, for the record, said he believed Thomas exceeded his jurisdiction by pleading for his District Attorney Jack Marshall argued the burglaries were detailed in separate charges and did not need to be repeated in the murder charges.

Schechmeister conceded descriptions of the burglaries in the burglary charges would be sufficient for the murder charges.

Cummings faces two charges of murder with special circumstances, four burglary charges, two assault charges and one sexual charge.

President Reagan ran for office on a platform of increased defense spending. Anyone who doubted before the election that a Reagan administration would be heavily committed to defense just wasn't listening. In an election marked by sharp contrasts between the candidates, Reagan won a stunning victory. Now blustery squalls of protest are gathering because the president is implementing his pledge.

Many say Reagan has no mandate, since his share of What that means is that people stayed away from the polls in droves. They are people who, for the most

We have been sold on the idea that the Soviets spend more for defense than we do. The Pentagon's recent booklet claims that over the past 25 years, the Soviets have spent 12 to 14 percent of their Gross National Product (GNP) on defense compared to 7 percent of GNP for the United States. However, since the GNP of the U.S. has been about twice that of the Soviets for these past years, spending for the two countries should be considered equal.

Yet, we probably spend even more than they do because the CIA figures for Soviet defense spending include programs which are not a part of our military it isn't added that U.S. strategic nuclear submarines easily would be able to retaliate against such an attack because they are virtually invulnerable at present.

What about the Soviets? Are they vulnerable to a U.S. first strike? Yes, the Soviets are also vulnerable, and more so than the United States.

Many more Soviet missiles are the vulnerable land-based type, and American warheads are more accurate so they are better able to destroy land-based missile silos.

Also, since Soviet missiles-bearing submarines are noisy and operate out of only a few ports close to hostile territory, they are quite vulnerable to superior

In a democratic system it's the people who vote, not those who stay home, who choose the president and the policy. What the non-voters think becomes irrelevant until the next election.

But here we have the privilege of living in a society governed by law.

The threat posed to our way of life comes from the massive and relentless Soviet arts buildup. The USSR, despite its flaws, has proven to be a pretty foxy negotiator.

In his report to the 26th Party Congress this year, Leonid Brezhnev declared the Soviet Union would be "freeze the existing quantitative and qualitative level" of theater nuclear arms in Europe.

The Soviets might well accomplish by guile and bluff what they never could do with force: destabilize the American political system and create class conflict, promoting the preconditions of revolution.

What is needed is a measured buildup of American theater nuclear and conventional forces to insure that the president and Congress have at their disposal forces sufficient to create uncertainty in the midst of

The United States cannot maintain that uncertainty in the face of perceived Soviet superiority. Accordingly the United States should send a signal to the Soviets that America's days of irresolute fits and starts under Carter are now over.

We can do this without seriously aggravating the nuclear warhead production and the Coast Guard.

In addition the CIA estimate assumes that Soviet costs for personnel and equipment are equal to ours-so a Soviet soldier who receives only a few rubles a week is assumed to be paid the same as an American soldier who receives a few hundred dollars a month. This clearly distorts the figures. Even according to these figures, NATO has the decided edge over the Warsaw Pact in military expenditures.

Furthermore, while most U.S. and NATO spending is directed toward the Soviet Union, the Soviet Union must also contend with the Chinese. The CIA estimates that 35 percent of Soviet military spending is directed Anyway, it is more important to know on what money is spent for defense rather than how much is spent. Since we are concerned with U.S. defense needs, we should look at the three major areas on which most U.S. defense funds will be spent War in Europe

The Warsaw Pact and NATO have different military strategies on which they base their defenses Therefore, it is not so important when it is claimed that the Soviets have more tanks than the U.S., because we have a greater number of high quality anti-tank weapons which are increasingly able to negate the Warsaw Pact tank advantage. This is only one example of differences between the Warsaw Pact and American anti-submarine warfare capability.

New American strategic programs, such as the Mark 12-A warhead, the MX, Trident and cruise Uncertainty about the military balance in Europe is compounded by the concept of the "integrated battlefield." The integrated battlefield includes chemical and nuclear weapons. Given the integration of these weapons with the ground forces of both Warsaw Pact and NATO, it is foolish to assume that in

(SP)ARTESIAN FOOTBALL, EXPLAINED

Rumor has it that when the Artesians aren't hard at work making pure artesian brewing water for Olympia, they like to unwind a little.

One form of unwinding they're very fond of is Artesian Football, a game somewhat different from the one you're famililar with.

