CFA, CSU reach verbal agreement on contract Sabbatical leaves to be provided Bargaining atmosphere credited

A tentative verbal agreement on a two-year contract has been reached between the California Faculty Association and officials of the California State University system, according to Pat Nichelson, president of California CFA.

Meeting with a group of about 30 local CFA members, Nichelson explained provisions of the new contract which calls for no rollbacks or reductions in benefits to faculty from the previous contract.

However, it does add significant improvements in salaries and benefits "if funded in the state bud-

CFA members will be asked to ratify the new contract by voting on it the first week in April. If the contract is ratified, its new provisions will go into effect July 1,

"The state budget is a mess, and there will be plenty of sacrifice," Nichelson said. "We had to scramble like crazy to make sure the system doesn't go into hysteria.

We're going to have to insist on a full partnership in the budget pro-

Nichelson credited the improved bargaining atmosphere that developed over the last two years between the faculty union and the state university for the ease at reaching the tentative agreement this year.

Brian Woods, a senior sociology major, glances at tombstones that were placed outside the Leisure Activities office for Drug Awareness Week. The tombstones, found strategically placed around the SJSU campus, convey messages about substance abuse and are used as a tool to get people's attention. The tombstones have the names of famous actors, musicians and atheletes who died from drug abuse written on them. The Prevention Education Program was responsible for coordinationg this project. According to project coordinator Elaine Tencati, 'the tombstones get people to notice.'

Speaker aims to justify U.S. role in Gulf War

By Precy Correos

The cries "No blood for oil" rang out in peace rallies before and during the War in the Gulf the ramifications in defending Kuwait were far more complicated than a simple phrase.

This was the point John Duke Anthony, former chief executive officer for the National Council on United States and Arab Relations, made in his speech Wednesday at Washington Square Hall to a crowd of about 50.

The focus of his forum was entitled "America in the Gulf: Why does it matter?" Anthony dis-cussed why the U.S. defended Kuwait against the advancement of Iraqi military forces.

Kuwait has been an ally of the United States for many years Anthony said, combined with five other small countries: Bahrain, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates

With the help of the United States, these six countries were able to incorporate a Gulf Cooperation Council in 1981, Anthony said. The purpose of these small countries was to deter aggression and defend their countries against the aggressor, according to The Presidents Report, a biannual report put out by the National Council, handed out at the forum.

These six countries spent 17 years and billions of dollars, much of which was spent in the United States, for equipment, planning, implementing and training of troops in case of a military buildup which eventually took place Aug.

The United States would have reacted the same way had it been another ally that was unjustly invaded by a country with more military power, Anthony added.
According to report: "When the U.S.S. Stark was attacked by Iraq on May of '87, it was Bahrain's navy that rescued American sailors.

In addition, Oman's cooperation, played a big role, giving permission to have emergency land-See DUKE, back page

Three new degrees approved by SJSU

List includes two B.A.s in languages and a Masters degree By Carolyn Swaggart

Three new degrees have been sent to the CSU Chancellor's office in Long Beach after having been approved by SJSU. The new programs, which consist of two B.A. degrees in Chinese and Japanese and a Master of Arts degree in Creative Writing, must now await approval by the Chancellor before being implemented. With the current budget crisis, such an approval may not be immediate.

'It's a very long process of approval that has to come up through the Chancellor's office, and it could take years," said Virginia DeAraujo, coordinator of the creative writing program at SJSU. The new Masters of Arts degree was first set in motion a year and a half ago. "It's gone through all of the campus committees," De Araujo said. "But we can't start offering it until the Chancellor authorizes it, and they're frozen down there."

DeAraujo explained that any new graduate programs offered for approval to the Chancellor's office were being delayed because of the budget crisis.

"Right now it's gone down to Chancellorsville, and that's where it's going to stay for a while," she explained.

Carmen Sigler, an associate professor in the Foreign Language Department, was more optimistic about the two new foreign lan-guage degrees, also sent to Long

"The department has been inter-ested in offering these for quite a while," Sigler said. "About three years ago, we decided that the time was right to offer a B.A. degree in Chinese and Japanese," she contin-

Detailed proposals regarding the curriculum for the programs had to be written up last year, she said.

"Now we have to send these detailed proposals to Long Beach and the Chancellor's office," she continued. If the Chancellor approves the degrees, Sigler said, they will be implemented in the Fall of 1991.

