Business students help kids

Photographs, fingerprints are made

By Valerie Junger

Before this weekend, 3-year-old John Fell didn't believe invisible ink existed.

But after he was fingerprinted by members of the SJSU professional business fraternity, he became a true believer Fell was one of a hundred children who took part in Delta Sigma Pi's "Child Safety Day" Saturday at Princeton Plaza Mall, according to Sarah Schuett, community service chairwoman.

The fingerprints were taken with a special type of ink that does not show up on children's fingers but creates a permanent record when applied to a piece of paper.

Children who participated in the free program, which took place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., also had their pictures taken.

The goal of the program was to provide parents with a form of accurate identification for their children, Schuett said.

"We didn't think we were going to get so many kids," she added. "This is the first time we tried this kind of event, and we are thinking about doing this every September." Added Bernie Shanklin, Delta

Added Bernie Shanklin, Delta Sigma Pi's president, "We wanted to do something for the community."

The inspiration for "Child Safety Day" came from the abduction of a 9-year-old Hayward girl, Michaela Garrett, nearly a year ago.

"I used to live down the street from where her home was," Shanklin said

Garrett vanished from her neighborhood Nov. 19, 1988, according to the Hayward Daily Review.

Bruce Toni, public information officer for the San Jose Police Department, thought the idea for Saturday's event was excellent.

"We have had cases in which the child was found, thanks to the existence of fingerprints," Toni said.

He added that the fingerprints should be put away with the child's records and kept in a safe place.

League sign-ups plummet

Fees contribute to lull

By Todd A. Haynes

Participation in intramural football and volleyball leagues this year has fallen well below last year's level.

There are 26 volleyball teams and 17 football teams competing in the leagues this year, said Matt Hufman, supervisor of intramural officials. Last year there were 54 and 25, respectively.

A shortened registration period and higher fees are the reasons for the decline, said B.D. Cash, intramural sports director for A.S. Leisure Services.

Last March, Leisure Services established a fall registration period beginning Aug. 24, under the assumption classes would begin that day, Cash said. When fall semester started on the 28th, students were left only nine days to register.

The shortened registration period "has been a major factor" in the lack of teams, but it was not the only one, Cash said.

"Price is another factor, but it is too early to assume only cost," he said. "You have to look at other factors."

Team fees for most intramural sports were raised from $35 to $80 this year. The fee hike has been attributed to the costs of playing in the Student Union Recreation and Events Center. Last year's intramural sports deficit and projected revenue losses for the Leisure Services volleyball program also contributed to the increase, Gary Barnett, intramural sports coordinator, said last month.

Only four teams from the residence halls are signed up to play volleyball this season, said Kristi Nowak, president of the Inter-Residence Hall Association. This is far fewer than last year, she said, noting that her hall alone had two teams in 1988.

Last year, the IRHA sponsored all teams from residence halls, Nowak said. Because of the fee increase, IRHA is paying only part of the fees for the teams this year.

"Unless people want to fund teams themselves, they can't play," Nowak said. "Our main goal is to get residents involved, let them interact and get them to have fun. It's hard to fight apathy when we have to ask for Students would rather play volleyball in the old facilities than pay more to play in the Rec Center, she said.

"We don't care where it is. We just want to play volleyball. We'll play in Quirk's Meadow," Nowak said, referring to a lawn court outside Joe West Hall.

Group rallies for NHL team

'Fan caravan' pursues club for Santa Clara County

By Aldo Maragon Daily staff writer

On a September afternoon, thoughts are usually on football or baseball. But, Saturday more than 500 people gathered in Plaza Park, anxious to see a hockey game.

The "fan caravan," held at the

The 'fan caravan,' held at the downtown park near Market Street and Park Avenue, was organized by San Jose officials. The rally was part of a campaign the city has initiated to demonstrate support for a professional hockey team — the first step in getting a team to take up residence in San Jose.

Although city officials have provided much of the funding needed for the campaign, it was the fans of the game who first started working to bring a National Hockey League expansion team to the area.

Saturday's rally was co-sponsored by Pro Hockey San Jose, a local organization of hockey fans hungry for a team in San Jose.

"We are the largest city in California without a major sports team, and hockey would be great," said Ken Misener, one of many group members volunteering their time giving out T-shirts at the rally.

