The University Concert Choir and Choraliers will open their 1998 season at 8 p.m. today at the First United Methodist Church of Campbell with a performance of "Missa Kenya."

The choir will be performing alongside student dancers from Annette Macdonald's Afro-Caribbean dance class. Macdonald is a San Jose State University professor of dance. In addition to the student dancers, soloist Aimee Lam was invited to perform.

Lam is a member of the Robert Henry Johnson Dance Company in Oakland.

The choir and choraliers had a preview performance Thursday afternoon on campus as part of the "Listening Hour," which is a free concert series presented every Thursday at 12:30 p.m. in the School of Music Concert Hall.

The preview performance featured a piece from "Missa Kenya," which will be performed in full tonight. Both the choir and Choraliers put in a strong performance.

Jeremy Hanley had to attend the performance as part of a class, but said he really enjoyed watching.

"I liked the first song (part of 'Missa Kenya') with the dancers," Hanley said. "I liked Historic Art Advisory Committee.

The typical image of downtown San Jose may not include a 23-foot windmill or a 15-foot barn, but this is what can now be found in a section of the Guadalupe River Park.

On Thursday evening, the City of San Jose Public Art Program held a dedication ceremony for its newest public artwork.

"Remembering Agriculture," designed by San Jose State University Professor Tony May.

This tribute to Santa Clara Valley's agricultural past is located in Guadalupe River Park on West Santa Clara Street between the Guadalupe Parkway overpass and the river.

The $200,000 project funded by the Redevelopment Agency of San Jose simulates farm buildings a person would have seen 150 years ago in the Santa Clara Valley during its agricultural boom. It is one of four historic subjects planned by San Jose's

The iron frame sculptures are a water tower, a windmill, a barn and a small shed. They are set within a brick paving with four plaques describing Santa Clara Valley's agricultural past.

The structures will function as arbors (a plant sculpture) with ivy and other flowering climbing plants. The project is meant to age gracefully with the plants growing in and out of the rusting structures that will eventually disappear beneath the vines.

The plants chosen are symbolic both in color and the type of plants a person would have found in an agricultural area 100 years ago, according to Phyllis Anderson, who selected the plants for the project at the request of May.

"I chose honeysuckle because of its gold color to represent the hay in a barn," Anderson said. "And I chose red trumpet vine for the barn and blue morning pate in Saturday's festivities.

Bill Walsh, the man who made the West Coast offense famous while leading the San Francisco 49ers to three Super Bowls in the 1980s, will have his name added to the Ring of Honor at Spartan Stadium prior to Saturday's homecoming game against Rice University.

Walsh will join Atlanta Falcons quarterback Steve DeBerg and St. Louis Rams coach Dick Vermeil on the Ring of Honor. DeBerg's and Vermeil's names were added during half-time of the Sept. 26 game against the University of New Mexico.

Walsh's name was set to be added at the same time, but he was unable to attend that ceremony. He is expected to partici-

The idea for the Ring of Honor was brought to SJSU by first-year Athletic Director Chuck Bell. The ring is located below the press box on the west side of Spartan Stadium.

"We want to show the great tradition that SJSU athletics has," Bell said in a press release. "The Ring of Honor will help our recruiting and remind our loyal fans of the great history of SJSU."

Walsh played on the SJSU football team from 1953-1954 as an end, which was the equivalent to a wide receiver. He was also an intramural boxing champion.

After receiving his bachelor's degree in 1954, he became a graduate assistant for the football team and received his master's degree in 1956.

New dean of education confident he can make real difference

By Ginny White
Staff Writer

Despite being thrust into one project after another since his appointment, the new dean of the College of Education, Francisco Hidalgo, has not skipped a beat, according to his administrative assistant, Lois Baker.

"His calendar is so full — it's like we shot him out of a cannon," Baker said.

Hidalgo is working on a literacy program, organizing a student scholarship program and a center for educational development and research, according to Baker.

Like other deans, Hidalgo said he will oversee personnel, curriculum and development. He will also oversee the collaboration of the college with all levels of public schools. Currently, San Jose State University is partnered with more than 33 school districts, overlapping areas to the south and west of other universities, Hidalgo said.

The College of Education, from which graduates go into various lines of teaching, is quickly moving into the technology age, Hidalgo said. This is being accomplished by offering many distance learning delivery classes, in which 60 students at SJSU are linked by two-way cameras and computers to 10 other satellite classrooms around the Bay Area, he said.

