Concerts keep UPD on its toes

By Jason Meagher Spartan Daily Staff Writer

Ever wondered what all the extra police at Event Center concerts do? Here is a look at what SJSU's university police department did during the past three concerts at the Event Center.

Last Monday, Cypress Hill provided university police with a busy night. Six minors were cited for possession of alcohol and six people were cited on drug-related charges. UPD made three traffic stops and two people were cited for illegally selling concert t-shirts and scalping tickets. UPD had 11 officers and 2 cadets working the Cypress Hill concert.

Of special interest that night was a car with expired registration that was towed for having 28 outstanding parking tickets.

When Lenny Kravitz came to town the next night, UPD cited nine people under 21 for possession of alcohol and one person for possession of drugs. Three scalpers and three t-shirt bootleggers were cited. Two arrests were made cadets working the Lenny Kravitz concert.

On Saturday night Pearl am kept UPD fairly busy. Eight minors were cited for possession of alcohol, one person needed medical assistance (related to alcohol) and three people were stopped for scalping tickets and selling bootlegged concert tickets. There was one car accident and two people were cited for being drunk. Five arrests were made that night. UPD had 7 officers and 9

cadets working the Pearl Jam

"We were kept busy," said Bruce Lowe, UPD spokesper-

By comparison, UPD devoted 17 officers and three cadets to the homecoming football game.

UPD hires officers from other departments for big events such as the Event Center concerts. UPD contracts officers from San Jose police department, Hayward State university police and San Francisco State university

Editorial Build new homes disaster-proofed

Houses should be built according to their environment.

Whether earthquakes, floods, mud slides or brush fires, there is a major disaster in California nearly every year. These disasters displace hundreds or thousands of people and cost hundreds of millions of dollars.

With the fast-growing population of the state comes the growth of large tracts of cookie-cutter houses plopped down on the landscape with little or no thought given to how these homes fit into the natural environment in which they are placed.

These modern housing structures only add to the potential for destruction when disaster strikes because they are viewed apart from the land on which they stand.

It is entirely possible to build homes which fit their environment. A wide range of building techniques and materials are available, ranging from traditional to space-age, which can be used to build homes that are not only unconditionally safe, except for a nuclear attack, but comfortable, beautiful and efficient as well.

Many homes built in the medieval period, especially along the Scottish border with England, were fire-proof by necessity and are still standing.

Engineering has reached the point where build-ing materials can be designed to meet almost any requirement. If building codes are changed, economies of scale would make them cost-effective virtually overnight.

The cost of constructing such a house might seem prohibitive at first, but in the long run it would cost less than replacing all the homes cur-rently destroyed by disasters. A house that will stand through fire, flood and earthquake for a thousand years, keeping its occupants safe from harm, is a worthwhile investment.

Forest justice served in France

French deer decided enough was enough: It's about time the hunted had a fair chance against the hunter.

Flushed out into the open, the panic-stricken deer charged the hunter, goring him. Accord-ing to the Associated Press, the hunter, a French police captain, never got off a shot and bled to death in minutes. The French hunter's life, like that of all living things, was valuable, but the incident certainly raises questions about whether hunting is really a sport. In other words, score one for

...forget about using guns... This is mano-a-bunny.'

Hunters call themselves sportsmen." But if hunting really was a sport, the hunted would have a fighting chance. The French deer had the right idea. The alternative is to ban hunting altogether, in the interest of fairness to the animals. That's the easy way out. Instead, we need to take a more creative approach so this segment of society can enjoy its little pleasures in life.

So here are the new and improved rules for hunting, giv-ing the animals just a little bit more of an edge.

In the case of deer hunting, instead of using high-powered rifles, hunters should tape Buck knives (no pun intended) to their heads and fight deer-style. While the deer would have a strategic advantage in speed, size and antler length, humans are far more intelligent and should have no trouble going head-to-head with a six-point buck. Charge.

Small game like rabbits, and birds like ducks or doves, are severely over-matched. Rabbits, cute and furry as they are, are no match for a hungry hunter with a gun. Instead of flushing cute bunnies out of the bush with dogs, rabbit hunters should have to crawl through the brush on their hands and knees.

The reasons behind shooting birds out of the sky have always been a mystery to me'

And forget about using guns. Rabbits fight by kicking and the hunters should too. By the way — leave the dogs and the car-rots at home. This is mano-a-

The reasons behind shooting birds out of the sky have always been a mystery to me. After all, there is nothing more beautiful than seeing a dove soaring through the sky on invisible cur-rents of air. That is, unless you're my father, brother or uncle, who think the best way to see a dove is on a plate glazed with teriyaki sauce. So much for

Since the majority of duck hunters use duck calls, it's only fair that the ducks have some sort of call to distract the hunters. Something like, "Hey, pass the beer," would be a good one. Or even, "Hey, isn't that Kim Bassinger?" would distract the hunters enough to let the ducks escape and get an early start on their trip south.

