U.S. searches for possible hijackers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal authorities have identified more than a dozen hijackers of Middle Eastern descent in Tuesday's bombings and gathered evidence linking them to Osama bin Laden and other terrorist networks, law enforcement officials said.

The massive investigation stretched from the Canadian border, where officials suspect some of the hijackers entered the country, to Florida, where some of the participants are believed to have learned how to fly commercial jetliners before the attacks. Locations in Massachusetts and Florida were searched for evidence.

The names of two men being sought by authorities emerged in Florida. There, the FBI interviewed a family that gave them temporary shelter a year ago.

The officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press that multiple cells of terrorist groups participated and that hijackers had possible ties to countries that included Saudi Arabia and Egypt.

The identities of more than a dozen of the men who hijacked four planes with knives and threats of bombs has been ascertained, the officials said. Several hijackers had pilot's licenses.

At least one hijacker on each of the four planes was trained at a U.S. flight school, said Justice Department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker. The flight schools were in Florida and at least one other state. The hijackers used both cash and credit cards to purchase their plane tickets and hotel rooms.

Authorities detained at least a half dozen people in Massachusetts and Florida on unrelated local warrants and immigration charges and were questioning them about their possible ties to the hijackers. No charges related to the attacks had been filed. Search warrants were executed in Florida, New Jersey and Massachusetts. Sealed warrants went out in several other states, officials said.

"We're attempting to recreate the travels of each of the hijackers on the planes — either the hijackers themselves or their associates," FBI Director Robert Mueller said.

Students fear retaliation

Muslims harassed by hate

By Kemberly Gong
DAILY STAFF WRITER

An element of fear is permeating the campus for many Muslim students who fear that backlash against them and their community is imminent.

Tuesday's events led many Americans to point fingers at the Muslim community because of suspicion of involvement in the attacks by the Muslim fundamentalist Osama bin Laden.

Although no solid evidence about the attackers is available, there have been some indications that the terrorist group might be from the Middle East.

"People think bin Laden is a typical Muslim, but that's total crap," said Danesh Waheed. "He is a terrorist."

Waheed, the treasurer for the Pakistani Student Association, said the Muslim people are a peace-loving community and are unfairly discriminated against by others.

Other Muslims expressed regret for the atrocities that happened Tuesday.

Prof offers terrorism insight

By D.S. Perez and Todd Hendry
DAILY STAFF EDITOR AND WRITER

One person at San Jose State University knows quite a bit about terrorism. In fact, he teaches a class on the subject.

Peter Unsinger has been a professor at San Jose State University's administration of justice department since 1971. Unsinger teaches courses dealing with terrorism, intelligence, organized crime and trans-national crime, such as modern piracy.

He also teaches security management and aviation security to overseas governments such as Singapore and Cambodia.

In Southeast Asia, he said, terrorism is a threat, with Muslim fundamentalists causing havoc in Malaysia and in the Philippines. These groups have had Afghani nationals visit or advise them, Unsinger added.

While there has been no officially named suspect in Tuesday's terrorist attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, media and investigators speculate the attack was from Muslim fundamentalists.

Already, investigators have found a rental car in a Boston airport that had flight manuals printed in Arabic.

Since the attack, politicians have been quick to point the finger at intelligence groups, such as the CIA, on not picking up on the attack.

Unsinger said spy networks may have known about a possible attack, but had little else to go on.

"There's been enough threats that intelligence organizations have received," Unsinger said. "But the warnings are very vague ... we know something is afoot, but we don't when, where or how."

Unsinger said there were a number of reasons why the World Trade Center was targeted for destruction Tuesday.

To get recognition, a terrorist may select symbolic targets to aim their sights on.

"They usually target something big," Unsinger said. "The Trade Center represents corporate U.S. There's the antagonism of what that kind of thing represents, the World Trade Organization, American financial strength

Tuesday's tragedy caused uncertainty about America's economy and left some Americans questioning how it will affect gas prices.

David Conrath, dean of the College of Business, said he believes the overall effect of the act in the U.S. economy will be "vivid but slight."

"I don't think that it's going to affect many people economically," Conrath said. He did, however, say some fields are exceptions.

"Air travel will be hurt, definitely," Conrath said. "Tourism in general will be hurt for a while, as well as hotels and restaurants. I think it will be months before people who live off of traveling recover."

"There will be less flying and more driving," he said.

On whether the attack will result in oscillating prices, Conrath said it would depend on whom the U.S. government holds responsible for the attacks.

"There may be a gas crisis if it turns out to be a large nation the U.S. has relations with," Conrath said. "If this is related to Afghanistan or to some small group, I doubt there would be any great effect."

