CSU backs parents

By Paula Ray Christiansen Daily staff writer

An agreement to increase funding for university child-care programs received final approval from the CSU board of trustees Oct. 21, said Bob Whalen, CSSA representative on child care.

If approved by Gov. George Deukmejian, $1.42 million will be appropriated to child care for the California State University system, Whalen said.

SJSU child-care facilities could receive a total of $27,500, said Bob Gunter, A.S. director of California State Student Affairs. agreement between CSSA and the chancellor's office was presented to the board with the Child Care Program Change Proposal already in the CSU bud get, said Kerri Johnson, CSSA liaison to CSU.

The amount of funding received by individual universities would be directly related to the money contributed through student fees on each campus, Whalen said.

Each campus will be eligible to receive $55,000, but it is possible that some campuses would not receive any additional fund-ing, said Larry Emond, CSSA representative at San Diego State

The agreement with the administration is designed to provide a larger percentage of funds to campuses which contribute the most through student fees, fig-ured on a sliding scale, Emond

Campuses with students contributing $2 or more through student fees would be eligible to receive $55,000. Those who contribute from $1.50 to $1.99 would be eligible to receive up to 75 percent of that amount, and 50 percent would be provided to universities that contribute from $1 to $1.49.

Universities that contribute less than $1 would not be eligible to receive funding, Emond said.

Unless schools submit individual special appeals, the amount funded to them will be based on 1984-85 child-care student fees, Gunter said, SJSU will submit an appeal to be considered See CHILD CARE, back page

Honig talks up teaching at SJSU

Getting students into the teaching profession is one problem, but preparing them properly and compensating them adequately are others, said Bill Honig, state superintendent of public instruc-

He returned to college Friday to meet with SJSU faculty, administrators and students to exchange ideas about developing a quality teaching

schools

Enrollment in the SJSU School of Education has increased in the last two or three years by 16 percent, and 96 to 97 percent of last year's graduates had jobs this fall, said Gail Fullerton, SJSU

"There is a growing professionalism toward teaching, and morale is better than it has been in the past," Honig said.
But salary and morale are not the only things to be considered in making the field more attrac-

The SJSU visit was Honig's 10th stop on his tour of the 19 California State University comparable to other professionals," Honig said.

Changing the structure of salary schedules, investing more money in teaching programs for students and holding teachers accountable for their knowledge of the profession will increase respect for the field, he said.

With 80,000 to 90,000 new teachers coming in, schools must be sure that instructional lead-ership is effective so that bad teachers can be isolated and "canned," Honig said.

In an effort to produce qualified educators,

There are bills being introduced into the Legislature that will create higher expectations of teachers in the future," Honig said. "We want to tone up the entire situation and make teachers demand more of teachers.

This will help create the desire and respect needed in the profession, Honig said.

The state budget indicates an increased awareness of the teacher shortage with 39.9 percent of state funds being provided for educational improvement, more than that department has

Explosive Spartans bruise Pacific, 44-15

A Spartan trio stops Tiger Tim Richardson dead in his tracks. From left, SJSU backers Chris Alexander and Tim Wells converge for the tackle. The Spartans held Pacific to only 111 yards rushing.

SJSU quarterback Mike Perez threw for a record 508 yards as the Spartan football team bombarded the Pacific Tigers, 44-15, in front of 22,355 homecoming fans in Stockton on Saturday afternoon.
Perez was 31 of 39 with three touchdowns, amassing a PCAA single-game record 534 yards in total offense.

His 508 yards in the air is also a conference record and the most passing yardage by an individual or a team this season in the NCAA.

SJSU had 724 total yards of offense on the day, a new school record and the most offensive production by any team in the nation this season.

The Spartan defense held the Tigers' wishbone offense to just 371 total yards — only 111 on the ground. Pacific was ranked seventh in the nation in rushing coming into the contest with an average of 279.1 yards per game.

It was a near-perfect victory for the Spartans, now 6-2 overall and 4-0 in the PCAA.