She added that community support for the two programs came from "literally hundreds of people.

After two weeks of discussion with the Special Allocations Committee, A.S. voted unanimously in favor of a $1,937.98 grant to ERC to operate and publicize the Altrans project. The only provision of ERC's presentation to A.S. that was not approved was a request for salaries for two directors. ERC was not given the salaries, according to committee member and A.S. Controller Jennie Reyes, because Special Allocations expressed a reluctance to set a precedent for funding salaries.

"It would have been nice to have salaries, because this project takes time away from other programs we work on," said Stephen Shunk, head director of ERC. "But we're very pleased to have the funding. We're satisfied with the allotment.

The grant from A.S. will fund a publicity campaign set up by ERC, which will include a newsletter, fliers and brochures. ERC will also promote the flash pass program, where passholders can ride for a month anywhere in the county on the light-rail or bus. Shunk said an ad will be run in a newspaper and the first 50 guests to apply for transit assistance will be entered in a drawing for two free flash passes.

Last week ERC presented a revised request to Special Allocations which reflected a reduced cost for the proposed newsletter.

We originally requested money for an environmentally-sound, soy-based paper and ink for the newsletter," Shunk said. "We compromised on cost and now will be using a petroleum-based ink and a esser quality paper."

Shunk hopes to use soy-based ink and paper for next semester's newsletters.

Shunk was pleased as well with A.S. offering a grant for a non-traditional program

'Usually, Special Allocations will debate and possibly fund a group's event if it is a new project, like SAFER getting funding for a recycling bin," he said. "Altrans is something we've been working on for awhile. This is our main pro-resident Bush has convinced us all that his detractors during his 1988 presidential campaign were wrong in calling him a wimp.

He convinced us with his decisive military moves into Panama and on a larger scale the Gulf War, both of which helped to combat the stigma that clung to Bush after following the distinct personality of President Reagan.

Bush seems so preoccupied with dispelling the wimp stigma that he has donned a pair of blinders that filter out issues at home but bring foreign affairs into crystal clear focus.

Consistent with this pattern is the distinct possibility that the United States will maintain a substantial number of preventative military forces in the Persian Gulf area to preserve U.S.

To sustain this role as global police dog and peacekeeper may have some long term payoffs but the cost to the present is too high.

The present would once again be submerged under the future we're preserving

To commit to a permanent presence in this region, one which we are not nearly as welcome as the western media has portrayed us to be, would be to dig one more shovelful deeper into the financial hole the country is in.

ne could argue that we are doing the nations in the region a favor in guiding them toward democracy.

This argument completely ignores the fact that the reason we supposedly liberated Kuwait from hostile and domineering Iraq was to preserve a world where no country could be intimidated by another.

In a more mild and camouflaged manner the United States would be committing the same crime we just admonished if we were to overstep our bounds by exerting unwarranted influence in the Middle East.

Let's hope Bush's nightmares about appearing to be a wimp are over and his thoughts return to home where they belong.

Questioning CFA

I was saddened to read in a recent Spartan Daily article ("Balgooyen defense protested by faculty") that Leon Dorosz has characterized California Faculty Association's decision to represent Tom Balgooyen as placing "tenure above criminal behavior and unethical professional conduct." He should know better. The fact is that Balgooyen was convicted of two misdemeanors. What if he had been convicted of exceeding the speed limit? Would Dorosz still brand him a criminal and demand that he be driven from the university? Does just any conviction call for dismissal or should this extreme sanction be reserved only for certain situations? Should the decision be left to Dorosz and his friends who tried, and failed, to banish Balgooyen over ten years ago when he was a candidate for tenure? Even if we were to assume that Dorosz and his friends are now capable of being objective about Balgooyen (a very tenuous assumption, in my view), could we also assume that they know enough about the facts of the case to decide his fate? Did Dorosz or his friends attend Balgooyen's trial? What are the sources of their information about his behavior? Are these sources reliable? Are they objective? Have these sources been cross-examined regarding their allegations? Does anyone know enough about the facts in this case to make a determination without a hearing? Would tenure have any meaning at all if it could be set aside without a hearing? Is Balgooyen, like other tenured persons, entitled to due process? What sort of process is he due? Does CFA, the duly-elected, exclusive representative of CSU faculty, have an obligation to make sure that Balgooyen receives the process he is due, and the representation this entails? Indeed, doesn't the current collective bargaining agreement, in fact, include "the right of the faculty unit employee to appeal pending disciplinary action and to have the matter heard" (Section 19.4, Subsection e)? The issue is not whether Balgooyen has been found guilty. A federal court has convicted him on two misdemeanor counts, and these convictions will stand unless and until they are overturned by another court. Leon Dorosz should know, however, that the pending issue is whether Balgooyen's actions warrant dismissal. He should also know that this issue was neither addressed nor resolved by Balgooyen's federal trial. Finally, Dorosz should know that neither he, nor his friends, nor Balgooyen's friends, nor even the President should be granted unilateral authority to resolve this remaining issue. In order to make an appropriate determination on the issue of dismissal, we need a hearing and a hearing requires competent representation. I would not wish to be a member of the kind of union Dorosz seems to be advocating, and I suspect that, if he thinks about it a bit more, he might come to the same conclusion. I am certain his conclusion would be different if his career were the one at Discrimintation? Hah!