Rod Diridon, executive director of the Mineta Transportation Institute at San Jose State University, said he feels that the country's economy will not neces-

Downtown comes together for prayers

By Karla Gachet
DAILY STAFF EDITOR

The Plaza de Cesar Chavez in downtown San Jose, across the street of the west entrance of the Fairmont Hotel, became a stage for prayer on Tuesday night in an act of solidarity.

The vigil, which started by word of mouth, began at 7:30 p.m. and continued until 10 p.m.

People from at least 10 different churches came together to meditate on the terrorist attacks and find hope in God and each other.

David Huynh, 23, and his friend Jason Ma, 20, both members of the non-profit Christian organization Youth for Christ, started making phone calls in the afternoon, "We called everyone we knew and their mothers to try to get as many people as we could," Ma said.

After six hours of phone calls, word of mouth brought together a multitude of people who either found out through other people about the vigil or just happened to be walking or driving by the plaza.

"We felt like we needed prayer but we wanted to do it in a neutral area so it wouldn't be a gathering of a specific church," Huynh said.

Mutual respect urged in attacks' aftermath

While the recent tragedies in Washington, D.C., and New York City have profoundly affected each of us in different ways, let us remember that a climate of mutual respect is critical to our students' success and our employees' ability to function effectively.

We are a community of individuals from many different backgrounds and parts of the world who have come to San Jose State University to live and to learn and to work. As we deal with these terrible events, I encourage everyone to be especially aware of the impact of words and actions.

While there may be little that individuals can do in the immediate aftermath of the tragic events on the East Coast, it is extremely important for each of us to demonstrate understanding and kindness toward each other and our community.

Should you need help during this difficult time, counseling is available to all students through University Counseling Services in the Administration building, Room 201, (924-5940) and to faculty and staff through the Employee Assistance Program (1-800-344-4222). Please consider these professional resources.

Information about any potential disruptions of the campus schedule will continue to be provided to the campus community through the SJSU Web site (www.sjsu.edu), the campus hotline (924-SJSU) and other communications.

On a personal note, I am reminded of the fragility and preciousness of life when I see violence of this magnitude take so many lives. My sympathy and condolences go out to the survivors, families and all those affected by this national tragedy.

Brutal acts a result of a violent society

With a simple click, our entire country changed. The click of a television turning on. Or the click of a radio switching channels.

Click.
And there it was: a scene that no one would ever forget. Smoke was pouring out of both towers of the World Trade Center. The Pentagon was the next to crumble. Our country was under siege by an unknown enemy.

The next sound was a collective gasp.
We couldn't do anything to fix it. We could hope the damage wasn't as bad as it looked. But nothing we could ever do would bring the people back to life. Nothing would bring back the sense of security that was shattered instantly.

What was the next target? How many were dead already? Are there more on the way? Loaded words started getting thrown around every few seconds: tragedy, destruction, war, crisis, revenge, retaliation.
Our country was in shock. Quickly, we retreated to our shells. How could this happen to innocent of us? How could somebody want this to happen to the good of U.S. of A?

It's an honest reaction. So was the next move: We emerged carrying our big stick.

MIKE OSEGUEDA

OZ-MOSIS

But we weren't speaking quietly, we were shouting. Let's nuke 'em, we thought. We'll get our revenge, we demanded.

The patriot in me says, "Yeah, let's get 'em. Make 'em pay."

But then the humanitarian in me jumps in: "Why? More people are just going to die."

The patriot: "But they can't get away with this. We're the United States of America. No one does this to us."

The humanitarian: "You'd think we learned our lesson by now. We can't just blow up everybody and make our problems go away."

The patriot: "We dropped the bomb in World War II. That worked. Why not do it again?"

The humanitarian: "Why not? I'll tell you why not. Because right now we may have the biggest weapons, and we might wipe out whoever did this. But what happens when someone builds bigger, more destructive weapons? It'll just result in more casualties. We'll just be continuing a vicious cycle."

The patriot: "If that's what it takes to get even..."

The humanitarian: "Hold on. Don't you see the hypocrisy in that logic?"

The patriot: "No, I see the logic in it. If another country comes onto our turf, we have to fight back."

The humanitarian: "And if someone punches you, you punch them back? Is that what you teach your kids?"

The patriot: "That's not the point. I'm talking about protecting our children"

The humanitarian: "Oh, I think it is the point. And the problem is people mistake violence acts for courage. If you were really courageous you'd find a way to solve your problems without resorting to violence. It seems that people these days have the problem-solving ability of a first-grader."

The patriot: "Meaning?"

