Art major Nancy Leat, 22, remembered for her kindness, generosity and love of life

San Jose State University student Nancy Leat was known for her generosity, kindness and bubbly personality, said friends, family and faculty members who knew her.

Leat, 22, passed away Friday. Funeral services were held Wednesday in her hometown of Sunnyvale.

During the hour-and-half long service with about 300 attendees, a pastor read a seven-page letter written by Nancy's father, mother and

In the letter, details of Nancy's color guard activities, her friendships and the moments that led to Nancy's heart condition were given.

The open casket funeral was decorated with flags and flowers at the side. On the table beside her casket were several trays of blue, purple and yellow pansies.

Audience members sang a hymn Addience members sang a hymn called "Joyful, Joyful We Adore Thee," followed by a small group of SJSU marching band members performing "Hail Spartans Hail," and "Bad, Bad Leroy Brown," with members clapping along. A special rendition of "Somewhere Out There," one of Nancy's favorite songs, was also performed.

After the letter was read, long-time friends and former co-workers shared stories and memories.

Kiyoe Congera, a high school friend of nine years, spoke about how Nancy would share her clothes with her, and brought a yellow shirt with a picture of a silly frog on the front that Nancy had given her.

Congera said it reminded her of Nancy's silliness, and how her friend would share old clothes.

Lesley Leat, her older sister, said she wanted people to take the flowers to plant something bright for Nancy.

"They're like little faces — sweet and cheerful because she was always a nice pleasant girl," Lesley said.

Lesley, 26, said she will miss spending time with Nancy, which always required special planning. Lesley said she imagined her sister would have one day married her longterm boyfriend, James Gable, and looked forward to giving her away at

She said the other day she was in a restaurant and saw four old couples, senior citizens, sitting together and it reminded her of Nancy.

It's the little things such as thinking about growing old together and getting that senior citizen discount she said she will miss

Nancy also brought good karma wherever she went, Lesley said they went to Las Vegas for Nancy's 21st birthday and she won $300 while her

A $12 fee increase for the fall semester was voted down Wednesday in a special referendum administered by the San Jose State University Associated Students

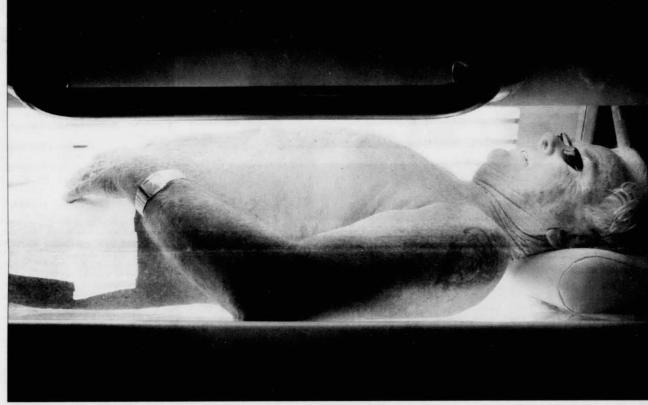

In Tuesday and Wednesday's vote, approximately 60 percent of the 673 votes were against the increase, said David Erlichman, chief elections officer of the A.S. Election Board. The turnout represents approximately 2.4 percent of eligible voters on campus, Erlichman said.

A total of 268 students voted in favor of the increase, and 405 voted against it. Had it passed, the increase would more library hours By Michelle Ochoa

Daily Staff Writer

A pilot run of extended library hours will be in effect for finals week said Alice Lee, vice president of Associated Students in Tuesday's meeting. Also addressed in the meeting was a student fee increase of $14 to help pay for more library resources and the possible erection of a monument to Cesar Chavez.

According to the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Joint Library's Web site, the entire library will be open until midnight from Wednesday, May 19 through Tuesday, May 25. Students will need to have their valid Tower Card in order to remain in the library after the usual closing times on those days.

If all goes well during finals week, Lee said the library will be open for an extra two hours a day during the fall semester.

A.S. passed the Instructional Related Activities Fee Alternative Consultant Statement by a major-

Monica Rascoe, vice president of student affairs, said the $14 increase was for enrichment of the library and that it "attempted to address a number of critical issues in the library."

The fee increase would support the extended library hours, special collections and more technology resources, Lee said.

Some A.S. members didn't see the need for such a high increase in fees for services not all students would utilize

John Lombardo, director of student resource affairs, was con-cerned that the increase wouldn't go to a student vote.

The $14 are not needed, because they're going to resources that are not required by the students," Lombardo said. He felt that generally, students have not requested more services beyond Huy Tran, director of governing affairs, was in favor of the statement. He said that students may need more than just books out of the library.

The $14 increase would not be set to increase with inflation,

New ballparks attract fans, not championships

If you build it, they will come — but do championships

Since the opening of Oriole Park at Camden Yards in 1992, 15 major league franchises have built new ballparks in the new retro style taken after the Camden Yards mold, yet only the Arizona Diamondbacks have won a World Series in their new ballpark.

