Fee increase vote puts pressure on legislature

By Kamilah A. Boone Spartan Daily Staff Writer

In a budgetary maneuver designed to compel the state government to allocate $30 million to the California State University system, CSU trustees voted for a 10 percent fee increase, raising tuition from $1,584 to $1,740 yearly for full-time students.

Steve McCarthy, CSU public affairs director, said the trustees included the tuition raise as a technical budget measure and plan to ask the state legislature for the $30 million the fee increase will amount to.

"The resolution basically said that we are trying to get $30 million," McCarthy said. "It's a complicated scenario."

"Legally, we had to do it," he said. "The effort is to get the $30 million. Students may have to pay more in the event that we don't get state money, but the odds are that they won't."

Ted Muhlhauser, chair of legislative affairs for California State Student Association (CSSA), disagreed.

"There's a very good chance that fees will be raised," he said. "The only way we can keep our fees down now is by going to Sacramento.

"They're lazy," Muhlhauser said of the trustees. "They raise fees with impunity because they know we (students) have no other recourse. They're taking the easy way out. They could cut costs or get outside contributions, but they didn't look into that."

The $30 million is needed to pay for library services and books, deferred purchases, inflation and increased enrollment.

"The student increase is needed mostly for quality," he said. "We've had to put a lot on hold."

McCarthy said the increase will See Fees, page 4

Administrators talk about racist fliers

By Rowena T. Millado Spartan Daily Staff Writer

A day after racist fliers were anonymously placed in the mailboxes of some SJSU financial aid employees, the department's director said Tuesday that hate speech will not be tolerated.

"It was a terrible (flier)," said financial aid director Donald Ryan. "The university, the division of student affairs and this office are appalled that something like this happened."

Ryan was made aware of the fliers by a staff member, Monday. He suspects the flier came from within the financial aid office because of a mark that indicated it came from an office copy machine.

Ryan called a staff meeting

Caret addresses wide variety of campus issues

By Sloan Hruby Spartan Daily Staff Writer

President Robert L. Caret's news conference Tuesday brought to light many of the pending issues that will affect the campus in the future. The issues addressed ranged from the ongoing battle against racism to how SJSU plans to incorporate technology during the next six years.

With the ongoing controversy surrounding Michael Day's racial slur to Monday's racial fliers distributed to SJSU employee boxes, Caret was adamant about solving what he called "the existent problem that has been around for decades."

One of Caret's major themes since assuming office has been to concentrate on community and climate. Caret thought the overall atmosphere on campus was "good," and said he was making an effort to "bump into students and talk" in an attempt "ease tensions that had not been addressed in the past."

"We will not tolerate racial indignities, and such matters will be sanctioned to the fullest legal extent," Caret called the issue "detrimental" and said he has mandated training teams throughout the campus to discuss the problem.

Organized with a list of demands and signs that read: "Spartan Sold Out," "Principles don't have price tags," and "A free press is a fair

The protest was in reaction to a pro-life advertisement supplement that ran in the Spartan Daily on Nov.

A.S. special election being held despite conflicts with state law

By Charlene Cook Spartan Daily Staff Writer

A special election is being held today and Thursday despite several procedural problems that could have allowed it not to happen.

Associated Students President Marilyn Charell took her concerns to an attorney who represents A.S. to clarify the problems that occurred in this election as well as the Oct. 17-18 special election.

Charell issued a news release that said, "The A.S. election codes have been violated and are in conflict with the state law pertaining to fee increase elections."

CORRECTION

Due to a reporter's error in Tuesday's issue of the Spartan Daily, Wil Cason, A.S. director of students rights and responsibilities, was misquoted as saying, "We've already had elections on a similar issue before and they failed. I think this election is a waste of students' money." Johnathan Wilson, A.S. director of community affairs said this statement. We apologize for the error.

Former politician urges community empowerment

By Ginger McDonald Spartan Daily Staff Writer

Former congressman Norman Y. Mineta spoke to a standing-room-only crowd of SJSU faculty, students and local and national political dignitaries Monday night in the Morris Dailey Auditorium.

Political Science Professor Terry Christensen said, "Mr. Mineta's presentation is the second in the Don Edwards Lecture series in Politics and History to be given at SJSU. The event was sponsored by the political science, history and Asian-American studies departments."

Mineta's lecture began with a reflection of his childhood, his achievements as a young adult and, what is most familiar to most, his 20 years as a California congressman.

Actions Neatly Chained

Suing the seeds of truth in numbers

I don't care if statistics lie — in every lie there is a seed of truth. In every number, then, is a whole poppy seed bagel of what we need to know.

That's why I love having access to Mead Data Corporation's Lexis/Nexis system. Among thousands of resources, it holds a library of major media text from newspapers, national news broadcasts, and magazines of the last 15 years.

Take a key word. Stick it in. Out pops numbers that tell a certain truth.

Some people use it for the full text references. I don't have any papers to write. I have truths to tell. I use Lexis/Nexis for the numbers.

The Numbers

Through Monday morning, the ultra-hyped word Internet occurs in 133,684 articles in the last two years of text entered into the Nexis library. Good old television still occurs 727,845 times. That tells us something about where our culture has been. It also tells us where it might be heading. Lexis/Nexis is so cool.

The university knows it's cool too. SJSU pays thousands of dollars to Mead so we can log on, jack in, and get connected. Information like this is valuable. There are a few terminals in the Clark library that connect students to Lexis/Nexis. There is also only one password for users to access the service through the Internet.

The Lying Problem

This is where the problem lies. To access Lexis/Nexis via the Internet we, the students of SJSU, need an access password. The catch is we have to register with the librarians in the Clark Library to get it. To get it, you have to sign an agreement that you won't tell the password to another soul, even if that soul resides in an "authorized" user.

Just telling me not to makes me want to print the code. I want to tell you a truth you have the right — you paid your fees — to know. But this is a modern world. Truth isn't important any more if there is a legal agreement. How else can corporations make a buck? I'm feeling so very Marxist this morning.