The humanitarian: "Look at the newspaper. You got a guy killing all his family members in Sacramento and running away. You got an agitated, disgruntled security guard in the state capitol who killed four and turned the gun on himself. You got kids shooting up schools left and right because they're getting picked on.

You got a guy in Iowa killing five kids and his girlfriend and leaving the bodies for the babysitter to find. I'm sure all of them thought they were getting some kind of revenge. Or that they were doing the right thing."

The patriot: "I don't condone any of that. But this isn't the same. This is our country. Our humanity. Our pride."

The humanitarian: "A human life is a human life, my friend. No matter the age, the gender, the color, or the race. There has to be a point where we have some sort of order, where we realize retaliation isn't the answer. That time is now."

The patriot: "The next thing you're going to tell me you thought of some nifty slogan like 'Peace in the Middle East.' The bottom line is Tuesday was a disaster, and no one should be able to get away with this. Not against the United States. We're a superpower of a country. We're the force to be reckoned with. We're the kings of the jungle."

The humanitarian: "Well, it seems we agree on one thing: This whole world is full of animals."

Bible passages offer comfort, answers in times of tribulation

Even if you are not living in an area that is stricken by killer hijacking events, you are no doubt aware of the devastation, and the powerful impact and loss it can bring. Images on the evening news of destroyed buildings, bereaved families and a sad are an all-too-familiar sight for most of us.

Sooner or later, all of us encounter times of tempest — either literal or figurative — where we feel we could be "blown away." But despite the storms that may rise and rage against us, we can remain calm and unafraid.

The secret of such peace is an unseen and supernatural source of protection — a wonderful safekeeping that each of us can personally discover and use in our lives. This refuge is God himself.

The Bible tells us that the Lord surrounds and protects his children just as a hen gathers and shelters her chicks under her wings when peril is near:

"He shall cover you, and under his wings you can trust. There you need not fear the terror by night, nor the destruction by day, for the Lord is your refuge and place of protection. He shall give His angels charge over you, to keep you in all your ways" (Psalm 91:4,5,11).

When we belong to the Lord and stay close to him, he will always take care of us. Even if we're in the midst of terrible turmoil — whether a literal tempest like we see in this picture, or a storm of troubles, adversity, danger, etc.

His strong and loving hands are there to protect and care for us, and "the angel of the Lord encamps all around those who fear Him, and delivers them" (Psalm 34:7). So even when everything seems dark, frightening and tempestuous outside, we can have the sunshine of his love and the rainbow of his blessings and peace inside!

The tyranny of finding a scapegoat

A true act of war pulled off with the precision of the Blue Angels and the blessing of the Air Force.

In our zeal to save the lives of some unborn — only poor ones, the rich will go back to pay some sleazy doctor — we have scuttled the economy and killed 60,000 of our grown-ups. I don't know how this balances in the Book of Life. God in his infinite wisdom, just world theory and, as always, the two kingdom theory.

As the pseudo-democracy broad-jumps into feudalism, and people say things like: "20,000 people died, Jim," I say "Yes, because people are willing to give up their freedom for security and therefore end up with neither."

But now we are beyond the pale. A scapegoat must be found so we can get off on sweet revenge, and the world of hate approaches critical mass.

The one beacon in facing tragedy

There can be no worse feeling than that of a reluctant, powerless spectator caught in the midst of the massive destruction of human life.

I, like so many of you, stood motionless in front of the television, not wanting to register in my mind the airplane that crashed against one of the World Trade Center towers. Not wanting to let the clamors of men and women who raced away from the collapsing towers ring in my head.

I wanted to think that I — yes, someone as small as me — could actually reach out to grieving hearts and simply undo Tuesday morning. There wasn't anything else anyone could do, but stand by, helpless.

My only consolation was a moment of reflection to pray for my many brothers and sisters' strength and courage. It was all I could offer.

But how many of us on this campus haven't already done that?

It's the only beautiful, bright spot to tragedies — the way we set our differences and misunderstandings aside to unite and rally under one cause.

Thousands across the nation have heeded to the call and flocked local Red Cross chapters. It's a four-hour wait to donate blood in the Bay Area.

Churches are organizing candlelight vigils and prayer services. And on our campus we see students making efforts to bring the college community together.

But nothing is flawless. Even in our rush to support one another, if we look close enough, we find blemishes.

Take the way some of us are blindly passing judgment on an entire race.

Why should our classmates, our neighbors, our friends, our co-workers of Arabic descent be held accountable for the terrorist attacks in the East Coast?

As far as I know they took us all by surprise, and from what I hear, we still don't know who is responsible for these gross acts.

