Campus strives for water conservation

By J.E. Espino

DAILY STAFF WRITER

La Dinh said she thinks the water conservation labels installed in all campus washroom facilities will not help students become more aware of the need to save water.

"I think that they don't care because they are frustrated with their own problems," said Dinh, an undeclared major. "It's a school business, not their own."

The green plastic labels are part of the university's effort to conserve water, according to Dan Johnson, the associate vice president of Facilities Development and Operations.

"Those signs don't really make a difference to me. I don't waste water, naturally," said Oliver Dario, an undeclared major.

Johnson, however, said students have been responding positively.

"We actually believe we have seen an estimated 1,100 gallons saved," he said. "It's voluntary, but I think we can do better."

Johnson said all campus showers have been converted to the mandated low-flow shower heads.

Apeksha Mehta, an undeclared major who lives on campus, said she had not noticed any difference in the flow of the water.

"I think it's a good idea," she said.

Johnson said the university's Central Plant, located next to the Boccardo Business Center, is operating on recycled water.

According to Mike Di Marco, a spokesperson for the Santa Clara Valley Water District, recycled water is dish, toilet and shower water that is recaptured before it flows into the bay and treated for reuse.

"Using recycled water is a no-brainer," Johnson said. "If the truth be known, the water is just as good as potable water."

Johnson said he believes that while the water is safer than most water in other parts of the world, it will only be used in the irrigation systems.

The main campus irrigation system is scheduled to operate with recycled water

Baseball team abuses Gauchos in 23-10 rout

By Julian J. Ramos

DAILY STAFF WRITER

The electronic scoreboard in right center field at Municipal Stadium can only register up to 19 runs and 19 hits.

Sunday, it got quite a workout. The Spartan baseball team lit up the scoreboard, tallying 23 runs and pounding out 24 hits in a 23-10 nonconference rout of the University of California Santa Barbara.

The win improved San Jose State University's record to 3-1 while the Gauchos dropped to 1-2.

"It's better to start the season 3-1 than 2-2," senior right fielder Brandon Macchi said.

Junior second baseman Gabe Lopez put SJSU in the scoring column first with a lead-off home run in the bottom of the first inning.

Four batters and two outs later, junior left fielder Junior Ruiz was on second base when senior third baseman John Fagan singled to bring Ruiz home, putting the Spartans up 2-0.

Starting pitcher Jahseam George, in his first start for SJSU since transferring from Brigham Young University, gave up five runs in the second inning including back-to-back home runs, the first of which was a three-run shot.

An inning later, with the Spartans trailing 6-2, head coach Sam Piraro took George out of the game and replaced him with senior pitcher Patrick Choate. Choate gave up two more runs to boost Santa Barbara's lead to 8-2.

In the bottom of the third inning the Spartans' bats awakened.

Hahn displays artwork in Gallery 2

By George Moore

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Longtime San Jose State University student Margaret Studer Hahn is displaying her artwork in public for the first time in Gallery 2 of the Art building beginning today.

"Illuminations: Traces of Glory" is a gathering of recent drawings and fiberarts, art that incorporates thread or yarn that was created in an almost spiritualistic manner, Hahn said.

PREVIEW

Hahn credits professor and mentor Jaqueline Thurston for guiding her through a very successful semester in her art drawing class.

"I have never been directed in that manner before," Hahn said. "She stressed the importance of having a mental process behind your art. The class kept journals and was instructed to begin with a core image, and we just expanded it from there."

Hahn described the religious expression in her art as a very personal experience. She said it was a difficult assignment to place an external appearance on a purely spiritual idea.

"What speaks to one is not what communicates to another," she said.

Awareness is the key to preventing tragedies

Bennett lives up to Spartan name

Kelly Bennett went to class Monday like many of us. She waited for the Park and Ride shuttles after her day like many of us.

She then logged some hours at her job, just like many of us.

It was there that Kelly Bennett's day took a turn that no one else's did.

Between the time she punched in at her job as a photo technician at a San Jose drug store and the time she went home that night, she became a hero.

You all know the story by now: Girl develops pictures. Girl sees bombs and weapons. Girl calls police. Police arrest suspect. "Columbine-style attack" is prevented. Thousands are saved. Girl is a hero.

It sounds simple, but there was nothing simple about what Kelly Bennett did.

