Students waded through water spilling out onto the sidewalk near Clark Library during routine pumping. Drilling caused a groundwater surge in the elevator shaft before plumbers could replace the pump. The unexpected water nearly flooded the building's basement.

Water erupts in Clark Library

By Rob Lyon
Daily staff writer

Water erupted from an elevator shaft in Clark Library Friday morning, threatening to flood the building's basement.

SJSU plumber John Hawk and several other plumbers from Facilities, Development and Operations (FDO), pumped the water out of the shaft, thus preventing any serious damage.

"Initially there was the threat of flooding," Hawk said. "But once we got the (temporary) pumps in, everything was fine."

The incident occurred when Chris Thomas, a concrete core driller from Lombardo Diamond Core Drilling, was boring a 12-inch hole into the bottom of the shaft so a water pump could be installed.

A sump pump was supposed to be installed to prevent groundwater flooding, which has caused problems in the library before, Hawk said.

Groundwater is water 20 to 25 feet below the ground's surface.

While Thomas was drilling, excess water was "coming out the sides of the drill," Thomas said.

"I had to abandon my equipment because it was coming out so fast," he said.

Thomas said he left his drill in the hole because he feared the water eruption would have been worse had he removed it.

"I think it would have shot about three to four feet into the air," Thomas said. "That's how much pressure there was."

The eruption was due to an unexpected amount of groundwater that escaped when the core of the shaft was drilled, Hawk said. Officials originally were unsure of the cause, but believed a water pipe may have ruptured.

"It just came up through the hole," Hawk said. "There wasn't anything broken."

Installation of the sump pump, which was completed late Friday afternoon, was designed to combat water seepage accumulated in the elevator shaft, a problem that has been occurring "off and on," Hawk said.

"All I know is that they've had water problems over there before," Hawk said. "I don't know anything more than that."

Jerry Warmley, a maintenance mechanic for FDO, alerted the plumbing crews.

"I heard somebody yelling 'Help! Help! Emergency!'" Warmley said. "But my main concern was getting him (Thomas) out of the shaft because the surge of water was at a heavy volume."

Warmley also alerted electricians because of electrical wiring in the Foreign languages, culture focus of week

By Andy Nystrom
Daily staff writer

SJSU will be transformed into a land of many nations starting today.

In conjunction with Governor George Deukmejian's proclamation dedicating this week to foreign languages, the Foreign Languages Department organized a full week's schedule of activities that include information on foreign study and travel, career opportunities and a film festival.

However, the main focus of the week is to enhance awareness of the importance of foreign languages in the community.

"There are a lot of job opportunities in San Jose for students who speak a foreign language," said Carmen Sigler, professor of Spanish. "Having this special language ability can definitely make one more successful after graduating."

This topic will be addressed at a panel presentation entitled "Job and Career Opportunities for Foreign Language Graduates." The panel will meet in the Almaden Room of the Student Union tomorrow from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The panel consists of recent college graduates and prospective employers who will discuss the usefulness of foreign language study to government service and teaching careers.

Peter Collins, an SJSU French professor, said another main topic on this week's agenda is foreign study. Language instructors will discuss "Study and Travel Abroad" in the Almaden Room today from noon to 3:30 p.m.

A.S. settles vice chairperson issue; Kessler takes position from Walters

By Mary R. Callahan
Daily staff writer

Jennifer Jo Kessler was reconfirmed as vice chairperson for the Associated Students Board of Directors Wednesday.

Kessler, director of students rights and responsibilities and the Responsible Alliance Party's presidential nominee, was unanimously elected to the post Feb. 15.

But Jim Walters, who missed the Feb. 15 board meeting, later objected to the decision.

Walters, director of academic affairs and an independent vice presidential candidate, was elected vice chairperson at the Sept. 28 board meeting.

He was to hold the post for one year, according to the minutes from that meeting.

However, board members say Walters' appointment was intended to last only one semester.

"It's always been a semester before," said Patricia Phillips, A.S.

vice president.

A.S. President Terry McCarthy said the minutes should be amended to reflect the board's intention.

Wednesday, they were. The board needed to clarify the issue once and for all, Phillips said that didn't attend meetings and appointed a vice chair that has never missed a meeting, never left early from a meeting, never came late to a meeting and never left early to avoid voting," Kessler said Thursday. "It's an issue of defining a necessity election because he had not been formally removed from office. There was no vacancy for her to fill, he said.