> In Artesian Football, you start by "Punting".

To Punt, you place your finger behind the snap-pull tab on a frosty can of Oly and take a set position. On the signal, you pull back smartly with plenty of follow through.

The Punt is always followed by the "End Around" in which the bottom end of your Oly becomes the top end, allowing the clean, crisp taste of the beer to run broken field over your palate.

Rumor also has it that this technique was later mastered by the legendary Spartans (who are long lost cousins to the Artesians) enabling them to go on to untold feats of grandeur in the football stadiums of California.

S.U. Board fills positions

By Janet Weeks Staff Writer

SJSU students Bradley Kurtz and Mike Howell were elected chairman and vice chairman, respec-tively, of the Student Union Board of Governors,

The unanimous decisions came at the board's first meeting of the semester.

After selecting Kurtz and Howell, the board moved into discussing informational items, inrecreation and events center and better utilization of space in the Student Union.

A.S. President and board member Tony Robinson outlined the formation of the proposed recreation center

"Three weeks after I was elected last June, I met with (SJSU) President Fullerton and brought up the idea of students building a recreation and events center," he said. "Its acronym is REC. I hope it's not a wreck."

Robinson said he wished to familiarize the board with his plans because, if approved, the university uses to gather information, he said.

Board member Kevin

Student Union Director Ron Barrett pointed out that the proposition required involvement of many separate entities.

Investigation of the feasibility of Johnson's plan was referred to the board's house committee, which will be formed in the near future. Barrett said.

A measure of the Lady Spartans' improvement from last year was indicated Tuesday night in San Francisco.

other than those statistics, the Lady Spartans had very little to cheer about. "The girls did let up a little bit," said Don Meucci, SJSU women's sports in-formation director. "They just didn't concentrate. As the old saying goes, they played down to the level of their com-retition."

The Lady Spartans, now 7-7 overall and 1-0 in conference competition, take on and 1-0 in conference competition, take on the University of California tonight in Berkeley at 7:30 p.m. in Berkeley. California should be considerably more formidable than San Francisco was. "We've gotta be ready for them," DeGroot said. "They're just about even with us. There will be no underdog and there will be no top dog."

Committee hopes to receive green light on signal change

By Les Mahler

Staff Writer San Jose traffic engineers are contemplating installation of audible traffic signals at the corners of South Seventh and East San Carlos streets

Film review

'Zoot Suit,' the swing era Chicano style

A Universal nictures release written and directed by Louis Valdez. Opens Friday at Century 22, San Jose.

> By David Flemate Staff Writer

ithout a doubt one of the most important major films dealing with a Chicano experience from the perspective of a Chicano, "Zoot Suit" through the creative genius of Luis Valdez is a film with many messages to convey.

The story is loosely based on the Sleepy Lagoon Murder Mystery which took place on the outskirts of Los Angeles in 1942, and the zoot suit riots which occurred one year later.

The film represents the culmination of many years of work for writer/director Valdez, Originally a stage production which had a successful run at the Aquarius Theatre in Hollywood, it was adapted to movie form by filming the movie entirely on the premises of the Aquarius Theatre.

The result is a film which gives the feeling of a live theater presentation but with the added benefit of the best camera angles in the house, not the straight-on view of a playbox.

An audience was even brought in for the added reminder that this is a production of both fact and some fantasy giving it a sense of the unknown

The use of Chicano slang known in the forties as "calo" and today sometimes called "pocho" is a combination of Spanish and English which has commonly been used among Chicanos coming from Spanish-speaking homes.

Although this element is needed for realism, the fact may be that most of the slang will go right over the heads of those who speak little or no Spanish. This doesn't, however, prevent the non-Spanish speaker from derstanding the main themes

Valdez is a master at conveying ideas through his exaggerated use of props, a technique he often employed in the critically acclaimed "Teatro Campesino," which he founded shortly after his graduation from San Jose State College in 1964.

The only problem with the slang is that many of the best jokes are not fully understood, but this may be intentional. The Chicano of today, as much as then, still not completely understood by American public.

As the plot develops, it becomes apparent that Henry Reyna, the central figure played by Daniel does not fully Valdez, understand himself because he is constantly tormented by his alter-ego "El Pachuco," played by Edward James Olmos.

Throughout the movie the action is immediately stopped, frozen still, whenever Reyna has some decision to make. El Pachuco steps in to give his instant analysis of the situation through the eyes of one who totally distrusts anyone not Chicano.