What we can say is that federal authorities are targeting their efforts in tracking down exiled-

J.E. ESPINO

MY JOURNAL

Saudi terrorist Osama bin Laden as their main suspect. Nothing more.

And I don't know if I buy what I hear over and over, that flight-training manuals in Arabic were found on the seat of a rental car. For a highly organized attack, one that even the U.S. intelligence could not detect, it seems ludicrous to think the hijackers would leave behind key evidence in plain view.

Even so, what does this have to do with Muslim- and Arab-Americans or Muslims and Arabs in other nations, for that matter?

Nothing. Still, the idea that the suicidal-hijackers could have been from the Middle East has meant a great deal to some people.

Anti-Arab and anti-Muslim messages are spreading on the Internet, according to an Associated Press report.

Groups in major cities have received threatening phone calls.

The Islamic Networks Group based in our own San Jose reported getting calls with death threats, obscenities and racial slurs.

Is this the point? Unleashing anger against innocent people?

Sounds all too familiar to me. Too familiar.

Let's put an end to the "innocent" discrimination and rise above what history teaches us.

Clueless? Think Japanese-Americans and internment camps. Think recent anti-immigrant sentiments.

Mediocre food at a mediocre price

By Erik Anderson

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Second to the grilled sandwiches, the furniture may be the most popular change this semester at the Student Union food court.

The dining area's tables and chairs were worn-out and needed to be replaced.

"They were the originals from when the Student Union was first built more than 30 years ago," said Jeff Pauley, operations manager for Spartan Dining. "We wanted something that looked nicer."

Changes regarding the menu include vegetable udon, a ham and Swiss cheese sub sandwich and a line of smaller burritos, he said.

The higher-priced grilled sandwiches are being offered under the new concept, "Panini's."

"People have yet to discover it," he said.

Located next to the court's Union Deli, Panini's may be hard for some to find.

"It's in a place they are not used to looking for things," he said.

I stopped by the Student Union two days last week.

On the second day, I tried the favorite of the three new grilled sandwiches, the chicken pesto ($5.45).

Made with roasted red peppers, lettuce and provolone cheese stuffed between two slices of Italian bread spread with pesto sauce, the chicken-bread sandwich boasted of a rich, creamy flavor.

The toasted bread was stiff and wonderfully flaky, and the black grooves from the grill added a nice visual touch.

Dark brown potato chips served on the side were very crisp, but a bit oily.

Overall, I found the sandwich to be the best item on the menu.

The day before, I tried Cactus Cafe's new "chiquita" line of smaller burritos.

Made with 8-inch tortilla shells instead of the larger 12-inch soft-shells used by the grande burrito, the chiquita offers a less-expensive alternative.

Like the grande, it is filled

Crowds were a hassle during certain periods, with lines more than 10 customers deep.

with rice, beans, cheese, lettuce, tomatoes and onions.

There are five choices of meat: salsa chicken, pollo asado (roasted chicken), carne asado (roasted beef), vegetarian and seasoned ground beef.

Salsa, however, replaces the sour cream in the smaller line.

All five choices can be had for less than $3.

I chose the pollo asado ($2.95).

Although saving $1.24 from the price of the grande pollo asado ($4.19), I was not impressed.

The taste had no cohesive whole.

Each item, rice, beans and cheese, was as bland as the next.

The tortilla shell, soft and doughy, was the best part of the burrito.

Next I tried the new vegetable udon ($4.09).

Yellow-brownish in color, the dish's udon (Japanese) noodles were thick, round and heavy.

The vegetables — broccoli, onions and zucchini — were wonderfully buttery.

Served in a black bean sauce, the dish was warm, gooey and slightly sticky.

Soy sauce added to the flavor.

Nevertheless, without beef or chicken, I felt that somehow something was missing.

Both days I looked for the ham and Swiss cheese club but with little success.

Not until I checked the sandwich cooler on the nth time did I find one.

I found my luck with the sushi bar to be the opposite.

Of the more than 20 selections, all were available at any time I checked: from the highly popular California roll ($4.50), to a salmon roll ($5.25), to the shrimp avocado ($5.85).

During the two days, I found the service at the food court to be exceptional.

Yet, more than a few times a server claimed they could not help me due to a lack of training in that particular area.

But each time, they found someone right away who could.

On a few occasions, I noticed spilled soup had dried on the serving counters. I found the salad bar messy at times, as well.

Mostly, however, the food court had a neat, clean appearance.

Crowds were a hassle during certain periods, with lines more than 10 customers deep.

Veteran cashier Linda Ramirez said the busiest time was between 10:30 a.m. and 1:00 p.m. when up to six cashiers were working.

"The lines are over to there," she said pointing to the bagel case next to the soup section.

