dear friends of The California Endowment:

- Within California, an estimated 1.3 million low-income, ethnic minority children do not have health insurance – 75 percent of these are potentially eligible for Medi-Cal, yet do not receive it.
- One in five Americans has a mental health disorder; within California, 1.5 million residents need mental health assistance, but do not receive it.
- Thirty-two percent of male agricultural workers in California report never having been to a doctor's office or clinic in their lives; nearly one in five of them have at least two of three risk factors for chronic disease.

Statistics such as these help bring into focus the theme of our annual report: "Defining Multicultural Health." California is a place where more than 100 languages are spoken, and one out of every four Californians is foreign-born. Each person has a unique background, culture and perspective as it relates to her or his personal life and health. Each has a right to receive health care that acknowledges and is respectful of his or her unique culture and needs.

These statistics and perspectives underscore the importance of defining and developing a multicultural approach to health. And, during the fiscal year ended February 28, 2002, The California Endowment took significant steps to help adopt that approach in its work.

Our multicultural approach to health uses the talents, cultures and strengths of California's diverse populations to enhance the quality of our health systems and to better meet the varied health needs of our multicultural communities. As part of our approach, these diverse populations are not only defined by race and ethnicity, but also by age, gender, sexual orientation, geographic location, immigration status, and physical and mental abilities. Through this approach we seek to improve the quality of health systems and, thereby, the health of all California's communities.

To help provide a better definition of our work, in July of last year, with our Board of Directors' enthusiastic approval, we adopted a Strategic Framework that defined a set of programmatic priorities which included:

Access – Ensuring that every Californian receives quality health care.

Cultural Competency – Providing care that is understanding of and sensitive to different cultures, languages and needs.

Work Force Diversity – Helping to diversify the racial/ethnic composition of the health care work force so that it more accurately reflects those who receive care and in turn more effectively provides care.

Disparities in Health – Reducing the differences in health status and health care experienced by multicultural populations, and promoting health improvements at the community level.

We believe our four priorities help further a genuinely multicultural approach to health. Culturally competent health care is often overlooked, and that must change if we are to effectively treat those who may not share the same background, culture or language. Our health work force needs to more accurately reflect the state's diverse populations, which will in turn help improve access to care. We believe that utilizing the tremendous talents, cultures and resources of our communities will improve health at all levels. By reducing disparities in health and improving health and well-being, historically underserved populations are better able to make positive contributions to a dynamic and changing California in their communities.

A recent Institute of Medicine Report, "Unequal Treatment: Confronting Racial and Ethnic Disparities in Health," states: "Racial and ethnic minorities tend to receive a lower quality of health care than nonminorities, even when access-related factors, such as a patient's insurance status and income, are controlled." Findings such as these are further substantiated when one considers that language barriers have been shown to be associated with increased medication errors and lengthier emergency room visits.

This past year The Endowment, through our grantees, made measurable progress in helping to reduce those inequities. We approved a total of 880 grants representing an investment of more than $231 million. As you peruse our grantee list and profiles, we believe you will see our commitment to a multicultural approach to health exemplified throughout our philanthropic support.

Our dedication to addressing the health needs of the underserved is best demonstrated in our ongoing work. In March of last year, we joined with Mexico's President Vicente Fox and California's Governor Gray Davis in announcing a five-year, $50 million commitment to develop programs to improve the health status of California's agricultural workers and their families. In November 2001, we announced an Agricultural Worker Health Request for Proposals, which resulted in the funding of 30 organizations for $10.5 million to provide, enhance and expand essential health services for farm workers. Understanding that prevention is key to reducing health disparities, we also undertook important projects, such as the three-year, $12 million Community Action to Fight Asthma campaign.

In February 2002, in ongoing efforts to be responsive to the communities we serve, The Endowment announced a new grant-making program, Local Opportunities Fund, to help support the needs of smaller, grassroots organizations in addressing local health needs. We are pleased to report that the response to the program has exceeded all expectations, with 436 applications received during the inaugural cycle of grant making.

Amidst all these efforts, the events of 9/11 took place. And, while we all struggled with this national tragedy, The Endowment knew it had to help Californians who were being directly affected by these events – and quickly. We contributed more than $13 million to California nonprofits to help address the impact of this national crisis. You may read more about our work in response to the events of 9/11 on page 82 of this report.

To support The Endowment's mission and work, we also made significant investments in our infrastructure. For example, last summer we undertook our first customer satisfaction surveys which helped us take a critical look at how we are perceived both by grantees and other publics in areas such as customer service and communications.

We hope you enjoy learning more about the work of The California Endowment, and we look forward to another great year as we all work to better define and make more understandable, in meaningful ways, a multicultural approach to health.

Q. Why is a multicultural approach to health so important to addressing the health concerns of California?

A. Diversity is California's greatest strength, and we believe in this strength as a way to help take on critical health care issues facing Californians, especially historically underserved populations. Another equally important aspect of a multicultural approach is that communities need to be central in helping craft solutions to health problems if long-term change is to happen. Our California communities are diverse and thriving; we need to tap into this resource if we want to create meaningful health improvements.

There is a real need for increased diversity in health care. For example, although 30 percent of Californians are Latino, only 5 percent of physicians statewide are of Latino origin. That is simply not a balanced representation — we need to ensure that our health work force more accurately reflects our varied people and cultures. Because California leads the nation in terms of diversity, if we create and support new and innovative programs, we can be at the forefront of health improvements nationally.

Q. Why is The Endowment supporting a multicultural approach to health? In some circles, multicultural health is not acknowledged.

A. There's a growing body of evidence to suggest that culture plays a significant role in how people interpret concepts of health or access systems of care. Rather than ignore this, we choose to try and understand it, harness its energy and incorporate it into our work at The Endowment.

Recognizing the enormous changes taking place in the state, we began working on our definition of a multicultural approach to health several years ago. This approach became an operating principle, a sort of touchstone for all of our work. Those with whom we work have been very supportive of our approach; they understand and value our perspective and point of view. It's as if they are saying: 'Someone finally acknowledges what's going on in this state and is taking steps to address our health issues from a different perspective.'

