A crowd of approximately 3,500 gathered on the lawn by Tower Hall Sunday to enjoy SJSU's largest free event, the Eighth Annual Fountain Blues Festival.

Blues fans from around the Bay began arriving at 11:30 a.m. for the all-day concert that featured guitarist Buddy Guy and Little John Chrisley on harmonica as well as local blues bands.

Guy, who headlined the concert, brought the crowd to its feet for the show's last set, which included blues standards "Sweet Home Chicago" and "That's the Blues."

Chrisley, already a well-known harmonica player at 18, enjoyed a reunion onstage with Guy.

"The first time I ever played was with Buddy," Chrisley said. "I was about 12, and scared to death for the first three bars, but then it just fell into place."

Samuel Kane, son of performer Beau Kane, had the chance to get his own auspicious start as a blues musician Sunday.

"I was pretty nervous," said Kane, 10, who joined his father's Blues Train on tenor saxophone. "But I'd like to come back again and play with my dad."

Along with Guy, Chrisley and Kane, the bill included the Bobby Murray Band, Lady Bianca, Vivien Irvine and local band Andy Just and the Shapes.

The performers said the festival is important for the local music scene in general and the blues in particular.

"This keeps the blues alive, and that's important," Chrisley said. "There is a real history to this music. It started with the slaves. If it wasn't for the blues, there wouldn't be rock 'n' roll."

"The blues is a big part of black heritage," Lady Bianca said. "It's a big part of the history of the U.S. It's culture. It's history. It's identity."

Diana "Mother" Tucker, an SJSU senior majoring in music, was one of several students who performed.

"This is a blues-oriented crowd. Everybody's into it. You don't have to sell it to them. They're just here to drink beer, get sunburned and have a good time."

Organizers praised the crowd of bikers, students and other music fans for their cleanliness and consideration.

"The people were perfect," said Ted Gerhke, who has helped manage the festival since it began. "They cleaned up everything, and I didn't see any problems."

Pool flunks health check

By Jim Hart
Daily staff writer

Once again the scheduled opening of the swimming pool didn't happen.

The Aquatics Center was expected to open Monday but did not pass the required health inspection.

"The chlorine system needs to be corrected," said Steve Brook, environmental health specialist.

Brook said he spent four hours inspecting the facility pointing out "major concerns." He also said the inspection took much more time than he expected.

"I'm going to have to come back (today)," Brook said.

According to Brook, the room that stores the chlorine needs "minor reconstruction" that will have to be done by the contractor.

All morning, students dropped by the Aquatics Center with towels draped over their shoulders, expecting to take a dive into the pool. Instead they were turned away at the gate with no promise of when the pool would open.

"At least 50 people have come by," said Betty Weiss, the entrance attendant, early Monday afternoon.

Aquatics Center Manager Caryn Morley said she did not know exactly when the pool would open.

"It depends on how fast the work gets done. We have to create a safe environment," Morley said.

Brook said that he anticipates it will possibly take until Wednesday for the corrections to take place before the pool can open.

The largest problem, Brook said, is the improper ventilation of the room that stores the one-ton cylinders of chlorine, a very hazardous gas.

"In the event of a leak the gas wouldn't dissipate into the atmosphere the way it should," Brook said.

If the prevailing winds were right, the gas "cloud" could pose a danger for students walking near the residence halls.

Morley said that no one is responsible for the delay in the pool opening.

"There's no one to blame, these things just happen," Morley said.

Student Union Director Ron Barrett said that he did not know about the inadequate ventilation of the chlorine.

"This is a frustrating thing. We were handed over the pool in April completed," Barrett said.

Control of the pool was turned over to the university by the California State University Chancellor's Office in April under the assumption that it was completed properly.

Barrett said he hopes the problems will be solved and the pool would open this week.

Brook said there are "communication problems" that prevent the facility from being completed efficiently. He claims that the university did not contact him within an adequate amount of time, calling him just recently for an inspection.

AIDS conference reveals statistics, information

By Kara Myers
Daily staff writer

Infection rates of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in heterosexuals appear to be lower than in other groups but may increase in the future, according to Nancy Padian, a consulting epidemiologist for the state.