"We accommodate not only students' schedules but their geographical circumstances also," Hidalgo said. "After all, there is a bit of a space crunch here."

Hidalgo hopes to strengthen ties the college has with local agencies and the private sector, such as the Santa Clara County Education Center, social service agencies and high-tech companies with foundations to improve academic educations.

"He's a people person," said assistant professor Carlos Cruz of the College of Education at Texas A & M at Kingsville, where Hidalgo taught before coming to SJSU. "(Hidalgo) is extremely organized, friendly and sincere."

"(Hidalgo) was a wonderful boss," said Linda Sandoval, administrative assistant to the dean of education at Texas A & M. "He made working for him very easy."

Hidalgo left his position of dean at Texas A & M to take his current position at SJSU in July. He has also been a professor at California State University San Bernardino and CSU Long Beach and a lecturer at Loyola-Marymount University in Los Angeles with a total of 29 years in education.

Hidalgo returned to California for a few reasons. His wife and grown children live in the Los Angeles area from which he is a native. However, SJSU holds a special place in Hidalgo's heart.

"SJSU is really one of the gems of the Cal State University system," Hidalgo said.

Hidalgo said he accomplished all he set out to at Texas A & M and is confident he can make a real difference at SJSU.

"I have an opportunity to make an impact in the issues of education here," Hidalgo said.

Hidalgo earned his doctorate from the University of Southern California. He said he was originally in law school at Loyola but took a semester off to explore education and never looked back.

"I am very happy that I made that decision," said Hidalgo. "And my kids are following in my footsteps."

Grieving process does not include taking son's sperm

Shane Lewis
Spartan Daily Staff Writer

There's no better way for a mother to show love for her dead son than by having his sperm yanked out and dropped in a test tube.

Love, devotion and Mother's Day cards are one thing, but sperm is taking a son's duty too far.

Yet, Pamela Reno, a 38-year-old cocktail (no laughter please) waitress wants her dead son's sperm so she can have his child.

"I told (the doctors) I have to get my son's sperm. It's the only way I can be a grandma," said Reno, who is currently single.

Somebody needs to tell her how creepy this is. This is post-mortem incest without the sex.

Here's the Reader's Digest version of this wonderful mother-and-son story.

Jeremy Reno, her 19-year-old son, died while playing Russian roulette. While on life support his bereaved mother told doctors to remove some of her dying son's sperm, proving to the world that she was the one who needed the hole in the head, not him. Now, with the help of a donor egg, her dead son's sperm and the miracle of modern medicine, she can carry his child.

Dr. Russell Foulk, who helped remove the sperm, said that this will not happen until a number of ethical and legal issues are addressed.

"We're kind of in new ground here," Foulk said. "Kind of? Talk about an understatement."

Giving a dead kid's sperm to mommy dearest is more than just new ground. Imagine your mother telling doctors to take some sperm out of you before you die so that she can carry your child. It's enough to make you roll over in your grave, or to at least cover your crotch with your hands.

I doubt Jeremy Reno had any intention of having a kid before he died, but apparently that's not an issue anymore. If you die, it becomes open season on your reproductive organs.

But Foulk doesn't stop there.

"Ideally you want to find out the intent ... what the plans are to do with the sperm," Foulk said.

Are there really that many uses for sperm? Do you use them to fill up water balloons, as an all-purpose glue or for some other novel use?

Dr. Foulk, I believe those little guys are known for having just one mission, and that is to charge the egg in a banzai-like attack and make babies.

Imagine how the child is going to be told about his or her parentage. A dead dad who is also his birth mother's son. There's his biological mother whom he will probably never know. On top of that, his birth mother is also his grandmother.

This is going to be one screwed-up kid. He should have "Future Serial Killer" written all over him. Let's not even go into what his modus operandi will be. You thought Luke Skywalker had it tough when he found out Darth Vader was his father.

Reno should grieve for her son, but she does not need her son's sperm to do that.

I know that there is something to be said about keeping things in your family, but this is ridiculous. Unless, of course, you're a country-singing boy named Tim Bob who lives in the deep, deep South and drinks too much moonshine.

NBA lockout example of sports corruption

Professional sports needs another labor dispute like it needs another Latrell Sprewell choking incident.

However, that's exactly what it has in the form of a owner-imposed lockout in the National Basketball Association.