Still, I won't print the code. I don't need a lawsuit. It's unlikely, considering that I'm a college student and all, but I may actually need to use the library again someday.

I can't help it. I need to tell you. The password is [redacted] (editor's note: the Spartan Daily has taken the liberty of protecting Mr. Carder from himself. Thank you for your patience). Dial in to lex.meaddata.com and try it. I'm telling you the truth.

More Nexis/Lexis Truths

If you ever find the code or you swing by the Clark Library you might learn the following things about your culture — at least your culture in the files of Mead Corporation.

In the last two years of articles in the Lexis/Nexis library, the word penis emerges 9,026 times. Vagina springs forth in only 2,600 articles. Phallo-centrism?

Justin Carder
Spartan Daily
Staff Writer

... in every lie there is a seed of truth. In every number, then, is a whole poppy seed bagel of what we need to know.

Jesus Christ nails 17,553 articles, Buddha, 6,560, Allah, 3,677, Robert Anton Wilson, 25, and Gomer Pyle, 518.

The deadly ebola virus is present 2,997 times. Lyme disease crawls forward with 2,081 articles. The equally deadly pimples pops up with 1,905 stories.

Speaking of pus, Republicans see the light of day in 528,429 articles. Democrats are only exposed 372,019 times. Pesky little H. Ross Perot rides in with 912 occurrences.

In other areas that dull your senses, nicotine wafts about with 12,035 entries blunted by the 41,210 stories about marijuana. My favorite drug, Diet Coke, bubbles up with only 2,872 articles.

Lexis/Nexis can also teach us about our city and the people there that matter.

Robert Caret proceeds through with six entries. In one of them you can learn that he once used his chemistry knowledge to act as consultant for a company on the odor of au jus sauce for roast beef. Susan Hammer merits 313 articles. Justin Carder will net you one whole entry (about an unfortunate individual who graduated from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln and will undoubtedly have his credit rating damaged by me eventually). Mickey Mouse beats us all with 9,938 articles.

You can learn about your university and its relative importance in the academic world. San Jose State University emerges with 1,208 articles. Stanford towers over us with 58,932 entries. No wonder Silicon Valley forgets about poor little SJSU.

San Jose as a whole just doesn't get much respect. With its cultural landscape, San Francisco out-classes San Jose by 310,707 articles. It's not time for civic panic. We're still 75,620 ahead of Ukiah.

Sometimes, you can find the strangest things if you pick around enough. The world is a fascinating thing and Lexis/Nexis reflects that. For example, even the very mature term, boogers, sticks out with 718 stories. But don't worry. There are 2,541 stories about Kleenex.

And that's the truth, or at least, one of them.

Fairness demands an impartial press

Contained in the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America is a phrase that is of particular importance to journalists in this country.

It says, "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech or of the press." From this, it might be concluded that we, as journalists, think that "anything goes" when it comes to what will be put into the paper from day to day.

But right alongside that fundamental legal cornerstone of modern journalism, are the journalistic principles (popular notions aside, those words do not form an oxymoron) of fairness and impartiality. To the degree that it is possible, journalists are obligated to present the news from the events they witness in as unbiased and objective fashion as they can.

Here at the Spartan Daily, we often receive letters that are quite strident in their opposition to or support for a given issue. Some of these letters are articulate, thoughtfully argued and well-written; others are not. Some of them we agree with; many we do not. But, except in cases of libel or obscenity, we try to run them all. To do otherwise would not be fair.

The First Amendment allows the editors of the Daily to pick and choose whichever letters we want. If we wanted to, for example, we could silence all opposition to, or support for, affirmative action. We could decide for our readers which position they would be allowed to read. It would be quite legal.

However, that would not be fair. It would not be fair to supporters of affirmative action, nor its detractors. Most importantly, it would be a gross disservice to the readers of the newspaper, who would be deprived of the opportunity to critically evaluate the arguments made by both sides in the ongoing debate.

That point should be especially significant to students at SJSU. One of the reasons students are presumably here is to prepare themselves to enter into a full range of participation in the democratic process.

Here at the Daily, we do not believe that serving the student body requires protecting them from the divergence of political and social agendas which exist in the real world. To do so would not only be a form of censorship — it would deprive the student body of the opportunity to critically evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of the political forces in the field. Unpopular and unfashionable political demands and positions need to be heard and grappled with — if only that they be more resolutely renounced.

In 1644 essay "Areopagitica," poet John Milton wrote the following: "Let [truth] and falsehood grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worse, in a free and open encounter?"

We, the editorial staff of the Spartan Daily, heartily agree.

Fairness demands an impartial press.

Diversity policy must be upheld

Mr. Michael Jordan is yet another voice of misunderstanding in the debate over the ROTC program at San Jose State. (Letters to the Editor, Nov. 8). While I recognize that I cannot eradicate the prejudice displayed by Mr. Jordan in his article, I can hope to shed some light on the real issues surrounding the almost 15 year battle to get the university to comply with its own non-discrimination policy.

My battle never was about the ROTC and AFROTC. It was about the university policy which states that we are not allowed to discriminate against our students or employees based on a number of identifiable characteristics such as race, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation and a whole host of others. The ROTC and the AFROTC programs are not exempt from this policy, any more than Linguistics, English, Engineering, etc. are exempt. The university has a moral responsibility to uphold this policy. The battle never was to get rid of the military programs. They are the ones who have a policy that enables them to discriminate. Therefore, they are in violation of our university policy. The military programs left this campus, taking with them their very excellent leadership training programs, because they demand to maintain the right to limit a group of our students' academic freedom and the right to openly participate in their education under the "don't ask, don't tell" policy of the Department of Defense regulations.

The fact that Santa Clara University, an organization of the Catholic Church which has always been more than willing to discriminate against gays and lesbians, was willing to take our students means that our students who wish to complete their training will have the opportunity to do so. If you had checked further, Mr. Jordan, I think you would have found that the amount of money we gained from these two programs, which will now be transferred to Santa Clara University, will barely cover the costs of operation. I think if you had bothered to check, you would have found that SJSU actually spent more money to maintain these programs than it gained.