Q. Does The Endowment have a working definition of multicultural health?

A. The definition of multicultural health is intentionally very broad and purposefully open-ended. We look at various characteristics that make up who we are as individuals — not just race and ethnicity — but also gender, socioeconomic status, age, geographic setting, sexual orientation, immigration status, and physical and mental disability. I am as much influenced by my gender as my ethnic background.

Q. How does The Endowment foresee making changes in the health status of Californians?

A. We believe that fundamental improvements in health occur when we target changes at both the systems and community levels. Success is limited if you address one without the other. You need to address local and state policy issues, while also supporting grassroots efforts. These two types of interventions feed each other. So, to that end, we are working with various players to make those health improvements happen:

multicultural approach to health

Community-based organizations, practitioners, policymakers and advocates must all be involved.

Q. Any thoughts on how community-based organizations can develop their understanding of a multicultural approach to health?

A. It's important to understand the systems and communities in which you work. You may find that your community has changed over the years – perhaps in the beginning your target population was primarily Koreans; however, due to demographic shifts, it may have changed to Latinos. Ask yourself the difficult question: 'Are we still meeting the needs of this community?' You then have to be willing to examine your programs, mission, leadership, governance and volunteers and make the necessary adjustments. I don't pretend it's easy. We've funded a number of organizations to undertake this type of reflection and change, so I know it's a difficult process, but I believe it's a worthwhile one.

Q. How is The Endowment weaving its multicultural approach to health through its work?

A. We are so committed to this approach that we have made it our vision, and it is reflected in our four program focus areas that target underserved communities – access, disparities in health, cultural competency and work force diversity.

Q. Do you have any examples of how those focus areas translate into programs?

A. The profiles on the following pages illustrate our focus areas through grants we've funded in different communities across the state. For example:

In Oakland, there's a program that helps homeless seniors obtain basic mental, physical and financial services that they otherwise would not receive. This is reflective of our work to ensure everyone has access to quality, affordable health care.

In the Chinatown area of Los Angeles, limited-English speaking patients are receiving improved medical care because providers are able to communicate with them in their native languages.

Because of efforts toward improving work force diversity, many of the medical providers are from the underserved community populations they serve. As people of various cultures approach health care differently, it's important to see that diversity represented within the health system.

On the outskirts of Fresno, Oaxacan- and Spanish-speaking community outreach workers provide tuberculosis testing and health education for farm worker families. Because of our commitment to cultural competency in health, it's important that our programs provide care in a manner that is respectful and understanding of various cultures.

Through creation of a Wellness Village, for nine tribal communities in San Diego, the Indian Health Council is working to reduce disparities in health — specifically diabetes — which disproportionately affects Native Americans.

Q. How will The Endowment know if its multicultural approach to health has worked?

A. When a limited-English-speaking patient can go to a clinic and not worry about a language or cultural barrier... when communities work together to find new ways of addressing ongoing, common health problems... or when a single parent can sleep a bit easier knowing his or her child has health insurance coverage, then I'd say our approach is working.

Centro Binacional Para El
Desarrollo Indigena Oaxaqueño

To help administer Centro Binacional Para El Desarrollo Indigena Oaxaqueño's Proyecto de Salud ("Health Project") program, The California Endowment issued a three-year, $229,035 grant in 2001 to support a health education program for indigenous Oaxacan farm workers in Fresno and Madera counties, which provides education about chronic health conditions and assists families in accessing health care services.

striving for

competent treatment

“When I was 14, I left Oaxaca with other boys from my village for farm work in America,” says Adolfo Flores. “We had no supplies, no housing. For a time, we had to dig holes in the ground and live in them. We needed to send our money back home.”

Flores, an outreach worker with Proyecto de Salud, says he relates to the plight of these Oaxacan farm workers living in a trailer park on the outskirts of Fresno.

For them, health care is secondary; survival comes first.

On this sweltering summer evening, the trunk of a 20-year-old, rust-colored Toyota

background

Oaxacan farm workers are the fastest growing group of California’s farm worker population. Many have settled in Fresno and Madera counties, renown for their agricultural bounty.

While they share many characteristics of the Mexican culture and people, Oaxaqueños are often isolated because of language and cultural barriers. These indigenous people of southern Mexico often speak only Mixteco, Zapoteco or Triqui. For others, Spanish is their second language, and very few speak or understand English.

Often, Central Valley Oaxaqueños lack the knowledge of existing health services and programs to acquire basic health care. They are further limited by the lack of transportation, poverty, rural isolation and fears related to immigration status. Additionally, health systems are often ill-prepared to provide services to the Oaxaqueños because of language and cultural differences; so many fall between the cracks.

The California Endowment’s grant to Centro Binacional Para El Desarrollo Indigena Oaxaqueño provides health education workshops and basic medical screenings to Oaxacan men and women with its “Proyecto de Salud” program. Proyecto provides training to hundreds of physicians, nurses and allied health professionals to help them better understand and treat these patients.

Corolla serves as a makeshift tuberculosis (TB) clinic. The airborne bacterial infection is a health issue common with the migrant farm worker community.

With a borrowed blanket strewn across the back of the car, outreach workers from Proyecto and the Fresno County Department of Public Health arrange information pamphlets and set up the materials for TB testing for the Oaxacan farm worker community.

Proyecto’s coordinator Nayamin Martinez and another outreach worker, Oralia Maceda, knock on every door, and within minutes, more than two dozen people gather.

Parents wince and babies cry when they receive the test – a syringe of TB antigens injected into the skin.

Martinez notes that during a similar TB outreach, 13 out of 25 screenings were positive.

“And, when we held a diabetes workshop recently, 21 out of 135 people registered high glucose levels,” Martinez added. “It’s so important that the proper health information reaches these people.”

One of the families getting tested is the Dominguez family – the Corolla’s owners. Raul, an agricultural worker, his wife Margarita, and their two daughters, 8-year-old Daysi and 7-month-old Delli, share a modest and sparsely decorated trailer.

Like many other agricultural workers in Fresno, Raul and Margarita came to California 10 years ago in search of a better life. They settled in Fresno because of its ties to their homeland. Seventeen families living in the park come from Raul’s hometown, San Miguel, in Oaxaca. Farm work is one of the few opportunities available to the Dominguez family because they do not speak English.

Margarita, a shy woman who defers to her husband before speaking, says, “This year, I cannot work in the fields. I have to stay at home with Delli until she gets older.