The trial which resulted from the Sleepy Lagoon Murder is shown to be a blatant miscarraige of justice that attempts to railroad the 38th Street gang without any witnesses to the murder.

George Shearer (Charles Aidman), along Shearer with Alice Bloomfield (Tyne Daly), seeks an appeal and forms a defense committee. Shearer, the people's lawyer, a white man fighting to overcome the injustice of the trial, battles tremendous odds in his attempt at an appeal, and in gaining the confidence of the defendents.

While in jail, Reyna, through the eyes of El Pachuco, witnesses his brother and friends in their zoot suits being stripped naked and left in the streets by hundreds of Marines and sailors who hated the zoot suiters for being "beaners, spicks greaseballs and pachucos" and could not stand the idea of the young Chicanos taking pride in their unusual and trendy style of

The line between tragedy and comedy runs thin in almost all of Valdez' productions for the stage. With "Zoot Suit," the irony at times makes one feel the pain of being totally misunderstood by a society that does not seem to care, yet the film allows us the release of laughter.

Upon his release from prison, Reyna is not granted an instant happlyever-after status. Instead, Valdez turns the table on us and shows us the many paths Chicanos have taken or fallen onto.

If one is willing to try to understand the Chicano experience and be entertained at the same time, "Zoot Suit" gives as well as any one film can a vision of the life and times of the zoot suiters.

Allman Brothers still 'Southbound'

Dan Toler and Greg Allman played "Melissa," Allman's first song, on acoustic guitars at the Fox Warfield Theater in San Francisco last Wednesday.

by David Flemate Staff Writer

t was 8:05 and there was still no sign of the Allman Brothers, but then again, most rock groups are not known for their punctuality.

The crowd present was certainly up for this, the second of two concerts in San Francisco's Fox Warfield theater, but the crowd still had not managed to fill out the seats.

Meanwhile, the crowd was gearing up for a night with the group credited with starting the "southern rock" tradition. The smell of grass and tobacco filled the air as the atmosphere of electricity built up.

The lights went down and a tall figure with long blond hair walked toward the organ to the left of the stage with "Leslie pipes" slowly spinning. The crowd recognized Gregg Allman and soon the rest of the band was in place including Dickey Betts in a cowboy hat with a cigarette in his mouth.

And without further ado the Allman Brothers began to give the crowd what it had so anxiously audience was screaming so loud one could hardly hear oneself think, as Dickey Betts and Dan Toler flawlessly played most of the songs the crowd came to hear. the music of the old Allman Brothers band.

While the new songs were mixed in here and there, it was without doubt. the Allman Brothers' standards that would be the show stoppers.

Betts, whose own guitar playing abilities were usually considered second to the late Duane Allman was in top form, as was the performance of Dan Toler, the guitarist left with the job of filling the shoes of Duane Allman.

Gregg Allman, the man for whom the band is still named, was almost totally in the shadows playing organ and singing, and not much else. Mike Lawler, an addition to the band, played keyboards of all kinds, and generally did all solos.

The big beat was maintained by Butch Trucks, a member of the original band, and David Toler, brother of Dan, both pounding out the big percussive sound the Allman Brothers have been famous for in the past. Filling out the bass spot left open by the late Berry

Oakley was David Goldflies, who has appeared on most of the recent Allman Brothers

Shouts of "South-bound" and "Whippin Post" constantly reminded the Brothers that this crowd would not settle for just a taste of the oldies, they wanted them all.

The high point of the evening was predictably "In Memory of Elizabeth Reed," an instrumental that is probably the best example of the Allman Brothers' sound.

Like the many sides of a human personality, the song changes tempo to an up beat Latin-jazz like rhythm that gives Betts, Toler, Larson and even Gregg Allman a chance to

Building in a crescendo, the beat is climaxed with a sudden ending and the crowd is on its feet screaming; members of a "south will rise again" coalition raise a confederate flag in their effort to make the Brothers feel at home.

There was a time when the Allman Brothers could pack them in a Fillmore East and West, Winterland and even the Oakland Coliseum. Times have changed and the band has experienced their share of changes in personnel, but little in the way of musical growth.