It took quick thinking. It took an incredible amount of courage. And it took the mentality of a hero.

We are proud to say that she's one of our own. She's a Spartan.

Look it up in the dictionary. A Spartan is "brave and undaunted."

When the time came to separate the heroes from the zeros, she didn't flinch. She did the right thing.

If she didn't have those Spartan-like qualities, who knows what would have happened.

Thankfully, all we can do is guess. Now the 18-year-old radio, television and film major is living like a star.

It may only be the conditional 15 minutes of fame, but she's doing things most of us haven't.

She's riding around New York City in limousines. She's on television talking to Katie Couric and Diane Sawyer. She's hanging out at the MTV studios.

They all want to know what happened. How she foiled the alleged plans to bomb De Anza College. How she became a national hero.

She's probably told the story a thousand times.

But then again, the students at De Anza have probably breathed a sigh of relief a thousand times.

And the parents of those students, even though they've never met her, have probably thanked Kelly Bennett a thousand times.

But she deserves it. Kelly Bennett is a hero. Kelly Bennett is a Spartan.

Quote for the Daily:

Perception. It's a gift few people utilize. I met someone with a higher degree of perception than most of the schmucks that populate this campus Monday, when I was running around trying to get quotes about the new tour buses that the university contracted.

She was getting ready to leave for work, but she told me she wondered why the campus would need to pay for such glitzy buses, and why we couldn't consider alternatives to alleviate the campus parking problem than shelling out more money to companies.

It was a little more enlightening than, "The buses are comfy."

I didn't think much more about the interview until Wednesday, when it was announced that the person who stopped a man who had allegedly plotted to attack De Anza College was Kelly Bennett.

The same Kelly Bennett I interviewed that Monday afternoon. Three hours after I spoke with her, she noticed something unusual in the photos she was developing at the drug store she worked at and tipped off cops about a guy posing with pipe bombs and guns. The suspect was arrested while standing in line in front of her.

Hey, better than me. I may have a good deal of perception, but I'm used to seeing dorks pose with swords and guns from attending video game parties, and while I know a considerable amount about weaponry, I don't think I'd identify a pipe bomb right off the bat.

D.S. PEREZ

BORN UNDER A BAD SIGN

As I have walked around San Jose State University this past week, I've heard both students and faculty fearing for their lives. I hear them saying that what could've happened at De Anza College could happen here.

After all, this is an open campus, and there are enough nutcases and guns in circulation to create another disaster. A person going postal on the grounds of SJSU is something that could happen, but the odds of anyone being whacked in a terrorist bombing/armed attack are less likely than dying from a bee sting, a fire or a traffic accident.

And all it takes to stop a potential accident, fire or bee sting is to be alert. To notice something suspicious or out of the ordinary. Like Smokey the Bear says, "Only you can prevent forest fires." I guess we need Robert Stack from "Unsolved Mysteries" to tell us only you can prevent murderers.

Not only is the deed heroic, but it has an element of humor to it.

According to police reports, the guy was apprehended in a drug store. Thank God it wasn't Kmart — I think the guy would've run off when the public address person said there was a blue-light special on hairspray and suspects in aisle 26.

Once again, the world can thank anyone who develops film for a living. Back in the '70s and '80s, Fotomat workers tipped off cops about perverts who brought their kiddie porn to be developed. Now these people catch potential serial killers.

As I await the court case that will likely take a year or so, I laugh at the announced defense of the alleged conspirator: a fantasy. OK, if you have a fantasy of setting off a bomb and you build one bomb that you might detonate in the middle of nowhere, that might fly for a jury. If you have 60 bombs in your house, that's not a fantasy, that's the sign of an addiction hobbyist or someone wanting to recreate a war zone.

Some people have questioned why the parents didn't know the kid allegedly had 60 bombs, a couple of illegally modified guns and 2,000 rounds of ammo in his bedroom. All I can say is "Dexter's Laboratory," a cartoon where a kid genius has a secret nuclear-powered lab under his home, isn't too far-fetched.

I also don't get why the dude, Al DeGuzman, needed vanity shots with his alleged weapons of mass destruction. Now, I know the Columbine kids took a video of themselves explaining why they were going to tear up their high school, but they had the brains to use a private camcorder to film themselves. Future potential terrorists and mass murderers, take note: If you need vanity shots before you go on your bloodthirsty rampage, get your own Polaroid camera, camcorder or learn to develop your own film.