Now that I have challenged, in the press, the mighty Wiggsy Sivertsen, she will first resort to calling me a homophobe. I'll dismiss that with the following:

Prior to marrying Mrs. Laurie (and never since), I have had the pleasure of bedding occasional fellow human beings whose genders and pleasures thereby are none of her, yours, or the public's business. It happens to be my personal opinion that all sexual activities and preferences (in the name of civilization and good taste) should be kept neatly tucked in the closet to the left or right of the overshoes as appropriate.

Her next charge will be that I'm against minorities. Hardly! I just, last year, became one-a senior citizen, with a card and bus tickets to prove it. After years of white malehood and the endurance of various charges such as a responsibility for the slave trade, the Civil War, the importing of Chinese to work on the railroad, chauvinism, the enslavement of women, and God knows what else, I have finally achieved minorityhood. I would beg to note that we, elderly folk, are something over 22 percent of the population and yet I am shocked to discover that 22 percent of the administration are not seniors nor are 22 percent of the student body. This is an obvious sign of discrimination and bias. (What's good for the goose is of use to the gander.) I trust that upon public complaint (and I certainly intend to make my complaints public), the administration will leap to my side with the same alacrity and goodwill it has evinced if every single case of minority complaint for the last decade or so. I will not, as is the current custom, lie in the center quad and bang my feet and hold my breath and threaten to turn blue if I don't receive my demands immediately! Yes, I know that's been very effective, but it is somewhat absurd, uncivilized, and tactless. I would prefer literary efforts in the public press. I might just here point out that an administration which has encouraged the enrollment in the student body of various convicted murderers and rapists is hardly in the position to crucify an inadvertent faculty bird poacher!

Editor,

I am shocked and disgusted by the Feb. 25 article entitled "Spring Break Change Option Given," not because of the socalled state/church separation issue (which is incontrovertibly valid in its own right but a flimsy excuse in this context) but because thousands of students and faculty face a complete disruption in lifestyle iust because a few people want to nit-pick. Just because Spring break (notice it's not called Easter vacation) precedes a Christian holiday doesn't mean that the university is advocating Christianity over midterms!) if you ask me.

Let me just point out one simple fact because it displays Christian symbols? before I go any farther: Easter falls on a Sunday, not a weekday. If that day fell on a weekday instead and this university chose to close down in observance of it, I could see the point.

First, William Uranga prophesizes a snowballing effect that would target both Thanksgiving and Christmas breaks if this proposal were to be enacted. When else should winter break fall-June? Would you, Academic Senator David McNeil, want classes to be held on Christmas day

we should burn down the campus ministry

Second, I agree with Seth Dolcourt. Why is it suddenly so important? Do professors David Mesher and McNeil have nothing better to do than try to get their names in the paper? I don't subscribe to the Christian religion, but since I was born here I've been raised with the established calendar in observance. Whenever I travel to other countries, I don't expect them to change their holidays and way of life around just because I don't follow the same beliefs. Since when holidays?

Why don't we move on to the really important issues such as the quality of the education American students receive. Look at the real life-threatening issues like the homeless, AIDS, the war in the gulf, and the federal deficit!

