Court limits Lorentz Co.

Cleaning, reconditioning of industrial drums must be proven safe

By Sam Gibino
Daily staff writer

The Lorentz Barrel and Drum Co., the center of a controversy over its handling of hazardous wastes since an acid spill occurred at its plant in February, has been served with a temporary restraining order prohibiting it from any further reconditioning of industrial drums.

The order, which was issued in Superior Court by Judge Peter G. Stone, prohibits the cleaning and reconditioning of the drums until the company can prove that the process is no longer contaminating the soil or water around its storage yard at 1515 S. 10th St.

The restraining order does not close the company down completely. It will continue to be allowed to recondition and sell barrels that do not contain hazardous materials.

"There have been a lot of things going wrong out there," said Jerry Nadler, Santa Clara County deputy district attorney.

"The purpose of the order is to ensure his actions do not result in anymore contamination," he said.

Nadler said the temporary restraining order is used to stop any action that would be harmful while his office is seeking a more permanent injunction. The restraining order will end 15 days from last Thursday.

He said that at the end of the 15-day period he would ask for the injunction that would continue to restrict the barrel reconditioning until the court action was finished, he said.

Nadler said the action was taken to stop the process that the company uses in reconditioning the barrels.

Dwight Hoening, of the State Health Services Department, said the order will stop the Lorentz Co. from accepting or creating any more hazardous waste.

"We have to be convinced that his process will not harm anyone," Hoening said. "We have to be convinced that what goes on in the future will be acceptable."

Ernie Lorentz, owner of the company was unavailable for comment.

Lorentz's attorney Harrett W. Mannina said he has not seen a copy of the restraining order.

He said the company has been complying with the State Health Department and will be meeting with them to find out what has to be done to change the reconditioning process.

"We intend to have a meeting to clarify the problem," he said.

He said that part of the problem was that the company has been in that location for more than 40 years and that much of the contamination occurred when the laws were different.

"What used to be permissible in the law then may not be today," he said.

Nadler said the company has been meeting the requirements of an order to clean up violations found during an inspection two weeks ago.

Hoening said the company was ordered to remove 500 barrels that contained hazardous materials. The company was also ordered to clean up liquids found on the ground in the storage yard.

sions and recommendations. "There are many ways in which the Professional Standards Committee could take action on this issue," said Prof. Jack Haeger, chairman of the committee. He would not say what action he thought would be taken by his committee.

The Affirmative Action Committee plans to inform the Professional Standards Committee today that it found that "discrimination exists in several areas of the campus ROTC programs."

Runoffs called in 13 A.S. races

2nd round to begin Wednesday

By Mariann Hansen

Daily staff writer

Runoff elections for 13 of the 15 Associated Students executive and legislative offices will be held Wednesday and Thursday.

The two candidates in each race who received the most votes but less than 50 percent during last week's general election will participate in the runoff.

The A.S. Election Board will meet today to confirm last minute details on the runoff elections, Election Board Adviser Claudia Eastman said.

This week's election will be between Your Effective Student Support and United Students parties' candidates. No Blue & Gold Party candidates received enough votes to participate in the runoff election.

The presidential race will be between YESS candidate Michael Finley and U.S.'s Erin O'Doherty. O'Doherty received 1,137 votes to Finley's 1,124. BGP presidential candidate Stafford Hebert collected 566 votes.

"It was a great turnout for this campus, but the number of people voting should be higher," O'Doherty said. "We're going to try harder to get the information out to people."

"My campaign will be the same as the YESS campaign," Finley said. "We'll work together as a team again. I'm excited, but I know I'm going to win this time."

U.S. candidate Michael Faber and YESS's Lisa Root will square off in the vice presidential race. Root received 1,114 votes and Faber, 1,062. BGP's Jeffrey Rollerson collected 630 votes.

Tim Kincaid, YESS, and Gabriel Miramontes, U.S., will vie for the office of controller. Kincaid gathered 1,093 votes to Miramontes' 1,002. James Warren of BGP received 661 votes.

Only two offices were decided in the general election. U.S. candidate Norma Scheurkogel beat YESS's Jeff Wofford 1,323 votes to 1,056 to take-

BGP loses; supports U.S. party

By J. M. Andermatt and Chuck Carroll
Daily staff writers

The entire Blue & Gold Party ticket failed to qualify for any positions in this week's Associated Students runoff election, but Stafford Hebert, BGP presidential candidate, announced early Friday morning that his party will throw its support over to the United Students party.

Your Effective Student Support Presidential candidate Michael Finley and current Associated Students President Michael Schneider, also a YESS member, said the new alignment will not work in favor of the U.S. party.

Hebert addressed a gathering of BGP and U.S. candidates and backers after the election results were announced.

"We are going to support the U.S. party in every way we can," he said. "Together we can beat YESS."