Throughout most of the 70's their music could be heard on most of the local rock FM stations with an occasional hit that would crossover to pop AM stations. "Ramblin Man," "Blue Skies," "Midnight Rider" and other songs were able to make the crossover. Unfortunately for the Brothers, most of their recent work has not met such commercial

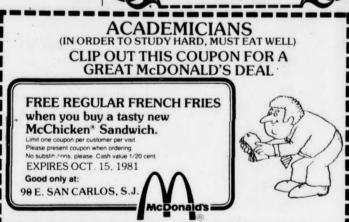

But for those who can remember the great "Live at the Fillmore East" LP, the Allman Brothers can still put on a respectable

But today's rock crowd is younger and into newer forms of this music called rock. The late seventies saw the rise of heavy metal and new wave, as the southern rock which the Allman Brothers helped to pioneer began to ex-perience a significant slump in popularity.

Although not as fresh as it used to be, the Allman Brothers can still rock, and for those who desire little more than the reproduction of their old songs, the Brothers still produce.

or in the hospital are the only excuses accepted for failure of an actor to appear as scheduled at the Gaslighter in Campbell

The actors don't need any cajoling, though, to coax them onstage. Death or hospitalization are about the only things that can keep them off.

The Gaslighter is a family operation in every sense. It is owned and operated by Mark, Richard and Peggy Gaetano. Mark started the family's in-volvement with the Gaslighter nine years ago when he went to work as a piano player for its former

"Mark's the reason we're all here," Richard said recently. He explained that Mark had begun his career at the theater with an impromptu session at the Gaslighter piano, and 'unbeknownst to him he was auditioning.

the theater that eventually grew to include the whole Gaetano family as well as friends from school days and a host of actors from every walk of life.

Mark had a valid excuse for missing work last week. Surgery. His arm, chronically dislocated, finally had to be pinned into its socket.

"This is the first show Mark's missed in nine years," his father, Albert, said

Many of the people who have worked at the Gaslighter are SJSU graduates, including Mark who holds a degree in musical composition.

Richard is a couple of classes short of achieving his undergraduate degree in advertising at SJSU. Director Laurel Kinley is a former SJSU major in women's studies, and cast member Cathy McDermott is attending SJSU now as a speech pathology major.

"I'm not a theater person," Peggy said. "I started doing shows here about four years ago," but for the group, a consuming task considering their shop contains 3,000 costumes.

"My mother helps me," she said.

"I do whatever I can to help," family matriarch Helen Gaetano said. "I just sort of fill in."

Richard said his mother fills a bigger role than that. "We want to appeal to a family audience," he said, and Helen watches the shows with that in mind.

Being the prude of the family, they always say if it gets by mom it must be okay," she said

The Gaslighter features lighthearted blend of old-time melodrama and sing-along vaudeville shorts.

The show is divided into two segments, with the melodramas first and then a series of musical skits dubbed the "Oleo" by the Gaetanos.

The current show at the Gaslighter is "The Prince of Liars," or "The Gutta Percha Girl" in which cast member Kelsey Waddell as Arthur attempts to explain away an extramarital romantic liason with frantic results and little success.

The Gaslighter's shows attract actors from a wide variety of backgrounds. Master of Ceremonies Rick Frank is a Lockheed employee. Kelsey Waddell's regular job is at the Color Tile Company. And Herschel Sparber, plays Dobson, the butler, is general partner in Theaterwest in Los Gatos.

Sparber has a long list of theatrical credits, as well as several movie roles including "Shadow of Death" and "Kill Squad," which he described as "eminently forgettable."

He is also an attorney with a specialized knowledge of cases involving the disposal hazardous materials.

Applying the final touches of makeup before the show, Gayle Frank readies her character for another performance at the Gaslighter Theatre in Campbell.

Sparber describes melodrama as "the hardest work I've ever done."

"If you're not soaking wet when you come off the stage, you haven't done your job," he said. All the cast members agree there is a familial atmosphere at the Gaslighter. The Gaetanos own the theater, but the feeling extends through the cast and production staff as well

They occasionally fly up to Tahoe for an "overnighter" to relax, Richard said. "We like to gamble."

For less taxing periods of relaxation, the cast and production staff retires to the Khartoum bar around the corner at Campbell's "Factory" shopping center.

"We call it the office," Richard said.

The pressures of life as a theater producer sometimes get to him, Richard admits.

"Yes," he said "you get to a point where you just say, let's sell it."

"It does get to you, but you love it. You gotta love it. It's not really as glamorous as people think," he added while sweeping out the theater last Saturday morning at 8

Dawn Wagner, who plays Rose in the cast, agrees. Acting and theater production are an addiction, she said.