“When we’re not working in the fields, it’s hard to get food for the family,” Margarita says. “We sometimes have to get food from Catholic Charities, the senior citizens’ center or through food stamps.”

On this particular summer evening, however, the family doesn’t think much about their work in the fields; tonight is a night to learn about tuberculosis and their health. Health care is difficult to access for the family. The two girls are enrolled in Medi-Cal, but their parents are not eligible. “We only seek services when we are really sick,” said Raul Domiguez.

Margarita adds, “But it helps us when we learn about our health. Proyecto helps us learn about and prevent diseases like TB and diabetes. We like it when they come out to teach us, it’s like a big family here – and when they come, it’s an event to bring the community together.”

Indian Health Council

To help develop the Indian Health Council's Wellness Village, The California Endowment made a $425,000 grant for comprehensive and culturally appropriate diabetes prevention and treatment services for tribal communities in San Diego County.

“There are six siblings left in my family. All of us have diabetes, except one sister;” says 70-year-old Jane Blackman, a Pala Indian. “It’s been a vicious circle with this disease. You struggle, you try and eat the right things, but sometimes it’s just so hard.”

Blackman, who was a “borderline” diabetic in her twenties, experienced the full onset of the disease in her fifties. During a senior lunch at the Pala Tribal Hall, located about 20 miles east of Temecula through remote and windy canyon roads, she recalls her family’s struggles with weight, physical activity and food.

“With this disease, you don’t feel sick, sick,” she says. “At first, it’s just that you feel shaky and numb.”

But Blackman and others dining at the tribal hall know all too well the devastating outcomes of the disease. Blindness, kidney failure and sometimes amputation are common among their tribe. “You have to realize that this disease is serious.

It’s something that you deal with for life.”

With the help of the Indian Health Council’s (IHC) diabetes prevention programs, Blackman is trying to manage her disease better. She and several others at the hall have just finished IHC’s Diabetes in Motion program. Led by a community outreach worker, the group performs “chair aerobics,” which provides those with health or mobility problems a strength training and exercise routine without standing.

“All complications to this disease can be prevented. A big part is losing weight and knowing how the body uses insulin,” says Robin McCarthy, a public health nurse and IHC’s Diabetes Program Manager, as she joins the seniors for the exercise and meal. “With programs like Diabetes in Motion, we teach how to eat a balanced diet and incorporate exercise into their daily lives.”

Dedicated to culturally competent care, IHC employs many people of Native American decent and is constantly trying to recruit volunteers and workers from surrounding tribes.

“I’m part Choctaw Indian from Oklahoma, and it’s important that we understand the needs and cultures of our patients. It’s a whole different way of life out here,” says Holly Perez, a Community Health Representative, who makes home visits to check blood pressure and reinforce teaching that helps clients monitor their sugars.

“Elders always come first in this community, and you don’t have anyone’s trust until you earn it.”

Some people on the reservations believe having diabetes is a stigma and may be ashamed to deal with their situation. Others undertake a fatalistic attitude.

“Some folks are just resigned to the fact that they will get it and will deal with it when it comes,” says Charlie Kolb, a Rincon Indian who recently moved back to the reservation from Los Angeles to retire. “They aren’t thinking about prevention.”

A diabetic himself, Kolb has been helping IHC spread the word about their community programs.

“I’ve seen so many double-amputees, people with severe heart disease and folks like my sister, who’s blind from the disease. But I have ulterior motives for helping them. Encouraging others motivates me to take care of my disease,” he says.

Along with IHC’s Diabetes in Motion trainer, Bryan Whish, Kolb is beginning an inter-tribal walking club for diabetics.

“Because there’s a distrust of outsiders and new programs here, I’ve found that if you get too preachy, people will back off. So for right now, I’m just encouraging folks to exercise, self-monitor and self-test to control their diabetes,” says Kolb. “Out here, we just have to take it one day at a time – but we are making inroads.”

background

Nine tribal communities in rural, northern San Diego County are battling an epidemic of diabetes, a disease that disproportionately affects Native Americans. Most recent estimates indicate that 22 percent of Native Americans 65 and older are diabetic. On average, American Indians are 2.6 times more likely to have diabetes than non-Hispanic whites of similar age.

Type 2 diabetes, which remains the leading cause of kidney failure, blindness and extremity amputation, is on the rise among Native American youth; previously, it struck those 45 years and older. Obesity, decreased physical activity, and exposure to the disease during pregnancy may all contribute to this increase.

Founded in 1970, the Indian Health Council (IHC) is the first tribally owned and operated health clinic of its kind in California. The clinic’s patient base of 15,000 is scattered among the nine tribes of this remote area in San Diego.

The California Endowment’s grant supports IHC’s Community Health Services division to mitigate the effects of, and dispel the pre-conceived notions about, diabetes within tribal communities. IHC’s diabetes-focused programs include biweekly health education classes, cooking classes, an exercise/education program, diabetes support groups and clinical home visits.

L.A. Care Health Plan

To help support the Achieving Culturally and Linguistically Appropriate Services program, for the L.A. Care Health Plan, The California Endowment made a two-year, $528,523 grant in 2002 to help institutionalize culturally and linguistically appropriate services at L.A. Care Health Plan, a large, publicly-managed care organization in Los Angeles County.

“Do you speak English?” is a question that many patients waiting at the Chinatown Service Center have faced at other clinics around Los Angeles. Like many others in the waiting room, Pan Hui Zhong knows enough English to answer, “No.”

Located in the heart of Los Angeles’s Chinatown, the clinic helps patients overcome language barriers to health care because it provides language translation in five different Chinese dialects, as well as Vietnamese and Spanish.

“I come here one hour by bus from Walnut because they can speak Mandarin,” says Zhong through an interpreter/nurse, Lai Leong. “Otherwise I cannot go by myself to the doctors.”

“This place is convenient to me.”

The same sentiment is echoed by the Chinchilla family, who wait at The Children’s Clinic in Long Beach, amid the hustle and bustle of a typical Friday morning.

background

L.A. Care Health Plan is Los Angeles County’s Local Initiative for Medi-Cal managed care. It is the largest public health maintenance organization (HMO) in the country, serving more than 800,000 Los Angeles County residents who participate in the Medi-Cal, Healthy Families, CaliforniaKids and AIM programs. More than 50 percent of the members prefer speaking in a language other than English.

