Anderson surrenders to police

Larry Hooper and Mike McGuire

Associated Students President John "Tony" Anderson surrendered Friay afternoon to University Police, according to Russ Lunsford, University olice information officer.

San Jose Municipal Court issued a warrant for Anderson's arrest Thursday on suspicion of embezzling $400 in A.S. funds

Anderson was released Friday on his own recognizance and is scheduled to be arraigned in municipal court April 25.

If convicted of the charges, Anderson faces a maximum $2,500 fine and ear in jail, Lunsford said.

The embezzlement charges stem from Anderson's involvement in a minority resume book project he worked on in May. The book was a collection of resumes from graduating minority business students

Anderson used A.S. stationery and signed his name as A.S. president on letters sent to various businesses which might be interested in the resume book, according to the police report filed last week with the San Jose Munici-

A.S. directors said when Anderson used his A.S. title, he made the book an A.S. project.

Anderson used $216 from the A.S. legislative account to cover postage for the letters and the 27 resume books, which sold for $25 each, according to the police report. Anderson reimbursed the account with $275 of the $675

However, A.S. officials said that since the project belonged to A.S., all of the money should have been deposited in the account

The discrepancy was first discovered by Jean Lenart, A.S. business of fice director, when a check from one of the companies that purchased a book bounced. Lenart began investigating the project and found that only 11 of the 27 checks had been deposited, leaving $400 unaccounted for.

A.S. directors asked for Anderson's resignation at a Feb. 23 board of directors meeting, after learning of the missing money. Anderson said he would resign only if there was proof that he had committed a crime.

A.S. officials turned the information over to University Police Feb 28.
University Police investigated the charges and filed a 326-page report with the San Jose Municipal Court.

By Scott Bontz

Student fees for the proposed Recreation and Events Center could be raised to more than $40 per se mester, if operating costs for the center exceed use revenues, said Glen Guttormsen, business affairs

Guttormsen said he thought the possibility of the fee being raised is unlikely, but said fees "could go up someday . . . if down the pike some way" the money needed to run the center continued to exceed the amount of money generated by fees charged to users of the facility.

The center is projected to not operate "in the black" until its fourth year of use, Guttormsen said. The financial plan for the center takes into account the forecasted early year losses. However, if defioperation continued and the $550,000 operating contingency reserve was exhausted, Guttormsen said "vou (would) have to turn to something else," like private contributions or a fee hike.

The operating contingency reserve will be used to pay for unexpected and pre-opening costs of running the center, Guttormsen said.

Groundbreaking for the center will be in April, 1985, according to the financial plan summary. Gut-tormsen said the building would probably open in fall of 1986.

The report says the total project cost for the center will be $22.8 million. The building and sitework will cost $13.8 million, and permanent equipment for the center, such as air-conditioning and boilers, will cost $500,000. Architect's fees and several construction management fees would total $1.57 million.

A contingency allowance of $715,000, required by "good practice and experience," Guttormsen said, will be set aside for "unexpected things" that may occur during construction. $50,000 will be held for landscaping after construction is completed. Total construction cost will be $16.6 million.

To finance the project, $16 million in revenue bonds will be sold. In addition, $4.83 million in student fees collected through January 1986, $300,000 from private contributors, and the $1.66 million in interest that the fees will earn will be used to pay

Initial interest payments to investors purchasing bonds will be made with $2.98 million from the bond revenues. Payments will be made twice a year, after the bonds are sold, just before construction starts. After September 1986, payments will be made from student

It will cost $75,000 to prepare the go to a required bond reserve, and $610,000 will be used to purchase moveable equipment such as scoreboards, chairs and sound 'Shaku' your booty.

Greeks outline university zone plan

By Mike Holm

Nineteen of SJSU's fraternities and sororities and the Campus Community Association met Tuesday to begin outlining objectives and a course of action in the establishment of a 77-block university zone. At that meeting they discussed goals which may affect the future of numerous residential care, alcohol and drug recovery programs, and the Job Corps.