The Tigers fell to 4-4, 2-2 in PCAA play
The win puts SJSU — the only undefeated PCAA team alone at the top of the conference standings with three games to play

Fresno State beat previously undefeated Long Beach State, 25-12, Saturday night in Fresno, giving the Spartans the inside track to the PCAA championship and the California Bowl on Dec. 13.

Degree-hunting is dehumanizing

College seemed like such a good idea. Starting at age five you go to school for 11 years to reading, spelling, study habits, predicting what teachers want - then aspire to a higher institution.

Then, as a junior in high school, the nightmare begins First, it's the alphabet soup examinations — PSAT, SAT, AP, ACT, CTBS — that are supposed to determine whether you should bother with college or head straight for the unemployment line. People who don't graduate from college teachers say, don't get the best jobs. You become eager.

Then, as a senior the nightmare continues. Your SAT score is matched with your GPA and, using some ancient Egyptian formula, you can tell whether or not you will qualify to attend a hallowed four-year university.

As you fill out those UC and CSU applications, you try and make that summer job at Burger King sound like a corporate executive position with a company car. You list the scholastic honors you received, including the fourth grade spelling bee and the citizenship award you won with 100 others in second grade. You become nervous.

Then, you pay people at these distinguished halls of learning to evaluate you. They wonder, as they read your life history, whether or not you are smart, unique or rich enough to merit a college education. Does he belong to the right clubs? What about those oh-so-im-Opinion portant extracurricular activities? Does he have dandruff? Herpes? Holdings in South Africa? You become worried.

Then, when the enlightened selectors decide you are indeed college material, you pay more money to buy what experts have to tell. First, the experts tell you to buy a book, usually written by someone else. After that, they tell you to come and listen to a lecture based on the book

Finally, they test you based on what you learned from the book and lectures that were based on the works of someone else. Does being an expert mean knowing how to select the right book? You become skeptical.

Then, during college, you discover many people like yourself who can't decide what they want to be when they grow up. They are told by advisers that sociology majors

Disabled students need more spaces

This letter is about the construction at Seventh and San Carlos streets. The closure of the parking lots has eliminated at least 14 parking spaces for disabled students and employees. Those spaces had allowed for easy access to the Music and Art buildings, Clark Library and Student Union (not to mention the nearby buildings and classrooms).

As a disabled student with extreme difficulty walking,

I ask anyone with healthy capabilities to imagine having to travel in pain and/or with great effort from Eighth and San Salvador streets, the Seventh Street garage, or Seventh and San Fernando to get to the Student Union or the Music

I understand the need for the construction and equipment access. However, I don't believe there was any thought for the needs and rights of disabled persons. I also understand more spaces are supposed to be set aside at some time or another in the area of Fifth and San Carlos but that is " access to the buildings in question either

I ask the university to reconsider the wholesale closure of the parking areas and reopen a few spaces for the disabled closer to the center of campus. Thank you

Star Wars is escalating arms race

The recent summit in Iceland between the super pow ers failed to reach an agreement because of the Strategic De-fense Initiative, or what is popularly called Star Wars.

At first one would wonder why Russia is all that both-ered about the United States building up a defense system and would tend to blame Moscow for the failure, as Washington has done. But a closer look at this massive project in space will tell us why even we should be concerned about it.

There is basically a very fine line between defense and offense. What Reagan calls the insurance policy for America is nothing but another dimension of the arms race that Russia will eventually counter by developing a similar sys-

So where would we have reached in terms of reduc tions in a nuclear arms race? Even the scientists agree the so-called shield against nuclear missiles is not feasible for the next 10 to 15 years and is definitely not a fool-proof system against all missiles. Besides, if nuclear arsenals are to be ultimately dismantled, what purpose does Star Wars

The administration has made the issue sound very complicated which only it can negotiate. However, it is for Americans to realize it is our money that is going into escalating the arms race and in the process is threatening to jeopardize our own security.