If hunters can figure out a way to fly with the birds they want to hunt — without planes or helicopters - then more power to them. If not, they'll just have to settle for chasing birds on the ground and trying to catch them in their teeth.

The key to turning hunting into a "real" sport is making the hunter do more work. No more of this sitting in a duck blind sucking down beers. Enough of sending out a pack of dogs to flush out the game. Hunters, if you're going to do it, get out into the bush and chase the game on your own two legs. Better yet, stay at home and leave Bambi alone. He's mad, and he knows how to hurt you.

But for those of you bent on hunting something, stick to your own species; go to a singles' bar.

Campus Viewpoint In the spirit of Democracy

Editor:

Equality, according to the dictionary, is to be of the same quantity, value, quality and status as another. This notion of equality is one of the fundamental principles upon which democracy was founded.

Thus, in the spirit of equality, all who live under the umbrella of democracy are entitled to equal representation, equal access to governing and the right to have their voices heard regardless of race or gender.

From these entitlements it is quite in order to believe that political leadership within a democratic society should not be limited to one particular race

Since the inception of the United States, political power has been dominated by white males who did not only prevent non-whites from equal participation in government for years but deprived their female citizens of equality by withholding their right to vote for 133 years.

Therefore, as the U.S. continues its campaign for a democra-tic world outside its border, the question that keeps coming to mind is, when is America going to elect her first female presi-

It is been known for long that the notion that only men are capable of leadership (a wholly western concept) is not only pure hogwash but a political propaganda drummed up out of the fear of competition. Most countries of the world realized the futility of such propaganda and has since given in to the reality that there are women who are capable of better leadership than many men - countries such as Israel whose female premier, Golda Meir, was as capable a leader as anyone else. Then, there was India who, though traditionally male-oriented, elected Indira Gandhi as Prime Minister. Britain followed with Margaret Thatcher, Pak-istan with Benazir Bhutto, Bangladesh with Mrs. Zia Ul Rahman, Nicaragua with Violetta Chamoro, e.t.c.

All the above mentioned countries, with the exception of Britain, are supposed to be less developed countries with demo-cratic ideologies portrayed as inferior to that of the United States

Yet, these countries have tolerated more equal participation of their women in political lead-ership than the U.S. How, then, can the U.S. claim democratic superiority over those countries where women are even given the same equal pay as men?
As I watched Hilary Clinton's address at the congressional hearing on health care the other day, I couldn't help but wonder if she wouldn't be a better and capable president than her husband. Yet, when I discussed this with some of my American colleagues, I got something of a cold sneer.

Mrs. Clinton tackled the most complex project of any adminis-tration — health care — and she did it with grace. So, why can't she be president? Let us remember that one who must convince others to brush their hair must first wash his/her own. After all, charity begins at home. Let us practice democra-cy here first, before persuading others to follow.

Campus Viewpoint Satanists coerce innocent children

My response to the controversy question from Oct. 28, on whether children should be able to wear costumes to school on Halloween: it's affirmative. Yet I have come to question the wisdom of continuing to celebrate a holiday that is at its least "dark" and, at its worst, a symbol of satanic worship.

In light of the many recently-reported cases of ritual abuse, that seem to peek at this time of the year, I think we should consider replacing Halloween with a lighter and brighter holiday.

The 1987 case involving a teacher, a lieutenant colonel and his wife at the Presidio Child Development Center, located in San Francisco, was just one case where Satanic worship lead to the abuse of several children.

Other cases have been reported and documented throughout the country. It is my feeling Satanic groups use the Halloween holiday to support their deviant behavior and manipulate the minds of children who they coerce.

While "National Costume Day" doesn't quite seem to make the grade, I'm sure their is something we could come up with that would satisfy the need of both children and adults for some vicarious fun once a year without implying support for evil practices.

Campus Viewpoint Cloning brings up practical questions

A few days ago, I learned a scientist cloned human embryos (splitting single embryos into identical twins or triplets) for the first time. Many thoughts went through my head. My first thought was of the movie "Jurassic Park," in which one scene explained an experiment of cloning dinosaurs. In reality, it is now happening to human beings. This tonic, of course, opens a to human beings. This topic, of course, opens a range of practical and ethical questions.

My stomach turned when I read a newspaper explaining the "advantages" of cloning. One report said that "since human embryos can be frozen and used at a later date, it could be possible for parents to have a child and then years later, used cloned, frozen embryos to give birth to an identical twin.'