Wagner should know. She has been acting since she was four years old. Besides acting, she writes audio-visual scripts and screenplays. She won the Best Actress of the Year award in Mountain View for her portrayal of Rhoda in "The Bad Seed." "Prince of Liears" is her debut at the Gaslighter.

The Gaslighter also features some formidable singing talent. Kelsey Waddell, in ddition to his work in acting, is a singer with a long string of operas to his credit. And Brian P. Sanker, who plays Joshua in the show, is a pop singer, although he is quick to add "I have opera training, too.'

The blend backgrounds and familial atmosphere at the Gaslighter give it a special, nostalgic charm. Over the years, the Gaetanos have accumulated a lot of memories.

"One night," Richard said, "we had five out of nine cast members with the stomach flu. Mark threw up sitting right at his piano and he never missed a beat.

"We had a lady break her leg one day. She went on that night," he added.

Before a show, Sparber was limping with a painful hip injury. Someone asked why he still went on that night.

espite a poor set structure, SJSU's presentation of "My Genius, My Child," a play by Ketti Frings based on the life of playwright Eugene O'Neill, makes for an enjoyable evening.

an enjoyable evening.

Faced with the problem of nine scene

Theater review

changes in the three act play, director Richard Parks decided to enlist the help of a revolving stage.

The stage itself is tastefully done and adequately projects the proper scene changes. Though sparsely furnished to realistically portray the 1920's, the time-setting of the play, the furniture used is enough to be functional.

However, the stage is a half-flat construction with the walls of the set only coming up to the actor's waists.

In an attempt to help fill the set area, a double wide screen is suspended in mid-stage and used to project slides that help to convey the mood of the scene. But, the space between the set and the screen creates a black void that leaves the audience with the feeling that some of the acting has been lost.

Such was the case of many of the actors, with the outstanding exception of Lance J. Holt (Eugene O'Neill).

Holt, an SJSU sophomore majoring in art, does what the play's posters say his role does – show the relationship between O'Neill and himself, his wife, his brother and others involved in his life.

In the role of O'Neill, the tempermental genius, Holt was consistently superb. From the moment he walked on stage the other performers seemed to lose any trace of professionalism. Holt's mannerisms, his facial expressions and his voice lent a realism to the play unmatched by any of the other actors.

It is too bad the rest of the cast lacked the true dramatic performance of Holt. Harold Hughes (James O'Neill) did a good job in his role as Eugene's older happy-go-lucky brother, but the SJSU theatre arts senior had a hard time in his serious part as a man about to die.

With that minor exception, Hughes was a pleasure to watch and his appearances on stage helped add a bit of humor to this otherwise serious play

As Eugene's wife, Agnes, Claire Lucas did not match Holt's power or his versatility as an actor. Lucas, a junior majoring in business, had a hard time convincing the audience she was as emotional as her lines implied. Her speech was often almost monotone and any attempts to change voice patterns were just that — attempts.

What Lucas lacked in vocal talent, she tried to make up in stage movements. She was the only character allowed to stay somewhat stationary through a good job.

she did a good job.

The rushing about of the other characters helped to lend a sense of urgency to the play, but it also caused many good lines to become lost in the hustle.

Harold Hughes as James O'Neill argues with Amy Baxter as Tanager Bold in "My Genius, My Child" playing at the University Theatre.

Lawrence Michael-Barrott (Charlie Westover) was one actor who rushed everthing, including his lines. The SJSU theatre arts sophomore had problems at the beginning of the play with slowing his lines down enough to be heard while keeping a fast enough pace to stay in line with his character, a cocky, conceited director.

However, as the play progressed, Michael-Barrott slowed his lines enough for the audience to understand and to eventually prove himself as a good actor in a good part.

The character of Arleigh Brayce, a mothering friend of O'Neill, is nicely protrayed by Kevin Kelly. Kelly does his best to show Brayce as an irritating, whining protector of O'Neill. His mannerisms match those of Holt, but his acting is not nearly as good.

Minor characters in the play were played nicely by versatile actors. Though handed only bit parts, the actors performed their lines and helped to make "My Genius, My Child" a success Especially entertaining were the occasional one-liners delivered by the minor actors. Though sometimes out of place, the lines helped to make sure the audience was still paying attention.

"My Genius, My Child" was a success. It was a play that did what it set out to do and did it well. Holt was the star of the show, but he got help from all the other cast members.

Parks' direction was good. Never did an actor seem awkward or out of place, even in the black void of the set.