Later Hebert said, "The guys in the YESS party can be happy with the votes they got, but they can't be too happy. The students have shown they're tired of being railroaded into decisions that don't represent them. That's why the U.S.'s party is going to win March 27 and 28."

Finley said it is one thing to give an endorsement and it is another thing to get the Blue & Gold people out to vote again for the U.S.'s party.

Committee to rule on ROTC

By J. G. Griswold
Daily staff writer

The Academic Senate Professional Standards Committee today will decide again whether to recommend that academic credit to certain ROTC courses, which discriminate against homosexuals, be sent to the full senate for consideration.

The committee decided last month to have the Affirmative Action Committee, which originated the proposal, rewrite the policy recommendations to clarify its position. The previous proposal stated only conclusions and recommendations. "There are many ways in which the Professional Standards Committee could take action on this issue," said Prof. Jack Haeger, chairman of the committee. He would not say what action he thought would be taken by his committee.

The Affirmative Action Committee plans to inform the Professional Standards Committee today that it found that "discrimination exists in several areas of the campus ROTC programs."

Student fees tied to cost of REC

THANKS TO THE approval of the Rec Center last week by the California Board of Trustees, SJSU students will be the only students in the California university system who will have their fees increased next year. In addition to this dubious honor, if the construction costs exceed the estimates, SJSU students will be called upon to take up the slack.

It is possible then that, by voting for the Rec Center, students have voted themselves a series of spiraling fee increases.

At the meeting, Trustee Donald Livingston said that, "The students are voting themselves a tax increase. The students have made their decision. If the center has a financial problem they will have to raise their taxes."

The students have in fact not made their decision and should therefore not be obliged to cover the cost discrepancies. This decision that Livingston refers to is the students vote regarding the center, most of which showed a lack of interest by the students.

In March of 1984 the students did make a decision. But it was to halt the Rec Center plans. Due to the fact that the student vote is merely an "advisory vote," the architects were told to continue with their plans, regardless of the student's vote.

Again, in October of 1984, the Rec Center went before the students in the form of a survey. This time, however, they were to select from one of the four proposed plans for the center, or for none at all. The highest percentage of votes in one of the five categories was none at all. Again, the students expressed their apprehension regarding the center, and again their opinion was disregarded.

Finally, in November of 1984, the Student Union Board of Directors received an advisory vote they found acceptable. The students voted in favor of the Rec Center. However, it only passed by 111 votes, hardly a mandate from the students in favor of a Rec Center.

The Board of Trustees disregarded previous student apprehension about the center and, by their misguided actions, have made students liable for all cost increases. As long as the Rec Center has problems, the students will just have to cover them.

The hands of the students are tied. No matter what their advisory vote says, the decision to continue construction of the Rec Center has been made. And it is the students who will bear the burden.

CalPIRG good, but fee plan unfair

It's a shame that California Public Interest Research Group still doesn't have a campus chapter because a 1983 vote and a 1984 petition have shown students want one. A misguided CalPIRG effort to be funded through a refundable addition to student fees is both unlikely to be approved by the board of trustees and slightly underhanded.

Almost as bad has been the wimpy posturing of the Associated Students and the benign neglect of President Gail Fullerton in dealing with the issue.

CalPIRG advocates student and consumer rights and environmental protection, operating out of student-run chapters at seven major universities in California. Billing itself as a "classroom in action," CalPIRG adds depth to students' understanding of public issues and gives field

First Amendment rights.

Before the semester begins, when a student pays his or her student fees, $3 or $4 of the fee is earmarked for CalPIRG. This is the way it's done at the other California campuses where chapters exist. CalPIRG would gather between $75,000 and $100,000 a semester. But what if a student is ideologically or philosophically opposed to what CalPIRG works for? No problem, says CalPIRG, the fee is refundable. All you have to do is fill out a simple application for a refund, and you'll receive a check in the mail.

So what's the problem? Here at SJSU, where voter turnout for student elections is usually well below 25 percent, it's probably reasonable to assume that very few of those who would prefer not to donate $3 or $4 to a cause they oppose would apply for the refund.

An alternative method considered by CalPIRG is much more fair in terms of constitutional rights and more in line with the fundamental philosophy of the group. This method, called a negative checkoff, would allow students the option of electing not to donate the money to CalPIRG by checking a box on their registration materials. Obviously, many people would opt not to give and CalPIRG would not get as much money. With the resulting loss of income, CalPIRG couldn't tackle as many issues as under the mandatory-but-refundable system. For those of us who agree with CalPIRG's efforts, we would be disappointed. But in the interest of fairness, we should willingly accept this.

What none of us has to accept, though, is wishy-washy student government.