What about "people of other religions [being] inconvenienced by the Christian oriented calendar"? Does that mean that we should change the work week because Sundays are observed by Christians as a day of rest?

Lastly, I'd like to say something to Spring break change absurd any other religion. It's merely a break to so that all Christians were is it the objective of the church/state Senator McNeil: Shame on you for saying discriminate" when they voted down a similar proposal in 1988. This is a democracy, McNeil, in case you've forgotten. I commend the senate for giving the students the opportunity to decide on the quality of their education. If any students and/or faculty members don't appreciate the calendar this university has set, then by all means, take it on the road!

Bush declares it's time for end to Arab-Israeli conflict

Glowing in the pep rally aftermath have for the first time found themof America's victory over Iraq, President Bush is promising to apply the momentum of the Persian Gulf War toward a lasting peace between Jews and Arabs.

'Our commitment to peace in the Middle East does not end with the liberation of Kuwait," Bush told a joint session of Congress on Wednesday night. "The time has come to put an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict."

There were as many flags as people greeting the president as he strode into the House chamber, to three-minute standing ovation. He was cheered again and again as he commended those who carried out the war, and damned Iraq's Saddam Hussein.

"It was a great victory speech," said Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla. "He gave credit to the men and women who deserved the credit. There's now a sense of confidence that's going to carry over into other parts of the society

Environmentalists fume over forest herbicides

ronmentalists are decrying plans by timber companies to spray herbicides on thousands of acres of North Coast forests.

Patty Clary of Californians for Alternatives to Toxics on Wednesday warned the public about the spraying, saying the chemicals used to control unwanted plant growth are hazardous to wildlife and human life.

'If my family were there, I would leave with them during the spraying," she said, adding that scientific studies support her conclusions

But timber companies countered that science is on their side. "The chemicals are tested and approved by the Environmental Protection Agency and other regulatory agencies," said Ryan Hamilton, spokesman for Simpson Timber Co.

Simpson plans to spray the herbicide Garlon 4 on about 300 acres northern Humboldt County about 325 miles north of San Francisco within the next few weeks.

Simpson's spray plans also in-clude about 2,000 acres in southern Del Norte County, in the watersheds of Hunter and Turwar creeks, which drain into the Klamath River.

John Sievert, an inspector with the agricultural commissioner's office in Humboldt County, said timber companies are pretty much on their honor to use unrestricted herbicides responsibly

Spot checks are done to make sure the companies are taking the proper environmental and safety precautions, he said, especially when the chemicals are being sprayed from the air.

Aerial spraying plans are reviewed to make sure there are adequate buffer zones between the areas to the sprayed and nearby water courses, said John Hannum, a senior water resource control engineer with the North Coast Regional Water Quality Control Board.

The board also requires that water samples be collected during the spraying and after the first rain following the spraying, to detect any drift or runoff into water courses, he said.

'Berkeley in the Sixties' brings back turbulent times

Documentary film 'Berkeley in the Sixties' plays at the Towne Repertory Cinema

The University of California at Berkeley during the 1960s was a place of revolution. It was not a time of military revolution, but one of social awakening. It was a time for the civil rights movement, the anti-war movement and the drug revolution.

interviews with the people centralized in the '60s footage, 'Berkeley in the Sixties' is a monumental achievement in documentary film.

The film does not hold back in its presentation of what happened in Berkeley and what was happening in other parts of the country at that time. The footage presents the events and protests thoroughly, while the interviews add insight into what was happening and explanations of the importance sur-rounding the footage.

"Berkeley in the Sixties" begins with the civil rights oppression on campus in the early part of the decade. It presents the banning of free speech on campus by the university, and shows the many arrests the campus police made under direction of the university.

The riots of the students were shown as being warranted, and the university was presented as a government body trying to control and suppress its people.

A particularly interesting event occured when a student was protesting the actions of the univerto police when they demanded it. He was arrested and thrown into a police car, but the mob came to his

More and more students were invited by the mob to join in, and then a microphone was moved onto the police car and students were allowed to speak their minds from atop the car.

Eventually, the students won their fight, but it opened Berkeley to the period it is most known for. The free speech victory forum was televised nationally from campus, causing people to flock to Berkeley to live freely and have a good time The era of free love and drug experimentation erupted, as did the protests against the Vietnam War.

