Lawyer talks iustice at SJSU

Susan Bernardini recommended that minority students think twice before hanging a pair of fuzzy dice from their rearview mirrors.

This infraction, along with a broken head or taillight, a missing license plate or even balding tires, is a red flag for police officers to pull over suspicious people, Bernar-dini said.

Bernardini, a public defense lawyer for Santa Clara County, spoke to about 150 students in pro-fessor Steven Millner's African American Studies 2A class.

The class fulfills general educa-tion requirements for U.S. history California government and social science.

"If you are a person of color and you are about 19 to 21, and your car is not in the best working order and maybe you're missing a front license plate," Bernardini explained. "An officer will look at your car and go, You know, I bet that kid's got dope in the car. How can I pull that kid over?"

"Can a cop do that?" Bernardini asked the students. "Yes."

This scenario, Bernardini explained, is the setup for what she Bernardini called a "typical drug case

"I'm going to tell you right now, if you drive a car, if you are young, if you are of color, you make sure your brake lights work, you make sure you have both your license plates, you make sure you don't have any-thing hanging from your rearview mirror," Bernardini warned the stu-

Former Speaker of the House, Newt Gingrich visited the Student Union on Monday to participate in a discussion on Internet-related topics including Napster and privacy

James Barksdale, the former CEO of Netscape, also appeared along with about 100 students and other individuals.

The open forum, "America: On the Net," gave company executives, politicians and San Jose State University students a chance to offer their varying opinions on particular issues relating to the Internet.

Four major topics, privacy and security, the government's role in controlling the Internet, copyright infringement (aka Napster) and the digital divide were dis-cussed at the meeting organized by the Internet Policy Institute, a nonprofit research and educational institute that focuses on the development and use of the Internet.

There was much discussion about the information superhighway.

One attendee complained that the Internet involved too much jargon, which made it difficult and discouraging for computer users. The jargon poses a huge barrier for people who want to use the Internet but aren't computer savvy," he said. "What's

'http' stand for, anyway?" Mixed feelings revolved around the issues of copyright infringement and Nap-

The topic prompted new, younger voices among the group to speak out on the debate and admit they supported the software and regularly downloaded

The majority of students, some from SJSU and others who were on a field trip from Gunderson High School in San Jose, said Napster should not be shut down because it promotes the music of new, unknown artists and can increase the sales of compact discs as well.

Another topic that spurred opposing views was the digital divide, or the lack of Internet access in some communities.

One solution to the divide that someone offered was for public libraries and schools to have more computers so people and students who lack Internet access could find it in these places.

"I didn't come here today with a partic-ular set of solutions," Newt Gingrich said. "Our hope is that we'll have a conference in December in Washington where both Gov. Bush and Vice President Gore have committed that, if they win, they'll come to the conference. And then we can really offer a non-judgmental description of what we heard from the American peo-

In her 34 years at San Jose State University, Lela Garner Noble has held a variety of academic and administrative positions — from professor of political science to, most recently, dean of the College of Social Sciences.

On Aug. 1 she took on an even greater responsibility when she became the second-highest ranking official on the SJSU campus — the interim provost and vice president for academic affairs.

PROFILE

Noble's responsibilities as provost are considerable.

The provost is the chief academic officer of SJSU and is responsible for all academic administrators, providing leadership in planning, developing, assessing and overseeing all academic programs under the leadership of President Robert Caret, according to the job description provided by the university. As interim provost, Noble also acts as "We are very fortunate to have someone with the breadth and depth of experience that Lela possesses, who is also willing to take on the responsibility that comes with this complex position. The academic divi-sion is in good hands," Caret said.

Noble is accomplished both as a scholar and as an administrator.

A Tennessee native, Noble received her Bachelor of Arts degree in international studies from Rhodes College in Memphis, her hometown, in 1961. She also earned two master's degrees one, a Master of Arts degree in 1962; the second, a Master of Arts in law and diplomacy in 1963 — as well as a doctorate in 1965 from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University in Boston, Mass

As a political scientist, in addition to having written nearly 40 scholarly arti-cles and papers, Noble is also the author of three books on Asian politics. Her area of interest is the Philippines.

In spring of 1977, Noble assumed her first administrative position when she became acting chairwoman of the political science department.

After that, Noble went on to serve in other administrative capacities. By the following fall, she was associate dean of the College of Social Sciences, where she remained until the fall of 1979. Noble then became the associate dean for academic affairs, a position she held through 1980. She was responsible for reviewing appointments, retention, tenure and promotion of faculty members during both of her tenures as dean of the College of Social Sciences and dean of academic affairs.