However, the Diamondbacks had to build a new ballpark in Arizona since there was no stadium to play in when they became an expansion team in 1998.

These swanky new ballparks are architecturally pleasing to the eye and strategically placed in desirable locations with unique touches: the warehouse beyond the right field in Baltimore and the train whistle at Safeco Field in Seattle; the Ferris wheel in Detroit; the retractable roof and the mini-train atop the left wall in Houston; the rivers in Cincinnati and Pittsburgh; the bay in San Francisco.

These franchises are making more revenue with increased attendance, making ballparks "the place to be."

I recall when the San Francisco Giants played at Candlestick Park and they regularly played in front of a deserted stadium. The true, die-hard fans had no problems dealing with the dumpy stadium that the Giants shared with the 49ers, and the windy, cold weather conditions to come watch a mediocre team play ball.

Today the Giants play at SBC Park to a crowd of 41,000, and the die-hards have been replaced with corporate yuppies?

When I attended an Oakland Athletics and Giants series at the ballpark formerly known as Pacific Bell Park, men on cell phones trading stocks or having personal conversations with their buddies is what surrounded me there. The sports fan that I am, I was appalled and irritated to have to listen to such talk during a ball game. It was like the well-dressed men were still at the office, while I was there to watch a game and cheer my team on. SBC Park may have the beautiful bay with sailboats floating by, but the park is also lit-tered with huge advertisements that take away from the true meaning of the sport. Where are the retired jerseys that can hang for fans to see instead of the Old Navy Splash sign or the outlandish Coca-Cola bottle that protrudes into the sky?

I would rather see some monuments inside the park like Monument Park, which honors heroes from the past at Yankee Stadium in New York, or walk around and look at some team memorabilia hanging on the walls as I make my way to my seat.

The Giants owner, Peter Magowan, is always crying about how they are so in debt because they're financing their own ballpark. Yet they have the largest season ticket base in baseball — along with that comes money.

He's banking on fans coming out to see his new, beautiful ballpark, but he's not willing to put out the money to field a

So, all that fans are getting is the chance to come to a social event after work, take in the views and watch Barry Bonds hit a home run or get intentionally walked. The Toronto Blue Jays managed to win two World Series championships in 1992 and 1993. During this period, they played in a fairly new, retractable-roofed domed structure, which also has a hotel inside.

MARIA VILLALOBOS In 1994 the fans, players and franchises all lost because of the baseball strike. The Atlanta Braves in 1995 won their championship in old Fulton County Stadium against the Cleveland Indians, who played in their new ballpark, Jacobs Field.

The New York Yankees managed to win four championships in 1996, 1998, 1999 and 2000 in the house that Ruth built - Yankee Stadium, erected in the 1920s. The Florida Marlins managed to win two champion-ships in 1997 and 2003 in a stadium used for football and baseball, Pro Player Stadium. The Anaheim Angels won one championship in 2002 in a renovated ballpark, Edison Field, which was formerly Angel Stadium.

The only exception was the Arizona Diamondbacks who won a championship in 2001, but they were an expansion team. Franchises have become a money-making machine especially now since many ballparks are mostly owned

They don't care if they win or lose as long as the money keeps flowing in and their bank accounts keep growing.

Is it about money or about a sport? What happened to the sport of baseball?

All the glitz may bring in the money and the fans, but the franchises have not produced what I feel is the most important thing in baseball — a World Series Champion-

Isn't that what sports is all about - winning?

Governor's budget plan threatens state's colleges

"We should be debating how we can invest more,

not less, in these institutions, and in the future of our state."

a debate with serious implications for you as college students: Gov. Schwarzenegger has proposed more than $650 million in cuts to California's public colleges and universities, tuition hikes of greater than 30 percent for undergraduate students and 50 percent for graduate students over the next three years, a 44 percent hike in fees for community college students, cuts to the Cal Grant program and an $11.6 million reduction in University of California research

The Schwarzenegger administration has also proposed to ask the UC and California State Universities to find "non-state resources" to fund most of its outreach efforts, which help disadvantaged students compete for college after slashing them by 50 percent earlier While there are many questions to be answered about how to solve the state's truly dire fiscal problems, I believe the choices before us are larger than where to make cuts or raise revenues. The real question is whether the leaders of this state will keep the commitment that our parents and grandparents made to invest in the next generation, or whether our elected leaders will shirk that commitment, to the detriment of your education and, I believe, to the future of our state.