Padian was one of the speakers at an AIDS symposium sponsored by SJSU's biology department and the Santa Clara County Health Department on Saturday.

She said these figures could actually be higher, though, because the sampling methods used for gathering data are not statistically valid.

"We think the rates (of heterosexual infection) are pretty low, but in fact we don't really know," Padian said.

She said last month there were more than 58,000 reported cases of AIDS and 2.3 percent of those were heterosexuals, 78 percent of which were female.

The Centers for Disease Control define AIDS as deficiency of the immune system which fights off diseases. This definition has recently been updated to include people who test positive for the antibodies to Human Immunodeficiency Virus-1.

This information was gathered from "convenient" data from health facilities that treat and report AIDS patients, Padian said. But this is not a representative sample of the whole population, she added.

In order to get better statistical data, reliable probability studies need to be conducted in which a wide variety of the general population is sampled, she said.

Padian said the reliability of the data is further complicated by variability of infection rates because there is no association between the number of sexual partners and the rate of

University president to speak

By Hazel Whitman

A definition of education will be offered Wednesday to students by the president of the oldest black institution in the country, Lincoln University.

President Niara Sudarkasa is an internationally known and widely published anthropologist, according to Academic Senator Wiggys Sivertsen.

This week's visit by Sudarkasa will include a speech in the Student Union Loma Prieta Room at 12:30 titled, "Education for Everyone: What is Education?"

Sivertsen is pleased with Sudarkasa's visit to campus.

Cactus Cafe, Asian Express chosen for new food areas

By Katarina Jonholt
Daily staff writer

Cactus Cafe and Asian Express will be the names of Spartan Shops' new Mexican and Oriental food sections.

The sections will be added when the Student Union cafeteria undergoes remodeling this summer.

The project is expected to cost $400,000.

The two names were chosen from among 466 staff and student entries to the food service's naming contest.

Susan Heffelfinger, who submitted the winning proposal for the Oriental section, and Alex E. Abero, who named the Mexican place, will each receive $150. The runners-up will each receive $75. Ed Zant, Spartan Shops general manager, will present the checks today.

The contest, held in April, was judged by a five-member panel, consisting of Zant; Charles Black, food service manager; Mary Oesterle, assistant manager; Judy Herman, manager of the Student Union; and Marlyn Harwood, graphics and design consultant for Spartan Shops.

"We picked Asian Express because it doesn't just mean Chinese or Japanese food," Black said. "It could be any (food) from the Asian continent."

Both winners were students, and the two runners-up were employees of the food service. Cris Cordova, who suggested Bamboo Shoots, works in the main cafeteria. Jocelyn Manuel, who proposed Baja Express, works in the University Room.

The Student Union cafeteria will be closed during the summer while the new food sections are built. The grill, the deli, the Salad Station and the seating area will be remodeled.

The area will be decorated in art-deco style with black and white-checkered floors.

The project, which will leave the cafeteria "unrecognizable," will be financed by Spartan Shops, Black said.

Spartan Shops is a "not-for-profit corporation," Black said. The money the company clears each year has to be channeled back into the university. This year, the money will be used for the remodeling.

Participants in the contest showed "a lot of ingenuity and creativity," Black said, "although there were some pretty basic names, like Union Cafe."

All entries were labeled with the date and time they were turned in, Black said. This way, if more than one person had the same idea, whoever submitted it first would get the credit. The most popular name was Orient

Former Spartans sign pro contracts

The National Football League draft may have been an initial disappointment for many SJSU football players, but the professional ranks did not close the book on 13 prospective careers.

Of those Spartans from the 1987 PCAA championship team, six more are joining the pro ranks.

Running back Kenny Jackson, who compiled a total of 1,127 receiving yards and 16 touchdowns with SJSU last season, signed a contract with the San Diego Chargers.

Guy Liggins, last season's top wide receiver, took his 10-touchdown, 1,245-yard 1987 season to the San Francisco 49er camp.

Joining Liggins on the 49ers' offensive roster will be tackle Mike Bernard and center Don Teague.