Other busy times are at 3:30 p.m. and later again at 6:30 p.m., she added.

Fridays are usually a slow day.

Regarding the addition of Panini's, Pauley said that the biggest problem was in finding space.

"We were able to figure out a way to move our chili somewhere else," he said.

Michele Gendreau, director of Spartan Dining, said that they were always looking for new items to add.

"We are not an island," she said. "We have to be aware of what's in the market outside (the campus)."

Their concern was value, not price. "If the market called for a high-end dinner house, we would try to put one on campus," she said.

New band, Puddle Of Mudd, lacks originality a good start.

According to the Flawless Records Web site, Puddle of Mudd is the first new rock artist to debut in the top 10. They ranked on the Billboard top 200 chart at No. 10 on Sept. 5.

Not bad for the album being a compilation of typical pissed-off rock songs.

They lack the passionate anger that they seem to share with the likes of Godsmack and Papa Roach.

Instead, they present it very passively like Pearl Jam and Stone Temple Pilots.

However, lead singer Wes Scantlin almost eerily has attributes similar to Nirvana's Kurt Cobain.

In "Nobody Told Me," almost a minute goes by without any lyrics.

Scantlin's voice then surfaces and jumps between being mumbled and high-pitched, much like Cobain in "All Apologies," but not nearly as melodic.

The song isn't bad, though.

Even though it is gloomy, the drums hold the listener's hand throughout the song.

Drummer Greg Upchurch continues to shine in the next track, "Out of My Head."

Listeners may catch themselves bopping their head throughout this song, which may be the catchiest of the whole album.

However, Puddle of Mudd has not created a sound of its own like Creed (of course Durst would not want to produce a band that is actually better than his) or any other top-selling band has.

Godsmack has to be the best creator of "leave me alone" songs.

Puddle of Mudd has at least one song to contribute with "Drift and Die."

"Go away/ Go away/ Go away from me/ Leave me alone" may not be the most creative set of lyrics, but at least it prepares listeners for how they will feel for the remainder of the album.

The band lack originality so much that its songs sound the same.

Three of the band's consecutive tracks, "Bring Me Down," "Never Change" and "Basement" are whiney, not catchy, and the listener must agonize through this for more than seven minutes.

Oh, and a band who wants to come off all hard should not produce a song that can be mistaken for a scruffy REM rip-off.

Believe it or not, "She Hates Me" is actually very lighthearted, yet the listeners will begin to share the hate.

Would anyone believe REM if someone told them they were hated? Scantlin just appears to be singing the words like an elementary school choir.

The last track, "Piss it All Away," is appropriate for this album.

Listeners will want to do what they preach in this song, "Erase everything what you think."

Just a warning to the three other acts Flawless Records signed: Durst must have wanted to create a band that Limp Bizkit could finally reign over.

Puddle of Mudd's songs are not worthy of stopping for while channel surfing on the radio.

They are just part of the swamp of songs that will be forgotten.

SJSU students voice their thoughts 24 hours after Tuesday's terrorist attacks on the United States

ARACELI FRANCO
Senior, linguistics

"I felt like this was a bad dream or a stupid movie. When I saw this I felt like humanity was going backwards, but then when I saw all the people helping out after the tragedy, it reassured me that there was still some compassion. I wish that I could go into the minds of the people who did this so that I can understand. It bothers me that these people use religion as a flag because it make people hate such groups like Muslims."

ADRIANA MARQUEZ
Freshman, business

"The tragedy was more than an attack to the U.S., it was against humanity. Who ever did it — they don't care about themselves or other people. I think they feel that if they die for their country then they will go somewhere special."

MARC CABALU
Freshman, undeclared

"It definitely shows that as a nation, we're not as invulnerable to terrorist attacks that we thought we were. I mean it's not like they used a bomb or anything. They used commercial airlines. That is what was most shocking to me more than anything else."

ZEPRINCE BUTCHER
Junior, electrical engineering

I have family in New York. I haven't talked to them yet. My emotions are all over the place right now. I was so shocked when I heard about all of this because that is the flight that I frequently take, SFO to Newark. We've been praying for my family."

ANGELA JANKOVITZ
Freshman, art

"I think whoever did this should be bombed, and my parents say that we should bomb the whole Middle East."

ALBERT AU
Sophomore, undeclared

"I kind of expected people to celebrate over our loss. People are going to brag about it because it was such a powerful act. This wouldn't have happened if people didn't have a hatred of the U.S. in the first place. Others view America as a place where we have it all. They couldn't have it, so they wanted to destroy what we have."

RYAN BAIRD
Junior business

"I was extremely overwhelmed. I am half Japanese. My mother went through internment. Based on this country's history, I am afraid of the racial repercussions."

