THE PHILANTHROPIC LANDSCAPE

May 2013

The State of Social Justice Philanthropy 2011

By Niki Jagpal and Kevin Laskowski

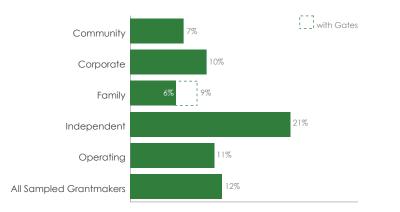

In 2011, 1,121 of the largest American foundations reported more than $2.9 billion in social justice philanthropy. Still, less than one in eight grant dollars (12 percent) went towards supporting social justice efforts in 2011.

A previous NCRP analysis of average giving from 2008 to 2010 found that social justice grantmaking comprised 15 percent of grant dollars.¹ This year's sample includes significantly more funders and nearly double the share of foundations that do not report any social justice grantmaking (Figure 4). Among those that do report social justice grants, the median commitment increased from 4 percent in 2008-2010 to 7 percent in 2011.

Social justice philanthropy is defined as funding "work for structural change in order to increase the opportunity of those who are the least well off politically, economically and socially."² NCRP's Criteria for Philanthropy at Its Best encourages grantmakers to provide at least 25 percent of grant dollars for advocacy, organizing and civic engagement to promote equity, opportunity and justice in our society.³

Grant dollars given by independent foundations (Figure 1), Northeastern foundations (Figure 2) and larger grantmakers (Figure 3) are more likely to be provided in this way. The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation remains the top social justice funder by total dollars awarded based on the definition employed for this analysis.

LARGEST SOCIAL JUSTICE GRANTMAKERS

In 2011, 94 grantmakers (8 percent of the 1,121 sampled funders) reported giving at least 25 percent of their grant dollars for social justice purposes. This increased from 76 grantmakers in the 2008-2010 analysis (8 percent of sampled funders) and from 56 (7 percent of sampled funders) in the 2004-2006 analysis.

METHODOLOGY

NCRP worked with the Foundation Center to develop custom datasets using the Center's grants sample database, which includes detailed information on all grants of $10,000 or more awarded to organizations circa 2011 by 1,121 of the largest U.S. foundations.

Information on social justice giving is based on foundations' reports of their grants and Foundation Center criteria for social justice grantmaking. Foundations noted in the data as giving zero to social justice either did not have grants that met the criteria for social justice grantmaking or did not provide enough information to code them as such. NCRP encourages grantmakers to contact the Foundation Center to ensure appropriate classification of their grants.