"Berkeley in the Sixties" reopens issues about the guarantees of the First Amendment by showing how the students overcame the suppressions of the university and used that victory to protest the war.

This film hits close to home, and is amazing to see the movements that began in California.

California ski resorts thankful for snowfall, increased business

By Robert Drueckhammer

They prayed long enough and it finally happened.

Ski resorts throughout California were ecstatic this past week as a series of storms dumped four to seven feet of new snow on ski areas that have been hurting ever since the drought started five years ago.

Many of these resorts, which were either closed or operating a limited amount of terrain just two weeks ago due to a lack of snow were more concerned about high winds this week than a lack of Squaw Valley, Alpine Mead-ows, and Iron Mountain were just a few of many resorts that weren't able to open their slopes on Tuesday due to high winds. At Alpine, wind gusts reached 135 miles per hour. At Squaw, winds topped off at 151 miles per hour, creating conditions that toppled trees and

But Wednesday, a whole lot changed. The winds died down, and the snow stopped falling, cre-

Iron Mountain, which plans to run all five of its chairlifts this weekend, was happy about the new snowfall.

"It's beautiful today. The winds have died down, and the snow has stopped, so it's great for skiing," said Cliff Wordall, general manager of the area

'All seven of our lifts are open, and the skiing's great.'

> - John Mahanna, operations manager, Dodge Ridge

At Dodge Ridge, things were looking a lot better also. Dodge, which has been closed since mid-January due to a lack of snow, was finally able to open back up last Saturday.

"We've received 48-62 inches of new snow since Thursday, and we are now operating 95 percent of our terrain. All seven of our lifts are open, and the skiing's great," said John Mahanna, operations manager for the area.

But some resorts received some damage they weren't expecting.

At Squaw Valley, the area has enough snow to go into full operation with a six-and-a-half foot base. According to Peter Dansen, the director of communications for the area, however, downed trees and power lines forced the resort to only operate four chairs

'We've got a whole lot of grooming and ramp work to do, and we still have to fix the downed power lines. We plan to be in full operation by the weekend, but we are taking it one step at a time right now," Dansen said.

Other ski areas are happy as well, with many resorts reporting excellent ski conditions.

Kirkwood, which was running four chairs on a six inch base last week, is now running seven chairs on a four foot base. Mammoth Mountain, which had been running two chairs on a one foot base, is now running a gondola

The recent storm that rushed through California left the Sierra mountains covered in snow and seven chairlifts on a six to seven foot base, and is planning to open most of their terrain as soon as they can.

Even small resorts are finally reopening. Badger Pass, located in Yosemite National Park, reopened this week with a two-anda-half foot base, and was operating all six of its surface lifts and chairlifts

But skiers planning to visit the Sierra Nevada this weekend had better be prepared. Another storm, predicted to hit Northern band's keyboardist, was impressive. Maclachan, like all the actors playing the band members, studied how to play their instruments. Maclachan seems to capture Manzarek's seriousness and business-like manner. While Morrison goes the Andy Warhol crowd on one of his head trips or self-destructive binges, Manzarek can bring him down to earth.

Some modern rock fans may be overjoyed to see Billy Idol play a roadie, a friend of Morrison's in the movie, but Idol is just playing a version of himself. And for you trivia buffs, if you look real close you can see Eric Burdon from The Animals in a backstage scene

Although, Morrison had a steady girlfriend, Pamela Courson, played by Meg Ryan, he fullfilled his rock star, sex-god image with a variety of women, most notably, journalist Patrica Kennely. Kath-leen Quinlan's portrayal of this strong, intelligent and dark witch steals many scences from Ryan's quirky flower child. Still Jim chooses Pamela in the end.

Jennifer Rubin as Edie Segdwick, really gets the short shift, she is in only one scene, and not

Another of Morrison's love interests was Nico, a singer for The Velvet Underground. It was interesting that Stone would deal with The Doors ties to The Velvets and

However, the Warhol party scene set in 1967 in New York, is just too satirical. Can you imagine Crispin Glover as Andy Warhol? Glover, a current weird character actor, seems to capture the ultitimate "Blank Frank" with his sarcasm intact.