Enough of that tangent though. Right now, Kelly Bennett is being thanked by the mayor, by the faculty and students of De Anza College, and by the community. She's enjoying a good 15 minutes of fame, and who knows what kind of karma or feeling one has for averting a mass murder.

And while that is going on, people shake in their boots that maybe next time, someone won't be there to stop a similar incident.

Again, I will say such an attack is a rarity, although in modern times, there are enough fame-seekers and disgruntled types to engage society with the barrels of guns and time bombs.

And there are always tip-offs. There were ample clues for someone to stop Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold from tearing up Columbine. There were chances for authorities to catch the guys who blew up the garage of the World Trade Center in New York City.

Nobody acted on it. Anyone can stop a disaster by being alert and having the guts to call the authorities. I think Bennett has provided a good example of that.

Alleged bomb plot too close for comfort

I don't know about the other San Jose residents, but for nearly a week I feel like I've been oblivious of the fact that I've been residing dangerously close to an unsuspected volcano that almost erupted.

It didn't, of course, but Al DeGuzman, the 19-year-old student who is charged for allegedly plotting to bomb De Anza College, only needed a little more time.

When I first received the news on Tuesday, I heard the words "bomb threat" and didn't grasp — until much later — the degree of seriousness that was involved.

What I initially imagined was a hoax. One that involved a neglected teenager who was in search of some attention and a cheap thrill.

As the hours passed, however, the story unraveled and I repeatedly heard the incident being referred to a "Columbine-style attack."

My security and my faith had been rattled. It would only get worse in the days to come.

I remember waking up early the next morning and scrambling to get to my class on time at least once this semester. Somehow, in all that frenzy, I coerced myself into believing that that the previous day's dismal news had been a dream.

So, you can imagine my rude awakening when I received a phone call that afternoon from a San Jose Mercury News reporter who informed me that, two years after I did, DeGuzman graduated from the same high school I attended. That he, too, was on the yearbook staff. And that he interacted with many of the same faculty members and students whom I once interacted with.

At that moment, in an attempt to digress, I recalled something I learned in one of my classes: the "law of common fate," where the brain groups people together when they behave in similar ways.

I was upset, to say the least.

Yet, it wasn't because of a young man and his alleged, deadly mission. Instead it was because of this reporter, who dragged me out of my self-induced state of oblivion and began bombarding me with this coincidental — not to mention, unwanted — information.

MINAL GANDHI

That was almost a week ago. Although I'm still uncomfortable that DeGuzman and I had things in common, of course they had more to do with a combination of geography and coincidence. I have a bone to pick with oblivion.

It's depressing that this country is seeing more media coverage involving mass murder and young people.

Nevertheless, whether these situations stem from pressures of the fast-paced, competitive society we live in — where days seem to pass like hours and hours like seconds — or the deteriorating relationships between parents and children, oblivion always plays a role.

Think about it: Many of us don't know our neighbors. We don't know our classmates. And, while we assume otherwise, sometimes, we don't even know our kids.

And it's because of this attitude, because of these lifestyles some of us have, in which we're swamped with duty and routine and obligation, that I'm afraid we'll plunge even further into the dark pit of oblivion.

And what then? How many more "Columbine-style attacks" or attempted attacks will we face?

How many more times will we ask, "What was wrong with that kid?" or wonder, "Where were the parents while all of this was happening?" if we don't even take the initiative to know one another?

WATER: Recycle plan to start on northwest part of campus in summer this week, while the northwest section of campus may start to use recycled water as early as this summer, Johnson said.

The campus uses 97,000 gallons of water a day, but with the central plant's use of recycled water, Santa Clara County's aquifers save 50,000 gallons of water, Johnson said.

The aquifers, or underground lakes, provide 40 percent of the water in the county.

"We're not mandated to do a lot of things, but we are a public institution," Johnson said. "If we don't conserve, it will cost the people who pay this institution to be here. We have an obligation to assist in what we can."

Di Marco said water conservation will provide 20 percent of the water needs for the county by 2010.

Johnson said because some of the old buildings cannot be repaired nor can their urinals be retrofitted because it would be too costly, all new buildings will have dual pipes.