As treasurer, my first priority is to protect our economy today, and to build our economy for tomorrow. I believe the governor's budget proposals for our public colleges and universities take our state in the wrong direction - undermining our state's historic commitment to a first-class higher educational system that provides opportunity to all Californians and that will be our ticket to economic progress in the decades ahead. What is truly troubling is that the governor has proposed slashing state support for higher education and hiking fees on students, while refusing to consider closing one corporate tax loophole or restoring the state's income tax rates on the wealthiest Californians to where they were under Republican Govs. Ronald Reagan and Pete Wilson.

In January of this year, I had the chance to tour some of our state's great UC, CSU and community college campuses. While I have always believed that education is an important investment in our state's economic strength, I came away from this tour more convinced than ever of the importance of these great institutions - not only for the benefit they provide our economy, but also for the pportunity and promise they offer the next generation of Californians. In my opinion, we should be debating how we can invest more, not less, in our students and in these institutions, and in the future of our state.

On my college tour, I met many students who told me that their dreams of attending our state's four-year universities simply would not be possible without the asistance, support and guidance they received from the very CSU and UC outreach programs the governor proposed in January to eliminate. At San Diego City College, I met with four students in the MESA program — the Mathematics, Engineering and Science Achievement outreach program. None of their parents had gone to college, and of their parents had gone to coulege, and all of the students in this program were working at jobs just to make ends meet. Because of the MESA program, Izzy Beth Rodriguez, Barry Cordero, Michelle Scott and Jovanni Sarria are poised to go on to our great university system, to study biology, engineering and biomedical science, and to make their contribution to California's future.

PHIL ANGELIDES

Also in January, I visited Mc-Clymonds High School in Oakland, a school where more students drop out than graduate. There I met Antoine Davis, a truly inspiring young man who has defied the odds against him. Davis not only will graduate this spring, but will do so as student body president, editor of the school paper and with a 3.7 grade point average. Davis says college outreach programs helped him to prepare for and apply to colleges. This fall, he will enroll in his first-choice school UC Berkeley.

We must ensure that our world-renowned public college and university system can continue to provide the opportunity for stu-dents like Rodriguez, Cordero, Scott, Sarria and Davis — and tens of thousands more just like them across our State - to fulfill their dreams of attending college, where they can acquire the knowledge and skills they will need to excel in and contribute to a burgeoning 21st century plan to continue fighting to protect California's higher education system and to maintain its legacy as an educational system that is worthy of your future. I urge you to make your voices heard too, so that, together, we steer this debate in the right direction. E-mail or call the governor and your legislators and let them know that this fight is about more than dollars and cents - it is about your education and about the future of this great state.

Phil Angelides is the California State Treasurer. Guest columns regularly appear on Thursdays.

Editor's note: "Behind Blue Eyes" by Ken Lotich, which regularly appears Thursdays will return next semester.

Robert J. Leat, her father, said Nancy meant the world to him and would want her friends to emulate Nancy's kindness to help others.

"That's what Nancy would've done, no matter what," Robert said. "She just did, she never said why.

He said Nancy had a heart condition called viral cardio myopathy, an enlarge-ment of the heart resulting from a viral Leat was a well-liked member of the Spartan color guard, friends said.

Kiyoe Congera, Leat's best friend from high school, said she met Nancy in eighth grade when the nearby high school came to recruit students for its clubs. They clicked at the color guard meeting and stuck it out for four years, Congera said.

"We called ourselves 'the band geeks,'" Congera laughed. "It's just that the band and color guard are such a community where you get to know each other and spend so much time ... you get close with people."

The pair of friends attended Homestead High School in Cupertino and graduated in 1999.

Congera said she can't yet accept Nancy being gone.

She was aware of Leat's heart condition, but she said Nancy never wanted

other people to worry.
"She never talked about it, like, in the sense of making people worry or feel-sorry for her or anything like that," she said. "If Nancy talked about her heart, it was to warn people rather than have them feel sorry for her."

"She never talked about it and didn't let it stop her," said Alexa Brooks, an SJSU senior in the color guard. "There was an aura about her, and she was happy where she was."

"She decided to live as fully as she could," Brooks added.

Leat always had a smile on her face and liked to invite friends to her

Brooks said Leat organized get togethers with friends in the marching band and wouldn't allow for anyone to not join the fun. Cost was never an issue if someone couldn't pay, she'd pay for that person, Brooks said.

Monica Bugaoan, a member of the SJSU color guard, recalled a time when she didn't have enough money to attend Leat's birthday celebration.

"She was very giving, and I don't know anybody that would pay for you when it was (her) birthday," Bugaoan

Scott Pierson, director of the SISU Marching Band, remembers Leat for her on and warmth.

"I thought she was completely fun,"

Pierson said. "She had this real love for performing and doing the color guard thing. She was totally friendly, bubbly and I knew she was in for long haul because she loved the activity so much."

Pierson called Leat a team player who never complained. Ellen Metzger, a professor in the geology department, said Leat was reliable and conscientious. If she had to miss a class for a color guard competition, she would turn in her work ahead of time. "I don't think I ever heard her complain," Metzger said. Brooks said she and Leat worked together at SJSU to put on a winter guard show for students at Fremont High School.