Regarding your perception that we have lost a leadership training opportunity, my hope that a significant portion of what we are doing here is training students to become leaders of tomorrow. If the military programs are the only places where students can learn to be leaders, then the university is failing to fill one of its most important missions. Not to mention that there are a whole host of people who do not desire or are not able to participate in these programs. Following your line of argument, I suppose they will never be able to be effective leaders.

Finally, according to your authoritative base of information as to the numbers of gays and lesbians in the U.S., I suppose you would develop policies that would only protect people whose numbers were above a certain standard. In effect, non-discrimination policies would only be based on numbers of people in a certain class. Since the U.S. population of gays and lesbians, according to you, is "only 6%," it is therefore alright to discriminate.

Gays and lesbians have spilt their blood on every battlefield on which this country has fought. Leonard Matlovich, who is buried at Arlington National Cemetery, has this inscription on his tombstone: "They decorated me for killing a man and discharged me for loving another." Mr. Jordan, the real question you should ask yourself is, "Would I have written this hyperbolic letter if the military programs refused to allow full and open participation of any other group such as Latino and Latina students, Jews or Catholics?"

Variety of federal facilities shut down by government

Associated Press — Hunters can still look for game at the Kesterson wildlife refuge, but tourists can't wander through the former federal prison on Alcatraz Island.

The partial shutdown of the federal government created a mixture of facility closures and program cutbacks Tuesday as thousands of California workers were furloughed by a federal budget deadlock.

"I really don't want to go home. I want to stay here. I want to work," Anita Davis, a Department of Veterans Affairs staffer in Los Angeles, said as she headed home.

"I don't like this idea of them closing it down. It's not right. It's not good for the people, and it's not good for me. I've got a lot of work to do up there."

Asked what she would do with her free time, she said, "Get my hair done."

Other federal workers, faced with the prospect of several days off without pay, said they were heading for the unemployment office to apply for jobless insurance benefits.

"I heard that we are going to be off five days minimum," said Eddie J. Porter, a supply analyst at McClellan Air Force Base in Sacramento. "That will be a severe impact as far as I am concerned. I've got to pay my mortgage."

The Golden Gate National

Recreation Area shut down Alcatraz Island, Fort Point and a number of other visitor facilities in the San Francisco area, although officials said people could still use parks and beaches they could walk to.

"But the parking lots and facilities that serve those sites are closed," said Gilbert Soper, the recreation area's chief ranger.

People with tickets to visit Alcatraz were given the option of a refund or a free boat ride around San Francisco Bay, but that didn't satisfy many tourists who wanted to see the former federal prison.

"Everyone who comes here wants to sit in the cells, touch the bars or sit in solitary confinement," said ferry ticket manager Greg Revelli. "Now we can only tell them about it."

Yosemite officials closed down entrance stations, meaning that tourists could visit the national park without paying entrance fees. Ranger Kris Fister said campgrounds would stay open at least through Wednesday.

Roads and campgrounds were also open at Joshua Tree National Park, but restrooms and other facilities were closed. No one was answering the phones at Sequoia and Kings Canyon national parks.

The partial shutdown also closed Ronald Reagan's office in Los Angeles.

Chemical company to give out $180,000 in damages

1993 toxic spill sent thousands to hospital

MARTINEZ, Calif. (AP) — A judge has approved a $180 million out-of-court settlement in a 1993 toxic spill at Richmond's General Chemical plant that sent 24,000 people to hospitals.

Contra Costa Superior Court Judge Richard Patsey said in his 29-page ruling released Monday that "the overwhelming majority of the plaintiffs and claimants agreed to the terms..."

Under the settlement, most of the 62,000 claimants will receive no more than $3,500, said attorneys.

Their lawyers will do somewhat better, dividing up $40 million of the $180 million paid by General

Chemical. Fewer than 3,000 claimants opted out of the settlement, and the judge's ruling limits punitive damages for that group.

The leak occurred when workers at the plant were unloading a railroad tank car filled with oleum, a concentrated form of sulfuric acid. The tank car overheated and ruptured, spewing sulfur trioxide into the air for three hours.

More than 24,000 people went to hospitals complaining of breathing problems, burning eyes and nausea. About a dozen were hospitalized and one family blames the death of a 71-year-old man on the chemical exposure.

Minority enrollment plunges at UC law school

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Black and Hispanic enrollment has plunged 50 percent this year at the University of California's Hastings College of the Law, a school not covered by the UC Regents' recent orders against affirmative action.

Only nine blacks and 17 Hispanics enrolled at Hastings this September, about half of last year's totals for each group. The two groups made up 6 percent of the school's enrollment this year, 14 percent last year and 22 percent in 1993.

Asian enrollment declined from 64 to 58.

Hastings, in San Francisco, is part of the UC system but has its own board of trustees and was not affected by the regents' decision this summer to forbid consideration of race in university admissions, hiring and contracting.

According to figures compiled by The Recorder, a legal newspaper, minority enrollment showed no such dropoff at the other UC law schools.

Black and Hispanic enrollment was unchanged at 23 percent for UC Berkeley's Boalt Hall. UC Davis had a slight decline, from 19 to 17 percent. At UCLA, black and Hispanic enrollment rose from 20 percent in 1993 to an unusually high 30 percent in 1994, then fell back to 17 percent this year.

Hastings dean Mary Kay Kane said her school does not set enrollment goals or give admissions preferences based on race. She said the minority decline could have been caused by several factors but did not reflect any change in policy.

Hastings was two months late in mailing offers to admit new students this year because of the loss of two top admissions officers, Kane said. She also said the school offered places to about the same number of minority students this year but was accepted by only about half as many, a year after the school's ranking in an influential U.S. News & World Report survey dropped from 20th to 45 nationwide.