As fans boarded one of 11 buses ready to take the hockey fans to an exhibition game in Oakland, enthusiasm grew over the prospects of bringing a team to San Jose.

"I think the time has come for San Jose to get a real sport like hockey," said Lawrence M., a New York native who moved to San Jose three months ago.

"The reaction we got in our efforts was very favorable from people here and outside of San Jose," said Greg Siehl, one of the directors of Pro Hockey San Jose.

Siehl and other members of the group arrived at the Oakland Coliseum early to pass out nearly 8,000 fliers in hopes of increasing membership and support for a team in San lose.

"Our only obstacle is the possible arena in San Francisco," Misener said. "But, I don't think the team owners want to go their because San Jose has all the fan sup-

TV News, SJSUstyle

By Vincent T. Oddo

"SJSU Update" has been keeping viewers apprised of what's happening on and around campus for just over a quarter of a century.

Of the 19 students on the "Update" staff this semester, nine are reporters, while the other 10 are on the production staff.

"Most of the reporters are journalism majors or minors, while the students on the production staff are radio and TV majors from the field of theater arts," according to Darla Belshe, faculty adviser for the weekly student news program for half of its 25 years on the air.

The show can currently be seen Saturdays at noon over KTEH, Channel 54. However, KTEH may be planning to move the show to another time slot later this year, according to "Update" reporter Kris Schreck.

The show is basically a campusoriented newscast, with most of its stories focusing on the important events and trends taking place on campus, according to Belshe. However, the show also covers certain off-campus stories that "Update" staff members feel are of "general interest" to people in the SJSU community.

"We have done stories on the recent redevelopment of the downtown area and on the situation with the Santa Clara County Transit, "Belshe said. "And many of the people in the community were involved in or See NEWS, page 5

Race policy unworkable

The use of racially offensive words by one student or group of students to provoke others is morally repulsive. Not many peo-

Racial and cultural awareness at SJSU and on campuses across the country has been weak over the past decade, and students of all racial and ethnic backgrounds need to communicate with one another more that ever before.

But racial problems on campuses can only be curtailed by education and by opening up a dialogue between different groups of students.

That's why it is an easy out for the University of California to ban the use of "fighting words" on its campuses or college-sanctioned events. The policy defines "fighting words" as "personally abusive . . likely to provoke a violent reaction" on campus or at university events.

The policy also states that the epithets include derogatory references to "race, ethnicity, religion, sex, sexual orientation, disability and other personal characteristics." This barely scratches the surface of a problem that runs much deeper.

The university's rule is vague and infringes on the First Amendment right to free speech

Although the UC used the 1942 Supreme Court "fighting words" decision to justify its own, the precedent was lessened in importance by later court decisions. In three later cases the Court struck down "fighting words" laws because they were

If SJSU or other California State University campuses decide to enact a similar policy, they also risk being taken to court. Already a federal court has struck down an "overbroad" fighting words policy at the University of Michigan. If SJSU establishes a similar policy, it will also be struck

The words, "likely to provoke a fight" virtually ensures a future court case. What do they mean by "likely"? Does that mean that people can be dismissed from school if they call someone an "idiot" and a fight starts? "Fighting words" can be almost anything anybody wants them to mean.

If SJSU enacts a UC-style policy, other words can be described as "fighting," not only racial slurs

It can be appreciated that the UC is making some attempt to prevent racially motivated incidents at its campuses. But the "fighting words" policy is a superficial solution. The problem of racial awareness can only be resolved through education and programs aimed at uniting different student groups

White and black fraternities could be encouraged by faculty, administration and Greek officials to work on joint community projects. The CSU could institute more ethnic studies requirements. Many things could be done to cut the roots of the problems, without violating the First Amendment. One evil does not remedy an-

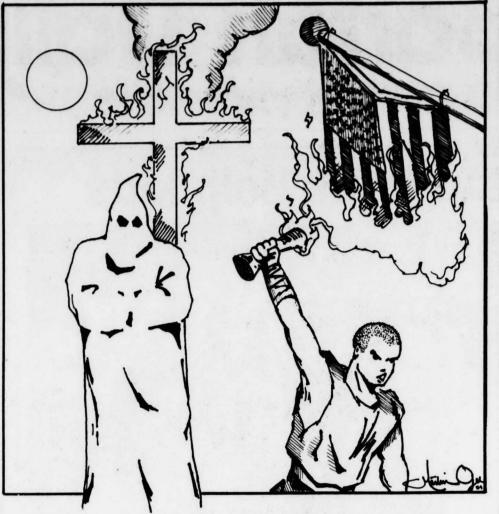

And if a fight erupts over words, who's really to blame, the ignoramus who spouts them or the hothead who thinks with fists instead of brains?