One pipe will carry recycled water and the other will have drinking water.

"It is our expectation that as conservation efforts are taken, there will be participation," Johnson said.

Johnson said he would be interested in working with Associated Students to get input from the students on their utility conservation ideas.

According to Dinh, students must be affected directly to become concerned in water-conservation efforts.

"It doesn't affect their lives. They don't have to pay for it," she said. "So they don't care about it."

"If they pay for it, they will conserve it," she said.

Dinh said she nevertheless opposed the idea of paying a water fee.

Stuart Mahoney, an illustrations major, said he did not know of other steps that could be taken to save water.

"I don't think there's much water wasting as far as I can see," Mahoney said. "It's not like I see the sprinklers are not turned off. Fountains work on cycle, not fresh water."

"Personally, I haven't seen an outright negligent misuse of water by the students," he said.

L.A. replaces red lights to save energy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In light of California's energy crisis, Los Angeles County will replace 5,000 red lights in traffic signals with new equipment that consumes far less electricity.

The signals' red incandescent bulbs will be taken out in favor of longer-lasting light-emitting diodes, or LEDs.

Although they cost much more — LEDs can run $75 and up, while an ordinary bulb goes for just a dollar or two — the diodes use less power. A standard 8-inch stoplight uses 69 watts, while the new lights use about seven watts.

Smaller LEDs are commonly used for such things as the tiny red lights that alert people that their stereos are on.

County officials say they are only replacing the red bulbs because the technology for red LEDs has been around for years, leading to cheaper prices, and because red lights are used more. The red bulbs in traffic signals are lit 59 percent of the time, compared with 38 percent for green lights.

a variety of topics ranging from American liberalism to lesbian and gay politics.

"I am thrilled to hear from this epic playwright," Nier said.

Some of the general topics Nier is slated to cover are Kushner's thoughts on the world today, President George W. Bush, achievements and losses of gay rights as a result of the Clinton administration, the art world after the Reagan administration and Kushner's current projects and future.

Following the interview, Kushner is scheduled to appear at 7:30 p.m. in the Morris Dailey Auditorium for "A Reading with Tony Kushner."

The evening is scheduled to end with a book signing, following the two events and reflections on "Angels in America."

Kushner was born in Manhattan, N.Y., but grew up in Lake Charles, La., Anstandig said.

He wrote plays in the early 1980s on change and progress in society, Anstandig said.

Kushner's other works include

"Hydrotophia," "A Bright Room Called Day" and "Slavs!: Thinking About the Longstanding Problems of Virtue and Happiness."

One play, titled "Henry Box Brown," is based on the true story of an African American who is struggling to escape from the South in a crate.

Paul Douglas, chairman of SJSU's English department, said he has not had the opportunity to hear Kushner speak, but said that he has heard great things about the speaker from others.

"Kushner has the respect of a wide variety in the drama world," Douglas said. "He has great personal presence, warmth and a deep personal commitment, a great experience to remember."

Josanna Robinson, a junior majoring in liberal arts, said she heard about Kushner through her American dream and ethnic American literature classes.

Robinson said a professor told her "Kushner would enrich us."

'Dogs chew up Spartans

By D.S. Perez

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Ahead by 29 points with seven minutes left in Saturday's game at the Event Center, Fresno State University basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian sat in his chair with boredom etched on his face.

Moments earlier, Bulldogs forward Chris Jeffries had performed a dunk worthy of ESPN highlight footage and cocked his head to rub the pain into the San Jose State University players. At that point, Tarkanian took Jeffries and the other starters out of the game and sent his bench players to the floor.

Saturday's Score

|--------------|----|
| Fresno State | 86 |
| Spartans | 75 |

Thursday - SJSU at Fresno St. 7 p.m.

It was a decision Tarkanian said he regretted, as the Spartans went on a 23-7 run in the final six minutes, cutting the Bulldogs' lead to nine points in the last minute of play and causing the legendary coach to rise from his chair while shaking his head.

Foul trouble kept the Spartans at bay, as the Bulldogs sank free throws and went on to win the game 86-75.

"I didn't think we could ever lose the game," Tarkanian said. "But I was mad because we lost the intensity. The substitutions didn't come to play at all, and when I put the big guys back out, they didn't have as much intensity."