Freedom of speech is for everyone

I commend Interim Academic Vice President Arlene Okerlund on her letter in opposition to subjecting any particular column or columnist in the Spartan Daily to censorship.

I appreciated the way she tied this whole issue to the business of a university. A university should encourage the free publication of ideas and promote discourse. A university is no place for censorship. A more correct response to an article such as that writ-ten by Mr. Hintz ("Fairy Tales" Oct 10,) might be an eloquent letter to the editor refuting his ideas. On the other hand, to ignore him would be just as acceptable. Some people may think his ideas to be so outrageous as to be unde-serving of serious commentary. And I think rightly so. But Mr. Hintz's column has no bearing on his right to print it. The concept of free speech and the free exchange of ideas is so important that we must defend the right of Mr Hintz to print his trash. By defending his right to speak I seek to ensure the same right for myself and others. I think the concept of free speech also implies the right to take any position on an issue, be it narrow-minded and bigoted or thoughtful and tolerant and then to print it. Even if it is mean and nasty. It disappoints me when some of my fellow liberal thinkers, who work so hard to advocate the protection of constitutional rights, break ranks and advocate subjecting those of a different view or style to censorship.

I hope Mr. Hintz's column continues as long as he de sires to write it. I also hope to see articles, editorials and letters to the editor written in response to his crazy ideas ixty-four shopping days before Christmas and the Associated Students board of directors started giving out gifts.

In a fit of fiscal generosity, the A.S. board unaniously waived two of its own budget stipulations last week to allow six A.S. Program Board members to attend an all-expense-paid conference in San Jose.

Price tag: $906 — which includes $186 for a otel room at San Jose's Red Lion Inn. The board also bypassed another stipulation limiting the number of members the program board could send to a conference to two. The registration fee is $120 apiece; we're sending six people

A.S. President Tom Boothe defended the action, saying he had to defer judgment to the A.S. board and Program Board Director Verda Alexander. He said they know what they're doing and assured me this isn't a frivolous expense.

"Verda is the director of the program board and she has to choose if that's an appropriate expenditure," he said. "I think it's legitimate.

Really?

"I'm just glad I wasn't voting on this one to tell the truth," Boothe said. Yes, that was fortunate for him. It saved him from the predicament of bucking the rest of the board or following up on their stupidity. Both Booth and Alexander said the room is needed so conferees — all six of 'em — can mingle with event sponsors and other contacts during the conference. Trying to bring them back to campus, they say, would inhibit things.

"Odds are pretty slim that you can draw them to SJSU," Boothe said.

Alexander had another compelling reason The Red Lion Inn, from what I understand, is fairly remote from anything else, even though it's in downtown San Jose," she said during the A.S. meet-

Actually, it's about three miles from campus Just follow First Street north to the airport and look for the multistory, expensive looking hotel.

(I'd even offer to chauffeur program board members and their contacts for half what they're shelling out for the room.)

But that wasn't the only reason they had to have the room.

"We need someplace to crash, or to meet with performers and other programmers," Alexander said. If it's really that important, then why skimp. If a room is required to conduct the weighty business at hand, then getting a better room would seem to be bet-ter for business. The best rooms at the Red Lion go for $150 a night

The A.S board can afford it; they've got lots of

When asked, surprisingly enough, by an A.S. director why so many program board members had to go, Alexander said she wanted all of them to have the opportunity. She added that none should have to fork over their own expenses.

'It's the only conference for the program board, and I wouldn't ask my chairs to pay out of their own pockets," Alexander said.

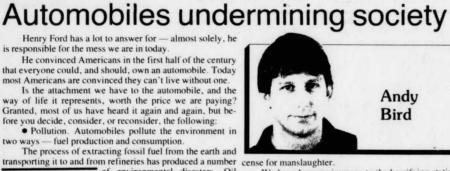

That's right, just dip into the students'. They're pretty deep.