As faculty affairs dean, she handled grievances and provided advice on personnel issues for 60 departments and

Spartan Creed reminds students how to live right hat does it mean to be a Spartan? That is a question we think every Spartan should have the answer to.

Holding a diploma from San Jose State University says you have completed the required courses to graduate, but it says more than that.

It says you are a Spartan.
Sure, Spartans lived in ancient Greece, but what does that mean to us today?

Our provost, Lela Noble, put it this way when she welcomed freshmen to the university at the August 25 convocation:

"Let me leave you with a rather quaint definition for someone educated at SJSU, a Spartan by tradi-tional nomenclature — and thus the reason the Spar-tan is the mascot for our athletic teams. This was written decades ago and still has meaning today.

"To make learning a lifetime pursuit — This is the goal of a Spartan;

To defend the truth wherever it may reside — This is the loyalty of a Spartan;

To understand fully before making judgments — This is the way of a Spartan;

To know what could be and what should be done — This is the burden of a Spartan;

To be able to do what must be done -This is the strength of a Spartan;

To live in harmony with the law, both human and divine — This is the promise of a Spartan;

To become the most that my talents and efforts can make me -This is the reward of a Spartan.

Noble said she would also add: "To engage in the world and know my neighbor -This is the wealth of a Spartan.'

I found out that Kate Hudson, daughter of Goldie Hawn and Bill Hudson, is Hollywood's latest "it" girl, gracing the covers of this month's Van-checkout line.

I'm more likely to be informed about the trivial matters of celebrities' lives, such as what outfit Gwyneth Paltrow wore to the most recent Armani fashion show, than the important matters of our world, such as which countries are at war.

Obviously, one could argue that if I were sincerely interested in knowing the truths of the world, I wouldn't be searching for them in the supermar-ket to begin with. I would assert, however, that I should be able to find such truths in the local grocery store.

People are at war, dying of hunge and starvation, experiencing unthinlable tortures, but instead of learning about these things, we read about the titillating details of the latest "it" girl's romance.

If the world's injustices are ever going to end, we need to at least know that they exist.

University police funds should be better spent o matter how late in the semester it gets or how eager some students are, parking at San Jose State University will always be a problem. But this isn't going to be another rambling piece about parking at a metropolitan university. That's been done.

I'm not even going to talk about traffic in Silicon Valley — which, by the way, is horrendous.

Let's talk about safety and finance.

With the new $5 million University Police Department building near completion, several questions have been raised.

It befuddles a student such as myself as to why the UPD would invest a huge amount of students' and faculty members' money from parking permits purchased during the years to contribute to the new building. The three-story structure that looms above the entrance to the Seventh Street garage will be the police departments new home come November. Nice digs huh?

Instead of a new building, that extra cash could have gone toward paying for either a security guard in the garages or a crossing guard at San Fernando and Ninth streets.

The crossing guard would be nice for students, staff members and visitors who wish to make the extra five-minute trek to the new hub of campus - the Student Services Center now located on the first floor of the 10th Street garage.

The Student Services Center meets all your student needs such as change of address forms, cashiering and Tower Cards.

There are a few issues with the center being relocated across the street from campus. Convenience and traffic are among the problems. Crossing Ninth Street at any given busses, motorcycles and cars that pedestrians must dodge to get to the 10th Street garage. Some students worry about their safety at night near the garage and the halfway homes as well. The least university police could do for the next few years is to help students out. Until the Student Services Center is possibly relocated out of the 10th Street garage, police should post a crossing guard there during the busiest hours. Primarily when students are around from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Let's calculate this. It cost $5 million for a new building. It would probably cost less than $30,000 a year to keep someone posted on Ninth Street during the busiest hours.

It's a hard sell trying to convince someone that UPD can't afford it. The other problem is related to the crime spree that occurred several weeks into the semester at the Park

No. 9 Spartans handle Falcons

By Clarissa Aljentera DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

The San Jose State University mens soccer team, ranked No. 9 in the National Soccer Coaches Association of America top 25 poll, is on fire. The Spartans defeated the Air Force Academy 3-0 Sunday at Spartan Stadium. SJSU (8-0-1) has seven shutouts in nine games, and won its second Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Mountain Division contest.

Spartan head coach Gary St. Clair said the Spartans are off to a good start.

"I wish we would have beat Stanford," St. Clair said of the 1-1 tie on Sept. 26. "Our job is to keep it going. We have to keep focused because it is ing to be a long season."