The stated length of Walters' term was a moot point, because Robert's Rules of Order declare that the second motion supercedes the first, McCarthy said last week.

In other words, Kessler's election was immediately official regardless of Walters' tenure, he said.

Walters resigned from the position Wednesday but voted against amending the minutes.

"I had to object," he said after the meeting.

Walters initially contended that the Kessler's appointment was a political maneuver instigated by the REAL-dominated A.S. board.

REAL members wanted to make Kessler an obvious choice for executive office, he said.

Party members said the appointment was motivated by necessity, not politics.

'It's an issue of defining a necessity and solving the problem.'

— Jennifer Jo Kessler,
new A.S. vice chairperson in an interview.

The vice chairperson, whose primary responsibility is conducting board meetings in the absence of the vice president, is "someone I really need to trust in and rely on," she said.

"The A.S. took out a vice chair and solving the problem."

McCarthy and Leigh Kirmsse, director of California state affairs, have said in past interviews that Walters' meeting attendance was poor.

Walters admitted last week that he often leaves meetings early.

However, he opposed Kessler's

Officer 'checks out' man in library

By Daniel Vasquez
Daily staff writer

A man and his music. A woman and her job. In most instances both could coexist, but not this time.

University police "checked out" a non-student listening to music at Clark Library after a library employee reported a man causing a disturbance Thursday night.

But when UPD arrived, they found no such problem.

"We received a call about a man being obnoxious in the library and responded," Officer Amado Ramirez said.

When police confronted the man who was using library facilities on the second floor, he was cooperative, Ramirez said.

Even though the officer detected alcohol on the man's breath, he did not seem to pose any threat, Ramirez said.

In fact, the man offered to leave the premises.

Police did not ask the man to identify himself.

Some students were bewildered by the fact that police were involved at all.

"I don't see what the problem was," one student who witnessed the incident said.

"I was there the whole time and I didn't see him bothering anybody," said the student, who asked not to be identified.

The man was listening to albums with headphones when police approached him, according to the student.

"He was listening to some pretty high-brow stuff," the student said.

The music the student referred to was opera recordings by George London of the "Bolshoi Theatre Production of Mussorgsky's Boris

Local judge kicks off Women's Week

By Elena M. Dunivan
Daily staff writer

Human rights advocate LaDoris Cordell will help launch Women's Week festivities at SJSU.

Cordell, a Santa Clara County Superior Court judge, will speak today at noon in the Student Union Ballroom on issues concerning women.

The week acknowledges National Women's History Month, and SJSU is sponsoring a series of events coordinated by the Women's Resource Center.

"Our goal (in planning women's week) was to present a program addressing women's issues not otherwise mentioned on campus," said Marge Kintscher, of the Women's Resource Center. The events will show from a woman's perspective the type of problems women face each day, she said.

Today's events reflect the theme of women in performance. Highlights include a self-esteem workshop in the Costanoan Room at 9:30 a.m., a panel presentation on women in sports in the Almaden room at 10:30 a.m., and Cordell's address followed by Starhawk, a witch and feminist peace activist. A poetry panel will feature SJSU faculty and students in the Almaden Room at 2 p.m.

Tuesday's events will focus on social awareness, and will feature clinical sexologist Deborah Caust and a panel on the future of abortion.

Wednesday is International Women's History Day. Events will feature a presentation called "War is a Woman's Issue." Well-known author and lecturer Lillian Rubin will speak on "Friendship in the Second Half of Life."

Thursday's theme is Women's Health and will feature a discussion

Help quake victims rebuild universities

David Kevoorkian is an American-Armenian student currently attending Rutgers University in New Jersey.

As I begin the new semester, I can't help but wonder how the students in Armenia feel. Most, if not all, of the students have lost loved ones and friends and many have been injured, some permanently. In addition, most of the universities in the area have been completely destroyed. It is estimated that 88 schools were leveled within three minutes on the day the earthquake hit.

None of us could have predicted or prevented the earthquake. However, we can help to rebuild shattered lives. In particular, I am appealing to the students of American universities to help ease the pain of the students in Armenia. I am asking that we as students organize fundraising events for the specific purpose of rebuilding the schools and universities.

The cost to rebuild the shattered region in Armenia is too large for any one nation or people to bear alone.