Since all students are technically members of the A.S., the rest of us non-program board members should feel free to make similar funding requests

All-expense-paid trips to Washington D.C. for political science majors, and excursions to Greece for anthropology majors could be sold on exactly the same merits as the program board conference.

If you have a request, just drop off it off at the a.S. or program board offices in the Student Union. Who knows, the way the money's been giving out lately, you might just get your wish. Merit doesn't seem to matter.

Immigration bill to spawn market in false papers worth $5 at a swap meet today will skyrocket in price along with other such documents once the federal amnesty program for illegal aliens begins, immigration experts say.

Steve Gregg, U.S. Border Patrol supervisor

Six months after the immigration bill becomes law, a 12-month application period for legalization will begin in which aliens will be required to have proof of continuous residence dating to 1982. Congress said the best evidence of continuous residence would be employment-related forms such as pay stubs. The bill allows the attorney general to add alternative criteria.

The people we run into now may have three or four pieces of identification that was legally issued but based on false documentation," said Allen Wuhrman, assistant district director of investigations for the INS in San Diego

Though fake documents are readily available along much of the 2 000-mile U.S.-Mexico border, Wuhrman said most of the phony paper is peddled at the aliens' destination, often the Los Angeles area. The amount of law enforcement along the border increases the risk of operating a phony document business

"There's a noticeable difference with trash on campus," said Florence Lawyer, principal of the school, 35 miles west of Los Angeles.

Kathy Carroll, 16, associated student government parliamentarian, said she got the idea from a booklet a friend brought home from summer camp.

"There's been a bad trash prob-lem at this school," she said, "and we've also had a problem of what (music) to play on Fridays. This is our way to solve two problems at once

Health professionals prone to committing 'crime of '80s'

It still happens; 16 drug-abusing nurses were arrested in a one-day coundup" coordinated by officials in Illinois earlier this year

But Marshal D. Wilkerson, diversion program manager for the state Board of Registered Nursing, doesn't believe public shaming is the answer for what he calls "the crime of the '80s'': drug use, especially among health professionals.

Diversion seems to work for health professionals because of their addiction patterns, experts say. They generally start using drugs to treat themselves for pain, rather than to get high. They continue because of the availability of drugs and they steadfastly believe they understand drugs well enough to control their use of them. Once they admit their addiction, their motivation to change is incredible, Wilkerson said.

Drug-addicted doctors and pharmacists have similar diversion options, and hundreds now practice in the state as they recover.

The programs don't always work: Twelve percent in the nurses' program dropped out, and over four years, 40 percent in the doctors' program couldn't continue. But without help, one study several years ago in San Francisco found that one nurse died every five weeks of a drug

During Mary's seven years of addiction, she stayed at jobs less than a year, switching hospitals every time someone got suspicious.

She bought drugs on the street to supplement the pure stuff she stole from hospitals, smoking 20 joints of marijuana a day after shooting 200 milligrams of Demerol into

Mary never used the veins in arms: "That was a junkie habit, and I was a nurse," she said.

By the time supervisors confronted her with obviously forged narcotics records, her car was repossessed and her home was about to be

"I felt like a walking scream on the inside," she said.

It got so bad that one night, she wheeled a locked narcotics cart into an empty patient room and staged a break-in, stuffing more than 400 vials and 125 pills into a brown paper bag . . .

Mostly she thought she was alone. But support groups in Los Angeles include former addicts from virtually every major hospital in the region, according to registered nurse Jean Sullivan, herself a recovering addict who started Discovery, the city's first organized support group for recovering nurses.

A 1980 Drug Enforcement Administration study of 1,359 hospitals found that nurses were involved in 70 percent of drug thefts, pharmacists in 13 percent, pharmacy techni-cians in 8 percent and doctors and others in the remaining cases mulates the most garbage wins.

Under the polling plan called "Trash Your Favorite Music," the rewinner was new-wave music. School officials noted a marked decrease in litter during the first three weeks of balloting.

