Beetle Mania

Students take part in events brought to the campus by Volkswagon

By Lisa Butt

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Volkswagen dominated the scene outside the Event Center on Thursday as it presented its 2001 Major Motion Picture Show.

"It's a national tour around Canada and the United States," said the tour manager Matt Harsh. "We have 18 stops. This is No. 16."

He said the event was to promote Volkswagen's Certified Pre-Owned Program.

According to Ron Rinaldi, who supervised the video game kiosk, a Certified Pre-Owned car is a previously owned car that has come off a two or three-year lease and it has passed a 112-point inspection.

Assistant manager, Eddie Phias, said a car cannot be classified as Certified Pre-Owned if it has had too much mechanical work, has a tampered odometer or is more than 5 years old.

He also said when someone buys a Certified Pre-Owned car, it is sold with at least a two-year warranty, depending on the dealership.

"It's sold as a used car, but has the same quality as a new one," Harsh said.

The event consisted of several activities in the afternoon and a showing of the movie "Shrek" in the evening.

Among the activities were a climbing wall, video games, lounge, Trek mountain bicycle exhibition and several contests.

Ryan Schroeder, who worked at the climbing wall, said the activity was very popular and had seven or eight people standing in line at a time.

"We've had 25 people make it to the top so far," he said. "And we still have another two hours to go."

He said when someone climbed to the top of the inflatable wall, he would honk a horn and the climber would receive a lanyard and a large key chain.

Stephanie Valencia, a freshman majoring in nursing, said she had fun climbing the wall, although it was different than the solid ones she normally climbs.

"It's moving underneath, the grips are air," she said. "You just sink into it."

According to product specialist, Brian Merrion, four Volkswagen cars were displayed: the Beetle, Jetta, GTI and Cabrio and some of them were Certified Pre-Owned.

Students were allowed to sit in the cars and have a free picture taken, which was made into a keychain.

Benjamin Dinh, a junior majoring in computer science, sat in the Cabrio and described the car as "fantastic."

"One day I hope to get something like this," he said.

A popular activity of the event was "Pack the Beetle," where students crammed into a Beetle with hopes of fitting in as many people as possible.

As students entered one-by-one, master of ceremonies, Phil Ostermann encouraged students to participate by saying at Chicago State University, 16 women's basketball players and its two coaches fit in the car.

Eventually, 22 San Jose State University students were stuffed in the Beetle, which no other school the tour has beat, Ostermann said.

He said he was surprised at the results.

"It was awesome," he said. "The kids are great."

Sophomore Scott Johnson, who participated in the activity, said although it was cramped in the car, a couple more students could have fit.

Freshman Dina Shuhaiber, who also participated, said she was also surprised at the results,

"How much more?" Jeremiah Chuck asked himself just short of reaching the top of the wall during a climb.

Provost asks for tuition increase to fund study abroad program

By Karen Kerstan

DAILY STAFF WRITER

For students who have always wanted to study abroad but couldn't afford it, next fall could be their chance.

Marshall Goodman, provost and vice president for academic affairs, approved money last week for a study abroad scholarship fund.

"Very few students have the resources to live and study abroad," he said.

Because of an increase in enrollment for the summer and fall session, excess funds from tuition fees made the $60,000 grant possible, Goodman said.

"Last summer enrollment was up 60 percent while the fall session was up 5 percent," he said.

Goodman said he is asking the student government to match the funds by recommending a $2 increase in tuition fees per student per semester.

He said the study abroad experience is a critical element in education and an experience he was able to have when he was in college.

"Not only does it teach you about the culture around you, it teaches you about your own culture as well," Goodman said.

Mari Inaba, a graduate and exchange student, said she learned more about her own culture in the last 5 years living in California, than ever before.

"I always thought I was different from average Japanese women, but when I got here and saw how much different Americans are than me, I realized I had more Japanese culture and customs than I was

Academic programs will be showcased, drawing to win scholarship money

By Todd Hendry

DAILY STAFF WRITER

San Jose State University is scheduled to put on its first annual Showcase for Learning from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday.

There are slated to be 75 booths that will display a range of programs at SJSU, said Michael Ego, dean for the College of Arts and Applied Science.

The purpose is to showcase all of SJSU's academic programs to the community, Ego said.

"There are a lot of people in the community who are not aware of the outstanding academic programs which are offered at SJSU," he said.

The opening ceremony is scheduled to start at 9:15 a.m. which introductions will be made by Ego, who is the event's chair.

Following that, SJSU President Robert Caret and Maria Guerra, president of the Alumni Association, are slated to welcome those in attendance.

The Showcase for Learning is an opportunity for current and prospective students as well as their families, alumni and friends of the campus to get to know or to become better acquainted with the university, Caret.

"We want families, alumni, children, grandparents and businesses and communities and corporations to see all of the excellent academic programs which support the Silicon Valley," Ego said.

Inside the Event Center are slated to be informational booths for all colleges and programs.

Outside will be demonstrations and exhibitions at different buildings that are on campus including Dwight Bentel Hall, Ego said.

The event is free and the passport prize drawing is scheduled for 2 p.m., inside the Event Center.

Four people will receive a $2,000 student scholarship from the drawing.

The scholarships are for students attending SJSU or who plan to enroll after high school, Ego said.