Twelve days earlier, on the other side of downtown San Jose, residents of some of those care homes considered the same ques-

Community Fusion, a group of about 50 people involved either as professionals or as residents and former residents of board and care homes in the county's mental health system, meets every other week at the Vocational Learning and Treatment Center.

They are primarily a social group, according to Debra Lamb, an administrator at Community Living Experiences, who led the meeting But they are also concerned with the image and future of mental health programs on the downtown area.

About 35 members showed up for the March 24 meeting. Sitting around the white flourescent-lit room, members of the group, black and white, young and old presented a diversity of opinions on moves aimed at removing some of their homes from the SJSU area.

Among their concerns:

Downtown's poor image is not their fault; they have been unfairly cited as the cause for many problems, such as high crime, which have more to do with the transient population of winos, bums and pros-

· Other areas of the county are not willing to accept mental health care facilities. For example, it took a three-year legal battle to set up a group home for eight people in Campbell, and Cupertino recently turned down a proposal for a similar home in that area. They fear this attitude may lead to their being 'kicked out into the cold.'

· The good done by properly run residential care homes is not seen.

They do not want to move or be moved.

Submarine dumping dangerous

n order to make room for the new fleet of giant Trident submarines, the U.S. Navy wants to scuttle 100 older, still-radioactive subs 160 miles off Cape Mendocino.

This course is dangerous, andshould be steered clear of

The Navy proposes to remove the nuclear fuel from the ships, tow them to sea and sink them, radioactive reactor, pipes and all. It would scuttle three to four subs a year for about 30 years.

The Navy claims sinking the subs is the cheapest way to dispose of them.

In fact, the Navy's proposal would probably not be cheap, and it certainly would not

The Navy says it would save $2 million a submarine by sinking, rather than burying the ships, but it fails to consider the cost of eternally monitoring the subs after they are

The Navy also asserts that the de-fueled subs would be considered "low-level radioactive waste" and fall within Environmental Protection Agency guidelines

However, physisist Marvin Resnikoff of the Council on Economic Priorities, said two isotopes in the ships have radioactive halflives of 20,000 and 80,000 years. He said the subs should be considered more dangerous than "low-level" waste.

People would be affected by eating sea life that had been exposed to the radiation. There have been large albacore tuna catches in the proposed dumping area in recent

Jackson Davis, a marine biologist at the University of California at Santa Cruz, said humans eating the radioactive fish could receive the equivalent of hundreds of X-rays. He cites a report that people who eat seafood contaminated by a radioactive waste dump in England receive the equivalent of at least 300 X-rays in a lifetime. Davis adds that the radiation of two nuclear subs equals all the "radwaste" dumped in English waters an-

Already, the Navy's plan would involve twice as much radioactivity as that in 89,000 barrels of low-level waste dumped in the ocean by the government from 1946 to 1971.

The plan itself, and the precedent it would establish for more and higher levels of dumping should not take place.

Sanity and safety should not go down with the ship.

Turn off the lights for pandas

The simplest book on sex sells millions of copies With virtually no exception, they all say lovers must take time to "communicate" and "be intimate," whatever these words mean.

If "communication" is so important, perhaps long distance really is the next best thing to being there

Can "intimacy" be found at a bus stop? Can it be gotten for the price of a toaster? In any case, most people would agree that interna-tional news coverage by radio and television networks, wire services and major papers is no aphrodisiac. Even so, some people don't follow the advice of sex

Two helpless pandas in Washington's National Zoo have been prodded for 11 years to produce the sound of little paws for the international viewing audience and gushing zookeepers, the proud godparents. Hsing-Hsing and Ling-Ling were gifts to the United States from the Chinese government commemorating the beginning of normal relations in 1972.

The pandas have even had X-rated movies inflicted upon them. Even if they appreciated visions of human sex and got excited about the flicks, they would never get enough privacy to enjoy it.