Putting on their defensive skills for the San Francisco coaches will be rover Greg Cox, who had 72 tackles last year, and cornerback Phil Frisch, who added 50 tackles in '87.

Linebacker Yepi Pauu took his talent and small size (6 feet, 220 pounds) to the Los Angeles Cobras of the Arena Football League and has applied himself as both a running back and linebacker. In fact, Pauu was the leading rusher in Arena football after the first week with 37 yards.

Six other former Spartans have also signed contracts with professional teams.

Picked up by professional teams from the 1986 California Bowl championship team are offensive linemen David Diaz-Infante, who joins the Los Angeles Rams, and John Aimonetti, who will be residing in British Columbia and play Canadian football for the B.C. Lions.

Linebacker Sam Kennedy will also be joining his past teammates at the 49er camp.

San Francisco rounded out their acquisition of former Spartans by signing wide receivers Greg Eskridge and Eric Richardson, who played for the Buffalo Bills from 1984-86.

The only players to be drafted by an NFL club were running back James Saxon, by the Kansas City Chiefs, and quarterback Mike Perez, by the New York Giants.

SJSU closes season with two wins

By Ron Haynes
Daily staff writer

SJSU's baseball team closed the 1988 season on a winning note Sunday as it upset seventh-ranked Cal-State Fullerton, 5-4 and 11-2, in a double-header at Municipal Stadium.

The victories did a number of positive things for the Spartans according to Coach Sam Piraro. He termed the wins as "two gratifying games."

"It got us fourth place in the conference and guaranteed us a winning (overall) record," Piraro said. "It also makes us the first (SJSU) team in 10 years to have back-to-back winning seasons."

The Spartans overall record ends at 31-30 and a Pacific Coast Athletic Association mark of 9-11.

In the first game, SJSU scored a run in the fourth inning and four in the fifth to overtake Fullerton. The Titans had jumped to a 4-0 lead in the fourth.

In the fifth inning, with one out and the score tied 4-4, Jon Rattazzi grounded out to second base while Andy Coan scored from third with the eventual winning run. Coan went 4 for 8 and scored four runs for the two games.

In the eighth, right hander Eric Cordua recorded his second save of the season during a critical situation that could have cost SJSU the game.

After starting pitcher Donnie Rea

SPORTS

(5-3) walked the first batter, Piraro called in Cordua who then walked another batter. After a sacrifice bunt moved the runners over, he intentionally walked the next batter to load the bases. Cordua got center fielder Bobby Jones to ground out into a double play to kill the rally.

Fullerton's sophomore standout pitcher Mark Beck took the loss, but he is one to be reckoned with for another two years in the PCAA. Last year, Beck pitched for the United States' Pan-American team and is a top major league prospect.

The Titans managed to get a total of nine hits throughout the game, but after the fourth inning their bats were silenced and left four runners stranded. The Spartans got two hits in the sixth but couldn't score either.

In the second game, SJSU got together and exploded for 11 runs on 13 hits to go along with Dan Archibald's fine outing.

Archibald, named PCAA Pitcher of the Week for his performance this past week, allowed only one earned run, struck out nine batters and walked none to lead the Spartans to the second-game win. It was the third such award for the senior right hander this season. This is quite an accomplishment since only eight such awards are given during the season.

"Dan has been our outstanding pitcher all year long and was a real workhorse for us," Piraro said.

"Archibald was an outstanding pitcher for us and proved to be one of the outstanding pitchers on the West Coast," Piraro said of Archibald who finished with a 10-8 record and a 3.62 ERA.

The Spartans scored two runs in the first inning and another in the second and fifth. They led 4-2 at the end of the fifth inning. A home run in the sixth by Rattazzi, who scored three runs in the game, highlighted an inning where six runs were scored.

Piraro was pleased with the team's progress this season, but felt there was about 10 games that his team should have won. He is optimistic about next year's team and is looking forward to an even better season.

Hassey likes being an 'A'

OAKLAND (AP) — Catcher Ron Hassey, who wears an Oakland Athletics uniform these days, says he has no regrets about not finishing his career with the Cleveland Indians.

