The Extra Push---

Although everyone on-campus is really pitching in these days and doing a bang up job in war work, the campaign being sponsored this week by the inter-society council, to encourage its members to put in "extra" hours at the college Red Cross unit, is still worthy of commendation.

This group's activities are especially deserving of mention, because the eight societies that make up the council, normally function as social groups. However, the real cheering should be reserved until the drive is over, for good intentions alone have no powers of accomplishment.

As has been pointed out before, the success of this drive will rend on the individual's sense of responsibility and action. Non sorority co-eds are also asked to participate in contributing extra hours of sewing for the Red Cross.

You have until 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon; so torget your excuses, gals . . . because one of the best traditions San Jose State college ever had, is its war-time record of going over the top in every campaign.