Here at SJSU, the A.S. last month unanimously passed a resolution supporting the establishment of a chapter. Last week, though, Michael Schneider vetoed the resolution and went down to Long Beach to speak against CalPIRG before the California State University Board of Trustees. This in spite of the student vote for a chapter, the petition in its favor, and the A.S. resolution. Then the A.S. couldn't muster the nerve to override Schneider's veto. Why? Was the A.S. so uninformed that they didn't know what they were voting for in the first place when the resolution was passed? Or are the A.S. members afraid to cross Schneider?

As for President Fullerton, it seems she is against the idea of a chapter here, for reasons known only to her. If she chose to do so, Fullerton could recommend to the board of trustees that a CalPIRG chapter be funded exactly the way it has asked.

It appears, though, that the student voice is being silenced on all sides.

Chuck

experience related to academic coursework. Last spring the University of California at Berkeley chapter researched toxics in art supplies such as paints and solders, then successfully sponsored legislation prohibiting their use in state grade schools.

Other projects undertaken there include a voter registration and awareness program and monitoring of public interest legislation emanating from the capitals of the state and the nation. The group also publishes current, comparative information on the prices of goods and services students need such as supermarkets, banks and pharmacies.

Clearly, CalPIRG and its counterparts in many other states provide a valuable service to consumers while allowing students to sharpen skills such as research and networking.

But what's disappointing is the funding method CalPIRG has requested at SJSU. Here's a group that claims to be a consumer watchdog, and yet the way it wants to collect its funds is reasonably interpreted as a denial of

Letters to the Editor

Schneider vetoes students' votes

Editor,

I am one of the 5,200 students who signed the CalPIRG petition last fall. I believe CalPIRG provides students a number of educational opportunities and I believe CalPIRG would greatly benefit our campus. When Michael Schneider spoke against CalPIRG at the recent Board of Trustees meeting he did a great disservice to SJSU. At that meeting he expressed his own opinion and not campus opinion. I feel he violated the students here at SJSU by misusing his title. If I remember correctly, we did vote to establish and fund a chapter of CalPIRG. Therefore, I do not believe our A.S. President is representing the will of the SJSU student body.

Timothy J. Haines

Editor,

I am appalled by the actions our A.S. President has taken in regards to CalPIRG. I previously thought he was doing a relatively good job, but I no longer believe that this is the case. Michael Schneider misrepresented the SJSU in front of the Board of Trustees last Wednesday (March 13) when he spoke against CalPIRG. I commend Schneider for representing the student body in regards to the Rec Center at the Board of Trustees meeting, but curse him for misrepresenting the will of the student body which is in favor of CalPIRG. Both the Rec Center and CalPIRG were voted for by the students and as our Associated Students representative he must be called upon to act in accordance with what students want. Our student body has shown what we want through the election process and we must hold Schneider accountable for his actions! Therefore, I ask that if we, the student body, paid for his trip to Long Beach while Schneider did not truly represent the SJSU student body, then Schneider should reimburse us for half of his traveling expenses.

Women want to walk without fear

Editor,

This is in response to Brian Mathew's letter printed on Tuesday, March 19.

He states that women "can go anywhere," that this "is a free and safe campus." Then he states that in order to ensure this safety, women should contact an Evening Guide or walk in groups. This is not freedom. Women are demanding the freedom to go anywhere without fear, without needing an escort, without having to walk in a group. How often do men call an escort to simply walk to their car or to their home? Rarely, they don't have to worry about rape like women do. Women are demanding the ability to go where they choose without needing an escort to ensure their safety. They are demanding freedom from the fear of rape. Simply stated, women would like to go when and where they want without fear. And, yes, Brian, women don't have anything "better to do" than to fight for and demand their rights as human beings.

Athletics over academics?

Editor,

I am a graduating senior who has worked full-time for the last seven years to put myself through SJSU. Like many others, I am preparing to graduate this May. Unfortunately, instead of looking forward to this event, I am very concerned.

For many years I have looked forward to graduation ceremonies, but apparently my needs and concerns are being placed second to an enlarged football stadium. Graduation is a little more than two months away and according to an article ("A.S. questions separate graduation plans", March 8, 1985) in the Daily, no final plans have been made yet as to where exactly graduation will be held, or if we will be graduating as a university community or if each school will have its own ceremony. In contrast to this lack of advanced planning, President Fullerton has been hard at work planning financial backing and construction work so the stadium project can begin in mid-April. For a university whose prime goal should be education, I find this difficult to rationalize.

As a student and taxpayer who has paid this university several thousand dollars in exchange for my education, I feel slighted that my graduation is being placed second to an athletic field which I was never able to use as a student and which had nothing whatever to do with my educational endeavors.

According to another article ("Officials race to expand stadium", March 8, 1985) in the Daily, up until now SJSU only had Division IA status by "riding the coattails of other teams." As a student, I have always had to stand alone and measure up to certain criteria as an individual to be allowed to graduate. Why should athletics be covered by a different set of standards and still be put before academics?