Jeffries, who raised both his arms and pointed his index fingers in the air to show he ruled his opponent's home court after an impressive dunk in the first half that had Fresno State fans screaming, was also taken back by the Spartans' final run.

"We were kinda surprised," he said. "We thought the game was over with four minutes to go. We were looking for our substitutes to keep it going, but we had to go back into the game."

"I'm just happy we won, because they gave us the shots and we made them," Jeffries said.

The Spartans (10-10, 2-7 in Western Athletic Conference play) had their final push started by an alley-oop pass from Mike Garrett to Darnell Williams with 4:53 left to play. Garrett and Scott Sonnenberg each nailed a three-point shot and Billy Landram electrified the Spartan fans by sinking two three-pointers during the run. Landram hit the second three-pointer on a fade-away jumper, and he fell on his back when the shot swished through the net.

According to Williams, a senior forward, it was Jeffries' showboating after his monster dunks that sparked the team.

"We wanted to show that nobody should take advantage of us, that we don't like anyone doing that in our place," said Williams, who finished the game with 17 points and 11 rebounds.

Jeffries had ample reason to showboat at the Event Center, as he sank five of six three-point shots and led the game in scoring with 23 points.

Not only did Jeffries and the rest of the Bulldogs own the floor for most of the game, but Fresno State fans made up the majority of the Event Center, as the stands were a sea of blood-red sweaters and shirts.

"We figured out we had the place from the beginning, when we saw all the fans cheering for us," Jeffries said, noting that the SJSU fan support "wasn't that deep."

Williams said the feel of a road game in their home court wasn't much of a factor in the Spartans' play against Fresno State.

"It doesn't affect us at all," Williams said. "Us four seniors all told the newcomers how it was going to be."

The screaming fans may have not been a factor, but the Bulldogs' skill at three-point range and their ability to make free-throw shots were. The Bulldogs went 10-15 from beyond the arc, and made 20 of 28 shots from the free-throw line.

The Spartans responded with one of their best offensive performances of the season, but according to head coach Steve Barnes, it wasn't enough to win the game.

"We scored 75 points," Barnes said. "That's plenty of points for us. But we didn't defend against three-point shots and made too many fouls."

Barnes and Williams both said Jeffries and the Bulldogs were hungry after being shut down by the University of Hawai'i on Thursday.

Spartans spear Aggies for third straight win

By Vivian Bejarin

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Friends and family who filled the stands at the San Jose State University Aquatic Center for Saturday's Family Day were treated to the Spartan water polo team's third straight win, a 10-5 victory against UC Davis.

The first period proved to be competitive for both sides.

Within the first few minutes of the period, the Aggies posted early goals to take a 3-0 lead. The Spartans (3-0) were able to fight back with goals from junior Erin Kelly, freshman Christine Welsh and freshman Adriane Riddle, who tied up the score at three apiece.

Jennie Charlesworth, a senior utility player, expected this game to be intense since the Aggies are one of San Jose State University's major rivals.

"(This) was an example of a really good game. The first three goals are what gave us the power," Charlesworth said.

SJSU shut out the Aggies 2-0 in the second period for the 5-3 lead, with goals by Welsh and Kelly.

In the third period, the intensity increased between the two teams. The first attempts by each team were blocked by their respective goalies. Melanie Nicholes was able to make a second block, preventing another tie game for the thirdtime.

During the third period, Aggies driver Tiffany Hodges made back-to-back goals and Spartan utility player Inna Fedoseyeva added another.

By the final period of the first game, the Spartans captured the lead, adding four goals and sealing the win.

Senior driver Cassie Rawdin said it looked as though UC Davis was going to be competitive during the first half of the game after the Aggies netted three goals.

"We stepped up and showed them what we're all about," Rawdin said.

Sophomore Julie Schmidt said practice in defensive tactics was helpful in winning the game.

"Overall, I think we did great. We stepped up even though they came up strong," said Schmidt.

Head coach Lou Tully was pleased to know that despite the slow beginning in the first game, his team didn't panic.

"We were down three, so we substituted three players because we need a huge spark," Tully said.

Tully was pleased to get the spark and the win.

"The team hung in there and used good team effort," he said.

In the second game, SJSU defeated the Aggies 6-2.

"It's nice to win," Tully said. "There's room for improvement. We're happy."