Because of the size, complexity and diversity of the county, L.A. Care uses a structure in which it uses a network of health care organizations to provide care for its Medi-Cal members. Of its nearly 10,000 providers, approximately 28 percent speak Spanish, 6.7 percent speak Chinese, 2.9 percent Armenian, 2 percent Vietnamese, 1.6 percent Russian and .4 percent Khmer, spoken in Cambodia.

The California Endowment’s grant is used to support several worthwhile projects at L.A. Care, including an organizational assessment, the development of a curriculum for health care administrators and providers, and the translation of documents into nine threshold languages. These features are being posted on a web site and may be downloaded free of charge. Staff members are also trained on the skills, ethics and knowledge involved in medical translation.

The curriculum and documents will be posted to the L.A. Care web site and will be available for download free of charge.

The Children’s Clinic and The Chinatown Service Center are two of L.A. Care’s providers.

Dinora Chinchilla has brought 9-year-old Debra in for a follow-up to stomach surgery. Alejandra, Debra's precocious 12-year-old sister, accompanies her sister for moral support.

“Here, I like being able to communicate with the medical provider and knowing what the problems are going on with my kids,” Dinora says through an interpreter. “At other clinics, I would never understand the medical plan of treatment because I couldn't ask questions of my doctor.”

“But it has gotten a lot easier with the help of this clinic's staff.”

The breakdown of the language barrier is proven a short time later when Debra sees Dr. Rosette Yson. Although Yson is a Filipino American, she speaks in Spanish to Dinora and English to the girls. She sees that Debra's stomach scars are healing nicely, but becomes concerned when Debra informs her of a tightness she gets sometimes in her chest.

When Yson becomes a little unsure of how to interpret “heart palpitations” for Dinora, she calls in an interpreter to make sure Mrs. Chinchilla understands completely and knows to schedule a follow-up exam for Debra's heart rhythms.

One of the front desk clerks, Daisy Duarte, says there are staff members who can speak the predominant languages of their patients, especially Spanish and Khmer.

Some of the clinic's staff recently underwent training to learn about various cultural practices.

“We learned a lot about the cultures that we see here. For example, some of the Cambodians wouldn't look at their doctors in the eyes when they were being talked to, and the misconception was that the Cambodian families were not paying attention,” Duarte explains. “We learned that it was a status or hierarchy issue. In the Cambodian culture, it's rude to look at someone in the eye if they are above you in class or status.”

Executive Director Dr. Elisa A. Nicholas says her clinic tries to be a model for other community clinics.

“The Children's Clinic is a microcosm of how our community should work,” she notes. “My background is in international health, so I like to think of this clinic as providing international health on a local level.”

increasing access to health care for all Californians

“I am sober today and have been for the past six months,” says Gay Andreini. “I wouldn’t be here today if it weren’t for Marilyn and St. Mary’s.”

Many other clients at St. Mary’s Center in Oakland echo her sentiments as they pay tribute to retiring caseworker Marilyn Barclay.

A dozen senior clients, with drums, maracas and bells, play for the nearly 80 people gathered at the farewell garden party. Emotions run high and tears flow.

Andreini, at 56, is one of the younger seniors at St. Mary’s. Looking youthful in a tank top and jeans, Andreini recounts how she found the center when there was no other place to go.

“I was evicted from my apartment in Hayward a few years ago,” Andreini says. “I bounced from shelter to shelter and slept in the bushes when I needed to.”

At the same time, she says she was trying to conquer her alcohol addiction.

A religious woman, Andreini attends Catholic services at St. Mary’s parish, near the center. She met her future case manager, Peter Butler, one Sunday after Mass.

“I was getting really down and depressed. I was tired of trying,” she says. “Before I got into the program here, I was saying to myself, ‘To hell with it all – I’ll try and survive out there.’”

“I talked to her after church, but wasn’t sure if she’d show up that Monday,” adds Butler. “When I got into work, she was there in the parking lot. It was such a relief.”

“I came here because somebody actually seemed to care,” Andreini says.

Another one of St. Mary’s clients, Jesse Lynch, 61, has been struggling with mental

background

The lack of affordable housing in Northern California has forced many individuals onto the streets. Physical and mental illnesses are compounded without shelter, and the homeless elderly are even more vulnerable to health problems. Chronic conditions and diseases, such as high blood pressure, cholesterol or diabetes, often go untreated.

In the City of Oakland, there are approximately 5,000 homeless people. St. Mary’s Center, an interfaith nonprofit organization, has been serving the homeless population in this city for the past 10 years.

Although the majority of St. Mary’s clients are from the homeless senior population, the center also provides a five-day-a-week preschool for 35 to 40 poverty-level children ages 3 to 5. The primary goal is to prepare children for success in elementary school, and provide them with a lunch and snacks that would otherwise stretch their family’s budget.

Senior services at the center include a drop-in center, case management, an outpatient alcohol and drug abuse recovery program, a winter shelter with cots for 25 seniors, and a Wisdom Center, which allows homeless seniors to engage in creative expression.

The Coaching Elders program, funded by The Endowment, addresses the mental health issues of the homeless elderly by integrating the other programs at the center, and aims to dispel the stigma of mental illness for its clients.

illness, homelessness and addiction for most of his life.

“I slept on Broadway, near the BART station,” he says. “Even if you’re on the street, some people still try to rob you of what little you have. They tried to rob me.”

Dressed in crisp khakis and a pressed, white shirt, it’s evident that Lynch has come a long way from sleeping on Oakland’s streets.

A self-described loner, Lynch didn’t like boarding houses with community kitchens and bathrooms.

“I just wanted a safe, warm place of my own.”

Lynch’s caseworker Cathy McCarthy adds: “Jesse is a much different person than he was two years ago. At first, he didn’t want to take any medication for his schizophrenia, but after an extended hospital stay, he promised me that he would start taking his meds on a regular basis.

“I have to give Jesse so much credit for keeping his word. In two years, he has never missed one day for medication. He now keeps all his medical appointments by himself, and he’s now working with us on his money management skills.”

Before leaving for the center’s lunch program, Lynch adds, “You know, with their help, I now live at a senior citizen’s residence. I have my own room. I pay my own rent.”