One wonders if the American Civil Liberties Union and Amnesty International have heard of this

Pandas may not care if they ever get free speech but they need to have some privacy to exercise those sexual urges all animals have Even celebrities, people whó live for publicity, have

Zookeepers have been trying to breed pandas in captivity because of their rarity and the seclusion of their Tibetan home. Zoos around the world — in London, Mexico City, Moscow and Tokyo - have had little suc cess. In Mexico City a cub was born in captivity but it

Scientists know little about pandas. Their sex lives and eating habits are little understood. It is thought that pandas are related to raccoon, and are not bears at all, but even this is disputed.

Until more is learned about them, it is very important tant that pandas reproduce. Scientists and journalists will have plenty of time to study the results afterward.

The camera lights should be taken down for a little while. Then Hsing-Hsing can turn on his animal charm and Ling-Ling can attract her honey pot.

Ad people, reporters have ethical values

I'd like to make a few points in response to your Editor's Notebook on March 23. First, advertising and journalism are not from two different worlds as you suggest. Both are, in basic terms, an exchange of information. Both to the consumer, are news. Both are essential.

I do not sell advertising (and, by the way, selling newspaper advertising space is only a minute area of advertising) with the motivation of making money, either for myself or for the CRT's for you and your staff to write your award-winning stories and on which to drop your junk food Twinkies. As in any business, opportunities and money await those who are motivated, qualified and dedicated enough to earn it.

There are "good" and "bad' people, as well as "good" and "bad' journalism and advertising people There are honest journalists who provide us with necessary information in a responsible, well thought out and thought-provoking manner as there are those who write stories with no knowledge of the subject of which they are writing, and who use their power as journalists to subject others to their biased, one-sided There are good advertisements which are enjoyable to look at and/or hear, provide useful and necessary information about products and services, and enable the consumer to make the wisest buying de cisions; and there are certainly many poorly executed, insulting and

I'm sure you fight the exaggerations of sensationalism and crooked journalism which are in truth, very seldom practiced and experienced The advertising world also fights the

liminal advertising, which are practically nonexistent in today's world; but many people, unfortunately, believe much of this still to be practiced

I have always looked forward to reading the Spartan Daily and seen it as an informative, surprisingly well-done paper for a "college paper." I am also proud to be a part the paper selling advertising space — except on March 23rd when you, as Editor and spokesperson for the newspaper, aired your biased, prejudiced and naive views in an unprofessional, sensationalist and ir responsbie manner. Your column only reminded me that "Yes, this is 'only a college newspaper''', and sensationalist and irresponsible ournalism is more practiced that I had thought

Editor's notebook is hypocritical

Editor

This may sound ridiculous, but maybe hypocrisy is possible at the Spartan Daily In Dan Nakaso's March 23 "Editor's Notebook," he congratulates himself for being tolerant and independent of the influence of advertisers and the Daily's ad staff.

Yet every day on the editorial page and occasionally, whenever the staff box is published, a different relationship appears.

In both cases, the advertising manager is listed as the second most structure. In the staff box, the ad manager is listed higher than 12 edi which undoubtedly makes them feel important. A look at the editorial page listings in professional newspapers and staff columns in magazines reveals that if anyone from the advertising, marketing or circulation department is even listed, they are listed last or are separated from editorial staff by a line. This is purposely done as a symbol of editorial inde-

If Mr. Nakaso feels he has the guts to tell advertisers to peddle their wares elsewhere" and refuse to be influenced by them or his ad manager, why does he seem to lack the guts to show this conviction graphically on the editorial page and in the staff box? David Nuss

Newsmen are ruthless too

I agree with you about newsmen and ad salesmen being from two different worlds, yet ad people don't all live and breathe for money and money only

Journalists are not the saviours you make them out to be. "Reporters fight for cab fare and exist on junk food diets." Well somehow I can't pity the reporter who shoves a microphone in a grieving woman's face after her husband has been killed and asked "How does it feel?"

I know newspaper reporting is competitive and so is advertising. Yet if we go for the buck, newsmen go for the story and which is more destructive; increased incomes or causing additional grief and embarrassment? Julie Book

Schools won't require draft registration for aid

Decision may let resisters off the hook

By John Venturino

The Department of Education has given notice to the nation's colleges and universites not to continue requiring financial aid applicants to show proof they have registered for the draft.