Jamie Perez, a senior child development major, said if people need money or are looking for scholarships, she thinks the Showcase for Learning is important.

Other prizes include $100 gift certificates for the Spartan Bookstore, 12 sets of movie passes to AMC and Century theaters and passes to the San Jose Tech

Sorority welcomes new face in college

Being a freshman in college can be the most intimidating part of someone's life. As a freshman, you don't really know what to expect from college because all you've known is the simplicity of high school. I decided to come to San Jose State because it was close to home and it was less expensive than going away to college. As a commuter, I knew that it would probably be hard to meet people, and I really was regretting the idea of not living in the dorms and getting the whole "college experience." Then I made one of the best decisions I have, or ever will make: I joined a sorority.

I, too, had the typical sorority stereotypes in my head, but they could not be further from the truth, I have come to respect, admire, love, appreciate and value the wonderful women I have met through my sorority. One decision has changed my college career, and my life, for the better. No longer am I a faceless college student in a sea of thousands: I am Christine, and to a group of girls, I am their sister.

Extra elevators are needed at Joe West

This is a response to "Elevators get students down" on Oct. 30. After reading this article I was urged to respond because I experience the 10-minute wait for the elevators everyday. The two elevators at Joe West Hall are the landmarks for the building. If they are not having the regular maintenance check or are broken, they are filled with a dozen students trying to get to their classes.

Many residents would agree that "two is not enough" to serve more than 700 residents, plus outside visitors. Waiting for the Joe West Hall elevators causes maintenance workers, residents and friends inconvenience throughout the day. Schedules are thrown off, students are no longer walking into the elevator, they are bomb rushing into it as if someone was giving away money. This not only causes a lot of hostility among residents, but it causes an increase in the accidents in the elevators.

Even though the building was built to house two elevators, housing has no intentions in changing the blue prints. A number of residents will agree that housing should install another elevator to stop accidents from happening.

Separation brings one closer to loved ones

I used to be so commonplace, I'd stumble into my mother's room just before midnight, reach over the edge of the bed and give her a hug and a kiss.

"Goodnight mom," I'd say as I wrapped my arms around her. "I love you."

"Good night," she said as I squeezed tighter. "Love you too, babe."

I now realize that those acts are something as well as those times.

The ages where everything seemed to be carefree.

I remember being 13.

Things just didn't matter. I'd wake up at 6:45 a.m. everyday to get ready for school.

My clothes already laid out for me. The pants were just a little bit tight, my shoes were scuffed and I had no clue as to what it meant for my clothes to match.

Everyday I proudly wore the black San Jose Sharks hat that I had received earlier that year for my birthday.

I didn't have a worry in the world. I had my small group of friends, my classes seemed easy and when I went home I'd sit in front of the oak framed TV set we had in the living room and absorb the days sports news.

My sister was always there. We'd play board games in between our homework sessions and then have our little squabbles before and after dinner.

My mother worked one job at the time, she made it home in time for dinner, sometimes she'd surprise us with something, and other times my sister and I would do the same for her. It's safe to say life was easy then.

I had my chores, but they were simple. Sometimes I'd have to wash the dishes after we ate. Other times I'd have to clean the bathroom or vacuum the house.

Washing my own clothes wasn't really an option then. Sure we owned a washing machine, but my mom took care of it.

We threw our dirty garb in one basket and she separated it.

I used to see the world as a playground. It was my place to play and I only had one thing to worry about — being a kid.

But things have certainly changed since those days.

I've ditched the Sharks hat, learned how to coordinate my clothing so that it matches and grown mentally.

I no longer live with my mother.

Sure I only live 10 minutes away. It's only been 10 months since I've moved out of her house, but I can certainly see how we've both grown.

I am no longer there to participate in the nightly meaningless skirmishes that my mother, my sister and I had.

I am no longer there to answer the phone when a relative calls for my mother.

And I am no longer there to grow in front of her.

I feel like I have distanced myself from the family so much that when I see them we are all like best friends.

My sister comes and visits me here at the Daily and I'd give her a big hug.

No more fighting, no more stepping on each other's toes, just sharing our problems and proposing solutions.

There have been times I have doubted my decision to leave my mother's house when I did, but I assume I have made the right decision.

We are all closer now. Not in a physical way, but mentally.

We are all adults now. Understanding each other is just part of this thing we call love.

Each of us is busy in our own ways, my mother with her jobs, my sister with her schooling and work and I with this.

But Wednesday night I saw my family.

I had seen my sister earlier that day, but it had been the first time I'd seen my mother in more than a month.

She looked at me, I looked back. I opened my arms and she approached. From what I recall, I don't think there has been a time when I'd squeezed her that hard.

I grunted and kissed her on the cheek and she let out a whimper, almost as if my affection were hurting her.

I released my grip, took one look at her and I knew it had been too long between visits.

I've missed you mom. I love you.

Holiday to be thankful and respectful overlooked every year, reader says

Every October ghosts, goblins, witches and spiders start to transform lobbies, entryways, doors and shopping malls. Everyone can see Halloween arriving.

When the dark holiday has finally passed and November first appears, everything changes. Christmas lights, trees and bells start to replace October's merchandise.

What happened? Where are the fall wreaths, pilgrims, turkeys, and cornucopias? We have skipped one of the most important holidays of the year.

