MESSAGE FROM BOARD CHAIR & CEO

With skyrocketing health costs and the number of the state’s uninsured rising to 20 percent of its population, California finds itself grappling with a full-blown health care crisis. As resolving this takes the front seat of public debate, The California Wellness Foundation (TCWF) continues to make improving the health of the state’s underserved our mission.

Our approach is a responsive grantmaking strategy — approved by the Foundation’s Board of Directors in December 2000 — that concentrates on the following health issues: diversity in the health professions; environmental health; healthy aging; mental health; teenage pregnancy prevention; violence prevention; women’s health, and work and health. In addition, the Foundation continues to maintain a special projects fund to respond to opportunities within the scope of our mission but that fall outside the prioritized health issues. The past year was productive, with staff reviewing 1,405 letters of interest and the Board approving 409 grants totaling nearly $53 million.

Grantmaking Highlights

In 2006, grants that addressed the health needs of underserved populations underwrote a wide range of health services. Many of these grants support community clinics and health centers, public hospitals and clinic consortia — the health care safety net that represents the only option for accessing health care for many of the state’s 6.4 million people living in poverty. Other grants fund programs that provide health-related education and disease prevention activities for isolated populations such as recent immigrants, farmworkers and vulnerable youth.

Grants were made to support and strengthen nonprofit organizations — typically in the form of core operating support. Among Board-approved TCWF grants awarded in the past year, more than 60 percent were for core operating support, which goes toward underwriting an organization’s ongoing operational costs — including rent, salaries and uncompensated services — and for strengthening infrastructure.

CONTINUED

The year also marked TCWF's 14th annual California Peace Prize, established to publicly recognize the leadership of three "unsung heroes" working to prevent violence and promote peace in California communities; the fourth annual Champions of Health Professions Diversity Award, honoring leaders who have a significant track record of working to increase diversity in California's health workforce; the 2006 Public Policy Leadership Award, given to three departing public officials who have championed policies that improve the health of underserved Californians; and the fourth annual Sabbatical Award, providing rest and rejuvenation for health-focused nonprofit executives. The Foundation's communications team developed a media rollout to announce the honorees of each leadership recognition program. By using strategic communications to bring greater attention to the work of the honorees, we have been able to strengthen their positions as spokespersons on health promotion, wellness education and disease prevention issues.

Grants to nonprofits that focus on advancing public policies that improve the health of Californians are an important emphasis of the Foundation. Grantees have tackled policy change with a diverse range of approaches — from raising awareness about new issues and solutions through research and analysis; to promoting those ideas through advocacy, grassroots organizing, policy analysis and public education; and, once policies are adopted, conducting oversight activities to ensure their effective implementation.

While most of our grants are the result of unsolicited letters of interest, we also use a Foundation-initiated approach, as needed. One such example is a grant made to Field Research Corporation to conduct a public opinion poll on the views of California voters about the health care system and proposed reforms. The survey was administered and analyzed late in the year, with results released the first week of January 2007 — to a lot of media attention. The results revealed a sense of foreboding about the future: The majority of voters surveyed believe the health care system will be worse in five years and worry that they may not be able to pay for a major illness or injury (77%); and are concerned that employers will cut back on the amount they contribute for health care (75%). When asked about policy options, 81% of voters believe that it should be government policy for all Californians to have access to affordable health care insurance — with a shared mandate among employers, government and individuals favored by the majority of respondents. Survey results also revealed that almost 60% believe that reducing the number of uninsured Californians should be lawmakers' top priority, with 86% of respondents believing that the number of community health clinics that provide access to basic health care services should be increased. The results have proved useful for health advocates and policymakers that are engaged in the state's health care reform debate.

Another Foundation-initiated effort is the launch of TCWF's public education campaign that promotes the benefits of increasing diversity in the California health care workforce. The campaign, funded as a grant to Ogilvy Public Relations Worldwide, was launched during the past year. It featured the release of a white paper to policymakers, titled “Developing the California Health Care Workforce of Tomorrow,” that outlines the changing demographics in the state, the need for a workforce that more accurately reflects the population, and some recommended solutions. The campaign also saw the release of a comprehensive, one-stop shopping website, www.makeitinscrubs.com, for young people in California interested in pursuing health careers. Since its launch in July, the site has received almost 800,000 hits — largely the result of radio, print and Internet advertising geared toward underrepresented ethnic minority young people in California.