Since the earthquake, I have been actively involved in relief efforts, organized by the Armenian General Benevolent Union. The AGBU, established in 1906, is the largest Armenian philanthropic organization in the world. The AGBU created the Armenian Aid program. The AGBU Board of Directors has pledged to spend 100 percent of all money raised to aid the victims in Armenia. Donations earmarked for a specific purpose will be used only for that purpose.

The AGBU will attempt to provide speakers for you and your student groups if requested. In addition, the AGBU would be happy to discuss ways in which your student groups can help and provide you information about the fundraising activities of other schools in your area. Posters advertising the plight of the Armenians have been printed and are available upon request. Please feel free to call Alex Markarian, Chairman of the AGBU Armenia Aid Fundraising Committee at his office at (212) 221-5730, for further information.

The cost to rebuild the shattered region in Armenia and the number of lives of those affected are too large for any one nation or people to bear alone. The Armenians need our assistance. As the new semester begins with all the hope surrounding it, let us think about our fellow students in Armenia who now have no schools to attend and who have questions rather than hope surrounding their future. Please help.

Donations should be sent to AGBU Armenia Aid, 585 Saddle River Road, Saddle Brook, New Jersey 07662, (201) 797-7600 or 1-800-282-9877.

Letters to the Editor

Uphold standards

Editor,
We wish to express our disagreement with Spartan Bookstore's decision not to display copies of Salman Rushdie's book, "Satanic Verses." We realize that such action may be prompted in part by concern for the safety of your patrons and employees, but we think that the resulting policy is misguided.

Teaching students to read and think critically and to make their own judgments about important social and economic matters is why universities in general, and SJSU in particular, exist. Protection of intellectual freedom is a primary responsibility of this campus and one that it gladly shoulders. Therefore, actions taken by SJSU agencies to ignore or evade this responsibility are direct attacks on the communal principles that underlie our university. We believe that your present policy constitutes such an attack and we urge you to rescind it.

No offense intended

Editor,
Regarding Ms. Pels's editorial of Feb. 21 concerning the use of the word girl in referring to a female over the age of 18. I agree that a female over the age of 18 does deserve to be called a woman; no argument there. What I hope that Ms. Pels and other feminists take into consideration when stating their viewpoint is that no offense is intended.

I think that the world could use a female hand in the script rewriting, but until that time, society will still use the term girl to connote a woman. Ms. Pels and her kind would surely get further in their cause if they realized the lack of intent in the use of the term girl and simply requested to be referred to as a woman, rather than immediately placing the offender in a defensive posture by implying that he (or she) is either sexist or behind the times.

It is much more difficult to ask for understanding when you offer none in return. If it can be turned into an issue of courtesy, rather than men vs. women, I think you'll be amazed at the progress made. Believe me, if we wanted to offend you, girl would be one of the last words chosen.

On a budget

Editor,
I am sitting here in the Student Union cafeteria seething over a cashier's complaint about disliking students who come in to buy a cup of water (10 cents). She had been counting since she sat at her register and said, "There's been three already this morning!" Incidentally, I was number four.

She mumbled her complaint when I came up to pay my 10 cents. Something about what/why I want to buy a cup of hot water. What nerve. I paid and left to seat myself and write this letter.

Perhaps she is one of the few people at SJSU who never has to try and juggle with a slim budget and sometimes go without. Some of the SJSU students have to think about the many ways to stretch a paycheck till the next payday. Sometimes a cup of warm water with a packet of tea (brought from home) is one way of budgeting. We pay the 10 cents without complaint because the way I see it an establishment has to charge for the use of its equipment and materials (i.e. cup). But what is her beef?

I am appalled at her lack of sympathy for the concerns of others. She has been in the establishment for a while; for the five years I have been here I have seen her. Does she think that those less fortunate than the mainstream should be treated less appropriately than the more fortunate ones? I hope the establishment cares enough to look into certain human relations courses for its employees who share the same apathy for others like me.

Individuality first

Editor,
I would like to express the shock I felt when I read a statement made by Amy Swan in Friday's issue of the Spartan Daily. She commented, "Engineers are lifeless and socially retarded."

One who labels a group of people like canned goods is not only rude, but also shallow. I personally know many engineers who are far from being "socially retarded." A statement like that is as bad as saying, "Blondes are all dumb" or "Businessmen are all ruthless." These stereotyped views of people are ridiculous and bigotted. They should be discarded if we want our society to be a united one.

Isn't it time to start thinking with an open mind, to look at every person as an individual?