ANUJA MODY
Freshman, undeclared

"My cousin's husband works in the World Trade Center. We haven't got a hold of him yet, and my mom just talked to my cousin. I woke up thinking that it was going to be a normal school day and I see something that looks like Hollywood on TV. Now just when I was thinking it was over, I realize that it is just starting."

SCOTT PENDLETON
Senior, art

"I think that the president said what everyone was thinking. It was a little too scripted, and it should have come from his heart. It is totally his responsibility to be sincere. A tear or maybe something like that, but it is also his job to be even-keeled. However, I don't think that we should take military action. I think we should debate and work it out to where we can come to a common goal."

ANDREW MOYCO
Junior, art

"A lot of my friends are Middle Eastern, and they are scared. One of my friends who is Iranian didn't want to go to class today. And when she did go, she said that people were staring at her and giving her dirty looks. No one knows who caused these acts, but people are pointing fingers. I don't want this to be a foreign issue, and hopefully it's domesticated."

JACKIE LING
Sophomore, computer science

"This is so unreal. I mean, this is America. We are the strongest. It's like, 'How can someone do this?' Real life is not something we can turn back."

STACEY BASSO
Freshman, Undeclared

"I thought I was watching a movie. It was out of control. I couldn't imagine, couldn't fathom what it must have been like. When I saw the plane dive through that building, I was appalled. I couldn't even speak."

KABRIN LIGON
Graduate student, teaching credentials

"I have dear friends that work next door. So I called her as soon as I got home. Her building collapsed and she was forced to evacuate. She's fine, but she ran down the street with the building collapsing behind her, but she doesn't know about the people she worked with. Her building isn't there anymore."

EDWARD VASQUEZ
Graduate Student, history

"This is a result of our extreme foreign policy in that region. The people who make the foreign policy are making this rut. The chickens are coming home to roost, and innocent people are paying for it."

SJSU-Stanford game postponed

Game delayed until December

By Mike Osegueda

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

If the Spartans are going to win their fourth straight football game against the Stanford Cardinal, they'll have to wait until Dec. 1.

Chuck Bell, San Jose State University's director of athletics, announced Wednesday that the game, originally scheduled for 6 p.m. Saturday, will be postponed until 2 p.m. Dec. 1 at Spartan Stadium as a result of the terrorist attack that shocked the United States on Tuesday.

Bell, along with Stanford's athletic director Ted Leland, had been on the phone since the incident began, trying to decide whether to play Saturday.

"We felt like it was the appropriate thing to do," Bell said. "Thousands of people were killed. And it's not that we're bending to the terrorism. It's that we're mourning thousands of deaths."

Following Tuesday's events, the National Collegiate Athletics Association issued a statement giving individual schools and conferences the ability to decide whether to play. The Pacific-10 Conference, of which Stanford is a part, cancelled all of its conference games for the weekend.

Since the SJSU-Stanford game is a non-conference contest, however, the decision was left up to the two universities.

Both athletics directors consulted the head coaches, SJSU's Fitz Hill and Stanford's Tyrone Willingham, before making the decision.

Hill, who served in Operation Desert Storm, called Tuesday's events a "great tragedy" and agreed with the decision to cancel the game.

"If that's what our institution feels that we need to do, I'm all for it," Hill said. "These are just games. This isn't life or death. (The United States is) dealing with a life or death situation. It's a good time to reflect on what we have in America."

Practice went on as scheduled Tuesday, as it did Wednesday. Hill said he would give the team a breather this weekend, if practice goes well the rest of the week.

"I'm going to use this as an open week," Hill said. "I think it's a chance for these guys to get rested and get ready for the conference run."

The next scheduled game for the Spartans is Sept. 22, when the University of Nevada-Reno travels to SJSU.

As the news about the postponement spread around the Spartans' practice facility Wednesday, some players were disappointed about not getting a chance to play.

But because of the frenzy the nation is in, they knew football wasn't the top priority.

Deonce Whitaker, SJSU's star running back, found out about the game's status about 11 a.m. Wednesday when he went to pick up his tickets.

"I'm kind of upset we don't get to play," Whitaker said. "But I do understand the reason why. I understand that."

Last season, Whitaker was the standout in SJSU's 40-27 victory. He rushed for 254 yards and two touchdowns.

In two games this season, he hasn't hit the 100-yard-mark yet. He hopes to use the time off to regain his magic from a year ago.

"We've been missing something out there," Whitaker said. "And now we can get it back."

Senior wide receiver Casey Le Blanc has played a big role in each of the last three SJSU wins against Stanford. He's content to wait to get back on the field with the cross-town rivals.