“The campaign also saw the release of a comprehensive, one-stop shopping website, www.makeitinscrubs.com, for young people in California interested in pursuing health careers.”

We encourage you to read the Grantmaking Program section for a detailed description of our grants program and to review the Grants List section for a comprehensive listing of the past year’s grants.

The Cover Story

In addition to our primary role as that of grantmaker, we have also found bringing together grantees and others committed to addressing specific health issues to be a worthwhile endeavor. Why? Because convening nonprofit providers, advocates, researchers, policymakers and others from diverse sectors can build skills, develop knowledge and facilitate the discovery of unexpected allies. How this practice has added value to our grantmaking is the theme of the cover story.

Since its early days, the Foundation has engaged in providing conference opportunities for its grantees. We have learned many things along the way. Among them, no matter how expert the Foundation may view itself on a given health issue, it is the organizations we fund — working day in and day out on the complex health problems our grantmaking program addresses — that are the true authorities. While we serve as host of TCWF conferences, the Foundation puts the grantees front and center as plenary and workshop speakers. Evaluation results indicate that this peer-to-peer learning approach is highly valued by grantees. Grantees have also identified the opportunities to reflect on their work — and network with others from around the state who address similar issues — as experiences that reap rewards well beyond the duration of the conference. Grantees also appreciate being exposed to policymakers who are committed to championing health issues that they care about, and policymakers have expressed how vital it is to their work to hear the perspectives of community-based providers and advocates.

We believe convening grantees and other strategic audiences is a powerful way to leverage the Foundation’s resources. We hope you will find the following story informative and useful.

Sincerely,

Peggy Saika, Chair

ADDING VALUE
BY CONVENING
GRANTEES

“Complex problems
need diverse approaches. That is why it is so valuable to gather and engage all the different stakeholders ...”

ADDING VALUE BY CONVENING GRANTEES

At The California Wellness Foundation (TCWF), there is more to health philanthropy than being a funder. While we see our primary role as that of a grantmaker, we have also found that bringing together grantees and others committed to addressing specific health issues is an effort that adds value. Why? Because convening nonprofit direct service providers, advocates, researchers, policymakers and others from diverse sectors can build skills, develop knowledge and facilitate the discovery of unexpected allies in the effort to improve the health of underserved Californians.

Conferences in Our Previous Initiative Era

Since the early days, when large and complex grantmaking initiatives were the focus at TCWF, we have engaged in providing conference opportunities for grantees. Our first conference was held for grantees of the Violence Prevention Initiative (VPI), launched in 1992 when gun violence had become the number-one killer of California youth. The 10-year, $60 million grantmaking program included components for research, public policy, leadership and community action.

Attended by former gang members, law enforcement officials, clergy, physicians, community activists, policy advocates and researchers, the first VPI gathering of grantees was a tense affair indeed. These individuals — from different communities, sectors of work and life experiences — were mandated by the Foundation to participate in the conference. They each advocated starkly different views and approaches to treat the epidemic of violence. By the end of the conference, we worried that the collaborative and interactive efforts envisioned and incorporated into the design of the VPI might never be realized.

But as the work of the VPI unfolded, the conferences and other related gatherings became an important mechanism for developing and strengthening relationships among grantees and for providing opportunities to exchange experiences and ideas. By participating in VPI conferences and other related forums, grantees were able to forge a public health framework for understanding violence against youth that went beyond enforcement to address root causes. This framework provided the common language used in their work. The annual two-day conference was integral to developing a sense among grantees that they were part of an emerging youth violence prevention movement that saw the reduction — by half — of youth killed by gun violence at the end of the 10-year Initiative.

Adding Value to Our Grantmaking

Across all of TCWF's initiatives, the annual conferences stood out among the programs' many moving parts as a potent (yet simple) strategy to build synergy and commitment among grantees. For this reason, we decided to continue having conferences after the Board approved a new philanthropic strategy in 2000. This new program “Complex problems need diverse approaches. That is why it is so valuable to gather and engage all the different stakeholders, including policymakers, in dialogue about prevention and early intervention strategies, which are key to the public health approach,” said Secretary Kim Belshé of the California Health and Human Services Agency at a TCWF statewide satellite videoconference. While TCWF typically hosts face-to-face conferences, those utilizing electronic networking technologies, such as videoconferencing, have also played an important role.