"She was patient when she dealt with (the high school students)," she said. "She was someone special to them and they looked up to her as a mentor, friend and teacher.

Gabriel Reyes, assistant to the president for campus climate, spoke at Tuesday's meeting in a fund-raising attempt for a proposed monument to Cesar Chavez next to the Paseo de Cesar Chavez.

The monument would be set up like an archway near the bowl-like fountain on the side of the Paseo de Cesar Chavez that leads to the Student Union and would contain murals portraying campesino farm workers, scenes from Chavez's activism and pictures of Mahatma Ghandi and labor activist Dolores

According to the video presentation shown by Reyes, the pictures of Ghandi and Huerta would represent that social change is possible through non-violent

Also discussed in the video was a possible redecoration of the tiles that lead to the path around the fountain, and replacing the benches surrounding the fountain with ones that coordinate with the Cesar Chavez theme.

riving on a rural country road just south of Bakers-field, in what seemed to be the middle of nowhere, searching for some sign of my destination, I started to wonder if I had taken a wrong turn.

In all directions, the only thing visible was farmland. Just as I was about to turn around, I heard a sound that assured me I was was about to turn around, I heard a sound that assured me I was heading in the right direction — the unmistaken roar of a top fuel big twin Harley Davidson drag bike engine.

As I pulled into the hot, dusty parking lot of Famoso Raceway a familiar smell filled my nose and cleared my sinuses — it was the smell of nitro fuel. I had made it to the S&S Cycle California Nationals, an All Harley Drag Racing Association sanctioned event.

The races, held May 1 and 2, included 14 different classes of drag bikes ranging from street-legal motorcycles to top fuel customs that can only be ridden on a track.

The most popular class with the hundreds of spectators was the top fuel dragsters — capable of covering the quarter mile track in less than seven seconds and reaching a top speed of more than 200 miles per hour.

FIRST PERSON

Nathan Walton, a member of the Black Sheep Motorcycle Club, watches the drag races at Famoso Raceway near Bakersfield on May 1.

Before the start of each race, the riders or "pilots," did a "burnout" by holding the front break and spinning the rear wheel, which created a huge cloud of smoke from the burning

The pilots then moved their massive machines to the starting line and waited for the all-important green light that sent them speeding down the drag strip.

Between the races there were other activities for the spectators to enjoy.

On the "midway" vendors showcased their products that were geared towards the Harley Davidson enthusiasts. Patrons could buy everything from chrome parts for their motorcycles, to t-shirts, to complete custom-built "choppers."

Refreshments at the event came in the form of carnival-style food — beer and various things on a stick.

After draining their wallets on parts, food and beer, race fans had the opportunity to watch drag teams as they tuned their high-performance machines in preparation for the next run down the track. What does it mean to ride a drag bike? It means riding a motorcycle at wide-open throttle. It is pushing a machine to its limit and sometimes beyond, and flirting with disaster. It also means achieving an adrenalin rush like no other.

All of us who ride motorcycles, whether on a track or on the street, can relate to what it means. Perhaps that's why we met in the middle of nowhere for a weekend of speed.

In Greece, a race to finish Olympics

Associated Press

MARATHON, Greece - Athletes have been running the mostly uphill route from this village to Athens for about 2,500 years, ever since a swift soldier named Phidippides legged the 26.2 miles to deliver news of a military victory over the Persians. But with just three months to go until the Olympic Games return to Greece, the ancient path is hardly fit for the world's best modern-day marathoners. Hundreds of dump trucks, excavators, cement mixers and laborers with old-fashioned pickaxes are working double shifts to widen the racecourse along a narrow highway, but are far behind schedule

About half the route remains under construction. In Marathon, the starting line is nowhere to be seen; even the local work crews say they aren't sure where it's supposed to go.

The asphalt ribbon is one of numerous venues that are still unfinished as Athens scrambles to prepare for the Aug. 13-29 Olympics.

The Olympic Stadium — site of the Opening Ceremonies and the track and field events — needs seats, not to mention an 18,000-ton roof that began sliding into place only this week. Across the region, the sound of jackhammers echoes with the building of new roads, subways and sidewalks.

Everything is dusty.
With so much undone, it came as a huge relief to the host city Wednesday when visitors from the International Olympic Committee wrapped up a three-day final inspection tour and pronounced themselves confident that everything would be ready on time.

Denis Oswald, the IOC's chief overseer for the Athens Games, said he was impressed with the progress and credited the Greeks for picking up the pace. "I can really witness the ogress," he said.

"In the past we had doubts," Oswald acknowledged at a news conference. "I am very happy to report all these doubts have disappeared. No single project is at risk and we know everything will be delivered on

In 2000, the IOC threatened to take the Olympics away from Athens because the Greeks, plagued by political bickering and government spending controls, had failed to show much headway since being awarded the Games three years earlier.