Kane said Hastings admits 70 percent of its students based mainly on grades and test scores, sets 20 percent of the spaces aside for disadvantaged students, without regard to race, and allocates the remaining 10 percent to a variety of non-racial diversity factors.

One critic of affirmative action programs, Santa Monica attorney Allan Favish, said he was skeptical about the school's assessment of its program. Favish, who has sued the university for allegedly failing to disclose racial considerations in law and medical school admissions, said his study of admissions policies concluded that all UC law schools give preferential treatment based on race.

Governor Wilson assailed for hosting women's conference

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Angered by Gov. Pete Wilson's opposition to affirmative action programs, a group of women business leaders withdrew their support from Tuesday's Wilson-hosted conference on women's issues.

"We ... cannot endorse a conference sponsored by a governor who claims to support women but who will go down in history for his leadership in undermining women," Karen Caplan, president of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Association of Women Business Owners, said Monday.

Nearly 7,000 people paid to attend what has been dubbed the "Call to Action" conference today in Long Beach. It's the fourth year Wilson has hosted the event, which even some critics acknowledge has become one of the nation's best forums on women's issues.

Conference-goers were greeted this morning by placard-carrying members of the National Organization for Women protesting Wilson's sponsorship of the event.

Wilson aides say they attempted to keep the event educational and nonpartisan by inviting more than 100 speakers and panelists with views on a wide range of issues.

The list included O.J. Simpson prosecutor Marcia Clark, who was expected to describe her experiences as a single, working mother. Even those who disagree with Wilson's policies were included in the program, said Rosalie Zalis, a senior Wilson policy adviser and chief organizer of the conference.

"We believe a conference is a legitimate place to discuss an issue that has two sides to it," Zalis said.

But Wilson's attacks on state affirmative action policies have made this year's conference controversial.

Wilson led efforts to end affirmative action policies in the University of California this year as an ex-officio member of the UC Board of Regents. The governor also abolished affirmative action advisory boards for a handful of state agencies under his control.

He has filed a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of state affirmative action hiring requirements. An appeals court has refused to hear the suit but the governor is appealing the ruling to the state Supreme Court.

also go to cover the 6,000 new students enrolled in the CSU system. Although McCarthy is optimistic there will not be a fee increase, it was necessary to put it in the budget in order to warn students that the cost of education will go up, as well as letting the schools know how much money is available. "Right now our campuses have to make plans for next fall," McCarthy said. "We need to know how many classes to offer." Muhlhauser, however, felt the proposal could have been averted. "Their argument is that students by law have to be notified of a fee increase, but they still didn't have to propose one. "It was completely unnecessary," he said. "Now the students have to overcome the lobby efforts of all the people who will benefit from fee increases. Students don't have the money to fund a lobby, and Sacramento doesn't treat students well. (The trustees) have hung the students out to dry." In addition to the fee increase, the trustees voted for a pay increase for top administrators, including 18 CSU presidents. President Robert L. Caret was one of the four presidents who did not receive a raise. SJSU spokeswoman Lori Stahl said the reason Caret did not receive a raise is because he has only been in office since February. CSSA chair Marc Levine felt the pay increases were justified. "We are a public institution," he said. "The issue is more symbolic. The money going to (the raises) is quite small."

Celine-Marie Pascale
Student and staff member

At one time during the protest, Pascale said the demonstrators would march to the Spartan Daily in Dwight Bentel Hall with a list of demands, which included an apology on the front page of the Daily.

However, when Jack Quinton, Spartan Daily advertising adviser was asked to answer questions, an explosion of disapproval erupted among the protesters.

"Yes, I reviewed the ads that go into the Spartan Daily," Quinton said. "We turn down a lot of the advertising that goes into the Daily, but this particular one did not violate our policies so we accepted it. If there's someone to blame, I guess I'm the person."

Quinton said he had consulted with other advisers and faculty members within the journalism and mass communications department concerning acceptance of the ad.

Jennifer Rycenga, professor of comparative religious studies, asked Quinton, "Did it ever to occur to you to circulate it among women's studies faculty who have been studying this issue for the last 30 years?"

Quinton and Lois Helmond, chair of the social science department, began discussing the ethics of advertising.

Quinton said because of the limited time, he was unable to consult various departments within SJSU. He stood by his beliefs that the advertising staff made a legal decision.

"We were in the business of running legal advertising," Quinton said.

"Basically anyone who has the money can advertise anything they want?" Helmond said.

communication channel open for discussion.

The protest ended with both sides agreeing to further discussions.

Kenton Morimoto, national manager for the Daily advertising department, said, besides the $400 that was paid for circulation of the ad, it did not violate any established policies of the advertising staff.

He said the advertising staff expected phone calls and letters in response to the ad, but he did not think the reaction would be this strong.

"We didn't think they were going to protest," Morimoto said.

Most of the phone calls the advertising staff received have been negative, Morimoto said. But he said the staff received phone calls from pro-lifers congratulating its actions and praising its courage to run the ad.

Morimoto said, "... When you advertise, you have to separate yourself. You can't be biased. You have to be totally objective regardless of what ethnic background or social morals you have."

Mack Lundstrom, adviser to the Spartan Daily editorial staff, encouraged the protesters to write letters to the editor and keep the

LIST OF DEMANDS

We are outraged by the Spartan Daily's decision to promote a right-wing, anti-abortion agenda by distributing a twelve-page insert in the paper. We are not persuaded by the Spartan Daily's response to complaints that this was simply a paid advertisement. The four-color insert was a dramatic editorial statement.

We are asking for:

- A public apology on the front page of the Spartan Daily.
- An equally dramatic editorial representing a pro-choice position.
- A commitment to distinguish between propaganda and advertising in the future.
- A commitment to presenting an array of viewpoints concerning controversial issues.

We recognize that the Spartan Daily is an important part of our school community. We hope you value your readers as much.

petition in order to hold a special election. A.S. bylaws state either 10 percent of the student body (2,590 students) must sign the petition, or 25 percent of the people who voted in the last general election (403 signatures); whichever is least.