"It's a tragic situation for the whole nation," Le Blanc said. "It's understandable."

I would have liked to have played. But I don't know how fair it is to cancel some games and not others."

As the players made cellular phone calls to friends and relatives, to tell them the game had been postponed, behind-the-scenes work was still going on.

Bell said most of the plans for Saturday's game, including pre-game and halftime activities, would be transferred to the new date.

Tickets already purchased will be honored on the new date. If a ticket-holder cannot attend the rescheduled game, refunds are available. Tailgating tents already paid for will follow the same procedure.

Furthermore, Bell said he doesn't expect any financial problems for the already cash-strapped athletic department.

"We can come out better financially," Bell said. He said the new date, being later in the season, could increase ticket sales because Stanford classes have yet to begin, and Cardinal students will now have a chance to attend the game.

"But it was not based at all on financial considerations," Bell said.

This is not the first time an SJSU football game has been postponed after an unforeseeable problem.

In 1999, the Spartans' homecoming game with Southern Methodist University on Oct. 23 was delayed and later postponed when a transformer at Spartan Stadium caught fire and caused the stadium to be evacuated.

The game was later cancelled after both universities agreed that a makeup date wouldn't affect either team's standings.

Nothing like that is expected for the Stanford game. But expecting and dealing with the unknown is something that both athletic departments have to deal with right now.

"There's no right answer to this," Bell said. "There's no manual for how to handle a tragedy like this. We felt like this was the right thing to do."

Additional questions about ticket refunds or availability should be directed to (409) 924-SJTX.

Spartans reflect on disaster, get healthy for Nevada

By Mike Osegueda

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

When Deonce Whitaker saw the scenes from New York and Washington, D.C., on television Tuesday, his mind flashed back.

"I was just watching a movie," he said. "There were those two big towers. Right now they are gone."

The movie was "The Whole Nine Yards." That was fake. This tragedy that hit the United States was every bit real.

And no one from the Spartan football team knows better than head coach Fitz Hill how real war is.

"When you see someone take lives like they did yesterday, that's just unfortunate," Hill said. "That's just the way of the devil."

Hill served in Operation Desert Storm and was stationed in Saudi Arabia for seven months.

In a way, he said it was like football because soldiers work and work to get ready for a war in the same way football players work and work to prepare for a game. However, the consequences in football, he said, aren't life and death.

He said the difference between the current situation and his was that he knew whom he was fighting. "We knew the enemy," Hill said. "Here we have no idea. That's the scariest thing about it."

Postponement sets up 'rival month'

Come the end of November and the beginning of December, the Spartan football team is going to be seeing nothing but red.

Red, as in Fresno State University. Red, as in the Stanford Cardinal.

After Saturday's game was postponed for Dec. 1, it put the Spartans in a situation to face their two top rivals on back-to-back weekends.

"That's going to be rival month," wide receiver Casey Le Blanc said. "Hopefully, we'll be playing those two teams for a bowl berth."

Fresno State, currently ranked No. 11 in the Associated Press poll, will host the Spartans on Nov. 23.

For now, however, the Spartans aren't setting their sights that far in advance.

Time to heal

If there's a positive to be taken away from the situation, it's that some of the Spartans have an opportunity to heal before taking the field again.

Two receivers, Charles Pauley and Rashied Davis, missed SJSU's last game against Colorado University and were listed as "probable" for Saturday's game.

Pauley was sidelined by a groin strain and is currently about 90 percent, Hill said.

Davis, who suffered a left shoulder contusion, will be able to take advantage of the week off more than Pauley.

"This will definitely give him a week to get back," Hill said.

All athletic events put on back burner after terrorist attacks

By Chris Giovannetti and Colin Atagi

DAILY STAFF WRITERS

In the wake of Tuesday's terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, the San Jose State University athletic office announced that all games scheduled through Sunday — including Saturday's football contest against Stanford — have been canceled.

The football game was rescheduled for 2 p.m. on Dec. 1.

The meeting between the two schools has become a much-anticipated rivalry for SJSU students.

Following the lead of the nation concerning sporting events, some students expressed concern for the public and a time of grieving for the nation.

"Canceling games for public safety is good," said SJSU student Gary Alferos. "I don't think we should be celebrating anything as far as games go. I think for public safety we should not be holding any games right now."

SJSU alumnus Bernard Jones said there were more important matters than sports.

"I think the game should be canceled because we should not be focusing on games but getting people back into the position where they can help with the tragedy that happened in New York," he said.

As the football game is set aside, so are the pre-game parties and tailgates.