Merris Obie, a Native American from the Hoopa Valley Tribe in Northern California, was a VPI grantee from 1995 to 1997. Of her first experience at a VPI gathering, Obie remembers walking in and being struck by the different cultures represented. Then, as the meeting progressed, she began to hear of the same issues and problems in very different communities. At that point, Obie said, “It became a family, a bonding started occurring and continues to this day.”

An evaluation of TCWF's Responsive Grantmaking Program by Harder + Company Community Research found that participants of the Foundation's conferences praised the activities as "highly beneficial."

balanced proactivity with a more responsive grantmaking approach, featuring a majority of grants made for core operating support, in response to unsolicited letters of interest.

We consider the conference activity an added value to our grantmaking. The Foundation leverages its role in the philanthropic world to provide grantees with exposure to policymakers and others committed to the same health issues they address from across sectors — including direct service providers, researchers and advocates. Typically, TCWF conferences are handled by organizations that receive a grant to coordinate the logistics — such as securing a conference venue, printing and mailing of invitations, etc. — and also provide support on the development of conference content that often includes coordinating a grantee-based planning committee. These organizations also coordinate the disbursement of travel stipends to participants.

Although grantee participation in the conferences is no longer mandated as part of the grant agreement, attendance is still typically filled to capacity. While the inherent power of the Foundation-as-funder may compel attendance by some, grantees have told us in anonymous post-conference evaluations that they enjoy attending for a range of reasons — among them, to find opportunities to network, learn, reflect and become energized.

Networking

In the philanthropic world, we talk a lot about networking. During our initiative era, TCWF conferences brought face to face those funded to create complex statewide networks. Now, expressive of our Responsive Grantmaking Program, we bring together grantees and build time into the conference agenda for interaction that is more informal in nature.

While all invitees to a TCWF conference are typically working on the same general health issue, the conference brings together individuals who might not otherwise have connected. Some have found it useful to maintain those connections beyond the duration of the conference. For example, grantees advocating for fair work and health policies have found those who provide clinical services to low-income workers to be compelling allies in their policy advocacy efforts. Direct service and advocacy grantees have found that incorporating the findings of research grantees can enhance fundraising and policy efforts. Through these examples and others, we have learned that being a neutral convener has a positive influence all of its own. By creating an environment that is stimulating and safe for expressing differences of opinion, we allow informal networks and cooperative communication to emerge among grantees organically, based on their shared missions and goals.

Learning

While we serve as host of TCWF conferences, the Foundation puts the grantees front and center as plenary and workshop speakers. These peer-to-peer learning experiences — including in-depth policy analysis, experiences with model service delivery programs and best practices, and opportunities

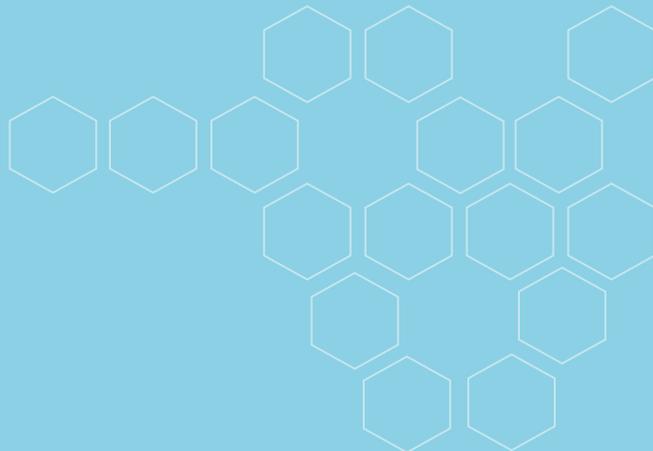

“A kind of informal network started at TCWF’s conference among some of us from the Bay Area that work on diversity in the health professions issues,” said John Gamboa, executive director of the Greenlining Institute. “We realized that we could be more effective if we met regularly. So we formed a collaborative, which has been helpful in identifying areas where we can maximize our impact by working together.”