Ferdinand Marcos has been justly treated for his crimes against the Philippine people.

Get priorities straight

Hydrogen and stupidity are the two most prevalent things in the universe. It is very clear that the people who are in charge of the planning and construction of buildings for the campus of SJSU certainly take the prize for possessing stupidity.

The new multimillion-dollar recreation center is all well and good for those in this species who want to keep their 13-inch waistlines intact. However, let's get our priorities straight kids. What this campus needs most is a multimillion-dollar parking lot.

It is so incredibly shocking to witness how quickly the veneer of civilization is stripped away from my fellow students when they attempt to seek a parking space in the 10th Street garage at any given hour of the day. I have encountered exhibitions of reckless driving, as well as downright rudeness on the parts of my peers. Somebody is going to get into an accident or a big argument over there someday.

Now, did I happen to see a headline in our student per the other day indicating that a new humanities building was being proposed on campus? I didn't get a chance to read the whole article (I was too busy running around looking for a parking place). Fine, it would be nice. The engineers have their new palace, which hap-pens to be an attractive building, so why can't the hu-manitis people have theirs too? In all reality, I think in lieu of a new humanities building, the humanities people and the majority of us would appreciate very much the abilty to decrease the stress in our lives by being able to pull into a free parking space on campus once in a while. Can't this planning/building board, or whoever they are, use their senses and take note of the complaints about the parking problems around campus, and see it in their powers to develop a new parking garage for us? Has common sense in the university planning system gone totally out the window?

While we're on the subject on building, the new redecorating job in the cafeteria in the Student Union is really attractive. Hurrah for the decorator who brightened up the place a bit. Let's tackle the more important the quality of the food? Students are notorious for having lousy diets, and the bill of fare in the cafeteria doesn't help much. Let's get more fresh veggies to go

Also, I'd like to know if anyone can spare 69 cents for a bottle of Windex so we can clean the windows in Dudley Moore Hall, or any other windows on campus for that matter? It's really kind of disillusioning to try and stare out into space through a dirty window while trying to contemplate the impact of the French Revolu-

Coming back to the main point of this letter, I am hoping that in the future, the people who make the deciof what is to be built on campus will approach these decisions with a little common sense and ratio-nality. I'd spend an addittional $14,000 to celebrate the opening of a new parking garage any day. Till then, gang, keep those champagne corks secured!

Cardinal band for the birds

The SJSU football team wasn't alone Saturday in showing Stanford that money can't necessarily buy a good performance.

The Spartan Marching Band won the halftime battle of the bands as sure as the Spartan football players defeated the Cardinal in an 40-33 ego-deflater.

For the prestigous university Stanford makes itself out to be, SJSU definately outclassed them at half-time.

The chaotic foolishness of the Leland Stanford Jr. Marching Band is in complete contrast with the rigidly formal SJSU March-

When the Stanford Marching Band steps on the field, the last possible definition used to describe this abomination would be "half-time entertainment

They are, in reality, far from entertaining. Stanford's brand of humor insults a normal human being's intelligence.

The band was uniformed in shorts and silly straw hats and doing their utmost best to look stupid at the commands of a corny announcer with an irritating voice. The performance theme was nothing less than "cable television". It must have taken a more astute Stanford scholar than the fools "performing" to think the ridiculous theme up.

In the Stanford Marching Band's quest to see which band member could make the biggest fool out of himself, the band leader took - wearing scuba gear complete with fins. This was a trite sillier than the mismatching safari outfit he wore in a previous game.

The conductor directed, rather misled, other simpeltons donned in anything from viking horns, straw hats, and shorts, and doing basically anything that felt good.