“I feel more comfortable with myself today.”

to september 11

While we all grappled with the immediate consequences of 9/11, during the early days following the attack on our nation, The Endowment began to examine what effects the terrorists' acts would have on California's people and the health organizations that served them. We knew whatever we did had to be effective – and had to be done quickly.

“... Planes are grounded and airports closed, so airport and hotel workers may be losing their jobs and health insurance ... Everyone seems to be responding quite generously to the 9/11 fund, does this mean that donations to local charities will suffer?... It's expected that some Californians will be losing their jobs, what impact will this have on their ability to get medical care, food and any needed mental health services?... There are reports of hate crimes against ethnic minorities, what can we do?...”

These were questions that floated around our discussion tables as we began to formulate a response. In the end, The Endowment's multi-pronged approach included new, unique partnerships among health-related organizations and provided more than $13 million in funding directly to 75 organizations. Through “regranting” efforts, in which these organizations awarded grants from funds provided by The Endowment, many other community agencies and their clients benefited.

These responses included:

Displaced Hospitality/Tourism Workers Funding – Approximately $6 million was committed in large metropolitan areas within California to provide workers displaced by 9/11 with emergency health coverage, outreach and education about existing social services, and to help to build a policy advocacy response. This unique collaboration included partnerships with Kaiser Permanente, Los Angeles Alliance for a New Economy, Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees' Union, the South Bay AFL-CIO Labor Council, San Francisco Central Labor Council and others.

California Cares – After conducting a survey of 413 California nonprofits, The Endowment discovered that many community organizations experienced decreases in donations following 9/11. To help boost donations during the critical holiday giving season, a multimedia awareness campaign – “California Cares” – was created. Public service announcements made but one request: “When your local charity asks for help, answer with generosity.” In a follow-up survey to individuals, the majority of respondents reported that the campaign increased their awareness of nonprofits' funding losses and the need for nonprofit services.

Bridges of Understanding and Hate/Tolerance Grants – Realizing that there could be a serious backlash against ethnic minorities as old racial prejudices may resurface, The Endowment hosted a “Bridges of Understanding: An Interfaith Response to September 11 Convening,” which had the goals of deepening knowledge and better understanding diverse, faith traditions. To supplement the effort, grants were awarded to promote the understanding of hate/tolerance issues.

Safety-Net Funding – More than 50 local United Way and other community agencies were given grants to share safety-net funding with local organizations that were experiencing problems as a result of both declines in contributions and surges in requests for service. Additionally, funding was provided to support mental health programs and food banks.

Financial Statements

As of February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001

Together with Auditors' Report

REPORT OF INDEPENDENT PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS

To the Board of Directors of The California Endowment:

We have audited the accompanying statements of financial position of The California Endowment ("The Endowment"), a California Nonprofit Public Benefit Corporation, as of February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, and the related statements of activities and changes in net assets and cash flows for the years then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of The Endowment's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audits.

We conducted our audits in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of The Endowment as of February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, and the results of its activities and its cash flows for the years then ended in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States.

A California Nonprofit Public Benefit Corporation

Notes to Financial Statements

February 28, 2002

1. Organization

The California Endowment (“The Endowment”) is a private foundation which began operations in May 1996. The Endowment is exempt from federal income taxes under Section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code (“IRC”) as an organization described in Section 501(c)(3). The Endowment’s mission is to expand access to affordable, quality health care for underserved individuals and communities, and to promote fundamental improvements in the health status of all Californians. The Attorney General of the State of California has specific oversight authority related to The Endowment’s Articles of Incorporation and certain bylaw provisions.

The Endowment was created as a result of Blue Cross of California (subsequently renamed Wellpoint Health Network, Inc., referred to as “WLP”) changing from not-for-profit to for-profit status. Pursuant to agreements between WLP, created as a result of the change, and the State of California Department of Corporations, WLP made an initial cash contribution to The Endowment and issued all of its then outstanding common stock to California HealthCare Foundation (“CHF”). CHF is exempt from federal income taxes under IRC Section 501(a). As CHF sells the WLP stock over time, it must make contributions to The Endowment out of the proceeds from such sales of WLP stock, provided that The Endowment is a nonprofit public benefit corporation in good standing and continues to be an organization described in IRC Section 501(c)(3). CHF must transfer not less than 80% of the net cash proceeds, if any, of any WLP stock sale or disposition on or before the later of December 1 of such year or three months after the receipt of proceeds. See Note 7 for details of contributions received by The Endowment.

2. Summary of Significant Accounting Policies

Basis of Presentation

The financial statements of The Endowment have been prepared on the accrual basis of accounting.

Cash and Cash Equivalents

Cash and cash equivalents are defined as investments with original maturities of three months or less.

Investments

Investments, which are all classified as trading securities, are carried at fair value as determined by quoted market prices, or based on quotations of similar securities, or other estimates where market quotes are not available. Investing activities are reported on a trade-date basis. Realized gains and losses are calculated based upon the underlying cost of individual lots. Interest income is recorded when earned. Dividends are recorded on the ex-dividend date. Net realized and unrealized gain/loss on investments is based on the fair value of the assets at the beginning of the year or at the time of purchase for assets purchased during the year and the related fair values on the day the investments are sold with respect to realized gains and losses, and on the last day of the year with respect to unrealized gains and losses.

Program-Related Investment

The Endowment invests in a project that advances its philanthropic purposes. This program-related investment (“PRI”) is valued at estimated net realizable value.

Property and Equipment

Property and equipment consists of capitalized leasehold improvements, furnishings, fixtures and equipment for The Endowment’s offices, and are carried at cost, less accumulated depreciation and amortization of $4,082,200 and $2,765,900 at February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, respectively. Depreciation and amortization are computed on the straight-line method based on the estimated useful lives of individual assets ranging from three to five years or the term of the lease.

Grants

Unconditional grants are recognized as an expense in the period in which they are approved. Grants, which are conditioned on a future uncertain event, are expensed when these conditions are substantially met. There are no conditional grants at February 28, 2002 or February 28, 2001. The following is a schedule of grants obligation as of February 28, 2002, which is discounted at a rate of 4.28% to arrive at the net present value:

Fiscal year
2003	$ 67,241,400
2004	27,335,200
2005	10,179,900
2006	6,613,900
2007	4,228,300
Total	$ 115,598,700

Direct Charitable Activities (DCA)

The Endowment maintains some significant involvement in the direct active conduct of charitable activities, such as providing program evaluation, social marketing on health issues, policy and advocacy work, health related research and publishing and dissemination of research. The DCA expense for the period ended February 28, 2002 was $12,268,600.