Sure, Thanksgiving has always rewarded us a couple days of vacation, but it is strangely swallowed in the Christmas anticipation.

Considering the Sept. 11 incident and the continuing crisis, I believe we have much to be thankful for.

God has blessed us with "America the Beautiful" and amazing forefathers who stood with principle and sacrificed their lives for freedom.

He has blessed us with life, friends, family, emotions, intellect and so much more.

Common grace has been spread upon this nation. How often have we sat back, and realized how much we have? How often do we reflect upon the reasons for the way things are?

Let us take the time to be truly thankful and give this unique holiday the respect it deserves, even if it is surrounded by Christmas trees.

A historic moment to cry, jump for joy

I got a call at the Daily from my sister Wednesday and her only words were, "We are in." I started jumping and shaking my hands in a frantic motion yelling, "Yes, yes, yes!"

Once in a lifetime is pretty slim if you think about it. That's why my mom lost her voice yelling. My dad did not go to work. My little sister stayed home from school. And my grandma cried.

This was major stuff.

It's hard to explain how a sport can take over a country, or I guess I could compare it to the Super Bowl or the World Series.

The big difference is, you only get to watch this championship once every four years.

Oh, another difference your country has never made it to the play offs in your lifetime, your father's lifetime or your father's father's lifetime. Basically, not in anyone's lifetime.

Immediately, I went to buy a calling card and called all my friends back home. No one home, not their moms, not their dogs or cats. No one.

Wednesday was probably one of the days I wished to be back home the most. I knew exactly where everyone was — out celebrating with their flags and painted faces, yelling at whomever they saw on the street.

"We're in, hermano."

The first World Cup I remember was Mexico '86. I was 8 but I remember it so well because after Argentina beat Germany everyone in Ecuador flooded the streets.

Even though it wasn't our country, we were cheering for South America. Plus Diego Armando Maradona, the Argentinean golden boy, was at the peak of his fame. That was probably the last time we cheered for Argentina. That's how soccer works.

I grew up thinking soccer (better known to us, southerners, as futbol) was as popular for the rest of the universe as it was for us.

On Sundays you go to church, and you go to the park to play soccer. Actually, you go play soccer whenever, but Sunday is the religious day to play soccer. And of course, after the game, losers buy the beer and it turns into a weekly party.

I remember when we were really young, my sister would promise herself she wouldn't eat chocolate for a week so that Ecuador would win a game. Like her sacrifice was going to convince the secret magic forces that go around making teams win, to make Ecuador win.

Didn't work.

Of course, each time we were

KARLA GACHET

WHERE'S MY LIGHTER?

so close, yet we would lose the last game to qualify. And the post-game commentaries were, "maybe next time," "Ecuador played like never and lost like always," "F@#$* referee was bribed," "the Colombian cartel paid the team to lose," or some other excuse like that.

Other times you blamed yourself, "Every time I watch the game I bring them bad luck and that is why they lost. I should never watch soccer again."

My theory is the team always freaked out. Every time we would win game after game and then when they played the crucial one, they would chicken out and play really bad.

The next World Cup will be played in Japan and Korea next summer. I can already see people selling their cars, getting a loan and taking Japanese and Korean classes to get ready to go support the "equipo tricolor" (three-color team).

The truth is, it doesn't really matter how far we get, the fact that we made it and that I got to see it at a relatively young age is enough for me.

This morning I called my best friend in Ecuador and the first words I said were "How hung over are you?"

He said, "Oh, I really don't remember the end of my night, but I can tell you I have never seen such a massive amount of people taking over the streets of Quito dressed in yellow. Everyone was hugging and kissing each other and yelling all sorts of cheers."

My brother already e-mailed all the Ecuadorians he knows in and around the Bay Area to celebrate the victory this Saturday.

Dangerous idea to put us all together, but in this case, absolutely necessary.

Soccer is a passion; I still have Wednesday's chills.

Good job guys, see you in Japan and Korea 2002.

Men's bowling club wins by playing 'well'

Women's team finishes in fourth

By Colin Atagi
DAILY STAFF WRITER

Lindsey Wong, head coach for the San Jose State University men's bowling club, said though the team has played better, it played well in Saturday's West Coast Championships at UC Davis. Well enough to win by more than 500 points against Arizona State University, and take first place with a total score of 11,781 points.

"I think, with it being their first tournament that we've gone to, it was a good starting point," Wong said. "It gave us a chance to see what areas we need to work on. For Darren (Francisco) and Phil (Campit), it was a very good performance on their part."

The SJSU women's bowling team also competed in the tournament, and came in fourth place, Wong said.

"The girls did fairly well for their first tournament of the year," Wong said. "They had two of the top ranking teams in the nation bowling against them. They still did a good job."

For the men's club, Francisco and Campit were ranked first and second with an average of 213.33 and 205.44, respectively after 11 games.

Though they took the two top spots, assistant coach Brad Bargabus said he believed they didn't bowl their best.

Francisco said he believed he could have done better.

"I feel I could have done better," he said. "I slacked off a little bit, but I tried my hardest the whole time."

"I think we pretty much did the best we could," Francisco said. "I think the spares were bad once in a while, but overall we just worked hard over the weekend. Overall, we pretty much dominated."