Stone deals with each band in a manner of that old 1960's cliche of the dirty old East, "The Velvets and the enlightened West, "The

Yet the tone of each band in lyrics and music was very dark. It doesn't matter what types of drugs the bands were indulging in. The Doors (PCP and alcohol) and The Velvets (heroin and speed) had to deal with the self-destructive qualities of band members, and the eventual breakup of each band.

Stone uses many directorial techniques to create the right drugged mood of The Doors.

Oliver Stone revives the life of 'The Doors' chedelic effects and lighting to create Morrison's increasing druggedout mood. Stone uses so many fades to white in the movie that it looks bleached out. He also uses a lot of overhead shots to create space, especially when the band and Pamela first drop acid in the Mojave desert. Stone also uses an overhead shot when the band played "Whiskey Au GoGo.

The only effective shot that was used to create a psychedelic effect was when Morrison's dancing feet at a concert are interspread with a dancing Indian shaman's feet.

The shot suggested that they had become one. The shaman, which Morrison supposedly saw dead on the road in 1949, is used throughout the movie as an omen of his own death. Stone also blends scenes into each other to create a sense of distorded reality. Although the movie is basically lincar, these abrupt scene shots are surprising

Although the movie captured the ssence of the life of the Doors' band members, people who are not fans of the Doors may not be overly impressed.

Sen. Hill tries to pass radar ban

SACRAMENTO (AP) - An alliance of political conserva-tives, civil libertarians and police officers wants to ban photo radar, the controversial use of hidden cameras to catch speeding motorists.

It's an outrageous invasion of privacy and bad public policy for a city to allow a private company to come into town and say, 'Let's set up photo radar and we'll split the profit." says state Sen. Frank Hill, R-Whit-

Hill is writing a bill to ban photo radar and says he has the support of the American Civil Liberties Union and an organization representing rank and file law enforcement officers.

In use in six Arizona and California cities, photo radar slows speeders and reduces accidents and fatalities, according to its supporters.

Two-sport athlete nears end of career

By Shigeru Nishiwaki

When SJSU hosts Cal on Saturday night, it will mark the last time gymnast Andy Tate will compete in the Spartan Gym.

Tate, one of only two seniors on the SJSU men's gymnastics team along with Rusty Boicourt, has been a major factor this season in keeping the Spartans' hopes for a regional bid alive.

Born in Tokyo, Japan, where his father Mervin was stationed for 11 years, Tate's first love was not gymnastics, but judo. His father, a fifth-degree black belt and former Grand Champion in the World Military Games, first introduced his son to the sport when he was just five-years-old.

As the years went by, Tate mastered the sport, becoming an eighttime national champion. By the age of 16, he had already achieved first-degree black belt status.

However, in the eighth grade, something happened that would completely change his life. After witnessing an exhibition by the De Anza High School gymnastics team, Tate became fascinated with the sport.

So the following year, after en-rolling at De Anza, Tate joined the gymnastics team, a decision his father supported.

My dad thought that it would help or improve my judo to start gymnastics," Tate said. "Besides the strength that is needed for gymnastics, my dad knew that it would improve my air awareness.

Already accomplished in judo, Tate's success in gymnastics came quickly and easily. His team won the Northern California Championships in 1983, 1985 and 1986. Individually, he finished second in the all-around competition in 1986 the Northern California High School Championships.

'His athletic abilities are amazing," SJSU head coach Dave Juszczyk said. "Few athletes have reached the level of excellence in two sports that Andy has.

Despite his tremendous success in gymnastics, Tate had decided by graduation time to stay with his first sport, and decided to join the judo team at SJSU

Upon arrival at SJSU during the recovering from shoulder surgery fall of 1986, Tate was encouraged to join the squad by then gymnastics head coach Doug Van Everen, things began to look brighter. He who was aware of Tate's talents. Tate did not take long to make a decision, and opted for gymnas-tics, giving up judo; which did not please his father.

"He definitely didn't like it," Cal, and qualified for Tate said. "He's always thought Regional tournament that I had a future in judo. He didn't believe that I could make it in gymnastics."

beginning of his collegiate career. During pre-season workouts, he suffered an ankle injury, and com-peted in the rings event of the 1986 Spartan Open wearing a cast. Tate sat out the following year, scored a team season-high 9.7 in the rings against Fullerton State, just .05 shy of the school record.