The Spartans had a difficult first half taking 13 shots. SJSU's first goal came off a Dan Fife penalty kick. In the 20th minute Falcon goalkeeper Mike Brophy was issued a red card that led to the penalty kick.

corner of the goal for the 1-0

"I wanted to put it low and hard," Fife said.

Fife said midfielder Jorge Martinez passed the ball to midfielder Isaias Bardales, who met opposition from Brophy

"He came on the side and hit me right on the shin," Bardales

The Falcons were forced to play one man down when they pulled Brophy out and put Mike Taylor at goalie. Falcon head coach Luis Sagastume said playing a man down affected his team.

"San Jose is a good team," Sagastume said. "You can't play with 10 men against a good team. We had to change our strategy, kind of like gambling, instead of doing what we planned to do."

Air Force was held to a total six shots, three in each half.

The Spartans couldn't put any more goals away until the second half.

SJSU's second goal of the game was from Bardales, a sophomore from San Jose, who received an assist from Frank Sanfilippo in the 47th minute.

"The ball went in and the ball was in the net," Bardales said.
"But he (Taylor) pushed the ball out and it looked like it went our way.'

As soon as the play ended the linesman closest to Taylor said it wasn't a goal, but the referee standing in center of the field called it differently.

SJSU created another scoring opportunity 18 minutes

SAN JOSE STATE UNIVERSITY

West Coast breaks hip-hop monotony

Hold on to your New York Yankees caps and gold chains, hip-hoppers. I might shatter you're whole view of the art form.

The West Coast is alive and well. And, here's the part that may shock you, it has nothing to do with Death Row, Ice Cube (1994-present version), E-40 or Jayo Felony or any other historically popular cornball West Coast M.C.

And that trembling you feel, it's not the fault lines acting up, it's the West Coast underground scene rising.

So if you're stuck in the monotony of new releases from the likes of Shyne, Mystikal and LL Cool J, do yourself a favor and look around Cali.

There's nothing better to recommend than Foreign Legion's debut album, "Kidnapper Van."
The trio, hailing from Oakland, is made up of two M.C.s who are the made up of two M.C.s who are the total antithesis of each other: Prozack, a 5-foot-8-inch, 150-pound white boy with a punch line delivery reminiscent of a rapping stand-up comedian and Mark Stretch, a looming 6-foot-5-inch, 300-pound black guy has commanding microphone presence.

Then there's the man behind the board, DJ Design. This Bay Area crate digger creates headnodding backdrops for the M.C.s to demonstrate one of the better rhyme-trading duos the industry has to offer.

Cuts such as "People Round Town," "Full Time B-Boy" and "Nowhere to Hide" are definite bangers. The FL even has its fair share of concept songs with "Ref-erence Check," "Meanwhile" and "Chain Reaction."

Another three-man crew doing its thing while residing in the west – Ugly Duckling These Long Beach natives also recently released their first full-length album, "Journey to Anywhere," a follow-up to last year's "Fresh Mode." Ugly Duckling, consisting of Andy, Bizzy and Young Ein-stein, is what happens when the Beastie Boys meet Jurassic 5: A soulful and experimental musical journey to anywhere they want to

What about hip-hop in the central valley? Yes, they have it there. The foremost authority is a fellow by the name of Planet Asia. He is back with his second solo release, "The Last Stand." Fresh off his collaboration with San Mateo's Rasco as part of the Cali Agents ("How The West Was One"), Asia is back with one final effort before making his way to Interscope, where he recently landed a deal.

The winner here is "Head Hon-

The Good, the Bad & the Jiggy

There's a lot of good in the world of 12 inches. First off, it's a little old, but I must acknowledge one of the hottest of the year, "Boom" from Royce the 5'9". With DJ Premier on production, Eminem's protégé shines on his first effort since being dropped from Tommy Boy Records.

To revisit my earlier left coast theme a new remix for "No Retreat" has hit record crates courtesy of Los Angeles' Dilated People and Kut Masta Kurt. Fel-low L.A. natives, Styles of Beyond are fresh off one of last year's best albums, but they're back with a new single "Subculture b/w Win-

Material girl is still in rhythm with 'Music'

SPECIAL TO THE DAILY

record was released, the pioneer of the female pop explosion is back, and this time Madonna wants to dance.

Perhaps an overdose of diaper changing and "Sesame Street" have put Madonna in the dancing mood, but whatever the reason, it's a good thing.