“We’ve learned so much from the annual conference,” said grantee Otilio Quintero, assistant director of Santa Cruz Barrios Unidos and recipient of TCWF’s California Peace Prize. “For example, some partnerships with law enforcement have been successful for those who work with struggling youth like ours in other cities.”

to build skills — are often more lasting when the learning moment is inspired by another grantee that is deeply entrenched in the very same issues as the participants. Evaluation results indicate that this peer-to-peer learning approach is highly valued by conference participants.

The Foundation also provides learning opportunities by exposing grantees to policymakers. Examples include keynote addresses by public officials who have spearheaded efforts to create policies to improve the health of underserved Californians, and opportunities to network with policymakers at receptions and recognition events such as TCWF's Public Policy Leadership Award, which honors departing legislators and state officeholders who have shown extraordinary leadership in the health policy arena.

Reflect

Some participants at TCWF events describe convening with like-minded people from across the state to be valuable as opportunities to reflect and “see the big picture.” It is only natural for nonprofit health professionals to sometimes wonder if they are making a difference when they deal daily with long lines of clients waiting for care or inch forward on the advocacy front in the often slow fight to improve health policies that serve California's poor and disenfranchised. TCWF events are designed to give participants a chance to step back and recognize that, as a community of people dedicated to effecting change on a given health issue, they are making a difference.

In October 2006, TCWF held a conference on transition-age youth in Los Angeles. The conference brought together 130 representatives of nonprofit organizations working with, or advocating on behalf of, runaway and homeless youth or youth who are exiting from or have exited foster care.

“At least here in Hollywood, we often find the youth that need shelter have run away or exited from the foster care system,” said Jack Gonzalez, program director of Los Angeles Youth Network, a homeless and runaway youth shelter. “So, I was glad to see that The [California Wellness] Foundation had the insight to put the homeless and runaway youth providers in the same room with the foster care people. Those of us working with high-risk youth have got to stick together because these youth don’t get near enough attention.”

Some conference participants commented that they appreciated being briefed on the latest policy trends and meeting the keynote speaker, California State Assemblywoman Karen Bass. Bass has been leading policymaking efforts to improve the state’s foster care system, including the treatment of emancipating foster youth.

Some health issues addressed by TCWF, such as work and health and diversity in the health professions, are not well-defined, recognized fields. In such cases, the conference can be useful in helping grantees reflect on their work within a broader context so they can begin to recognize that they are not alone in their efforts and may, in fact, be part of an emerging field.

Become Energized

Conferences allow participants to celebrate victories, a process that can help grantees become energized. Victories provide reinforcement and build confidence among participants. There is a quality to celebration that is spiritually fortifying — an asset in the work to address deeply entrenched health issues.

Conferences also provide an opportunity to recognize and celebrate leadership — a strategy important to ensuring continuity and expansion of such skills within underserved California communities. By situating the leadership recognition programs within the conference context, it allows the honorees' experiences to be shared. This process can inspire and enhance the collective impact of participants who identify with the honorees. The Foundation's leadership recognition awards are: the California Peace Prize, established to publicly recognize the leadership of three "unsung heroes" working to prevent violence and promote peace in California communities; the Champions of Health Professions Diversity Award, honoring leaders who have a significant track record of working to increase diversity in California's health workforce; the Public Policy Leadership Award, given to three departing public officials who have championed policies that improve the health of underserved Californians; and the Sabbatical Award, providing rest and rejuvenation for health-focused nonprofit executives.

Feedback

In the past five years, more than 2,300 grantees and others have participated in 26 TCWF conferences and related events. Overall, feedback on the Foundation's strategy of convening grantees has been overwhelmingly positive, with evaluations indicating that "networking" is the single most appreciated aspect of the conference followed by "opportunities to learn."

Conference evaluation surveys and other feedback mechanisms are important in order to ensure that the conferences are useful to participants and not cumbersome. We carefully consider the decision of whether or not to sponsor (or continue to sponsor) a conference. We do not want to duplicate other entities' efforts to convene nonprofit organizations.

Although the overall costs to host these events are not trivial, we are convinced that the benefits far outweigh the investment. A key benefit, from the Foundation's perspective, is to have the opportunity to thank our grantees for their work. After all, we could not fulfill our philanthropic mission of improving the health of the underserved in California without them.