I feel this lack of planning and poor decision-making has been an injustice to every student graduating from SJSU this semester. One can only hope those who run this university will consider academics first and all other areas second in their decision-making in the future.

REC fees might wreck students

Editor,

Hmmm...Rec Center total cost $16.9 million? We'll see. A non-profit operation? You mean like the Spartan Shops?

Oh, yeah, the students did vote for the Rec Center after the third try, didn't they? It won by 111 votes as I recall. Is that a mandate?

Let's see... fees are going up a total of $38 a semester to pay for the Rec Center. Here is an interesting mathematical equation: Rec Center cost overruns = further student fee increases.

Whose interests are being served here?

YESS doesn't play by own rules

Editor,

As a member of the Blue and Gold Party, I was introduced to campaigning and campaigning rules. So, what good are campaign rules when the YESS party brakes them? By hanging a 12 foot banner in front of the Student Union, printing misleading information on their flyer, by handing out material in the dormitories, YESS has mudslinged it's way through the campaign. YESS should know better; they are the ones who wrote the rules in the first place!!! How can they do that and project themselves as "clean-cut" Americans? I thought college politics was different than public politics. I thought honesty and fair play was practiced. YESS, to me, puts that ideal right down the drain.

Regular vigorous exercise benefits body and mind

In this week's Health Corner Carol Christensen, Human Performance associate professor, discusses the importance of exercise with Daily staff writer Janet Lee. Christensen is also an exercise physiologist and holds a exercise specialist certificate.

Q: Why is exercise important?

A: I think it's important for two reasons. One is that it has some psychological benefits. For the people who are in a regular exercise program — that means they're exercising vigorously at least three days a week — can derive physical benefits, (such as when at) rest they would have a lower heart rate and an increased work capacity. They have some changes in the blood that are positive changes. They get increased blood volume and things like that from a physiological standpoint. The body becomes more efficient. So when they do a given task, it requires less energy. On the psychological side, we know that people who exercise regularly feel better about themselves. They have more self-confidence, more self-esteem. They're using it now to treat mild depression and anxiety. It can be used to alleviate depression and anxiety.

Health Corner

Q: Why is that?

A: They think that (endorphin is the) physiological cause behind it. It might be partly that there's more of a psychological base that if you exercise regularly, it means you've imposed some discipline on yourself — that you've overcome a challenge and that those things will make you feel better. Women tend to feel good about running long distances because it's something they never thought they could do. If you do something you didn't think you could ever do, it makes you feel better about yourself.

Q: How often and how long should a person exercise?

A: We've looked at long-distance runners and long-distance cyclists, and the (available) information suggests you need to exercise three to five days a week, not seven. So we're looking at three to five days from 15 minutes to 60 minutes each session.

Q: What do you recommend to people who don't exercise regularly or who don't exercise at all?

A: I think that one of the most undersold exercises that we have is walking. If people would go out and walk vigorously so that they're walking fairly rapidly 30 minutes three times a week, they would see a physiological change and psychological change. For people who have not been walking, it's an activity they can do. You don't have to have special clothes for it. It has lots and lots of advantages. So if you're sedentary, I would recommend walking as a place to start. As you get more fit, you may find that you want to go into jogging or into swimming or into cycling. If you can walk 30 minutes five times a week that would be great. The other positive thing about walking is that you don't have many injuries with it.

Q: Can exercise be dangerous? How?

A: Yes. It very much can be. And I think anyone who says that it is not dangerous — that it is safe — is wrong. If you ask your friends how many have exercised for a long period of time and not been injured, I bet you'll find about 10 percent of the people have never had an exercise-related injury. So just from that standpoint, it can be dangerous. People who are sedentary, if they get into a program that's too vigorous, it can cause some problems. It can precipitate heart attacks. I don't think that's very common, but it could happen.

Q: Lately a lot of celebrity athletes have died while exercising. People are concerned that they will die too. What's happening with that?

A: You see stories every once-in-a-while about of a basketball player collapsing and dying on a basketball court. This will be an intercollegiate athlete. You see stories in all sports (areas) where something will happen to the person.

One of the things that has been said is that exercise is a sort of cure-all. If you exercise, it will prolong your life. It will cure all your ills. And that's not true. Even though you're exercising, if you have signs or symptoms of heart disease you should go in and have a medical checkup. Jim Fixx was running 10 miles a day and he felt that was sufficient medication to take care of any problems and that's not. You still have to take care of the problems you have. They've done autopsy studies and the people who have (had) heart attacks and died during exercise, for the most part, they've either had significant heart disease or had some congenital disorder.

Q: So what do you tell those who don't exercise because they're afraid they'll die from it?