Donald Ryan, SJSU's financial aid director, was given word on March 25 he would not have to implement the regulations accompanying the recent amendment to the Military Selective Service Act.

The regulations made it mandatory for all financial aid applicants to sign an affidavit confirming they either were registered or exempt from registering. In addition, all draft-eligible males would have been required to submit copies of the ackowledgment letters kfrom Selective Service in order to receive aid.

Neither of these rules will be enforced until the controversy surrounding the issue is resolved, according to John K. Bradbury, assistant financial aid director at

The Department of Education mandate came as a result of recent decisions in Congress and the federal district court in Minnesota

For the past several weeks, the House subcommittee of Post-Secondary Education has conducted hearings on the issue. Representatives of the American Civil Liberties Union testified against the constitutionality of the law. They claimed it violated Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination and it constituted punishment without benefit of trial.

Members of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators attacked the law on the basis that it unfairly placed the burden of enforcement on scholastic rather than on the federal government.

NASFAA president Lola Finch recommended a oneyear delay in implementing the law in her testimony before the committee

The constitutionality of the law was also challenged in federal court by six college students from Minnesota. Represented by ACLU attorneys, the students won an early victory in their fight against the law

Donald Alsop, the judge hearing the case, granted a temporary injunction blocking the enacting of the law. He agreed with the students' argument, which attacks the law on the same ground used by ACLU representatives in Alsop is expected to declare the law unconstutional when he makes his final decision on the case.

The Justice Department has already filed appeal against the injunction, but until the appeal can be heard, the law has been rendered invalid.

Greeks, Lady Luck smile on charities

Red, white, blue and gold chips cluttered the tables about 150 SJSU students tried their hands at Black Jack, roulette and craps last Thursday

While raising charity funds for the San Jose Hospital Foundation and the Children's unit, Alpha Tau Omega managed to arouse gambling fever among SJSU

"Oww, come on seven," echoed through the Student Union Ballroom, as students anticipated success at the craps tables.

"Let's get some excitement in this place," the craps dealer yelled as students crowded around the table

SJSU students, however, were not the only ones to catch the gambling fever. Parents of fraternity and sorority members tried their luck as well

Participants were issued $200 worth of chips and a raffle ticket in return for a $5 donation at the door

After the tables closed at 11:30 p.m., participants could turn their chips in for raffle tickets. ATO president Bill Baron said they had received $800-$1,000 in donated prizes. Most of the prizes were gift certificates and passes Alpha Beta, Swensen's Ice Cream and the Spaghetti Factory were among the donors.

Baron said every ATO fraternity brother got involved in casino night

"I allotted each brother and each pledge five tickets

Those members who were unable to sell their tickets had to purchase the tickets themselves, Baron said. Students who purchased tickets in advance were also invited to a pre-party reception at the ATO house. Baron said about 60 percent of the money made would go to charity, 20 percent would go to pay expenses and the other 20 percent would go to ATO.

"We've already hit our close projection of $1,000," he said. Any additional money made at the door, Baron

Dumpster diners on the rise in Santa Clara County

Recession pushes hunger up socio-economic ladder

Melvin Fields peered into the rusting garbage bin and picked through a heap of banana peels, soggy newspapers

Occasionally, he said, he'll find a prize of packaged food that will help keep him going another day. Fields, 49, tipped his soiled, red baseball hat, re vealed his remaining yellow teeth and said he's very meticulous about what he eats from garbage dumpsters.

"There's too many people who put poison in there just for the hell of it or for the fun of it," he said.

Food found in garbage cans can be the difference between survival or death, according to some who regularly probe San Jose's garbage bins.

And lately there has been more competition for the

The number of people feeding off garbage-bin food has skyrocketed, according to Santa Clara County social

Because of the recession, people are throwing away less and more people are having to decide between scrounging or going hungry, according to social worker

In the past, transients or social outcasts were the only people found digging through dumpsters, Lewis said.

