Foundation Giving in North Carolina: *An Analysis of Trends for Fiscal Year 2006*¹

Introduction

As a unique piece of the philanthropic puzzle, foundations play a very important role in enhancing both the nation's and individual state's welfare. According to Giving USA 2007, charitable giving in the United States totaled $295.02 billion in 2006, a 4.2 percent increase over the revised estimate of $283.5 billion for 2005. Of that total amount, foundations were responsible for $36.5 billion, a 12.6 percent increase over the previous year's total of $30 billion. In total, foundations were responsible for a slightly higher percentage of giving in 2006, 12.4 percent of the total, up from 11.5 percent in 2005. Individual giving and bequests totaled $245.8 billion, or 83.4 percent of total giving. Corporations were responsible for the remaining amount of $12.72 billion, or 4.2 percent.²

This report analyzes publicly available information on giving from foundations in North Carolina. At the present time, no organization compiles total giving information on a statewide basis; therefore, information on individual giving, bequests and corporate giving is not available in North Carolina.

Methodology

The information contained in this report is based on meticulous research and compilation of information from multiple sources. It is not available by consulting any single source of information. The Foundation Center and Metasoft are the primary sources of information on foundations in the United States. Both sources allow only very limited manipulation of their databases to generate aggregate data on foundations; therefore, obtaining accurate aggregate data for foundations is complicated.

The main source of information on foundation giving came from the tax returns filed by individual foundations, which are made available to central repositories such as the Foundation Center, Guidestar, and Metasoft. Limiting factors include that all foundations do not file their tax returns at the same time. Foundations, like corporations, file their tax returns based on their fiscal year, so returns become available at a variety of times over the course of a year, and obtaining all of the returns for a given fiscal year can be tricky³. Another limiting factor is that often the tax returns are filed by banks or investment managers, often not located in the city or state where the foundation is located; therefore, simply determining whether a foundation should be considered a North Carolina foundation can be complicated and laborious.⁴

We have very closely analyzed the aggregate data generated on foundations in North Carolina and have modified the data as appropriate. In some cases, foundations were added that were omitted from the aggregate data while, in other cases, foundations were deleted that were not appropriate to be included in the data. In many cases, updated financial information was also provided.

We have attempted to provide accurate and up-to-date information at both the individual foundation level and at the aggregated statewide level. If you feel that we have omitted a foundation or included one that should not have been included, please notify us. We will make every effort to include that information in future editions of this report.

Growth of North Carolina Foundations

Nationally, the number of foundations doubled between 1980 and 1997, from 22,088 to 44,146; and they have increased 61 percent, from 44,146 in 1997 to 71,095 in 2005.⁵ We have seen an even larger explosion of growth in the number of foundations in North Carolina. Since 1997, the number of foundations in the state has increased 204 percent, from 997 to 3032.

Although there has not been a significant increase in the overall number of foundations since 2005, the number of foundations in North Carolina with assets of $1 million or more, increased 8 percent between 2005 and 2006.⁶ Over the same period of time, foundation assets increased 14 percent, from $13,348,506,369 to $15,272,447,408 in 2006. Table I illustrates the growth of foundations from 2005 to 2006 in two very broad categories: foundations with assets in excess of $1 million and foundations with assets below $1 million.

³ We have attempted to use financial information from 2006 tax returns from foundations. However, if that return was not available, we used the financial information from the most current tax return and, in most cases, that would be for the tax year 2005.

⁶ Foundation information for the year 2005, was published in Foundation Giving in North Carolina: An Analysis of the Trends for the 2005 Fiscal Year, by Anita Gunn Shirley, NCGives, 2007.

Table I: Growth of NC Foundations between 2005 and 2006 in Two Asset Categories

Asset Categories	# of Foundations 2005	Total Assets 2005	# of Foundations 2006	Total Assets 2006	Percent Change in Numbers	Percent Change in Assets
$1 million or more in assets	815	$12,766,541,568	884	$14,699,735,417	8%	15%
Less than $1 million in assets	2191	$ 581,964,801	2148	$ 572,711,991	-2%	-1%
Totals:	3006	$13,348,506,369	3032	$15,272,447,408	< 1%	14%

As a part of the growth in the assets of foundations, we are also witnessing the concentration of wealth in a relatively small number of foundations. In 1997, 12, or 1.2 percent of the foundations in the state controlled 64 percent of the assets. By 2006, 22, or less than 1 percent (.7%) of the foundations in the state, controlled 62 percent of the state's foundation assets.