Jason Rehfeld, the team captain, was ranked 44th overall with an average of 181.8, though he did come in first in the five-game group.

Rehfeld said he thought the team did very well, but didn't want to take away from the opposing team's performances.

"I wouldn't say we had it easy," Rehfeld said. "There were some really good teams out there. We just bowled a better game because we were more prepared."

Wong said Arizona State University, which came in second place, sent its B-team to the tournament.

If they had sent their best players, Wong said he thought ASU would have won, though it would have been a little more difficult.

Other notable accomplishments include Nolan Velasco Jr., who placed 29th overall with an average of 186.6; Jamal Oliver, who placed 45th with an average of 165.4; Cliff Conard, who placed 47th with an average of 164.6 and Chris Cabanban, who placed 51st with an average of 171.5.

The next tournament is scheduled for Nov. 23 in St. Louis, said Brad Bargabus, the assistant coach.

Bargabus said there would be so many teams at the next tournament that even if SJSU came in fifth place, it would still be considered a great accomplishment.

Some team members said they should do pretty well in that tournament.

"We're going to win, just like we did in Davis," Rehfeld said. "We're going to keep our streak up and finish first in the league."

Above, Darren Francisco throws his ball down the lane at the bowling alley in the Student Union. Francisco finished in first place for averages at the West Coast Bowling Championships on Saturday at University of California Davis.

Odom can't play in the NBA because he got high

MJ was on center stage in the National Basketball Association headlines earlier this week.

I'm not referring to Michael "Floor" Jordan and his airless 32 points in a loss against the Boston Celtics. Paul Pierce's duel with Jordan actually put a fresh spin on a usually not-so-intriguing game between two of the Eastern Conference's bottom feeders.

words.

Just admit it Lamar: you're a member of the NBA's chronic club.

You're in the company of former Sacramento Kings teammates Chris Webber and Jason "White Chocolate" Williams, Cliff Robinson of the Detroit Pistons, Isaiah Rider of the Denver Nuggets, New York Knicks' center Marcus Camby and last year's league Most Valuable Player, Philadelphia 76ers guard Allen Iverson.

Oh, did I mention Sam Mack of the Miami Heat, the Golden State Warriors' Mookie Blaylock, and club president and vice president — retirees Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Robert Parish respectively.

Similar to Webber, who lost his multi-year FILA shoe contract after being charged with pot possession two years ago, no one wants Odom to endorse its product except for maybe "High Times" magazine.

The Kings gambled on Williams and were burned when he was suspended for five games last July for failing a marijuana drug test and skipping out on mandatory counseling.

Were they surprised? Not likely. He was booted from the University of Florida basketball team his sophomore season for testing positive for pot. Twice.

Entering the 1999 NBA Draft, teams were also weary of selecting Odom because of off-the-court mishaps that included smoking weed while he played for the University of Rhode Island.

Maybe the 6-foot-10-inch, 220-pound future star forgot about the NBA's new drug policy that was put into effect his rookie season.

Odom and the rest of the NBA's potheads would have never been fined, penalized or forced to publicly spill their guts before the 1999-2000 season. That's when the league and player's union decided to add marijuana to its list of banned substances, which includes heroin, cocaine and steroids.

In previous years, especially after the infamous 1986 NBA Draft, the league became synonymous with cocaine abuse. Len Bias, the Celtics' No. 2 pick, died of a cocaine overdose. The Warriors drafted No. 2 and selected Chris Washburn, who was shown on a documentary on ESPN living on the streets of Atlanta after cocaine and alcohol addiction destroyed his professional basketball career.

William Bedford, a former first-round pick of the Pistons, went through rehab for cocaine and marijuana abuse several times before his career ended in 1992. Roy Tarpley, formerly of the Dallas Mavericks, is one of only two players that were banned from the league for drug use.

After the backlash of '86, cocaine usage was replaced by marijuana, according to a N.Y. Times in-depth article on Oct. 27, 1997. Twenty-five anonymous sources were cited saying that 60 to 70 percent of the NBA players and personnel were smoking pot.

An updated Times report last February said that 12 of 430 players (about three percent) tested positive for pot in training camp.

The figures this season are currently unknown, and because the league cannot go on a witch-hunt to find players that are breaking the anti-drug policy, the numbers will likely be low.

Many players probably quit smoking pot altogether, because unlike water-soluble cocaine and heroin, marijuana's fat-soluble particles can stay in their body for months.

The existence of fines, suspensions and the possible tarnishing of one's image and endorsing potential should be enough to keep players concentrated on hitting less chronic and more jump shots.

Odom has four choices:

a) He can quit using pot.

b) He could claim that clinical depression caused him to use drugs, like New England Patriots' wide receiver Terry Glenn did this year and possibly win a lawsuit with the help of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission.

c) He can retire and deal pot with former Dallas Cowboy Nate Newton.

d) He can lead the league in scoring, take his team to the Western Conference Finals and lose to the L.A. Lakers.

Baseball players begin fight against contraction

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball players began their fight to stop owners from eliminating two major league teams, filing a grievance Thursday claiming their labor contract was violated.

Management and the union met for about two hours, their first session since owners voted Tuesday to get rid of two teams next year — with Montreal and Minnesota the front-runners to disappear.