The NBA locked its players out in July. A lockout differs from a strike in that when a lockout occurs, management prohibits the employees from coming to work.

The NBA is currently the only one of the four major professional sports leagues — the others are the National Football League, the National Hockey League and Major League Baseball — which has never lost regular season games to a labor dispute. Unless a settlement is reached by the end of the weekend, that distinction will be lost. The season is slated to start Nov. 3. A deal would have to be reached in the next couple of days in order to get an abbreviated training camp going in time to make that deadline.

At issue is money. Two billion dollars' worth, to be exact. According to the San Francisco Chronicle, that's how much the NBA will rake in this year. The dispute between owners and players is over how to divide the pie.

Surprise, surprise.

The NBA dispute is just the latest in a long line of squabbles which have taken place in just the last 17 years.

The NFL lost games to player strikes in 1982 and 1987. The NHL survived a lockout in 1994 that cut the season almost in half. Baseball had perhaps the most famous incident, the strike in 1994-95 that resulted in the cancellation of the 1994 World Series. Baseball and the NBA have even had labor disputes with their umpires and referees.

Both the owners and players need to be told to go sit in the corner.

Owners need to realize that they are not the reason fans go to the stadiums and arenas. The players are. When was the last time anyone went to Candlestick Park to see Eddie DeBartolo?

In the NBA dispute, the owners want to impose a "hard" salary cap, where teams would be limited to spending a set amount on salaries and no more. This would delete the "Larry Bird exception," where a team is permitted to exceed the cap in order to resign its own free agents. The exception is named for its first beneficiary, Larry Bird, the former Boston Celtics great.

Kevin W. Hecteman
Copy Editor

No such thing as a salary cap exists here in the real world. If the owner of, say, a grocery store wants to raise the employees' wages, there's nothing preventing the owner from doing so.

According to an Associated Press report, the NBA claims as many as half of its teams are losing money, and the league itself is less profitable than it was a few years ago.

The owners may be under pressure to pay players millions to keep them in town and keep the fans happy. That doesn't mean they need to hand a $5 million contract to every free agent who comes along.

Players need to realize they have to earn their money. There are athletes today who are worth every cent they make — Michael Jordan and Mark McGwire immediately come to mind.

Then there are people like baseball player J.D. Drew. When he was drafted by the Philadelphia Phillies last year, Drew demanded an $11 million contract. The Phillies, quite understandably, told him to go jump in the lake. Here was a kid fresh out of college who hadn't played an inning of professional baseball, and he already thought he was worth $11 million.

Yeah, right.

The players' lust for millions, and the owners' willingness to fork it over, has long since corrupted both parties. It's time they stopped for a minute and thought about the real losers in this war over money.

The fans.

Yes, those hard-working people who are increasingly being priced out of the stadiums and arenas of "major league" professional sports by the greed of the owners and the players and forced to root for their teams from in front of the TV.

Where's the fans' union?

Methadone won't help heroine users kick their habits

Making methadone easily available to heroin addicts is not going to help them. It's going to substitute one habit for another.

Giving methadone to heroin addicts is like putting a person who wants to lose weight on a doughnut diet.

Currently, methadone is only available at special clinics, but last week Barry R. McCaffrey, the White House drug policy chief, proposed to make methadone more available to heroin addicts.

It seems like the U.S. government is supporting drug addicts rather than helping them kick their habits.

The dream of having a drug-free America will never happen if doctors are going to be allowed to prescribe illegal drugs legally. The "geniuses" in the White House should think of ways to get rid of heroin addiction rather than replacing it with another drug.

Being a heroin addict is not easy, and when people realize they are addicted it's already too late to quit.

Heroin addiction is sad. People can't hold jobs, sometimes even become dangerous to society when they get the craving and don't have money to get heroin.

Methadone does not get rid of the problem, it just blunts the craving for heroin.

People have to want to quit. To do better. To live normal lives.

To lead healthier lifestyles. Many addicts really want to quit, but can't because of their addiction. In such cases, more conventional treatments, such as support groups, seem more practical than using other drugs.

People like Jerry Garcia of the Grateful Dead and Jonathan Melvoin of the Smashing Pumpkins are dead.

They were too young to die and heroin only contributed to their early death.

There are people for whom methadone has helped, but according to a New York Times article: "... Scott Riley, who said he became addicted as a soldier in Vietnam, said methadone had not worked well for him and that he chose total abstinence, a more difficult alternative ..."