Does this sound manipulative and selfish? This is not all what the report said. It continued:

"Embryo cloning is wonderful so that parents might be able to save identical copies of embryos so that, if their child ever needed an organ transplant, the mother could give birth to the child's identical twin, a perfect match for organ donation." Another report said, "Parents could keep a frozen embryo as a backup in case their child died, so they could create a perfect replacement.

After reading these reports, the "advantages" sound pretty cold and selfish. Of course, each one of us has to draw the line somewhere on what is right or wrong. It seems that those lines stretch out further and further each year. I won't be surprised if the cloning of human beings will be "acceptable" for the social norm in the near future. Please think about where you draw the line and the effect it will have on you, your children, and future generations.

Environmentalists want forest service to make good on promises

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - in spotted owl habitat on Environmental groups are angry the Clinton Administration hasn't made good on promises to increase protection for fish and wildlife habitat in return for freeing some timber from the spotted owl injunc-

The groups sent a letter Monday to Assistant Secretary of Agriculture James R. Lyons expressing their strong concern that the Forest Service has yet take another look at how much riparian zone is protected along streams or re-evaluate existing timber sales for habitat protection.

These are matters of urgent concern for us because in the absence of direction from you and the regional foresters on these issues, logging is proceeding now on many timber sales that should be re-evaluated," said the letter signed by Bonnie Phillip Howard of Philchuck Audubon Society.

The letter was co-signed by 12 environmental organizations involved in the lawsuit that brought a halt to logging national forests in the Northwest pending creation of a plan to save the threatened bird from extinction.

The Department of Agriculture didn't immediately return a phone call for comment on the letter.

Environmentalists agreed last month to free 83 million board feet of timber in existing sales from the injunction barring logging in owl habitat. The deal must be approved by a federal judge.

In exchange, the administra-tion promised to consider buying back some old-growth timber sales that contain important spotted owl habitat and shun legislation that would shield new timber sales from legal challenges.

"We have tried for some time to resolve this issue without calling public attention to it, but we have been unsuccessful," the letter read.

The deal split environmentalists, with some demanding no logging in old growth

"If I had the slightest clue that people were going to take it as they did, I wouldn't have done it," said Andrea Espe. She used $12 worth of bleached muslin to sew robes and hoods for her son and a friend.

A third boy wore blackface and a noose. He and one of the robed boys were voted "best couple" at a party last Wednesday by students at Yosemite High School, about 150 miles southeast of San Francisco in the Sierra foothills.

Principal Bob LaBelle later said the trio should have been turned away at the door. LaBelle sent letters to all students saving racial intolerance and advocacy of violence aren't acceptable at school.

Espe said the boys' intentions were innocent.

'We aren't racist people. We don't know anybody in the Klan," she said on Monday.

She said the lynching theme was hatched after the boys rented a 1989 movie called "Fletch Lives," a sequel to the movie "Fletch."

In the movie, Chevy Chase plays an investigative reporter who inherits a house in the deep south. In one scene, he dances on his overgrown lawn with a small assemblage of Klan members too incompetent to carry out any threats. Reaction to the boys' costumes was mixed. Some were offended.

SJSU swim team member

By Kira Ratmansky

Kathrin Lammers strokes through with a style of her own.

Two weeks ago, Lammers took first place in the Pier 2 Pier race in Santa Cruz. The race was a six-mile swim in the ocean without a wet suit. She swam it in two hours and 32 minutes

If that does not seem like enough, Lammers has also given several triathlons in the area a try. In a triathlon, athletes are required to swim, ride a bike and run competitively. "I won a couple of them," Lammers said with a shy grin. "It's hard. There was one on Mt.Tam (Mt. Tamalpais in Marin) that was a 2,000-foot bike ride up. It's a lot different from boards around the pool."

competition in the pool."

SJSU swim team coaches RoseAnn Benson and Brian Nabeta said they are excited to have Lammers be a part of the

"She is very versatile," Benson said. "Anybody that can go six miles in the ocean water without a wet suit is special. Her endurances are very impressive.

Lammers comes from Hamburg, Germany where she started swimming around age 5. She came to SJSU in the summer of 1992 to study physiology and pre-med but did not start swimming with the SJSU team until this semester.

"I just opened a book and picked a place to go to school," she said. "I did not know anything about the universities

Although Lammers is taking three science lab classes this semester, she still finds time to practice with the team.

"It's a lot of work here. I'm busy all the time," she said. Lammers swims 100 and 200-meter free style relays and individual medleys which combine free style, breast stroke, back stroke and butterfly stroke. The IMs usually require 200-meter leg of each stroke.