“What The California Wellness Foundation is doing by recognizing the Champions of Health Professions Diversity honorees, is to highlight the work of these individuals whose mission is really overcoming the inequality of access to opportunity that the barriers of race, ethnicity and class can be,” said Deborah Ortiz, former California state senator in her keynote address at a TCWF increasing diversity in the health professions conference. “We are able to celebrate their commitment to overcoming obstacles because, as people, they know from the bottom of their souls about the need to give back and help someone else.”

GRANTMAKING

“Core operating support can be used to help underwrite the regular, ongoing health care, health promotion and disease prevention activities of your organization.”

GRANTMAKING PROGRAM

The Foundation prioritizes eight health issues for funding and responds to timely issues or special projects outside the funding priorities. We encourage requests for core operating support, but requests for project funding are also welcome. Core operating support can be used to help underwrite the regular, ongoing health care, health promotion and disease prevention activities of your organization. Such funds can be used for ongoing organizational costs such as salaries for key administrative staff or operating expenses. Core support funds can also be used for strengthening organizational capacity through activities such as engaging in strategic planning, facilitating board development or developing information systems.

Each prioritized health issue is described below. For a list of recent grants and future updates, please visit our website at www.tcdf.org or call the Foundation to request a copy of our newsletter, Portfolio or Information for Grantseekers brochure.

Diversity in the Health Professions

Grants that address the issue of diversity in the health professions are commonly given to organizations that provide pipeline programs, scholarships, outreach and retention programs, internships, fellowships and loan repayment programs for ethnic minorities that are underrepresented in the health professions.

The Foundation prioritizes eight health issues for funding and responds to timely issues or special projects outside the funding priorities.

Careers in medicine, nursing, public health and other allied health professions are included. Organizations that support leadership development for people of color in the health professions are also eligible for funding. In addition, the Foundation funds organizations that educate policymakers and advocate for public and institutional policies that promote diversity in the health professions.

Environmental Health

Grants that address the issue of environmental health are commonly given to organizations that provide environmental health education and awareness activities; community organizing to promote environmental health; screening and testing for exposure to environmental toxins; leadership development; and collaborations such as partnerships between public health departments and community-based health programs to improve environmental health. The Foundation also funds efforts to inform policymakers and advocate for policies that could improve environmental health among underserved populations.

Healthy Aging

Grants that address the issue of healthy aging are commonly given to organizations that provide clinical preventive services, falls prevention programs, food and nutrition programs and in-home support. Also funded are organizations that support relationships between youth and older adults through activities such as intergenerational volunteering and mentoring. In addition, the Foundation funds agencies that educate policymakers and advocate for policies that promote healthy aging, as well as organizations that provide leadership development programs for seniors.

Mental Health

Grants that address the issue of mental health are commonly given to organizations that provide services for transition-age youth (ages 16-23) — with a focus on those in, or exiting from, foster care and on runaway/homeless youth. In addition, the Foundation funds organizations that provide leadership development programs for mental health professionals, as well as organizations that inform policymakers and advocate for effective mental health programs and policies for transition-age youth.

Teenage Pregnancy Prevention

Grants that address the issue of teenage pregnancy prevention are commonly given to organizations that provide outreach activities for reproductive health care, access to contraceptive services, and comprehensive programs for pregnant teens. An emphasis is placed on funding peer-provider clinics and other reproductive health organizations that work with high-risk, sexually active, underserved teen populations. The Foundation also funds organizations that provide leadership development activities for reproductive health care workers and organizations that inform policymakers and opinion leaders about effective policies and programs to prevent teen pregnancy.

Violence Prevention

Grants that address the issue of violence prevention are commonly given to organizations that provide services for youth (ages 12–24) including mentoring programs, gang intervention programs, reentry programs, community-based violence prevention programs and after-school programs. An emphasis is placed on funding organizations that work with at-risk youth, including gang-affiliated and previously incarcerated youth. Grants are also made to organizations that provide leadership development activities to those working in the field of violence prevention, as well as organizations that inform policymakers and advocate for public policies that prevent violence against youth.