Now that's all changed. The plight of the needy has been creeping up the socio-economic ladder. Those who once cringed at the thought of picking through a dumpster now take their wives and children with them, according to Gary Detlefs, a social worker.

'You have people who have always lived out of garbage cans," he said. But "there's a lot of older people who can't afford to make ends meet. They either go without or

'Entire families who live in apartment complexes

may be down scrounging," Detlefs said.

Most of the people who have suddenly found themselves in that situation receive a form of welfare, he said But it's not enough to pay for rent and food, Detlefs

'We have to tell them, 'we're sorry but there's really nothing to do." he said.

County health officials said anyone who eats food from a garbage bin is taking a gamble. Certain meats and dairy products can develop enough harmful bacteria and toxins in only two hours to cause serious damage, according to sanitarian Art Kaupert.

some people, however, such as those living outdoors with little nourishment, can develop immunities to bad food, Kaupert said.

But "even if you build up a tolerance, you don't know if you're going to exceed that tolerance," he said. "some people have an iron stomach."

Carl Stahr, a health department supervisor, said some food found in garbage dumpsters is not "aesthetically pleasing, but with derelicts their life is so shot anyway it doesn't make much difference. They could care less whether they encounter some pathogens on the way.

Some foods found in garbage bins, such as fruits and regetables, are safer than others because they are less likely to spoil, Kauptert said.

But he still cannot recommend eating anything that came out of a dumpster.

Anytime you have foods that are in waste products you have a potential problem," he said.

There are no city or county laws against foraging through dumpsters, according to city and deputy district

City police merely urge those digging through a bin to move on if someone calls to complain, police said.

They would probably be asked to leave and that would be it," said Jack Wood of the San Jose Police Department's crime prevention unit. Lt. Edward Melz, a watch commander in the police department, said most of those who look through garbage bins don't even make a mess.

Scavaging for food in San Jose garbage bins is involving a growing number, county officials say, and is no longer confined to the traditional social outcast.

And "many times we don't even have to get out (of the squad car). They just see the blue and white and leave," Melz said.

People who dig through bins have become a nuisance to some area businesses, though

The manager of a Lucky supermarket in downtown San Jose said people come around his garbage bin "every minute of the day

"They're in our garbage. They sleep in our dumpsaid the manager, who asked to be unidentified. "Once I threw some trash in and there was a guy sleeping

At first there were only "habitual winos" but recently many others have been poking around the garbage and, more seriously, stealing from the store, he said.

"A lot of them (now) are regular customers who use that as an extra source of food," the manager said. "It's definitely gotten worse

Other business owners and managers, however, sympathize more with those in search of food.

"If somebody's really hungry, we give them food," said Ed Elfar, manager of University Superette on 13th Street. "You can tell the real hungry ones

No one really knows how many people dig through garbage bins looking for food.

But social workers said more and more are asking the county for enough money to buy food for themselves and

"It's getting worse because of the fact that people on haven't gotten the raises commensurate with the way prices have gone up," social worker Detlefs said.

They usually are already receiving some form of aid. "but it's just not enough. These people don't get enough food stamps to feed themselves for a month.

According to Detlefs and other social workers, there seems to be no solution. 'We have too many people here," he said. "Business isn't doing that well. I don't think there will be the jobs for the untrained that we've had in the past.

Richard Raymond, a scraggly-bearded 55-year-old with pale blue eyes and a quick laugh, rubbed his chin with a dirty hand and tried to explain his eating schedule

'When I get hungry," he said after several moments "I don't eat really regular," Raymond said, "If I get a buck I get something really good.

Raymond doesn't blame the economy or Reaganomics for his situation. He's been down and out in good times

Fields, in between fishing out aluminum cans from a dumpster, said he spends time looking in garbage cans because it's a "hobby" to make money selling cans — and not because he needs food.

"I make cigarette money but that's about it," he said. "Maybe a beer or two. I ain't no wino. I can't drink whiskey or wine but I love my beer.