REVIEW

"Music," the first studio album from Madonna since 1998s "Ray of Light", is a rhythmic delight, full of slick, bouncy beats that give you no choice but to bob your head and let it take you away. "Boogie woogie, do you want to/

Do you like my acid rock?" it asks the listeners in the title track and first single from "Music." Quite possibly one of Madonna's best possibly one of Madonna's best singles since 1994s "Human Nature," "Music" is a throwback to the '80s, sliding just past the disco era, with its blatant and forceful dance floor grooves. Stark in contrast to the withdrawn, somewhat somber tone of grawn, somewhat somber tone of most of the tracks on "Ray of Light," "Music" is in your face, in all its electronic splendor.

Of the ten songs on "Music," few stray from the hard-core club feel of the title track.

Track No. 3, "Runaway Lover," has a gritty house feel to it and will quickly surpass "Music" as the next "it" club song. The sixth track, "Nobody's Perfect," almost contradicts itself in its search for a specific sound. Despite its spoken word introduc-tion and the rip-off of Cher's weird voice-altering machine from "Believe," "Nobody's Perfect" is rich with texture in its twisted beat, while inadvertent and surprising at the same time.

Just as soon as you think you have a grasp on the direction in which "Music" is going, "Don't Tell Me," track No. 7, catches you com-

Its quick and choppy guitar riffs suggest a quasi-folk influence but are quickly snatched up by the manufactured drumbeats, finally bringing you back so that it all makes sense once again.

The most unlikely of all musi-cal gems comes along with "What it Feels Like For A Girl," track No.

Initially it slums along with a strange intro, but before you know it, you are entranced.

While completely subtle and while completely subtle and understated, there is an almost R&B vibe present, and it sucks you into its infectious delivery.

Only one song on "Music" found me itching to move on. Track No. 9, "Paradise (Not For Me)," is a mess of spoken and the control of the word, partly in French, and lacking in any musical context.

She is the material girl, the master of re-invention.

And yes, she has done it again. With the help of French pro-ducer Mirwais, Madonna has managed to transform herself and, most importantly, her music once again. While "Music" is not a lyrical powerhouse, it is abounding with ear pleasing mixtures of house, electronica, pop, R&B and folk beats.

This time, Madonna is sure to keep us all dancing until we can boogie woogie no more.

NOBLE: Experience allows interim provost to recognize challenges facing today's professors

1,900 faculty members.

Noble also served as associate academic vice-president of faculty affairs from 1981 to 1990, heading the office responsible for working with the SJSU Academic Senate to develop policies and procedures affecting faculty members. In addition, she managed the monitoring of faculty recruitment and appointment processes, handled complaints, suits and disciplinary cases involving faculty members, along with planning and implementing faculty development programs.

For the next six years, Noble returned to teaching.

"I'm a political scientist," Noble said. "I

I'm a political scientist, Noble said. I like doing social sciences."

Noble then returned to working as an administrator in 1996, first as acting dean, then two years later, as dean of the College of Social Sciences.

Her responsibilities as dean included managing the college's budget, procedures for hiring and promoting faculty members, grant and awards programs, and working with department chairmen to resolve facul-sty, staff, student and facility problems.

She held this position until becoming interim provost on Aug. 1.

Noble's academic achievements are not the only reason for her success, according to the collection.

two colleagues.
Paul Brown, assistant to the provost, said he admires her readiness to listen to others, her integrity and her willingness to laugh at herself.

"Her policy is ... open door," Brown said.
"She's extremely approachable and posses. She's got a tremendous sense of humor. She doesn't take herself too seriously."

Noble is also deeply concerned about issues involving both teachers and students. "Lela Noble has been my colleague ever char Noble has been my conteague ever since I came to the university," said Terry Christensen, chairman of the political sci-ence department, who came to SJSU in 1970. "What I respect most — among many things — is how passionately she cares about students and teachers," Christensen said "Thet's been reflected in all the canacisaid. "That's been reflected in all the capacities in which she has served. She's really in tune with the workload of teachers and with what goes on in our classrooms. She understands well what students' lives are like now. That's going to be a great thing to have in an administrator.

in an administrator."

Noble said she believes the challenges facing teachers at SJSU today have changed from previous decades. First, she said, because the university has more students for whom English is a second language, so emphasizing the development of writing skills has become more interestration to the decrease.

important in the classroom.

Second, Noble said, the development of technology has made teaching "more compli-cated and more dependent on equipment, installation and maintenance beyond the control of the faculty member."

Noble also finds students the fact that are working more hours at jobs than in the past is problematic for both teachers and students. She said that consequently, students may attend class erratically and give lower priority to out-of-class assignments.

"I think students are definitely working more hours than they were when I first came, and feel pressured because of multiple roles," Noble said.

Even so, when Noble addressed incoming freshmen at the welcoming convocation Aug. 25, she encouraged them to hold true to the values of the decades-old Spartan Creed printed in the SJSU student handbook.