"We had tailgate planned, and I'm sure all of the other fraternities did too," said Javier Jimenez of the Delta Upsilon Fraternity. "On one hand, we were looking forward to supporting the team because the rivalry with Stanford has developed into a big thing. On the other hand, it's hard to celebrate knowing some Americans might still be buried under concrete."

"The game can always be replayed, but it's hard to celebrate knowing Americans are suffering," Jimenez said. "It would be selfish for anyone to be upset over the game being cancelled."

Ray Herrera, representing the Theta Chi Fraternity, said that in past years, more than 80 people and alumni have shown up for the pre-game celebration in past years.

"We had a big tailgate planned, but canceling the game is understandable, and it's really too bad," Herrera said. "Right now, people's lives are more important than sports. We were pumped about (the tailgate) because it's something we've always done. We had a lot of fun things planned and unfortunately this had to happen."

In addition to football, soccer and volleyball games have been postponed or canceled.

The Spartan men's soccer team, whose original schedule called for a match at Santa Clara University on Wednesday and against UC-Berkeley on Sunday, has postponed its games.

Head coach Gary St. Clair said both games will be rescheduled, though he is unsure about the dates.

He added that the soccer team was very disturbed by Tuesday's events and were too upset to play Wednesday's match.

Women's soccer matches at Long Beach State on Wednesday, Cal-State Irvine on Friday and Sacramento State on Sunday have been canceled.

"I do think it's the right thing to do for the safety of our athletes and out of respect for everyone involved in the tragedy," said women's soccer coach Tamie Grimes. "The events of the past few days are bigger, much bigger than a soccer game. I'm behind the administration 100 percent."

The volleyball team had planned to attend a tournament this weekend at the University of Kentucky in Lexington, but head coach Craig Choate said it was canceled and likely will not be rescheduled.

The men's and women's cross-country teams will not participate in Saturday's meet at Fresno State.

Shock normal, counselor says

By Clarissa Aljentera

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Melanie Kwan couldn't get enough about the news of the tragedy at the World Trade Center. Kwan, who is a resident of Joe West Hall, stayed in her room to watch the news until 1 a.m. Wednesday morning and grabbed copies of the USA Today, New York Times and the San Jose Mercury News.

"I was saving them because it is a big deal," Kwan said.

Tuesday's events on the East Coast halted air travel, trading on American stock markets and cancelled classes at San Jose State University.

Two planes slammed into the World Trade Center towers, in New York City, and another plane destroyed a portion of the Pentagon, near Washington, D.C., early Tuesday morning.

"I'm shocked. It intrigues me and everyone wants to know how and why," Kwan said.

SJSU counseling director Wiggys Sivertsen said feelings of shock are normal after a "horrendous and horrific event."

"Yesterday people were reeling and today they are living in denial," Sivertsen said.

One of the next steps in the human emotion track is distancing oneself from the situation and stabilize your life, Sivertsen said.

Kwan said her accounting class on Wednesday used half an hour to discuss the tragedy of Tuesday's events.

"Most people were really sad," Kwan said. "It is like a movie. It is unreal."

"I woke up at 8 a.m. and I didn't have class until 10:30 a.m. and half the stack was gone," Kwan said. On any other morning, only a handful of papers would have been taken from the racks, Kwan said.

Sophomore Kyle Tanaka attended class on Tuesday and Wednesday.

He said each class had some sort of mention of the events.

"Yesterday it was mentioned briefly," Tanaka said. "Today it was mentioned, but nothing was covered. I didn't want to talk about it in the classroom. I'd rather reflect on it myself today."

He said his class on Tuesday watched the morning's events unfold and caught up with the news, but in Wednesday's classes it seemed that it was on students' minds, Tanaka said.

Sivertsen said she sent out e-mails on Tuesday suggesting that professors take some class time to discuss the tragedy and realize that some people may need to discuss the events.

By Wednesday afternoon she had gotten response from the e-mail from people who appreciated the campus-wide memo.

She spent some time Wednesday composing another one that could help faculty, staff and students discuss the situation with their children.

Several instructors hadn't received any specific e-mail instructions about conducting classes on Wednesday, but opted to work the events into the lesson plan.

Professor Stephen Zill said he was unsure about how to approach the subject when he walked into his economics 1A class. He expected a sparsely attended class but found that it was an average attendance.

"I had to mention it," Zill said. "I couldn't walk in and say nothing. I was not sure how to do it."

Sivertsen said the counseling department is planning to hold support groups in the next week and that counseling services is continuing to take appointments.

As of Wednesday afternoon there were no crisis appointments related to the tragedy.

"It's pretty quiet," Sivertsen said. "I don't think we'll see much until next week."