Fields continued pulling out beer cans but stopped for a moment to consider what he would be eating for dinner that night

"God knows," he said. "I got no idea. Social worker Lewis said she has no idea either. "Every day we see more and more and more and every day we have fewer and fewer answers.

Support urged for fee rally

The Associated Students are urging SJSU students to attend the march and rally in Sacramento tomorrow, opposing creased fees.

A.S. has chartered a bus that will leave from Ninth Street, in front of the Student Union, at 8 a.m.

Students riding the bus will not have to pay directly because the $375 cost of the bus will be payed for out of A.S. funds

A.S. has a table set up in front of the Student Union to provide information concerning the trip. Carpools will be organized because the bus only holds 45 people

Netters volley past Fresno

The breeze was chilly, the tennis hot.

Despite a rough wind late Friday afternoon, the SJSU men's tennis team shined, beating the Fresno State Bulldogs 7-2 on the Spartan courts.

'We played some of the best tennis we've played all year," said SJSU coach John Hubbell.

However, the game was not as lopsided as the score might indicate.

Four of the Spartan victories went three sets. No. 2 seed Paul Van Eynde defeated Fresno's Frank Apecechea 3-6, 6-3, 6-3. SJSU's No. 4 seed Alex Winslow beat Hide Fujita 3-6, 6-4, 6-4.

In doubles, Van Enyde and Winslow beat the Bulldogs' Bill Wakefield and Xavier Noblat 2-6, 6-3, 6-2, while No. 1 seed John Saviano and No. 3 seed Dave Kuhn from SJSU beat the Bulldogs' Fujita and Terry Strobl 6-4.

In the other singles matches, Saviano defeated Wakefield 6-2, 6-2, and Kuhn beat Stobl 6-4, 6-2.

Two campus groups look for new homes

development and operations

The SJSU Women's Center and Environmental Information Center are looking for new homes Both centers are housed in Building U, which is classified as a "temporary building" and is scheduled to be torn down within the next 15 months, according to Henry

Building U is an old Victorian-style structure, across from the University Police station on Fourth Street

Orbach, associate executive vice president of facilities

All campus temporary buildings will eventually be torn down, Orbach said, adding that these buildings are old and a "major maintenance problem." Because of the repairs needed, the buildings "are very expensive per foot to maintain." Many of the buildings also do not meet fire and earthquake standards and are not accessible to the disabled, he added.

The Associated Students officials are responsible for said, because the center is funded from the A.S. general fund. Orbach said he was not sure about the relocation of the Environmental Information Center, but the responsi bility would also probably lie with A.S. officials since the EIC also recieves A.S. funds

Several members of the Women's Center attended the Wednesday A.S. board of directors meeting to request the board's help in finding a new location.

"We (the center) have been around for 10 years, said Karen Hester, co-coordinator of the center. "W think it's an important service to keep on campus.

The center is also connected to academics, she said. There are currently five people who work at the center for class credit, she explained, adding that the center's library also provides research materials to students

Hester also requested that a permanent location be found. The Women's Center was moved once before in 1979, when its Tenth Street office was torn down, she said.

Kathy Cordova, A.S. president-elect, expressed con-cern over a stipulation in the budget stating that the Women's Center's funds must revert back to the A.S. general fund if a location on campus is not found.

The stipulation also applies to the EIC and was added because of the uncertainty that the centers would find a new location, said Barry Probst, chairman of the A.S. budget committee, after the meeting. If the groups cannot function on campus as they do now, he said, then A.S. wants the funds returned.

"We try to keep everything on campus and centralized in the area," Probst said. Once an organization is taken off campus, it becomes less accessible to the students, he said.