New York Mets pitcher Al Leiter and Texas pitcher Rick Helling were at the meeting, along with Detroit Tigers infielders Tony Clark and Damion Easley. The session took place on the day after the expiration of the sport's collective bargaining agreement.

In Washington, Sens. Paul Wellstone and Mark Dayton, both Democrats from Minnesota, asked President Bush to support legislation that would rescind baseball's antitrust exemption.

Wellstone and Rep. John Conyers, the ranking Democrat on the House Judiciary Committee, said they will introduce legislation next week to revoke the exemption.

"Without your support, we believe it will be extremely difficult to move this legislation forward," Wellstone and Dayton wrote to Bush, the former controlling owner of the Texas Rangers. White House officials did not return calls seeking comment.

Players and owners declined comment on the talks, but details were confirmed by officials on both sides who spoke on the condition they not be identified.

The union claimed owners violated their labor contract by unilaterally deciding to cut from 30 to 28 teams next season. If the sides don't settle, the grievance would be decided by Shyam Das, baseball's permanent arbitrator.

Management lawyers maintained owners had the right to eliminate teams but conceded that particulars, such as how to disperse players on the folded franchises, must be bargained over.

Management lawyers didn't make any proposals to the union during the discussion, which dealt in generalities and not specifics, and both sides agreed it would be impossible to complete negotiations until the teams to be eliminated are identified.

In addition to the Expos and Twins, Florida, Oakland and Tampa Bay also are possibilities. Montreal has the lowest attendance in the major leagues. Minnesota owner Carl Pohlad, a close friend of baseball commissioner Bud Selig, wants to be bought out and would get a much higher price in a contraction payment from the remaining 28 teams than he would from a sale.

Lawyers for owners and players said they will get back in touch with each other next week.

In Minneapolis, a hearing scheduled Thursday on a suit by the Minnesota Sports Facilities Commission, was postponed until Tuesday. Hennepin County District Court Judge Diana Eagon has issued a temporary restraining order against the Twins and major league baseball.

The commission sued earlier this week to compel the Twins to honor their lease to play in the Metrodome, which runs through next season.

Congress traditionally has been reluctant to tamper with baseball's antitrust exemption, created by a 1922 U.S. Supreme Court decision.

Despite his size, Shepherd makes a big impact

By Mike Osegueda

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Imagine being the cornerback assigned to cover Spartan wide receiver Edell Shepherd.

Imagine standing at the line of scrimmage, looking at his 6-foot-2-inch, 170-pound frame and staring into his determined eyes.

You might think there's no way Shepherd could do anything, because he's too small or too slow or too skinny. But you'd be making the same mistakes as everyone else who had doubted the 21-year-old throughout his life.

Now imagine when he opens his mouth, moments before the play starts.

"Get back," he'd yell at you. "I hope you got your team behind you," he'd continue to say.

What would you say back? How would you respond? Probably the same way everyone else does.

"They can't say anything because I beat them on the play," Shepherd says. "Sometimes I even tell them the route I'm running and then they still can't stop it. I tell them they're too weak for me and I'm the smallest guy on the team."

"Coaches get on me to keep my mouth closed, but I have a different approach to games. A lot of people need to be all psyched out. I can't do that. I go out there like it's Saturday morning, when I was out playing on the street."

Whatever way Shepherd approaches the game, it works.

He's caught seven touchdowns for San Jose State University this season while totaling 793 yards receiving.

Saturday, when he steps on the field against the University of Nevada at Spartan Stadium, he'll be looking for his sixth game of more than 100 yards this season.

"He's a playmaker," said Spartan head coach Fitz Hill. "He just has natural ball skills. He's not the fastest guy, but he's gifted to know how to make plays, which has been a great asset to him."

That playmaking ability along with his mouth and his attitude gained Shepherd a nickname early on: "Keyshawn Jr.," after Keyshawn Johnson of the NFL's Tampa Bay Buccaneers, who is known for his give-me-the-damn-ball attitude.

"Because of my mouth," Shepherd said. "Because I stay talking. It's not a selfish thing. I want to make plays. I want to help the team win. I want the ball. You got to get the point across. If you don't want the ball, you shouldn't play."

But that's not where the comparisons between Johnson and Shepherd end.

Each attended Dorsey High School in Los Angeles, then went to West Los Angeles Community College.

From there, Johnson went on to star at the University of Southern California. He later became the No. 1 pick in the 1996 NFL draft after earning All-American honors.

At that time, Shepherd was watching Johnson's every move around the L.A. area while playing as the top receiver in Dorsey High's wing-t offense.

While Shepherd had Jerry Rice posters on his wall, he was patterning himself after Johnson.

"I had to learn to play tough because I did a lot of blocking," he said.

The problem, however, was Shepherd's size.

"Oh, you're too little," was what Shepherd used to hear all the time. He wasn't 6-foot-3, 185 pounds like Johnson.

"I never got down," Shepherd said. "I know how good I am. I know I can do anything if I want it bad enough. My family is big on church. Once you know God, it is almost impossible for somebody to tell you can't do something."

He learned that strength not on the football field, but by growing up on the streets of South Central L.A.

"You have to be even tougher to go to the school I did and live in the neighborhood I did," Shepherd said.