A: I'd say just start easy. Plus the fact that a lot of these people died in high-intensity exercise. You can get the benefits of exercise at low-to moderate-intensity. You don't have to do high-intensity exercise. There are some people who shouldn't exercise — if you have joint problems, if you have bad knees, if you have ankle problems, if you have severe muscular problems. For most people, they can do low-intensity, longer-duration programs. So instead of running for 15 minutes, they walk for 30 minutes. You still get the benefits, but not the intensity.

Q: What kind of equipment do you recommend for exercising?

A: Assuming that they're doing something that's land-based, they can use virtually anything that ul-lows freedom of movement. Shoes are an investment that they that they should make. There's a lot of money spent in research and in development to make shoes. They really need to get a shoe with good cushioning.

That's the only thing I do not cut expenses on. The cushioning in the shoes will help prevent injuries and the width of a heel helps prevent injuries. And so you want to look at the shoe very carefully. It should fit. It doesn't matter if it's a $100 or $120 shoe or a $50 shoe. If it doesn't fit, you might as well not buy it. I would go more expensive. I would not buy a $20 shoe to run in. It doesn't have the support that you need.

The Navy Needs Your Head In The Clouds.

The Navy needs people in the sky who can think fast. Pilots to fly the world's most sophisticated aircraft and flight officers to control the complicated weapons and navigation systems onboard. Both jobs require advanced training. And both jobs reward you with the kind of management responsibility and leadership authority it takes to make your career take off.

To qualify, you must have a BA or BS, be no more than 28, be able to pass aptitude and physical examinations, qualify for security clearance and be a U.S. citizen.

Your base pay is above $30,000 after only four years. On top of that, you'll receive an outstanding benefits package: 30 days' paid vacation earned each year, medical and dental care, low-cost life insurance, and tax-free allowances.

If you've got a good head on your shoulders and high hopes for the future, find out more about becoming a member of the Naval Aviation Team.

Soft sense

Baby massage therapists teach parents benefits of hugging, touching kids

Andrea Laurence's hand massages her son, David's foot (left) then baby David responds with pleasure (far left) as his mother touches his chest. Above, Massage Therapist Lorraine Coye gives instructions to Laurence at the baby massage workshop during the California Massage Therapy Association Convention Friday at San Jose's Sainte Claire Hilton.

The sense of touching is alive in everyone but some people don't let it live, said Angelo Zappacosta, massage therapist and director of the Center for Health in Los Gatos.

Zappacosta was only one massage therapist attending The California Massage Therapy Association workshop Friday at the Sainte Claire Hilton Hotel in San Jose. The workshop was held to show mothers and fathers how to massage their babies. One mother brought her five-month-old son with her.

"We ended up doing a demonstration for the press, is what it turned out to be," said Lorraine Coye, a massage therapist who taught the workshop.

"Touching is the first sensory feeling they (babies) have," Coye said.

Everyone needs to touch or get massaged. A hug, holding hands or massaging someone is all that is needed, she said. The sense of touch should be taught early in life if it is to be used throughout life, Coye said. A lot of mothers are not sure of themselves and are afraid of touching their babies because they think they are doing it wrong.

Coye taught the mother, Andrea Laurence of San Jose, how to massage her son, David. It turned out to be an infant massage demonstration and not a workshop because Laurence was the only mother to show up.

She was taught to hold the baby in her lap and then to stroke the child's head. She would then make eye contact and talk to the baby, and would then do a combination of strokes on the legs. Zappacosta called the smooth, long strokes "constructive touching."

The workshop was planned to give the mother "permission to touch her baby," Coye said. She said touching is not done much in society today.

She said people must be taught early in life that touching is OK and that it helps them become a complete person. People should not be afraid of touching, she said.

"If they can touch their babies when they're babies, they can't stop," Coye said.

She said studies have been done that prove that premature babies who are placed in incubators and are not touched, are worse off than babies who are touched often.

The babies who were not touched had a slow weight gain, were more hyperactive and did not develop mentally as quickly as they would have if they were touched and loved.

About two generations ago in the U.S., people were taught how to touch each other from the beginning of life, Coye said. Grandma would live with the family and she would do the nurturing. After World War II, families bought their own houses and did not want their parents living with them any more, she said. As a result, touching was not taught at home anymore.

In the past five years, touching has become popular again, she said. In India, touching is customary and people do not feel apprehensive about it. In America, Coye said, the first thought that enters someone's mind when she mentions touching is that it is a sexual pleasure. It is much more than that. It can start simply by touching each other's hands.

According to Zappacosta, "Life is just not complete, you're missing something," if you do not always experience the sense of touch.

If parents touch their children from birth, it will have a bonding effect on their children throughout life, Coye said. It will keep them friends as they get older and the parent will not be thought of only as an authority figure, she said. It will give parent and child a deeper level of understanding.

Parents should spend time touching their children, no matter what age they are, for about 20 minutes, twice a day, Coye said. She has a 14-year-old son who practices gymnastics and she massages his back and sore muscles whenever he needs it, she said.

