Interns gain job skills

Counselors suggest searches begin early

BY CHRISTINE BARKER Daily Staff Write

Finding a job after college is sometimes a bigger task than earning your degree, but some colleges require students to complete internships during their education so they have a better chance of employment after they graduate.

Not every college within San Jose State University requires an internship for graduation credit, said Theresa Lawhead, a career consultant at the Career Center. Many offer an internship class students can take for credit toward units

"Start early," Lawhead said. "Many students start looking during their last two semesters, and by then, it's kind of too late.

Preparation for applying for an internship should start with "a concise and presentable resume, said Terry Christensen, internship director for the political science department. "Do some research on your potential placement before you interview."

Companies such as Applied IBM, Infineon Materials, Technologies, Lamb Research, NUMMI, PG&E and Target look for interns from SJSU, Lawhead said

To find and complete a successful internship, Lawhead suggests an internship with "experience related to your major.

Companies look for interns with strong written and verbal communication skills, as well as people with academic integrity, Lawhead said

Although an internship can be an important stepping stone toward a future career, "The percent-age hired is small," Christensen said. "Most of our internships are for the learning experience and resume building.

Christensen added that most internships available, at least in the political science department, are unpaid.

B.J. Grosvenor, undergraduate coordinator for the recreation and leisure studies department, said, "We have a high success rate for job placement, around 80 percent employment.'

'Do not wait until the last minute," Grosvenor said.

Spartan Gym makeover nears completion date

BY ILBRA BEITPOLOUS

The Spartan Gymnasium's renovation continues as many student-athletes eagerly await being able to utilize their new facility. The main entrance doors are sealed with blue tape, deeming the gym off limits The facility is inside Yoshihiro Uchida Hall. which is located next to the Spartan Complex and is home to the women's gymnastics and volleyball teams.

The arena has been closed since June due to reconstruction of the existing facility. Craig Choate, head coach of the volleyball team, said the remodeling includes new floor-

A.S. hopes to make noise

Amplified events could be longer

BY RACHEL HILL

In an effort to increase student interaction, the members of Associated Students are seeking to extend the time allowance noise levels for on-campus activities.

A.S. will seek approval this semester from the academic senate to allow students more time for events that require amplified sound.

Presently, San Jose State University permits amplified sound only between noon and 1 p.m. at the amphitheater outside the Student Union, said Alberto Gutierrez, A.S. president. Many see the one-hour time frame for events or artists performances as limiting students' accessibility and student interaction.

A.S. is proposing that the university increase the time allotment by 60 minutes or more.

'Right now, we are really pushing for the afternoon extension of noon to 2 p.m.," Gutierrez said. We are trying to find a middle ground that everyone is okay with and is tolerable.

If students have class at noon and 1:15 p.m., Gutierrez said when they get out of class, they've missed the entire program.

Many facility members who work near the amphitheater are leery about the time increase, citing that the noise levels for events. such as concerts, are disruptive and bothersome

Sally Veregge, current Academic Senate chair, said extending the higher than normal noise level will present some issues.

"The main concern is that the noise level does not interfere with instruction," Veregge wrote in an mail. "A key to successful policy is likely finding an outdoor space on campus where a high noise level is not disruptive to classes.

With all the different hurdles, Gutierrez said, it will probably take a year before students see the time extension take effect, if it approved. 'Ideally, my goal would be to have this in place by next year," he said. Increasing the time allowance requires the university to modify its time, place and manner regulations, which were established as a presidential directive, former Academic Senate Chair Annette Nellen said.

"I think it is a great idea that they are taking looking at it (time, place and manner policy)," Nellen said. "Several of us have said it is more restrictive than needs be. It's time to look at it

Nellen said she has heard students complain that it limits the type of activities they can do and in effect hinders student life.

Veregge said she supports the idea of extending the time frame for amplified events.

Add deadline extended

Daily Staff Report

Registered students who need to add a class will have nearly an extra week to do so without being charged a fee, campus leaders announced Monday.