A.S. has a non-functioning election board. There are four students on the election board which normally requires 10 members. After the October election, the board was tired and behind in school work.

"The election committee will be able to help only minimally on election day," said A.S. adviser Gary Barnett.

The violation of the election code can cause the election to be null and void if the election board votes on it. Seeing how there isn't a functioning election board, the decision should go to the judiciary which SJSU doesn't have but is currently forming. The group that may call the election off at this point is unclear, said Barnett.

Suggestions to postpone the election were expressed by A.S. board members and President Robert L. Caret's representative Dan Buerger. Attorney John Frances said in a letter to A.S. Interim Director Meredith Moran that the election should be postponed because of an executive order from the Trustees of the California State University.

The board of trustees will issue an executive order, effective Jan. 1, 1996, that will say "all student designated fees will be increased, decreased, or abolished pursuant to the procedures of that executive order."

The special election is for a fee increase for technology, athletics, and major events. In a news conference on Tuesday, Caret said he has already identified additional funds to upgrade technology and if the initiative doesn't pass, progress will happen — it will just move slower.

If the initiative passes the Division of Intercollegiate Athletics will be able to better their gender equity plan to bring more women's sports to campus. Money will also go toward training, equipment and counseling.

Sports Information Director Lawrence Fan said, "This will increase the value of their degree, enhance students' image of the campus and opportunities to participate in intercollegiate activities."

Money for major events will allow students to receive discounts on admission to these events and will bring major guests to campus.

The main concern of the A.S. board is that students aren't given enough time to become informed. They were not informed by A.S. and they were not informed with the petition they signed that didn't explain the opposing side to the initiative.

"If you wanted someone to sign a petition, would you tell the opposing side?" Fan asked.

"We need to change the bylaws because 15 days to inform student just isn't enough," Charell said. She feels the election should be postponed until the executive order is issued in January.

The election hasn't been postponed or called off, and regardless of all conflicts, polls open at 9 a.m.

CBS station resumes airing anti-smoking commercial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A CBS-owned station's decision to resume airing a state-sponsored commercial against smoking is a winning one for teen-agers, say state and advertising officials.

"It's a very powerful commercial. It teaches young people to think before they are swayed by the hundreds of millions of dollars the tobacco industry throws at them," said Bruce Silverman, whose agency created the ad.

KCBS-TV on Monday reversed last week's decision to take the commercial — part of an aggressive state anti-smoking campaign — off the air, station spokeswoman Sybill MacDonald said Tuesday.

The station's removal of the ad had come as the CBS news magazine "60 Minutes" made a controversial decision to alter a report critical of the tobacco industry.

KCBS provoked a flurry of news reports when it yanked the anti-smoking ad. Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., a tobacco industry foe, called it an apparent example of industry intimidation of the media.

The TV station contended the spot, which depicts a tobacco executive as a fisherman trying to hook smokers, included a questionable claim that tobacco companies spike cigarettes with additional nicotine. KCBS denied this week the ad, which had aired for five weeks, was canceled outright.

"Contrary to earlier, erroneous reports, there was never any decision to cancel the spot," station general manager Bill Applegate said in a statement.

"We only wished to give it an extra level of review because we thought that some of the copy lines were open to misunderstanding," Applegate said in the Monday statement.

However, Asher/Gould ad agency president Silverman said Tuesday that KCBS made it clear to him the ad was canceled.

"We were told last Friday, explicitly and definitively, that the commercial would no longer run and had been rejected, and there were no more appeals," Silverman said.

On Monday, the agency was told the commercial had been re-evaluated and reinstated. Silverman denied that the spot implied spiking and said it had been tested with audiences for any such implication.

The commercial is one of three anti-smoking ads running on about two dozen TV stations in California, including the CBS affiliates in San Francisco and San Diego, KPX-TV and KFMB-TV.

The spots are part of a campaign sponsored by the California Department of Health Services and is funded by cigarette taxes.

State Health Department Director Kim Belshe, who had criticized KCBS for pulling the ad, lauded its reinstatement.

"We continue to believe this is a very powerful and effective advertisement," Belshe said Monday.

Kathryn Jamros Kusenko, a teacher from Long Island, suffered severe brain damage when her head hit part of the car's interior, said her lawyer, James Kreindler.

Her husband, Alexander Kusenko, was driving the rented car from the Grand Canyon back to Phoenix on their honeymoon trip in the summer of 1990 when he fell asleep at the wheel and ran off the road. He suffered only a broken wrist.

Their suit against Ford Motor Co. claimed the car's automatic lap and shoulder belts were designed defectively and failed to secure a passenger whose seat was in a reclining position. The suit said Ford admitted in its owner's manual that the belts would not work properly with the seat reclined, but that the manual was not in the car and Ford failed to provide any other warning.

U.S. District Judge Paul Rosenblatt dismissed the suit without a trial. He said the suit failed to identify the cause of Mrs. Kusenko's injuries because the Kusenkos' expert witness, James Pugh, was uncertain about the movements of her body.

Gale Hughes, a financial aid employee who received a flier, said the Tuesday meeting was needed.

"A lot of people don't know of the things that go on in this office," she said.

SJSU President Robert L. Caret reacted strongly to the incident in a news conference.

"We will sanction anyone who makes racist remarks to the full legal extent."

Ryan believes there is not a racial problem in the financial aid office, but is concerned that some people aren't aware of others' feelings.

Officials also said they don't see a correlation between the flier and the Michael Day incident in which Day, an admissions and records employee, called a student a racial epithet.

However, Ryan plans to hold a diversity awareness workshop which all staff members will be required to attend.

"I feel that we have an office that is very sensitive to our clientele," Ryan said. "I feel that in general, our staff is very sensitive to diversity issues and in dealing with individuals from all races."

"The majority of the staff was unaware that this happened. (They) welcome an investigation. Whoever did this has upset our staff."