To read the Spartan creed,

The creed states that a Spartan should make learning a lifelong goal, defend truth, understand issues fully, be an active and responsible citizen, and utilize one's talents fully.

Noble also made her own addition to the Spartan Creed to conclude her speech.

"I would add also, To engage the world and to know my neighbor: This is the wealth of a Spartan," Noble said

Reflecting later upon her convocation speech, Noble said she believes the truth of the Spartan Creed has held up. "The kinds of affirmations that are included in that creed are valid across the years," Noble said. Noble said she plans to return to her posi-tion as dean of the College of Social Sciences when a permanent provost is appointed.

"That's the set of disciplines with which I identify most," Noble said.

Public defense lawyer Susan Bernardini explains the problems minorities face with the justice system and advised students on how they can use the legal system to protect themselves. Bernardini, who is running for the position of Superior Court judge in the November elections, spoke in Professor Steve Miller's African American Studies class Monday.

bench, having served as a superior court commissioner since 1997 according to an article in the Palo Alto Daily News. Schroeder also has 25 years experience as an attorney according to the same article.

Bernardini graduated in 1985 from the Santa Clara University Law School, where she attended classes while juggling the responsibilities of a single mother of three children.

Bernardini said she currently leads Schroeder in the polls.

"I will probably be the first public defender elected (in Santa Clara County)," Bernardini said.

Most public defenders who make it to the Superior Court are appointed by a Democratic governor to fill the remaining term of a judge who has retired, Bernardini said.

As a public defender, Bernardini is appointed to clients who cannot afford an attorney. During the 60-minute lecture followed by a question and answer session, she jokingly referred to the public's stigma of the profession as "public pretenders."

The stereotype comes from the idea that public defenders are assigned to cases they might not necessarily have a deep-rooted

'Some people actually choose to do good work," Bernardini said.

One student asked how defending drug dealers, sex offenders and other criminals could be considered good work.

Bernardini explained to the class what made her choose to become a public defense lawyer rather than pursue a more lucrative career at a private firm.

"I am protecting (the alleged criminal's) right to privacy and right to unreasonable search and seizure and my own right to unreasonable search and seizure," Bernardini said. "And I feel that if I defend the most guilty person in the world and make sure that every law stands up that when I need the law to protect me, that law will be standing up."

Millner said the issues Bernardini addressed were especially pertinent to the demographic makeup of the class.

"A lot of (the student's) are right out of the streets of Los Angeles and the streets of Oakland. A lot of them are from the barrios. So these types of issues are especially important to them," Millner said.

For Lemuel Herring, a student in the class, Bernardini's warning about being pulled over by the police hit home.

Herring, a sophomore majoring in digital animation, shared with the class his experience of being pulled over for a block he had on his license plate, which prevented it from being scanned by police pedar. Besides being issued a fix it tick herring said the police officer ordered him out of the car and proceeded to pat search him. Herring is African-American.

Bernardini told the class that this type

Bernardini told the class that this type of search is not uncommon even though it is unlawful without reason to believe that the individual has a weapon.

As a public defender, Bernardini said her job is to protect citizens from these types of unlawful searches, even if it means protecting the guilty.

"If I make sure that a police officer can't go into your house without a warrant, even though we know there's a pound of coke in there, that means he can't go into my house without a warrant either," Bernardini said.

After the lecture, Herring spoke with Bernardini about the avenues he could take to lodge a complaint against the department.

Herring said he found Bernardini's lecture informative and that he would probably vote for her.

"She kept it real," Herring said.

FORUM: SJSU selected as the only California university to host a meeting of the Internet Policy Institute

Sylvia Hutchinson, interim director of Communications and Public Affairs at SJSU said, "They called us, and we thought it'd be a great idea. I think that this is exactly the type of event that should happen at a university. I mean, this is what a university is all about. To take an issue like this that affects so many people and to air it and to hear differing opinions about it and different recommendations about how we should handle it is great.

Conrad Corpus, a senior majoring in management information systems, said he was surprised when he saw Newt Gingrich and James Barksdale in the room.

"I was surprised to see some major players and decision makers here. It was really nice," Corpus said. "Having people recognize that San Jose State can these people here really impressed me.'

Hutchinson, along with Bill Nance, the acting associate vice president of academic technology at SJSU, said they were proud of the students who spoke on the topics presented throughout the two hour long meeting.

"I'm happy they were here, and I was very impressed with how well they all spoke," Hutchinson said.

The Internet Policy Institute has scheduled four more town hall meetings in October at various universities across the nation.