The new deadline for adding class without being charged a late fee is Monday, Sept. 19, said Shawn Bibb, interim associate vice president for administrative systems and finances at San Jose State University

After the 19th, students with extenuating circumstances can still manually add a class through the Student Services Center with a one-time $25 fee, Bibb said. After Sept. 23, students wanting to add classes will have to pay a $150 fee, he said.

drop deadline to today, said Joel Bridgeman, A.S. director of student rights and responsibilities.

"In light of the drop deadline being moved, (administrators) listened to our concerns," Bridgeman said.

A.S. President Alberto Gutierrez said that with the add and drop deadlines being the same day, stu-dents wouldn't have enough time to do both actions.

"(The administrators) all agreed and were happy to extend the add deadline," Gutierrez said.

Bridgeman said he campus administration did a great job listening to the A.S. directors' concerns.

'All the (vice presidents), administration and a lot of faculty members have been really pro-ac tive and supportive of changing the date to be more student friendly. especially (SJSU President) Don Kassing," Bridgeman said.

Bay Area, such as San Francisco State University.

Priyanka Tiruvuri, a junior majoring in electrical engineering, said she'd like to get an internship for "good experience and communication skills." She said that many of her friends had just completed their internships over the summer

The Career Center at SJSU holds workshops about internships, and SPARTAjobs from the Career Center Web site has lists of jobs exclusively for SJSU students, Lawhead said.

An internship is the job before the real work begins and according to the department of aviation and technology's Web site, "An internship is not usually easy, as it involves a rapid learning curve and adjustment to a work environment, 'as well as many hours of work, but it is, for many students, the best single learning experience of their college careers."

ing, new windows, new ceiling and roofing, a thorough paint job and a brand-new sound system, as well as scoreboards.

Prior to renovation, the volleyball team held their matches in the Event Center, Choate said.

Now, the volleyball and gymnastics teams will have a smaller and more appealing venue to host their competitions in, he said.

Wayne Wright, the gymnastics team's head coach, said the volleyball team is most affected by the renovations prolonged date of completion.

Choate said that his team doesn't practice in the Spartan gym currently, and they hope the project will be completed by the date of the first home match.

The team is scheduled to play the University of Idaho on Sept. 22 at home.

The gymnastics team practices on the second floor, so the construction does not disturb its scheduled daily meetings either.

The renovation continuing doesn't affect us at all, it's our competition facility and it's a great benefit," Wright said.

Sept. 23 is the university's census date, when all of the enrolled students are counted and SJSU can receive a proportional amount of funds from the state, Bibb said. The $150 fee is to cover some of the funds the university will not receive because of students not officially enrolled in classes when the census is taken.

Bibb warned that some students may be charged $25 even before the Sept. 19 date.

"If you aren't registered for anything, then you will be charged the $25," he said.

Students who registered before the first day of classes and who are shuffling their schedules can add classes up to Sept. 19 without any late fees, Bibb said.

The add deadline extension came about when Associated Students met with campus officials after the university extended the

JESTER ALONE Hollywood continues to devour classic films to sustain life

Hollywood has set out to destroy another classic film.

It seems Japanese director Akira Kurosawa's 1952 classic "Ikiru" is in need of a face-lift, and the primary surgeon is scheduled to be none other than Tom Hanks

"Ikiru" is the story of a bureaucrat bearing the name of the title in post-war Japan who finds out he's terminally ill with stomach cancer. After 30 years of working an empty job and living a life full of disappointments, Ikiru determines to drink himself to death and put an end to his wasted life.

Powerfully captured through many static, deep focused camera shots set on the protagonist's gentle and articulate face, the story centers on how the knowledge of his cancer forces him to tangle with issues he'd never before grappled.