Perez, Jackson help SJSU cage Tigers, 44-15

SJSU quarterback Mike Perez threw for a PCAA record of 508 yards in the Spartans' 44-15 win over Pacific

The Spartans came out strong right at the start, taking the opening kick-off and driving 73 yards in 10 plays, with Kenny Jackson taking the ball in from the 3-yard line for the first of his three touchdowns on the day.

The Tigers managed to pull even 7-7 after they blocked a Spartan field goal attempt.

Two plays later UOP tied the on an 80-yard touchdown pass from Hue Jackson to Booker Guyton.

With the score tied at seven, SJSU wasted a golden opportunity to add another first-quarter TD when Jackson coughed up the ball on the Ti-gers' one-yard line, a habit which has plagued the Spartans throughout most of the season

SJSU's main concern going into the game was to curtail the turnovers.

The Spartans' only turnover in the game was Jackson's goal-line fum-

"I'm happy with the offense that ve didn't turn the ball over a lot.' Perez said. "They came with some blitzes, but they weren't able to get back there because we have a great offensive line.

The offensive line did not allow Perez to be sacked, had numerous big blocks and opened up holes for the running backs

"That's the name of the ball game, and that's why we can score 44 ' SJSU offensive guard David Diaz-Infante said. "Physically we knew that we were a lot bigger and stronger than they were. That allowed us to really blow 'em off the ball,'

With slightly more than over five minutes left in the first half, the Spartans took the lead for good as Sergio Olivarez booted a 28-yard field goal, making the score 10-7.

Then with just 1:57 left in the half SJSU drove 87 yards, capped off by Jackson's second touchdown of the af

Linebacker Sam Kennedy then intercepted a Tiger pass with time run-ning out in the first half.

One play later with the ball on the UOP 24-yard line, Perez hit Guy Ligns in the end zone to give SJSU a 23-7 halftime lead.

The Tigers came roaring back at the start of the third quarter, driving 74 yards on eight plays, scoring on a yard touchdown pass to wide out Kennedy Bryant.

After a succesful two-point conversion, it was 23-15.

Tiger quarterback Jackson was 13 of 23 for 260 yards, but threw a pair of

The wishbone offense couldn't get it going on the ground either, as Jackson himself had the most rushing yardage on the team in the game, with 38.

Along with Kennedy's intercep tion, cornerback K.C. Clark picked

The defense also sacked the Tigers' Jackson twice, and recovered a fumble

'It was a pivotal game for us," Clark said. "As a result, we were emotionally and physically up for it, and we hit hard.

For the Spartans offensively, they gained 216 yards on the ground, the best total this year for the Spartans.

Jackson ran for 111 yards, the fourth time this season he has run for more than 100 yards. He also added a fourth-quarter touchdown run, his 10th

"It's good to mix it up like that. It'll take them (the defense) off me and when they turn around and key on Mike (Perez) it'll open up my running game," Jackson said.

The receivers, especially Lafo Malauulu, benefited from Perez's per-

But Perez used almost all of his receivers in the game, including Liggins five times for 92 yards and one touchdown, Cortez Thomas three times for 64 yards and Kenny Roberts three times for 88 yards and a score.

Wide receiver Stephen Crawford added a late touchdown reception of 35 yards on a fake reverse by Perez.

Soccer team thanks Lord for two goals in upset win over Cal

By David Rickard

The SJSU soccer team, playing what coach Julie Menendez called it's best game of the year, got a pair of goals from Matt Lord in the first half and made them stand up in a 2-1 upset over Cal on Saturday at Spartan Stadium

The victory improved the Spartans' season mark to 6-7-3, including a 1-3 record in the Pacific Soccer Conference. The Bears lost for only the third time this year, dropping to 12-3-2 overall and 0-1-1 in conference.

Week to stress gay pride, public education

By Scott G. Hamilton

erts

With the advent today of SJSU's Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week, organizers say their intentions are twofold

Not only do they hope to give homosexuals' pride in themselves, but also to educate the public and bring about a better understanding of gays and lesbians, according to co-coordinator Martha O'Connell.