On the gang-infested streets where he grew up, the Crips were in charge. But when he went to school, he was in the territory of the rival Bloods.

"It was just the nature of the streets," Shepherd said. "I know right from wrong. I never got in trouble. I was right in the middle. I was in it, but I never got caught up in it. I had my head on right. I knew what I wanted to do."

What he wanted to do was catch touchdowns. But that dream was easier to imagine than live. He had to deal with life and death every day. He saw friends die. He saw parents scared to send their children to Dorsey because of the violent reputation.

"In high school alone, I lost five close friends to gangbanging," Shepherd said. "It goes back to God and the church. I don't question why it happens. You hate to say it was meant to be, but God works in mysterious ways. You never know why He's doing things."

Shepherd said he didn't get caught up in the street life until early in high school. Coming from a family of teachers, he wasn't allowed to do anything but play sports in his younger years.

As he got older, the streets lured him in, but not for long, and not with any serious consequences.

"I'm glad I got out of it," Shepherd said. "The longer you're in it, the more chance you have of something happening to you. You always fear for yourself. Your eyes have to be open."

"It kind of makes you strong. It makes you think about things differently. You don't take things for granted because you know how easily it can get taken away from you."

There came a time when Shepherd had to get out of it. He had to pursue his dreams. And he had to turn his back on a type of lifestyle that usually doesn't take kindly to being turned away from.

"When I went away to school, they knew I had a dream to do something. It wasn't a problem. They accepted it."

Some weren't so lucky. Shepherd recalls the story of his next-door neighbor, who was his best friend growing up.

"In sports, everybody wanted him," Shepherd said. "In every sport, he could play every position. If you were picking teams, he'd be the first pick. If he was the captain, everybody wanted to be on his team. Even if it was a water balloon fight, you wanted him on your team."

When junior high school rolled around, his friend became attracted to the streets. All the athletic talent was wasted because of drug use.

"I can go home to this day and he'll be smoking," Shepherd said. "Not doing anything. And it's sad, because he should be somewhere like me, playing with me. That's the story with a lot of my buddies."

"But I don't look down on them. Those are the only friends I have. If I make it to the next level, they'll still be my friends."

That next level is the next move Shepherd is hoping for.

"I definitely think he has NFL ability," said Spartan receivers coach Keith Williams. "I definitely expect him to get there. The feedback I get from (the NFL scouts) is that he's a good enough player to compete at that level."

But for Shepherd, he feels his past coming back to haunt him.

"I hear it every time any NFL teams come here: 'What you weigh? 120?' So it's starting all over again," he said.

While he knows he can't change the body that was given to him, Shepherd does know the things he can do to play on Sundays and possibly live up to the "Keyshawn Jr." nickname.

He needs to work on his speed. Already possessing leaping ability, good hands and built-in ball instinct, Shepherd is ready for an offseason conditioning regiment that involves exercises geared toward speed.

And if people still doubt Shepherd, they haven't learned their lesson.

It's his dream to line up against an NFL defensive back and let his mouth run.

"Get back," he'd yell. "I hope you got your team behind you," he'd continue.

That's just Edell Shepherd, confidence and competitiveness filling his every breath.

"My whole life, I've always been proving people wrong," Shepherd said. "I've always been the underdog"

But there's one thing that gets him past it all. "It's the hunger for the ball. It's the passion. If the ball is in the air, I'm catching it or I'm knocking it down. It's going to touch my hands. That's how you become a playmaker. You got to want it. And I want it bad."

Men's soccer team wins in first round; Lyssand honored as top player in MPSF

DAILY STAFF REPORT

Fresno, Calif. — The Spartan men's soccer team advanced to the semifinal round of the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Championship when it shut out the University of Denver 2-0 at Bulldog Stadium on Thursday night.

After a scoreless first half, the Spartans took the lead when junior midfielder Frank Sanfilippo scored in the 66th minute of play and beat goalie Parker Jarvis.

San Jose State University freshman forward Frank Mata scored the second goal with only four minutes left in the game.

SJSU goalie Daniel Benton saw little action in the shutout, notching only three saves for the night. Sanfilippo was the key player in the victory, said Spartans head coach Gary St. Clair.

"Frankie (Sanfilippo) played a wonderful match for us," he said.

"It was a typical and tough conference game. Our guys showed enthusiasm and heart."

Earlier this week, Denver beat SJSU by a score of 3-2 Sunday at Spartan Stadium.

On Wednesday, Sanfilippo had received praise from the MPSF, as he was named as an honorable mention for the All-Conference team. Sanfilippo had four assists this season and started in all of the Spartans' 17 games this season.

Teammate Gonzalo Guerra joined Sanfilippo on that list, and Lars Lyssand was named as the MPSF's most valuable player.

Lyssand finished the year with 12 goals and 10 assists in 17 games this season. The senior had only scored 11 goals and 14 assists in his previous three years combined.

The Spartans will next face the winner of the game between Air Force and Cal State Fresno. The game will take place at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Bulldog Stadium.

The championship match will take place at 1 p.m. Sunday at Bulldog Stadium.

believing only 17 could fit. "I sat in the fetal position in the corner of the trunk," she said. "It was uncomfortable at first because I was wearing a skirt."