Despite this concentration of wealth among a rather small number of foundations, there still has been tremendous growth of foundations of all sizes in the state. Between 1997 and 2006, the number of foundations with assets of less than $100 million increased from 985 to 3010, a 205 percent increase. Over the same period, ten foundations joined the list of foundations in North Carolina with assets of $100 million or more, an 83 percent increase.

Table II illustrates the growth in the number of foundations in North Carolina since 1997, and their assets in six size categories.

⁷ The 1997 data was published in North Carolina Giving: The Directory of the State's Foundations, Fourth Edition, Capital Development Services, 1999, p. xvii. The primary source of data for the 2006 data was from a data output from the Foundation Center's On-line Directory; this data was then updated and modified. For example, foundations that appeared in the output that did not meet the criteria as a North Carolina foundation (see footnote 4), were deleted; while foundations that did not appear in the data that were considered North Carolina Foundations, were included in the data for this chart.

Of the foundations in the state with assets in excess of $100 million, only two have been established in the last ten years – the Golden LEAF Foundation and the Moses Cone-Wesley Long Community Health Foundation. The Golden LEAF Foundation was established in 1999 to receive one-half of the funds coming to North Carolina from the master settlement agreement with tobacco cigarette manufacturers.

The Board of Trustees of Wesley Long Community Hospital established the Wesley Long Community Health Foundation in 1996 with an initial contribution of $50 million. These funds came primarily from the proceeds of the sale of the hospital’s interest in Physician’s Health Plan (PHP). The Moses Cone Health System merged its assets into the Foundation in the spring of 1999, making the newly named Moses Cone-Wesley Long Community Health Foundation the largest foundation in the state focused strictly on local health issues.

Health Care Conversions

Beginning in the mid-1990’s, there were a number of “health care conversions.” For the most part, these resulted from the sale or acquisition of a hospital or health care system. In the cases where the health care system or hospital had been run as a nonprofit organization, state regulators demanded that proceeds from the sales be put to the public’s benefit, usually in the form of creating nonprofit foundations. In addition to the Moses Cone-Wesley Long Community Health Foundation, there were at least four other foundations in the state established over the last ten years as a result of health care conversions. The combined assets of these foundations are $296,030,755, with grants made totaling $11,890,885 in 2006. Table III lists the foundations established as a result of health care conversions.

⁸ The Cape Fear Memorial Foundation in Wilmington was established in 1996 with funds from the sale of Cape Fear Memorial Hospital to Columbia/HCA; the Annie Penn Community Trust (APCT) in Reidsville was created in July, 2001, as a result of the merger of Annie Penn Hospital with the Moses Cone Health System; in 1995, the Sisters of Mercy North Carolina Health Foundations resulted from the sale of Mercy Health Services to Charlotte-Mecklenburg Hospital Authority; and the John Rex Endowment, established in 2000 as a result of the University of North Carolina Health Care System acquisition of Rex Healthcare, the healthcare system in Wake County that included Rex Hospital.

Types of Foundations

There are four different types of foundations: independent foundations, often referred to as private foundations; company-sponsored foundations; community foundations; and operating foundations. Because operating foundations are established to operate their own programs and usually do not provide grants to nonprofit organizations, they are not highlighted in this analysis, although they are included in the overall statistical information.

Table IV lists the four types of foundations in North Carolina and identifies their assets and grants awarded in 2006.

Table IV: Foundations in North Carolina by Type¹⁰

Independent foundations comprise the largest group of grantmaking foundations operating both nationally and in the state. Organizations designated by the Internal Revenue Service as independent (or private) foundations are established for the primary purpose of making grants. The assets of most independent foundations originate from a gift from an individual or a family. Two thousand seven hundred seventy-six, or 92 percent of the foundations in North Carolina, are independent foundations. In 2006, the assets of independent foundations totaled $12,823,507,170 and their giving totaled $639,998,710, or 60 percent of the total grants awarded.

Table V lists the 28 independent foundations in the state that awarded $2.5 million or more in 2006. The foundations listed on Table V were responsible for $394,181,180, or 36 percent of the total grants awarded in 2006.

¹⁰ The Foundation Center's Online Directory identifies foundations by types. However, these classifications aren't always accurate; therefore, the author took the liberty to reclassify foundations that she felt were misclassified. This is mainly apparent in the number of community foundations in North Carolina. The Foundation Center identifies 19 community foundations, while the author identifies an additional nine community foundations for a total of 28.

Company-sponsored foundations, often referred to as corporate foundations, comprise the next largest group of foundations in North Carolina. These foundations are similar to independent foundations except their funds originate from a profit-making company or corporation. Generally, the foundation operates independently from the corporation, although officers of the corporation often serve on the foundation’s governing board.