Since then, Greece has labored to prove that a small country - population 11 million — can successfully put on a $6.5 billion athletic spectacle. Complicating matters have been escalating demands for better security measures after the Sept. 11 attacks in the United States, followed by bombings in Istanbul last November and in Madrid two months ago.

"In 2000, we began meeting under the shadow of a yellow card and, since then, we have done seven years' work in just four years' time," Gianna Angelopoulos-Daskalaki, president of the Athens 2004 organizing com-mittee, said after the IOC finished its tour Wednesday. "This is a fact and it's proof of what we Greeks can do when we work in a focused and professional way. ... When the world's best athletes come to Greece for the historic homecoming of the Olympic Games, we will be ready to welcome them.

There are still plenty of obstacles Athens officials tout the planned 75,000-seat stadium, with bowlegged glass-and-steel roof, as the architectural centerpiece of this year's

But where Sydney completed its Olympic Stadium 18 months prior to the start of the 2000 Games, Greece waited until last year to finalize the nstruction contracts

After repeated delays, there was some talk of pulling the plug on the roof altogether for fear that the enduring image of the Opening Ceremonies would be of a half-finished edifice.

Similar concerns had already a covered aquatic center and leave it as an open-air swimming area instead.

But under pressure from the IOC, contractors began slowly raising the stadium roof with cranes on Monday and pledged to cap it off by the end of Landscaping provides another challenge. Because of all the construction activity, the land around the main athletic complex is a dust bowl that a single heavy rain could turn into a quagmire of mud. Officials promise tens of thousands of trees, shrubs and other plants, but not until July - the hottest month of the year in Athens, hardly a conducive time for vegetation.

Traffic congestion throughout Athens, a ringing headache in normal times, has peaked because the Greek government is building so many new roads and transit lines to accommodate the expected crowds for the Many Athenians say they are willing to put up with the inconvenience because they figure the improvements will pay off in the long term. And despite the ticking clock and all the planning problems, they say they are confident that the transportation network will be ready.

Berg seemed oblivious to dangers, friends in Iraq say

Associated Press

BAGHDAD - To the whom Nick Berg befriended here, he was an affable, strapping American who talked a good who talked a good game about business but seemed oblivious to the dangers that raged around him and increasingly targeted Westerners

The night before Berg checked out of the Al-Fanar hotel, he had a beer with an acquaintance and spoke of going home. The next day, April 10, he left, suitcase in hand. A month later he was found dead.

Somewhere along the way, suspected Islamic militants snatched 26-year-old Pennsylvanian, then beheaded him before a video camera and on Tuesday, posted the horrific images on the Internet. His family blames the U.S. military for jeopardizing his life by having detained him in late March when he had planned to leave, a charge the army denies.

According to those who knew him, Berg was one of a small number of small-time freelance businessmen who have come to this volatile, war-scarred country hoping to make a buck and maybe, in the words of his parents, do some good.

But he ran afoul of, first, Iraqi law and then suspicious American investigators. And then, perhaps, of his own cavalier sense of adventure.

Iraqi police picked him up in the orthern city of Mosul on March 24, 10 days after he arrived in Iraq for the second time in the last few months. Berg told friends he was arrested following a night of drunken mischief. He was jailed for 13 days and interrogated not once but three times by the FBI. The U.S. Army insists they never took custody of him from the Iraqi police.

Berg later told friends he had been accused of spying — though it wasn't clear whether he meant his accusers were the Americans or the Iraqis, or both. He told friends an Israeli stamp in his passport had made the Iraqis especially hostile. Berg was Jewish, and his family speculated that his religion might have been a factor in his kidnappers' decision to kill him. In Baghdad, Berg customarily stayed at the shabby Al-Fanar hotel, where rooms go for $30 a night. His overlooked the turgid Tigris River. Other residents recalled Wednesday the cheerful American entrepreneur who loved talking about communication tower

TANNING

A and B rays are different sections of the ultraviolet spectrum that stimulate skin cells to produce melanin, which is what gives skin its pigment, she said, but both UVA and UVB rays cause damage by mutating the cells.

According to an article from the Web site for the American Cancer Society, people 35 and younger who regularly use tanning beds are eight times more likely to develop melanoma skin cancer than those who never use them. Even occasional use can increase the risk threefold.

Sun Savvy Body & Tan in San Jose offers only "mist-on" tanning booths, according to Penny Aruta, the store's manager. Aruta said the salon's owners are opposed to the use of tanning beds, because of the health risks they

"They've seen the effects that beds have on the skin," Aruta said.

According to Aruta, "mist-on" tanning booths spray both sides of the body with a bronzing solution, similar to the self-tanners found in drug stores. Application takes about 15 minutes and lasts for five to seven

"Because the technology is more advanced, it produces a better tan than the store-bought ones," Aruta said. "It comes out much more even, and it doesn't look orange."