Jeremiah Chuck, a sophomore majoring in computer engineering, said he enjoyed the event as a whole.

"It gives students something to check out," he said. "You don't see this every day."

Another event that was held was a Trek mountain bicycle exhibition performed by Mike Haine.

He performed several stunts on his bicycle such as hopping onto several small beams and jumping from a small beam to a large platform.

Haine said the crowd and sunny weather helped him perform better. "If you clap I get crazy," he said. "The louder it is, the better I ride."

Several contests were also held, including a contest for a Trek mountain bicycle and another one for a Beetle.

Although the mountain bicycle contest was only within SJSU, the Beetle contest is for all 18 schools the tour visits, supervisor, Ron Rinaldi said.

Rinaldi said he believes the event would be successful because no one was forced to buy anything or give out information.

"No one is pushing (anything to buy) the cars," he said. "We're just creating a buzz."

He added that the event was a good way for students to have a see the Volkswagen cars and build brand re-enforcement.

"Look at our cars if you want to," he said. "If you're not interested, have a free T-shirt in the mean time."

Chris Del Castillo, a sophomore majoring in fine arts, said he said the event was a better tactic than tabling.

Stephanie Valencia agreed, and said she liked it better than sales representatives approaching her. "I don't feel mobbed," she said. "This stirs my curiosity."

She added the event made her want to become a better driver because she wants to own a Passat.

Natalie Tran, a computer science student, said she entered the Beetle contest, although she wasn't sure if she would win because of the vast competition.

Even if she doesn't win, she said she plans to shop for a Volkswagen in the future.

Tran said the giveaways were one reason why she was attended the event.

After spinning a Wheel-of-Fortune-type of wheel, she won a box of magnets.

Other gifts that were given out were T-shirts, frisbees, posters and waterbottles.

Ostermann, the emcee of the event, said he believed the event was a success.

"This is the funnest school on tour," he said. "I hope we come back."

Brian Merriam said more information about the Certified Pre-Owned Program can be found on Volkswagen's Web site.

Ostermann added pictures of the event would also be posted on the site.

Museum.

There will also be programs handed out for those attending the showcase that would make one eligible to enter the drawing for prizes.

To qualify for any of the prizes, one needs 10 stamps on the passport.

Six of the stamps have to be from inside the Event Center, which can be earned by visiting six different booths.

The remaining four stamps need to be collected from outside the Event Center by visiting four different college or library sites.

After obtaining 10 different stamps on the passport, one must turn in the passport no later than 1:45 p.m. on Saturday in the front lobby of the Event Center, according to the program.

Caret said he believes the event will become part of the tradition of outreach and communication between SJSU and the community.

A scene from William Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," KSJS DJ's will showcase a turntable exhibition and many other performances are just a few of the stage events that are slated to be in the music building.

aware of," she said.

Inaba said she saved her own money to be able to go abroad, but she knows her classmates could benefit from the money.

"I have classmates who would like to study abroad, but they're struggling financially here at it is," she said.

About 75 percent of SJSU students hold a part-time job, Goodman said, and the cost of going abroad and having to give up the extra income is an enormous obstacle.

According to Dave Rudel, Study Abroad coordinator for the international programs and services department, the scholarship fund is currently under construction and the department is still determining the criteria for students to qualify for a scholarship.

Rudel said the criteria would most likely include several elements.

He said academic excellence would be a factor. This will include students with a GPA of 2.75 or higher. Priority will be given to students with higher GPAs, he said.

Students would also need to help internationalize the campus, Rudel said.

Rudel said there are plans to start a global Student network. The network would enlist exchange students, alumni of the international program and applicants for future exchange programs, to do tasks such as recruit future applicants, write reports and communicate their experiences with others.

Rudel said he got the idea about the global network from a similar program at San Francisco State University, Rudel's alma mater.

"The program's called the International Educational Exchange Council and it was very successful at SF State," he said.

Rudel said there were international nights at a coffee house and trips to Lake Tahoe for students participating in the program.

"It was a great support system for the students," he said.

Students will be able to apply for a scholarship by next fall, Rudel said. The amount of each scholarship has not been determined yet, but will be based on the cost and length of the program, he said. The amounts offered could range from $1,000 to $2,500 per student, Rudel said.

Bush reassures country in war against terrorism

ATLANTA (AP) — President Bush urged an uneasy nation Thursday night to meet "our great national challenge" to win the war against terrorism and protect America against future attacks.

He said Washington was doing its part.

Nearly two months after the hijacker attacks in Washington, New York and Pennsylvania, the president said America would emerge stronger from its ordeals.

"None of us would ever wish the evil that has been done to our country, yet we have learned that out of evil can come great good.

During the last two months, we have shown the world America is a great nation," he said in a speech excerpt released by the White House.

Bush's prime-time address, coming nearly two months after the hijacker attacks, was billed as an update on the war in Afghanistan, the anthrax scares at home and the new responsibilities of government and all Americans.

He also outlined actions the government has taken to strengthen homeland security.

"Our great national challenge is to hunt down the terrorists and strengthen our protections against future attacks; our great national opportunity is to preserve forever the good that has resulted. Through the tragedy, we are renewing and reclaiming our strong American values," Bush said.

He spoke in Atlanta, chosen because it is home to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the nation's leading disease control facility.