Like independent foundations, company-sponsored foundations are established for the primary purpose of making grants. However, they usually focus their giving in areas where the company has operations or where its employees live or work. Often company-sponsored foundations have no assets. Instead, the foundation acts as a pass-through—annually receiving and distributing funds from the corporation. Some corporations operate a corporate contributions program (or direct-giving program) instead of having a foundation; sometimes they have both. Unlike foundations, corporations with direct-giving programs do not have to publish their contributions; therefore, the information is not publicly available. Information in this analysis only covers company-sponsored foundations which, by law, have to file tax returns which are available for public review.

North Carolina is home to 94 company-sponsored foundations with assets totaling $630,457,338, and contributions totaling $266,436,499 in 2006. Table VI lists, in descending order of total giving, the 19 company-sponsored foundations in the state that made grants totaling $500,000 or more in 2006. These 19 foundations accounted for 85 percent of the assets of company-sponsored foundations in the state, as well as 97 percent of the grants awarded by company-sponsored foundations in 2006.

Community foundations comprise the next largest group of foundations located in North Carolina. Nationally, over the past several decades, community foundations have been the fastest growing segment of philanthropy, outpacing the growth of independent and company-sponsored foundations. The assets of community foundations originate from multiple donors, rather than from a single donor, as in the case of most independent and corporate foundations. They are attractive vehicles for channeling philanthropic dollars because they receive a favorable tax treatment from the IRS. Federal tax law allows charitable contributions of cash to community foundations at 50 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income, while gifts of cash to private foundations are limited to 30 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income.

Since 1997,¹¹ the number of community foundations in North Carolina has increased 81 percent from 16 to 28. Over the same time period, the assets of community foundations have increased 208 percent, from $538,432,034 to $1,658,542,159. Contributions have increased 192 percent from $58,824,618 to $171,835,235.

To put this in perspective, the assets of foundations, excluding community foundations, increased 81 percent, from $7,511,475,493 to $13,613,905,249, over the same period. Grants awarded by these same foundations increased 177 percent, from $328,646,184 to $911,851,372. Table VII lists the community foundations in North Carolina in alphabetical order. The foundations identified with an asterisk are not listed as community foundations by the Foundation Center.

Largest Foundations by Assets

Two percent, or 76¹³ of the foundations in state having assets of $20 million or more, control $11,721,812,351, or 77 percent of the assets of all foundations located in North Carolina. These 76 foundations awarded $812,697,723 or three-quarters of the grants awarded in 2006. Table VIII lists the foundations in North Carolina with assets of $20 million or more.

Due to complex tax laws and the contribution policies of foundations, the largest foundations, by assets, are not necessarily the largest givers. Most independent or private foundations have endowments and spend part of the income generated by their investments each year, thus preserving and growing their endowments (asset base). On the other hand, many corporate foundations do not have endowments (or large asset bases); instead, they use the foundation structure to pass through their annual corporate contributions. These contributions will fluctuate because they are tied to the company's profits. Table IX lists the 46 foundations in the state that made contributions in excess of $2.5 million. These 46 foundations, representing 1 percent of the foundations in the state, were responsible for $797,337,271 or 73 percent of the total giving in 2006.

Distribution of Foundations

Foundations are found throughout North Carolina. Eighty-seven of the 100 counties have at least one foundation, with some counties having a much higher concentration of foundations. Table X lists the ten counties that are home to 25 percent of the state's foundations and 88 percent of the total foundation assets.

Areas of Giving

In 2006, foundations in North Carolina made contributions totaling $1,083,686,607 to nonprofit organizations in North Carolina and around the world. This represents a 21 percent increase over the 2005 giving level of $896.9¹⁴ million. Table XXI illustrates a comparison of the distribution of North Carolina grants with national giving trends¹⁵ by subject categories in fiscal year 2006.¹⁶

Table XXI : 2006 Distribution of Grants by Subject Area

Category	North Carolina Percentage	National Percentage
Social and Human Services	37%	26%
Education	32%	25%
Health Care and Hospitals	14%	23%
Arts and Humanities	8%	12%
Religion	6%	2%
Environment	2%	6%
Sports and Athletics	1%	-
International Giving	<1%	5%
Totals:	100%	100%

The giving trends of North Carolina foundations mirror the national priorities, with respect to the areas of giving receiving the highest priority of funding; however, the percentages of funding in each category of giving differ significantly in some cases. For example, social and human service programs received 37 percent of North Carolina foundation grants, the highest funding priority, while national foundations also contributed their largest percentage of grants in this category, but the percentage was 26 percent, an 11 percentage point difference. Educational programs received 32 percent of the funds allocated by North Carolina foundations, seven percentage points more than was allocated by national foundations. North Carolina foundations allocated the third largest portion of funds for health care and hospitals, the same priority as for national foundations; however, national foundations contributed nine percentage points more in this category. Although arts and humanities programs received the fourth largest portion of funds allocated, North Carolina foundations allocated about half of the national average in the category of arts and humanities. North Carolina foundations allocated nearly three times as much for religious causes as did national foundations; meanwhile, national foundations allocated three times as much for environmental priorities. The following chart compares North Carolina foundation giving with national foundation giving.