Aruta said this form of tanning is safe, because it does not use ultraviolet light to produce color. She said she has never read any reports indicating the solution could be hazardous to

"It's becoming more popular because people are concerned with health risks," Aruta said. "I think they feel more secure knowing they're not getting any UV rays."

Hughes said spray-on tans are a good alternative to beds, because they do not pose any known health risks.

"The spray only sets into the very top layer of the skin, which is dead already," Hughes said. The solution does not actually produce color within the skin - rather, it is applied like paint, said Hughes. Stephenie Rose, owner of Four Seasons Tanning in Los Gatos, said she has been in the skin-care and beauty industry for 19 years and is aware of the controversy surrounding the use of tanning beds.

According to Rose, Four Seasons Tanning has four types of beds, which are classified by their level of UVB rays. The basic bed uses 8 to 10 percent UVB rays and is the cheapest at $8 per session. The most expension option is a bronzing bed that uses only UVA rays and costs $30 per session.

"My motto is 'safe tanning,' " Rose said. "Being safe means not burning. That means wearing sunscreen outside, keeping your skin hydrated and not overdoing it."

Rose said there is a lot of continuing education in the tanning industry and she requires her staff to attend classes through the International Smart Tan Network, an educational institute for indoor tanning salons

According to the institute's Web site, professionals learn "how to maximize the potential benefits of sun exposure while minimizing the potential risks associated with either too much or too little sunlight.

Rose said she and her staff consult with each client to determine what sort of regimen best suits their body's

"If a customer has ever had any kind of melanoma or has a history

'They've seen the effects that beds have on the skin.' of it in their family, they should never go into a tanning salon, unless it's for a spray-on," Rose said. When dealing with such clients, Rose said she and her staff immediately inform the person that they do not recommend them using tanning beds.

"Most people won't argue with you, but if they insist, they can sign a release form," Rose said.

Even clients without a history of skin cancer are sometimes "steered away" from using tanning beds because of potential risks. Rose said people with very fair skin have lower levels of melanin and can get sunburned faster, and she would recommend they use one of the artificial options.

The Four Seasons staff also makes recommendations based on what will produce the best result for the client.

"If you normally don't tan during regular sun exposure, you won't tan in a bed," Rose said.

Rose said tanning can have positive effects and she has several clients whose doctors recommended tanning to treat certain skin disorders, including psoriasis, which causes itchy, scaly

While Hughes agrees that ultraviolet light can be used to treat some skin disorders, she said she administers such treatment in her office and would never recommend use of a tanning bed to a patient.
"They could get excessive doses of UV rays without knowing it, because it's not regulated or monitored in the same way," Hughes said. "I keep very close tabs on my patients and cover any parts of the skin that don't need treatment

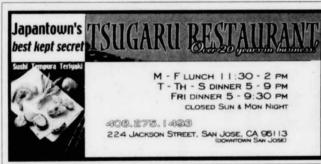

According to Rose, other patients come to the salon for artificial, spray-on tans, which can be used to "shade in" or "shadow" skin discoloration and spots making them less noticeable. Rose said in addition to spray-on tanning booths, the salon offers an airbrushing option for customized color and a more precise application.

Regardless of what method of tanning is used. Rose said it is important for clients to be informed.

"As with anything else, you should ask questions and make sure the person knows what they're talking about," Rose said.

New study shows big drop in books sold

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Not even Harry Potter could prevent a big drop in book sales in 2003.

With a struggling economy and competition for time from other media, 23 million fewer books were sold last year than in 2002, according to a report issued Wednesday by the Book Industry Study Group, a non-for-profit research organization.

Sales fell to 2.222 billion books, down from 2.245 billion in 2002. The decline was in both hardcovers and paperbacks, in children's books and general trade releases. Even sales of religious titles, often cited as a growing part of the publishing industry, were flat.

"We believe this is due to a variety of factors, the biggest being the used book market," said Albert N. Greco, an industry consultant and a professor of business at the graduate school of Fordham University.

"People are looking for bargains, especially in college textbooks, where we believe millions of used books are being bought. Also, books are competing with magazines, cable, radio, music and movies."

Thanks to higher prices, net revenues did rise to $27.8 billion in 2003, a 2.5 percent increase. They are projected to reach $33.5 billion in 2008. But the 2003 figures show a continued trend of increasing production and declining demand.

of increasing production and declining demand. More than 100,000 books were published last year, yet fewer people were buying them. Sales dropped despite such high-profile releases as "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," the memoirs of Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, and Dan Brown's religious thriller, "The Da Vinci Code."

"One book cannot make you," Greco said.
"You have to look at how many books are not selling well. There's a parallel to Hollywood, where a lot of rowing flun."

where a lot of movies flop."