The UPD is investigating a previous complaint in the financial aid office for theft. Abeyta said that the two events may or may not be related.

In the area of cutting the curriculum to make graduation faster, Caret said his staff is working on ways to increase retention and increase graduation rates.

Ultimately the aim is for cohesiveness in which certain advanced general education and electives that are "not applicable or necessary" will be phased out, explained Caret.

Also mentioned was a proposed increase in advising, and "creating a campus that students can become more attached to."

Caret emphasized "two primary areas must be addressed" as the athletics department moves from the Big West to the WAC. First, that the department run an ethical, affordable program, and second, that the program meshes with academics.

The move would give SJSU a 10 percent budget increase, Caret

The news conference concluded with the president revealing SJSU had received a $700,000 "enhancement" grant toward increasing technological literacy. In the past, particularly at his inauguration, Caret stated SJSU's future lies in its connection to the Silicon Valley and integration of technology into the curriculum.

According to Caret, the move has already begun in what he described as a "four-year window" project. By 1997, Caret hopes to have "every building on campus wired" and a computer lab available to each of the SJSU colleges. Furthermore, Caret expects to use $10 million of 1997's $28 million budget to finish what he coined, "the infrastructure."

Chilean novelist offers scholarship benefiting SJSU Spanish students

By Loretta McCarty
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

The SJSU foreign languages department presents "A Dialogue With Isabel Allende: From the House of the Spirits to Paula," tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Allende, a Latin American novelist and short-story writer, will be joined onstage by Celia Zapata, professor of foreign languages and personal friend of the author, to conduct the dialogue.

The Chilean novelist will be at SJSU for the exclusive purpose of raising money for the "Paula Scholarship," named after her daughter Paula Frias, who died at the age of 28 — a year after she fell into a coma. Paula suffered from porphyria, a metabolic disorder.

"Before Paula died, she left me a letter asking that her savings be used for the education of young people," Allende said. She wasn't sure how to use the money until her friend Zapata came up with the idea of forming a scholarship to benefit students of Spanish, in the foreign language department.

"This is a special gift to us," Zapata said. All proceeds from ticket sales and gifts, will be donated by Allende to set up the scholarship.

"If the evening is successful, I would like to make it an annual event," Allende said.

The author's first visit to SJSU was at Zapata's invitation in 1987. It was at this event that Allende met her husband, William Gordon. This is one of the reasons SJSU holds a special place in her heart, she said.

Allende is a frequent guest in Zapata's classes. This past April, she invited Zapata's entire graduate class of 14 to her home in Sausalito for a barbecue she prepared herself. At the end of the visit, she presented each student with a signed copy of one of her novels.

Allende's books have sold more than 10 million copies and have been translated into more than 30 languages, making her the most widely read Hispanic woman writer of the century.

Tickets are available at the Event Center Box Office, and are $50 reserved/reception, $30 reserved, $20 general and $8 for students. This event is wheelchair accessible. For more information call 924-4617.

California to inquire into snafus in San Francisco's mayoral elections

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The state can't intervene in San Francisco's runoff election, but will ask for a prompt report on glitches that marred the Nov. 7 vote, Secretary of State Bill Jones said Tuesday.

Mayor Frank Jordan had asked Jones to step in after a printer's error forced many absentee voters to fill out a second ballot, and a computer power failure interrupted vote counting.

Jordan and former Assembly

Speaker Willie Brown will face each other in the mayoralty runoff Dec. 12, and the district attorney's post is at stake as well.

Jones said there is no provision in state law for his office to take over a local election.

"We don't have the statutory authority to do that," Jones said. "If there's a perception that something illegal or inappropriate is done, we have the ability to assist, but it's fairly limited."

His office has asked for a full report on the problems by Friday, he said, and will have at least two high-level officials in San Francisco on Dec. 12.

Meanwhile, the city's Chief Administrative Officer Bill Lee, who oversees the registrar's office, said he would hold a public hearing and form a task force to audit election results.

The task force will be comprised of election experts from the Secretary of State's office, local registrar offices and individuals from the city's Citizen's Advisory Committee on Elections.

The group will look not only at the problems with the general election but also at how future elections could be improved.

"I think it is time for us to look at the whole election process," Lee said.

The Board of Supervisors planned to hold its own hearing, and Supervisor Willie Kennedy requested a letter be sent to registrar Germaine Wong asking her to explain what went wrong and why.

Trouble began in the weeks preceding the election when Wong's office discovered that 30,000 absentee ballot handbooks had been delivered with the wrong covers attached. That may have caused voters in some areas of the city to vote for a candidate other than their choice.

The woes were exacerbated election night when computer breakdowns, caused by an electric power surge, delayed voting tallies for several hours.

Lower IQ linked to prenatal exposure to sedative

CHICAGO (AP) — Men whose mothers took the sedative phenobarbital during pregnancy were twice as likely to have lower intelligence scores than other men in a new study.

IQ scores were even lower if the men whose mothers took the drug also came from poor families or were the product of unwanted pregnancies, said June Machover Reinisch, a senior research fellow at the Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender and Reproduction at Indiana University in Bloomington.

The study suggests that doctors should be careful about prescribing phenobarbital during pregnancy and that a supportive, healthy environment can go a long way toward making up for biological disadvantages, she said.

"We have to be very careful about anything we do during pregnancy," said Reinisch. "There are risks with everything. You have to balance the benefits with the risks."

Reinisch estimates 23 million Americans who are now adults were exposed to phenobarbital in the womb. The drug was formerly prescribed as a sleeping aid, tranquilizer, treatment for pregnancy-related high blood pressure and pregnancy-related vomiting and other reasons, she said.

The barbiturate is prescribed much less now than it was in the 1960s, '70s and early '80s, but among pregnant women, it is still an important treatment for seizure disorders such as epilepsy, which are estimated to afflict one in every 200 Americans.

Most mothers in the study, published in Wednesday's issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association, took the drug for pregnancy-related high blood pressure.

Two experts urged caution at interpreting the findings, saying other factors than the drug may have affected the men's intelligence.