What's really amazing is how the band can partake in all this chicanery without being the slightest bit amusing.

They probably have an ongoing bet amongst the band members to see who can make the most complete fool out of himself within a 10-minute performance.

I have no idea where those Stanford scholars get the notion that they possess a marching band, I have yet to see them march. They excel at doing anything and everything but a marching band performance.

I wonder what the band does at practice? Do they run around and try to coordinate looking asinine and disorganized? I certainly hope that they don't actually pay someone to choreograph the mess that was imposed on spectators at Saturday's game.

As an added attraction, the marching band has the Stanford Pompon Dollies, which appear to be the school cheerleaders, degrade themselves by allowing such a sexist title to

The Spartan Marching Band in coordination with the Spartan Spectrum had as classy a performance as Stanford had demeaning.

The SJSU Marching Band outclassed the Cardinal just as the Spartan football team dis-played that money and prestige does not a winning team make. It's unbelievable how pompous the Stanford Marching Band is to fool around on the field and, because they play a little music during their little frolics, they are allowed to call themselves a marching band.

SJSU, on the other hand, spends many hours practicing and coordiating the band and colorguard marching formations to music. It takes a lot of discipline and hard work. I re-member when my brother played for the Live Oak High School's marching band, he spent up to four hours a day practicing drills.

Stanford doesn't appear to have the need to practice, unless it is to practice looking like they didn't practice.

SJSU, however, had a real dignified and enjoyable performance. The traditional blue uniforms (that all matched) along with their militaristic marching style and difficult formation patterns were in sharp contrast with the haphazardly ridiculous antics of the Cardinal. The Spartan Spectrum, dressed in stunning Spanish costumes, coordinated their dazzling color and dance with the color guard.

I realize that the Stanford Marching Band is renowned for their boorish antics, but they need not classify themselves as a marching band when they try to do everything but march.

I think in their pompousness and eccentricity the university is losing sight of what students are to gain from participating in a marching band program. Stanford marching students fail to learn the discipline, style and technique that the Spartans display as having gained from SJSU's program.

I feel fortunate that our band displays a dignity and style that reflects a positive image on the university

I just wonder what image the Stanford

Marching Band is trying to portray.

Scientific study funding offered minority grad students

The National Science Foundation will be awarding graduate fellowships to minority and women students.

The stipends for both categories of scholarship will be $12,900 for the 1990-91 year, according to a National Science Foundation

Applicants for the minority graduate fellowships must be U.S. citizens or nationals who are American Indian, Black, Hispanic, Native Alaskan or Native Pacific Islander.

Fellowships are awarded for study and research leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, biological, engineering or social sciences, including the history and philosophy of science. They are also available to students pursuing research-based doctorates in science and education

Students who are eligible to apply in the fall of 1989 are college seniors, first-year graduate students and others who have completed a limited amount of graduate study in science and engineering.

Special "Women in Engineering" graduate fellowships have been added this year, with additional awards to be offered to encourage women to undertake graduate study in engineering fields. Second-year graduate students are eligible.

The deadline for application is Nov. 9, 1989. Program announcements may be obtained from department chairs, graduate deans, the financial aid office or from the National Research Council.

Gale lauds efforts of his players

Hurst just misses final cut of tourney

By Tony Mercado Daily staff writer

Women's golf coach Mark Gale was proud with the way three Spartans competed in the weekend's San Jose Classic.

Pat Hurst, Dina Ammaccapane and Robin Berning all played in the Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament as amateurs because they played well enough earlier in the week to qualify

Hurst came painfully close to advancing to the second round of the match and missed the cutoff by one

She shot a two-day total of 150 and the cutoff to qualify was 149. The junior shot 75 in the first round to put herself in position to nail down a qualifying spot.

Approaching the 13th hole, how-Hurst hit the ball out-ofbounds and had to settle for a second-round 75

'That 13th hole did her in." admitted Gale.

The hole is a fairly long par 3 at 172 yards and requires a straight shot off the tee. There is out-of-bounds left, and the green is surrounded by bunkers on both sides. The green is also very tricky

Nevertheless, Gale said he was proud with the performance of Hurst, as well as the two other players, Ammaccapane, a senior, and Berning, a freshman.