During a solemn night of drinking, Ikiru meets a writer who tries to breathe some life into his dying body by taking him out on the city to experience the p st-war debauchery that permeated the culture during the era. Ikiru is left feeling even more despondent and reclusive after coming to the conclusion that the meaning of life is not found through the embrace of decadence

Ikiru finally meets a young girl whose youthful vi- was not arbitrary. There is a significance attached to vacity inspires him. The story turns to the idea of redemption as Ikiru tries to make up for his life built on nothing by leaving a legacy for future generations is a concise, coiled snake of a film that shouldn't be trifled with. The subtleties that underlie the plot are a harsh criticism of the western-imposed 'modernization" that turned Japanese politics and culture on its head after WWII. The democratization of the civil service, in which the protagonist is employed, created an atmosphere ripe with crushing indifference, where problems could be passed from bureau to bureau with the pound of a stamp accomplishing nothing There is something tongue and cheek about translating the failed allied reforms in post-war Japan into an American film, but the humor isn't enough to sway my opinion that "Ikiru" should not be remade, only re-released. Other nuances of the film will also be lost in translation.

Asking the oblique and unanswerable question, "What does death impose on life?," "Ikiru"

The decision to give lkiru cancer of the stomach

the stomach in Japan similar to what we in the West attach to the heart. Not only is it a vital organ, but it is a symbol of character. It is the reason why samurai warriors would disembowel themselves when disgraced rather than puncture their hearts.

Thereby, Ikiru's illness is the manifestation of his diseased values. Actually, it is Kurosawa's criticism of the diseased values of all faceless bureaucrats burying themselves in paperwork.

Also, during the 1950s there was a fear of the cancer causing radiation floating around from the fallout of the nuclear bombs dropped on Japan only a few years earlier.

CLARK This played a large part in shaping Japan's collective psyche during the time. The salience of this issue is also a large player in the film. It is interesting to see how Kurosawa slips all of these underlying themes into "Ikiru."

Perhaps the most interesting part of the film is the ck of grief Ikiru expresses about his looming death. He is obviously distressed and affected, but not in the melodramatic way one would expect from a movie. The audience is not inundated with the gushing an-

It is not here to censor student opinion, nor water

Recently, the Daily has received a lot of feed-guish and bitter remorse of a failed man, but shown without pretense a delicately optimistic final attempt at life. I would be very surprised if Tom Hanks could pull off playing Ikiru without pulling on the heartstrings of the audience, eliciting little whimpers from certain members.

It seems the only flaw of "Ikiru," and surely the reason it is being remade, is that it is in Japanese and American audiences don't like to read movies.

And, for similar reasons, Ikiru is not the first Kurosawa film has been remade. "The Seven Samurai" was adapted into the western "The Magnificent Seven," and "Yojimbo" was first turned into the original spaghetti western "A Fistful of Dollars" and later mutated into the 1996 Bruce Willis gangster vehicle The Last Man Standing.

The saddest part of the "Ikiru" remake is that I will probably enjoy the film. That doesn't mean, however, that when as I leave the theater and look at all the popcorn stuck in my teeth in the mirror, I won't feel slightly cheated by the snake oil Hollywood producers who sold me the same thing twice.

Spartan pride lasts long after graduation

I would like to second Ryan Balbuena's opinion on going to Spartan sporting events. I had a great four years at SJSU, and other than a few stories about Kamakaze parties, most of my memorable moments were at sporting events.

There is nothing better that driving up 680 on the way to Stanford and seeing signs hanging from the overpasses saying "GO SPARTANS." Then, despite being out-numbered six to one in the crowd, yelling twice as loud as we hang on to beat a John Elway led Stanford team 35-31, and not being able to talk until Tuesday

There is nothing better than having you roommate cause a fumble that leads to a touchdown and two-point conversion for an 18-17 victory over Fresno State. Or traveling to a Fresno game, going into their dorms and writing GO SPARTANS on all the boards hanging from the doors.

There is nothing better than getting in line for standing-room tickets at 7 a.m. for a basketball game against No. 1 ranked UNLV. Or buying a whole section of tickets for a game against Fresno State and beating them 84-80 in double overtime.