Five teens held in stabbings linked to Satan worshipping

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Five teen-agers suspected of stabbing three North Carolina family members in a satanic worship ritual were captured after a state trooper stopped their stolen car.

"They told us that they worshipped the devil. They have confessed. They also were carrying battle scars from the crime. Some of them had cuts on them," said Jennifer Mistretta, spokeswoman for the Louisiana state police.

The suspects, one of them a relative of the victims, fled in the victims' car and were stopped for erratic driving. The teen-agers were booked in for possession of a stolen car and as fugitives.

They are wanted in Roanoke Rapids, N.C., on charges of armed robbery, burglary and attempted murder.

Neaton Braswell, 72; his wife, Elaine, 74; and their paralyzed son, Robert Braswell, 52, were attacked at their home Sunday night and remained hospitalized today.

"Campus Life Initiative"

*Shall the current Associated Students Fee be increased by the amounts shown to establish a Fund to:

Support Technology

- (The university pledges to match dollar for dollar these funds for at least 5 years).
- Doubling the number of computers accessible to SJSU students, increasing the computer labs hours, increasing network access around the campus, and the creation of an on-line advising system.
- Improved E-mail, Internet and World Wide Web access for all SJSU students (e.g. purchasing and upgrading servers).
- Wiring residence halls for modem accessibility.
- Support the construction of high-tech information centers throughout campus to conform students of campus events and services.
- Other technological improvements designed to make our university a world-wide leader in high technology access and training.

Support Athletics

- (To match what the alumni and community have pledged in support of athletic program).
- Support new and current women's intercollegiate sports.
- Increase number of free student tickets to athletic games and tournaments.
- To enhance SJSU's competitiveness in all women's and men's sports as we enter the Western Athletic Conference (especially non-revenue sports—football is self supporting).
- Ensure student access to tailgate areas at games and provide entertainment.
- Free transportation from the campus to SJSU intercollegiate football and basketball competitions with the Bay Area (including shuttle service to all home games).

Support Major Events

- Speakers like President Clinton, Newt Gingrich, Spike Lee, Edward James Olmos, Rush Limbaugh, Colin Powell, Mr. Rogers, Dr. Ruth, Seinfeld, Amy Tan, Robin Williams, and Harry Wu.
- More major concerts like Harry Conick, Jr., Madonna, Garth Brooks, Santana and Pearl Jam at the Event Center and Spartan Stadium.

Officials suspend players, coaches

SJSU and Cal hockey team members disqualified for fighting after game

By Sarah Harvey-Lombardo
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

Members of San Jose State University's hockey team said they are satisfied with disciplinary actions handed out in response to a fight between SJSU and University of California, Berkeley players. SJSU players Eric Russell and Derek Oliver and one Cal player each received disqualifications for their involvement in the Nov. 4th fight at the Ice Centre in San Jose.

According to linesman official Mark "Toby" Bernstein, each disqualification a player gets results in a game ejection for the remainder of the game and a suspension for the following game, in accordance with league rules.

For his involvement in the brawl, Bernstein said Cal Coach Shaun Clouston received a game misconduct, the maximum penalty a coach can receive.

"The ref made the right call," said SJSU head coach Ron Glasow.

"I feel that proper punishment was handed out. (Clouston) did deserve it."

According to Mike Bruins, SJSU hockey goaltender and team president, the team is in the process of drafting a letter to the league to assure that action be taken against Clouston.

"The incident was half our fault and half (Clouston's) fault, but he was out of line. If he's suspended for some games that's fine," Bruins said.

The fight occurred after an SJSU victory over UC Berkeley.

According to witnesses, the fight began when Clouston and a fan got into a shoving match as the players were leaving the rink.

After the game, Clouston said he stopped to talk to the fan, who was reportedly shouting obscenities at the players, when a non-uniformed SJSU player shoved him.

Clouston could not be reached for comment, concerning the disqualifications issued.

SJSU women's golf team wins Golf World/Palmetto Dunes Invitational

By Leslie Farmer
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

SJSU women's golf team, led by Vibeke Stensrud's even par 72, captured first honors at the Golf World/Palmetto Dunes Invitational on Sunday.

The team won the tournament on the strength of its three top-players finishing in the top five.

Stensrud, a senior from Norway, and Janice Moody, a junior from Scotland, tied for first after 54 holes at two-under par 214.

"It's the best tour we've had since we won the national championship in 1992," said SJSU coach Mark Gale. "Our scoring average is the lowest in the history of women's golf at SJSU. Nationally, we were No. 2 going into the tour, after the tour we'll be No. 1."

He added, "Stensrud is ranked No. 1 and Moodie No. 5 in women's golf by the Rolex National Golf Foundation."

The Spartans led from start to finish in the 54-hole tournament posting an 881 team score on the 6257 yard, par 72 Arthur Hills Golf

Moodie said, "It was a good start to the season. I played well, but one shot really disappointed me — I put one ball in the water, so I didn't win the tournament outright."

Stensrud recorded her third straight individual win of the fall with an eight-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole.

She was the medalist at the Ihlantfeldt Classic and the Stanford Invitational.

For the fall season, she averaged 72.18 strokes per round and was at par or better in six of her last eight rounds.

The team scores for the first top three teams were: SJSU: 881; UCLA: 894; Wake Forest: 897.

SJSU golfers among the nation's best

Spartan Daily Staff Report

The College Golf Foundation has named SJSU's Vibeke Stensrud and Jay Hobby of Auburn as the winners of the Rolex College Golfer of the Month Awards for October.

October was a banner month for Stensrud, a senior from Oslo, Norway. Stensrud, who is ranked No. 1 in the Rolex/Nicklaus Women's Individual Rankings, also won the University of Washington Edean Ihlantfeldt Invitational and tied for first at the Stanford Women's Intercollegiate.

Members of the College Golf Foundation's Golfer of the Month committee choose two Rolex Golfers of the Month, one man and one woman. The award is based on results from Rolex Collegiate Tour events, including conference championships and NCAA Championships.