The Spartans will play their next three games at Stanford in the Northern California Tournament, which begins on Feb. 10.

GALLERY: Reception scheduled for Tuesday night, exhibition will be open today to Thursday

Because of personal reasons and her pursuit of a career, Hahn, 48, described herself as an "eternal schoolchild," because she has been attending SJSU since 1986, and has been taking college courses since 1971.

She does hope to graduate someday, she said, adding that her 87-year-old father, who lives in Idaho, is patiently waiting.

Working full time while attending classes, Hahn has worked for the Peninsula Times Tribune and later at Unix World Magazine.

Hahn said she began her studies pursuing a graphics design degree. She shifted her focus to studio art and found her niche in desktop publication. With that knowledge, she currently publishes an 80-page monthly trade journal for Apartment Associations, her current employer.

Hahn found out long ago that she preferred drawing to all other media.

"Drawing to me is more flexible," Hahn said. "I think my background in graphic design and the fact that I don't like to get dirty are other reasons."

She described her work as illustrative, clean and precise.

"The acme of tool perfection is PrismaColor pencils, which are permanent, brilliant and come in a gazillion colors," she said. "Drawing paper has taken on a life of its own now, with colors and textures never seen before."

Hahn said she has not been content with art of a religious nature that she has seen throughout the years, but rather than complain about it, she had other ideas. "I thought I would try it myself," Hahn said. She quickly realized how difficult it was because of the expression it takes. Hahn attempted to explore the representation of Christian spiritual subjects in her latest body of work, she said.

The gallery is scheduled to feature seven framed drawings, with accompanying woven wall hangings containing "text boxes" with original prose, poetry or scripture. Space permitting, there is slated to be several fiberart hangings as well, she said.

The opening reception is scheduled to be held from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. on Tuesday. The gallery is slated to be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday to Thursday.

Volunteers heartbroken

VALLEJO, Calif. (AP) — With a 7-year-old girl confirmed dead after more than a year of hope for her safe return, volunteers and authorities are steeling their resolve and seeking justice for those responsible for the crime.

The death of Xiana Fairchild, missing since Dec. 9, 1999, was confirmed Saturday at a Santa Clara County Sheriff's department news conference. The DNA test results on a child's skull found in the Santa Cruz Mountains confirmed the bone fragments belonged to Fairchild.

The medical examiner's report indicated Fairchild died of "homicidal violence." Now authorities will try to determine who killed the girl and why. Volunteers who searched tirelessly for Fairchild over the past year want someone held accountable.

"I really wanted her home alive," said Deena May, a volunteer who spent nearly every Saturday searching for Fairchild, a child she never knew. She said she wants answers about the death. "Until I know why, it's not going to sink in. It still feels like she's missing."

Sheriff's investigators combed the Santa Cruz Mountains for the rest of Fairchild's remains on Sunday.

Kim Swartz, whose daughter Amber has been missing for 13 years, also wants to know who killed Fairchild.

"That brings us one step closer. We now have Xiana. We know she was murdered. Now we just have to figure out who it is (the suspect)," Swartz said.

Vallejo police said the discovery creates no new suspects, but among those under suspicion in Fairchild's disappearance are her mother, Antoinette Robinson, and Robinson's boyfriend, Robert Turnbough.

Turnbough initially told police he had left the girl at a bus stop, but later changed his story to say she walked alone to catch the bus. Vallejo police never labeled Turnbough a suspect, but did say he had been under "a cloud of suspicion" because of his conflicting tales.

"From the very day that Xiana disappeared we got conflicting stories from her mother and her mother's boyfriend," said Vallejo police chief Robert Nichelini.

Fairchild's kidnapping case revived interest recently when a man in jail for allegedly abducting one girl began telling reporters he was also responsible for Fairchild's disappearance.

Curtis Dean Anderson told Fairchild's great-aunt that the girl was still alive and he knew of her whereabouts. The latest findings contrast Anderson's accounts.

"At this stage of the investigation there is no evidence of links to Anderson to this case," said Capt. Brian Beck of Santa Clara County investigative services. "We're all aware of his notoriety and his discussions with the press, but that does constitute evidence."

Anderson is charged with kidnapping an 8-year-old Vallejo girl last August. The girl managed to escape when Anderson allegedly left her in his car unattended.