REAL worried

Editor,
I read with interest Terry McCarthy's concern over questions from the Spartan Review. This sudden concern begs one important question. What does the Spartan Review know about the REAL party that Terry McCarthy is so worried about? Is he worried because the rumors are true?

Why do self-serving REAL party members feel they can arbitrarily control free speech by shutting off debate that they dislike and encourage debate that furthers their cause? It is a shame McCarthy does not value free speech.

Religious approach

I am a child of God. More specifically, I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In other words, I'm Mormon.

While I've always been God's child, I haven't always been Mormon.

Two years ago, I lost my job. The relationship I was in was going nowhere fast. My pancreas was slowly disintegrating, and with it, my future. It seemed there were no dreams anymore, only despair.

I desperately searched for hope. What I found was Debbie, a friend I had known for some time, but had lost touch with. She lent a sympathetic ear and some encouraging comments. She was so serene, so together, so knowing. I wanted whatever it was she had.

She had the Church. Eighteen months ago, I took the plunge, and was baptized.

My best friend Kathy was skeptical. "You'll have to give up things," she told me. "You'll have to give up drinking."

That's okay. I'm allergic to alcohol, anyway.

"You'll have to stop swearing."

Fine. Men are not attracted to women who resemble drill sergeants.

But she knew me better than that. "And no more sex," she added.

Okay, okay. What is something really worth if there isn't some sacrifice involved?

In spite of all the worldly habits I desired to weed out in my commitment to church, the transition was easy enough. But I still had a lot to learn.

Turning to the church for answers to problems took conscious effort on my part, but the rewards I reaped were remarkable.

About a year ago, my sister Marie and I were having a particularly rough time financially, but she was trying to shore up enough money to pay for her divorce.

She was an even more recent convert to the church than I. We talked about how she could collect several hundred dollars in a hurry, but we weren't coming up with any answers.

We decided to pray and fast. This was something I'd never tried before, and frankly, I didn't see how on earth it was going to work.

The next day, as we were pulling up in front of our apartment complex, Marie opened the passenger door, leaned out and snagged what she thought was a dollar bill.

It was a fifty.

We stood in the gutter, marveling at this unexpected windfall, when I looked down and saw another bill. A fifty.

They were everywhere. By the time we finished scooping them up, we had $250. Exactly the amount she needed after borrowing what she could from family and friends.

When people discover my religious affiliation, their reaction is often surprise.

"You're Mormon? But you seem so normal!"

I'm sure they mean it as a compliment. But perhaps the reason I seem so "normal" is that I have not forgotten where I came from, nor will I lose sight of where I'm going.

Growing up, my religious education was, in a word, meager.

Throughout my adolescent and teenage years, I frequented houses of the Lord in the name of Catholics, Protestants, Lutherans, Seventh-Day Adventists and born-again Christians.

As I entered adulthood, however, my daily life became my religion. With common sense and compassion as my doctrine and my Earthly father as my bishop, I searched for the meaning of life and sought the approval of my Heavenly Father in my own way. But I knew I needed more.

My ideals meshed nicely with Mormon doctrine. Perhaps the principle of which I am most fond is that of free agency, that everyone in or out of the church is individually free to make their own choices.

I've made mine. I know Heavenly Father is pleased. Sallie Mattison is the Assigning Editor/News.

A report on the candidates' road to victory

Candidates unite on need for parking, divide on methods

By Shelby Grad
Daily staff writer

From the half-mile line that forms in front of the Seventh Street Garage every morning to the hefty permit fee, parking has proven to be an issue that can raise a student's ire.

Both Responsible Alliance (REAL) party and independent candidates in the Associated Students elections are united in their belief that more parking is necessary, but pushes around the state.

The California Faculty Association and the CSU have been in mediation since the beginning of the semester to determine whether faculty fees should also rise to student levels.

The REAL-dominated A.S. is vigorous in its view that the faculty should pay the higher fee.

The A.S. officials fear that if instructors don't pay, student parking ceives.

Scott Santandrea, the independent presidential candidate, seconded Kessler's motion to approve the resolution.

Santandrea, who chose to run as an independent after being denied the top spot on the REAL slate, now says this approach to parking is too bellicose.

Instead of opposing the faculty, A.S. representatives should work with the CFA to press CSU trustees into finding ways other than fee increases to pay for garage construction, he said.

"This is another example of an attack-oriented policy," Santandrea said. "We need a common front against paying the increase."

It is not clear yet whether student fees will automatically go up, and it is improper to assume at this point that it will, Santandrea said.