"I'm not a sprinter and I'm not a long distance swimmer," she said. "I'm more middle dis-

The training is something Lammers takes very seriously. said Nabeta. She works hard to stay strong.

Lammers said that she works hard because there is more discipline among local students as opposed to her swim club in Germany.

"It's different here. It's kind of strict," she said. "When a coach says do a 400-meter warmup, everybody does it. There, everybody just throws kick

But memories of the German swim club make Lammers nostalgic. She misses her friends and her mother.

"I don't think my mom is too happy now," Lammers said. "She is kind of lonely. But I bought her a dog before I left."

Lammers is trying to organize a trip home for Christmas. She definitely wants to come home next summer so she could see her friends.

"Our swim club (in Germany) is like a big family. Wednesdays we would go to the movies and Fridays we would go out and drink or whatever," Lammers

Here, the swim coaches ask team members not to drink. The request is part of their training and commitment to the Coaches, however, do not put restrictions on the swimmers' diets. Lammers is free to eat whatever she wants, and she said that's a good thing because she loves chocolate.

The team's trip to Reno for a swim meet last weekend held no dietary constraints and it was a blast for Lammers.

"It was new for me. They had these big food buffets and I've never seen that before," she said. There was ice cream everywhere. It was like heaven.

Lammers came to SJSU on her own, without any help from an exchange student organization. Before her coming to America, she worked as a social worker and a market research specialist.

Lammers is yet to decide what she wants to do once she is done at SJSU. Medical school is something she has considered, but the price for education is fairly high.

One thing she is sure about is that she wants to keep swimming.

Woods takes the lead in Bruin golf classic

SJSU junior Steve Woods was the only player to match or better par in each of the first two rounds to take a one shot lead heading into the final 18 holes of the Pioneer Electronics-Bruin Golf Classic on Monday.

Woods, at 142 and looking for his first win at the major college level, had an even par 72 and a two-under par 70 on the par 72, 7,070-yard Redhawk Golf

He holds a one-shot lead over UCLA's Eddy Lee, who shot the day's low score, a three-under par 69 in the afternoon round for a 143 total.

Hawaii's Mike Pavao and Randy McCracken of Oregon are three shots back at 145 and are tied for third. Woods' scores helped SJSU to a second place team standing. The Spartans have a 594 score after 36 holes, one shot behind BYU.

Besides Woods, SJSU fresh-man Aaron Oberholser is in the top 10, tied for seventh at 147.

Four teams are within three shots of BYU and three more are within eight shots of the leader. UC Irvine is third at 595 and USF is fourth at 595 in the 15-team field.

TABA, Egypt (AP) — The Palestine Liberation Organization indefinitely suspended talks with Israel today, saying Israel did not intend to withdraw from occupied lands.

Nabil Shaath, the chief Palestinian negotiator, said Israel's interpretation of the word "withdrawal" really meant redeployment.

This is the first major snag since the talks began three weeks ago. But both sides seemed interested in resuming the talks, and the Palestinians might have walked out to demonstrate their anger over the Israeli position on withdrawal.

accord signed Sept. 13.

'We feel that the Israeli interpretation of that agreement is quite failing to grasp the meaning of withdrawal and its requirements," Shaath said.

"The agreement provided for withdrawal by the Israeli forces from the Gaza Strip and the Jericho area, and not within the Gaza Strip and Jeri-cho area," Shaath said. "This is a withdrawal agreement and not a redeployment agreement.'

Today's dispute grew from maps and withdrawal plans the Israelis presented Monday.

In the autonomy agreement, the PLO ceded to Israel the right to maintain security over Israeli settlements in the vacated territories. How Israeli forces will provide that security emerged today as the key dispute. Shaath said at a news conference that the PLO interprets the accord as prohibiting Israel from leaving any troops in Gaza and Jericho. Shaath's news conference was held almost two hours after it was scheduled, reportedly because of a private meeting between Shaath and Maj.

Radical students attack U.S. Cultural Center

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) - Hundreds of radical students hurling rocks and firebombs attacked a U.S. Cultural Center in Kwangju on Tuesday, in the most serious anti-American protest in recent months.

At least 30 riot police and students were injured in fighting, the national Yonhap news agency said. Seven police vehicles were destroyed or damaged, reports said. There were no reported arrests.

The attack, the second in a week at the cultural center in the southern city, was held to mark the anniversary of the death of a Korean prostitute killed by an American soldier a year ago.

U.S. officials said about 500 students yelling "Yankee go home" stormed past riot police barricades and drove off police guards.