Out of 810,000 known heroin users in this country, 115,000, are receiving methadone.

It's easy to get hooked on any drug, but people don't always have enough courage to kick the habit.

Someone who is not strong enough to quit has to live with either the addiction or methadone, which will probably turn into another addiction.

Just like any other drug, methadone can get a person high, which means that people might be abusing its use.

The first thing is to think 10 times and then 10 times more before even considering the use of heroin for the first time.

This just might be the solution that we can all contribute to.

glory on the water tower." "When the plants begin to grow, the site will look like an old abandoned farm with an overgrown garden," May said. "I was inspired by the limitations of the site itself."

May has been part of the art faculty at SJSU for more than 30 years. He has taught color theory, two- and three-dimensional design, drawing, painting and sculpture and was asked to compete against two other artists for this project by the San Jose Public Art Program.

"I grew up on a farm in Wisconsin," May said. "The project struck a chord with me and brought back memories of being on a farm."

The water tower, windmill, barn and shed were welded by Michael Kilgore of Aptos, who worked at his home studio for eight months to complete the project.

"It was hard work," Kilgore said. "I really like the way the project came out."

May said his artwork uses the freeway, which is above his artwork, as a metaphor for urban growth that has replaced agriculture in the area.

Other artwork by May has been shown in the San Jose Museum of Art and the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

"Now that it is done, I'm really pleased with my work," May said. "I'm not too embarrassed by it."

Walsh: Alumnus honor

Since his playing days, Walsh has coached four different professional teams and has been the head coach at Stanford University on two separate occasions.

Walsh was an assistant for the Oakland Raiders, the Cincinnati Bengals and the San Diego Chargers.

In 1979, Walsh was hired as head coach of the San Francisco 49ers, a team which had never reached the Super Bowl. Within two years of his hiring, the 49ers won their first of three Super Bowls under his direction.

The 49ers also won the Super Bowl following the 1989 season, Walsh's first year in retirement.

"He's the most deserving person we have," said John Ralston, SJSU's football coach from 1993-1996. Ralston has been friends with Walsh for more than 50 years.

Concert: Rhythm mix

all the different instruments, it wasn't just a piano."

Charlene Archibeque, director of choral programs, said "Missa Kenya," which translates as "Kenya Mass," was composed by Paul Basler.

Basler's production notes stated that he attempted to fuse Kenyan musical styles with late 20th century American classics.

According to Archibeque, the Mass was a challenge for the choir to learn because the piece is constantly changing beats.

"The hardest thing (about performing 'Missa Kenya') was not the African rhythms, but the changing meter," Archibeque said.

The student dancers will be performing a piece choreographed by Macdonald specifically for the debut concert. Macdonald said the Mass gave her a chance to choreograph something "different and exciting."

According to Archibeque, students planning on attending the performance tonight should show up early.

The first 35 students with a valid SJSU ID will be allowed in for free. After that, the student price is $5 and the regular price is $10.

We'll Pay You To Have Exciting Weekends.

The Army Reserve will give you weekend excitement like you've never had before, and you can earn more than $18,000 while you're enjoying yourself during a standard enlistment.

Think about it. On a part-time basis, usually one weekend a month plus two weeks' Annual Training, you could earn good pay, have a good time, make good friends and even be entitled to good benefits and opportunities to get money for education.

You'll also be getting hands-on training in a skill that will last you a lifetime.

Army Reserve knows how to make weekends interesting. Are you interested?

Tale of the tape

San Jose State University vs. Rice University

Where: Spartan Stadium
When: Saturday, 6 p.m.
What: Homecoming game
Radio: KLIV 1590 AM and KTOM 1380 AM at 6 p.m.; pregame at 5:30 p.m.
The series: This is the first meeting between the two teams, which both joined the Western Athletic Conference in 1996. Both will remain in the WAC after next year.
Prediction: SJSU 31, Rice 24

SJSU: The Spartans (2-3, 1-0) need to forget the loss to Virginia last week. It was a non-conference game and can't hurt them in WAC play. What the Spartans need to remember is the few bright spots they showed against a legitimate powerhouse and that, despite the lopsided score, they competed for 60 minutes.

Jump ahead to this week: If SJSU can take the lessons learned in defeat and apply them, they stand a good chance of being successful.

KEYS: SJSU needs to key on the run first and foremost.