Use of Estimates

The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements and the reported amounts of revenue and expenses during the reporting period. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

3. Investments

Investments are presented in the financial statements at fair value and consist of the following:

	As of February,
	2002		2001
	Cost	Fair Value	Cost	Fair Value
Money markets and treasury bills	$ 105,172,200	$ 106,402,500	$ 159,678,500	$ 158,682,700
Government and corporate obligations	854,161,000	856,308,500	875,262,600	876,874,600
Equity securities	2,302,708,700	2,365,525,400	2,320,158,400	2,416,764,700
	$ 3,262,041,900	$ 3,328,236,400	$ 3,355,099,500	$3,452,322,000

As part of its investment management activity, The Endowment is committed to an additional funding of $157,966,300 in private equity commitments.

The change in net unrealized gain on investments reflected in the statements of activities and changes in net assets is summarized as follows:

	For the years ended February,
	2002	2001
Net unrealized gain, beginning of year	$ 97,222,500	$ 588,780,700
Net unrealized (loss)/gain on investments for the year	(31,028,000)	(491,558,200)

In the normal course of business, The Endowment uses various financial instruments, including derivative financial instruments, to maintain desired asset allocations, primarily in fixed income securities. Interest rate futures and options are purchased and sold to manage the interest rate risk on government and corporate obligations. The fair value of interest rate futures is included in investments. Any derivative financial instruments are recorded at their current market value with any changes reflected in income during the period of the change. The Endowment's investment managers are permitted, under the terms of individual investment guidelines, to utilize such financial instruments. As of February 28, 2002, The Endowment had fourteen interest rate futures contracts with delivery dates through March 31, 2003, one S&P futures contract with delivery date through March 31, 2002, and two interest rates put options with delivery dates through March 31, 2002. All of these instruments are supported by government and corporate obligations.

4. Program-Related Investment ("PRI")

The Endowment has invested a portion of its funds in a project that advances its philanthropic purposes. The PRI is in the form of a non-interest bearing $20,000,000 loan to a non-profit entity to improve the healthcare conditions of farm workers. The duration of the loan is 30 years due February 2029 with the first payment commencing in fiscal year 2004.

5. Commitments and Contingencies

The Endowment leases its office facilities and telephone under various agreements. Rental expense was approximately $1,804,100 and $1,438,000 for the fiscal years ended February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, respectively. The following is a schedule by year of minimum future rental payments related to these leases as of February 28, 2002:

Year Ending February
2003	$ 2,631,900
2004	2,834,400
2005	2,389,500
2006	2,167,500
2007	2,006,700
Thereafter	4,631,100
Total minimum future rentals	$ 16,661,100

6. Federal Excise Taxes

The Endowment is subject to federal excise taxes imposed on private foundations at two percent, or at one percent if certain conditions are met. The excise tax is imposed on net investment income, as defined under federal tax law, which includes realized gains on the sale of investments. The Endowment qualified for the two percent excise tax for the year ended February 28, 2002 and the one percent reduced excise tax for the year ended February 28, 2001. Deferred taxes payable are recorded at two percent as the qualification for the one percent rate is not determined until the fiscal year in which the gains are realized. The Endowment is required to make estimated tax payments throughout the year. Included in other liabilities are current taxes payables of $767,400 at February 28, 2002, but as of February 28, 2001, the Endowment had a prepaid excise tax amount of $234,000. Deferred taxes payable at February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, of $1,327,200 and $1,944,400, respectively, are related to unrealized appreciation, and are reflected as a liability until the related investments are sold or there is a change in the valuation of such investments.

7. Contributions

As discussed in Note 1, The Endowment received its final contribution from CHF in fiscal year 2002.

	2002	2001
Cash from CHF	$ 87,987,200	$ 262,680,800
	$ 87,987,200	$ 262,680,800

8. Special Distributions

During the five years commencing in the fiscal year ended February 28, 1997, The Endowment was required by the State of California Department of Corporations to make special distributions of at least $150,000,000, which included qualifying distributions made by The Endowment under the IRC as a result of the distributable amount for the fiscal year ended February 28, 1997. Such special distributions, not including the credit as a result of the distributable amount for the fiscal year ended February 28, 1997, were to be made as follows:

- At least $30,000,000 shall have been made before the end of the first year, February 28, 1997.
- At least $80,000,000 shall have been made before the end of the second year, February 28, 1998, including the distributions made in the first year.
- At least $100,000,000 shall have been made before the end of the third year, February 28, 1999.
- At least $120,000,000 shall have been made before the end of the fourth year, February 28, 2000.
- The balance of the $150,000,000 shall have been made before the end of the fifth year, February 28, 2001.

The Endowment must also make certain distributions from certain designated proceeds transferred to The Endowment due to sales of WLP stock by CHF (See Note 1). During the years ended February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, The Endowment was required to make $4,050,000 and $37,600,000, respectively, of such distributions. All of these requirements were satisfied.

9. Retirement Plans

The Endowment maintains a qualified 401(k) Employee Investment Plan (“the plan”), which permits eligible employees to make voluntary contributions on a pretax basis. The plan allows participants to invest in a variety of investments. The plan provides for uniform employer contributions of 75 cents for every dollar contributed by a participant up to 6 percent of the participant’s salary deferral contribution. The Endowment’s contributions to this plan for the fiscal years ended February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001 were $316,600 and $240,400, respectively.

In addition, The Endowment has a defined benefit cash balance plan covering all employees with one year of service. The plan is entirely funded by The Endowment, with contributions based on a percentage of each employee’s annual compensation. The employees are vested 20% each year, with full vesting at the end of five years. Each employee’s account is credited each year with an interest factor, the lower of 5.25% or the interest rate on 20 year Treasury Bonds. At normal retirement age (65) employees are paid their accumulated amount in the plan, either as an annuity or lump sum, at their election. Upon termination of service employees may withdraw or roll over their vested accumulated cash balance.