¹⁴ All of the 2005 data was published in, "Foundation Giving in North Carolina: An Analysis of Trends for the 2006 Fiscal Year", by Anita Gunn Shirley, NCGives, 2007.

¹⁵ Foundation Giving Trends, Preview, December 2007, Foundation Center. In order to more accurately compare with North Carolina giving patterns, science and technology projects were included in the education category. Public affairs/society benefit and social sciences grants were included in the human services category.

¹⁶Information for this table was obtained from a FoundationSearch database run on 11/10/07.

Analysis of Giving by North Carolina Foundations¹⁹

Social and Human Services

Social and human service programs received 37 percent, the largest percentage of grants awarded by North Carolina foundations in 2006. Since statewide data has been analyzed, this is the first time that social and human services projects secured a higher percentage of funds than did educational programs. In 1988²⁰, the first year for which statewide grants information is available, 18 percent of the grants awarded by North Carolina foundations were contributed for social and human service programs; this increased to 19 percent in 1991 and 1994; to 23 percent in 1997, to 31 percent in 2005, and to 37 percent in 2006.

In this category, organizations addressing the needs of children, youth, and philanthropic causes, such as community foundations and independent foundations, received significant support from foundations. Other areas receiving support included united funds, voter education efforts, programs for the disadvantaged, economic development efforts, domestic violence prevention, housing, animal welfare, and programs for the elderly. Table XXIII lists the ten largest single grants awarded in the category of social services.

¹⁹ Every attempt was made to include the largest single grants in the top six categories of giving for fiscal year 2006; however, in a number of cases that information was not available at the time of publication. Therefore, it is possible that larger grants were made by foundations in 2006, but since they were not publicly available at the time of publication they do not appear on these tables. In addition, because of reporting procedures, it is likely that the grants made by community foundations represented cumulative grants from multiple sources, rather than single grants; therefore, we tended to not include those grants in the lists. Also, due to reporting procedures, the grants listed in the charts may reflect both paid and unpaid grants, as well as carry-over grants that were approved in an earlier year but paid in part, or in full, in fiscal year 2006.

Reynolds Foundation, Z. Smith	NC Community Development Initiative	$900,000

Education

Educational institutions received 32 percent, the second largest percentage of grants awarded by foundations in 2006. Since 1988, there has been a steady decline in the percentage of dollars allocated for educational programs. In 1988, 51 percent of the grant dollars awarded by North Carolina foundations supported educational programs; in 1991, that percentage decreased to 46 percent of the total grant dollars; in 1994, the percentage slipped to 42 percent of grant dollars awarded; in 1997, the percentage decreased to 34 percent; in 2005, the percentage dropped to 32 percent and remained stable in 2006. Educational recipients included public and private higher education, business education, public and private elementary and secondary education, public policy research, literacy, and scholarship programs. Table XXIV lists ten grants of a million or more made in the category of education.

Conclusion

Foundations play an important and growing role in supporting programs that benefit North Carolinians in many different sectors. Nationally, foundations contribute nearly 12 percent of the total amount of charitable giving. Evidence points to North Carolina foundations mirroring the national percentage of the total amount of charitable giving. Currently, there is no comprehensive data for individual giving, bequests and corporate giving in the state, making it nearly impossible to give a precise estimate of the percentage of total private giving that is provided by individuals and corporations. It is the intent of NCGives to facilitate research in the state to address this issue. With private giving expected to grow as more wealth is transferred from the World War II generation to the baby boomers, philanthropy in North Carolina is expected to increase.

About the Report

This report was commissioned by North Carolina Gives. NCGives is a statewide initiative which focuses on the generosity of women, communities of color and youth by celebrating, connecting, inspiring and growing their traditions of giving. More information about NCGives can be found at <http://www.ncgives.org/home/>.

Our Mission

NCGives seeks to celebrate, connect, inspire and grow the giving of time, talent and treasure in North Carolina by sharing stories, models and tools, particularly among communities of color, women and young people.

Our Vision

Philanthropy (Giving) is transformed because there is sustained and strengthened voice by women, people of color and young people and improved recognition, collaboration and inclusion by the mainstream.