The major problem with teaching mothers how to touch their children is largely psychological, Zappacosta said. All people need an awareness of this particular sense and everyone should be made aware that touching others is acceptable.

Runoff planned for U.S. and YESS

the office of director of Ethnic Affairs.

U.S.'s Adam Novicki will be the new director of Student Services. He beat YESS's Paul "P.J." Motekaitis 1,261 votes to 1,102.

Winners must receive more than 50 percent of the vote for an office in the general election. Runoffs are scheduled when no candidate receives 50 percent of the vote. The two top vote-getters then participate in the runoff.

Election results were announced at 12:30 a.m. Friday by Election Board Chairman Scott Allen. The ballots were taken off campus to be tabulated on a computer system SJSU no longer has. The National Computer System machine counts about 1,000 ballots per hour, said John Sroka, SJSU systems programmer. Eastman, Allen and Sroka went to the undisclosed site to count the 3,052 ballots.

The total votes of the 15 offices for each party were: 15,681 for U.S., 15,257 for YESS, and 7,414 for BGP.

"According to Act 9 (of the A.S. Constitution), the runoff election has to be within five days of the regular election," Eastman said. "The election board will regard to do what it just did. There may be some more talk of the charges that were brought last week."

There will be enough ballots for this week's election, Eastman said. The election board ordered 7,000 blank ballots and printed 3,500 for the general election.

"There is traditionally a lower voter turnout for runoff elections, so we will have plenty of ballots," she said.

Revenue sharing received 2,019 votes, for $4,038. Voters could designate $2 of their student fees to go to a specific recognized campus group. There were 188 groups on the ballot.

A group had to receive at least five votes to receive the funds. If groups received four votes or less, the money went into the A.S. general fund.

The top five groups to receive the most votes from revenue sharing were: the Music Department, 98 votes, $196; Student Occupational Therapy, 91 votes, $182; Sigma Chi, 81 votes, $162; Art Gallery, 58 votes, $116; and Students for Peace, 53 votes, $106.

Twenty of the 188 groups did not receive any votes for revenue sharing, Eastman said.

A.S. Adviser June Lim will take over for Eastman as election board adviser this week. Eastman was temporarily employed by the Student Programs and Services office and she was scheduled to leave this week, she said.

Shredded flags replaced

International Center to raise 18 flags

By Christine Frankendal
Daily staff writer

Look for a big white house with flags in the front, Office Manager Muriel Andrews says when people ask for directions to the SJSU International Center. Since the beginning of the semester, the flags have been missing.

"They were totally shredded, so we decided to take them down," Andrews said.

The flags were replaced Thursday through a donation from the Community Committee for International Students. About 40 International Center residents, eight CCIS board members and the owners of the house, Alan and Phyllis Simpkins, gathered on the house's front porch for the flag presentation ceremony.

CCIS Chairwoman Betty Hayden greeted the audience and spoke about CCIS and why it decided to buy the flags.

"It's an organization developed to promote friendship and understanding with foreign students at SJSU," she said. "We have members from the whole Santa Clara Valley; people (who are) interested in international relationships and working with young people. The I-Center people allow us to use their facilities. We're in and out all the time and this is one way we can repay (them)."

The new flags are worth $680. There was one from each of the 23 countries represented in the International Center. A student representative from each country received a flag.

The flags will be hung over the weekend, Andrews said. There is only room for 18 flags so they will be put up in alphabetical order.

Situated one block east of campus, the International Center houses 34 American and 43 foreign students. It is the only house of its kind in the California State University system.

Parties join forces for runoff

"The voters will have to think this time when they go out to vote and they won't just vote blindly," he said.

Erin O'Doherty, presidential candidate of the U.S. party, said she feels positive about the results of the election and that the BGP endorsement could help the U.S. party in the runoff election next Wednesday and Thursday.

"They offered their support and we agreed on many of the issues, and that whoever made it to the runoff would help the other (party) out," O'Doherty said. "If we can mobilize their (BGP) votes, that should help us win. We feel really positive. We had a lot of faith in the issues we chose."

O'Doherty said the strategy in the runoff is to make students aware of the issues.

"They're (students) going to hear from us," she said. "Part of our strategy will be going directly to student groups. It's a matter of educating people."

Current A.S. President Michael Schneider said the BGP's decision to back the U.S. party will bring back many of the traditional voters that the BGP had taken away in the first round.

"The Blue & Gold Party took some traditional (YESS) voters," he said. "It had appeared they were a new alternative, but now they are no longer a new party. Their aligning will give us back traditional votes by supporting the U.S. party."

Most of the traditional voters, he said, won't go so far as to vote for the U.S. party.

"This will bring us to our fifth resounding victory," Schneider said.

Scott Hartman, campaign manager for the BGP, disagrees.