The Rice Owls (1-3, 1-0) have a potent rushing attack, averaging 241 yards per game. They run an option-based offense, which gave the Spartans problems at Virginia and Oregon.

The Spartans' run defense is 98th in the nation and will need to put in a yeoman's effort if it is to be successful.

Offensively, SJSU shouldn't have much trouble against a weak Rice defense — 103rd against the run and 91st against the pass. Marcus Arroyo and Chris Kasteler need to stay within the offense and everything should work itself out.

Rice: After taking a 51-29 pasting from the University of Texas on Sept. 26, the Owls have had two weeks to prepare for the Spartans. The loss to Texas was their third straight after an opening-week win against Southern Methodist University.

The Owls are relying on quarterback Chad Richardson to run the multi-faceted option/veer/wishbone running attack.

Ranked dead last (112th) in the nation in passing offense, Rice will continue to pound the ball throughout the game. Other than passing offense, Rice's defense is its liability, giving up 30 points a game on average.

KEYS: If Rice is unable to move the ball on the ground, its fate will be pretty much sealed. Look for Rice to have at least 70 rushing attempts by the end of the game.

Rookies tackle rugby challenges

By Marcus Ulrich Staff Writer

Aimee Francioni, last season's homecoming queen, sometimes has to run past fearless women who want to grab hold of her, and throw her to the ground.

"You know what's so funny," Francioni said. "You don't feel any pain at all."

A rookie member of this season's women's rugby team, Francioni will be tackled a lot more this year.

The women's rugby team begins its season Oct. 24 in a tournament at Stanford.

The Spartans hope to better their 5-6 record from last season.

The team is part of the Northern California Women's Rugby Conference, which includes nine other teams.

The 1997-98 season was the first season for women's rugby at San Jose State University.

"They did twice as good as we expected from an inaugural team," said Shawn Oakley, a member of the men's rugby team.

Their main challenge to reaching their goal is that about half of this year's team members are newcomers.

The first-year rugby team faced the same challenges that this year's team is facing.

"There were some bad habits we had in the beginning," veteran team member Christina Francisco said. "like not throwing the ball forward."

Francisco, who is the co-captain and president of the rugby team, scored 10 tries while playing wing last season. A try is worth five points, and is scored by touching the ball down in the opponent's goal area.

Lindy Denis is another top player. While playing fullback, she scored 22 points — all on kicks and conversions. A kick is taken after a player scores a try, and is worth two points; a conversion is a drop-kick through the goal posts while the ball is in play, and is worth three points.

Scrum-half Hilda Vasquez and second row — or lock — Kelly Martinez will also be important this season.

Francisco sees potential in some of the rookies.

"Allison Risso has a lot of ball handling skill," Francisco said. "Karen Pryme is so aggressive. She played ice hockey last year, so she has that no fear attitude that you need to play rugby. She'll probably be a forward."

The new players have not been given their positions yet, according to head coach Karl Laucher.

One obstacle the new members of the team will face is overcoming their fears of playing.

"Since last season was our first season, everyone started off a little nervous," veteran team member Marisol Perez said. "But this year we have a lot of confidence."

Senior Karen Pryme practices a knee tackle on co-captain and second-year player Hilda Vasquez during women's rugby practice on Tuesday at South Campus. This is the second season for the San Jose State University women's rugby team.

The team's other major problem is that three veteran players were injured during the off-season.

Lindsey Robideux, whose position is prop, injured her thumb and will be out until mid-November, according to Francisco. She injured her thumb in an accident at home. Last season Robideux scored two tries.

Perez, who plays center and a fly-back, tore a ligament in her knee, and will be out one month. She injured her knee during a rugby game in Reno, Nev. last season. Perez scored one try last season.

Victoria Ruelas, who plays inside back, separated her shoulder while playing professional softball.

"We relied on them a lot," Francisco said, "so we'll have to work harder."

Overall the team is optimistic about the coming season.

"We're looking forward to a dramatic reversal (from last season)," Laucher said.

Laucher's optimism is because his team has 25 players this season, and he is expecting about 10 more. At the end of last season, the team had 23 players.

Francioni said that the team's first test will be the tournament at Stanford. This is because Stanford was undefeated last season.

"We measure ourselves against Stanford," Laucher said.

The women's rugby team takes on Arizona State University on Oct. 30 in a non-conference game. This is the team's first home game. It will be played at Spartan Field, which is next to Spartan Stadium on the 10th Street side.