As a junior, he again scored a team-high 9.7 in the rings against Cal, and qualified for the NCAA

'His progress in gymnastics has been very methodical," Juszczyk, who took over the team Tough times awaited him at the this season, replacing Van Everen. "He takes the right mental approach to learning skills and tackling problems."

Tate's respect for Juszczyk is mutual

"If it wasn't for Dave, I don't think I would have achieved half the goals that I wanted," he said. 'He's been very patient with me. I've had some trouble learning some things, and he's always had the patience to help me."

"Andy is our team leader," Juszczyk said. "He is very level headed and mature. It's like having another coach in and out of the gym. He looks after the rest of the team.

The humanistic studies major has also excelled in the classroom. An SJSU scholar athlete, Tate plans to graduate this fall.

"It's been fun being here," he said of his career as a Spartan. 'It's had its ups and downs, but I feel it's ending on a good note.

exchange for CSU's cooperation in the bargaining process. SJSU President Gail Fullerton issued a statement last week agreeing to work with existing bargaining units during the current budget cri-

"This year we're going to help CSU instead of bird dog them," said Nichelson. "Given the state budget that we are looking at this year, under normal adversarial bargaining, we would have been fighting off rollbacks. What we have is an ongoing process with no rollbacks and some advances in the work contract," he continued.

The CFA views the agreement with CSU to protect benefits in its current contract from budget cuts as a major accomplishment in itself, given the current setbacks that the public sector bargaining groups have suffered lately. The new provisions will be added if they can be funded by the state.

Highlights of the new contract

 Faculty pay raises averaging around 10 percent over the life of the contract.

 Improved disability and den-tal insurance programs, bringing benefits for faculty up to par with those of university administrators.

 Sabbatical leaves provided for all faculty as they become eli-

• Establishment of a state committee to develop and assess affirmative action plans and programs for recruitment and retention of non-tenured women, minority, and disabled faculty in under-represented departments.

 Improved employee assistance programs, such as counseling programs to help at the onset of disabilities, drug or drinking problems and to prevent disci-plinary problems.

 Gradual reductions in faculty workloads to gradually approach a standard nine-unit workload.

 Give added job security to lecturers with six or more years of CSU service guaranteeing them reappointment for the duration of the agreement.

Members of the audience expressed concerns about the legality of the affirmative action provisions of the contract and about the affect on tenure that giving lecturers job security would Nichelson explained that both the lawyers for the union and administration have checked the legality of the affirmative action clauses and have found them acceptable. He also addressed the question of tenure.

"It's true that the system is overutilizing temporary faculty. Right now, 52 percent of our teaching staff is temporary, some since 1952 and thousands have worked for CSU for over 10 years. By giving lecturers job security, we're making it more and more expensive for the system to hire too many of them instead of full-time faculty," he said. Leonard Schwab, CFA legislative committee member explained to the group the importance of becoming more involved in politics. He suggested that CFA members talk to their friends and coworkers about the possibility of replacing state legislators who will not run again because of the passage of Proposition 140.

Now you can afford to dream in color.

If you thought that finding a color Macintosh* system you could afford was just a dream, then the new, affordable Macintosh LC is a dream come true.

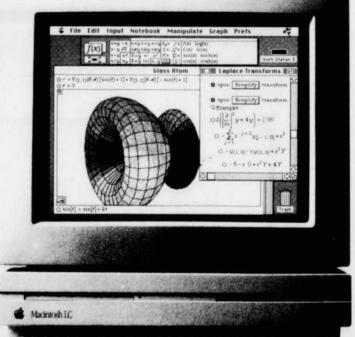

The Macintosh LC is rich in color. Unlike many computers that can display only 16 colors at once, the Macintosh LC expands your palette to 256 colors. It also comes with a microphone and new sound-input technology that lets you personalize your work by adding voice or other sounds.

Like every Macintosh computer, the LC is easy to set up and easy to master. And it runs thousands of available applications that all work in the same. consistent way-so once you've learned one program, you're well on your way to learning them all. The Macintosh LC even lets you share information with someone who uses a different type of computer-thanks to the versatile Apple* SuperDrive, which can read from and write to Macintosh, MS-DOS, OS/2, and Apple II floppy disks.

Take a look at the Macintosh LC and see what it gives you. Then pinch yourself.

It's better than a dream—it's a Macintosh.

Apple introduces the Macintosh LC.