George Pardon of the CSU in Long Beach said it is too early to tell if students will have to pay more for parking, but he said such a scenario is possible if the faculty doesn't pay the increased fees.

A mediator is likely to determine within a week whether the faculty should pay increased fees.

Even if the mediator favors the faculty, the CSU would still have the right to impose the increase.

In many ways, the parking issue represents the broader disunity between the two sides.

disagree on the merits of the course the current A.S. is pursuing.

In many ways, the parking issue represents the broader disunity between the two sides, with independents charging REAL takes too confrontational a position on key issues.

Since last year, students have paid $81 per semester for a parking permit while faculty members pay $33.75.

The higher fees will go to the construction of new parking facilities at California State University campus around the state.

"The students will have to pick up the slack," said Ron Lynch, REAL's vice presidential candidate.

"The money has to come from somewhere," he said.

The A.S. adopted a strongly worded resolution Feb. 8 calling on the faculty to pay the same fee as students. If they refuse to do so, the resolution states, SJSU President Gail Fullerton should reduce the number of spaces instructors re-

Mojo rises at Cactus Club

By Joel Beers

Daily staff writer
You want bleary-eyed introspection?

You want flashy-seined spandex-covered leather-clad sex muffins?

You want neutered mainstream pop?

Then you don't want Mojo Nixon.

Nixon, along with Country Dick Montana of the Beat Farmers, ex-Blasters guitarist Dave Alvin, and a nine-person back-up band, are the Pleasure Barons, a slightly less than super "super group" who performed at San Jose's Cactus Club Tuesday night.

Formed for the sole purpose of touring, the Pleasure Barons haven't released any revelatory albums designed to enshrine themselves in the pantheon of rock immortals. Nor have they produced any self-indulgent, pompous black-and-white concert film footage meant to win friends and influence critics.

Music Review

To call the San Diego-based Nixon irreverent is an understatement. He's a certified lunatic.

Nope, they're just three (plus nine) musicians on the duller edge of mainstream fame and acceptance who decided to get together and draw on nearly every musical style ever devised by mortal man.

Sort of.

For those not yet familiar with the Pleasure Baron mythos, the following introductions will hopefully suffice:

Mojo Nixon — imagine Pee Wee Herman as a musician. Throw in Lenny Bruce's sense of humor, Bruce Springsteen's theatrics and a pinch of an epileptic seizure and you've got Nixon, a hero for the hero-starved masses of the 80s if ever there was one.

Country Dick Montana — he looks like a cross between Jim Morrison and Willie Nelson, sounds like Elvis Presley on downers and performs classics such as Tom Jones' "What's New Pussycat."

Dave Alvin — he missed the San Jose show after "succumbing to the lifestyle of a Pleasure Baron," according to the band. But as Montana said after the show, while his face was buried in a bucket of ice water, the only difference in the band's performance with Alvin gone was that "he wasn't here."

The back-up band — let's see, at any given time on stage there were three electric guitars, a steel guitar, acoustic guitar, harmonica, electric organ, trombone, saxophone, drums, tambourines, maracas and ten back-up singers.

Performing in tuxedos before a backdrop of Las Vegas pleasure palaces such as the Stardust, the Sands and Caesar's Palace, some might think that the Pleasure Barons are just as much a parody as the schmaltzy nightclub scene they poke fun at.

Think again. Comprised of members from the Beat Farmers and Dave Alvin's All-Nighters, the back-up band was experienced, tight and versatile. Although it really couldn't stretch out when Nixon or Montana was on stage, it did open the show with a 45-minute set that included a variety of musical styles, ranging from straight country and rockabilly to inner-city jazz and even some delta blues.

The band was entertaining, but the show really took off when Nixon slided onto stage. To call the San Diego-based Nixon irreverent is an understatement. He's a certified lunatic.

See, Mojo's got something that not many entertainers have much of these days: his own personal — albeit slightly twisted — style. And as far as social significance goes, his hilarious diatribes directed at Debbie Gibson, Tiffany, Michael J. Fox, the Ayatollah, the scatologically minded Jon Bon Jovi and Journey are far more relevant than the oh-so-profound Tracy Chapman muzak schtick.

Whether imitating Peter Gabriel's fall into the audience or Springsteen's leap to the stage from the speakers, Nixon's best asset is that he never takes himself too seriously.

But Mojo wasn't the only Pleasure Baron front man.