Music for "My Genius, My Child," written by SJSU student Quentin Jones, helped to fill the emptiness left by the stage set. Though at times the pitch of the music was higher than necessary for the scene it accompanied, it was generally well done and pleasant to listen to.

Jones, a graduate student in the music department, took advantage of the melodramatic tones of string instruments by using a string quartet to play the music. The quartet did a good job in helping to emphasize the character's emotions and helping to bridge the gap of the scene changes.

Frings, who died last February, wrote a good play with a good story. Her interpretation of O'Neill, and his problems dealing with the world, come through loud and clear in SJSU's presentation of "My Genius, My Child."

modern-day romantic comedy with a twist is the basis of "Continental Divide," the latest offering from Universal Pictures.

The twist lies in the casting of John Belushi, of Animal House" fame, as the male romantic lead opposite Blair Brown ("Altered States") in an attempt to recreate the chemistry of Hepburn and Tracy.

Belushi stars as Ernie

Brown, wholesomely attractive as Nell, is unable to hold up her end of the witty repartee with Belushi. She lacks the charisma of Hepburn and although one can't doubt physical attractiveness, her character is left undeveloped and bland and one wonders at Belushi's undying devotion to this woman.

"Continental Divide" promises more than it delivers. It is a pleasant film but it never takes off the ground because of the unrealized potential of the romantic team. It's pleasant, but it's not Tracy and Hepburn.

The Go-Go's: Where beauty joins the beat

by Janet Weeks Staff Writer

sk people around here what the Go-Go's are and probably hear you'll responses like a breakfast cereal, a type of boot, or an invitation for acceleration.

But to many music fans and critics alike, The Go-Go's are the best thing to happen to pop/rock since pink bubblegum lipstick.

The Go-Go's, a five member all-girl band from Los Angeles, returned to California last Saturday night to play before a sold out crowd at San Fran-cisco's Market Cinema.

"We haven't been back to California for two and a half months," said lead vocalist Belinda Carlisle adding, "it's not long until we get home."

Last week, the Go-Go's took time out from their "Beautify America" tour to open for the Rolling Stones their Rockford, Ill. engagement.

"They needed another act, and Bill Graham asked our band," explained bass guitarist Kathy Valentine.

Valentine described Mick Jagger as "very polite," but then sighed, adding regretfully that she had missed meeting Keith Richards. Apparently Richards is the band's favorite, as rhythm guitarist Jane Wiedlen agreed that he was the one she wanted to meet the Next, the Go-Go's journey to Santa Barbara then finally arrive "home" for three nights in L.A.

"The first thing I'm going to do when I get home is my laundry," said Wiedlen. "Then I'm going to drive to the airport, and pick up my boyfriend. Then I'm going to bed."

If the Go-Go's were indeed roadweary, it was well hidden in their performance.

From their first simple, 60-ish tune to the last, the Go-Go's performance was unfaltering.

Perhaps the Go-Go's credo is best summed-up in the immortal words of thousands of American Bandstand teenyboppers: They've got a good beat and are easy to dance to.

A lot of the Go-Go's material is nothing more than a bass line and the repetition of a few words. In fact "Surfing and Spying" has only two words, "surf" and "spy."

The Go-Go's played every song off their first and only album, "Beauty and the Beat," including "This Town" (written for Los Angeles but dedicated to San Francisco), "Games People Play," and "Cool

"We've Got The Beat," their most popular song to date, and a smash hit in England topping the charts for weeks, was saved until last.

Like cheerleaders inspiring the whole new beat-crazy generation, the women bounced and jumped their way through two encores before they took leave of the stage.

The Go-Go's have been performing together since 1978. Lounging backstage after the show, Valentine reflected on what she'd be doing now if she hadn't joined the band.

"I'd be in some other band," she said. "I've been a musician for a long time - since I was 13 years old."

And what does she consider the best thing about being a Go-Go?

"You get to still be a Former SJSU President John Bunzel testified Tuesday that he disregarded the unanimous recommendation of an Economic Department personnel committee to grant Sue Van Atta tenure in 1974.

He said he chose instead to accept the recommendation of a university committee of non economics instructors who voted against her tenure.

Bunzel is a defense witness in a lawsuit by Van Atta and two other former economics instructors against the California State University and Colleges system.

One-year contracts for tem porary lecturers Andrew Parnes and David Landes were not renewed for the 1974-1975 school year. They are asking to be reinstated on a tenure track.

Van Atta is suing to be hired as a tenured instructor. All three are requesting back pay.