"Our main objective," he said, "is to get things done that we want to get done and we wouldn't agree to support the U.S. party if we didn't think it was going to win."

Daily staff writer Mariann Hansen contributed to this report.

Academic Senate to set ROTC policy

"Both campus ROTC programs acknowledge that aspects of their programs are closed to otherwise qualified students on the basis of sexual preference," the committee's proposal states.

The committee found that two ROTC courses were closed to homosexuals.

The committee is also recommending that no course which discriminates should be published in university publications.

"It is our goal at this university to promote a campus climate free of any form of unfair discrimination," wrote the Affirmative Action Committee. "We believe that gays and lesbians should be no more subject to discrimination than any other member of the campus community."

"The Affirmative Action Committee's recommendations follow from this basic principle."

SJSU President Gail Fullerton, who saw these recommendations last November, said last month that student homosexuals are not protected from discrimination under California State University policy. Because the ROTC is controlled by the federal government, Fullerton said SJSU is powerless in opening certain ROTC courses to homosexuals.

Fullerton said at a February press conference that she would not predict what action she would take if the senate approved the Affirmative Action Committee's recommendations. Fullerton must approve all senate actions before they become university policy.

The Professional Standards Committee will meet in Room 167 in the Administration Building at 2 p.m.

A wise decision

By Scott Vigallon
Daily staff writer

After graduating from L.A.'s University High School in 1981, Rochelle Morrison had to decide where she would attend college.

"I didn't want to go to school in Southern California," she said. "I was going to attend San Diego State, but I just wanted to get away."

Tennis

Four years and a net full of wins later, Morrison, the No. 1 singles player on SJSU's women's tennis team, feels she made the right choice.

And to support her decision, just look at the 5-8 senior's statistics and honors over the past two years:

Last season, she was 20-8 in singles, 18-11 in doubles and 4-1 at the NorPac Championships. In addition, she was named to the All-NorPac Tournament and the All-Conference teams.

Through just over half a season this year, Morrison has sharpened her singles record to 13-4 and her doubles mark to 13-3. But for Morrison to improve upon her performance at the conference championships, she will have to accomplish something she hasn't done this season.

"I'll have to beat (UC) Berkeley," the 21-year-old said.

So far, in two singles and doubles matches against the NorPac rivals, Morrison has come up winless. The most recent defeats took place last Tuesday when she fell to Cal's Jennifer Prah 6-4, 7-6, and she and doubles partner Shelly Stockman lost to Linda Oechsle and Caroline Yao 6-4, 6-2.

"I definitely should have won," Morrison said of her singles loss. "She (Prah) was a good player, but she had her weaknesses. I just blew my chances."

"In doubles, it's frustrating because I have a better partner this year, not like in the past. But in the past, we've beaten Berkeley. This year, we have not."

Despite the losses to the Bears, SJSU coach Lisa Beritzhoff said her top player has many strengths.

"Rochelle is very consistent, yet a power hitter. Her strongest points are her forehand and drop shots. She also has good anticipation."

However, if Morrison has one weakness, Beritzhoff added, it is that "she tends to get down on herself. She expects too much of herself."

The coach then admitted, "She's doing a better job of (handling) it now."

Morrison didn't fully agree with Beritzhoff's statements, although she does feel tennis is a frustrating sport.

"I try not to get frustrated," she said. "I just let it go. It may seem like

Steve M. Alden — Daily staff photographer

SJSU's Rochelle Morrison, Spartans' No. 1 women's singles player, concentrates on her game

I'm frustrated out there, but it really doesn't affect me."

Morrison said she maintains this attitude even after losing a match.

"I don't think about it more than a few minutes after a match. It doesn't get me down."

The Behavioral Science major, who has been the No. 1 player at SJSU the past three years, knows plenty about the ups and downs of tennis from her own experience. She has been stroking shots since the age of five.

Playing in the juniors (under 18), Morrison was ranked in the top 16 in Southern California, and after her freshman year here, she competed in the Nike Satellite Circuit.

This summer, though, Morrison will try for her biggest challenge yet — the professional tour.

"I just want to give it a chance," she said.

Beritzhoff feels Morrison's chances of making the tour are good.

"She has a great amount of talent, and she's tapped just 60 percent of it right now. Depending on how much desire she'll have, she can play pro," said the coach.

Playing professionally is nothing new to the Morrison family. Rochelle's older sister, Diane, competed for two-and-a-half years and was once ranked in the top 50 in the world.

So now, the younger Morrison will match serves and volleys with the stiffer competition. She plans on participating in tournaments on either the East Coast or in Europe. If she doesn't make it on the tour or when her professional days end, she'll return to school to earn a master's degree in business administration.

Meanwhile, Morrison is still No. 1 on the SJSU squad, where, according to Beritzhoff, she shows leadership through her mature personality and her abilities. But Morrison doesn't think of herself as a leader in the traditional sense.