Other nominees for this year's award included SJSU's Arron Oberholser, who is ranked No. 37 in the nation. The rankings, administered by the College Golf Foundation, are released 12 times during the college golf season.

Stanford rally on affirmative action draws large crowd

By Julie A. Galván
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

It's time for young Americans to rise up, vote, turn to each other instead of on each other and change the fate of California, said Rev. Jesse Jackson at Tuesday's affirmative action rally at Stanford University.

More than 1,000 people gathered in White Plaza to listen to Jackson, who has been a staunch supporter of affirmative action and a vocal critic of the UC Board of Regents' June decision against such programs.

"We are working to defend the rights of students, the rights of minorities, and most importantly, the rights of Americans," said event organizer and Stanford Democrats co-chairman Bill Shen.

Jackson's speech, sponsored by a coalition of student groups, came not only in the wake of the UC Regents' decision — scheduled to take effect in January — but at a time when Stanford, a private institution, has chosen to uphold its affirmative action policies.

"We're not asking for reparation; we're asking for repair," said Jackson, who is founder of the Rainbow Coalition. "Affirmative action will offset negative action. It's a delicate way of letting those in who have been locked out.

"Those in power have been kicking and screaming as walls have been knocked down," he said.

"They're resisting it all the way." Jackson attacked the nation's leaders for what he called a "lack of character," and chastised House Speaker Newt Gingrich for appearing on "Face the Nation" last week and attacking the poor, blaming the nation's ills on immigration and saying that mothers on welfare spend their days "just watching soap militant conservatism" by voting. "Only 300,000 of the state's nine million college students are registered to vote," he said, telling students that if they would only vote, their power could not be challenged.

"It's not enough to march or hold protests," he said. "Action must result in public policy."

After Jackson's hour-long speech, he invited those not registered to vote to come to the stage. More than 75 people came forward to fill out an application.

The conclusion to Jackson's speech was interrupted by a nearby woman yelling for him to attend Thursday's Regents' meeting at San Francisco State. Jackson answered that he couldn't attend, but that he'd "be there in spirit."

"We really need his help in reversing their decision," said Heather Bergman, the shouting woman's friend and a member of UC Berkeley's Coalition to Defend Affirmative Action By Any Means Necessary, a group that is also fighting against Gov. Pete Wilson's California Civil Rights Initiative.

After Jackson left the stage, about 100 students shouting, "What do we want? Justice! When do we want it? Now!" marched across campus to Hoover Tower, where Glen Campbell, senior member of the UC Regents Board, is employed.

operas" instead of trying to find a job.

"For the Speaker of the House to have a position that hostile, that bigoted, is to show ... a moral deficit, much worse than any budget deficit or shutdown could ever be," he said.

He also attacked Republican Sen. Bob Dole for supporting the North American Free Trade Agreement one year, and supporting English as a national language the next.

"It's a great language, but Jesus didn't speak it," he said. "How can we fight for the right to not speak to our neighbors or our new trading partners?"

Jackson pressured students to fight against the current "wave of former French-Africa. "With the fall of the former Soviet Union, many countries are turning toward democracy, allowing directors more free self-expression."

Three of the films are features, while the fourth is a documentary. The first is "Burkina Faso," directed by Gaston Kabore. Set in Upper Volta, the film recalls the impact of media change and the move from social subsistence to the urban setting.

"Spear the Nation," a documentary, will be shown on Nov. 29. It portrays the progression of the South African National Congress headed by Nelson Mandela. Simesso said the film was "controversial when it was first released and was difficult to screen because of the existing political climate."

"Yeeleh Mali," directed by Souleyman Cisse, will be screened on Dec. 6. Simesso said this is the only film he has not seen, but it had received "critical acclaim" in Africa.

The final film of the series, "Xala," was directed by film-making pioneer Ouman Semiene. Set in the early '60s, and accomplished on a shoestring budget, the film deals with "a search for redemp-

Experts to discuss war-torn Balkan countries

By Leslie Farmer
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

Four experts will offer the public a quartet of brief lectures on history and current events in the Balkans, followed by a question-and-answer period.

The Phi Alpha Theta forum, which will be held from 3 to 5 p.m. today in Business Classrooms building room 14, will feature Professors Konnilyn Feig of Foothill College; Igor Zevelev, visiting professor at SJSU; Constantine Danopoulos, SJSU political science department; and David Kier, SJSU history department.

Kier, who will introduce the other speakers, said he will clear away some of the misinformation about the area and cover some of the historical flash points that shaped Balkan history.

He pointed out in a brief pre-forum interview the tremendous diversity in the area's politics, religions and cultures had baffled world leaders for the past 200 years.

In addition, he will tell the audience where to find reliable and objective English-language coverage of the area.

Danopoulos said he will speak on the importance of the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia.

Zevelev is scheduled to speak on the Russian point of view and address the question of whether or not Yeltsin is likely to commit troops to the area.

Originally settled by Slavic peoples, the Balkans have been dominated for much of their history by Hungarians, Turks, Austrians and others.

While Serbs, Croats and Bosnians established independent states, Serbia suffered a disastrous defeat by the Turks in 1389, setting the stage for four centuries of Turkish domination.

In 1992, the United Nations approved the deployment of the first 1,000 "peacekeepers" in Bosnia.

One year later, NATO began enforcing a no-fly zone over all of Bosnia to prevent the use of air power.

In 1995, the international community demanded the Serbs withdraw heavy weapons from around the city of Sarajevo or face NATO airstrikes. The Serbs refused, and NATO jets began striking Serb military targets all over Bosnia.

In October, a U.N.-sponsored cease-fire took effect.

We've reserved this page for EarthWatch. Every year, this non-profit organization sends 4,000 volunteers on field research expeditions worldwide that help to improve our understanding of the planet. Eminent scholars in fields ranging from marine biology to volcanology could use your time, skill, and financial support.