Ammaccapane also had trouble on the 13th hole and shot a 156. Berning finished with a 159.

Beth Daniels won the tournament on Sunday, shooting a three-day total of 205. Patty Sheehan and

On Saturday night, one night after losing to the University of California, Santa Barbara Gauchos in four games, the Spartans beat California Polytechnic University at San Luis Obisbo in three straight.

It was the first conference vic-tory for SJSU, now 5-4 overall, 1-3 in the Big West. The Spartans beat the Mustangs of San Luis Obisbo 15-12, 15-10, 15-12

"Betsy Welsh had a career match," Montgomery said.

Welsh led the team in kills with 16 and digs with 19, as well as hit-ting .536. Wilson had 14 kills and 14 digs, and Laymon had 53 assists, 24 more than the Mustang team.

The Gauchos beat SJSU 15-9, 15-9, 8-15, and 15-10.

SJSU is a team that prides itself on defense, Montgomery said, but UCSB was "unquestionably the best defensive team we've faced.

"They outdug us 2-1 (94-45),"

Digs were not the only weakness in the Spartan game. They also had said that they are on track after the victory over the Mustangs.

On Friday night, SJSU plays host to California State University, Long Beach, ranked No. 3 in the nation, and the University of California, Irvine Saturday. Saturday's game will be televised on the Prime Ticket Network, based in Southern California. Both games begin at 7:30 p.m. and will be played in Spartan gym.

affected by these situations."
"Update" has also done a feature on the South Bay Special Olympics, according to Belshe.

As faculty adviser, Belshe's responsibility involves instructing staff members in the use of equipment, consulting with reporters on the production of stories and offering suggestions on areas where stories can be improved.

Sometimes, because of the complexity of some of our stories, our staff members may encounter certain things they never ran into be-fore," Belshe said. "And there are times when it's difficult to make all the pieces fit together."

SJSU students are responsible for all aspects of "Update" prepara-tion, including assigning stories, filming, editing, reporting, and operating and transporting the video equipment.

This can be a "time-consuming" task which takes "a lot of dedication, "according to Belshe.

"Our preparation begins on Monday with a critique of the previous week's show," Belshe said. 'Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday are spent on preparation of sto-ries. By Thursday night, the stories George Bush's visit to Ford Aeromust be edited and the show put towe hand-deliver a tape of the "Update" broadcast to the studios of KTEH (Channel 54) for telecast on Saturday at noon."

KTEH is now in its 17th year of broadcasting "Update."
The show ran into some trouble last year with the station over a segment on the national presidential election. According to a Spartan Daily article dated Oct. 28, 1988, the show was found to be "in violation of the equal opportunities rule requiring opposing views over politi-cal figures," and the segment was not broadcast by KTEH. However, the matter has since been resolved, according to Belshe.

Kim Mayfield, assigning editor of "Update" and in her second semester with the program, described some of the hardships involved in putting together a typical "Update" broadcast.

"Sometimes we have cases when more than one person wants to do the same story," Mayfield said. "I have to make sure all the bases are covered, so we can prepare a well-balanced broadcast."

Mayfield also pointed out that the "Update" staff has to rely on its equipment. If something malfunctions, the staff is left without a story.

"Some professors are not that familiar with the news media, so we have to take the time to explain who we are," Schreck said. However, she did recall several interviews that were particularly interesting to her.

"I did a story on student Louis Duarte (president of the Disabled Students Association), and I was fascinated by the way he was trying to overcome his physical disabilities," Schreck said. "I also had a chance to interview Susan Schulter, who is an instructor at SJSU. I was impressed by the way she is making something great of herself, despite her blind-

Mayfield described "Update" as "team effort" that takes much hard work.

'One time, Kris and I had to lug pounds of equipment up the stairs. And Kris can recall a time when we had to cover a football game by ourselves," Mayfield said.

One of the most recent changes in "Update" was the installation of new teleprompters last semester, according to Mayfield.

After graduation, both Mayfield and Schreck plan to focus their attentions on the production side of broadcasting. Mayfield hopes to become a network producer, while Schreck wants to concentrate on documentary production.

"I'd like to produce more informational pieces and in-depth stories, much like those on '60 Minutes,' Schreck said.