To that end, the speech and panels scheduled are geared to enforce the week's theme. "Understanding Ourselves, Educating Others," O'Connell said.

Slated are appearances by such diverse guests as a pastor from the Calvary Metropolitan Community Church, a lesbian steam fitter and an AIDS project community coordinator from the Santa Clara County Health Depart-

"We were concerned that the week be as credible as possible, and it was geared with that in mind," O'Connell said.

Commencing from a moral angle, a panel today will tackle the question, "Is gay good?

Calling the religious question the "biggest stumbling block for society as a whole."
O'Connell said the panel will discuss the right of gays and lesbians to have human dignity.

Drawn to encompass a wide variety of faiths, a bible scholar, a pastor, a member of the Sha'ar Zahav congregation and a dignitary of the Roman Catholic Church are scheduled to Britt, who replaced Castro District Supervisor Harvey Milk, brings a different perspective to the week. A former husband and minister, Britt is a nationally recognized champion for the rights of women and senior citizens, as well as gays, O'Connell said.

Closing out the week, Thursday's panel discussion will be an attempt to put the AIDS controversy into perspective, she said.

With appearances by health officials O'Connell said she hopes the exchange will bring about a more compassionate view of the victims of AIDS.

Citing the appearance of Proposition 64, the LaRouche initiative, on this year's ballot and the recent Supreme Court decision upholding anti-sodomy laws, O'Connell said "times are not exactly good for the civil rights of gays

Fencing club shows thrill of the sword

By Marj Martin

No, they weren't filming "Robin Hood" or an Erol Flynn movie, but the play was the thing Thursday for SJSU's fencing club.

High visibility and high hopes were the theme as SJSU Fencing Club members put on a three-hour fencing demonstration in the art quad.

White fencing jackets and masks contrasted with the gym shorts and leotards worn by the demonstrators.

Swordsmen lunged and parried, occasionally whooping "touche" the referee signaled a touch - a visual surprise in an otherwise typical campus setting.

Although the club was trying to attract new members, their underlying motive was to attract potential fencers to the SJSU fencing program, Sam Slaughter, president of the SJSU

The university has consistently sent fencers to the Olympics, but cut its varsity fencing funds three years ago, said Peter Burchard, a Bay Area fencing coach and SJSU fencing in-

According to the university's Sports Information Office, in 1984, the last year of SJSU's intercollegiate fencing program, Peter Schifrin and Greg Massialas represented the university at the Los Angeles Olympics.

SJSU's fencing team held the National Intercollegiate Championship for five years in a row, 1975 through White fencing jackets and masks contrasted with the demonstrators' gym shorts and leotards.

This year, Burchard is only able to conduct three classes for beginners.

He said that there is no way more Olympians can be trained at SJSU until more classes are provided and a new varsity team funded.

The problem, according to Burchard, is that funds for athletics are allocated according to the number of stuparticipating in a sports

There are only 90 students in the entire fencing program, while aero-bics, one of the most heavily funded programs, has more than 60 students per class, Burchard said.

"There is a new department head," Burchard said, "so maybe we can get our requests considered." One of the reasons there are so few fencing students is that no intermediate and advanced classes are offered, he said.

Another reason is that some other of the administration, according to Burchard.

Program board reports $3,000 loss

The first 12 events this semester cost the Associated Students Program Board approximately $3,212, according to its monthly report.

The program board spent approximately $7,531 for shows in August and September. Income from the events is estimated at $4,319.

Five events were completely sponsored by the program board free of charge.

Two concerts resulted in deficits for the program board. The Sept. 19 concert lost $1,291 and the Sept. 27 show lost $2,688.