Anderson's attorney, Carl Spieckerman, said jail officials have told him his client was going to be transferred from Solano County to Santa Clara County where Fairchild's skull was found Jan. 19 by a construction worker.

"They're going to book him," Spieckerman said. "And I believe he's going to be charged with something in connection with this case."

BASEBALL: Spartans take two of three in first series of the year

Ruiz from third base and made the score 8-3. The next batter, junior shortstop Ryan Adams, cleared the bases with a grand slam to center field off Gauchos starter sophomore Jim Bullard. When the inning was finished, the Spartans had scored nine runs on eight hits and led 11-8.

"It was very big to be trailing 8-2 and rally back," Piraro said.

In the fourth inning Choate gave way to Jeremy Rogelstad. The 6-foot-7-inch junior shut out the Gauchos for three innings until surrendering a two-run homer to junior first baseman Jed Stringham in the seventh inning.

"Rogelstad came in and did a great job," Choate said. "Luckily, I got the win."

Leading 14-10 in the bottom of the seventh, the Spartans' offense scored eight runs, including a two-run home run by Ruiz. Ruiz was 5-for-6 on the day with five RBIs.

"We don't try to hit home runs," Ruiz said. "We just try to put the ball in play."

After losing the series opener 15-8, the Spartans won the last two games of the three-game series, including an 8-7 victory Saturday.

"With the experience that we gained from last year, we are never out," Choate said.

The team will host San Francisco State University at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday at Blethen Field.

U.S. Citizen accused in embassy bombing

NEW YORK (AP) — His hair and beard are wild and woolly, his eyes dark and hollow, his frame bony. Though 40, he claims he's a college freshman living in the 1970s and can't remember his wife and children. He managed a tire shop in Texas suburbia but has trotted the globe, with stops in Somalia, Pakistan and Afghanistan.

Meet Wadhi El-Hage — U.S. citizen and one of four men going on trial Monday in the bombings of two U.S. embassies in Africa.

Prosecutors say El-Hage was a personal secretary to wealthy Saudi exile Osama bin Laden, the alleged engineer of the attacks that killed 224 people, including 12 Americans, in Kenya and Tanzania. If convicted, he could face life in prison.

Besides El-Hage, the other defendants include Mohamed Sadeek Odeh, 35, of Jordan who allegedly told investigators that shortly before the bombing he had met with an explosives expert who led a Kenyan terrorism cell. He also faces a potential life sentence if convicted.

Two others — Mohamed Rashed Daoud Al-Owhali, 24, of Saudi Arabia and Khalifan Khamis Mohamed, 27, of Tanzania — could be sentenced to death.

All the defendants have been portrayed as militants willing to go to any extreme to carry out bin Laden's holy war, or jihad, against the "enemies of God."

But El-Hage stands apart.

For one, he is the only U.S. citizen among the defendants. Former co-workers and neighbors in Arlington, Texas, described him as a hard-working family man.

He also has distinguished himself since his 1998 arrest by complaining loudly and constantly that he is an innocent victim of guilt-by-association, jailhouse abuse and, most recently, mental illness and amnesia. Frustrated by conditions in a federal lock-up, he jumped up in court last summer and dashed at U.S. District Judge Leonard Sand before being tackled by federal marshals.

Sand ordered El-Hage to undergo psychological examinations after defense attorneys told him that more than two years of solitary confinement and strip searches had left their client too distressed and disoriented to aid in his own defense.

To back up claims he had no memory of his life past his first year in college, they produced a copy of a rambling, handwritten letter in which El-Hage told his wife he didn't know her and asked if she was "part of the game that is being played on me and other foreign students. ... I was kidnapped from my school and brought here against my will."

But prosecutors portray El-Hage as a calculating malingering whose U.S. citizenship only made him more dangerous. He was "chosen by bin Laden to work for him because he had a United States passport and could travel more freely," Assistant U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald said.

At a recent hearing, two psychiatrists and a psychologist agreed that El-Hage does not have a major mental disorder. Fitzgerald told the judge the defendant "should just knock it off, work with his counsel, and proceed."

Distributing India quake aid takes time

BHUJ, India (AP) — As their oversized pickup sped along a one-lane highway in western India on Sunday, V.P. Patel and a dozen friends and neighbors stood in the back, tossing out plastic bags of water and cooking oil. Barefoot children raced behind them, retrieving the bags from the roadside dust.