Hassey, 35, was drafted by Cleveland in 1976 and saw his first action in the majors in 1978. He stayed until June 13, 1984 when he was traded to the Chicago Cubs.

Now Hassey is on a first-place ballclub in the winter of his career and is enjoying himself. He's hitting .267 with three home runs and 14 runs batted in for the Athletics.

"It was time for me to get a new look, and I think the Indians were moving in a different direction," Hassey said. "I enjoyed my time in Cleveland. The thing is we were just never able to put a winner together."

"I like the Indians now. I think a lot of the credit has to go to Phil Seghi (the Indians' late general manager). This is really Phil's team."

Hassey has moved a lot since he left Cleveland. After finishing the 1984 season with the Cubs, he went to the New York Yankees.

In December 1985, the Yankees shipped him to the White Sox, and less than two months later, the White Sox sent him back to the Yankees.

He hit .298 in 64 games in New York that year before they did it to him again. On July 30, Hassey was sent back to the White Sox.

"I liked New York," Hassey said. "I enjoyed playing there. I just don't think they knew what they were doing a lot of the time."

At the end of the 1987 season, Hassey had reached a crossroad. Knee and shoulder surgery had limited him to 145 at-bats.

when the pool was filled with water," Brook said.
Brook said communicating with Morley about specific problems in construction are difficult and that speaking directly to the contractor would be more efficient.

"There are construction parts (of the inspection) she can't deal with," Brook said.
Apparently, contractors will be on site at the facility this morning to continue the inspection.

Another problem that exists is that the facility is not fully "constructed in accordance with the plans," Brook said.
There are several people who have known about problems with the facility a month ahead of time, Brook said.
A history of the scheduled completion dates follows:
August 1987: Delayed because of changes in structure design of Aquatic Center buildings.

October 1987: Delayed because of further changes in building design.
May 2, 1988: Delayed because of incomplete landscaping and rainy weather.
May 9, 1988: Delayed because of failure to meet health department requirements.

(Sudarkasa) is a recognized authority on the roles of African women and Afro-American family structure," Sivertsen states in a letter to members of the SJSU community.
Sivertsen continues, "She has conducted extensive research in Nigeria, Ghana and the Republic of Benin."

Sudarkasa is the first woman to lead Lincoln University, formerly an all-male college. She also served as the associate vice president for academic affairs at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. At this institution, Sudarkasa was the first black woman to receive tenure and the first to be promoted to full professor in arts and sciences.
Student Senator Scott Box said he plans on attending the noon-time presentation.

"It will be significant and very interesting to be able to share some of the knowledge that she has to offer. It would also have historical meaning for me," Box said.
"It seems appropriate that, as SJSU struggles with its desire to provide an atmosphere of education for all ethnic and racial groups, we celebrate the end of this year with such a distinguished visitor," Sivertsen said.
Sudarkasa's professional profile

Other achievements of on Sudarkasa's list of accomplishments include serving on several national boards, and receiving numerous fellowships, grants and awards.
"Her current assignments include the board of directors of a national study of immigrants, sponsored by the Ford Foundation, and the board of the Pennsylvania Economic Development Partnership, to which she was appointed by Governor Robert Casey," the document states.

Navy pursues AIDS court marshal

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Navy's insistence on proceeding with the court-martial trial of a sailor on charges of AIDS-related assault reflects their bias against people afflicted with the disease, say the officer's family and attorney.
"They want to get rid of this guy," said Joyce Corrington, the older sister of Petty Officer 2nd Class John F. Crawford. "He's HIV positive and they don't want him in the Navy any more."
Crawford, 27, faces a trial starting today at the Treasure Island naval base in San Francisco Bay.
The Navy contends Crawford had unprotected sex with his girlfriend one month after testing positive for AIDS antibodies to the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, but failed to warn her of his condition.
Crawford counters that he's innocent of the charges, insisting that he wore a condom during sex and that the woman knew he was HIV positive.
If convicted, the Magnolia, Ark., native could be stripped of rank and privileges, dishonorably discharged and sentenced to as many as 10 years in the brig.
He also says he and the woman, who was separated, had known each other for months and had talked about getting married. After they broke up in April 1987, she decided to file charges, he says.