"We made mistakes on the concerts," said Ted Gehrke, program board adviser. "This is a learning experience and I don't think the losses are that hor-

"We didn't lose money," said Verda Alexander, program board director. "We did a lot of shows

The five free events included the ongoing Humble Artist Lecture Series, co-sponsored by the Art Department. Another free event was the performance of Maiko, a drum and poetry ensemble, which attracted an audience of 300, according to the

The Wednesday Night Cinema showing of "Pretty in Pink" made $927, the month's biggest profit-maker. The Sept. 10 movie was also the peri-

Out of the five films presented, the Aug. 27 showing of "Seven Samurai" and "Yojimbo" was the only Wednesday Night Cinema event which failed to turn a profit

Gehrke said the program board's expenditures include expenses for security, hospitality, transportation, salaries for student workers and artists' fees.

The members of the program board are "out in the real world," Gehrke said. "They are dealing with agents, managers and artists. They don't get cut any slack because they are student volunteers. It's very difficult.

Apple promotion to inform students

Kevin Warner is giving away free hats to people who spend five minutes in front of a computer screen.

Warner, manager of the electronics and computer department at the Spartan Bookstore, said people who come in for a five-minute computer demonstration receive a free bike racing cap with the "bitten" Apple Computer and SJSU logos.

The bookstore is ending a monthlong computer promotion that introduces students, faculty and staff to the capabilities of the Apple Macintosh

The October promotion also includes a chance to win a 12-speed bicycle and is similar to a contest last semester that offered a $500 prize. Warner said a drawing for the bike will take place next Monday. Anyone who attends a demonstration is automatically entered into the drawing, he said.

Warner said the promotion is really just a way to make the campus aware of the usefulness of any computer, but the Macintosh in particular.

"The quick demonstration shows the students what a Macintosh can do," he said. He added that the price of the system, $1,399, gives students who want to use a computer for their after the cap supply runs out.

Adea Fong, a student employee in the computer department, said the price tag for the Macintosh includes the monitor, keyboard and "mouse The mouse is a plastic controller with rollers on the bottom, that when moved along a board next to the monitor, will move an arrow to focus on a specific part of the screen.

The Macintosh printer costs an extra $469.

Fong said people who have tried the demonstration have found the Macintosh fun.

"First-time users find it easy," she said. "The Macintosh is almost like a toy. Learning one program makes it easy to learn the others.''

The five-minute demonstration carries on the bicycle theme, with graphic depictions of a racer traveling across the screen. In addition, it explains the word-processing capabilities of the system with a description of bicycle parts.

At the end of the demonstration, the user types in his name, address, phone number and school and the printer produces an entry form for the bike contest. Warner said the bookstore only has about 40 hats left, but the contest for the bike is open for 1986 fees of $1.28 per student, which would allow the university to receive the $27,500, Gunter said.

CSU ups child-care funding pending Duke's signature

An appeal process included in the agreement with the chancellor's office would allow campuses that fall outside of financial contribution to be considered for funding also, Johnson said.

Some campuses, such as San Diego State, donate to their individual child-care programs through volunteer services and land donations, and CSSA representatives agree that these contributions should be taken into consideration when determining the amount awarded, Emonds said.

Child care is presently an Associated Students program that CSSA would like to see become a university student service. Emond said.

student service, Emond said.

If it were a student service, child care would be budgeted by the CSU general fund, Emond said.

"Associated Students shouldn't have to keep shelling out money for what should be a student service," he CSSA recommended that the board consider hiring certified child-care staff coordinated through the student services office at each campus for an additional charge of $2 per enrolled student, Emond said.

This would have been the first step in connecting children's centers to the university, he said.

However, after meetings between the Executive Committee and members of the chancellor's office in September, CSSA was informed that the student service concept and $2 charge could not be negotiated. Emond said.

As of Oct. 1, the CSU and CSSA compromised with the sliding-scale proposal for funding, he said.

"It's going to be tough just getting base-line funding for the CSU total budget" because this is the first year the full impact of Proposition 13 will be felt, Johnson said.

If Deukmejian doesn't approve the program change proposal in January when the budget is up for signature, it will be pursued in the Legislature in March, she said.