Country Dick Montana, the Beat Farmer's lead singer and drummer, was more familiar with the band than Nixon but couldn't come close to capturing his energy. In fact, as the show wore on, it began to resemble an Abbot and Costello-type affair, with Montana playing the straight man to Nixon's absurdity.

I'm not going to bother mentioning what songs were played. Chances are if you're familiar with either band you know what they played. And if you're not familiar with the music of Mojo Nixon or the Beat Farmers, you're never going to be unless you take it upon yourself to find it.

And as far as the Pleasure Barons go, San Jose may never hear them again. The band is currently on a nation-wide tour and may never return to Northern California. Because the band members are signed to different record labels, an album, even a live one, could be difficult to release.

Of course, you never know. Maybe the Pleasure Barons will stay together and eventually reach the pinnacle of success and respect reserved for the truly talented, the truly deserving and the truly mainstream.

But then again, it's really hard to imagine a movie called, "The Pleasure Barons: Rattle our Bums."

The informational program will include personal international experiences from foreign language professors Gerard Burger, Sebastian Cassarino, Chaote Lin and Pam Pimentel.

"One of the things they will be focusing on is the CSU International Program," said Collins. "The program consists of students having the opportunity to study in a foreign country."

In discussing the success of the program, Collins said he has noticed a great deal of improvement in many students' mastering of a foreign language upon returning from abroad.

"It is very worthwhile for these students to join the program," he said. "It also gives them the chance to visit other countries and get cultural enrichment."

Students can also experience an international atmosphere this week without travelling. Several foreign language classes will be open to the public for observation Wednesday and Thursday.

Those interested in visiting a class can call the Foreign Language Department at 924-4602 for times and locations.

Another highlight of the week is the foreign film festival, which will be held daily from 3 p.m. to 5:30

The films include a mixture of documentaries and features from countries such as Russia, France, Brazil and Spain.

The festival is free to the public. "Nearly all the films have English subtitles also, so students shouldn't be worried if they can't speak other languages," Collins said.

Finally, international food is something that fits into anyone's week. On Wednesday and Thursday, the German, French, Russian and Portuguese clubs will be serving delicacies at the barbecue pits between 10 a.m. and 2:30 p.m.

Gudnov, recorded in Moscow," and German musician Richard Wagner's "Tristan Und Isolde" 1886 performance.

The library employee who made the call declined further comment but corroborated Officer Ramirez's report.

The employee also did not want to be identified.

But she was just doing her job, according to an informal library policy.

The staff is normally on the lookout for any persons who are not associated with the university and who might disturb students using the facilities, according to Carole Correa, a student assistant at Clark Library.

"It is fairly commonplace for transients to wander into the library and ask students for money, or

"It was excellent teamwork," Warmley said. "They (plumbers and electricians) responded within 10 minutes after I called and everybody chipped in and did something."

Damages from the water were unknown, but would probably be limited to Thomas' equipment, Warmley said.

things like that," she said.

"It's pretty standard for us to watch out for things like that," Correa said.

Non-students who want to use all campus library resources must purchase a user's card for $25, she said.

It is not known if the man who was listening to music had a user's card.

It is also standard practice for the UPD to have an officer or cadet watching the library exit when the library closes at night in case of any problems, Correa said.

Reports of non-students involved in disturbances are fairly commonplace, according to Ramirez.

"The campus is surrounded by non-students, so we are bound to have some problems," he said.

However, most cases are handled without incident, Ramirez said.

CANRAILPASS

Unlimited train travel in Canada for the unlimited imagination.

The romance of train travel

Your vacation begins the moment you board our trains. Friendly service, freedom to move around and opportunities to meet other traveling adventurers like yourself. All these unique qualities make the train a natural choice. Don't forget to bring an address book to record the names of the new friends you'll make!

There's never been a better time to see Canada by train. Now, with VIA Rail's new Canrailpass, you can travel coast-to-coast or by region for one great price. It's your passport to seeing Canada in the most affordable style.

Unlimited mileage and flexibility

The moment you own a Canrailpass is the moment you own the country. You may travel anywhere you want, with as many stops as you want, when you want. Canrailpass is designed for the 'plan as you go' traveler. You can even add days prior to your first departure.

VIA trains cover the country

As Canada's passenger train network, VIA Rail has over 11,100 miles of track. Our trains stop in over 416 Canadian communities. It's a rail network that covers the country as only the train can.
