A Letter from the Producing Artistic Director

Thank you for making your escape with us.

We hope you'll agree that a summer show is not only a "cool escape" from the heat, but also a friendly, relaxed and fun escape from the everyday. Whether you're voyaging out to experience the pirate life with young Jeremy Jacob or making an equally magical trip just across the Louisiana border to get a hairstyle touched up and a heartstring touched, please settle back and relax.

We want you to feel free to come as you are. Those that enjoy the festivity of dressing up for a night out at the theatre are welcome to do so, but you're also welcome to come in shorts and a t-shirt, or whatever's comfortable.

We've spruced the place up and hope you find it more welcoming than ever. We've kept our ticket prices as affordable as we can, so for less than $25 a couple can have a laugh (and maybe shed a tear) together, or a family of four can rollick along with our pirate crew.

If you do enjoy the show, would you help us spread the word that there's a "cool escape" to be had in Turner Auditorium this summer? Our posters and ads and announcements compete with a dizzying array of products and opportunities, so there's nothing like having a neighbor or family member, co-worker or friend say, "Have you heard about summer theatre at SFA? You've just got to see it!"

We'd be grateful for your help. And again, we appreciate you joining us and hope you love the show as much as we love seeing you here.

Scott Shattuck
Director, SFA School of Theatre

From the Directors

When Professor Shattuck asked me to think about taking on a summer directing project, I started looking at possible plays. I have loved the book How I Became a Pirate and the sequel Pirates Don't Change Diapers, both by Melinda Long and David Shannon, since my son first read them a few years ago. How can you go wrong with pirates? Imagine my excitement when I discovered it wasn't just a play, but a musical! A story of adventure and finding one's own heart - Jeremy Jacob is digging on the beach when Captain Braid Beard asks him to join the crew. With his parent's permission - as long as he returns in time for soccer practice - Jeremy learns to talk and act like a pirate and realizes that the simple things like a kiss and tucking in at night are among those that are most important in life.

- Angela Bacarisse

As hard as it is to believe, Steel Magnolias is now 25 years old; the 1987 play and the 1989 film adaptation have now been giving audiences "laughter through tears" for a generation. As a result, productions such as ours now have to look at the play as a "time capsule" that reflects not only the deeply felt emotions and heartfelt humor of Robert Harling's expertly drawn ensemble of characters, but also the look, feel and tone of the era. As we see through the evocative designs of Richard Ellis (set) and Barry Doss (costumes) and their teams, the mid-80s was very much an era of transition. Though the characters are still flush from the optimism of the Reagan years, bedecked in fashions equally inspired by "Dynasty," MTV and Princess Di, there's also a sense that a more complex and challenging world lies just beyond the horizon. The six characters at the beginning of the play (1983) probably can't imagine the world of 1986 that will bring Chernobyl, the Challenger explosion, the Iran-Contra affair and national AIDS crisis. Neither can they imagine the ways in which the personal fate of beautiful and generous Shelby Eatonton will challenge each and every one of them to see their own potential for love, growth and survival. At the beginning of the play, these women delight in layering any truth, no matter how difficult, with beauty. As the story develops, they begin to recognize the unique and powerful beauty that can only be found in life's painful truth.