Honig makes campus stop, promotes careers in teaching

"We are just now getting to the point of payoff," Honig said. "We have more funds devoted to schools...for teachers, textbooks, facilities."

If campus recruitment efforts fail, the state will be faced with an emergency situation, Honig said.

Efforts to attract minority groups to the teaching profession are also under way by focusing on minority qualifications across-the-board, he

Gov. George Deukmejian has granted additional funds to the CSU system to encourage minority recruitment and efforts are being made to interest these students in areas beside engineering and math, Honig said.

The new CSU admission requirements are one step in preparing minority students adequately to enter universities so they can be recruited to the teaching profession, he said. 'We are just now getting to the point of payoff. We have more funds devoted to schools . . . for teachers, textbooks, facilities.'

Minority recruitment is especially necessary for California because of its diverse population and the number of people who speak little English or speak it as a second language, Honig said

Teacher recruitment must be a coordinated attack between faculty, the School of Education and students to produce the caliber of educators needed to improve California education as a whole, he said.

Suicides in L.A. jails decreasing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thirtyeight inmates have killed themselves in Los Angeles County jails since 1975 — and while the number of suicides has dropped, authorities said the death rate is still too high.

All of the inmate suicides have been by hanging. Thirty-one of them were in the men's Central Jail. Seven were at other county facilities.

Although the suicide rate outside of jail is eight times that of the jail system rate, authorities aren't satisfied.

"We're proud of our record of suicides, which is much lower than in the general population," said Chief James W. Painter, head of the Sheriff's Department custody division. "But even one suicide is too many so we are concerned."

Of the 200,000 inmates who

Of the 200,000 inmates who passed through county jails last year, only one killed himself while in custody, Painter said. He credits the drop in jailhouse suicides to an expanded staff of mental health professionals, increased deputy training and new inmate screening procedures.

Overcrowding and mental illness in about one-third of the jail population contribute to the suicide problem, Painter said. Nearly 8,000 of the system's 20,000 inmates are squeezed into the downtown Central Jail, which was built to accommodate about 5,000 immates.

Many of the improvements have been made since 25-year-old inmate Sergio Alvarez hung himself in January 1984 while in solitary confinement. It was the second suicide attempt in two weeks for Alvarez, who spent two months in custody waiting for his burglary trial to begin.

Alvarez's first attempt wasn't judged serious by a jail psychiatrist, and he was returned to the Central Jail's general population. He killed himself after spending 11 days in solitary confinement for his participation in a jailhouse fight.

Alvarez's mother, Josefina Cabrales, has filed a civil rights lawsuit alleging her son's death was the result of deliberate indifference by authorities to his psychiatric needs.

The family seeks $10 million in general and punitive damages, alleging cruel and unusual punishment caused Alvarez's death.

Their lawsuit alleges the county failed to provide adequate mental evaluation and treatment for inmates, even those like Alvarez who clearly showed signs of increasing emotional distress. Only two jail psychiatrists were available to handle 16,000 cases a month when Alvarez died.

• Jan. 23, 1986 — Two of Courtney's brothers, David and Hugh Courtney, while searching for their sister, saved the lives of two youths who were lying helpless in a 200-foot gulch. They also planned to distribute 1,000 fliers and offered a $25,000 reward for information leading to her whereabouts.

Commememorative vigil scheduled

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A group of people with AIDS and related conditions are set to celebrate the one-year anniversary of their vigil outside the old Federal Building.

The group will hold a candlelight march from the Castro district and a rally at the vigil site today.

The vigil has prevailed despite sickness, street assaults and last winter's heavy rains.

"My only regret is that Jay isn't here to see this day," said Evan Durant, 21. Jay Durant was a fellow vigil-keeper who died of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in February at the age of 38. Both men were part of the small group that demonstrated on Oct. 27, 1985, outside the building that houses the federal Health and Human Services Department.

Their message was that the federal government was doing too little, too slowly, for too few.