But Probst added that their funding might not revert if a close off-campus location was found. The stipulation is used as "a guidline to be followed to an extent, but there

Cordova asked the board how Womyn's Week, an annual program of women-related activities, could be funded if the Women's Center did not find a new location. Members of the board agreed that the center could still reguest funds be set aside for Womyn's Week

Womyn's Week is spelled with a "y" instead of an "e" to indicate independence from "-men," according to Hes-

The board agreed that a committee should be formed to help work on the relocation of both the Women's Center and the  ${\rm EIC.}$

'Space is hard to find on campus, but we'll work something out," said Rick Spargo, chairman of the board of directors.

Probst said the EIC had also requested help from A.S. officials in finding a new location. There may be room for the EIC in Wahlquist Library, he said, but no definite

A.S. reacts to teller location

The Associated Students board of directors would like other locations considered for the proposed automated tellers, it was decided in Wednesday's meeting.

The automated tellers are being studied and pursued by the Student Union board of directors. In Tuesday's SUBOD meeting Ron Barrett, Student Union director, announced that the best location would be the north side of the Student Union next to the business office.

The tellers would take up ten feet of the office, which concerned several directors and Jean Lenart, Associate Student business administrator

"I really approve of this service, but I think there are plenty of other spaces where it could go," Lenart said. "I would like to see even taking six feet from the office and four in the breezeway.

The renovation needed to install the machines, entirely paid for by the banks, would according to figures given to the board by Twenty percent of utility cost would be deducted from the fees of the of Lenart said the renovation would mean eliminating two or three desks.

There would be no room for extra work in the office," Lenart said.

"I can't justify taking that much space when I think that there are other places for the service," said Robin Sawatzky, A.S.

It was estimated that the tellers would take away two-thirds of the check cashing done by the office, or approximately 18,000 checks a year. This would save the business

Barrett said at the SUBOD meeting that he wanted to work together with the A.S. board. However, Rick Spargo, A.S. vice president, said Barrett was basically not open to negotiation.

Other board members pointed out that the A.S. board was not in a negotiating posi

"You have to remember that they're really the landlords," said Todd Mattson, director of communication.

The A.S. passed a motion to ask SUBOD to present them with other possible locations for the machines and to explain why the possibilities were rejected by the board.

Another problem with the suggested location is with security. Robert Musil was concerned with the long, dark breezeway Barrett told the board that cameras would be installed hooked up continuously with the campus police station. The California State University Chancellor's Office authorized SUBOD to proceed on the tellers a year ago. Five or six banks show an interest in installing automa ted tellers, Barrett said.

He said the location must be on the exte rior of the Student Union because the banks wish to offer 24-hour, seven-day-a-week

Many agree with the university zone's goal of increasing the number of students living around the university. At the same time though, they feel students must also share the blame that SJSU area's reputation suffers.

Lamb said she is propositioned and shouted at "at least every other day" when she walks by a fraternity house on her way to work. "Not all of the behavior and the pranks and the disorderly conduct are from the winos and prostitutes, granted that's there too," she said. "A lot of it is from young people that don't really have the responsibility to take care of themselves and where they live.

Bill Baron, leader of the university zone movement, agreed some Greek houses need to become better neighbors. The work to create the university zone is a 'turning point" he said, and the fraternities will have to work on their images in the future.

CCA and the Greeks have agreed to set up a task force consisting of a representative from each house as well as from the Inter-Fraternity and Panhellenic cause he feared he would be thrown out of the home he is in, or might be beaten if those at the home find out he spoke to a reporter.

He has been beaten while at his home several times, he said. The home has no supervisor, so it is open to whoever wanders in from the street. Drugs are always available and the rooms are dirty and winos frequently sleep in the halls and sometimes fight with residents.

He said he cannot save enough to somewhere else because he, like many board and care residents, is receiving state aid which does not leave him much after paying his rent.

He described his home as a "dumping

The task force's goal is not to remove all the homes from the university area. Trounstine said, rather the objective is to decrease the concentration of board and care homes in the area and force the bad residential care and unlicensed boarding houses to "clean up their act."

Two SJSU alumni in a position to help with relocating some of the programs have come forward, Baron said.

One of them is David Schott, director of Housing for Independent People, a non-profit corporation and part of the Mental Health Advocacy Project of the Santa Clara Law Foundation.