The girlfriend has been advised by the Navy not to talk about the case, and Navy personnel are prohibited by military policy from discussing it.
Lt. Cmdr. George Farrar, a Navy spokesman at Treasure Island, said the case is the first of its kind for the Navy. A separate AIDS-related assault case involving an Army private is scheduled for trial beginning on Wednesday in Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

Unlike other AIDS-related cases sent to trial in the military, Crawford's trial has no outside eyewitness, no hard evidence and no charges of homosexual activity.

Actor fights drug addiction, manager says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Alan Rich, who played Nicolas on "Eight is Enough" and whose antics captivated family TV audiences in the 1970s, is addicted to cocaine and is trying to kick the habit, his manager says.
The 19-year-old actor is at the Betty Ford Center in Rancho Mirage and should be released early next month, said his manager Jeff Ballard, adding Rich had checked into other drug rehabilitation centers twice in the past 12 months.
Rich moved out of his parent's San Fernando Valley home last year and rented his own apartment, where he became involved with an unsavory element of drug users, Ballard said Monday.
Rich, who his manager said is "determined to straighten out his life," plans to move back in with his parents when he leaves the Betty Ford Center.

fights or problems with drugs, and allowed adults to drink, although alcohol is usually prohibited on the SJSU campus everywhere but in the Pub.
"I've seen no fights or problems with marijuana," said Sergeant Ed Anderson. "I might have sniffed it once, but it may have been my imagination. It was a real good crowd."
One man, whom police did not identify, was reportedly knocked unconscious when a friend tackled him. The man was taken to a hospital in an ambulance, but paramedics said that it was just a precaution.
The fountain, for which the festival is named, was scheduled to flow Sunday after being shut off for two years. But student organizers of the event say they were told they would be charged for the fountain's use.
"We told them to forget it," said Verda Alexander, director of the Associated Students Program Board. "Here they are asking the seniors for money (to redesign the fountain), and they can't even turn on the fountain for this one day," she said.
Dan Buerger, executive assistant to the President Gail Fullerton, said Monday the SJSU administration was not contacted in time to turn on the fountain.

"We never even got any indication that they wanted it on until it was too late. We received a lot of phone calls about it Friday, but by then we couldn't do anything about it."
Buerger said a fee would have been charged to pay overtime wages for a facilities worker to fill, supervise and drain the fountain.
Many of the spectators were not students. Members of the crowd said they enjoyed spending Mother's Day listening to music in the sun.
"It's great! I'm really having fun. I enjoy the blues, and I want my kids to appreciate music, also," said Debbie Darcy, one of many mothers who brought their children to the concert.
"We named our daughter Miracle after the Grateful Dead song," said Sue "Red" Handley. "I went into labor at a Dead concert, so she was born into a musical scene."
"This is the first time I've ever been on campus," said Jim Hallmark, a local merchant. "I didn't think they still had things like this. It's just like the '60s."
Many said SJSU should have more events like the Blues Festival.
"They should do it every weekend," said Lorna Packard, a senior majoring in marketing.

Black said he doesn't think it was the prize money that enticed people to "crank out" so many names.

Some more off-the-wall suggestions were "C. Ling's Limit," and "Rickshaw Rick's" for the Oriental section. One student proposed, "Sake to Me."

"We don't have anyone named Rick working here... and we don't have anything to do with alcohol so we just laughed and went on to the next one," Black said.

infection.
"Variability makes the situation more complex and harder to predict," Padian said.
AIDS is mainly a heterosexual disease in Africa as opposed to the United States, where it is mainly a homosexual disease, Padian said. She suggested that the virus has been around longer in Africa and has had time to filter into other communities, and given enough time, the same thing will happen here.

Other possibilities Padian offered for the discrepancy are different viral strains, different sexual practices and other factors.
"The good news is that (AIDS) is not yet a heterosexual epidemic" in the United States, she said. "There's still time to do something about it before it becomes one."
Education, medical advances and accurate probability studies are essential to preventing AIDS from becoming a full-blown epidemic, Padian said.