There is absolutely nothing better than being down 10 to Fresno State with less than two minutes remaining and scoring a touchdown, recovering an onside kick and scoring again to win 45-41. After graduating, there is nothing better than driving to Vegas and being one of the 12 people in blue and gold at the Shark Tank, getting up by a score of 4-2 and talking smack. It doesn't matter that five minutes later we were down 20-4. The Vegas fans respect you and buy you beer.

After moving to Indianapolis, there is nothing better than driving to see the Spartans play defending Big Ten Champions Illinois. Then almost passing out from yelling as they kick a field to win on the last play of the game.

So while the main reason for going to college is to get a degree, going to sporting events is a part of the experience. So take a little break from the books and attend a sporting event. You might find out there is nothing better.

this way, these events can support more interaction and build a greater sense of campus community," Veregge said.

Gutierrez also seeks to add more locations on campus were amplified sound will be permitted, which he said is only allowed in one location on campus now.

"When we asked about this originally, the reason you can't have amplified sound in other areas is because you have classrooms in those areas," Gutierrez said. "But when you think about it, the Art building is right by the amphitheater." Some of the prospective areas suggested include the Campus Village quad and the Paseo de Cesar Chavez.

The idea to change the time allowance spawned during Gutierrez's election campaigning last semester.

"During the elections we asked student organizations and students what are some things that (they) wanted changed and we kept hearing 'more programs, more activities, it's so limited,' " Gutierrez said. He also said an officer from another student organization approached him and brought up in the sense that there will be more the idea about changing the time, place and manner policy to add more time for student affairs.

Associated Students hopes by extending the noise level's time allotment, more students can attend events, like concerts, and therefore increase interaction among students. Gutierrez said that during his three-year experience as a resident adviser, many students become disenchanted by the SJSU's lack of activities after the initial weeks of school have passed, and they are left with few things to participate in.

"It will create more campus life programs going on possibly at the same time. ... Part of keeping that energy (from Welcome Week) going is consistent programming and having more options, and not just in the amphitheater," Gutierrez said. "There will be more participation in the events and programs if the time is extended."

Opposition to the time extension may come from professors who feel the added noise will disturb their classes

Nellen said the noise can be distracting in her Business Tower office. When the band plays, it's hard for me to hear the person on the phone," Nellen said.

Nellen said she could see professors objecting to the time increase based on distraction or lack of warning.

Robert Milnes, art department chair, said he thinks the noise level time extension for the amphitheater could hinder instruction in the Art building.

"The problem is that people monitor the sound occasionally. The sound echoes through the three surrounding buildings," Milnes said.

Milnes is not opposed to the idea entirely, but says that when the noon concerts are under control, then they are great events.

"If it is adequately monitored and if the sound level is low, then it doesn't really matter," Milnes said. "But often times, that's not the case because bands don't like it, and as soon as they have the opportunity, they turn it up."

Milnes said alternative events could be staged on campus to attract students, and jokingly suggested hotrod races.

"They (on campus events) should not become the dominant part of the campus life because campus life sooner or later is about what happens in the classroom,' Milnes said.

Basketball classes are normally held in the Spartan Gym through out the semester.

The courses have been relocated in the Event Center's mini gymnasium, which is on the lower level of the fitness center.

Remi Fatoke, an Event Center supervisor, said, "The classes don't occupy the basketball courts for too long. On average, maybe two or three hours a day.

According to Event Center staff. some course instructors understand the circumstances and allow students outside of their classes to share the basketball courts

Fatoke said, "We haven't heard anything about how long they will be here, but they are not an inconvenience at all."

Kelly Elliot, the senior associate athletics director, said the projects funding was established and provided by IRA, which are student fees that are collected to better campus life

In this case, said Elliot, the funding supports athletic programs and sports maintenance, said Elliot.

This is Siracusa's and assistant coach Doug Hastings' second season coaching for the SJSU's women's soccer team.

Amy Apodaca, is also helping the women's soccer team.

She is a three-time, first-team all-American and is a volunteer assistant coach for the women's soccer team.

This fall is her first season with the team but has experience coaching for Sonoma State University, California High School, Granada High School and U-18 Tri-Valley Roadrunners of the Mustang Soccer Club.