The Book Industry Study Group's report, titled "Book Industry Trends 2004," includes several downbeat assessments from publishing officials. Bob Miller, president of Hyperion, declares that "the pie we're all looking to share is not growing," and "flat is the new up."

Octopus finds love in old age

Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — It looks like J-1 is in love.

After meeting the very fetching and slightly younger Aurora, he changed color and his eight arms became intertwined with hers. Then, the two retreated to a secluded corner to get to know each other better.

We're talking about giant Pacific octopuses here.

Aquarists at the Alaska SeaLife Center in Seward introduced the 5-year-old J-1 to Aurora on Tuesday morning. The two really hit it off. Spermatophores were seen hanging from L-1's siphon:

from J-1's siphon:

"We really were not sure he had it in him," SeaLife Center aquarium curator Richard Hocking said

Wednesday.

Love almost passed J-1 by. At 5 years of age and 52 pounds, he's reaching the end of the line for his species, the largest octopus in the world. J-1 is in a period of decline that occurs before octopus die. His skin is eroding. His suckers have divots.

"He's not as strong as he used to be," said aquarist Deanna Trobaugh.

With so little time left, J-1 wasn't going to let the sweet Aurora slip through his eight octopus arms. While she had to make the first move, he caught on quickly, especially for an octopus who was collected on a beach near Seldovia in 1999 when he was about the size of a quarter and has lived the bachelor life since.

"They both were gripping the back wall of the tank. He just about covered her completely," Hocking said.

The two remained intertwined for about eight hours. It's possible that during that time when J-1 was exploring Aurora's mantle with his many suckered arms that he passed his sperm packet to her, Hocking said.

What the aquarium staff does know is that when they separated, J-1 flashed some colors, turning almost white and then dark red.

Scott breaks new ground at SJSU

By Theresa Smith Daily Staff Writer

For the first time in San Jose State University's history, a women's water polo player was named to the allconference first team for the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation.

Laura Scott, who was introduced to water polo in the sixth grade, said she was extremely happy when she heard she was the first player in SJSU history to receive the first team honor.

"It's like getting a certificate for the Dean's List," said Scott, a junior majoring in child development. "I was really excited. I thought it was a great honor.

Lou Tully, head water polo coach, said Scott is a hard worker and puts a lot of demands on herself.

She takes responsibility for things she has no control over," Tully said.

The game of water polo consists of seven players — six field players and one goalie. There is a floating goal at each end of the pool and the players are only allowed to put one hand on the ball, to prevent the other team from scoring.

"It has some elements of basketball and soccer," Tully said. "It's a contact sport. You are allowed to tackle.'

Currently, the team has completed their season, finishing ninth at the MPSF conference with Scott leading the team to a 16-16 overall record and scoring 49 goals.

Scott is not just a scholar athlete She has served her community in more ways than one, according to SJSU life skills coordinator of intercollegiate athletics Kirsten Foster.

"Scott has taken part in several activities and has gone beyond her role in the community," Foster said.

Other than being the captain of the women's water polo team, she is also one of the Western Athletics Conference representatives. Even though water polo is not a WAC sport, SJSU a part of the WAC conference and she represents the university. Also, she currently sits on the Student Athletic Advisory Committee.

Foster said Scott has participated in programs like "Read to Exceed," in which athletes read stories to children and teach them the importance of getting an education.

'She has gone to the Lucile Packard Children's Hospital at Stanford University to bring doggie bags filled with hats, T-shirts, balls and (athletic accessories) for about 200 kids," Foster

Scott will receive the CHAMPS/ Life Skills Leadership award, an award that recognizes academics, athletics, community service, career development and personal development, Foster said.

Spartan water polo captain Laura Scott searches for an open teammate during this season's annual Alumni Game. Scott is the first SJSU women's water polo player to be named to the first team All-Mountain Pacific Sports Federation.

"This award recognizes (those) student athletes (who) dedicate themselves to the overall college experience," Foster said.

Scott, who is interested in going to Australia to play for the Olympic Team, said she wants to focus on finishing school first.

"I started out (wanting to go) to Australia, but wanted to finish my degree," Scott said. "That's pretty much the plan right now — it's to finish school."

Foster said Scott is a credit to the university.

"She is a leader for the team," Foster said. "She is what we like to call a true Spartan in and out."

Harden pitches A's past Tigers, 2-1

DETROIT - Back when they were roommates in minor league training camp, Rich Harden and Training camp, Rich Harden and Jeremy Bonderman imagined someday facing each other in the big leagues.

They got that chance Wednesday night, and the matchup turned out as they hoped — a well-pitched game.

Both went seven solid innings, but Harden pitched the Oakland Athletics to a 2-1 victory over Bonderman and

"It was great, because we've been looking forward to this for a long time," Harden said.

the Detroit Tigers.