HIP may be able to help, Schott said, because it specializes in finding apartments and condominiums for board and

PHONES: Help at your reach

If students fear immediate danger, they simply need to knock the phone receiver out of its cradle and the police will send a community service officer or a police officer to patrol the area around the phone, Lunsford said.

He said 50 additional phones, bringing the total number to 135, will be in place in the next couple years when funding is available.

The new phones will be installed in classrooms with the most traffic, and some of the remote areas that do not have many now

Seventeen escorts and 16 community service officers are employed through the field studies program, and are paid $5 an hour

The escorts' main responsibility is to escort women to their cars, or if they live in the area, to their homes. They also serve as additional eyes and ears for the University police department

The average response time of an escort is four or five minutes, Lunsford said Escorts and CSOs must qualify through the fields studies program.

"We don't want guys who'll scare the girls off or are asking every girl for a date," Lunsford said. He said they prefer the clean cut college type, but "that doesn't mean they have to have a crew cut.'

The usual number of guides per night is four or five, and they cover an area from Reed to Santa Clara streets and 14th to First

If we do see anything happening, we call the police officers on the radios

Each guide usually receives four or five calls a night, depending on the number of guides on duty, Lulukuisean said.

The busiest times of the evenings vary from semester to semester. He said during the fall semester the calls come earlier because it gets dark earlier. During the spring semester most of the requests come at 10 p.m. when the Clark Library closes.

Lulukisean uses a 10-speed bike while on duty. Most of the guides also use bicycles al-

"It makes our response time quicker," he said. "Say you had a call that took you down to 10th and E. Williams and then you re ceived a call and that person whas at Clark Library, on foot it would take you 10 minutes, but on bike it would only take five minutes or

Lulukisean said while some women are appreciative of the evening guides, some wished that they didn't have to rely on the

"Some women are overjoyed that there are guides," he said, "because it relieves them from having to walk by themselves. But some feel that the campus is a nice area and they would like to walk it alone.

Just the same, because of the stories they've heard about the area, they feel more comfortable walking with someone Lulukisean said even though the service is offered from 5 p.m. to 1 a.m., if somebody is stuck on campus later, the University Po lice will escort the person themselves. The service is offered on the weekend and is handled by a guide, a community service officer or a University Policeman.

"Contrary to popular belief, this campus is about one of the safest places in the valley said Paul Masters, a community service officer."In addition to the escorts and the CSOs and the regular police, there's the canine patrol and San Jose P.D. roles around, so it tends to be fairly quiet.

Masters, a junior majoring in history, has been a a community service officer since September and works eight hours a night, councils. CCA will have two members on the task force.

Baron described the task force as a co alition still seeking outside support. A broad base would make the task force more likely to succeed, he said. At this point, the task force will concentrate on two goals, Baron said, moving the Job Corps dormitories and the "bad" residential care homes. A "bad" program is one which is unsupervised and because of this, tends to create problems, said CCA president Mary Trounstine. It is easy to identify problems homes, she said, one need only check with the state to see which ones have had many complaints filed against

Most homes are run by caring, concerned people, Trounstine said, but there are some which cause trouble.

"Dumping grounds"

At the Community Fusion meeting one man talked about such a home.

He did not want to be identified be-care residents who are able to live in more independent situations.

The corporation seeks private investors to finance apartment units for two or three residents with partial or little supervision. Such small groups are not subject to the restrictions and rejection often encountered in setting up larger homes

Last year HIP placed 25 people in such apartments, Schott said, and currently has a waiting list of about 70. Most of them come from residential care homes of 12 or more. Schott said.

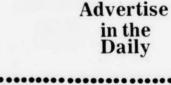

Schott said he would like to see the 'ghetto'' of mental health facilities downtown broken up. Steven Ferry, another SJSU graduate, works for a mortgage company and is interested in helping with the university zone, Baron said. Ferry was out of town and could not be reached for comment. The university zone task force will meet April 20 in the Student Union Pa-
