

Neville, P. (2016). How the papers covered the strike. British Medical Journal.

Peer reviewed version

License (if available):
Unspecified

Link to publication record in Explore Bristol Research
PDF-document

This is the author accepted manuscript (AAM). The final published version (version of record) is available online via BMJ Publishing Group at <http://dx.doi.org/10.1136/bmj.i2506>. Please refer to any applicable terms of use of the publisher.

University of Bristol - Explore Bristol Research

General rights

This document is made available in accordance with publisher policies. Please cite only the published version using the reference above. Full terms of use are available:
<http://www.bristol.ac.uk/pure/about/ebr-terms.html>

11 May 2016

Macaulay offers us a useful if not sanitised overview of how UK media outlets reported on the junior doctors strike. The media is never a neutral party in what it reports, and how it frames an issue and its key players can shape public perceptions and understandings. It might be worthwhile remembering that before the first day of planned strikes, the tabloid newspaper The Sun ran a story entitled 'Moet medics: High life of doc's leaders who are heading up NHS strike'¹. This article laid the charge that many of the leaders of the junior doctor's strike were 'champagne-swilling socialists'. Individual junior doctors were named, their age and current occupations were disclosed, as was their residence and an array of personal photographs-from holiday shots to pictures with animals and friends- were strewn across the article. It was clear that this article (and its publisher) clearly set out to discredit the political credentials and professional reputation of these doctors. Thankfully, such cynical reporting has not dominated the reporting of the NHS junior doctor's strike. Nevertheless, it would be naïve of us to assume that a 'responsible' media discourse will persist the longer the strike continues.

Reference

1. Beal J, Perrin B, Ryan J, Syson B. Moet medics: High life of docs' leaders who are heading up NHS strike. The Sun. 2016 10 Jan. Available from <http://www.thesun.co.uk/sol/homepage/news/6850988/Luxury-lifestyles-of-junior-doctor-strike-leaders.html> [Accessed: 14 April 2016].

I have read and understood BMJ policy on declaration of interests and declare that I have no competing interests.