But Bush held off promises of additional money for the CDC and the Postal Service this year, saying the $40 billion already appropriated "is ample enough" for immediate anti-terrorism needs.

"Before we spend more money, let's make sure we have a national strategy to deal with the homeland defense issue," Bush told reporters.

The president toured the CDC's operations center, and looked at examples of the equipment the facility has on hand for emergencies.

He expressed doubts about the idea of vaccinating all Americans against smallpox to head off a potential attack with the germ, since there is a risk of fatal side effects in some.

"I would be deeply concerned about a vaccination program that would cause people to lose their lives," Bush said.

Recognizing in polls a desire by Americans to get involved in the fight against terrorism, the president was suggesting ways people could serve their country.

He was recommending "careers of service," such as firefighting or police work, aides said, noting the increase in applications for such work in recent weeks.

He also was urging volunteer work in hospitals and other places on the front lines of terrorism response, such as military installations.

On Friday, Bush was announcing a "dramatic increase" in the use of National Guard personnel for airport security, including the stationing of Guardsmen at airport boarding gates, an administration official said.

The president planned to make the announcement in Washington at an East Room ceremony honoring private employers of National Guard and Reserve personnel.

Bush planned to announce an expansion of the federal AmeriCorps community service program to broaden the number of jobs involving people who respond to emergencies.

Regulations blocking retired police and service workers from taking part in the program should be dropped, aides said.

Bush was asking states to help develop a modern civil defense service.

The program would be modeled after volunteer firefighter programs, which provide trained, equipped firefighters.

The president had little progress to report during his planned Georgia World Congress Center address, which was to be carried live on cable TV and at least one broadcast network.

The chief suspect in the Sept. 11 hijackings, Osama bin Laden, remains free in Afghanistan despite the pounding by American bombs, and investigators remain baffled by the anthrax attacks.

Four people have died, 13 others have fallen ill since the bacteria was unleashed in the nation's mail last month.

Attorney General John Ashcroft gave the investigation a positive spin, saying hours before Bush's address that America has "emerged victorious in the opening battle in the war against terrorism."

He said the country has avoided another major attack through the hard work of law enforcement personnel and the patience and vigilance of the public.

Ashcroft said "two periods of extremely high threat have passed" without additional attacks.

He was referring to a pair of terrorism threat warnings that placed law enforcement nationwide at their highest alert.

In a separate development, White House adviser Karl Rove planned to meet with Hollywood executives Sunday to discuss ways in which the entertainment industry might want to promote the war and anti-terrorism effort.

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said public service announcements are one option.

In that meeting, organized by Paramount executive Sherri Lansing, Rove hoped to discuss the themes the White House is stressing in the anti-terror campaign — tolerance, courage, patriotism.

Terrorist attacks could cost the country trillions

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An overreaction by the U.S. government could cause the total cost of the terrorist attacks to exceed a trillion dollars, according to a report released Thursday by the Milken Institute.

The report, titled "Assessing the Costs of Terrorism," warned that many critical policy choices have yet to be made, with the most important being the extent of the military response, the methods used to obtain domestic security and the means to compensate industries and families affected by the attacks.

If imprudent choices are made, according to economist and report author Peter Navarro, it could cost the country more than just the estimated billions of dollars in property damage and lost economic output.

"The direct cost of the destruction of the property and aircraft represent a very small sliver of the overall cost," he said Thursday night. "If we mishandle this crisis, it could cost us $2 trillion a year beginning in 2011."

That number was gained by the simple difference between an annual growth rate of 2 percent and a more robust 3.5 percent, he said.

Whether this happens will be tied to current fiscal policy and actions relating to the nation's recovery. In the report, Navarro warned government leaders to be cautious in their fiscal and monetary policies.

"The clear danger is that we'll panic and overstimulate the economy," he said. "We could come out of the recession quickly, but that could trigger a roller coaster of recession and inflation."

Navarro said government leaders face a strategic choice of whether to divert resources from productive capital to protective capital, from spending money on building instead of surveillance.

"As you try to drive the risk of terrorism down, the cost goes to infinity," he said.

Reining those costs in, he said, will be a matter of resisting the temptation to go overboard on safety measures.

In the report, published in the current issue of the quarterly Milken Institute Review, Navarro said the government can choose to double the number of its sky marshals to 40,000 at a cost of $100 million or put two marshals on every plane, creating a bureaucracy many times the size of the FBI and costing $6 billion.

He also urged policy leaders to consider the impact of increased airport security on passenger delays, which he said could cripple the airlines.

"The backbone of the airlines is the business traveler," he said. "When you add a considerable amount of time, you are raising the cost to the business. And, time is money."

The report also measured the costs of the attacks in such areas as property damage, increased airline security, lost economic output, subsequent bailouts of the airlines and reduced tax revenues.

Navarro estimated that the death toll translates into an economic cost in the range of $40 billion, taking into account income scale and education of the thousands of people who died, as well as the emotional pain and income loss suffered by their families.

Property damage will exceed $10 billion and, in the days immediately following the attacks, $6.4 billion was lost in advertising, airline and hotel revenues, the report said.

The Milken Institute is a nonprofit think tank focusing on four major issues, the global economy, capital markets and financial institutions, the role of education and human capital, and regional economics and demographics.