When protesters could not get inside the locked com-pound, they smashed the intercom on an outside gate, stole the sign for the center, and burned and destroyed a police bus and a police jeep, officials

There was no damage at the cultural center, which houses a library and meeting rooms, and there were no Americans at the center during the attack, U.S. officials said.

"Punishment for Markle," students yelled, according to the national news agency.

Burundi's president tortured before death

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) -Burundi's president was beaten in the face with a gun and stabbed with a bayonet before being shot to death by rebels, his foreign minister said in a telephone interview.

Sylvestre Ntibantunganya, who spoke Monday from his refuge at the French embassy in Burundi, said the bodies of Burundi's slain president, Melchior Ndadaye, and some of his close dignitaries had been recovered and would be buried soon with honor.

Ndadaye, who became Burundi's first democratically elected president in June, was killed Oct. 21 in a bloody coup attempt staged by rebels in the Tutsi-dominated army. The putsch ended when senior military officers failed to back the takeover.

But the effort sparked vicious clashes in the small, central African nation between its majority Hutu and minority Tutsi tribes, whose centuries-old animosity periodically has erupted in massacres in the past.

Yeltsin approves new defensive Russian military doctrine

MOSCOW (AP) - President Boris Yeltsin approved Russia's first post-Soviet military doctrine Tuesday, establishing a defensive posture in which no nation is considered an enemy.

Military leaders, demoralized after the 1991 collapse of the Communist Soviet Union, had demanded quick approval of the new doctrine payment for crushing Yeltsin's opponents in parliament last month.

It was not known what concessions the government might have made to the military, which has complained about shrinking budgets, arms reductions and inadequate housing for soldiers.

The document is a major turnaround in military strategy from the Cold War, when the Red Army was spread throughout Eastern Europe to strike at Western Europe.

No longer is the military responsible for helping export communism and supporting communist allies around the world, such as the standoff with the United States that brought the world to the brink of nuclear war during the 1962 Cuban missile crisis.

Shining a light on darkness

Luz and Alejandro Agudelo brought a picture of their son and placed it on the altar. Andresito Agudelo was 5 years old when he drowned in a lake on a family trip.

Through his picture and the lighting of a candle for Andresito, all of those reunited around the altar shared his parents' pain and loss in a community-healing ceremony.

María Elena Cubian came to the offering to see how Day of the Dead was celebrated in a different culture. Originally from Peru, she had never seen an altar ofrenda (offering) before.

Machu Picchu Gallery of the Americas in San Jose presented "Honoring Living and Loving Memories" last Thursday. According to Olga Enciso-Smith, owner and director of the gallery, this celebration is a contribution to the community.

The altar was made in the tradition of Mexican celebration Day of the Dead, with a profusion of colors, aromas and folklore artifacts such as a tree of life, masks, grinding stones and colorful candle holders. Brian Marco Smith, a student at West Val-ley College, and SJSU art student Tina Ng helped Smith construct of the altar. They incorporated elements from other Latin American countries, since Day of the Dead is not only celebrated in Mexico, but in other Central and South American countries as well.

Día de los muertos, or Day of the Dead, is a pre-Hispanic traditional ceremony that is supposed to date back to the Olmecs in Mexico 3,000 years ago. Their conception of life and death was very different from the European notion that came later.

Life was supposed to be a temporary situation where people came to suffer. When someone died, they made a trip to the valley of the dead to get to one of the 13 heavens. Life was considered a dream and death was real life; in some poems death was compared to the awakening.

It is for this reason that Day of the Dead celebration has a different spirit than its Christian counterpart, All Souls Day. There is a syncretic fusion, or encounter between Spanish Catholic belief and indigenous world view. Day of the Dead is celebrated in Mexico with candies in the form of skulls and skeletons.

A profusion of cempázuchitl (bright orange marigold flowers) adorn the altars and graves, symbolizing the constant renovation of life. As the flower's seeds are in the petals, when the flowers grow and dry, the seeds fall to the floor and grow again, repeating the life-death-life cycle. The celebration of Day of the Dead has become increasingly important in the San Jose community, Smith said. This is the seventh year she has prepared an altar in her said. The professor didn't have that kind of support and recovery was taking him longer. Smith realized there was a need in the community for this kind of ceremony. Every year she invites the relatives and friends of those who have died that year to remember and honor them. "Some of us could not attend the funerals of a loved one because they were far away in another country and news arrived too late,' Smith said. This ceremony gives an oppor-tunity to close a cycle and allows the person to say goodbye, she said. This time, she included a picture of César Chávez, a farm worker leader who died earlier this year. Smith also wanted to commemorate the children who were massacred by terrorists in the central rain forest of