Harden (2-2) won his second start in a row, giving up seven hits and strik-ing out eight in helping the A's to their season-high third straight win.

"Obviously, that's a great game by Harden," said Oakland manager Ken Macha. "They got the leadoff man on in four of the first five innings, but he only gave up one run, so you could see he was pitching his way out of trouble.'

Arthur Rhodes pitched a perfect ninth for his seventh save and first appearance since last Friday. He had been bothered by tendinitis in his non-pitching shoulder.

"He was throwing strikes, and they

Kielty drove him in with a fly to right. Bonderman (3-2) lost for the first time in three tries against his former team. He allowed two runs on four hits and five walks in seven innings.

Oakland only had one runner in scoring position in the first four inat took the lead in the fifth on Adam Melhuse's leadoff homer.

Detroit tied it in the bottom half. Omar Infante walked, took second on Alex Sanchez's bunt single and moved to third on a sacrifice bunt. He scored when Ivan Rodriguez's single went off Mark McLemore's glove.

The Tigers missed several good early scoring chances. In the first inning, the first three batters reached base, but Sanchez was caught stealing and Harden escaped.
In the third, Detroit had runners on the corners with one out, but Harden struck out Rodriguez and Rondell White flied out.

"That at-bat by Rodriguez was huge," Macha said. "He started him with a fastball, then a slider, then struck him out with a tremendous split.

Body scanner for custom clothes shines light on future of textiles

Associated Press

NEWS

CARY, N.C. - A five-bynine foot box that resembles a small recording studio may symbolize the future of the troubled American textile industry.

The machine — a digital scanner that can register more than 200,000 data points on the body - generates patterns for custom-made clothing that is faster and cheaper to make than any that could be turned out by a Hong Kong tailor.

Developed by TC2, a Cary firm funded by the textile apparel industry and taxpayers, the machine offers hope for an industry that has been devastated by free trade and lower overseas labor costs.

The idea behind the body scanner is to condition consumers to expect custom-fitted clothing delivered fast and cheaply — something that could make American-based apparel manufacturers more competitive with overseas manufacturers who are less equipped to respond quickly to American fashion

"We're really providing value to the industry by showing them how to cut down that product development time," said Jim Lovejoy, director of industry programs at TC2. "We asked our board, I think it was about three years ago now, 'What can we do to help your business? What would be the key thing?'

"They said, 'Help us get products to the market quicker." Just making clothes isn't enough anymore, said Charles Estes, director of the traditional industries program at Georgia

"The companies are going to have to get the right product with the customer specifications to them in a timely manner," Estes said. "I think the supply chain concepts are beginning to be more important to the textile industries than they have been in

The flagship store of the Brooks Brothers men's clothing chain on New York's Madison Avenue has had an older, larger version of the TC2 scanner for 2 1/2 years now.

According to Rich Honiball, head of special orders for the company, "thousands of units" have been sold, including suits and dress shirts.

"When it first came out there was a high amount of publicity for the digital tailoring," he said. "We saw a two-to-three month tremendous spike. Now, we're building it from season to season through word of mouth. But overall I'd say we're pleased."

Honiball said digital suit measurements from the scanner in New York are sent electronically to a plant in Lawrence, Mass., which makes the suits and ships them back to the store, usually within 15 business days. He said the store is examining ways to further speed the process.

Shirts made with measurements taken by the scanner are made at a factory and usually arrive back at the store within 10 business days. Honiball said. In TC2's current, fourth-generation body scanner, four strategically placed cameras register data points. That information is fed into measurement software that spits out 200 accurate body measurements in less than a minute. The measurements can be applied directly to a clothing showing consumers how the clothes will fit.

Brooks Brothers considers ordering more of the scanners, a Searcy, Ark.-based company called BenchMark Clothiers already has bought one and has 11 more on order. BenchMark plans to lease the scanners to high-end men's clothing stores in the Carolinas and the rest of the East Coast. Neil Allen, BenchMark's regional sales representative for the Southeast, said the idea is to provide consumers with a custom-made suit at the same price as an off-the-rack suit in the $400 to $750 range. Current scanner models are smaller than ever, to take up as little room as possible on a retail

"It's just basically taking a lot of the guesswork out of tailor-ing," Allen said. "If you go to a tailor, they have to get used to gets it right all of the time.

TC2 was founded in 1981 by companies from the textile and apparel industry with the intent of pushing research and development in the fields.

The company is funded in part by an annual, renewable, $2.7 million grant from the U.S. Commerce Department.

The push to marry apparel and the digital age is coming from retailers like Brooks Brothers, Levi Strauss and J.C. Penney, who all belong to the organization.

"We're looking at more information systems, technologies and things like that rather than trying to save the jobs here," Lovejoy said. "What we think is going to stay here, obviously the marketing and the advertising and there is good reason to think the product development will at least start here.