"I'm not very talkative," she said. "I don't impress my opinions on anyone, but if somebody asks me, I'll give it to them."

OK, Rochelle, what's your opinion on tennis at SJSU?

"The men's and women's teams haven't been that good because they can't get the top players. The only way to build a good tennis program is to offer full rides (scholarships). They only give out like two scholarships each," said Morrison, who is on scholarship.

"I hope that by the exposure I've received, people will notice the teams here. I mean — people don't even know where the tennis courts are. Someone has to put pressure on the administration and the athletic department to get money."

She then added with a laugh, "Tennis is where the money's at."

Morrison continued, "At Stanford, people donate hundreds of thousands of dollars to its programs."

Would Morrison do the same?

"If I had the money, yes, I would."

The burden of high expectations

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — Rod Carew experienced the true burden of all masters last season: great, almost inhuman, expectations.

The California Angels' first baseman was plagued by a mysterious ailment, not diagnosed as a pinched nerve in his neck until mid-season, that rendered his left hand numb. He spent the season in and out of the lineup.

What was expected to be the crowning summer of his 18-year career — Carew entered it needing 168 hits to reach the coveted 3,000 mark — turned into a disaster.

Some disaster: Carew merely hit .295, a mark that wouldn't embarrass anyone else.

But it was the first time since 1968 — Lyndon Johnson was president — that Carew had failed to top .300.

"If I'd been healthy, having the streak stopped would've been a disappointment," said Carew, whose career mark remained at .330. "But I was more concerned with what was going on with my back, my shoulder, my arm. I spent the season asking myself, 'What's wrong?'"

Detecting the source of his discomfort was one thing. But doctors never could come up with a remedy, other than rest. Carew missed 69 games, but sitting on the bench sporadically wasn't enough. But he hopes a winter of relaxation was the proper cure.

Carew pronounces the pain gone and approaches a new season with the comfortable feeling of knowing his 3,000th hit virtually is in the bank.

"I had my sights set on it last year. The anticipation had built up all winter," he said. "Not getting it was hard to accept after all that, and the circumstances made it less pleasant."

"Now that it's not that far away, it's easier on me. I know I won't have to play that many games to get it done."

An underrated all-around player whose other talents always have been overshadowed by his bat artistry, Carew prizes his reputation as a great bunter. Thus, he has had hit No. 3,000 mapped out long ago.

"I'm going to bunt for hit. I'll drop it down the third base line."

It has been two years since Carew contemplated retirement, only to sign another contract with the Angels. Now that contract is about to expire and, even though he'll turn 40 in October, he seems more certain of playing at least one more year.

"That would give me 20," he said, "and that's a nice round number. Otherwise, it'd be like hitting .399 or getting 99 RBI. It's just not the same."

"It all depends on how I a.o feel like I can play. It's never hard to get out of bed. I don't feel those aches and pains that tell you it might be time to stop."

"I still wake up in the morning with a sense of wanting to be out there."

Carew would also like to put in one more year because he'd know 1986 is the finish line. It would make for a more enjoyable farewell.

"That would be the way to go. I'd be able to better enjoy my time out there."

Carew and his veteran teammates certainly will enjoy this season more if some of California's heralded prospects help the team contend for the American League West flag.

"From what I've seen so far," Carew said, "I get good vibes. We have a lot of good, young players and strong arms on the mound."

Playoff expansion talks

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Club owners formally proposed Thursday that major league baseball expand its league playoffs from five to seven games and asked for a speedy reply from the players' union.

As negotiations toward a new labor agreement returned to issues other than the game's financial condition, the owners, who had alluded to an expanded playoff earlier, said Thursday they would like to begin the best-of-7 game League Championship Series this year.

"We're going to have to make a decision on this soon," Lee MacPhail, president of the owners' Player Relations Committee, said after the second bargaining session of the week.

Life on Earth

Yesterday

Because many SJSU students attend classes twice or three times a week, the Spartan Daily is including news items from the previous paper to help keep everyone informed on campus everyday.

which will be distributed during the 1985-86 school year.

A.S. Chief Justice Greg Mack said Thursday that the charges of distributing false and misleading advertising in campaign literature against Your Effective Student Support party will not be brought before a full judicial board hearing.

Associated Students President Michael Schneider proposed granting the Revised Automatic Funding Initiative groups most of the funds requested. If the proposal is implemented, it would mean that seven campus groups would be allocated 25 percent of A.S. funds for next year.

Sports

Cal State Hayward's baseball team roughed up five SJSU pitchers for 16 hits on its way to a 18-6 thrashing of the Spartans. SJSU's Kurt Griesemer and Earl Boles managed to belt their first home runs of the season. Also, Steve Ochoa extended his hitting streak to 17 games.