India faces the mounting challenge of distributing aid that has piled up since the Jan. 26 quake, which killed thousands of people and left more than half a million homeless in this parched desert corner of India's Gujarat state.

But relief workers say that while well-meaning amateurs like Patel may be responding faster than disaster experts, their methods run the risk of putting too much aid in some hands while the neediest go without.

"It's not enough just to hand someone a tarp" to build a makeshift shelter, said William S. Berger, head of a U.S. relief team in India. "You have to make sure 20 other people haven't handed them a tarp, that they need the tarp, and that someone out in a village isn't doing without while everyone living along the side of the road gets help."

Aid has flowed into Gujarat state in response to the quake, but the magnitude of the devastation is still being measured. Death toll estimates range from 11,844 to 16,435, and state authorities say the total killed could eventually hit 35,000.

The number of confirmed dead was expected to surge on Monday, when demolition crews clear away the ruins of larger apartment blocks and uncover the bodies of more victims. The injured numbered 66,758, Gujarat state officials said.

Authorities have cleared bodies from all but three of 400 villages in the region most affected by the quake, and nearly all of the remaining bodies were still buried in three larger towns: Bhuj, Anjar and Bhachau. The recovery of bodies was expected to end in two or three days.

The next challenge will be disease. There are more than 600,000 homeless who lack food, clothing or sanitation, and respiratory infections are spreading.

Relief workers are rushing to keep pace. On Saturday, U.S. Air Force C-17 cargo planes brought tents, blankets, water tankers and forklifts. A British Airways plane landed in Bombay with 36 tons of aid donated by Hindu temples in Britain.

A large amount of international aid is being distributed, along with more food, clothing and tents handed out by Indian organizations and individuals. But efforts have been criticized for lacking coordination and enough manpower, equipment and transportation. Aid officials said Sunday the major push was only just beginning.

Patel, a school teacher, collected money and supplies in his hometown of Modera, in an eastern area of Gujarat spared by the quake. He arrived with his truckload of aid and friends Sunday and began his own distribution, attaching a red-on-yellow sign to the back of the blue truck declaring in Gujarati: "Earthquake relief, collected from villages."

"I am helping the poor and the homeless," Patel said.

On Sunday, U.S. relief chief Berger, who's with the U.S. Agency for International Development, met with representatives from CARE and Catholic Relief Services to determine how to get the aid to the needy. They expected distribution of aid that arrived on Saturday to begin in a day or two.

U.S. AID, CARE and Catholic Relief Services have worked together in the past to help Gujarat cope with a drought now in its third year, and have developed a network of local partners to help with distribution.

Denis McClean, spokesman for the International Federation of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, said his agency had had trouble getting aid off planes.

"We got a forklift yesterday, and that should help," McClean said.

"There's been an overload — the system can't accommodate all the relief that was coming in," Berger said. But he lauded local Indian officials who have tried to organize the relief effort even when their own homes and families were hit by the quake.

The Red Cross, like other agencies, has sent representatives across the hardest-hit regions, trying to determine what is needed and where, and what others are already doing. The Red Cross is working with its local affiliates, but the assessment process still has taken time.

"We are getting out to the outlying villages over the last few days," McClean said. "We've a lot to learn, but we are making progress."

Concern about wasting effort by duplicating what others are doing has led an Israeli medical corps team in Bhuj to consider pulling out. The Israelis arrived three days after the quake and overnight set up a 70-bed hospital under green army tents in a Bhuj school yard.

Two days later, the Red Cross opened the largest field hospital it has ever run — with 310 beds in white tents just a five-minute drive from the Israelis. The Red Cross is committed to staying a year if necessary, much longer than the Israelis had planned to work in India.

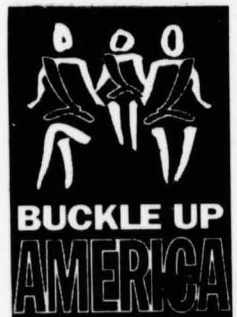

Dr. Roni Bessorai, director of the Israeli field hospital, said it would be decided in the next few days whether to return to Israel immediately, set up elsewhere in Gujarat, or remain in Bhuj to augment the Red Cross effort.

"The politicians will decide — I don't know when," Bessorai said.