At February 28, 2001, the most recent actuarial calculation, the Projected Benefit Obligation under the plan was $1,077,500 and the Fair Value of Plan Assets was $682,400; and Plan assets at market value and the accrued liability on the balance sheet exceeded the Accumulated Benefit Obligation. The Endowment contributed $490,700 and $156,000 to the Plan for the fiscal years ended February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, respectively. The Endowment incurred $526,500 and $379,500 in pension cost for the fiscal years ended February 28, 2002 and February 28, 2001, respectively.

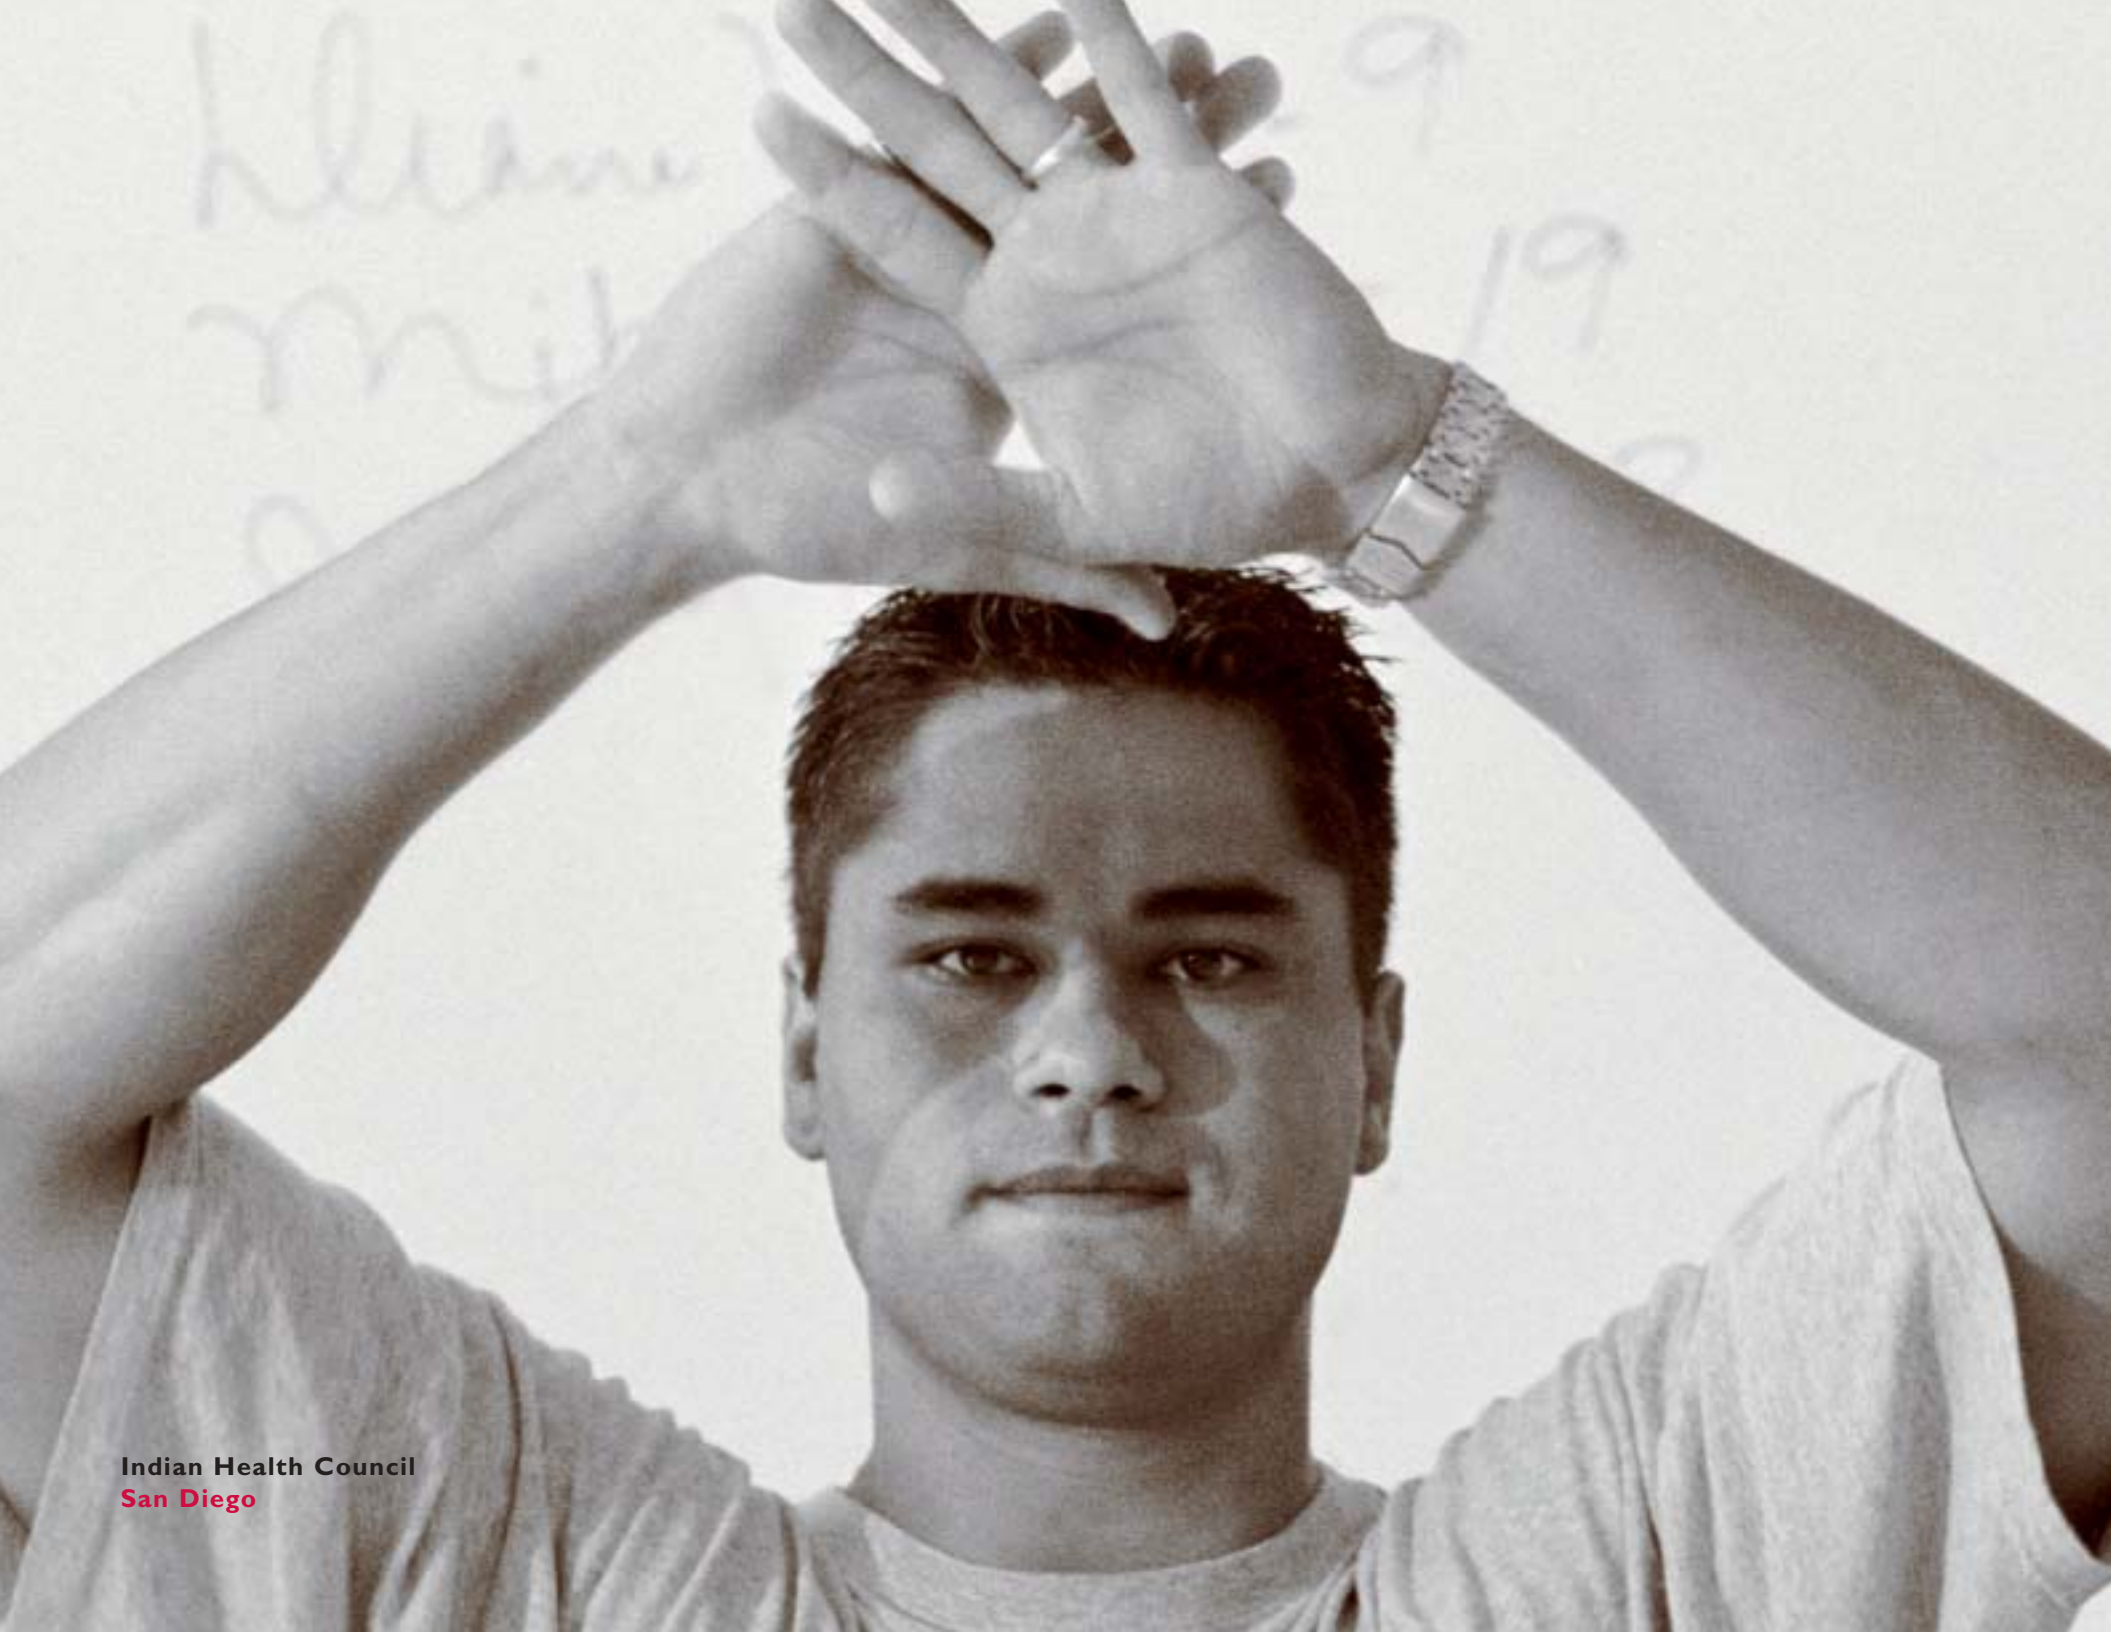

The assumptions used in the determination of pension expense and the funded status information are as follows:

Discount rate	7.50%
Average compensation increase	5.00%
Expected rate of return on plan assets	9.00%

In July 2000, The Endowment adopted a Supplemental Executive Retirement Plan (the “SERP” Plan), which provides supplemental retirement benefits to certain key management employees and is to be funded solely from the general assets of the Endowment. A separate “Account” is established and maintained for each Participant. The Participant shall forfeit the plan benefit if his employment is terminated before the attainment of retirement age, unless the termination occurs because of (a) the Participant’s death, (b) the Participant’s disability, or (c) the involuntary termination of the Participant’s employment, other than for cause. The SERP Plan expense for the period ended February 28, 2002 was $96,800.