Women's Health

Grants that address the issue of women's health are commonly given to organizations that provide reproductive health care, prenatal care, community-based comprehensive health care services, HIV/AIDS programs for women of color, case management, and supportive housing for homeless women. Priority is given to organizations that create welcoming environments for women in underserved communities. The Foundation also funds organizations that provide leadership development activities for women and those that educate policymakers and advocate for effective policies and programs that promote women's health.

Work and Health

Grants that address the issue of work and health are commonly given to nonprofit organizations that provide health care services to farmworkers, in-home health workers, garment workers, day laborers and other low-income workers. Worker centers that provide culturally sensitive and linguistically appropriate services such as health education and access to health care for low-wage workers are also prioritized for funding. In addition, the Foundation funds organizations that provide leadership development programs for low-wage workers. Organizations that educate policymakers about the connections between work and health and advocate for policies that could improve the health of low-income workers are funded as well.

Special Projects

Each year, the Foundation sets aside a pool of dollars to respond in a timely fashion to opportunities that fit our mission but are outside the eight health issues prioritized for funding. The Foundation places an emphasis on grants to support and strengthen safety net providers of health care, to help low-income consumers understand and navigate the health care system, and to inform public decision making through policy analysis and advocacy. The Foundation also provides funding to address the health care needs of the Cal/Mex border population, the urban homeless, and culturally appropriate programs for underserved ethnic populations.

How To Apply for a Grant

Application Process

To present The California Wellness Foundation with a grant request, an organization should first write a one- to two-page letter of interest that describes the organization's mission, activities and operating budget, the region and population(s) served, the total funds requested from the Foundation and how the funds will be used. If you are requesting project funding, please include the project's goals, leadership and duration. Your letter will be processed most accurately if you clearly indicate the TCWF funding priority for which you want your request considered (for example, healthy aging, mental health). No application form is needed, and formal proposals are not accepted at this preliminary stage.

Foundation staff will review letters of interest on an ongoing basis and notify prospective applicants of the results normally within three months. Those encouraged to submit a proposal will receive further guidance at that time.

Eligibility Criteria

With rare exception, the Foundation funds nonprofit organizations that are exempt under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code and are deemed as "not a private foundation" under Section 509(a) or are public charities as defined in IRC Section 170(b)(A)(vi). The Foundation also funds government agencies. The Foundation does not fund Section 509(a)(3) Type III non-functionally integrated supporting organizations.

Grants are not generally awarded for annual fund drives, building campaigns, major equipment or biomedical research. Activities that exclusively benefit the members of sectarian or religious organizations are not considered. The Foundation does not provide international funding or fund organizations located outside the United States.

INTRODUCTION TO FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

The California Wellness Foundation's condensed statements of financial position and activities for the years ended December 31, 2006 and 2005 are presented in this section.

To present a clearer picture of the endowment balance available for charitable purposes, the Foundation has provided condensed financial statement information that departs from generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) in two ways. First, the accompanying condensed financial statements report only the statements of financial position on December 31, 2006 and 2005 and statements of activities for the years ended December 31, 2006 and 2005, and do not include statements of cash flow or the accompanying notes to financial statements. Second, the Foundation has captured under the term "investments," investments loaned under secured lending transactions, liabilities under investment loan agreements, investment sale receivables and investment purchases payable.

The Foundation's financial statements undergo an annual audit, which was performed by Bregante + Company LLP for the years ended December 31, 2006 and 2005. The Foundation's audited financial statements for the years ended December 31, 2006 and 2005 are presented in conformity with GAAP, and the auditor expressed an unqualified opinion on these financial statements. A copy of Bregante + Company's audit report dated March 19, 2007 may be viewed on the Foundation's website at www.tcdf.org.

Additional information about the Foundation can be found in its 2005 Form 990-PF, Return of Private Foundation, which is available by visiting www.tcdf.org in the "About the Foundation" section.

Financial Statements

Mission and Goals

The mission of The California Wellness Foundation is to improve the health of the people of California by making grants for health promotion, wellness education and disease prevention.

Guided by our mission, we pursue the following goals through our grantmaking:

- to address the particular health needs of traditionally underserved populations, including low-income individuals, people of color, youth and residents of rural areas;
- to support and strengthen nonprofit organizations that seek to improve the health of underserved populations;
- to recognize and encourage leaders who are working to increase health and wellness within their communities; and
- to inform the development of public policies that promote wellness and enhance access to preventive health care.
